

The Facts of Life by Brian Clowes, PhD

The Facts of Life is a comprehensive reference guide that is intended to answer basic questions on a variety of life issues. It has been distributed all over the world in both print and electronic formats, and the print version has been translated into German, Spanish, Korean, Italian and Portuguese.

Father Paul Marx, O.S.B., 50-year pro-life veteran and founder of Human Life International, has called it "The last word on pro-life/pro-family issues ... Truly a complete manual for all those promoting life and the family." The Facts of Life has also been highly recommended by Joseph Scheidler, President of the Pro-Life Action League, reformed abortionist Bernard Nathanson, M.D., and well-known pro-life activist Rabbi Yehuda Levin.

This web site includes a greatly expanded and updated version of the popular book, and gives you more than 2,500 pages of pro-life information. To begin, select a chapter below from Table of Contents.

The General Definition of "Abortion."

The term "abortion" has traditionally meant the intentional or unintentional expulsion of the preborn child from the uterus before he or she has reached the age of viability (defined as the point after which the preborn child can survive outside the womb with or without medical assistance). In practice, though, abortion in a number of countries (including the United States, Canada and the People's Republic of China) is legal until the moment of birth. In fact, some abortion methods such as dilation and extraction (D&X), the "partial birth" abortion, are designed to kill the preborn child when the birth process is almost complete.

At the other end of the spectrum, more and more drugs are being developed whose only purpose is to destroy the life of preborn children after fertilization (the union of the sperm and ovum) and before implantation of the embryo or zygote in the mother's uterus.

The Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), the United Nations World Health Organization (UNWHO), the American Medical Association (AMA), the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), and other pro-abortion organizations now falsely define pregnancy as beginning at implantation, and not at fertilization. In this manner, these groups claim that abortifacient drugs and devices such as the birth prevention pill and the intrauterine device (IUD) do not cause early abortions, because they say that a pregnancy does not exist before actual implantation.

The Catholic Church teaches that abortion is not only "the expulsion of the immature fetus," but is also "the killing of the same fetus in any way and at any time from the moment of conception."^[1]

Therefore, the honest, accurate and complete definition of the general term "abortion" would be "the intentional or unintentional expulsion of the preborn child at any time after fertilization and before the natural birth process is completed."

A Comparison of Abortion to Ethical Surgical Procedures.

One of the most pervasive myths advanced by the pro-abortion movement is that "abortion is health care," and should therefore be made as widely available to the public as possible.

Abortion is a completely unique surgical procedure, profoundly different in many ways from ethical surgery, as shown in Figure 1-1.

Because it stands alone in its objectives, performance, and results, abortion is bound to have numerous attributes that set it apart from every other kind of surgery.

Comparisons Between Elective Abortion and Ethical Surgical Procedures

Criteria	Elective Abortion	Ethical Surgery
Purpose of Procedure	To kill	To heal
Informed Consent
Informed consent	Not required	Required by law
Husband's consent	Legally banned	Usually expected
Husband informed	Often legally banned	Always
Parental consent	Often legally banned	Required by law for minors
Parents informed	Often legally banned	Required by law for minors

The Definition of "Abortionist."

The 1871 statement of the American Medical Association (AMA) on abortionists defined them as "Men who cling to a noble profession only to dishonor it. ... false brethren ... educated assassins, these modern Herods ... These men who, with corrupt hearts and blood-stained hands, destroy what they cannot reinstate, corrupt souls, and destroy the fairest fabric that God has ever created ... under the cloak of that medical profession ... monsters of iniquity." [2]

The medical profession's current definition of "abortionist" is "one who performs criminal abortions." [3]

The logical, truthful and complete definition of "abortionist" is "anyone who commits direct surgical or chemical abortions, legal or illegal, whether they be a medical doctor, nurse, midwife, or lay person."

This divergence in terms exists because the primary focus of the medical profession is the mere legality of the procedure, while the primary concern of pro-lifers is the stark reality that an abortion, whether it is legal or not, always take the life of a human person.

The medical profession insists that only those who commit criminal (illegal) abortions should be called abortionists. It has two reasons for such semantic subterfuge: (1) The term "abortionist" carries with it the strong connotation of an unskilled and unprincipled hack and must therefore be avoided; and (2) the term "abortion" and all its derivatives denote a bloody and barbarous procedure, and therefore also must be shunned.

Because abortion is entirely incompatible with the healing mission of the medical profession, it is intrinsically disreputable. Abortion is not medicine or health care. Therefore, pro-lifers should always use the term "abortionist" to describe someone who commits abortions, whether the procedures are legal or criminal. Terms such as "abortion doctor," "abortion provider," and "abortion clinic" should always be strictly avoided because they lend an air of respectability and even benevolence to those who have murderously betrayed an honorable profession.

The Different Types of Abortion.

There are a number of medical and legal terms for the different types of abortion, both intentional and unintentional, as shown in Figure 1-2. These are listed below.[4]

The different types of surgical abortion procedures are described later in this Chapter.

Types of Intentional and Unintentional Abortion

Complete abortion: When all of the contents of the uterus (i.e., the preborn child and the placenta) have been expelled from the uterus.

Criminal [illegal] abortion: Any abortion committed outside the parameters set by law. For instance, an abortionist commits a criminal abortion if he aborts a minor without her parent's permission in a state with parental consent laws, or if he commits a D&X abortion on a woman at 28 weeks gestation for convenience purposes in a state where third-trimester abortions are banned except in the case of severe fetal anomalies.

Early abortion: An abortion within the first trimester (i.e., first 12 weeks) of a pregnancy.

Habitual abortion: Spontaneous abortion (i.e., miscarriage) occurring in three or more consecutive pregnancies. Women who suffer from habitual abortions account for the majority of miscarriages.

Incomplete abortion: An intentional or unintentional abortion in which parts of the preborn child and/or placenta remain within the uterus.

Induced abortion: An intentional abortion brought on by mechanical (surgical) or chemical (abortifacient) means.

Inevitable abortion: A condition marked by vaginal bleeding and cervical dilation that indicates an impending miscarriage that cannot be prevented and follows a condition of threatened abortion.

Infected abortion: An abortion associated with, and possibly caused by, an infection of the uterus or the genital tract, such as that caused by a venereal disease.

Missed abortion: When a woman does not miscarry a preborn child who died more than eight weeks previously.

Septic abortion: An abortion associated with, and possibly caused by, an infection of the uterus.

Spontaneous abortion: The medical term for a miscarriage. This term is very important for pro-life activists to remember, because many medical statistical categories and subsequent medical treatments (such as delivery of a child) do not distinguish between intentional and spontaneous abortion.

Therapeutic abortion: The current medical literature equates "legal abortion" with "therapeutic abortion." The definition of the word "therapeutic," however, mean "treatment of disease."^[4] The use of the term "therapeutic" is another pro-abortion attempt to sanitize a repulsive act, and it also implies that pregnancy is a disease - an assertion many pro-abortionists have made directly.^[5]

Threatened abortion: A condition that usually includes vaginal bleeding but not cervical dilation and may or may not lead to a condition of inevitable abortion.

[5] Here are just three of many examples of the pro-abortion assertion that "pregnancy is a disease."

(1) Alan Guttmacher, M.D., former Medical Director of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), asserted, "The [birth control] pill, in my opinion and that of my colleagues, is an important prophylaxis, perhaps the most important, against one of the gravest sociomedical illnesses extant. That, of course, is unwanted pregnancy" (Senator Gaylord Nelson's (D-WI.) Hearings on Competitive Problems in the Drug Industry, by the Senate Subcommittee on Monopoly, Select Committee on Small Business, Part 16, page 6,572, February 25, 1970).

(2) Mary S. Calderone, M.D., another former Medical Director of PPFA and co-founder and President of the Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS) said, "We have yet to beat our public health drums for birth control in the way we beat them for polio vaccine; we are still unable to put babies in the class of dangerous epidemics, even though that is the exact truth" (Medical Morals Newsletter, February-March 1968).

(3) Abortionist Warren Hern has said "[Pregnancy] is an episodic, moderately extended, chronic condition ... [and] may be defined as an illness ... treated by evacuation of the uterine contents" ("Is Pregnancy Really Normal?" Alan Guttmacher Institute's Family Planning Perspectives, January 1971, page 9). Hern also describes pregnancy as an "illness" and a "host-parasite relationship" (Abortion Practice [Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott, 1990], pages 14 to 17).

The Different Types of Surgical Abortion.

Depending upon the gestational age of the preborn child and the physical condition of the mother, the abortionist has a variety of abortion methods in his arsenal.

Early abortions (those in the first trimester) are usually done with dilation and curettage (D&C) or suction. Abortionists use more complex methods to kill preborn babies in the second and third trimesters. These include dilation and evacuation (D&E), saline, dilation and extraction (D&X), prostaglandin, hysterotomy, and intercardiac injection abortions, as described in the following paragraphs.

19th-Century and Early 20th-Century Abortion Instruments

This vicious-looking instrument, which looks like a pair of alligator jaws, is an early cranioclast, which was used to grab onto and crush the preborn baby's skull.

This is a decapitating hook, which was used to tear the preborn baby's head off. It is a miniature version of a meat hook used in cattle yards to drag around sides of beef.

splitting a preborn baby's head from crown to base.

The baby swallows one of these small acorn-shaped devices. Then the abortionist pulls on the string, and the spikes snap out. The abortionist continues to pull the string, and the spikes shred the baby's stomach and esophagus, killing him.

This is an embryotome, used to cut off the baby's arms and legs.

Nothing demonstrates the viciousness and inhuman cruelty of abortion and abortionists better than the tools they use in their life's work. You can find photographs and descriptions of these and many other historical and modern abortion instruments at the Abortion Instruments Web site. Photos are used

How a Suction Abortion is Done.

Abortionists use this method (also known as "suction curettage") in most first-trimester abortions and can also use it up to 16 weeks. The abortionist begins by dilating the cervix. Then he inserts a suction curette [which consists of a hollow tube with a sharp tip] into the cervix and then into the uterus. The suction machine tears the developing baby apart, sucks the pieces through the tube and deposits them into a bag. Either the abortionist or an assistant assembles or checks the body parts to ensure a complete abortion.[6]

How a Dilation and Curettage (D&C) Abortion is Done.

Abortionists use D&C (also known as "sharp curettage") most often during the first trimester of pregnancy. The abortionist inserts a sharp looped knife (curette) into the uterus to scrape its walls. He then cuts the preborn baby apart, removes the body parts, and checks them for completeness.

Unlike other abortion methods, D&C has an alternative and entirely legitimate use. Physicians often perform curettage after a miscarriage to ensure that the uterus is "clean," thereby avoiding the infection that may result from the retention of necrotic [decaying] tissue, either from the baby or from the placenta, or from other uterine conditions or disorders.

It is vitally important to ensure that the baby does not remain in the uterus before this type of D&C is performed. Many times women have thought they had miscarriages because they passed blood clots or tissue, but subsequent sonograms or other tests have revealed that they were still pregnant.

In some cases, the woman actually lost a recognizable baby during a miscarriage, but ultrasound revealed that she was still pregnant with the lost baby's twin. Many doctors assert that ultrasound testing should precede any D&C, or the woman risks having an unintentional surgical abortion.

How a Dilation and Evacuation (D&E) Abortion is Done.

The D&E method of abortion is most commonly used during the first half of the second trimester (13 to 20 weeks), but is employed up to about 28 weeks. The baby is dismembered, and the pieces are removed one by one. In many cases, the abortionist dismembered, and the pieces are removed one by one. In many cases, the abortionist cuts off one or more of the baby's limbs and waits until he or she bleeds to death before proceeding with the abortion. Larger babies must have their heads crushed so the pieces can pass through the cervix.

Abortionist Warren Hern, who specializes in late-term abortions, has said that "We have reached a point in this particular [D&E] technology where there is no possibility of denial of an act of destruction by the operator. It is before one's eyes. The sensations of dismemberment flow through the forceps like an electric current." [7]

Pro-abortion groups are particularly enthusiastic about D&E because, unlike other second-trimester abortion methods such as saline and prostaglandin, there is absolutely no chance that the baby will survive.

Hern also authored the how-to book Abortion Practice, in which he describes some of the more grisly aspects of the D&E abortion: "The procedure changes significantly at 21 weeks because the fetal tissues become much more cohesive and difficult to dismember ... A long curved Mayo scissors may be necessary to decapitate and dismember the fetus ..." [8]

Usually the cervix must be dilated for one to three days before a D&E abortion. The most popular method of cervical dilation involves the insertion of dried seaweed sticks called laminaria, which absorb fluids and swell, thereby expanding the cervical diameter. The abortionist may also forcibly dilate the cervix over a period of just a few minutes with a series of stainless steel rods of increasing diameter.

It is a common ploy for abortionists to tell their patients that once the laminaria are inserted the abortion process cannot be reversed. Pro-life activists in general, and sidewalk counselors in particular, must be aware of the fact that laminaria can be removed by any emergency room physician if the woman changes her mind about having an abortion.

How a Saline Abortion is Done.

Also known as the "intra-amniotic injection," "saline solution method," or the "amnio abortion " this method is used for second trimester and early third trimester abortions abortion, this method is used for second trimester and early third trimester abortions, but has become less popular due to possible harm to the mother brought on by accidental injection of saline solution into a blood vessel.

To begin with, about 200 milliliters of amniotic fluid is withdrawn and replaced with saline or urea solution.[9] The baby breathes and swallows this concentration and dies painfully over a period of hours from salt poisoning, dehydration, brain hemorrhage and convulsions. Delivery occurs 24 to 48 hours after the baby dies. The skin of the baby is either completely burned or turned a cherry-red color, which is why some abortionists and nurses refer to them as "candy-apple babies."

Many mothers who have undergone saline abortions report feeling the baby's movements increase to a desperate frenzy as its skin and mucous membranes are scalded and it dies in unspeakable agony.

Another reason the salt poisoning method has become less popular is that it occasionally results in a hardy baby who survives the torture - the so-called "dreaded complication." Therefore, abortionists now generally use hysterotomy or a modified D&E method that guarantees the baby's death.

How a Dilation and Extraction (D&X) Abortion is Done.

The Method. More than any other abortion, the D&X killing method exposes the cruel and inhumane nature of both abortion in general and abortionists in particular.

Abortionist Martin Haskell originated the D&X procedure because "... most surgeons find dismemberment [i.e., D&E] at twenty weeks and beyond to be difficult due to the toughness of fetal tissues at this stage of development." [10]

Haskell, who boasted at a 1992 National Abortion Federation (NAF) conference that he has committed more than 700 late second-trimester and third-trimester D&X killings, describes his technique:

At this point [after the baby has been entirely delivered except for the head], the right-handed surgeon slides the fingers of the left hand along the back of the fetus and "hooks" the shoulders of the fetus with the index and ring fingers (palm down). Next he slides the tip of the middle finger along the spine towards the skull while applying traction to the shoulders and lower extremities. The middle finger lifts and pushes the anterior cervical lip out of the way.

While maintaining this tension, lifting the cervix and applying traction to the shoulders with the fingers of the left hand, the surgeon takes a pair of blunt curved Metzenbaum scissors in the right hand. He carefully advances the tip, curved down, along the spine and under his middle finger until he feels it contact the base of the skull under the tip of his middle finger.

Reassessing proper placement of the closed scissors tip and safe elevation of the cervix, the surgeon then forces the scissors into the base of the skull or into the foramen magnum [the large opening in the occipital bone between the cranial cavity and the spinal canal]. Having safely entered the skull, he spreads the scissors to enlarge the opening.

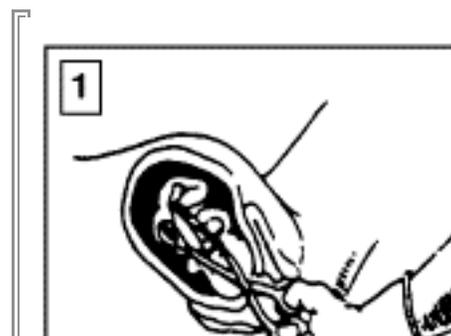

The surgeon removes the scissors and introduces a suction catheter into this hole and evacuates the skull contents. With the catheter still in place, he applies traction to the fetus, removing it completely from the patient."^[10]

Dry medical terminology cannot begin to convey the true horror of this type of killing.

In layman's terms, an abortionist considering a D&X has two problems. He wants to abort a viable preborn baby of seven or eight months gestation who has an 80 percent chance of surviving birth. This baby's muscles and cartilage have toughened to the point where it is virtually impossible to chop him or her apart without harming the mother. Since the baby is probably viable, the abortionist also faces the prospect of the "dreaded complication" - a live, crying newborn baby. Therefore, he must make sure the baby dies before he or she is fully "delivered."

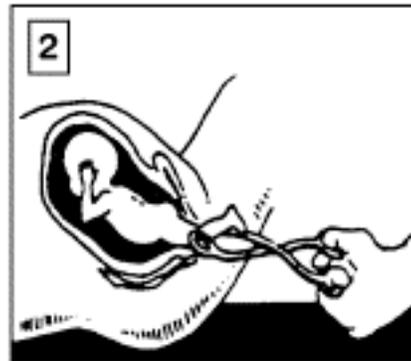

He therefore uses forceps to twist one of the baby's legs and pull it out through the birth canal. The ripping of muscles and breaking of bones causes the baby unspeakable agony, for even pro-abortionists acknowledge that seven-month and eight-month preborn babies definitely feel pain (see Chapter 13, "Fetal Pain"). Then the abortionist punctures the back of the baby's head with sharp scissors and spreads the blades, tearing a massive hole in the soft part of the baby's skull. Finally, he vacuums out the baby's brains and completes the delivery in just a few seconds.^[10]

The drawings below, by Jenny Westberg, depict the D&X abortion method, also known as partial-birth abortion (PBA).

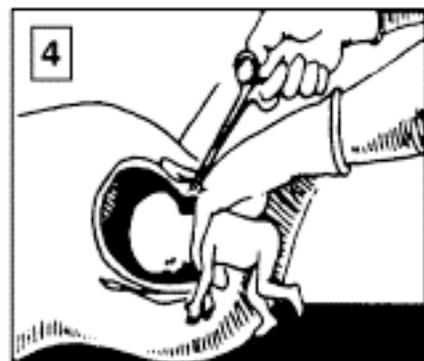

Guided by Ultrasound, the abortionist grabs the baby's leg with forceps.

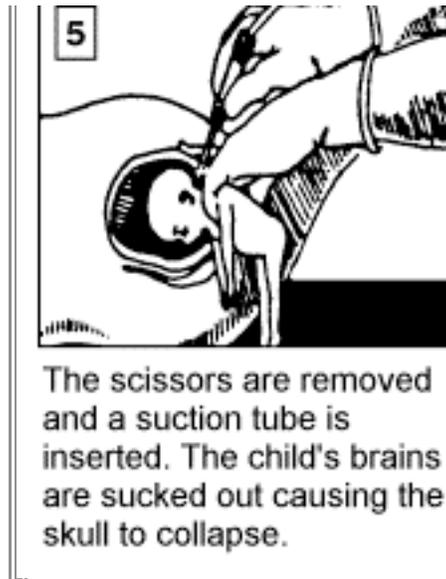

The baby's leg is pulled out into the birth canal.

The abortionist delivers the baby's entire body, except for the head.

The abortionist jams scissors into the baby's skull. The scissors are then opened to enlarge the hole.

Let The Lying Begin. During the heated Congressional debate over banning the D&X procedure in early 1996, major pro-abortion groups lied repeatedly to the media, to Congress, and to the public.

They lied by alleging that the D&X abortion was necessary in order to complete a safe delivery. They lied when they said that the preborn child always dies of anesthesia overdose before the D&X. They lied when they asserted that the preborn child does not feel pain during the D&X procedure. And they lied when they claimed that the D&X procedure is only done in the most extreme circumstances, such as a direct danger to the mother's life or fatal birth defects.

- The Lie About a Safe Delivery. To begin with, every major pro-abortion group vigorously defended the D&X procedure on the grounds that crushing the baby's skull and vacuuming out his or her brains was absolutely necessary in order to make the head "smaller" so the mother could deliver the dead child with less danger to herself.

This is obviously a fraudulent claim because, in a D&X abortion, the entire baby is delivered except for the head before he or she is killed. Obviously, the only purpose of a D&X abortion is to kill the child.

- The Lie About Anesthesia Overdose. Pro-abortionists also claimed that the preborn baby always dies of anesthesia overdose before the D&X commences, but several abortionists who use the method admitted that "the majority of fetuses aborted this way are alive until the end of the procedure." [11]

Abortionist Marvin Haskell said that most preborn babies are definitely alive when he kills them with the D&X abortion procedure: "A percentage [are already dead] are for various numbers of reasons. Some just because of the stress -1,000 intrauterine stress during, you know, the two days that the cervix is being dilated. ... And so, in my case, I would think probably about a third of those are definitely dead before I actually start to remove the fetus. And probably the other two thirds are not."

remove the fetus. And probably the other two-thirds are not.

Haskell admitted that "you could dilate further" and deliver the baby alive, but "that's not really the point. The point here is you're attempting to do an abortion. And that's the goal of your work, is to complete an abortion. Not to see how do I manipulate the situation so that I get a live birth instead. ... Most of my [D&X] abortions are elective in that 20 to 24 week range ... In my particular case, probably 20 percent are for genetic reasons. And the other 80 percent are purely elective."

Norig Ellison, M.D., President of the American Society of Anesthesiologists, also refuted the pro-abortionists when he said that "Although it is certainly true that some general analgesic medications given to the mother will reach the fetus and perhaps provide some pain relief, there is absolutely no adverse effect on the fetus, let alone death or 'brain death'." [12]

- The Lie About Fetal Pain. Pro-abortionists continued to stupidly insist that even full-term preborn babies do not feel pain during a D&X abortion procedure due to the above-mentioned "anesthesia overdose."

Despite the fact that several leading experts on fetal pain unanimously agreed and testified under oath that the preborn child definitely feels pain during the D&X abortion procedure, pro-abortionists insisted that they must be forced to feel pain and must not be offered any kind of relief.

For example, in California, Assemblyman George Runner [R.-Lancaster] offered a bill that would have required those performing third trimester abortions to offer anesthesia to spare the preborn child unnecessary pain. Runner pointed out that pro-abortionists support such precautions taken to keep laboratory animals from experiencing pain.

Still, pro-abortion opponents said there "weren't enough" third-trimester abortions to warrant the bill, although Runner provided evidence that hundreds of third-trimester abortions were performed in California every year. The bill was defeated by eight votes. [13]

This decisively reveals the brutal, inhumane and inconsistent nature of the pro-abortion mentality. Although it was proven that preborn children definitely feel pain during third trimester abortions, the pro-abortionists would even deny them the comfort of anesthesia designed to prevent them from feeling the agony of being torn limb from limb or from having their brains sucked out! And yet pro-abortionists are often animal-rights activists, forming groups like "Aminal Rights Activists for Choice!"

- The Lie About the Justifications for D&X. Leading pro-abortion groups stated repeatedly that the D&X abortion procedure was "extremely rare" and then only used in the "tragic circumstance" of "fatal birth defects."

The National Abortion Federation (NAF) claimed that "This particular procedure [D&X abortion] is used only in about 500 cases per year, generally after 20 weeks of pregnancy, and most often when there is a severe fetal anomaly or maternal health problem detected late in pregnancy." [14] The Planned Parenthood of America (PPFA) claimed that "The procedure, dilation and extraction (D&X), is extremely rare and done only in cases when the woman's life is in danger or in cases of extreme fetal abnormality." [15] American Medical News unthinkingly parroted these lies, saying "Abortion rights activists ... have consistently claimed it is done only when the woman's life is at risk or the fetus has a condition incompatible with life. And the numbers are small, they said, only 500 to 600 a year."[16]

As could be expected, the mainline media simply repeated verbatim what the pro-abortionists claimed, without any effort whatsoever to explore the possibility that they might all be lying. For example, Time Magazine said that "The [Partial-Birth Abortion Ban] bill would ban] rare, late-term abortions, usually done only in cases where the fetus is severely deformed."[17] And CBS said that "Experts estimate that partial-birth abortion accounts for perhaps 600 of the 1.5 million abortions performed in the U.S. each year ... In many such abortions, the fetus is so severely deformed or the pregnancy so complicated that carrying the child to term would threaten the life or health of the mother."[18]

Once again, several partial-birth abortionists contradicted the professional pro-abortion groups, all of which must have known better.

Abortionist Martin Haskell, who invented the method, decisively refuted this claim, saying that about 80 percent of the D&X procedures he has committed have been purely for convenience purposes. Haskell said that his D&X abortions are "elective" to 26 weeks and "non-elective" all the way to 40 weeks (full term), based upon what he told the House Constitution Subcommittee in June 1995. But, as always, abortionists stretch the definitions: His largest single "maternal indicator" for "non-elective" D&X abortions right up to birth was "depression." [19] James McMahan, another of the country's leading partial-birth abortionists, also said that the largest number of D&X abortions are done for "depression." [20]

Before abortion was generally legalized in the United States, more than 90 percent of legal abortions were done for psychiatric reasons. Now, of course, any woman can just claim that her pregnancy "depresses" her, and she can get a late-term abortion. She could even get a third-trimester abortion of a viable preborn baby if she was "diagnosed" as suicidal, which the abortionist is, of course, not qualified to diagnose. All the woman has to do is say she'll kill herself, and that's it. She'll get her abortion. [21]

Even the National Abortion Federation (NAF) refuted its own allegation that the D&X abortion is used only in extreme circumstances. A 1993 internal memorandum distributed by the Executive Director of the NAF stated that partial-birth abortions are performed for such reasons as "lack of money or health insurance, social-psychological crises, lack of knowledge about human reproduction, etc."

Even some leading pro-abortionists were embarrassed at the magnitude and the frequency of the lying of their companions. Ron Fitzsimmons, Executive Director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers (NCAP), grumbled that

When you're a doctor who does these abortions and the leaders of your movement appear before Congress and go on network news and say these procedures are done in only the most tragic of circumstances, how do you think it makes you feel? You know they're primarily done on healthy women and healthy fetuses, and it makes you feel like a dirty little abortionist with a dirty little secret. I think we should tell them the truth, let them vote and move on. [22]

Bill Clinton twice vetoed the bill that allegedly would have banned most D&X abortions. Many pro-lifers realized that this bill, which included an exception for the life of the mother, would have saved few babies because abortionists claim that all pregnancies threaten the life - or lifestyle - of the mother in one way or another.

The protracted, highly publicized wrangling over the D&X abortion produced one substantial good. Pro-abortionists, who unanimously supported the D&X method, will never again be able to hide behind their facade of sympathetic "moderation." In every public and private debate, in every sidewalk discussion, and in every attempt to persuade a nominally "pro-choice" relative or fellow churchgoer, pro-life activists have the pro-abortionist's support of the D&X procedure as a vivid illustration of just how destructive and uncompromising the anti-life mentality truly is.

How a Prostaglandin Abortion is Done.

Prostaglandin abortions are used during the late second trimester and third trimester of pregnancy. About eight milliliters of prostaglandin hormone is injected into the uterine muscle, which contracts to expel the baby in an artificially-induced and extremely violent premature labor that takes about 20 hours. Alternatively, 20 to 40 milligrams of a prostaglandin analogue (Prostin F2 Alpha, dinoprost tromethamine) are infused following the placement of laminaria. Sometimes saline or urea are combined with prostaglandin for infusions.[23]

This method of abortion is now rarely used because up to seven percent of preborn babies are born alive during the procedure.[23] In such cases, the abortionist must clandestinely kill the baby or risk a so-called "wrongful life" situation and a possible lawsuit and bad publicity.

How a Hysterotomy Abortion is Done.

A hysterotomy is actually a Cesarean section done during the last trimester of pregnancy when other types of abortion may be too dangerous to the mother. The mother's uterus is surgically opened and the baby is lifted out.

The helpless baby is then either left to die or is killed by the abortionist or his staff. According to Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute, abortionists commit about 1,000 hysterotomy abortions every year in the United States alone in the mid-1980s.[24]

How an Intercardiac Injection Abortion is Done.

At about 16 weeks, ultrasound imagery is used to pinpoint the location of the baby so that a long needle may be guided into its heart. The abortionist injects potassium chloride or some other fluid which causes an immediate heart attack in the preborn baby. [25] After a period of days, the dead preborn child is delivered naturally, or the process can be accelerated with cervical dilation followed by prostaglandin injections.

This method is most commonly used for "pregnancy reduction" abortions, which are described in more detail later in this Chapter.

"Menstrual Extraction."

Definitions and Terms. "Menstrual extraction" is basically an early suction abortion using either a standard abortion suction machine with a flexible cannula or a homemade contraption made of Mason jars, aquarium tubing, corks, and syringes.

ME serves three very important purposes, in both developed and developing countries:

- It lets abortionists circumvent legal clauses that include statements such as "woman known to be pregnant," and thus lets them avoid legal liability. This aspect of ME is critical when it is used in countries with abortion laws that protect preborn children, and it will become more significant as some developed nations with permissive abortion laws move to outlaw or restrict abortion in the future.
- ME insulates women from knowing whether they are pregnant. They may suspect they are pregnant, but ME allows them to remain ignorant, and therefore lets the mechanism of self-denial operate.
- It allows nations to "fudge" their abortion statistics for various purposes. For example, ME is frequently used in Holland, but they are not counted as abortions. This allows Dutch statisticians to claim that the nation's abortion rate is low due to widespread contraception and sex education.[26]

The Pathfinder Fund (a population control group) outlines the devious 'logic' behind menstrual extraction in both developed and developing countries: "Today, a woman faced with a possible but unconfirmed and unwanted pregnancy can walk into a health services clinic or doctor's office and often within twenty minutes have her endometrial lining extracted ... and since menstrual extraction can be performed before a positive pregnancy test is obtainable, it is hard to prove that menstrual induction is an abortion procedure." [27]

There are two very important reasons why pro-life activists should be familiar with menstrual extraction. First, in Western countries where lawmakers are trying to place limits on abortion, feminists have vowed to disseminate crude ME technology and know-how so that "self-abortion" becomes popular. For example, Cynthia Pearson of the National Women's Health Network (NWHN) predicts that "Anyone who could get their hands on an electric suction machine would be in business." [28] And Frances Kissling, former President of 'Catholics' for a Free Choice seems to be smacking her lips in anticipation of the prospect of widespread "self-help" abortion: "I would like to see a huge underground of activist women learning how to do menstrual extractions and vacuum aspiration abortions, mothers teaching their daughters, sub rosa [covert] classes at campus women's centers ..." [28]

The second reason that pro-lifers should be familiar with ME is that in most developing countries where abortion is illegal population control organizations do ME on a widespread scale in order to bypass and undermine pro-life laws.

Alternative names for ME include "endometrial extraction," "menstrual shedding," "menstrual regulation" (MR), "menstrual induction," "early uterine evacuation," "manual vacuum aspiration (MVA), and "bringing on the menses."

ME in Developed Countries. Before abortion was legalized in the United States, feminists routinely referred women to illegal abortionists, operated a "Jane" network to route women to abortionists, and constructed ME devices such as the "Del-Em," made of local materials and used for self-abortions.

Since the legalization of abortion, feminists have promoted a series of ME programs designed to put complete control of the abortion process in the hands of the woman, regardless of the legality of the act.

Rebecca Chalker and Carol Downer, in their book A Woman's Book of Choices, demonstrate vividly how pro-abortionists twist any law to suit their purpose: "Women who do menstrual extraction consider it and other home health-care techniques to be completely legal, since an individual woman or a group of women cannot make a medical diagnosis of pregnancy; in fact, they are not attempting to do so. Therefore, they would not have the necessary intent required to constitute a criminal act of abortion." [29]

Cindy Pearson, who has been promoting self-abortion for years, also displayed the feminists' utter contempt for preborn human life when she enthused that "this is so [much] fun; this is so great, that we can do this ourselves ... It's just joyful." [30]

If surgical abortion is outlawed in the United States, pro-lifers will face a diffused, twofold battle against abortifacient drugs and ME. This fact was highlighted when Susan Landau of the Redding Feminist Womens Health Center boasted that "the technology is here - you can't take that away. They may make abortion illegal, but they can't control it." [31]

ME in Developing Countries. The largest promoter of menstrual extraction in developing countries is the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). IPPF, in its Vision 2000 document, outlined its plan to make legal abortion available in every country of the world.

In pursuit of this goal, IPPF has provided thousands of suction machines for early abortions to the Philippines, Bangladesh, Korea, Singapore, Hong Kong, Thailand, Vietnam, India, and other countries, regardless of the status of the target nation's abortion laws.[32]

Dr. Malcolm Potts, former IPPF Medical Director, admitted nearly 30 years ago that menstrual extraction is indeed an abortion method, and that it is a simple and convenient way to do abortions that are difficult to prosecute:

Using the name "menstrual regulation" alters the name of the game. It is not practical to write about abortion in a Bangladesh newspaper in a straightforward way, but it has proved acceptable to hold a much-publicized conference on menstrual regulation in Dacca. ... It is not prudent to have even a whispered discussion of the role of abortion in family planning in the Philippines; but it generates immediate and widespread interest to discuss menstrual regulation ... Menstrual regulation is probably safer than any other pregnancy termination procedure ... there will be no proof of pregnancy unless the tissue removed from the uterus is subjected to microscopic examination. The point is of crucial importance in countries where abortion is illegal.[33]

In its Family Planning Handbook for Doctors, IPPF describes the value of the ME/MR procedure to pro-abortion activists: "In some countries, menstrual regulation has proved remarkably popular, and individual practitioners sometimes perform several thousand operations a year. In certain countries menstrual regulation is legal, even when therapeutic abortion is illegal, as in many Latin American countries, where prosecution for abortion requires proof that a pregnancy was terminated." [34]

Health professionals are not the only people using ME/MR in developing countries. A number of "family planning" manuals have described how to assemble a homemade suction machine in order to do early abortions, and this makes ME an ideal tool for midwives and "neighborhood abortionists" in Latin America, Asia and Africa.

Abortionists in some countries use menstrual extraction extensively, and MEs in these countries are not counted as abortions. Therefore, pro-abortion statisticians in Holland and other countries claim that the "lower" abortion rates in these countries are a direct result of their mandatory, comprehensive sex education and contraceptive distribution programs. This is a critical point for pro-lifers opposing permissive sex education programs to remember.

The Dangers of ME. The "menstrual extraction" procedure is extremely dangerous, particularly when done by lay people. Depending upon the equipment used and the experience level of the lay abortionist, women can suffer injuries ranging from punctured uteri and severe infections to incomplete abortions and undiagnosed ectopic pregnancies. In fact, ME is so hazardous that even the National Abortion Federation (NAF), the abortionists' trade union, has labeled it "... dangerous to the health of the women we seek to assist." [35]

Abortifacient Grant Bagley of Salt Lake City pointed out the racism and hypocrisy of feminists and the United States government when he said, "No one has been particularly alarmed that we're exporting this [ME] technology to Third World countries, but somehow if women in the U.S. are going to be using the same techniques, it's dangerous." [35]

ME/MR is just one facet of United States "contraceptive imperialism." When a contraceptive, abortifacient, or abortion technique is in the research phase or is deemed too dangerous for American women to use, testing or production is simply shifted to women in developing countries.

The Catholic Church Teaching on ME. "Catholic" dissenters in Asian and Latin American countries often claim that menstrual extraction does not really fall under the Catholic Church's teachings against abortion since it is not really possible for a woman to know whether she is pregnant at the time she undergoes ME.

This argument is as dishonest as claiming that firing a rifle randomly in a city is harmless because the shooter cannot really know whether he is going to hit anyone.

On 24 November 1988, The Pontifical Commission for the Authentic Interpretation of the Code of Canon Law declared that abortion is not only "the expulsion of the immature fetus," but is also "the killing of the same fetus in any way and at any time from the moment of conception." [36]

This definition of abortion includes the use of all menstrual extraction techniques and all abortifacients.

Selective Abortion (Pregnancy Reduction).

The "pregnancy reduction" abortion has been in use since about 1980 and is now generally standardized. The most common method involves inserting a needle through the mother's abdominal wall into her uterus and injecting potassium chloride into the hearts of the most accessible "surplus" babies. They subsequently die and are reabsorbed by the mother's body.

The New England Journal of Medicine recently described this method: "Using ultrasound to locate each fetus, the doctors would insert a needle into the chest cavity of the most accessible fetus and place the needle tip directly into the heart of the baby. Potassium chloride was then injected into the heart and the heart was viewed on the ultrasound screen until it stopped beating." [37]

"Pregnancy reduction" is often used after in-vitro fertilization (IVF) procedures because up to six embryos are often implanted in order to ensure that a pregnancy results. The United States Congress' Committee on Small Business found that many unregulated IVF enterprises deliberately implant an excessive number of embryos during transfer procedures just to increase their chances of success:

IVF success rates are so discouraging that there are some centers trying to do better in terms of creating babies by using multiple [embryo] implants. It shows at the forty-one [leading] centers there were an average of three embryos used. Some centers use more than that. When they do, they sometimes create multiple pregnancies, three, four, five, or six babies ... Then they use fetal reduction, which is killing some fetuses to preserve the health of the mother and to help the other fetuses survive. That is a serious procedure. But because of the lack of pressure to standardize, routinize, and assure quality in the centers out there, we have this kind of dubious activity going on out there. [38]

The above quote highlights one of the primary reasons that pro-life activists oppose artificially-assisted reproduction techniques such as IVF that result in the creation of so-called "spare" embryos that are then disposed of or experimented upon. Another reason is that the women who go through all of the pain, trouble and expense of IVF in order to have a baby, must suffer intense heartbreak when they are told that one or more of them must be deliberately killed in order to spare the lives of the others.

For further information on IVF and other assisted reproduction techniques, see Chapter 15, "Assisted Reproduction."

Facts of Life: Chapter 1: Surgical Abortion: How Abortion Mills Dispose of the Remains of Aborted Babies

How Abortion Mills Dispose of the Remains of Aborted Babies.

There are two common methods of disposing of the bodies of first-trimester aborted babies: Flushing them down a garbage disposal or "Insinkerator" or disposing of them as biological waste in special plastic bags. Larger aborted babies are frequently sold for research purposes.

Pro-abortionists do not want the remains of aborted babies (especially late-term aborted babies) to fall into the hands of pro-life activists who then can reveal the bloody reality of abortion to the world. In Wichita, Kansas, and other cities, pro-lifers have discovered aborted preborn babies as large as six pounds (full-term) being burned as garbage along with dead dogs, cats, and birds thrown out by local Humane Society offices.[39] Some abortionists have even used meat grinders and garbage disposals to dispose of the bodies of aborted preborn babies.[40]

In order to completely eliminate the bodies of late-term aborted babies, some abortuaries that specialize in third-trimester abortions possess on-site crematoria.

It is very important for pro-abortionists to deny the humanity of the preborn child even after he or she is dead in order to maintain a grisly consistency. In several instances when pro-life activists have tried to bury dead preborn babies, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and other pro-abortion groups have sued them because such funerals would allegedly "violate the separation of Church and State." The Number of Women Who Died from Abortions in the USA Before Roe v. Wade.

Pro-Abortion Claims. Pro-abortion groups commonly claim that anywhere from 5,000 to 140,000 women died annually from illegal surgical abortions in the United States before Roe v. Wade.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, co-founder of the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (now NARAL Pro-Choice America) and the former operator of the largest abortuary in the world, was one of the originators of the popular "5,000 to 10,000 deaths" figure.

After he converted to the pro-life movement, he revealed the deception behind these figures:

How many deaths were we talking about when abortion was illegal? In NARAL, we generally emphasized the frame of the individual case, not the mass statistics, but when we spoke of the latter it was always "5,000 to 10,000 deaths a year." I confess that I knew the figures were totally false, and I suppose the others did too if they stopped to think of it. But in the "morality" of our revolution, it was a useful figure, widely accepted, so why go out of our way to correct it with honest statistics? The overriding concern was to get the [anti-abortion] laws eliminated, and anything within reason that had to be done was permissible."^[42]

Many other American pro-abortionists have acknowledged that they vastly inflated the numbers of maternal deaths. For example, author Marian Faux confirms the lie supporting what she labels "propaganda" in her book Roe v. Wade: "An image of tens of thousands of women being maimed or killed each year by illegal abortion was so persuasive a piece of propaganda that the [pro-choice] movement could be forgiven its failure to double-check the facts."^[43]

Malcolm Potts, former Medical Director of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF), who helped promote abortion throughout the world, claimed in 1970, "Those who want the [abortion] law to be liberalized will stress the hazards of illegal abortion and claim that hundreds, or thousands, of women die unnecessarily each year - when the actual number is far lower."^[44]

When actual American illegal abortion statistics were examined closely, the actual number of women dying before legalization turned out to be much lower than pro-abortionists claimed.

The late Dr. Christopher Tietze of the Population Council, the country's most experienced abortion statistician, believed that the illegal abortion death rate in the United States was about 100 deaths for every 100,000 abortions in the mid-1960s.[45] The U.S. government's Centers for Disease Control (CDC) estimate that about 150 women died annually from illegal abortions before Colorado, California and North Carolina legalized it in 1967. Using Tietze's illegal abortion death rate figure, this results in a total of perhaps 150,000 annual illegal abortions in the early and mid-1960s.[46]

These estimates are typical of a number of approximations that have been made by experts in the field of abortion epidemiology and statistics. Higher estimates of maternal deaths are invariably accompanied by little or no documentation.

A Problem with Documentation? Pro-abortionists argue that the "official" CDC illegal abortion-death figures are much too low because almost all of the deaths caused by illegal abortion before 1973 were not reported or properly documented.

This obviously cannot be the case. As described later in this Chapter, the maternal death rate has declined steadily over the last fifty years. If a major cause of maternal deaths was suddenly removed by the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, there would have been a sharp drop in the absolute numbers of maternal deaths. Yet no such drop occurred.[47]

According to the United States government's Bureau of Vital Statistics and the CDC, the last time 1,000 women died of illegal abortions in the United States was in the year before penicillin became widely available to the public - 1942. The number of maternal deaths from illegal abortions declined steeply until it stabilized at about 90 to 150 per year during the decade before Roe v. Wade.[48]

The Number of Women Who Currently Die from Illegal Abortions Worldwide.

The Pro-Abortion Claims. When pro-abortionists find a lie that works, they use it all over the world. One of the most effective tactics the abortion movement has used in almost every nation is to greatly exaggerate the numbers of women who die from illegal abortions in order to generate sympathy for their cause and make pro-lifers seem heartless.

Many pro-abortion claims about numbers of maternal deaths from illegal abortions in various developing countries exceed the total number of deaths of all women of childbearing age for all reasons in those respective nations.

For instance, before legalization, Indian pro-abortionists commonly claimed that the total number of women dying of illegal abortion procedures was an incredible 600,000 annually.[49] African medical professionals have recently claimed that as many as 74,000 African women currently die of illegal abortions each year.[50] And abortion promoters have alleged that 140,000 women die of illegal abortions every year in Mexico.[51]

Perhaps the most extreme example of exaggeration is the BEMFAM estimate of 400,000 annual deaths in Brazil. BEMFAM is the Brazilian affiliate of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) figures have showed that only 55,066 Brazilian women between the ages of 14 and 50 died of all causes in 1980. The IBGE figures were confirmed by World Health Organization (WHO) statistics showing that 41,685 Brazilian women between the ages of 15 and 41 died in 1986 and, of these, 241 died of complications from both legal and illegal abortions.[52]

This means that Planned Parenthood grossly inflated the actual number of illegal abortion deaths in Brazil by 166,000 percent!

It is a simple matter to add up pro-abortion claims of deaths from illegal abortions in a number of nations to produce an aggregate claimed total number of worldwide deaths. These include current figures in countries where abortion is now illegal and pre-legalization figures in countries where abortion is now legal.

The resulting total number of deaths would be more than two million, which would make illegal abortion the number one cause of death among women of childbearing age on this planet.[53]

The usual number of total worldwide illegal abortion deaths currently claimed by pro-abortionists is comparatively modest, but is still a gross exaggeration.

The Worldwatch Institute has claimed that 200,000 women die from illegal abortions each year and from six million to eight million more "suffer serious, often lifelong health problems." [54] This number is echoed by virtually every pro-abortion group from the Fund for a Feminist Majority to the Revolutionary Communist Party of the United States. [55]

The magic "200,000" seems to carry the same cachet for pro-abortionists on a worldwide level as their discredited "5,000 to 10,000" figure did for the United States. IPPF is the worst offender in this area, and the 200,000 figure is repeated so frequently in its literature that it approaches the status of a mantra: "It is conservatively estimated that 200,000 women worldwide die every year from abortions that are illegal and unsafe." [56] "Hospital records alone show that 200,000 women die from such non-clinical abortions worldwide each year; the real total is estimated to be much higher." [57] "Illegal abortions in developing countries result in as many as 200,000 maternal deaths each year.”[58]

Despite the occasional pro-abortion claim that the figure of 200,000 deaths was derived from "hospital records" (which would have been a mammoth international accounting task indeed!), no original documentation or impartial verification of this number is ever provided. In fact, such proof would be impossible given the extremely rudimentary quality of census and hospital statistics in many developing countries.

One must question why IPPF continues to use this number, particularly because the Alan Guttmacher Institute, closely associated with the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), employs the most experienced abortion statisticians in the world.

An Estimate of Worldwide Maternal Deaths from Illegal Abortion. The pro-abortion claim that 200,000 women currently die from unsanitary illegal abortions is a persuasive piece of unsupported and unverified propaganda. However, the question remains: How many women really die from illegal abortions in the world today?

A few simple calculations will yield a fairly accurate estimate.

Two reasonable assumptions about abortion mortality rates must first be established. The Alan Guttmacher Institute estimates that the current worldwide mortality rate for legal abortions is about 0.6 per 100,000.[59] For the purposes of this estimate, it is assumed that illegal abortions are 20 times as dangerous as legal abortions on a worldwide basis - 12 per 100,000, or twice the illegal/legal mortality ratio commonly quoted by Planned Parenthood and NARAL Pro-Choice America (formerly the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, or NARRAL).

The Alan Guttmacher Institute also estimates that 26 to 31 million legal abortions are done annually in these countries, and 10 to 22 million clandestine abortions are done in these and other countries each year.[59]

The above statistics lead to the conclusion that a maximum of women die each year from illegal abortions.

$$22,000,000 \times (12/100,000) = 2,640$$

Remember that these numbers are calculated entirely from pro-abortion statistics, thereby making them immune to charges of pro-life bias.

This means that the common pro-abortion claim of 200,000 annual maternal deaths from illegal abortion is an exaggeration of 7,500 percent.

The Legalization of Abortion Does Not Improve Maternal Health.

One of the most common arguments of pro-abortionists in support of legal abortion is the allegation that "safe and legal" abortion contributes to improved overall maternal health, mainly because the dangers of "back-alley" abortions are eliminated. In support of this claim, they point out that the maternal death rate in the United States after abortion was legalized was lower than it was before it was legalized.

The International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) repeats this argument several times in its Vision 2000 document as a justification for legalizing abortion worldwide.

This is a classic pro-abortion half-truth. The maternal death rates after abortion was legalized in the United States and other countries are indeed lower than before; but abortion has little or nothing to do with the change, which is always the result of more significant factors.

It is important to note that the most significant drop in the U.S. maternal mortality rate occurred prior to the legalization of abortion in 1973. The United States' maternal mortality rate (which includes all deaths due to abortion, childbirth, and ectopic pregnancies) was 37.1/100,000 live births in 1960. The rate was 16.4/100,000 in 1973, the year of the Roe v. Wade decision. This means that the average annual decline in the maternal mortality rate before abortion was fully legalized (between 1960 and 1973) was 1.59/100,000.[60]

This rate of decline remained nearly constant even after the first several states legalized abortion during the time period 1967-1969. The maternal mortality rate was 9.6/100,000 in 1978, which means that the average annual decline in the rate after abortion was legalized (during the period 1973 to 1978) was 1.36/100,000, less than the rate of decline before abortion was legalized.

In 1993, the maternal mortality rate was beginning to level out at 7.5/100,000 as it approached its lowest practicable level for such a large and diverse population, and has recently begun to fluctuate within a narrow range despite the wide availability of legal abortion.[60]

This steady trend reflects advances in all areas of medicine. The introduction of abortion methods, both legal and illegal, that pose fewer dangers to the mother, have had a negligible impact on the decline in the maternal mortality rate.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson thus concludes:

In fact, the lowering of maternal mortality has been due largely, if not entirely, to advances in anesthesia techniques; the development of new and more powerful antibiotics; the emergence of realtime ultrasound; major strides in laboratory technology with a deeper understanding of the mechanisms of infectious disease; more sophisticated transfusion techniques and - perhaps most important - a higher and more standardized level of training of nurses, medical students and resident physicians in obstetrics and gynecology.[61]

Common Physical Dangers of Surgical Abortion.

It is interesting to note that pro-abortionists exaggerated the physical risks of illegal abortion for the purpose of political gain and now understate and cover up the dangers of legal abortion for exactly the same reason.

Warren Hern, one of the most prolific abortionists in the United States, has admitted that "in medical practice, there are few surgical procedures given so little attention and so underrated in its potential hazards as abortion. It is a commonly held view that complications are inevitable." [62]

Despite what Hern and other abortionists have revealed, many pro-abortion organizations - including the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), NARAL Pro-Choice America and the National Abortion Federation (NAF) - circulate glossy "fact sheets" purporting to "show" that abortion is extremely safe for the mother, both physically and mentally.

These groups do not mention that their "fact sheets" include only very conservative estimates of those injuries that occur during or immediately after the abortion itself in countries with modern medicine. These are commonly referred to as "on-the-table" complications. The pro-abortion "fact sheets" also ignore problems that occur after women leave abortuaries and do not mention those due to ancillary causes such as resulting ectopic pregnancies and severe nervous system and brain damage from "anesthetic misadventures."

Some of the more common physical dangers of abortion are:[63]

- Death. As many as 100 women currently die from legal abortions in the United States every year. The vast majority of these deaths are not reported as being caused by abortion. Instead, coroners attribute them to other causes, such as "blood poisoning," "anesthetic misadventure," or "spontaneous gangrene of the ovaries."
- Uterine Perforation. Between two and three percent of aborted women suffer perforations of the uterus. Most of the perforations caused during first-trimester perforations of the uterus. Most of the perforations caused during first-trimester abortions go undiagnosed and may lead to problems that may require a hysterectomy or other major corrective surgery, which, in itself, entails physical and psychological complications. Perforations occurring during late-term abortions are more frequent and are always serious in nature.

- Cervical Lacerations. Cervical lacerations requiring sutures occur in about one percent of all first-trimester abortions. Less severe undiagnosed cervical damage may result in subsequent cervical incompetence, premature delivery and labor complications. Cervical damage and scarring of the endometrium from abortion may also increase the risk of abnormal development of the placenta in subsequent pregnancies, thus increasing the risk of birth defects.
- Breast Cancer. As described further here, the risk of breast cancer more than doubles after one abortion and grows even greater with subsequent abortions.
- Cervical, Ovarian and Liver Cancer. Women who have had one abortion more than double their risks of cervical, ovarian, and liver cancer, and women with more than one abortion quadruple their risks.
- Placenta Previa. Placenta previa involves a placenta being superimposed upon the os and causes severe hemorrhage during labor. Abortion increases the risk of this condition by a factor of from 700 to 1,500 percent. Placenta previa also increases the risks of subsequent fetal malformation and perinatal death.
- Ectopic Pregnancies. Abortion is related to an increase in ectopic pregnancies in future pregnancies, which can seriously threaten the mother's future fertility and even her life. Abortionists may also "abort" a mother who has an ectopic pregnancy at the time, thereby allowing the condition to continue and placing her life in danger.
- Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID). PID is life-threatening and can lead to subsequent infertility and an increased risk of ectopic pregnancy. Twenty-five percent of mothers who have chlamydia [the most common female venereal disease] at the time of their abortions will develop PID, and five percent of those who do not have chlamydia at the time will develop PID.
- Endometritis. Endometritis is inflammation of the endometrium (the mucous membrane lining the uterus). Abortion increases the risk of endometritis, especially among teenagers.

There are two primary reasons why the rates of legal abortion injuries are always underreported. First, abortion mills do not legally require licensing, and most states (including California, New York, Texas and Florida, which account for 40 percent of all abortions in the United States) do not require the reporting of abortion-related injuries. This allows many abortion deaths and injuries discovered after the woman leaves the abortuary to be attributed to other causes. Therefore, any rate of legal abortion morbidity and mortality in many states must necessarily be an estimate and must therefore be suspect.

Second, less than 40 percent of women who require post-abortion emergency care return to the abortionist, but instead go to their own gynecologist or to an emergency room when they begin to suffer delayed abortion problems, such as infections.[64] Aggravating this situation is the fact that only 30 to 40 percent of women who have had abortions return for the abortion mill's follow-up examinations (even if required), thereby letting many injuries go undetected until they cause serious problems [65] relating many injuries go undetected until they cause serious problems.[60]

The Common Psychological Problems Abortion Causes to Fathers.

The Danforth Decision. The United States Supreme Court ruled on father's rights regarding abortion in its Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth decision of July 7, 1976.

Among other findings, the Supreme Court held that any requirement that a husband or parent be even informed about a wife's or minor's abortion is unconstitutional.

This decision stripped fathers of any legal right whatever to protect their own preborn children. The father therefore has less of a right to protect his own child than abortion referral agents have to arrange its death, the abortionists to kill it, or the State to declare his slightest opposition unconstitutional and punishable. His relationship to his own child is deemed much less important than his relationship to a piece of property - say a car stereo.

On the other hand, the Danforth decision enforced "mandatory fatherhood" for those men who did not want a child. In summary, a father has literally no voice whatever in the decision to have or not have a child. And this glaring and hurtful inequality is ignored by the same feminists who are demanding equality themselves.

In a subsequent case (Conn v. Conn), the Supreme Court refused to hear litigation which attempted to establish minimal rights for the fathers of preborn children. James Bopp of the National Right to Life Committee (NRLC) represented Erin Andrew Conn of Elkhart, Indiana, who won a court order in June 1988 barring his wife, Jennifer, six weeks pregnant, from having an abortion. She defied the court injunction and had an abortion with the help of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU). Her lawyer, Richard A. Waples of the Indiana ACLU, stated in legal papers that "she did what she had to do to protect both her physical and emotional health."

This document made it sound as if Jennifer Conn had her back against the wall, and that abortion was the only way out for her. Why did Jennifer Conn need an abortion "to protect both her physical and emotional health?" Court documents showed that she had the abortion because she had planned a trip to the beach and wanted to look good in her new bathing suit!^[85]

The Conn v. Conn case was the first pure "father's rights" litigation brought to the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States, and decisively demonstrated that fathers have no rights whatever regarding their preborn children.

Impacts on Fathers and Relationships. According to a national poll, more than half of all fathers - including married men - are not even told that their children have been aborted.[86]

While feminists demand total control over the abortion decision, they callously disregard the feelings and needs of men, whom they lock out of the process with grim determination. And while they demand that men be more "sensitive" and "caring," they mandate that men have no say in the decision regarding whether or not their own child lives.

The reaction of Louise Tyrer, vice-president of medical affairs at Planned Parenthood, is typical of the utter callousness that pro-abortionists show towards any rights other than their own: "But it doesn't matter how much men scream and holler that they are being left out [of the abortion decision]. There are some things that they are never going to be able to experience fully. I say, 'tough luck.'"[87] Marjorie Reiley Maguire and Daniel C. Maguire, members of the anti-religious group 'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC), counseled that "Nor is [abortion] a question of the man's rights. You have no moral obligation to consult him or to consider his desire that you continue the pregnancy." [88]

This callous hypocrisy can only lead to anger and hurt on the part of men and a subsequent tremendous strain on relationships.

Researcher Arthur Shostak surveyed 1,000 men waiting in abortion mills while their wives and girlfriends were being aborted. He tallied and analyzed their responses to his questions on their feelings and concluded the following:

- 42 percent of the boyfriends had offered to marry the woman;
- 25 percent of those who did not offer to marry the woman offered child support;
- Most of the men, regardless of their feelings toward abortion, offered to pay the costs of the abortion "procedure;"
- 39 percent of the men believed that life began at conception or when the nervous system began to function; and
- 26 percent believed that the abortion was the "killing of a child."

Shostak's study, not surprisingly, found a vast range of emotions among the men. They feared for the women's health, felt guilty about the abortion or the pregnancy, felt self-doubt, and also anguish and pain over the loss of their children and over the entire abortion "experience." [89]

Just as childbirth is not a trivial issue for a woman, abortion is not a trivial issue for a man. University of Maryland psychologist Arnold Medvene says that "Abortion is one of the major death experiences that men go through. It resurrects very important, very primitive issues, memories, and feelings." [90]

When men are purposely and systematically shut out of such an important decision, they (being men) must take some kind of action to relieve their frustrations. Clinical studies have shown that men become angry when they are purposely omitted from an important decision that involves their own family, and they feel deceived and manipulated. The man may not show his anger at the time of the abortion, but it will eventually express itself through "hooking," a process of reacting angrily to a situation that he associates with the abortion. [91] In other words, he may feel strong emotions when he sees a child that is the same age as his aborted child would have been, or when he sees a pregnant mother. This kind of reaction is remarkably similar to those of women suffering from post-abortion syndrome (PAS).

Most commonly, however, a man reacts to an abortion that was committed over his objections by dumping his wife or girlfriend. One study showed that three-fourths of the relationships between married and unmarried couples fell apart within one month of the abortion. [92] Not surprisingly, feminist groups object strenuously to the men abandoning relationships without any input from women, while they fully support the "right" of women killing their preborn children without any input from men.

What the Anti-Lifers Think.

"We have seen more than once that the public welfare may call upon the best citizens for their lives [in warfare]. It would be strange if it could not call upon those who already sap the strength of the State for these lesser sacrifices. ... Three generations of imbeciles are enough."

- Supreme Court Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes in Buck v. Bell.[2]

Although they have eschewed the word, many anti-lifers still believe that the practice of eugenics possesses an entirely undeserved negative reputation. They say that the science of eugenics - or, as it is often called now, "human genetics" - is merely the use of scientific principles to solve the problem of improving the health of the entire human race - by improving the health of individuals. Then they go on to stereotype pro-lifers, saying that "scaremongers would have us believe that slaving Nazi butchers in white lab coats are waiting in the wings for just the right moment to perform their hideous experiments on the unsuspecting. What nonsense!"

The majority of anti-lifers will indeed disavow the word "eugenics," but not its practice. They approve of population control, sex-selection abortions, prenatal testing followed by the abortion of handicapped preborns, in-vitro fertilization and all kinds of other assisted reproduction techniques, fetal experimentation and organ harvesting, cloning and euthanasia. All of these practices are purely eugenic in nature, because they "select out" weaker human beings for extinction through artificial selection.

Why Pro-Lifers Should Study Eugenics.

"If any one age really attains, by eugenics and scientific education, the power to make its descendants what it pleases, all men who live after are the patients of that power, slaves to the dead hand of the great planners and conditioners. If man chooses to treat himself as raw material, raw material he will be."

- C.S. Lewis. The Abolition of Man.[3]

The Distilled Anti-Life Mentality. The "anti-life mentality" frequently referred to in The Facts of Life could just as accurately be called the "eugenics mentality."

The theory of eugenics is the purest distillation of anti-life thinking. The practice of eugenics is simply the anti-life movements in action. The theory and practice of eugenics covers the entire spectrum of the "slippery slope," from artificial contraception to abortion to euthanasia to genocide, and also encompasses many other evils as well.

Eugenics is and always has been a racist philosophy. Even some pro-abortion theorists recognize that it is always wealthy white people who drive the movement to exterminate those they consider imperfect - and many times, dark skin is considered an "imperfection" [see Figure 24-8 for a "lineup" of famous eugenicists - almost every one of whom is wealthy and white]. As radical feminist Ninia Baehr has observed, "Historically, white, heterosexual, able-bodied, middle-class men and women in the population control, birth control, eugenics, and abortion rights movements have not respected the choices of people who were different from them." [4]

The second hallmark of eugenics is its use of abortion. Both on a national and a personal scale, prenatal diagnosis and abortion are the ideal tools for eliminating the less-than-perfect. In China, India and other Asian countries, this lethal combination has led to the deaths of tens of millions of preborn babies - not because they were handicapped, but because they were female (see Chapter 4, "China's Forced Abortion Program"). In the United States, the National Institute of Health (NIH) has found that parents aborted more than 95 percent of all preborn babies who were found "defective" by prenatal genetic tests.[5]

In summary, eugenics is the foundation for "scientific racism;" it is the driving force behind abortion, euthanasia, embryo and fetal research, the global population policy, and a galaxy of other evils so bizarre they would have been unimaginable to even the most inventive science-fiction writer in the 1950s. Eugenics philosophy is ingrained in all of the social sciences, to include anthropology, sociology and psychology. Since it is so pervasive, it is worth studying and understanding.

Evil Refined. Until the mid-1980s in North America and Europe, eugenics practice had been limited to dictating that it is we, not God, who determines who will be born into this world (through the widespread practice of abortion). We are now at the point where eugenics may very well determine who will remain here (through the growing practices of infanticide, euthanasia, 'medicide' and 'senicide').

Eugenics certainly did not die with the Third Reich. The eugenics "movement" flourished long before Hitler came to power, and it is certainly alive and well today. In fact, it is stronger now than it ever has been. And, since its adherents have learned their lessons regarding the value of the tactics of stealth, deception, incrementalism, and propaganda from long experience, the eugenics movement is far deadlier.

Facts of Life: Chapter 24: Eugenics: Definitions

Definitions.

In order to be able to understand and discuss the eugenics mentality and its goals, it is necessary to define the differences between positive and negative eugenics.

These definitions, set forth by prominent geneticist Kurt Hirschhorn, M.D., are given below.

Eugenics - Planned breeding designed to alter the genetic makeup of future generations.

Positive Eugenics - the preferential breeding of so-called superior individuals in order to improve the genetic stock of the human race.

Negative Eugenics - discouragement or the legal prohibition of reproduction of individuals carrying genes leading to disease or disability ... can be achieved by genetic counseling or by sterilization, either voluntary or enforced.[6]

In general, then "eugenics" is the study and employment of methods designed to improve the genetic characteristics of the human race by controlling the reproduction of individuals.

The Early History of Eugenics.

"The eugenic movement, therefore, can not be a short campaign like many political or social movements. It is, rather, like the founding and development of Christianity, something to be handed on from age to age."

- "Report of the President of the American Eugenics Society, Inc.," June 26, 1926, page 20.

The Pioneers Make Their Case. In 1798, Thomas Malthus published An Essay on the Principle of Population, which argued that, while the human population is growing at a geometrical rate, food production is only growing at an arithmetic (straight-line) rate. This means that, sooner or later, widespread starvation and famine will occur, resulting in a drastic cutback in the human population.

Charles Darwin set the scientific world on its ear in 1856 when he published his book On the Origin of Species, which set forth for the first time a coherent explanation of the theory of evolution. In his Preface, Darwin stated that evolution was "an application of the theories of Malthus to the entire animal and vegetable kingdom." Darwin stated that his "theory of natural selection" - why some species endured while others disappeared - was based on Malthus' mathematical theories. In 1871, Darwin extended this thesis in his book The Descent of Man. He stated that humanity, as it evolved, would see some of the weaker races reduced in number or even wiped out by "natural selection" in the form of famine, diseases, war, and other influences, while others (the stronger races) would survive and thrive.

Francis Galton, a cousin of Charles Darwin, coined the term "eugenics" in 1883, a derivation from the Greek "good birth" (it is no coincidence that the term "euthanasia," the control of death, is derived from the Greek "good death").

Galton described eugenics as "The science of improving [human] stock ... to give the more suitable races a better chance of prevailing speedily over the less suitable." [7] He founded the Eugenics Society in 1907, whose purpose was "... to spread eugenic teaching and bring human parenthood under the domination of eugenic ideals." [8]

Galton's new science, which came to be known as Social Darwinism, held that the struggle for existence in society and evolution would inevitably lead to the "fittest" races achieving domination over the "less fit."

In 1869, Galton had published his work Hereditary Genius, in which he wondered if it might be possible to produce geniuses by inbreeding the upper classes through several might be possible to produce geniuses by inbreeding the upper classes through several generations, while sequestering the "less desirable elements" in monasteries, convents, and institutions.

Galton held the popular view that the naturally occurring evolution of the human race was being thwarted by philanthropy directed at "undesirable" segments of the population. In other words, he proposed replacing Darwin's "natural selection" with human-engineered "artificial selection" in order to speed up the evolution of the human race. This "artificial selection" in all of its forms was to become the new science of eugenics.

One of the first tasks at hand for the new eugenicists was to cut off, as far as possible, aid to the poor so that natural selection could once again do its work. Margaret Sanger, founder of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), said that

Such philanthropy, as Dean Inge has so unanswerably pointed out, is kind only to be cruel, and unwittingly promotes precisely the results most deprecated. It encourages the healthier and more normal sections of the world to shoulder the burden of unthinking and indiscriminate fecundity of others; which brings with it, as I think the reader must agree, a dead weight of human waste. Instead of decreasing and aiming to eliminate the stocks that are most detrimental to the future of the race and the world, it tends to render them to a menacing degree dominant.[9]

Francis Galton believed that, since natural selection was being curtailed by philanthropy, a kind of "artificial selection" would be needed in order to balance it out and return the process of evolution to a more "natural" state. Galton believed in the power of religion to move men's souls and minds, so he intended eugenics to develop from a science into national policy and finally into a religion.[10] The American Eugenics Society actually published a "Eugenics Catechism for Clergymen," which outlined the tenets and dogmas of this new religion.[11]

Atheist and racist Julian Huxley was the most important strategist of the Twentieth Century eugenics movement. He was the first Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and President of the English Eugenics Society (see Figure 24-8). He also founded the World Wildlife Fund (WWF), and was a member of both the British Euthanasia Society and the Abortion Law Reform Association (ALRA). His grandfather, Thomas Henry Huxley, was a leading advocate of Darwin's theories. His brother Aldous was the famous New Age psychedelic drug lobbyist.[12]

Julian Huxley seconded Galton's view that eugenics should eventually "evolve" into a religion;

We must face the fact that now, in this year of grace, the great majority of human beings are substandard: They are undernourished. or ill. or condemned to a ceaseless struggle for bare existence; they are imprisoned in ignorance or superstition. We must see to it that life is no longer a hell paved with unrealized opportunity. In this light, the highest and most sacred duty of man is seen as the proper utilization of the untapped resources of human beings. ... I find myself inevitably driven to use the language of religion, for the fact is that all this does add up to something in the nature of a religion: Perhaps one might call it Evolutionary Humanism. The word 'religion' is often used restrictively to mean belief in gods; but I am not using it in this sense. ... I am using it in a broader sense, to denote an overall relation between man and his destiny, and one involving his deepest feelings, including his sense of what is sacred. In this broad sense, evolutionary humanism, it seems to me, is capable of becoming the germ of a new religion, not necessarily supplanting existing religions but supplementing them.[14]

One of the foremost eugenicists of the first half of the Twentieth Century is known to almost all pro-lifers as the founder of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) - Margaret Sanger.

Figure 24-1 includes just a few quotes by writers in Sanger's Birth Control Review in support of racist eugenics. Figure 24-2 is the complete text of Sanger's eugenicist "Plan for Peace."

All of these quotes were typed by the author directly from a complete set of The Birth Control Review, and they are absolutely authentic. In light of all of these racist and eugenicist statements, it is astounding that Planned Parenthood continues to deny that Margaret Sanger had a "program" for "Negros."

The white race then may proceed as follows: Let the Christians exterminate all Jews and Moslems, then the Protestants kill all Catholics, then let the Ku-Klux-Klan kill everybody except the one-hundred-per-cent [racially pure]; then let the Nordic race with blond hair and blue eyes kill off all the dark complexioned."

"2e. As a last resort the Nordics may cultivate large colonies of Typhoid, Flu or other bacilli and distribute them, as occasion requires, by means of aeroplanes, and manufacture cheaply on a large scale, poison gases and smoke the surplus [colored] population to hades."

"Only the inconceivable eventuality of an alliance of all the other races of the world against the white race could seriously threaten white civilization, and by the time the colored races reach the stage where this would be possible, they will long since have been forced to adopt birth control themselves.

"The white will practice voluntary restriction of their numbers while "uncivilized" races remain prolific, with the ultimate result of the extermination of white civilization by a 'rising tide of color.'"

"I am hoping that your influence will be felt among the masses of three races in particular, the Hebrew, the Italian, and the Negro. From casual observation it seems to me that these races are less observant of Birth Control than any others."

- "The Correspondents Column." Birth Control Review, Volume IX, Number 12 (December 1925), page 357.

"I wish to reiterate that all objections to birth control can be met unanswerably except one - that the human race will degenerate if the superior races and the superior classes among civilized races will curtail the number of their offspring while inferior races and the inferior strata in civilized countries will continue their high birthrate. This must be prevented by all means, and it can be if we go about it earnestly and zealously, and if the civilized governments give us their cooperation."

- Editorial in The Critic and Guide, July 1931, quoted in "In the Magazines." Birth Control Review, Volume XV, Number 9 (September 1931), page 268.

"The Negro problem is one of the most complicated and important confronting America. ... Whatever the ultimate answer may be, such an attitude brings to light the function of birth control as a necessary agency in its solution. The present submerged condition of the Negro is due in large part to the high fertility of the race under disastrously adverse circumstances. ... Thus the question arises to what extent birth control has had a eugenic effect upon the Negro race ..."

- Editorial. Birth Control Review, Volume XVI, Number 6 (June 1932, the "Negro Number"), pages 164 and 165.

"There is no great opposition to birth control among the twelve million brown Americans ... Negroes are perhaps more receptive to this information than white folk. Despite their vaunted superiority, the white brethren have a full quota of illusions and, one might say, hypocrisies, especially about anything dealing with sex ..."

"After all, a woman is biologically a child factory, as a cow is a milk factory and a hen an egg factory. Certain ingredients of a certain quality are necessary to produce a healthy child under proper conditions of rest and security. If these are absent, the child will usually be an inferior product."

- George Schuyler. "Quality or Quantity." Birth Control Review, Volume XVI, Number 6 (June 1932, the "Negro Number"), page 166.

"Basing their prognostications on the Negro's mortality rate as compared with that of the white population, they have seen the solution of the vexatious Negro problem achieved by the mere passing of time. And not a few anthropologists and sociologists have valiantly maintained that the difference in Negro and white mortality rates is conclusive evidence of the innate inferiority of the Negro.

"... Negroes who by virtue of their education and capacity are best able to rear children shrink from that responsibility and the Negro who, in addition to the handicaps of race and color, is shackled by mental and social incompetence serenely goes on his way bringing into the world children whose chances of mere existence are apparently becoming more and more hazardous.

"The probabilities are that the race problem in America is infinitely aggravated by the presence of too many unhappily born, sub-normals, morons, and imbeciles of both ["negro" and white] races. ... For at present the practice [of birth control] is confined to those whose offspring would be best fitted to carry the lance of racial progress."

- Elmer A. Carter. "Eugenics For The Negro." Birth Control Review, Volume XVI, Number 6 (June 1932, the "Negro Number"), page 169.

"In virtually every community where Negroes dwell one finds them in fat times and lean alike contributing a disproportionate number to the rolls of the dependents and delinquents. They make excessive demands on the white man's charity and overtax his patience with their delinquencies. Recent data from several towns and cities indicate that the Negro is furnishing a quota in the fields mentioned, four or five times in excess of his portion of the population. Whatever the explanation, one thing is certain: too many Negro parents have made themselves and their offspring public dependents by having a too numerous progeny.

"It is this sort of behavior that the white man is coming to resent. Time was when the dominant race was over indulgent, but that is rapidly passing. The Negro can no longer ask indulgence, he must command respect. If he will learn to control his fecundity, he will not have to give hostages to the white man till the white man despises him for his weakness and counts him a social menace."

Margaret Sanger's Eugenics-Based "Plan for Peace"

"First, put into action President Wilson's fourteen points, upon which terms Germany and Austria surrendered to the Allies in 1918.

"Second, have Congress set up a special department for the study of population problems and appoint a Parliament of Population, the directors representing the various branches of science: This body to direct and control the population through birth rates and immigration, and to direct its distribution over the country according to national needs consistent with taste, fitness and interest of the individuals.

"The main objectives of the Population Congress would be:

- a. To raise the level and increase the general intelligence of population.
- b. To increase the population slowly by keeping the birth rate at its present level of fifteen per thousand, decreasing the death rate below its present mark of 11 per thousand.
- c. To keep the doors of immigration closed to the entrance of certain aliens whose condition is known to be detrimental to the stamina of the race, such as feeble-minded, idiots, morons, insane, syphilitic, epileptic, criminal, professional prostitutes, and others in this class barred by the immigration laws of 1924 [Note that Jews and Catholics who were prospective immigrants when given the Stanford-Binet I.Q. tests were graded as 'feeble-minded' and thus disqualified from entrance].
- d. To apply a stern and rigid policy of sterilization and segregation to that grade of population whose progeny is already tainted, or whose inheritance is such that objectionable traits may be transmitted to offspring.
- e. To insure the country against future burdens of maintenance for numerous offspring as may be born of feeble-minded parents, by pensioning all persons with transmissible diseases who voluntarily consent to sterilization.
- f. To give certain dysgenic groups in our population their choice of segregation or sterilization.
- g. To apportion farm lands and homesteads for these segregated persons where they would be taught to work under competent instructors for the period of their entire lives [practically speaking, a recipe for a concentration camp].

"The first step would thus be to control the intake and output of morons, mental defectives, epileptics.

"The second step would be to take an inventory of the secondary group such as illiterates, paupers, unemployables, criminals, prostitutes, dope-fiends; classify them in special departments under government medical protection, and segregate them on farms and open spaces as long as necessary for the strengthening and development of moral conduct.

"Having corralled this enormous part of our population and placed it on a basis of health instead of punishment, it is safe to say that fifteen or twenty millions of our population would then be organized into soldiers of defense - defending the unborn against their own disabilities ...

"The third step would be to give special attention to the mothers' health, to see that women who are suffering from tuberculosis, heart or kidney disease, toxic goiter, gonorrhoea, or any disease where the condition of pregnancy disturbs their health are placed under public health nurses to instruct them in practical, scientific methods of contraception in order to safeguard their lives - thus reducing maternal mortality.

"The above steps may seem to place emphasis on a health program instead of on tariffs, moratoriums and debts, but I believe that national health is the first essential factor in any program for universal peace.

"With the future citizen safeguarded from hereditary taints, with five million mental and moral degenerates segregated, with ten million women and ten million children receiving adequate care, we could then turn our attention to the basic needs for international peace.

"There would be a definite effort to make population increase slowly and at a specified rate, in order to accommodate and adjust increasing numbers to the best social and economic system.

"In the meantime we should organize and join an International League of Low Birth Rate Nations to secure and maintain World Peace."

In this, however, the politicians are at one with the traditions of a civilization which, with its charities and philanthropies, has propped up the defective and degenerate and relieved them of the burdens borne by the healthy sections of the community, thus enabling them more easily and more numerously to propagate their kind" [pages 82 and 83]; "But there is a point at which philanthropy may become positively dysgenic, when charity is converted into injustice to the self-supporting citizen, into positive injury to the future of the race. These dangers inherent in the very idea of humanitarianism and altruism, dangers which have today produced their full harvest of human waste, of inequality and inefficiency, were fully recognized in the last century at the moment when such ideas were first put into practice. Readers of Huxley's attack on the Salvation Army will recall his penetrating and stimulating condemnation of the debauch of sentimentalism which expressed itself in so uncontrolled a fashion in the Victorian era" [pages 108 and 109]; "The effect of maternity endowments and philanthropy would have, perhaps already have had, exactly the most dysgenic tendency. Facts of Life: Chapter 24: Eugenics: The Basics of the Eugenics Philosophy

The Basics of the Eugenics Philosophy.

"If man is not a divinity, then he is a disease. Either he is the image of God, or else he is the one animal which has gone mad."

- G.K. Chesterton.[72]

Introduction. Despite all of the posturing and lofty theorizing of the eugenicists, there stands one immutable, diamond-hard fact: We must not, we cannot, dispose of human life if we perceive it as valuable and sacred. The eugenicists know that, once the connection between God and man is severed, man is no more than a product of the evolutionary chain, and is just another animal to be bred, aborted, neutered, or 'put to sleep' for the general good of society.

If the eugenicists can successfully convince society in general that "man is just another animal," they have virtually accomplished their ultimate goals. After all, we have no moral or ethical problems with breeding, aborting, and slaughtering animals. If the nature of man as God's greatest creation is generally denied, then we truly are just another species of soulless animal.

The practice of eugenics is nothing more than the anti-life mentality put into action. The theory and execution of eugenics-related activities ties all of the anti-life practices together.

Eugenics is diametrically opposed to the precepts of Christianity. On one side of this struggle we have Christian morality handed down by God and set down in Holy Scripture as interpreted by the Church Fathers; on the other side we have eugenicist 'morality' handed down by Darwin and set down in On The Origin of Species as interpreted by the eugenicist 'fathers.'

The First Step: Dehumanization. The first step in any eugenics or euthanasia program is to dehumanize the 'target' population. After all, it is much easier to kill or exploit a victim or an enemy who has been dehumanized and demonized.

Pro-abortionists first dehumanized the obviously human fetus by referring to it as "protoplasmic rubbish," "a goblet of meat," "equivalent to fingernail clipping or warts," "like a salamander," and "products of conception."

During the days of slavery, Blacks were called "dregs of humanity," and were considered "exactly intermediate between the superior order of beasts such as elephant, dog, and orangutan, and European or White men." Other slave owners referred to the slave's "ignorance, brutality, obscenity, animal appetite, viciousness, and illegitimacy," and called them "ignorant, perverse, wicked, the pest of white men, and agents of Satan." [73]

Nazis held that Jews and others not of Aryan quality "... had to be treated like tuberculosis bacilli, with which a healthy body may become infested. This was not cruel, if one remembers that even innocent creatures of nature, such as hares and deer, have to be killed, so that no harm is caused by them." [74]

In his book Mein Kampf, Adolf Hitler referred to the Jews in almost comically vitriolic terms, alternatively comparing them to "maggots in a rotting corpse," "a plague worse than the Black Death," "mankind's eternal germ of disunion," "the drones in the human hive," "spiders sucking blood out of the people's pores," "a pack of rats eating one another," "the eternal bloodsucker," "the vampire of peoples," and "a harmful bacillus that spreads." [75]

Before he targeted the Jews, of course, Hitler killed more than a quarter of a million "sub-humans." These were adults and children who suffered from some physical or mental defect, sometimes trivial in nature.

Under the Nazi eugenicist program, thousands of children were killed by the Reich Committee for Children. Those sickly persons who would be eliminated were identified by the Committee for Research on Hereditary Diseases and Constitutional Susceptibility to Severe Diseases. These unfortunate people were carried to concentration camps by the Non-Profit Patient Transport Corporation, and their passage was funded by the Charitable Foundation for Institutional Care.

The job of the eugenicists is a little tougher today, because they recognize that they cannot target just one group of people with their propaganda. They must convince all of us that we are intrinsically worthless and that all of our value is conferred upon us by society. In this manner, "society" (as directed by the eugenicists, of course) will be able to revoke our right to live at any time.

The quotes shown in Figure 24-6 demonstrate that latter-day eugenicists/euthanasiasts are far down the road to convincing themselves that we human beings are just another breed of animal.

Anti-Humanity Statements by Modern Eugenicists

"Each time another one of us decides not to add another one of us to the

- Ingrid Newkirk, Director of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA). Quoted by Charles Oliver. "Liberation Zoology." Reason Magazine, June 1990, pages 22 to 27.

"We are not interested in the utility of a particular species or free-flowing river, or ecosystem, to mankind. They have intrinsic value, more value to me than another human body, or a billion of them. Human happiness, and certainly human fecundity, are not as important as a wild and healthy planet ... Somewhere along the line - at about a billion years ago, maybe half that - we quit the contract and became a cancer. We have become a plague upon ourselves and upon the earth ... Until such time as homo sapiens should decide to rejoin nature, some of us can only hope for the right virus to come along."

- David M. Graber, quoting Bill McKibben's The End of Nature in the Los Angeles Times book review, as printed in the Orange County [California] Register, October 28, 1990.

"When it comes to feelings, a rat is a pig is a dog is a boy. They are all mammals. They all feel pain. There is no rational basis for saying that a human being has special rights ... 6 million people died in concentration camps, but 6 billion chickens will die this year in slaughterhouses."

"To view the problem of health rationing objectively, what we need is a concept of man as a colonial creature, similar to ants and bees - which, like ourselves, are so highly specialized and so dependent on one another that no one of them can long survive alone. In the hives and homes of these bees and ants, no special care is given to the aged or infirm. Consideration is for the welfare of the colony as a whole."

- Dr. George Crile, Jr., Head of Surgery at the Cleveland Clinic, Cleveland, Ohio, quoted by Cal Thomas of the Los Angeles Times Syndicate, September 1984.

The Second Step: Barnyard Medicine. Eugenacists look upon human beings as a veterinarian looks upon farm animals. After the process of dehumanization has successfully taken place, they logically treat human beings just as a vet would treat a maladjusted or ailing animal.

Charles Darwin, the "Father of Modern Eugenics," recommended handling human beings and animals identically in his work The Descent of Man;

With savages, the weak in body or mind are soon eliminated; and those that survive commonly exhibit a vigorous state of health. We civilized men, on the other hand, do our utmost to check the process of elimination; we build asylums for the imbeciles, the maimed, and the sick; we institute poor laws; and our medical men exert their utmost skill to save the life of everyone to the last moment. There is reason to believe that vaccination has preserved thousands, who from a weak constitution would formerly have succumbed to smallpox. Thus the weak members of civilized society propagate their kind.

"No one who has attended to the breeding of domestic animals will doubt that this must be highly injurious to the race of man. It is surprising how soon a want of care, or care wrongly directed, leads to the degeneration of a domestic race; but excepting in the case of man himself, hardly anyone is so ignorant as to allow his worst animals to breed.[76]

In 1938, The Eugenics Society recommended a framework plan for dealing with human beings under the "People = Animals" philosophy;

The measures which have been proposed for reducing the fertility of sub-normal persons include regulation of births, sterilization, better adjustment of mental defectives within the community, legal prohibition of marriage, termination of pregnancy and health examinations before marriage ... Thus eugenacists aim at replacing the present generation by children who are deliberately conceived in the full light of all known medical, social, and genetic factors. They favor the planned as against the unplanned family, and they want to see the community so organized that its best citizens will feel eager to give full expression to the instincts of parenthood.[77]

And Marie Stopes, birth control champion, member of eugenics societies, and good friend of Margaret Sanger, complained in her book Radiant Motherhood that Society allows the diseased, the racially negligent, the irresponsible, the careless, the feeble minded, the very lowest and worst members of the community, to produce innumerable tens of thousands of stunted, warped, inferior infants. ... A large proportion of these are doomed from their very physical inheritance to be at best but partly self supporting, and thus to drain the resources of those classes above them who have a sense of responsibility. The better classes, freed from the cost of institutions, hospitals, prisons and so on, principally filled by the inferior racial stock, would be able to afford to enlarge their own families.

The sterilization of those totally unfit for parenthood is an immediate possibility, indeed to perhaps be made compulsory.[78]

Eugenics in Action. Eugenists tend to believe that sexuality is a primitive and basically uncontrollable urge, and mankind, as a species of animal, simply cannot rise above his nature. Therefore, the resulting 'sexual frustration' must be relieved somehow if the animals are not to become uncontrollable. Therefore, pornography must be given to the animals.

If these animals have outlets for their sexual urges, they will remain placid and docile. So we have school-based clinics and we distribute free condoms to teens so that they can fornicate whenever their urges overcome them. Self-discipline is viewed as "reactionary" and "restrictive."

Of course, we must also breed out undesirable traits so that the animals will produce what we want them to. So Planned Parenthood and other anti-lifers aggressively target Blacks, the poor, and the "near-poor" with dozens of assembly-line abortion mills and hundreds of birth control clinics, all supported by public tax money (later in this Chapter, we will see how there are more than three times as many abortion mills in minority neighborhoods as in White neighborhoods).

And we cannot let the animals overpopulate, or there will be adverse impacts upon those in control. So the United States floods developing nations with tons of abortifacients that are deemed too dangerous for American animals to use.

Sick animals, of course, must be put to sleep, because they become useless and a burden on their owners. So we now have infanticide in our hospitals to take care of those animals that are born sickly or deformed, and we have a half-dozen major organizations pushing for 'death with dignity' and assisted suicide to eliminate those animals that have become weak and unproductive in their old age.

Naturally, we must practice positive eugenics to breed these animals so that better traits are emphasized, so we have in-vitro fertilization, artificial insemination, and 'sperm banks' of the 'best' animal's genes, none of which the critters from the "lower social strata" can afford and we must insure that these animal's undesirable traits are not strata" can afford, and we must insure that these animals' undesirable traits are not passed on to their offspring, so we also have sterilization and abortion for poor animals, paid for with tax dollars.

This means that the infertile rich can afford the technology that allows them to reproduce, while the only thing that is offered to the poor for free is the opportunity to limit their fertility through tax-paid abortion, sterilization and contraception.

Mission Report: Nigeria: January 2009

MISSIONARY TRIP TO NIGERIA

Reported by Fr. Bill Bellrose, January, 2009.

The culture of life is alive and well in Africa, at least for now. My recent trip to Nigeria confirmed this fact. It also showed me how great is the need for continued outreach to this continent in order to keep it that way.

One great challenge that sooner or later faces all pro-lifers is how to deal with the culture of death's verbal engineering. Verbal engineering refers to the choosing of words that evoke certain actions or cultural shifts. For example, the culture of death refers to its proponents as “pro-choice” and to pro-life activists as “anti-choice” or “anti-abortion.” The way certain issues or arguments are worded is extremely important in affecting the culture. This became the topic of a meeting I had with the Archdiocesan Laity Council at Regina Mundi Parish, which was attended by both priests and lay people. I also spoke about attacks against the dignity of the person in the promotion of contraception, abortion, and perverse “sex education.”

After the talk, I met privately with some of the attendees to further discuss these issues. At first, this consisted of only a few people, but others in the audience were also very interested in what was discussed, so the “private” meeting ended up being much less private than expected! It was extremely beneficial to listen to some of the challenges that the pro-life movement is facing in Nigeria. One of which is the need to improve communication between parish and regional pro-life groups. Another is the need to better understand the tactics used by the culture of death. Addressing the latter, we spoke at length about the strategies used by the pro-death movement to advance its mission.

PRO-LIFE SEMINARIANS

Leaders of Seminarians for Life

Since the battle against the culture of death is essentially a spiritual battle, it will require pro-life leadership on the part of the Church for ultimate victory. Therefore, I always welcome the opportunity to work with seminarians, as I did at Blessed Tansi Major Seminary in Onitsha, Nigeria.

On the morning after my first talk, I met a former seminarian, now a priest, who had returned for his first anniversary of ordained priesthood. His name was Fr. Lawrence Soja Anyembugu, and I was fortunate to share breakfast with him and his parents, as well as the seminarians. During breakfast, the seminarians were discussing issues from my talk on the previous night. Then, Fr. Anyembugu stood up and spoke on how the promotion of condoms is destroying Nigeria. It was wonderful to see these seminarians interested in and concerned about the culture of life, and it bodes well for the future of the Church in Africa.

I also met with the Seminarians for Life group there. Many of these seminarians are very active in the parish. They go out every Sunday to give talks, distribute information, or perform other types of pro-life activism. One of the priests at Pius X Seminary told me how he became pro-life when he was studying there. He had picked up a Seminarians for Life newsletter, and since he was to be silent all day during this time of intense prayer, he was forced to seriously contemplate the points made in the newsletter, and it converted him to the pro-life ideology. The seminarians here were very interested in the topics I discussed, and one asked how he could be a pro-life activist during his time of prayer in the seminary. That's when I pointed out that prayer is where it all starts.

INTRUSION OF THE CULTURE OF DEATH

The future of the Church is its children, so it was wonderful to be able to speak to high school students in Nigeria on the importance of chastity, the dignity of the human person, and the culture of life. I spoke first to an audience of 2,200 at an all-boys school. Then, the next morning, I spoke to 3,800 girls at their high school. The children there are so full of life, so it was a great morale boost to see them!

I spoke to other high schools, seminaries, and women's groups during this time, and even had the opportunity to say Mass at a small rural parish. Each of these visits allowed me to see the passion behind

Fr. Bellrose addressing Christ the King boys' school

Nigeria's culture of life, but also reminded me of the encroachment of the culture of death. I noticed that some of the language advertised in the cities was beginning to change into the kind of language one hears from the culture of death. Nigerians were constantly telling me they have always been against abortion and that they would never allow its legalization, but I warned them about the culture of death and that its promoters were attempting to subtly introduce it into their beloved country.

Catholic politicians in Nigeria have been feeling the pressure from the culture of death for a long time. One local politician said that each time there is a conference regarding abortion, about 80% of the attendees begin to be swayed into thinking abortion is a good thing. Listening only to the pro-abortion arguments, you would think there is no option but abortion. But, I questioned this notion with the politicians over and over again, explaining to them that life is always an option.

DANGERS OF THE MAPUTO PROTOCOL

Verbal engineering came up again and again during my meetings with several government officials in Nigeria, including the Speaker of the House, with whom I discussed how this tactic was being introduced into his country. He was very interested in the information. I also spoke with the Chief Inspector, thanking him for his strong pro-life position and encouraging him to beware of outside forces trying to change Nigeria's culture. I said Mass for many of the Catholic politicians and enjoyed a cup of coffee with them. Many of them had questions about how to ensure that pro-abortion advocates will not sneak language into laws that could later introduce abortion into the country. To assist them, I gave them a copy of The Maputo Protocol: Clear and Present Danger, a booklet produced by HLI that explains the dangerous and deceptive anti-life language contained in the Maputo Protocol. Supporters of the Maputo Protocol claim it is a piece of legislation designed to combat female genital mutilation (FGM), but FGM is mentioned in only one sentence of the document out of its 23 pages. A large part of the document outlines provisions legalizing abortion and undermining the traditional family values that are a huge part of African culture.

A meeting with Catholic legislators and government leaders

During a meeting with the Papal Nuncio, who is very solid on pro-life issues, I explained the many positive things that Human Life International is doing in Africa. He was very pleased to hear these things, and he was amazed at the pressure anti-life groups were placing on the African people to change their ways from a culture that loves the beauty of life to one that accepts the culture of death through abortion and contraception.

It is very selfish of these foreign groups to come into a country and attempt to kill its children.

On Sunday, I offered Mass at the Basilica in Onitsha for about 3,000 people. Then, at a Church where Pope John Paul II had offered Mass, I assisted at another Mass and gave a talk there to about 7,000 people. It was such a blessing to see these Masses so full. The fact that many of these people were so excited about the faith was very interesting and wonderful. It just proves that when the culture of life is alive, the Faith is also alive. On the last day, I flew back to Lagos and offered Mass for a group of sisters in the morning. As I prepared to head home, a group of them started asking about my pro-life talks and wanted to receive more information. I ended up speaking with them about life issues, and they told me they would like to host a conference there at some point, because they see the need for more of them in Nigeria. Overall, my trip to Nigeria was very busy, and very fruitful. I was able to see so many lives touched by the beautiful message of the Gospel of Life.

Facts of Life: Chapter 24: Eugenics: The Ultimate Goals of the Eugenicians

 SHARE

The Ultimate Goals of the Eugenicians.

"Sooner or later one human society or another will launch out on this [eugenic breeding] adventure, whether the rest of mankind approves or not. If this happens, and a superior race emerges with greater intelligence and longer life, how will these people look upon those who are lagging behind? One thing is certain: They, not we, will be the heirs to the future, and they will assume control."

- A. Rosenfeld. The Second Genesis: The Coming Control of Life.[79]

Introduction. The ultimate goals of the eugenicians are incredibly far-reaching. These objectives include not only the elimination of 'bad human stock' through negative eugenics, but also the 'bio-engineering' of an 'improved' human being through positive eugenics.

Many scientists, drunk with the euphoria of treading where no thinking human being has dared go before, are plunging headlong into lines of research that would have been unimaginable just a few years ago. In addition to accumulating arcane knowledge, the 'biocrats' have also acquired a dangerous elitist attitude.

As one leading researcher boasted, "[Scientists] have the right to exercise their professional activities to the limit ... as lay attitudes struggle to catch up with what scientists can do." [80]

In other words, ethics and morals, along with judgment, have been sacrificed in order to advance the mad dash for knowledge.

This philosophy has destroyed all limits, so that now the bioethical "Prime Directive" is:

IF IT CAN BE DONE, IT MUST BE DONE, AND DAMN THE CONSEQUENCES!

For example, if researchers continue along current lines of inquiry, it will soon be possible for a woman to conceive and bear her own (younger) identical twin sister; it will be possible to allow human embryos to gestate in apes of various species (or even in bovines) in order to bypass the legal barriers now springing up against surrogate motherhood; and it may well soon be possible for homosexuals to fulfill their long-standing fantasy of male pregnancy.

Where Are We Being Led? The noted French biologist Dr. Jean Rostand wrote in all seriousness a few years ago that

Here and now Homo Sapiens is in the process of becoming Homo Biologicus, a strange biped that will combine the properties of self-reproduction without males, like the green fly; of fertilizing his female at long distance, like the nautiloid mollusk; of changing sex, like the xiphores; of growing from cuttings, like the earthworm; of replacing his missing parts, like the newt; of developing outside his mother's body, like the kangaroo; and of hibernating, like the hedgehog.[81]

These are not the mad pipe dreams of some isolated quack. Many leading scientists have advocated the creation of "chimeras" - part-human and part-animal or plant creatures whose usefulness for various purposes would be enhanced by their new 'qualities.'

Perhaps the best-known radical 'bioethicist' in the world is Joseph Fletcher, the "Father of Situation Ethics" and member of eugenics societies, whose pronouncements alternately provide entertainment for more serious thinkers - and scare them half to death.

Fletcher has adeptly linked eugenics to the 'pro-choice' mentality;

If the greatest good of the greatest number (i.e., the social good) were served by it, it would be justifiable not only to specialize the capacities of people by cloning or by constructive genetic engineering, but also to bio-engineer or bio-design para-humans or "modified men" - as chimeras (part animal) or cyborg-androids (part prostheses). I would vote for cloning top-grade soldiers and scientists, or for supplying them through other genetic means, if they were needed to offset an elitist or tyrannical power plot by other cloners - a truly science-fiction situation, but imaginable. I suspect I would favor making and using man-machine hybrids rather than genetically designed people for dull, unrewarding or dangerous roles needed nonetheless for the community's welfare - perhaps the testing of suspected pollution areas or the investigation of threatening volcanos or snow-slides.

People who appeal to Brave New World and Nineteen Eighty-Four and Fahrenheit 451 forget this, that the tyranny is set up first and then genetic controls are employed.

Coital reproduction, is, therefore, less human than laboratory reproduction - more fun, to be sure, but with our separation of baby making from lovemaking, both become more human because they are matters of choice, and not chance. This is, of course, essentially the case for planned parenthood. I cannot see how either humanity or morality are served by genetic roulette.

To be men we must be in control. That is the first and the last ethical word. For when there is no choice, there is no possibility of ethical action. Whatever we are compelled to do is a-moral.[82]

Fletcher reiterated in his book The Ethics of Genetic Controls: Let's Stop Playing Reproductive Roulette that scientists should create a species of half-animal, half-human creatures that would be expendable and could become living organ banks.

Another 'bioethicist,' Dr. Robert C. Gesteland, an associate professor of biological sciences at Northwestern University in Illinois, has suggested (1) crossing humans with plants, so all we'd need for food would be water and sunlight (which is not accurate); (2) developing a servant class of super-intelligent apes; and (3) best of all, breeding a race of humans only four inches tall, which would lessen pollution and conserve natural resources.

Watch Out for Leo the Housecat! It's funny how these allegedly educated people often don't think about the practical aspects of their hopes and dreams. Presumably, if Gesteland's dreams came true, (1) we could pass up the McDonald's and simply graze at the side of the road, (2) we would create and then enslave another sentient species, and (3) we would shrink ourselves to the point where pigeons would become our predators and housecats would be comparatively as large as elephants.

Dr. George Haldane, the late British geneticist, predicted that we might breed a race of legless humanoid mutants with prehensile tails or feet for space travel. Other scientists would like to see women laying eggs that could be hatched or eaten (i.e., we would use our own young as a food source); human beings with gills to facilitate underwater travel; and people with two sets of arms and hands, one for heavy work, the other for lighter tasks.[83]

We are already most of the way down Gerald Leach's "Ladder of Unnaturalness." Herds of prime cattle embryos are flown across the Atlantic Ocean in the wombs of female rabbits. Lesbians are now making men superfluous with sperm banks. The exploitation of women as 'wombs-for-hire' is the first step towards parthenogenesis and actual extracorporeal gestation.

But Seriously, Folks ... The greatest present threat of the eugenics philosophy is not in the mad pipe dreams of scientists with overactive imaginations, but in the fixed and functioning eugenics programs that are currently in operation all over the world. These programs represent an appalling and present danger, not only to our basic humanity, but to the freedoms that we cherish the most.

This is because eugenics programs inevitably evolve from experimentation to implementation to outright coercion.

At first, of course, the programs are voluntary and are directed towards increasing society's 'quality of life' as much as possible.

The modern-day eugenics movement counted as its first and greatest victory the popularization of artificial contraception in North American and Europe. At a 1940 conference of the American Birth Control League, eugenicist Henry Pratt Fairchild enthused that "These two great movements, eugenics and birth control, have now come to such a thorough understanding and have drawn so close as to be almost indistinguishable."^[84]

After artificial contraception was firmly entrenched, the eugenicists turned to their next objective: Abortion on demand. As always, they began by getting abortion for the "hard cases" legalized. The pitiful specter of grossly malformed and suffering infants was presented to the public, and the pro-abortionists insisted that these poor children would be better off dead because their "quality of life" was virtually nonexistent.

Of course, this was not the real reason that the eugenicists wanted abortion for fetal deformities, because they are essentially self-centered through and through. The actual motivation for the legalization of eugenic abortion was not because the 'quality of life' of the child would be decreased by its birth, but that of the parents specifically and society in general.

Authors M. Simms and Keith Hindell betrayed the reasoning behind eugenic abortions; "An abnormal foetus is not aborted because it would die, but on the contrary because it would be healthy enough to live a sub-human existence. Essentially it is for social, ethical and aesthetic reasons that some people recoil from the survival of such sub-humans and prefer to see them aborted."^[85]

Madeleine Simms, Research Fellow of the Eugenics Society, takes this reasoning one step further and pushes for actual coercion: "Has she [the woman] the right to choose to inflict this burden on the state?"^[86]

The eugenics philosophy, as it becomes entrenched in the public mind, expands as inevitably and inexorably as a free gas. Dr. Julius Adlam expanded the demand for mandatory eugenic abortion to abortion in the case of women whose income and possessions are not up to his lofty standards; "I am not afraid to stick by my belief that only those couples who have the necessary material possessions and sources of income to ensure an economically secure and safe cradle should allow a pregnancy to progress to term."^[87]

As always, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) rides 'shotgun' for the eugenicists. By 1980, it set as a target 85 percent of its referrals for poor and "near poor" women and 35 percent of its referrals for teens. This would amount to 30,000 sterilizations and 85,000 abortions.[88]

By 1992, Planned Parenthood was performing well over a hundred thousand abortions, an equivalent number of abortion referrals, more than 50,000 sterilizations, and hundreds of thousands of contraceptive referrals, while providing less than ten thousand women with prenatal services.[89]

Additional major projects listed by Planned Parenthood in its Five-Year Plans include major projects directed at the "mentally retarded" (Project 3); the "physically handicapped" (Project 4); and "psychiatric patients, criminals, and prisoners" (Project 6). [90]

This, then, is the Planned Parenthood mission: Target the poor and the handicapped and emphasize sterilization, abortion, and contraception instead of real help.

While Planned Parenthood is relatively circumspect in its pronouncements for obvious public relations reasons, other eugenicists are not as restrained.

Garrett Hardin, one of the most outspoken American eugenicists of all, baldly says that

It would be better to encourage the breeding of more intelligent people rather than the less intelligent. ZPG's [the group Zero Population Growth] entire attraction has been among the college population. So in effect, ZPG is encouraging college-educated people to have fewer children instead of encouraging reduced fertility among the less intelligent. [91]

Appearing for the first time online, the Pontifical Council for the Family's Lexicon (Published by HLI) consists of articles which discuss terms used in in the media and international forums to conceal the true objectives of the culture of death. Otherwise innocuous-sounding terms such as "Safe Motherhood," "Reproductive Rights," and "Homophobia" are weapons in an insidious attack on traditional family values, and the Lexicon was requested by the late Cardinal Alfonso Lopez Trujillo to provide an intellectual basis to counter this assault.

Cardinal George Pell has said of it, "This long awaited English translation of the Lexicon will be an invaluable resource to all those who genuinely seek to understand the profound truth, goodness and beauty fo marriage and the family. It is a gift to the faithful to the broader community from the Church."

The Lexicon is intended particularly for students, laity, clergy and religious, lawyers, educators, NGO's and all who are working to defend life, faith and family.

The articles that are loaded are in bold, the others will be loaded as soon as possible. If using any Lexicon article for research, please use the citation below.

The Racism of Eugenics.

The Expert Speaks. A very concise and complete summation of the fully-developed eugenicist philosophy is provided us by Norman E. Himes in his 1938 book Practical Birth-Control Methods;

All the rights we have are those granted to us by society. Certainly there is no natural right to spawn defective children who must be supported by others through taxation or charity. The crisis in this instance is the enormous expense to the state of the care of the defective classes and the contamination of the biological stock which results from their reproduction ... While sterilization is no substitute for segregation, it is also true that segregation is no substitute for sterilization. They must go hand in hand.

Ever since the rise of the Nazi regime in Germany an objection that has frequently been raised against eugenical sterilization is that a voluntary sterilization program may turn into a compulsory one. Some thoughtful people sincerely fear this. But the history of eugenical sterilization in the United States and in other democratic countries offers little warrant for the contention. This is the old fallacy of ultimate danger; that if we take step A, it would lead to step B; that if we take step B, it may lead to step C, and so forth without end. The evidence now available shows that even in Nazi Germany, where there is a great deal of compulsion that would not be tolerated by citizens who believe in democracy, there has been as yet no attempt to sterilize any special racial group ...

Most of the objections to eugenical sterilization are based upon unfounded fears, insufficient knowledge, or faulty reasoning. None of the objections has substantial merit. They are comparable to the arguments made ten years ago against birth control, even by some supposedly well-informed individuals, that birth-control devices caused sterility, necessarily led to immorality, would cause 'race suicide,' were unreliable, etc.

... we do not need the defective classes. They are already an excessive burden upon the State. A few special students of the problem even believe that our society is undergoing a "moronization" process; that the intelligence level of the American people is declining because the gifted have few children and the stupid many ... Probably it will take society a span of years to learn how to use it [eugenic sterilization] properly as a weapon for its own improvement ..."[92]

Note the author's representation and summation of classic eugenicist theories, which, despite their antique quaintness, are still deadly poisonous to this day;

- that all rights are bestowed by the State alone, even to the granting (or withholding) of the right to life to handicapped persons;

- of the right to life to handicapped persons,
- that "defectives" are expensive and "contaminate the biological stock," and therefore society does not need "the defective classes;"
- that the slippery slope theory (here called the "ultimate danger fallacy") has no merit, and, in fact, all anti-eugenicist arguments are baseless and originate from ignorance; and
- that birth control methods are reliable, do not cause physical damage, do not lead to immorality, and may one day be compulsory.

Attempts to Debunk the 'Slippery Slope.' It is amusing that the author tried bravely to debunk the "ultimate danger" (slippery slope) theory by stating that there was "little warrant" for the contention that Nazi Germany's voluntary sterilization program might turn into a campaign of compulsory sterilization.

Himes' book was first published in August 1938. Unknown to him, a compulsory sterilization program had already begun in Nazi Germany.

He also feigned ignorance of the fact that, by 1938, several states had created Boards of Eugenics that typically endorsed involuntary sterilization and castration for those individuals who were "... feeble minded, insane, epileptic, habitual criminals, degenerates and sexual perverts reported to it who will probably become a social menace or ward of the State." [92]

So much for disproving the "slippery slope" theory!

And yet, modern-day eugenicists are following Himes' lead as they insist that they can control the extent to which their "reforms" are applied in society.

Of course, it does not really matter to the eugenicists if they can control the horrors they propose to unleash; they approve of coercion in any case, and, as long as they are not victims of the programs that they spawn, they are content to sit back and observe the "cleansing" of society's gene pool.

Throughout the 19th and 20th Centuries, eugenicists were almost exclusively White, rich, and influential (see Figure 24-8 for a 'lineup' of the members of the American Eugenics Society). Those to be 'selected out' were invariably 'people of color,' the poor, and the powerless.

At the dawn of the 21st Century, absolutely nothing has changed.

The Link. In his vividly-titled book The Rising Tide of Color Against White World-Supremacy (introduced by fellow racist/eugenicist Madison Grant), Lothrop Stoddard waxes eloquent about what he calls "the root of all our problems," and by doing so replicates almost precisely Himes' philosophy.[93]

However, Stoddard's writings have an additional dimension in that they demonstrate beyond a shadow of reasonable doubt the intimate connection between eugenics and goal-oriented racism;

... upon the quality of human life all else depends ... none of the colored races shows perceptible signs of declining birth-rate, all tending to breed up to the limits of available subsistence ... It can mean only one thing: A tremendous and steadily augmenting outward thrust of surplus colored men from overcrowded colored homelands ... But many of these relatively empty [Northern] lands have been definitely set aside by the white man as his own special heritage ...

His ["colored" man's] outstanding quality is superabundant animal vitality. In this he easily surpasses all other races. To it he owes his intense emotionalism. To it, again, is due his extreme fecundity, the negro being the quickest of breeders. This abounding vitality shows in many other ways, such as the negro's ability to survive harsh conditions of slavery under which other races have soon succumbed ... black blood, once entering a human stock, seems never really bred out again ...

White men cannot, under peril of their very race-existence, allow wholesale Asian immigration into white race-areas ... The grim truth of the matter is this: The whole white race is exposed, immediately or ultimately, to the possibility of social sterilization and final replacement or absorption by the teeming colored races.

And, of course, the more primitive a type is, the more prepotent it is. This is why crossings with the negro are uniformly fatal. Whites, Amerindians, or Asiatics - all are alike vanquished by the invincible prepotency of the more primitive, generalized, and lower negro blood.

... whether we consider interwhite migrations or colored encroachments on white lands, the net result is an expansion of lower and a contraction of higher stocks, the process being thus a disgenic one.

For race-betterment is such an intensely practical matter! When peoples come to realize that the quality of the population is the source of all their prosperity, progress, security, and even existence; we shall see much-abused "eugenics" actually moulding social programmes and political policies ... we or the next generation will take in hand the problem of race-depreciation, and segregation of defectives and abolition of handicaps penalizing the better stocks will put an end to our present racial decline.[93]

Notice how, near the end of the second paragraph, Stoddard lets slip that he does not consider Blacks to be human.

Does this sound familiar?

Notice also how Stoddard waxes prophetic in the last paragraph. His prophecy, unfortunately, has been transformed into fact. It is our benighted generation that has taken up the task of "abolishing handicaps" with the devastatingly effective weapons of amniocentesis, abortion, and infanticide.

It is interesting to note that Stoddard sat on the board of Margaret Sanger's American Birth Control League (soon to become the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, or PPFA), and his book, The Rising Tide of Color Against White World-Supremacy, was plugged in Sanger's magazine Birth Control Review. He and Madison Grant were considered by leading Nazi eugenicists to be the "spiritual fathers" of restrictive immigration legislation, and some Nazis proposed that these laws be made models for Germany's immigration policy.[94]

Stoddard's books had won him wide renown in Nazi Germany, and, when he visited that country, he was allowed access to the highest elements of the hierarchy. He had cordial meetings with Heinrich Himmler, head of the Nazi secret police and of the Schutzstaffel [SS]; with Joachim von Ribbentrop, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs; with Richard Walther Darré, head of the German Agricultural Department; and with Adolf Hitler himself. He also met with leading Nazi racialists and eugenicists, including Hans F.K. Gunther, Eugen Fischer and Franz Lenz, and visited their institutions.

The famous historian William L. Shirer complained that Stoddard was given preference by the German brass because his racist writings were "featured in Nazi school textbooks." [95]

America: Inspiration for Nazi Eugenics.

"Everything must be examined from this [utilitarian] point of view and used or rejected according to its utility."

- Adolf Hitler, Mein Kampf.[96]

"The forceful and decisive North American does not consider the traditional moral code and does not consider the individual in order to implement what he thinks is right. After he recognizes the importance of heredity in determining mental and physical traits for the entire population, he does not hesitate to proceed from theoretical reflection to energetic practical action and to enact legislation which will lead to ennoblement of the race."

- German eugenicist Werner Feilchenfeld in 1913.[97]

Seeds of Destruction. If they are capable of seeing past their blind nationalism and close-mindedness, most people are astounded to realize that the philosophy and framework of the Nazi eugenics program originated not in Germany, but right here in the United States!

In the mid-1930s, the pathologically anti-Semitic American Madison Grant argued that "sentimental beliefs" [such as Christianity] short-circuited the practice of infanticide, which he saw as a natural weeding-out process necessary to the "preservation of the [human] species."

Lothrop Stoddard asserted that compulsory sterilization of the "unfit" was a "gift" from the American eugenics movement.[98]

In May of 1933, Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Review featured an article entitled "Eugenic Sterilization: An Urgent Need," which was authored by Ernst Rüdin, who co-founded the Nazi Society for Racial Hygiene and was Hitler's Director of Genetic Sterilization. He was also director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Anthropology, Human Genetics, and Eugenics during the Third Reich, and wrote the Nazi's Sterilization Laws.

Respected philosopher H.L. Mencken urged that "A resolute attack be made on the fecundity of all the males on the lowest rung on the social ladder."[99]

Charles Davenport, another prominent American eugenicist, asserted that "Our ancestors drove Baptists from Massachusetts Bay into Rhode Island, but we have no place to drive the Jews to. Also, they burned the witches, but it seems to be against the mores to burn any considerable part of our population."[100]

A number of American eugenicists actually lobbied for Adolf Hitler to be "... made an honorary member of the [American] Eugenics Record Office."[101]

The Nazi Response. Madison Grant and Lothrop Stoddard exerted great influence "... in awakening in Germany ... the movement for the preservation and increase of the Nordic race."[102]

According to historians, Hitler's closest advisers were "avid" readers of Grant and Stoddard in German publications, "... years before the Third Reich."[102] After voraciously consuming the "works" of such American "thinkers," is it any wonder that Nazis Rudolf Hess and Fritz Lenz stated simply that "National Socialism is nothing but applied biology?"[103]

The Nazis welcomed Henry Ford as "a great individualist and a great anti-Semite," primarily because of his extensive writings defaming Jews. Hitler praised Ford in his book Mein Kampf and hung his picture in his Munich headquarters. Ford ran for President in the 1920s, and part of his platform was ridding the country of the "Jew bankers" whom he blamed for causing World War I and the Depression.[104] On his 75th birthday, in 1938, Ford became the first American to receive Hitler's Supreme Order of the German Eagle.

In July of 1931, a member of the German Mental Hygiene Movement remarked that

We Germans cannot totally ignore events which occur outside our borders. A whole series of nations have positively accepted that the laws of heredity do affect the development of mental abnormality and have understood the consequences of that and created [compulsory] sterilisation laws. The Americans have been reproached with relentless pluck because of laws they have passed in 22 of their States.[105]

Ernst Rüdin, writing in the April 1933 issue of Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Review, demanded that the "lower strata" comprised of ten million Americans be involuntarily sterilized en masse, and described the situation in Germany as "... proceeding towards a policy that will be in accord with the best thought of eugenicists in all civilized countries."[106]

Gradually, the Nazis began to believe that eugenics could accomplish two major objectives for the Fatherland: (1) the practice could drastically cut the costs of caring for "hopeless idiots," thereby releasing more funds for the war effort, and (2) eugenics could ensure Third Reich world domination by actively breeding a superior race of human beings, called variously The Master Race, The Aryan Race, and Homo Superior.

As one famous Nazi physician postulated, "The destiny of the German people was to be assembling and preserving the most valuable Aryan stocks ... slowly and surely raising them to a dominant position." [107]

Figure 24-7 shows many of the amazingly close parallels between the Nazi and American eugenics/euthanasia programs. Note the identical language used by both sets of eugenicists and the nearly identical progression of events that brought both programs into "full flower."

Comparison of Quotes and Events from the Nazi and American Eugenics Movements

The German Nazi Eugenicists	The American Eugenicists
1904: "What good does it do to humanity to maintain artificially and rear the thousands of cripples, deaf-mutes and idiots? Is it not better and more rational to cut off from the first this unavoidable misery which their poor lives will bring themselves and their families?" - Nazi 'ethicist' Dr. Ernst Haeckel.	1973: American Nobel Prize laureate James Watson says that "Most birth defects are not discovered until birth. If a child were not declared alive until three days after birth, the doctor could allow the child to die if the parents so chose and save a lot of misery and suffering. I believe this view is the only rational, compassionate attitude to have."
1920: Alfred Hoche and Judge Karl Binding write Die Freigabe der Vernichtung Lebensunwerten Leben ("The Permission to Destroy Life Unworthy of Life"), which recommended the active euthanasia of "absolutely worthless human beings," including the retarded, the deformed, and the feeble-minded and senile. The book referred to eugenic murder as "a healing work," and "an allowable, useful act." Frederick Wertham, author of A Sign for Cain, wrote that "This little book influenced, or at least crystallized, the thinking of a whole generation."	1931: Margaret Sanger, in her book Pivot of Civilization, writes that "[Philanthropists] encourage the healthier and more normal sections of the world to shoulder the burden of the unthinking and indiscriminate fecundity of others; which brings with it, as I think the reader must agree, a dead weight of human waste. Instead of decreasing and aiming to eliminate the stocks that are most detrimental to the world, it tends to render them to a menacing degree dominant."
1931: Physicians and psychiatrists begin to discuss means of mass sterilization and/or killing of mental patients while meeting at professional conventions in Germany.	1926: In the October issue of her Birth Control Review, Margaret Sanger claims that "There is only one reply to a request for a higher birthrate among

	the intelligent, and that is to ask the government to first take the burden of the insane and feeble-minded from off your back. [Mandatory] sterilization for these is the answer."
1933: 'Lifeboat exercises' are introduced to propagandize school children into accepting the killing of the "useless." For example, Problem 95 of Alfred Dörner's mathematics text Mathematik in Dienst der Nationalpolitischen Erziehung asks, "The construction of an insane asylum requires six million Reichsmarks (RM). How many new housing units at 15,000 RM each could have been built for this sum?"	1965: 'Lifeboat exercises' are introduced into public schools for the purpose of propagandizing school children into accepting the killing of the "useless." For example, one question from a Shippensport, Pennsylvania text asks, "A new country is being formed because the problem of overpopulation has completely destroyed your former country. Select any eight persons out of the list of 26 below. The remaining 18 will die of starvation. Give reasons for your selections."
1933: Selective forced abortions and the mass sterilization of those with "serious hereditary diseases" begins in Germany.	1907: Indiana becomes the first of 28 states to pass a mandatory sterilization law aimed at those considered "unfit." As late as 1965, the selective forced abortions and mass sterilization programs aimed at Puerto Rican and Native American women are still being carried out.
1935: "The enormous costs imposed on our society by congenital defects is calculated to be 1.2 billion Reichsmarks annually." - Dr. Gerhard Wagner.	1907: The National Academy of Sciences bemoans that fact that "Institutional care for Down Syndrome alone represents an expense of $250-350 million per year."
1935: Hitler convenes high-level conferences to discuss the possibility of establishing programs for liquidating the "incurably ill."	1967: Euthanasia societies begin to hold high-level conferences for the purpose of discussing the liquidation of "human vegetables" and the "incurably ill elderly."
1935: On May 10, the first large-scale murders of helpless people by the Nazi regime occur when twelve mental patients are euthanized at Hadamar, Germany.	1987: The first large-scale murders of helpless people by American euthanasiasts occur when eight elderly persons are starved to death at a nursing home in Galveston, Texas.
1936: On April 2, the German Supreme Court issued a ruling that held that "Jews living in Germany are not 'persons' in the legal sense."	1973: Joseph Fletcher, the "Father of Situation Ethics," says that "The vegetable patient is dead, a nonperson."
1937: The SS (Schutzstaffel) organizes its	1973: The Center for Germinal Choice

1937. The SS (Schutzstaffel) organizes its Lebensborn program where, in secret villas scattered throughout Germany, the SS elite breed with superior Aryan women.

1975. The Center for Germinal Choice, a sperm bank for Nobel Prize winners and other "supermen," is established in California. Lesbians begin to organize their own sperm banks in order to avoid "breeding with men."

1938: Leipzig. Baby boy Knauer is born blind and missing part of one arm and one leg. He is the ideal test case for Germany's euthanasia/ eugenics program. Hitler's personal physician, Karl Brandt, murdered the child. The eugenicists carefully observed the reaction of the judicial system and the press to this murder.

It was positive.

1982: In Bloomington, Indiana, Baby Doe is born with an esophageal defect and spina bifida. He is the ideal test case for America's euthanasia/ eugenics program. The baby was allowed to die of thirst and starvation. The eugenicists carefully observed the reactions of the judicial system and the press to this murder.

It was positive.

Gearing Up the Program. Although all of the blame for the Nazi eugenics program cannot be laid at the feet of American "thinkers," German and American eugenicists corresponded regularly even before World War I. As early as 1905, German eugenicist Dr. Alfred Ploetz opposed caring for the sick and poor because, as he asserted, it led to degeneration of the Aryan race, an attitude that corresponded startlingly to Margaret Sanger's.

In the same year, Germany formally recognized eugenics as a respectable science by establishing the Society for Racial Hygiene, which Ploetz co-founded.[108]

(There are many more parallels between the development of the American and Nazi eugenics movement, too numerous to list here).

Facts of Life: Chapter 24: Eugenics: Sterilizing the Tarnished Image

 SHARE

Sterilizing the Tarnished Image.

"The greatest evil is not now done in those sordid "dens of crime" that Dickens loved to paint. It is not even done in concentration camps and labor camps. In those we see its final result. But it is conceived and ordered (moved, seconded, carried and minuted) by quiet men in clean, carpeted and well-lighted offices, by quiet men with white collars and cut fingernails and smooth-shaven cheeks who do not need to raise their voices. Hence, naturally enough, my symbol for Hell is something like the bureaucracy of a police state or the offices of a thoroughly nasty business concern."

- C.S. Lewis. The Screwtape Letters. [109]

Introduction. By the end of World War II, the word "eugenics" had lost much of its glittering appeal. People saw and remembered what could happen when eugenics programs, with all of their empty promises, were given free rein. The "new eugenicists" insisted that the problem was not eugenics practice, but the Nazis - they had simply gone "too far." They renamed their societies, overhauled their publications, and continued to work in the field, only under the name "human genetics."

But thinking people recognized that the Vernichtungslagern - the death camps - were not an aberration of eugenics theory but its most perfect product.

Unfortunately for humanity in general, eugenicists, like the Communists, are convinced of the correctness of their clouded vision, no matter how many failures they suffer. They will not be deterred by an infinity of failures or a mountain of evidence against them. They think that all they have to do is tinker with the theory, refine it a little, and try again.

And so, after World War II, the eugenicists went 'underground' in their activities, if not in their thinking. Their primary purpose for about 40 years after the end of the War was image building and damage control. They sought to sanitize and make innocuous the appearance of the roots of eugenics, and they sought to sever the concept entirely from the horrors of World War II.

Dr. Horace Blacker noted that "The [British Eugenics] Society should pursue eugenic ends by less obvious means, that is by a policy of crypto-eugenics, which was apparently proving successful with the US Eugenics Society." [110]

Pro-eugenics "historians" were so sensitive to negative connotations that they even shortened the original title of Charles Darwin's famous book On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection on the Preservation of Favored Species for Life to The Origin of the Species

The Power Behind the Theories. The front line of the eugenics cartel has historically included a vast international web of more than 250,000 full-time psychiatrists, psychologists, physicians, college professors, bankers, bioethicists, writers, fundraisers, publicists, attorneys, judges, legislators, publishers, editors, prominent Neoliberal churchmen, and newspaper owners. The eugenics movement now has more than twice as many full-time employees than it did when it originally flowered in the 1920s and 1930s.

In order to give an idea of what type of influential people are members of eugenics groups, Figure 24-8 lists just a few of the more famous members of the American and British Eugenics Societies.

Note that this partial list includes the following influential people, and keep in mind that the American and British Eugenics Societies are just two of many eugenical organizations;

- The leading celebrities of the age, including Charles A. Lindbergh, the famous aviation pioneer who was the first to fly solo nonstop across the Atlantic Ocean, Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, the son and the grandson of evolutionist Charles Darwin, birth control pioneer Marie Stopes, Margaret Sanger, famous Neoliberal Bishops and churchmen, and leading economists;
- United States Senators and Congressmen, Surgeons General, governors and ambassadors, Generals in the United States Army, and members of the British Parliament;
- High-ranking Nazi officials;
- Nobel Prize laureates;
- Many high United Nations officials;
- Representatives of the richest families in American, to include the Astor, Guggenheim, Rockefeller, Kellogg and Hires families, and many bankers and financiers who control billions of dollars in assets;
- The Presidents of more than a dozen leading universities, including Harvard University and Stanford University;
- Hundreds of professors and heads of departments in medicine, psychology, sociology, zoology, anthropology and biology, who between them have written thousands of books, tens of thousands of articles in hundreds of journals, and who have guided the programs of hundreds of university and college departments and molded the thinking of millions of college students;
- Many past Presidents, directors and officers of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), the founder and three subsequent Presidents of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF), and members of the Association of Planned Parenthood Physicians (APPP). In fact, there are literally scores of officers from Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Federation of America (BCFA), including many editors, assistant editors and contributors for her Birth Control Review.
- Presidents and major officers of virtually every major anti-life group in the United States, including the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), the Association for

States, including the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), the Association for Voluntary Sterilization (AVS), the Center for Reproductive Law and Policy, the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL) and the National Organization for Women (NOW);

- Presidents and high officers of many other professional associations, including the American Academy of Forensic Science, the American Anthropological Association, the American Anthropology Association, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Association of Anatomists, the American Association of Marriage Counselors, the American Association of Physical Anthropologists, the American Association on Mental Deficiency, the American Cancer Society, the American Cleft Palate Association, the American Dermatoglyphics Association, the American Educational Research Association, the American Ethnological Society, the American Genetic Association, the American Gerontological Association, the American Institute of Biological Sciences, the American Institute of Family Relations, the American Museum of Natural History, the American Paleontological Society, the American Philosophical Society, the American Physiological Society, the American Psychiatric Association, the American Psychological Association, the American Psychometric Society, the American Psychopathological Association, the American Public Health Association, the American School Health Association, the American Social Hygiene Association, the American Society of Human Genetics, the American Society of Naturalists, the American Society of Plant Physiology, the American Society of Zoologists, the American Sociological Society, the American Sociology Association, the American Statistical Association, the American Veterinary Medicine Association, and the American Zoological Society (and these are just the ones whose titles begin with the word "American!");
- and leaders and directors of every imaginable kind of government agency, from the "California State Commissioner of Lunacy" to the "Peruvian Guano Administration." These eugenicists are backed up by the full financial and organizational might of more than 250 pro-euthanasia, pro-abortion, animal rights, environmentalist, and homosexual groups, and tens of millions of people who like to think of themselves as 'progressives.'

Just for a moment, try to imagine the magnitude of the colossal influence and power wielded by this massive group of individuals and organizations. They literally have trillions of dollars worth of money and influence to wield.

The eugenics cartel is a very efficient and effective self-contained and self-sufficient industry that has many branches that interlock and support each other. They advance the eugenicist cause by simply eliminating those people they deem to be 'useless' or 'unwanted.' They push abortion, infanticide, contraceptive imperialism, eugenic euthanasia, genetic counseling and mapping, in-vitro fertilization, sterilization, sex education, and sex therapy, and a universe of other horrors that once were unthinkable to moral people.

It would be well worth your time to take a few minutes and read through this list to give yourself an idea of the magnitude of the power of the people associated with the

Pro-Abortion Violence

SHARE

Setting The Record Straight

Pro-abortionists and the media talk a lot about "anti-choice violence" and an alleged "organized campaign of terror and intimidation against reproductive health centers."

Most people perceive the struggle over abortion in the USA to be a vicious and brutal battle -- with all of the violence being committed by so-called "fanatical anti-choicers."

This is entirely due to the stupid actions of a handful of deranged individuals and the persistent and monolithic bias of the national broadcast, print, and entertainment media.

This bias has been well-documented and is demonstrated by the different way the media treats violence committed by people on each side of the abortion struggle.

After Paul Hill murdered Florida abortionist John Bayard Britton and his armed "escort," James H. Barrett, the media broadcast and wrote more than 100,000 stories on the killings over the next several years. But when pro-abortion activist Eileen Orstein Janezic shot pro-life activist minister and radio talk show host Jerry Simon through his living room window, murdering him to "prove her love for Satan," the national media completely ignored the story.

Pro-abortionists have killed:

- 365 abortion clients
- 268 other pregnant women
- 127 other women
- 151 born children (including 72 newborn babies and infants)
- 296 wanted preborn children; and
- 99 men

Pro-lifers cannot deny that a handful of individuals, always acting alone, have committed terrible violence in their attempts to stop the wholesale killing of preborn children. However, pro-lifers must not forget that pro-abortionists have committed much more deadly violence, even if we leave aside for the moment the killings of more than 50 million preborn children in the United States alone.

So much death inevitably desensitizes abortionists and their supporters, and it is inevitable that this will lead them to become violent outside the abortion mills as well.

Detailed documentation shows that pro-abortionists have murdered an incredible 1,306 people since 1966. Since they prefer to attack the weak, 92 percent of their victims have been women and children.

The most pitiful deaths of all are the murders of pregnant mothers. As the documentation on Human Life International's Abortion Violence website shows, pro-abortionists have raped, tortured, beaten, strangled, poisoned, stabbed, burned, murdered, and even buried alive pregnant women, many of them in their last trimester, because they refused to have abortions.

And it staggers the imagination to realize that no pro-abortion group has ever denounced this kind of sickening violence.

Abortionists and pro-abortion activists have violently attacked those who oppose them in literally hundreds of incidents. They have attacked pro-lifers with guns, cars, acid, hypodermic syringes, and baseball bats, and other pro-abortionists have applauded and supported these actions.

Pro-abortionists have raped, forcibly aborted, and killed their patients. They have gleefully tortured and murdered their girlfriends and wives. They have botched third-trimester abortions and callously walked away to leave their victims to die -- and then have tried to justify their actions with whining and empty excuses.

Pro-lifers must demand that these hypocritical pro-abortionists apologize for and condemn the many acts of murderous violence committed by the members of their movement!

The map and documentation in this brochure and on HLI's Abortion Violence website give you the tools you need to back-up this demand with plenty of hard evidence.

History shows us that the pro-life movement is by far the most peaceful social movement in the history of the world.

Every other social movement is guilty of far greater death and destruction, including the civil rights movement, the unionization movement, the anti-apartheid movement, the "gay rights" movement, and, of course, the pro-abortion movement.

Unlike all pro-abortion reports that simply allege 100, 250, 500 (pick a nice round number) incidents of "anti-choice" violence but never document their claims, the Abortion Violence website provides documentation for more than 8,500 incidents of pro-abortion violence, from mass murder to torturing animals.

So the next time a person shows you a map or table of "anti-choice violence" and demands that you condemn it, tell him that the apology must be mutual; if you are going to apologize for violence you were not involved in, he must also apologize.

MURDERERS

Abortionist Hipolito Barreiro was charged with manslaughter for the death of Shirley Payne. Barreiro had previously killed at least three other women with his "safe and legal" abortions, including Ruth Montero, Maura Morales, and Marta Baptiste.

Abortionist Brian Finkel, who called himself "The Prince of the Pelvis," was convicted of 22 counts of sexual abuse of his female patients. The National Organization for Women (NOW) claimed that almost all of the women who came forward to testify against Finkel were lying, and that pro-lifers were to blame for his prosecution.

Abortionist David Benjamin killed Guadalupe Negrón, a mother of four, in July 1993. During the abortion, he lacerated Negrón's cervix and punctured her uterus, causing severe bleeding. Then the abortionist abandoned her. Negrón's autopsy report attributed her death to massive bleeding causing shock and cardiac arrest. Benjamin was convicted of murder due to his "depraved indifference to human life."

Abortionist John Baxter Hamilton was having an affair with a topless dancer he had aborted, and his wife was considering leaving him. On Valentine's Day 2001, Hamilton choked his wife with a necktie, beat her over the head with a heavy blunt object hard enough to smash a hole in her skull, and then slammed her face repeatedly into the floor. In December 2001, a jury convicted Hamilton of murdering his wife. Amazingly, pro-abortionists tried to get all charges dropped against Hamilton by sending death threats to at least three news agencies, District Attorney Wes Lane, and state witnesses against Hamilton.

Kyle Bryant's 14-year-old girlfriend Chauntae Jones was eight months pregnant with his child. Bryant did not want to go to prison for statutory rape and did not want the baby either. So he and his friend, Lord Hampton, blindfolded Chauntae, raped her, struck her over the head with a blunt object, then stabbed her repeatedly in the neck, abdomen, and back. Then they buried her alive in a pre-dug shallow grave. A jury found Hampton guilty of two counts of first-degree murder.

Matthew Elliott and William Davis dug a grave for 15-year old Brittni Pater, who was three months pregnant. Then they lured her into the woods and bludgeoned her repeatedly with a long, heavy metal bar. Then they ran her down with their car and dumped her battered body in an old gravel pit. Elliott and Davis said they killed Brittni because she was pregnant, and a jury found them both guilty of capital murder.

Abortionist Malachi Dehenre murdered his wife, Mysha Rose, shooting her once in the head with a handgun. Dehenre, who had lost his license to practice medicine in New York, Alabama, and Mississippi due to bungled abortions, pleaded not guilty, but a jury unanimously convicted him of manslaughter.

Marc Eason was a vocal pro-abortionist who worked at the Dadeland abortion clinic in Miami. He was sentenced to life imprisonment without possibility of parole for the ax-murders of his two roommates. Eason claimed the murders were "justifiable homicide" because the roommates had "complained about his sloppiness." He also stabbed his abortionist mother, Betty Eason, in the neck with a steak knife.

Abortionist Alicia Ruiz Hanna was convicted of second-degree murder after Angela Sanchez, a mother of four, died at Hanna's abortion mill. Hanna tried to stuff Angela's body into the trunk of a car in order to dump her body across the border in Tijuana, Mexico.

Shawn Kristopher Holliman demanded that his pregnant girlfriend, Tanika Fox, have an abortion. She refused, so he shot her twice in the head at point-blank range. He was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison. The students at Tanika's high school dedicated their yearbook in Tanika's name.

Peter Kupaza raped his cousin Mwenvano Kupaza, then forced her to have an abortion when she became pregnant. So she would not talk, he then murdered her, skinned her body and chopped it into pieces, which he stuffed into garbage bags and dumped. A jury convicted him of first-degree murder.

Edward Lewis LaGrone repeatedly molested ten-year-old Shakeisha Lloyd, and she became pregnant. He demanded that she get an abortion when she was four months along, but she refused. So LaGrone decided to murder Shakeisha's entire family. He killed her uncle, then murdered 83-year-old Zenobia Anderson and 76-year-old Caola Lloyd, who was blind and bedridden with cancer. Finally, LaGrone walked up to the young mother of his baby and shot her in the head, killing her instantly. He was convicted of multiple counts of capital murder and was sentenced to death.

Rodrigo Ortiz Paniagua wanted his girlfriend Leticia Chavez, who was five months pregnant, to have an abortion. So he stabbed her three times in the stomach, deliberately targeting their preborn child. Then he murdered their little daughters, cutting the throat of six-year-old Adrina, and killing three-year-old Analisa. Finally, he set their house on fire, sat down on the curb, and lit up a cigarette. He confessed to his crimes and was charged with four counts of murder and one count of arson.

Andrew Yellowbear was a vicious thug who enjoyed beating his girlfriend, Macalia Blackburn, especially when she was pregnant. He also loved to torture his little 22-month-old daughter Marcela. Finally, he tortured the little toddler to death. When she was taken to a hospital after she died, horrified doctors found that she had many broken bones, and that most of her body was covered with bruises, lacerations, and burns. She had obviously suffered the most extreme agony for several weeks before she died. During the course of their 2-1/2 year relationship, Yellowbear beat up Macalia at least fifty times, "not counting times she was only hit." Macalia was hospitalized three times for her injuries, each time when she was pregnant. An assistant county attorney described Marcela's death as "especially atrocious or cruel. ... She was made to suffer during the last weeks of her life. It is undeniable she would have been in great pain and agony." A jury found Yellowbear guilty of first-degree murder in the death of his baby daughter, and he was sentenced to life in prison.

Abortionist Pop Quiz

1. Which prominent Oklahoma abortionist was having an affair with a topless dancer he had aborted, and then choked his wife with a necktie, beat her over the head with a heavy blunt object hard enough to smash a hole in her skull, and then slammed her face repeatedly onto the floor, murdering her? Local pro-abortionists tried so hard to get his charges dropped that they sent death threats to news agencies, the district attorney, and witnesses against the abortionist.
2. What famous Nazi mass murderer, known as the "Angel of Death" for his thousands of ghastly medical experiments on living patients in the Auschwitz concentration camp, fled Germany at the end of World War II and became a prominent abortionist in South America?
3. What Chicago abortionist, labeled "America's Arch Fiend" by the press, was America's first famous serial killer, having murdered more than fifty people?
4. What Arizona abortionist, who referred to himself as "The Prince of the Pelvis," was convicted of more than 60 counts of sexual abuse and sexual assault and imprisoned for 35 years?
5. What major pro-abortion group vigorously defended Finkel and claimed that his accusers were lying?

6. What New York City abortionist (subsequently known as "Zorro" to his staff) carved his initials on the abdomen of one of his patients with a scalpel because "I thought I did such a beautiful job, I thought I should sign it?" (Hint: This abortionist worked for an abortion mill that was shut down for health and safety violations, and which shipped women like cattle to unlicensed abortion mills in its "Happiness Bus!")
7. Which prominent El Paso abortionist and ardent admirer of Adolf Hitler became a professional wrestler named "The Chinese Bandit" to raise money on the side?
8. What former Nazi SS officer put his wartime skills to use by becoming an abortionist for Kaiser Permanente in Ohio and Hawaii? (Hint: He was so fanatical about saving money that he forced his female staff to urinate in bottles at their desks and was finally killed by the brother of a young girl whom he had given drugs for free sex.)
9. Which prominent Chicago abortionist was charged with making "kiddie porn" featuring his own 3-year-old daughter and, when caught, blamed his prosecution on local pro-lifers?
10. Which world-famous American pro-abortion feminist, a co-founder of the National Organization for Women (NOW), was caught by customs officials at an airport with a load of sado-masochistic magazines depicting women being tortured?
11. What New York City abortionist, who was found guilty of nearly four hundred counts of medical malpractice and incompetence, won the award for the all-time lame excuse by saying that her husband dominated her with Voodoo?
12. What abortionist had sex with a patient just before aborting her, and when caught, told a newspaper, "I believe that if a woman decides to have a termination, it should be done safely, legally and with some dignity?"
13. Which prominent Jackson, Mississippi abortionist, a prolific producer of child pornography, was a member of the International Diaper Pail Foundation, in which the members are infantilists who enjoy wearing diapers, defecating in the diapers, and smearing the feces all over their bodies?
14. What Boston abortionist aborted a living and viable baby boy, deliberately smothered him, was convicted of manslaughter but released on a technicality, and was later rewarded by being given the post of Chairman of the Board of Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA)?
15. What vocal Miami pro-abortionist murdered both of his roommates with an ax, and then called the killings "justifiable homicide" because the roommates had "complained about his sloppiness?" (Hint: He also stabbed his abortionist mother in the neck with a steak knife.)
16. What New York abortionist admitted to exposing himself to more than 700 women and young girls, finally kidnapped and raped a six-year-old girl and spent seven years in prison for the crime, and was then welcomed back to his abortion practice with open arms by the State of New York?

Who is the father of the modern "pro-choice" movement? His hatred of expectant mothers and pregnancy was reflected in several of his novels which celebrated the mothers and pregnancy was reflected in several of his novels, which celebrated the torture and murder of pregnant women. In one of his grisly and deranged novels, he describes with great relish the skewering of a pregnant woman with a red-hot iron rod driven through both her and her unborn baby. CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

No. 81-746

Argued: November 30, 1982

Decided: June 15, 1983 [*]

An Akron, Ohio, ordinance, inter alia, (1) requires all abortions performed after the first trimester of pregnancy to be performed in a hospital (§ 1870.03); (2) prohibits a physician from performing an abortion on an unmarried minor under the age of 15 unless he obtains the consent of one of her parents or unless the minor obtains an order from a court having jurisdiction over her that the abortion be performed (§ 1870.05(B)); (3) requires that the attending physician inform his patient of the status of her pregnancy, the development of her fetus, the date of possible viability, the physical and emotional complications that may result from an abortion, and the availability of agencies to provide her with assistance and information with respect to birth control, adoption, and childbirth (§ 1870.06(B)), and also inform her of the particular risks associated with her pregnancy and the abortion technique to be employed (§ 1870.06(C)); (4) prohibits a physician from performing an abortion until 24 hours after the pregnant woman signs a consent form (§ 1870.07); and (5) requires physicians performing abortions to ensure that fetal remains are disposed of in a "humane and sanitary manner" (§ 1870.16). A violation of the ordinance is punishable as a misdemeanor. Respondents and cross-petitioners filed an action in Federal District Court against petitioners and cross-respondents, challenging the ordinance. The District Court invalidated § 1870.05(B), § 1870.06(B), and § 1870.16, but upheld § 1870.03, § 1870.06(C), and § 1870.07. The Court of Appeals affirmed as to § 1870.03, § 1870.05(B), § 1870.06(B), and § 1870.16, but reversed as to § 1870.06(C) and § 1870.07.

1. Section 1870.03 is unconstitutional. Pp. 431-439.

(a) While a State's interest in health regulation becomes compelling at approximately the end of the first trimester, the State's regulation may be upheld only if it is reasonably designed to further that interest. If, during a substantial portion of the second trimester, the State's regulation departs from accepted medical practice, it may not be upheld simply because it may be reasonable for the remaining portion of the trimester. Rather, the State is obligated to make a reasonable effort to limit the effect of its regulations to the period in the trimester during which its health interest may be furthered. Pp. 433-434.

(b) It cannot be said that the lines drawn in § 1870.03 are reasonable. By preventing the performance of dilatation-and-evacuation abortions in an appropriate nonhospital setting, Akron has imposed a heavy and unnecessary burden on women's access to a relatively inexpensive, otherwise accessible, and safe abortion procedure. Section 1870.03 has the effect of inhibiting the vast majority of abortions after the first trimester, and therefore unreasonably infringes upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion. Pp. 434-439.

2. Section 1870.05(B) is unconstitutional as making a blanket determination that all minors under the age of 15 are too immature to make an abortion decision, or that an abortion never may be in the minor's best interests without parental approval. Under circumstances where the Ohio statute governing juvenile proceedings does not mention minors' abortions nor suggest that the Ohio Juvenile Court has authority to inquire into a minor's maturity or emancipation, § 1870.05(B), as applied in juvenile proceedings, is not reasonably susceptible of being construed to create an opportunity for case-by-case evaluations of the maturity of pregnant minors. Pp. 439-442.

3. Sections § 1870.06(B) and § 1870.06(C) are unconstitutional. Pp. 442-449.

(a) The validity of an informed consent requirement rests on the State's interest in protecting the pregnant woman's health. But this does not mean that a State has unreviewable authority to decide what information a woman must be given before she chooses to have an abortion. A State may not adopt regulations designed to influence the woman's informed choice between abortion or childbirth. Pp. 442-444.

(b) Section 1870.06(B) attempts to extend the State's interest in ensuring "informed consent" beyond permissible limits, and intrudes upon the discretion of the pregnant woman's physician. While a State may require a physician to make certain that his patient understands the physical and emotional implications of having an abortion, § 1870.06(B) goes far beyond merely describing the general subject matter relevant to informed consent. By insisting upon recitation of a lengthy and inflexible list of information, the section unreasonably has placed obstacles in the path of the physician. Pp. 444-445.

(c) With respect to § 1870.06(C)'s requirement that the "attending physician" must inform the woman of the specified information, it is unreasonable for a State to insist that only a physician is competent to provide the information and counseling relevant to informed consent. Pp. 446-449.

4. Section 1870.07 is unconstitutional. Akron has failed to demonstrate that any legitimate state interest is furthered by an arbitrary and inflexible waiting period. There is no evidence that the abortion procedure will be performed more safely. Nor does it appear that the State's legitimate concern that the woman's decision be informed is reasonably served by requiring a 24-hour delay as a matter of course. Pp. 449-451.

5. Section 1870.16 violates the Due Process Clause by failing to give a physician fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden. Pp. 451-452.

Decided: June 15, 1983 [*]

JUSTICE POWELL delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this litigation, we must decide the constitutionality of several provisions of an ordinance enacted by the city of Akron, Ohio, to regulate the performance of abortions. Today we also review abortion regulations enacted by the State of Missouri, see Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, post, p. 476, and by the State of Virginia, see Simopoulos v. Virginia, post, p. 506.

These cases come to us a decade after we held in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), that the right of privacy, grounded in the concept of personal liberty guaranteed by the Constitution, encompasses a woman's right to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy. Legislative responses to the Court's decision have required us on several occasions, and again today, to define the limits of a State's authority to regulate the performance of abortions. And arguments continue to be made, in these cases as well, that we erred in interpreting the Constitution. Nonetheless, the doctrine of stare decisis, while perhaps never entirely persuasive on a constitutional question, is a doctrine that demands respect in a society governed by the rule of law.[1] We respect it today, and reaffirm Roe v. Wade.

In February, 1978, the City Council of Akron enacted Ordinance No. 160-1978, entitled "Regulation of Abortions." [2] The ordinance sets forth 17 provisions that regulate the performance of abortions, see Akron Codified Ordinances ch. § 1870, 5 of which are at issue in this case:

(i) Section 1870.03 requires that all abortions performed after the first trimester of pregnancy be performed in a hospital.[3]

(ii) Section 1870.05 sets forth requirements for notification of and consent by parents before abortions may be performed on unmarried minors.[4]

(iii) Section 1870.06 requires that the attending physician make certain specified statements to the patient "to insure that the consent for an abortion is truly informed consent." [5]

(iv) Section 1870.07 requires a 24-hour waiting period between the time the woman signs a consent form and the time the abortion is performed.[6]

(v) Section 1870.16 requires that fetal remains be "disposed of in a humane and sanitary manner." [7]

A violation of any section of the ordinance is punishable as a criminal misdemeanor. § 1870.18. If any provision is invalidated, it is to be severed from the remainder of the ordinance.[8] The ordinance became effective on May 1, 1978.

On April 19 1978, a lawsuit challenging virtually all of the ordinance's provisions was filed in the District Court for the Northern District of Ohio. The plaintiffs, respondents and cross-petitioners in this Court, were three corporations that operate abortion clinics in Akron and a physician who has performed abortions at one of the clinics. The defendants, petitioners and cross-respondents here, were the city of Akron and three city officials (Akron). Two individuals (intervenors) were permitted to intervene as codefendants "in their individual capacity as parents of unmarried minor daughters of childbearing age." 479 F.Supp. 1172, 1181 (1979). On April 27, 1978, the District Court preliminarily enjoined enforcement of the ordinance.

In August, 1979, after hearing evidence, the District Court ruled on the merits. It found that plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge seven provisions of the ordinance, none of which is before this Court. The District Court invalidated four provisions, including § 1870.05 (parental notice and consent), § 1870.06(B) (requiring disclosure of facts concerning the woman's pregnancy, fetal development, the complications of abortion, and agencies available to assist the woman), and § 1870.16 (disposal of fetal remains). The court upheld the constitutionality of the remainder of the ordinance, including § 1870.03 (hospitalization for abortions after the first trimester), § 1870.06(C) (requiring disclosure of the particular risks of the woman's pregnancy and the abortion technique to be employed), and § 1870.07 (24-hour waiting period).

All parties appealed some portion of the District Court's judgment. The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. 651 F.2d 1198 (1981). It affirmed the District Court's decision that § 1870.03's hospitalization requirement is constitutional. It also affirmed the ruling that § 1870.05, § 1870.06(B), and § 1870.16 are unconstitutional. The Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's decision on § 1870.06(C) and § 1870.07, finding these provisions to be unconstitutional.

Three separate petitions for certiorari were filed. In light of the importance of the issues presented, and in particular the conflicting decisions as to whether a State may require that all second trimester abortions be performed in a hospital,[9] we granted both Akron's and the plaintiffs' petitions. 456 U.S. 988 (1982). We denied the intervenors' petition, Seguin v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 456 U.S. 989 (1982), but they have participated in this Court as respondents under our Rule 19.6. We now reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals upholding Akron's hospitalization requirement, but affirm the remainder of the decision invalidating the provisions on parental consent, informed consent, waiting period, and disposal of fetal remains.

II

In Roe v. Wade, the Court held that the right of privacy, . . . founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action, . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy.

410 U.S. at 153. Although the Constitution does not specifically identify this right, the history of this Court's constitutional adjudication leaves no doubt that the full scope of the liberty guaranteed by the Due Process Clause cannot be found in or limited by the precise terms of the specific guarantees elsewhere provided in the Constitution.

Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 543 (1961) (Harlan, J., dissenting from dismissal of appeal). Central among these protected liberties is an individual's "freedom of personal choice in matters of marriage and family life." Roe, 410 U.S. at 169 (Stewart, J., concurring). See, e.g., Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923). The decision in Roe was based firmly on this long-recognized and essential element of personal liberty.

The Court also has recognized, because abortion is a medical procedure, that the full vindication of the woman's fundamental right necessarily requires that her physician be given "the room he needs to make his best medical judgment." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973). See Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 604-605, n. 33 (1977). The physician's exercise of this medical judgment encompasses both assisting the woman in the decisionmaking process and implementing her decision should she choose abortion. See Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387 (1979).

At the same time, the Court in Roe acknowledged that the woman's fundamental right "is not unqualified, and must be considered against important state interests in abortion." Roe, 410 U.S. at 154. But restrictive state regulation of the right to choose abortion, as with other fundamental rights subject to searching judicial examination, must be supported by a compelling state interest. Id. at 155. We have recognized two such interests that may justify state regulation of abortions.[10]

First, a State has an "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life." Id. at 162. Although this interest exists "throughout the course of the woman's pregnancy," Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1977), it becomes compelling only at viability, the point at which the fetus "has the capability of meaningful life outside the mother's womb," Roe, supra, at 163. See Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 63-65 (1976). At viability, this interest in protecting the potential life of the unborn child is so important that the State may proscribe abortions altogether, "except when it is necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother." Roe, 410 U.S. at 164.

Second, because a State has a legitimate concern with the health of women who undergo abortions, "a State may properly assert important interests in safeguarding health [and] in maintaining medical standards." Id. at 154. We held in Roe, however, that this health interest does not become compelling until "approximately the end of the first trimester" of pregnancy.[11] Id. at 163. Until that time, a pregnant woman must be permitted, in consultation with her physician, to decide to have an abortion and to effectuate that decision "free of interference by the State." [12] Ibid.

This does not mean that a State never may enact a regulation touching on the woman's abortion right during the first weeks of pregnancy. Certain regulations that have no significant impact on the woman's exercise of her right may be permissible where justified by important state health objectives. In Danforth, supra, we unanimously upheld two Missouri statutory provisions, applicable to the first trimester, requiring the woman to provide her informed written consent to the abortion and the physician to keep certain records, even though comparable requirements were not imposed on most other medical procedures. See 428 U.S. at 65-67, 79-81. The decisive factor was that the State met its burden of demonstrating that these regulations furthered important health-related state concerns.[13] But even these minor regulations on the abortion procedure during the first trimester may not interfere with physician-patient consultation or with the woman's choice between abortion and childbirth. See id. at 81.

From approximately the end of the first trimester of pregnancy, the State may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health.[14]

Roe, 410 U.S. at 163. The State's discretion to regulate on this basis does not, however, permit it to adopt abortion regulations that depart from accepted medical practice. We have rejected a State's attempt to ban a particular second trimester abortion procedure where the ban would have increased the costs and limited the availability of abortions without promoting important health benefits. See Danforth, 428 U.S. at 77-78. If a State requires licensing or undertakes to regulate the performance of abortion during this period, the health standards adopted must be "legitimately related to the objective the State seeks to accomplish." Doe, 410 U.S. at 195.

III

Section 1870.03 of the Akron ordinance requires that any abortion performed "upon a pregnant woman subsequent to the end of the first trimester of her pregnancy"[15] must be "performed in a hospital." A "hospital" is a general hospital or special hospital devoted to gynecology or obstetrics which is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals or by the American Osteopathic Association.

§ 1870.01(B). Accreditation by these organizations requires compliance with comprehensive standards governing a wide variety of health and surgical services.[16] The ordinance thus prevents the performance of abortions in outpatient facilities that are not part of an acute care, full-service hospital.[17]

In the District Court, plaintiffs sought to demonstrate that this hospitalization requirement has a serious detrimental impact on a woman's ability to obtain a second trimester abortion in Akron, and that it is not reasonably related to the State's interest in the health of the pregnant woman. The District Court did not reject this argument, but rather found the evidence "not . . . so convincing that it is willing to discard the Supreme Court's formulation in Roe" of a line between impermissible first trimester regulation and permissible second trimester regulation. 479 F.Supp. at 1215. The Court of Appeals affirmed on a similar basis. It accepted plaintiffs' argument that Akron's hospitalization requirement did not have a reasonable health justification during at least part of the second trimester, but declined to "retreat from the 'bright line' in Roe v. Wade." 651 F.2d at 1210.[18] We believe that the courts below misinterpreted this Court's prior decisions, and we now hold that § 1870.03 is unconstitutional.

In Roe v. Wade, the Court held that, after the end of the first trimester of pregnancy, the State's interest becomes compelling, and it may "regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health." 410 U.S. at 163. We noted, for example, that States could establish requirements relating to the facility in which the procedure is to be performed, that is, whether it must be in a hospital or may be a clinic or some other place of less-than-hospital status.

Ibid. In the companion case of Doe v. Bolton, the Court invalidated a Georgia requirement that all abortions be performed in a hospital licensed by the State Board of Health and accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. See 410 U.S. at 201. We recognized the State's legitimate health interests in establishing, for second trimester abortions, "standards for licensing all facilities where abortions may be performed" Id. at 195. We found however that performed. See at 199. We found, however, that the State must show more than [was shown in Doe] in order to prove that only the full resources of a licensed hospital, rather than those of some other appropriately licensed institution, satisfy these health interests.

Ibid.[19]

We reaffirm today, see supra at 429, n. 11, that a State's interest in health regulation becomes compelling at approximately the end of the first trimester. The existence of a compelling state interest in health, however, is only the beginning of the inquiry. The State's regulation may be upheld only if it is reasonably designed to further that state interest. See Doe, 410 U.S. at 195. And the Court in Roe did not hold that it always is reasonable for a State to adopt an abortion regulation that applies to the entire second trimester. A State necessarily must have latitude in adopting regulations of general applicability in this sensitive area. But if it appears that, during a substantial portion of the second trimester, the State's regulation "depart[s] from accepted medical practice," supra at 431, the regulation may not be upheld simply because it may be reasonable for the remaining portion of the trimester. Rather, the State is obligated to make a reasonable effort to limit the effect of its regulations to the period in the trimester during which its health interest will be furthered.

There can be no doubt that § 1870.03's second trimester hospitalization requirement places a significant obstacle in the path of women seeking an abortion. A primary burden created by the requirement is additional cost to the woman. The Court of Appeals noted that there was testimony that a second trimester abortion costs more than twice as much in a hospital as in a clinic. See 651 F.2d at 1209 (in-hospital abortion costs $850-$900, whereas a dilatation-and-evacuation (D&E) abortion performed in a clinic costs $350-$400).[20] Moreover, the court indicated that second trimester abortions were rarely performed in Akron hospitals. Ibid. (only nine second trimester abortions performed in Akron hospitals in the year before trial).[21] Thus, a second trimester hospitalization requirement may force women to travel to find available facilities, resulting in both financial expense and additional health risk. It therefore is apparent that a second trimester hospitalization requirement may significantly limit a woman's ability to obtain an abortion.

Akron does not contend that § 1870.03 imposes only an insignificant burden on women's access to abortion, but rather defends it as a reasonable health regulation. This position had strong support at the time of Roe v. Wade, as hospitalization for second trimester abortions was recommended by the American Public Health Association (APHA), see Roe, 410 U.S. at 143-146, and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), see Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services 65 (4th ed.1974). Since then, however, the safety of second trimester abortions has increased dramatically.[22] The principal reason is that the D&E procedure is now widely and successfully used for second trimester abortions.[23] The Court of Appeals found that there was "an abundance of evidence that D&E is the safest method of performing post-first trimester abortions today." 651 F.2d at 1209. The availability of the D&E procedure during the interval between approximately 12 and 16 weeks of pregnancy, a period during which other second trimester abortion techniques generally cannot be used,[24] has meant that women desiring an early second trimester abortion no longer are forced to incur the health risks of waiting until at least the 16th week of pregnancy.

For our purposes, an even more significant factor is that experience indicates that D&E may be performed safely on an outpatient basis in appropriate nonhospital facilities. The evidence is strong enough to have convinced the APHA to abandon its prior recommendation of hospitalization for all second trimester abortions:

Current data show that abortions occurring in the second trimester can be safely performed by the Dilatation and Evacuation (D and E) procedure. . . . Requirements that all abortions after 12 weeks of gestation be performed in hospitals increase the expense and inconvenience to the woman without contributing to the safety of the procedure.

APHA Recommended Program Guide for Abortion Services (Revised 1979), 70 Am.J.Public Health 652, 654 (1980) (hereinafter APHA Recommended Guide).

Similarly, the ACOG no longer suggests that all second trimester abortions be performed in a hospital. It recommends that abortions performed in a physician's office or outpatient clinic be limited to 14 weeks of pregnancy, but it indicates that abortions may be performed safely in a hospital-based or in a free-standing ambulatory surgical facility, or in an outpatient clinic meeting the criteria required for a free-standing surgical facility, until 18 weeks of pregnancy. ACOG, Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services 54 (5th ed.1982).

These developments, and the professional commentary supporting them, constitute impressive evidence that -- at least during the early weeks of the second trimester -- D&E abortions may be performed as safely in an outpatient clinic as in a full-service hospital.[25] We conclude, therefore, that "present medical knowledge," Roe, supra, at 163, convincingly undercuts Akron's justification for requiring that all second trimester abortions be performed in a hospital.[26]

Akron nonetheless urges that "[t]he fact that some mid-trimester abortions may be done in a minimally equipped clinic does not invalidate the regulation." [27] Brief for Respondents in No. 81-1172, p.19. It is true that a state abortion regulation is not unconstitutional simply because it does not correspond perfectly in all cases to the asserted state interest. But the lines drawn in a state regulation must be reasonable, and this cannot be said of § 1870.03. By preventing the performance of D&E abortions in an appropriate nonhospital setting, Akron has imposed a heavy, and unnecessary, burden on women's access to a relatively inexpensive, otherwise accessible, and safe abortion procedure.[28] Section 1870.03 has "the effect of inhibiting . . . the vast majority of abortions after the first 12 weeks," Danforth, 428 U.S. at 79, and therefore unreasonably infringes upon a woman's constitutional right to obtain an abortion.

IV

We turn next to § 1870.05(B), the provision prohibiting a physician from performing an abortion on a minor pregnant woman under the age of 15 unless he obtains "the informed written consent of one of her parents or her legal guardian" or unless the minor obtains "an order from a court having jurisdiction over her that the abortion be performed or induced." The District Court invalidated this provision because [i]t does not establish a procedure by which a minor can avoid a parental veto of her abortion decision by demonstrating that her decision is, in fact, informed. Rather, it requires, in all cases, both the minor's informed consent and either parental consent or a court order.

479 F.Supp. at 1201. The Court of Appeals affirmed on the same basis.[29] The relevant legal standards are not in dispute. The Court has held that the State may not impose a blanket provision . . . requiring the consent of a parent or person in loco parentis as a condition for abortion of an unmarried minor.

Danforth, supra, at 74. In Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) (Bellotti II), a majority of the Court indicated that a State's interest in protecting immature minors will sustain a requirement of a consent substitute, either parental or judicial. See id. at 640-642 (plurality opinion for four Justices); id. at 656-657 (WHITE, J., dissenting) (expressing approval of absolute parental or judicial consent requirement). See also Danforth, supra, at 102-105 (STEVENS, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The Bellotti II plurality cautioned, however, that the State must provide an alternative procedure whereby a pregnant minor may demonstrate that she is sufficiently mature to make the abortion decision herself or that, despite her immaturity, an abortion would be in her best interests. 443 U.S. at 643-644. Under these decisions, it is clear that Akron may not make a blanket determination that all minors under the age of 15 are too immature to make this decision, or that an abortion never may be in the minor's best interests without parental approval.

Akron's ordinance does not create expressly the alternative procedure required by Bellotti II. But Akron contends that the Ohio Juvenile Court will qualify as a "court having jurisdiction" within the meaning of § 1879.05(B), and that it is not to be assumed that, during the course of the juvenile proceedings the Court will not construe the ordinance in a manner consistent with the constitutional requirement of a determination of the minor's ability to make an informed consent.

Brief for Petitioner in No. 81-746, p. 28. Akron concludes that the courts below should not have invalidated § 1879.05(B) on its face. The city relies on Bellotti v. Baird, 428

U.S. 132 (1976) (Bellotti I), in which the Court did not decide whether a State's parental consent provisions were unconstitutional as applied to mature minors, holding instead that abstention is appropriate where an unconstrued state statute is susceptible of a construction by the state judiciary "which might avoid in whole or in part the necessity for federal constitutional adjudication, or at least materially change the nature of the problem."

Id. at 146-147 (quoting Harrison v. NAACP, 360 U.S. 167, 177 (1959)). See also H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) (refusing to decide whether parental notice statute would be constitutional as applied to mature minors).[30]

We do not think that the abstention principle should have been applied here. It is reasonable to assume, as we did in Bellotti I, supra, and Matheson, supra, that a state court, presented with a state statute specifically governing abortion consent procedures for pregnant minors, will attempt to construe the statute consistently with constitutional requirements. This suit, however, concerns a municipal ordinance that creates no procedures for making the necessary determinations. Akron seeks to invoke the Ohio statute governing juvenile proceedings, but that statute neither mentions minors' abortions nor suggests that the Ohio Juvenile Court has authority to inquire into a minor's maturity or emancipation.[31] In these circumstances, we do not think that the Akron ordinance, as applied in Ohio juvenile proceedings, is reasonably susceptible of being construed to create an "opportunity for case-by-case evaluations of the maturity of pregnant minors." Bellotti II, supra, at 643, n. 23 (plurality opinion). We therefore affirm the Court of Appeals' judgment that § 1879.05(B) is unconstitutional.

The Akron ordinance provides that no abortion shall be performed except "with the informed written consent of the pregnant woman, . . . given freely and without coercion." § 1879.06(A). Furthermore, "in order to insure that the consent for an abortion is truly informed consent," the woman must be "orally informed by her attending physician" of the status of her pregnancy, the development of her fetus, the date of possible viability, the physical and emotional complications that may result from an abortion, and the availability of agencies to provide her with assistance and information with respect to birth control, adoption, and childbirth. § 1879.06(B). In addition, the attending physician must inform her of the particular risks associated with her own pregnancy and the abortion technique to be employed . . . [and] other information which in his own medical judgment is relevant to her decision as to whether to have an abortion or carry her pregnancy to term.

The District Court found that § 1879.06(B) was unconstitutional, but that § 1879.06(C) was related to a valid state interest in maternal health. See 479 F.Supp. at 1203-1204. The Court of Appeals concluded that both provisions were unconstitutional. See 651 F. 2d at 1207. We affirm.

A

In Danforth, we upheld a Missouri law requiring a pregnant woman to "certif[y] in writing her consent to the abortion and that her consent is informed and freely given and is not the result of coercion." 428 U.S. at 85. We explained:

The decision to abort . . . is an important, and often a stressful one, and it is desirable and imperative that it be made with full knowledge of its nature and consequences. The woman is the one primarily concerned, and her awareness of the decision and its significance may be assured, constitutionally, by the State to the extent of requiring her prior written consent.

Id. at 67. We rejected the view that "informed consent" was too vague a term, construing it to mean the giving of information to the patient as to just what would be done and as to its consequences. To ascribe more meaning than this might well confine the attending physician in an undesired and uncomfortable straitjacket in the practice of his profession.

Id. at 67, n. 8.

The validity of an informed consent requirement thus rests on the State's interest in protecting the health of the pregnant woman. The decision to have an abortion has "implications far broader than those associated with most other kinds of medical treatment," Bellotti II, 443 U.S. at 649 (plurality opinion), and thus the State legitimately may seek to ensure that it has been made in the light of all attendant circumstances -- psychological and emotional as well as physical -- that might be relevant to the wellbeing of the patient.

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 394.[32] This does not mean, however, that a State has unreviewable authority to decide what information a woman must be given before she chooses to have an abortion. It remains primarily the responsibility of the physician to ensure that appropriate information is conveyed to his patient, depending on her particular circumstances. Danforth's recognition of the State's interest in ensuring that this information be given will not justify abortion regulations designed to influence the woman's informed choice between abortion or childbirth.[33]

Viewing the city's regulations in this light, we believe that § 1879.06(B) attempts to extend the State's interest in ensuring "informed consent" beyond permissible limits. First, it is fair to say that much of the information required is designed not to inform the woman's consent, but rather to persuade her to withhold it altogether. Subsection (3) requires the physician to inform his patient that "the unborn child is a human life from the moment of conception," a requirement inconsistent with the Court's holding in Roe v. Wade that a State may not adopt one theory of when life begins to justify its regulation of abortions. See 410 U.S. at 159-162. Moreover, much of the detailed description of "the anatomical and physiological characteristics of the particular unborn child" required by subsection (3) would involve, at best, speculation by the physician.[34] And subsection (5), that begins with the dubious statement that "abortion is a major surgical procedure"[35] and proceeds to describe numerous possible physical and psychological complications of abortion,[36] is a "parade of horrors" intended to suggest that abortion is a particularly dangerous procedure.

An additional, and equally decisive, objection to § 1870.06(B) is its intrusion upon the discretion of the pregnant woman's physician. This provision specifies a litany of information that the physician must recite to each woman regardless of whether, in his judgment, the information is relevant to her personal decision. For example, even if the physician believes that some of the risks outlined in subsection (5) are nonexistent for a particular patient, he remains obligated to describe them to her. In Danforth, the Court warned against placing the physician in just such an "undesired and uncomfortable straitjacket." 428 U.S. at 67, n. 8. Consistent with its interest in ensuring informed consent, a State may require that a physician make certain that his patient understands the physical and emotional implications of having an abortion. But Akron has gone far beyond merely describing the general subject matter relevant to informed consent. By insisting upon recitation of a lengthy and inflexible list of information, Akron unreasonably has placed "obstacles in the path of the doctor upon whom [the woman is] entitled to rely for advice in connection with her decision." Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. at 604, n. 33.[37]

Section 1870.06(C) presents a different question. Under this provision, the "attending physician" must inform the woman of the particular risks associated with her own pregnancy and the abortion technique to be employed including providing her with at least a general description of the medical instructions to be followed subsequent to the abortion in order to insure her safe recovery, and shall in addition provide her with such other information which in his own medical judgment is relevant to her decision as to whether to have an abortion or carry her pregnancy to term.

The information required clearly is related to maternal health and to the State's legitimate purpose in requiring informed consent. Nonetheless, the Court of Appeals determined that it interfered with the physician's medical judgment in exactly the same way as Section 1870.06(B). It requires the doctor to make certain disclosures in all cases, regardless of his own professional judgment as to the desirability of doing so.

651 F.2d at 1207. This was a misapplication of Danforth. There we construed "informed consent" to mean "the giving of information to the patient as to just what would be done and as to its consequences." 428 U.S. at 67, n. 8. We see no significant difference in Akron's requirement that the woman be told of the particular risks of her pregnancy and the abortion technique to be used, and be given general instructions on proper post-abortion care. Moreover, in contrast to subsection (B), § 1879.06(C) merely describes in general terms the information to be disclosed. It properly leaves the precise nature and amount of this disclosure to the physician's discretion and "medical judgment."

The Court of Appeals also held, however, that § 1879.06(C) was invalid because it required that the disclosure be made by the "attending physician." The court found that the practice of all three plaintiff clinics has been for the counseling to be conducted by persons other than the doctor who performs the abortion, 651 F.2d at 1207, and determined that Akron had not justified requiring the physician personally to describe the health risks. Akron challenges this holding as contrary to our cases that emphasize the importance of the physician-patient relationship. In Akron's view, as in the view of the dissenting judge below, the "attending physician" requirement "does no more than seek to ensure that there is, in fact, a true physician-patient relationship even for the woman who goes to an abortion clinic." Id. at 1217 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Requiring physicians personally to discuss the abortion decision, its health risks, and consequences with each patient may in some cases add to the cost of providing abortions, though the record here does not suggest that ethical physicians will charge more for adhering to this typical element of the physician-patient relationship. Yet in Roe and subsequent cases we have stressed repeatedly the central role of the physician, both in consulting with the woman about whether or not to have an abortion and in determining how any abortion was to be carried out.

Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 387. Moreover, we have left no doubt that, to ensure the safety of the abortion procedure, the States may mandate that only physicians perform abortions. See Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9, 11 (1975); Roe, 410 U.S. at 165.

We are not convinced, however, that there is as vital a state need for insisting that the physician performing the abortion, or for that matter any physician, personally counsel the patient in the absence of a request. The State's interest is in ensuring that the woman's consent is informed and unpressured; the critical factor is whether she obtains the necessary information and counseling from a qualified person, not the identity of the person from whom she obtains it.[38] Akron and intervenors strongly urge that the nonphysician counselors at the plaintiff abortion clinics are not trained or qualified to perform this important function. The courts below made no such findings, however, and, on the record before us, we cannot say that the woman's consent to the abortion will not be informed if a physician delegates the counseling task to another qualified individual.

In so holding, we do not suggest that the State is powerless to vindicate its interest in making certain the "important" and "stressful" decision to abort "[i]s made with full knowledge of its nature and consequences." Danforth, 428 U.S. at 67. Nor do we imply that a physician may abdicate his essential role as the person ultimately responsible for the medical aspects of the decision to perform the abortion.[39] A State may define the physician's responsibility to include verification that adequate counseling has been provided and that the woman's consent is informed.[40] In addition, the State may establish reasonable minimum qualifications for those people who perform the primary counseling function.

See, e.g., Doe, 410 U.S. at 195 (State may require a medical facility "to possess all the staffing and services necessary to perform an abortion safely"). In light of these alternatives, we believe that it is unreasonable for a State to insist that only a physician is competent to provide the information and counseling relevant to informed consent. We affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals that § 1879.06(C) is invalid.

VI

The Akron ordinance prohibits a physician from performing an abortion until 24 hours after the pregnant woman signs a consent form. § 1879.07.

The District Court upheld this provision on the ground that it furthered Akron's interest in ensuring "that a woman's abortion decision is made after careful consideration of all the facts applicable to her particular situation." 479 F.Supp. at 1204. The Court of Appeals reversed, finding that the inflexible waiting period had "no medical basis," and that careful consideration of the abortion decision by the woman "is beyond the state's power to require." 651 F.2d at 1208. We affirm the Court of Appeals' judgment.

The District Court found that the mandatory 24-hour waiting period increases the cost of obtaining an abortion by requiring the woman to make two separate trips to the abortion facility. See 479 F.Supp. at 1204. Plaintiffs also contend that, because of scheduling difficulties, the effective delay may be longer than 24 hours, and that such a delay in some cases could increase the risk of an abortion. Akron denies that any significant health risk is created by a 24-hour waiting period, and argues that a brief period of delay -- with the opportunity for reflection on the counseling received -- often will be beneficial to the pregnant woman.

We find that Akron has failed to demonstrate that any legitimate state interest is furthered by an arbitrary and inflexible waiting period. There is no evidence suggesting that the abortion procedure will be performed more safely. Nor are we convinced that the State's legitimate concern that the woman's decision be informed is reasonably served by requiring a 24-hour delay as a matter of course. The decision whether to proceed with an abortion is one as to which it is important to "affor[d] the physician adequate discretion in the exercise of his medical judgment." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 387. In accordance with the ethical standards of the profession, a physician will advise the patient to defer the abortion when he thinks this will be beneficial to her.⁽⁵⁾ FOOTNOTE NAMES But if a woman, after appropriate counseling, is prepared to give her written informed consent and proceed with the abortion, a State may not demand that she delay the effectuation of that decision.

Section 1870.16 of the Akron ordinance requires physicians performing abortions to "insure that the remains of the unborn child are disposed of in a humane and sanitary manner." The Court of Appeals found that the word "humane" was impermissibly vague as a definition of conduct subject to criminal prosecution. The court invalidated the entire provision, declining to sever the word "humane" in order to uphold the requirement that disposal be "sanitary." See 651 F.2d at 1211. We affirm this judgment.

Akron contends that the purpose of § 1879.16 is simply "to preclude the mindless dumping of aborted fetuses onto garbage piles." Planned Parenthood Assn. v. Fitzpatrick, 401 F.Supp. 554, 573 (ED Pa.1975) (three-judge court) (quoting State's characterization of legislative purpose), summarily aff'd sub nom. Franklin v. Fitzpatrick, 428 U.S. 901 (1976).

It is far from clear, however, that this provision has such a limited intent. The phrase "humane and sanitary" does, as the Court of Appeals noted, suggest a possible intent to "mandate some sort of 'decent burial' of an embryo at the earliest stages of formation." 651 F.2d at 1211. This level of uncertainty is fatal where criminal liability is imposed. See Colautti v. Franklin, supra, at 396. Because § 1879.16 fails to give a physician "fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden," United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612, 617 (1954), we agree that it violates the Due Process Clause.

VIII

We affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals invalidating those sections of Akron's "Regulations of Abortions" ordinance that deal with parental consent, informed consent, a 24-hour waiting period, and the disposal of fetal remains. The remaining portion of the judgment, sustaining Akron's requirement that all second trimester abortions be performed in a hospital, is reversed.

It is so ordered.

There are especially compelling reasons for adhering to stare decisis in applying the principles of Roe v. Wade. That case was considered with special care. It was first argued during the 1971 Term, and reargued -- with extensive briefing -- the following Term. The decision was joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE and six other Justices. Since Roe was decided in January, 1973, the Court repeatedly and consistently has accepted and applied the basic principle that a woman has a fundamental right to make the highly personal choice whether or not to terminate her pregnancy. See Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9 (1975); Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976); Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438 (1977); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980); H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981).

Today, however, the dissenting opinion rejects the basic premise of Roe and its progeny. The dissent stops short of arguing flatly that Roe should be overruled. Rather, it adopts reasoning that, for all practical purposes, would accomplish precisely that result. The dissent states that "[e]ven assuming that there is a fundamental right to terminate pregnancy in some situations," the State's compelling interests in maternal health and potential human life "are present throughout pregnancy." Post at 459 (emphasis in original). The existence of these compelling interests turns out to be largely unnecessary, however, for the dissent does not think that even one of the numerous abortion regulations at issue imposes a sufficient burden on the "limited" fundamental right, post at 465, n. 10, to require heightened scrutiny. Indeed, the dissent asserts that, regardless of cost, [a] health regulation, such as the hospitalization requirement, simply does not rise to the level of 'official interference' with the abortion decision.

Post at 467 (quoting Harris v. McRae, supra, at 328 (WHITE, J., concurring)). The dissent therefore would hold that a requirement that all abortions be performed in an acute care general hospital does not impose an unacceptable burden on the abortion decision. It requires no great familiarity with the cost and limited availability of such hospitals to appreciate that the effect of the dissent's views would be to drive the performance of many abortions back underground free of effective regulation, and often without the attendance of a physician.

In sum, it appears that the dissent would uphold virtually any abortion regulation under a rational basis test. It also appears that even where heightened scrutiny is deemed appropriate, the dissent would uphold virtually any abortion-inhibiting regulation because of the State's interest in preserving potential human life. See post at 474 (arguing that a 24-hour waiting period is justified in part because the abortion decision "has grave consequences for the fetus"). This analysis is wholly incompatible with the existence of the fundamental right recognized in Roe v. Wade.

The ordinance was prefaced by several findings:

WHEREAS, the citizens of Akron are entitled to the highest standard of health care; and

WHEREAS, abortion is a major surgical procedure which can result in complications, and adequate equipment and personnel should be required for its safe performance in order to insure the highest standards of care for the protection of the life and health of the pregnant woman; and

WHEREAS, abortion should be performed only in a hospital or in such other special outpatient facility offering the maximum safeguards to the life and health of the pregnant woman; and

WHEREAS, it is the finding of Council that there is no point in time between the union of sperm and egg, or at least the blastocyst stage and the birth of the infant at which point we can say the unborn child is not a human life, and that the changes occurring between implantation, a six-weeks embryo, a six-month fetus, and a one-week-old child, or a mature adult are merely stages of development and maturation, and

WHEREAS, traditionally the physician has been responsible for the welfare of both the pregnant woman and her unborn child, and that while situations of conflict may arise between a pregnant woman's health interests and the welfare of her unborn child, the resolution of such conflicts by inducing abortion in no way implies that the physician has an adversary relationship towards the unborn child; and

WHEREAS, Council therefore wishes to affirm that the destruction of the unborn child is not the primary purpose of abortion and that consequently Council recognizes a continuing obligation on the part of the physician towards the survival of a viable unborn child where this obligation can be discharged without additional hazard to the health of the pregnant woman; and

WHEREAS, Council, after extensive public hearings and investigations concludes that enactment of this ordinance is a reasonable and prudent action which will significantly contribute to the preservation of the public life, health, safety, morals, and welfare.

§ 1870.03 ABORTION IN HOSPITAL

No person shall perform or induce an abortion upon a pregnant woman subsequent to the end of the first trimester of her pregnancy, unless such abortion is performed in a hospital.

Section 1870.01(B) defines "hospital" as a general hospital or special hospital devoted to gynecology or obstetrics which is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals or by the American Osteopathic Association.

§1870.05 NOTICE AND CONSENT

(A) No physician shall perform or induce an abortion upon an unmarried pregnant woman under the age of 18 years without first having given at least twenty-four (24) hours actual notice to one of the parents or the legal guardian of the minor pregnant woman as to the intention to perform such abortion, or if such parent or guardian cannot be reached after a reasonable effort to find him or her, without first having given at least seventy-two (72) hours constructive notice to one of the parents or the legal guardian of the minor pregnant woman by certified mail to the last known address of one of the parents or guardian, computed from the time of mailing, unless the abortion is ordered by a court having jurisdiction over such minor pregnant woman.

(B) No physician shall perform or induce an abortion upon a minor pregnant woman under the age of fifteen (15) years without first having obtained the informed written consent of the minor pregnant woman in accordance with Section 1870.06 of this Chapter, and

(1) First having obtained the informed written consent of one of her parents or her legal guardian in accordance with Section 1870.06 of this Chapter, or

(2) The minor pregnant woman first having obtained an order from a court having jurisdiction over her that the abortion be performed or induced.

§1870.06 INFORMED CONSENT

(A) An abortion otherwise permitted by law shall be performed or induced only with the informed written consent of the pregnant woman, and one of her parents or her legal guardian whose consent is required in accordance with Section 1870.05(B) of this Chapter, given freely and without coercion.

(B) In order to insure that the consent for an abortion is truly informed consent, an abortion shall be performed or induced upon a pregnant woman only after she, and one of her parents or her legal guardian whose consent is required in accordance with Section 1870.05(B) of this Chapter, have been orally informed by her attending physician of the following facts, and have signed a consent form acknowledging that she, and the parent or legal guardian where applicable, have been informed as follows:

(1) That according to the best judgment of her attending physician she is pregnant.

(2) The number of weeks elapsed from the probable time of the conception of her unborn child, based upon the information provided by her as to the time of her last menstrual period or after a history and physical examination and appropriate laboratory tests.

(3) That the unborn child is a human life from the moment of conception and that there has been described in detail the anatomical and physiological characteristics of the particular unborn child at the gestational point of development at which time the abortion is to be performed, including, but not limited to, appearance, mobility, tactile sensitivity, including pain, perception or response, brain and heart function, the presence of internal organs and the presence of external members.

(4) That her unborn child may be viable, and thus capable of surviving outside of her womb, if more than twenty-two (22) weeks have elapsed from the time of conception, and that her attending physician has a legal obligation to take all reasonable steps to preserve the life and health of her viable unborn child during the abortion.

(5) That abortion is a major surgical procedure which can result in serious complications, including hemorrhage, perforated uterus, infection, menstrual disturbances, sterility and miscarriage and prematurity in subsequent pregnancies; and that abortion may leave essentially unaffected or may worsen any existing psychological problems she may have, and can result in severe emotional disturbances.

(6) That numerous public and private agencies and services are available to provide her with birth control information, and that her physician will provide her with a list of such agencies and the services available if she so requests.

(7) That numerous public and private agencies and services are available to assist her during pregnancy and after the birth of her child, if she chooses not to have the abortion, whether she wishes to keep her child or place him or her for adoption, and that her physician will provide her with a list of such agencies and the services available if she so requests.

(C) At the same time the attending physician provides the information required by paragraph (B) of this Section, he shall, at least orally, inform the pregnant woman, and one of her parents or her legal guardian whose consent is required in accordance with Section 1870.05(B) of this Chapter, of the particular risks associated with her own pregnancy and the abortion technique to be employed including providing her with at least a general description of the medical instructions to be followed subsequent to the abortion in order to insure her safe recovery, and shall in addition provide her with such other information which in his own medical judgment is relevant to her decision as to whether to have an abortion or carry her pregnancy to term.

(D) The attending physician performing or inducing the abortion shall provide the pregnant woman, or one of her parents or legal guardian signing the consent form where applicable, with a duplicate copy of the consent form signed by her, and one of her parents or her legal guardian where applicable, in accordance with paragraph (B) of this Section.

§1870.07 WAITING PERIOD

No physician shall perform or induce an abortion upon a pregnant woman until twenty-four (24) hours have elapsed from the time the pregnant woman, and one of her parents or her legal guardian whose consent is required in accordance with Section 1870.05(B) of this Chapter, have signed the consent form required by Section 1870.06 of this Chapter, and the physician so certifies in writing that such time has elapsed.

[7]

§1870.16 DISPOSAL OF REMAINS

Any physician who shall perform or induce an abortion upon a pregnant woman shall insure that the remains of the unborn child are disposed of in a humane and sanitary manner.

§1870.19 SEVERABILITY

Should any provision of this Chapter be construed by any court of law to be invalid, illegal, unconstitutional, or otherwise unenforceable, such invalidity, illegality, unconstitutionality, or unenforceability shall not extend to any other provision or provisions of this Chapter.

Compare Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, 655 F.2d 848 (CA8), supplemented, 664 F.2d 687 (CA8 1981) (invalidating hospital requirement), with Simopoulos v. Commonwealth, 221 Va. 1059, 277 S.E.2d 194 (1981) (upholding hospital requirement). Numerous States require that second trimester abortions be performed in hospitals. See Brief for Americans United for Life as Amicus Curiae in Simopoulos v. Virginia, O.T. 1982, No. 81-185, p. 4, n. 1 (listing 23 States).

[10]

In addition, the Court repeatedly has recognized that, in view of the unique status of children under the law, the States have a "significant" interest in certain abortion regulations aimed at protecting children "that is not present in the case of an adult." Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. at 75. See Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 693, n. 15 (1977) (plurality opinion). The right of privacy includes "independence in making certain kinds of important decisions," Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599-600 (1977), but this Court has recognized that many minors are less capable than adults of making such important decisions. See Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. at 633-635 (Bellotti II) (plurality opinion); Danforth, supra, at 102 (STEVENS, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Accordingly, we have held that the States have a legitimate interest in encouraging parental involvement in their minor children's decision to have an abortion. See H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398 (1981) (parental notice); Bellotti II, supra, at 639, 648 (plurality opinion) (parental consent). A majority of the Court, however, has indicated that these state and parental interests must give way to the constitutional right of a mature minor or of an immature minor whose best interests are contrary to parental involvement. See, e.g., Matheson, 450 U.S. at 420 (POWELL, J., concurring); id. at 450-451 (MARSHALL, J., dissenting). The plurality in Bellotti II concluded that a State choosing to encourage parental involvement must provide an alternative procedure through which a minor may demonstrate that she is mature enough to make her own decision or that the abortion is in her best interest. See Bellotti II, supra, at 643-644.

Roe identified the end of the first trimester as the compelling point because, until that time -- according to the medical literature available in 1973 -- "mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth." 410 U.S. at 163. There is substantial evidence that developments in the past decade, particularly the development of a much safer method for performing second trimester abortions, see infra at 435-437, have extended the period in which abortions are safer than childbirth. See, e.g., LeBolt, Grimes, & Cates, Mortality From Abortion and Childbirth: Are the Populations Comparable?, 248 J.A.M.A. 188, 191 (1982) (abortion may be safer than childbirth up to gestational ages of 16 weeks). We think it prudent, however, to retain Roe's identification of the beginning of the second trimester as the approximate time at which the State's interest in maternal health becomes sufficiently compelling to justify significant regulation of abortion. We note that the medical evidence suggests that, until approximately the end of the first trimester, the State's interest in maternal health would not be served by regulations that restrict the manner in which abortions are performed by a licensed physician. See, e.g., American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services 54 (5th ed.1982) (hereinafter ACOG Standards) (uncomplicated abortions generally may be performed in a physician's office or an outpatient clinic up to 14 weeks from the first day of the last menstrual period); ACOG Technical Bulletin No. 56, Methods of Mid-Trimester Abortion 4 (Dec.1979) ("Regardless of advances in abortion technology, midtrimester terminations will likely remain more hazardous, expensive, and emotionally disturbing for women than earlier abortions").

The Roe trimester standard thus continues to provide a reasonable legal framework for limiting a State's authority to regulate abortions. Where the State adopts a health regulation governing the performance of abortions during the second trimester, the determinative question should be whether there is a reasonable medical basis for the regulation. See Roe, 410 U.S. at 163. The comparison between abortion and childbirth mortality rates may be relevant only where the State employs a health rationale as a justification for a complete prohibition on abortions in certain circumstances. See Danforth, supra, at 78-79 (invalidating state ban on saline abortions, a method that was "safer, with respect to maternal mortality, than even continuation of the pregnancy until normal childbirth").

Of course, the State retains an interest in ensuring the validity of Roe's factual assumption that "the first trimester abortion [is] as safe for the woman as normal childbirth at term," an assumption that "holds true only if the abortion is performed by medically competent personnel under conditions insuring maximum safety for the woman." Connecticut v. Menillo, 423 U.S. 9, 11 (1975) (per curiam). On this basis, for example, it is permissible for the States to impose criminal sanctions on the performance of an abortion by a nonphysician. Ibid.

For example, we concluded that recordkeeping, if not abused or overdone, can be useful to the State's interest in protecting the health of its female citizens, and may be a resource that is relevant to decisions involving medical experience and judgment.

428 U.S. at 81. See infra at 443-445 (discussing the State's interest in requiring informed consent).

Examples of permissible state regulation in this area are requirements as to the qualifications of the person who is to perform the abortion; as to the licensure of that person; as to the facility in which the procedure is to be performed, that is, whether it must be a hospital or may be a clinic or some other place of less-than-hospital status; as to the licensing of the facility; and the like.

The Akron ordinance does not define "first trimester," but elsewhere suggests that the age of the fetus should be measured from the date of conception. See § 1870.06(B)(2) (physician must inform woman of the number of weeks elapsed since conception); § 1870.06(B)(4) (physician must inform woman that a fetus may be viable after 22 weeks from conception). An average pregnancy lasts approximately 38 weeks from the time of conception or, as more commonly measured, 40 weeks from the beginning of the woman's last menstrual period. Under both methods, there may be more than a 2-week deviation either way.

Because of the approximate nature of these measurements, there is no certain method of delineating "trimesters." Frequently, the first trimester is estimated as 12 weeks following conception, or 14 weeks following the last menstrual period. We need not attempt to draw a precise line, as this Court -- for purposes of analysis -- has identified the "compelling point" for the State's interest in health as "approximately the end of the first trimester." Roe, 410 U.S. at 163. Unless otherwise indicated, all references in this opinion to gestational age are based on the time from the beginning of the last menstrual period.

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAH), for example, has established guidelines for the following services: dietetic, emergency, home care, nuclear medicine, pharmaceutical, professional library, rehabilitation, social work, and special care. See generally JCAH, Accreditation Manual for Hospitals, 1983 Edition (1982).

Akron's ordinance distinguishes between "hospitals" and outpatient clinics. Section 1870.02 provides that even first trimester abortions must be performed in "a hospital or an abortion facility." "Abortion facility" is defined as "a clinic, physician's office, or any other place or facility in which abortions are performed, other than a hospital." § 1870.01(G).

[18]

The Court of Appeals believed that it was bound by Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services, Inc. v. Bowen, 496 F.Supp. 894 (ND Ind.1980) (three-judge court), summarily aff'd sub nom. Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services, Inc. v. Orr, 451 U.S. 934 (1981), in which an Indiana second trimester hospitalization requirement was upheld. Although the District Court in that case found that

Roe does not render the constitutionality of second trimester regulations subject to either the availability of abortions or the improvements in medical techniques and skills, 496 F.Supp. at 901-902, it also rested the decision on the alternative ground that the plaintiffs had failed to provide evidence to support their theory that it was unreasonable to require hospitalization for dilatation and evacuation abortions performed early in the second trimester. See id. at 902-903. Our summary affirmance therefore is not binding precedent on the hospitalization issue. See Illinois State Board of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173, 180-181, 182-183 (1979).

We also found that the additional requirement that the licensed hospital be accredited by the JCAH was "not 'based on differences that are reasonably related to the purposes of the Act in which it is found.'" Doe, 410 U.S. at 194 (quoting Morey v. Doud, 354 U.S. 457, 465 (1957)). We concluded that, in any event, Georgia's hospital requirement was invalid because it applied to first trimester abortions.

National statistics indicate a similar cost difference. In 1978, the average clinic charged $284 for a D&E abortion, whereas the average hospital charge was $435. The hospital charge did not include the physician's fee which ran as high as $300. See Rosoff The charge did not include the physician's fee, which ran as high as $300. See Rosen, The Availability of Second trimester Abortion Services in the United States, published in Second trimester Abortion: Perspectives After a Decade of Experience 35 (G. Berger, W. Brenner, & L. Keith eds.1981) (hereinafter Second trimester Abortion).

The Akron situation is not unique. In many areas of this country, few, if any, hospitals perform second trimester abortions. See, e.g., Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, 664 F.2d at 689 (second trimester D&E abortions available at only one hospital in Missouri); Wolfe v. Stumbo, 519 F.Supp. 22, 23 (WD Ky.1980) (no elective post-first trimester abortion performed in Kentucky hospitals); Margaret S. v. Edwards, 488 F.Supp. 181, 192 (ED La.1980) (no hospitals in Louisiana perform abortions after first trimester).

[22]

The death-to-case ratio for all second trimester abortions in this country fell from 14.4 deaths per 100,000 abortions in 1972 to 7.6 per 100,000 in 1977. See Tyler, Cates, Schulz, Selik, & Smith, Second trimester Induced Abortion in the United States, published in Second trimester Abortion 17-20.

[23]

At the time Roe was decided, the D&E procedure was used only to perform first trimester abortions.

[24]

Instillation procedures, the primary means of performing a second trimester abortion before the development of D&E, generally cannot be performed until approximately the 16th week of pregnancy because, until that time, the amniotic sac is too small. See Grimes & Cates, Dilatation and Evacuation, published in Second trimester Abortion 121.

[25]

See also Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, supra, at 690, n. 6 (discussing testimony by Dr. Willard Cates, Chief of Federal Abortion Surveillance for the National Centers for Disease Control, that D&E second trimester abortions are as safely performed outside of hospitals up to the 16th week); APHA Recommended Guide 654 (outpatient D&E is safer than all in-hospital non-D&E abortion procedures during the second trimester).

At trial, Akron relied largely on the former position of the various medical organizations concerning hospitalization during the second trimester. See 651 F.2d at 1209. The revised position of the ACOG did not occur until after trial.

Akron also argues that the safety of nonhospital D&E abortions depends on adherence to minimum standards such as those adopted by ACOG for free-standing surgical facilities, see ACOG Standards 51-62, and that there is no evidence that plaintiffs' clinics operate in this manner. But the issue in this litigation is not whether these clinics would meet such standards if they were prescribed by the city. Rather, Akron has gone much further by banning all second trimester abortions in all clinics, a regulation that does not reasonably further the city's interest in promoting health. We continue to hold, as we did in Doe v. Bolton, that a State may, from and after the end of the first trimester, adopt standards for licensing all facilities where abortions may be performed so long as those standards are legitimately related to the objective the State seeks to accomplish.

410 U.S. at 194-195. This includes standards designed to correct any deficiencies that Akron reasonably believes exist in the clinics' present operation.

The city thus implies that its hospital requirement may be sustained because it is reasonable as applied to later D&E abortions or to all second trimester instillation abortions. We do not hold today that a State in no circumstances may require that some abortions be performed in a full-service hospital. Abortions performed by D&E are much safer, up to a point in the development of the fetus, than those performed by instillation methods. See Cates & Grimes, Morbidity and Mortality, published in Second trimester Abortion 166-169. The evidence before us as to the need for hospitalization concerns only the D&E method performed in the early weeks of the second trimester. See 651 F. 2d at 1208-1210.

In the United States during 1978, 82.1% of all abortions from 13-15 weeks and 24.6% of all abortions from 16-20 weeks were performed by the D&E method. See Department of Health and Human Services, Centers for Disease Control, Abortion Surveillance: Annual Summary 1978, Table 14, p. 43 (1980).

The Court of Appeals upheld § 1870.05(A)'s notification requirement. See 651 F.2d at 1206. The validity of this ruling has not been challenged in this Court.

The Court's primary holding in Matheson was that the pregnant minor who questioned Utah's abortion consent requirement on the ground that it impermissibly applied to mature or emancipated minors lacked standing to raise that argument, since she had not alleged that she or any member of her class was mature or emancipated. 450 U.S. at 406. No such standing problem exists here, however, as the physician plaintiff, who is subject to potential criminal liability for failure to comply with the requirements of § 1870.05(B), has standing to raise the claims of his minor patients. See Danforth, 428 U.S. at 62; Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. at 188-189; Bellotti II, 443 U.S. at 627, n. 5 (plurality opinion).

The Ohio Juvenile Court has jurisdiction over any child "alleged to be a juvenile traffic offender, delinquent, unruly, abused, neglected, or dependent." Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2151.23 (Supp.1982). The only category that arguably could encompass a pregnant minor desiring an abortion would be the "neglected" child category. A neglected child is defined as one

[w]hose parents, guardian or custodian neglects or refuses to provide him with proper or necessary subsistence, education, medical or surgical care, or other care necessary for his health, morals, or wellbeing.

§ 2151.03. Even assuming that the Ohio courts would construe these provisions as permitting a minor to obtain judicial approval for the "proper or necessary . . . medical or surgical care" of an abortion, where her parents had refused to provide that care, the statute makes no provision for a mature or emancipated minor completely to avoid hostile parental involvement by demonstrating to the satisfaction of the court that she is capable of exercising her constitutional right to choose an abortion. On the contrary, the statute requires that the minor's parents be notified once a petition has been filed, § 2151.28, a requirement that, in the case of a mature minor seeking an abortion, would be unconstitutional. See H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. at 420 (POWELL, J., concurring); id. at 428, n. 3 (MARSHALL, J., dissenting).

In particular, we have emphasized that a State's interest in protecting immature minors and in promoting family integrity gives it a special interest in ensuring that the abortion

A State is not always foreclosed from asserting an interest in whether pregnancies end in abortion or childbirth. In Maier v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464]432 U.S. 464 (1977), and 432 U.S. 464 (1977), and Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297 (1980), we upheld governmental spending statutes that reimbursed indigent women for childbirth, but not abortion. This legislation to further an interest in preferring childbirth over abortion was permissible, however, only because it did not add any "restriction on access to abortions that was not already there." Maier, supra, at 474.

This description must include, but not be limited to, appearance, mobility, tactile sensitivity, including pain, perception or response, brain and heart function, the presence of internal organs and the presence of external members.

The District Court found that "there was much evidence that it is impossible to determine many of [these] items, . . . such as the 'unborn child's' sensitivity to pain." 479 F.Supp. at 1203.

The District Court found that there was much evidence that, rather than being "a major surgical procedure," as the physician is required to state . . . , an abortion generally is considered a "minor surgical procedure."

Ibid.

Section 1870.06(B)(5) requires the physician to state

[t]hat abortion is a major surgical procedure which can result in serious complications, including hemorrhage, perforated uterus, infection, menstrual disturbances, sterility and miscarriage and prematurity in subsequent pregnancies; and that abortion may leave essentially unaffected or may worsen any existing psychological problems she may have and can result in severe emotional disturbances.

Akron has made little effort to defend the constitutionality of § 1870.06(B)(3), (4), and (5), but argues that the remaining four subsections of the provision are valid and severable. These four subsections require that the patient be informed by the attending physician of the fact that she is pregnant, § 1870.06(B)(1), the gestational age of the fetus, § 1807.06(B)(2), the availability of information on birth control and adoption, § 1870.06(B)(6), and the availability of assistance during pregnancy and after childbirth, § 1870.06(B)(7). This information, to the extent it is accurate, certainly is not objectionable, and probably is routinely made available to the patient. We are not persuaded, however, to sever these provisions from the remainder of § 1870.06(B). They require that all of the information be given orally by the attending physician when much, if not all of it, could be given by a qualified person assisting the physician. See infra at 448-449.

We do not suggest that appropriate counseling consists simply of a recital of pertinent medical facts. On the contrary, it is clear that the needs of patients for information and an opportunity to discuss the abortion decision will vary considerably. It is not disputed that individual counseling should be available for those persons who desire or need it. See, e.g., National Abortion Federation Standards 1 (1981) (hereinafter NAF Standards); Planned Parenthood of Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Inc., Guidelines for Operation, Maintenance, and Evaluation of First Trimester Outpatient Abortion Facilities 5 (1980). Such an opportunity may be especially important for minors alienated or separated from their parents. See APHA Recommended Guide 654. Thus, for most patients, mere provision of a printed statement of relevant information is not counseling.

[39]

This Court's consistent recognition of the critical role of the physician in the abortion procedure has been based on the model of the competent, conscientious, and ethical physician. See Doe, 410 U.S. at 196-197. We have no occasion in this case to consider conduct by physicians that may depart from this model. Cf. Danforth, 428 U.S. at 91-92. n. 2 (Stewart, J., concurring).

[40]

Cf. ACOG Standards 54 ("If counseling has been provided elsewhere, the physician performing the abortion should verify that the counseling has taken place").

[41]

The importance of well-trained and competent counselors is not in dispute. See, e.g., APHA Recommended Guide 654 ("Abortion counselors may be highly skilled physicians as well as trained, sympathetic individuals working under appropriate supervision"); NAF Standards 2 (counselors must be trained initially at least in the following subjects: "sexual and reproductive health; abortion technology; contraceptive technology; short-term counseling skills; community resources and referrals; informed consent; agency policies and practices").

This provision does not apply if the physician certifies in writing that there is an emergency need for an abortion to be performed or induced such that continuation of the pregnancy poses an immediate threat and grave risk to the life or physical health of the pregnant woman.

The ACOG recommends that a clinic allow "sufficient time for reflection prior to making an informed decision." ACOG Standards 54. In contrast to § 1870.07's mandatory waiting period, this standard recognizes that the time needed for consideration of the decision varies depending on the particular situation of the patient and how much prior counseling she has received.

[44]

In Fitzpatrick, the District Court accepted Pennsylvania's contention that its statute governing the "humane" disposal of fetal remains was designed only to prevent such "mindless dumping." That decision is distinguishable because the statute did not impose criminal liability, but merely provided for the promulgation of regulations to implement the disposal requirement. See 401 F.Supp. at 572-573.

We are not persuaded by Akron's argument that the word "humane" should be severed from the statute. The uncertain meaning of the phrase "humane and sanitary" leaves doubt as to whether the city would have enacted § 1870.16 with the word "sanitary" alone. Akron remains free, of course, to enact more carefully drawn regulations that further its legitimate interest in proper disposal of fetal remains.

O'CONNOR, J., Dissenting Opinion

CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

No. 81-746

Argued: November 30, 1982

Decided: June 15, 1983 [*]

JUSTICE O'CONNOR, with whom JUSTICE WHITE and JUSTICE REHNQUIST join, dissenting.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), the Court held that the right of privacy . . . founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy (Id. at 153).

The parties in these cases have not asked the Court to reexamine the validity of that holding, and the court below did not address it. Accordingly, the Court does not reexamine its previous holding. Nonetheless, it is apparent from the Court's opinion that neither sound constitutional theory nor our need to decide cases based on the application of neutral principles can accommodate an analytical framework that varies according to the "stages" of pregnancy, where those stages, and their concomitant standards of review, differ according to the level of medical technology available when a particular challenge to state regulation occurs. The Court's analysis of the Akron regulations is inconsistent both with the methods of analysis employed in previous cases dealing with abortion, and with the Court's approach to fundamental rights in other areas.

Our recent cases indicate that a regulation imposed on "a lawful abortion 'is not unconstitutional unless it unduly burdens the right to seek an abortion.'" Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 473 (1977) (quoting Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 147 (1977) (Bellotti I)). See also Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 314 (1980). In my view, this "unduly burdensome" standard should be applied to the challenged regulations throughout the entire pregnancy without reference to the particular "stage" of pregnancy involved. If the particular regulation does not "unduly burde[n]" the fundamental right, Maher, supra, at 473, then our evaluation of that regulation is limited to our determination that the regulation rationally relates to a legitimate state purpose. Irrespective of what we may believe is wise or prudent policy in this difficult area, the Constitution does not constitute us as "Platonic Guardians," nor does it vest in this Court the authority to strike down laws because they do not meet our standards of desirable social policy, "wisdom," or "common sense" (Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 242 (1982) (BURGER, C.J., dissenting)).

I

The trimester or "three-stage" approach adopted by the Court in Roe,^[1] and, in a modified form, employed by the Court to analyze the regulations in these cases, cannot be supported as a legitimate or useful framework for accommodating the woman's right and the State's interests. The decision of the Court today graphically illustrates why the trimester approach is a completely unworkable method of accommodating the conflicting personal rights and compelling state interests that are involved in the abortion context.

As the Court indicates today, the State's compelling interest in maternal health changes as medical technology changes, and any health regulation must not "depart from accepted medical practice." Ante at 431.^[2] In applying this standard, the Court holds that "the safety of second trimester abortions has increased dramatically" since 1973, when Roe was decided. Ante at 435-436 (footnote omitted). Although a regulation such as one requiring that all second trimester abortions be performed in hospitals "had strong support" in 1973 "as a reasonable health regulation," ante at 435, this regulation can no longer stand because, according to the Court's diligent research into medical and scientific literature, the dilation and evacuation (D&E) procedure, used in 1973 only for first trimester abortions, "is now widely and successfully used for second trimester abortions." Ante at 436 (footnote omitted). Further, the medical literature relied on by the Court indicates that the D&E procedure may be performed in an appropriate nonhospital setting for "at least . . . the early weeks of the second trimester. . . ." Ante at 437. The Court then chooses the period of 16 weeks of gestation as that point at which D&E procedures may be performed safely in a nonhospital setting, and thereby invalidates the Akron hospitalization regulation.

It is not difficult to see that, despite the Court's purported adherence to the trimester approach adopted in Roe, the lines drawn in that decision have now been "blurred" because of what the Court accepts as technological advancement in the safety of abortion procedure. The State may no longer rely on a "bright line" that separates permissible from impermissible regulation, and it is no longer free to consider the second trimester as a unit and weigh the risks posed by all abortion procedures throughout that trimester.^[3] Rather, the State must continuously and conscientiously study contemporary medical and scientific literature in order to determine whether the effect of a particular regulation is to "depart from accepted medical practice" insofar as particular procedures and particular periods within the trimester are concerned. Assuming that legislative bodies are able to engage in this exacting task,^[4] it is difficult to believe that our Constitution requires that they do it as a prelude to protecting the health of their citizens. It is even more difficult to believe that this Court, without the resources available to those bodies entrusted with making legislative choices, believes itself competent to make these inquiries and to revise these standards every time the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) or similar group revises its views about what is and what is not appropriate medical procedure in this area.

its views about what is and what is not appropriate medical procedure in this area. Indeed, the ACOG Standards on which the Court relies were changed in 1982, after trial in the present cases. Before ACOG changed its Standards in 1982, it recommended that all mid-trimester abortions be performed in a hospital. See 651 F.2d 1198, 1209 (CA6 1981). As today's decision indicates, medical technology is changing, and this change will necessitate our continued functioning as the Nation's ex officio medical board, with powers to approve or disapprove medical and operative practices and standards throughout the United States (Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 99 (1976) (WHITE, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part)).

Just as improvements in medical technology inevitably will move forward the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health, different technological improvements will move backward the point of viability at which the State may proscribe abortions except when necessary to preserve the life and health of the mother.

In 1973, viability before 28 weeks was considered unusual. The 14th edition of L. Hellman & J. Pritchard, Williams Obstetrics (1971), on which the Court relied in Roe for its understanding of viability, stated, at 493, that "[a]ttainment of a [fetal] weight of 1,000 g [or a fetal age of approximately 28 weeks' gestation] is . . . widely used as the criterion of viability." However, recent studies have demonstrated increasingly earlier fetal viability.[5] It is certainly reasonable to believe that fetal viability in the first trimester of pregnancy may be possible in the not too distant future. Indeed, the Court has explicitly acknowledged that Roe left the point of viability "flexible for anticipated advancements in medical skill." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387 (1979).

[W]e recognized in Roe that viability was a matter of medical judgment, skill, and technical ability, and we preserved the flexibility of the term (Danforth, supra, at 64).

The Roe framework, then, is clearly on a collision course with itself. As the medical risks of various abortion procedures decrease, the point at which the State may regulate for reasons of maternal health is moved further forward to actual childbirth. As medical science becomes better able to provide for the separate existence of the fetus, the point of viability is moved further back toward conception. Moreover, it is clear that the trimester approach violates the fundamental aspiration of judicial decisionmaking through the application of neutral principles "sufficiently absolute to give them roots throughout the community and continuity over significant periods of time. . . ." A. Cox, The Role of the Supreme Court in American Government 114 (1976). The Roe framework is inherently tied to the state of medical technology that exists whenever particular litigation ensues. Although legislatures are better suited to make the necessary factual judgments in this area, the Court's framework forces legislatures, as a matter of constitutional law, to speculate about what constitutes "accepted medical practice" at any given time. Without the necessary expertise or ability, courts must then pretend to act as science review boards and examine those legislative judgments.

The Court adheres to the Roe framework because the doctrine of stare decisis "demands respect in a society governed by the rule of law." Ante at 420. Although respect for stare decisis cannot be challenged, "this Court's considered practice [is] not to apply stare decisis as rigidly in constitutional as in nonconstitutional cases." Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 543 (1962). Although we must be mindful of the desirability of continuity of decision in constitutional questions . . . when convinced of former error, this Court has never felt constrained to follow precedent. In constitutional questions, where correction depends upon amendment, and not upon legislative action this Court throughout its history has freely exercised its power to reexamine the basis of its constitutional decisions (Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649, 665 (1944) (footnote omitted)).

Even assuming that there is a fundamental right to terminate pregnancy in some situations, there is no justification in law or logic for the trimester framework adopted in Roe and employed by the Court today on the basis of stare decisis. For the reasons stated above, that framework is clearly an unworkable means of balancing the fundamental right and the compelling state interests that are indisputably implicated.

II

The Court in Roe correctly realized that the State has important interests "in the areas of health and medical standards" and that [t]he State has a legitimate interest in seeing to it that abortion, like any other medical procedure, is performed under circumstances that insure maximum safety for the patient (410 U.S. at 149-150).

The Court also recognized that the State has "another important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life." Id. at 162 (emphasis in original). I agree completely that the State has these interests, but, in my view, the point at which these interests become compelling does not depend on the trimester of pregnancy. Rather, these interests are present throughout pregnancy.

This Court has never failed to recognize that "a State may properly assert important interests in safeguarding health [and] in maintaining medical standards." Id. at 154. It cannot be doubted that, as long as a state statute is within the bounds of reason and [does not] assum[e] the character of a merely arbitrary fiat . . . , [then] [t]he State . . . must decide upon measures that are needful for the protection of its people. . . . (Purity Extract and Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U.S. 192, 204-205 (1912)).

"There is nothing in the United States Constitution which limits the State's power to require that medical procedures be done safely. . . ." Sendak v. Arnold, 429 U.S. 968, 969 (1976) (WHITE, J., dissenting). "The mode and procedure of medical diagnostic procedures is not the business of judges." Parham v. J. R., 442 U.S. 584, 607-608 (1979). Under the Roe framework, however, the state interest in maternal health cannot become compelling until the onset of the second trimester of pregnancy, because "until the end of the first trimester, mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth." 410 U.S. at 163. Before the second trimester, the decision to perform an abortion "must be left to the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician." Id. at 164.[6]

The fallacy inherent in the Roe framework is apparent: just because the State has a compelling interest in ensuring maternal safety once an abortion may be more dangerous than childbirth, it simply does not follow that the State has no interest before that point that justifies state regulation to ensure that first trimester abortions are performed as safely as possible.[7]

The state interest in potential human life is likewise extant throughout pregnancy. In Roe, the Court held that, although the State had an important and legitimate interest in protecting potential life, that interest could not become compelling until the point at which the fetus was viable. The difficulty with this analysis is clear: potential life is no less potential in the first weeks of pregnancy than it is at viability or afterward. At any stage in pregnancy, there is the potential for human life. Although the Court refused to "resolve the difficult question of when life begins," id. at 159, the Court chose the point of viability -- when the fetus is capable of life independent of its mother -- to permit the complete proscription of abortion. The choice of viability as the point at which the state interest in potential life becomes compelling is no less arbitrary than choosing any point before viability or any point afterward. Accordingly, I believe that the State's interest in protecting potential human life exists throughout the pregnancy.

Although the State possesses compelling interests in the protection of potential human life and in maternal health throughout pregnancy, not every regulation that the State imposes must be measured against the State's compelling interests and examined with strict scrutiny. This Court has acknowledged that the right in Roe v. Wade can be understood only by considering both the woman's interest and the nature of the State's interference with it. Roe did not declare an unqualified "constitutional right to an abortion." . . . Rather, the right protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy (Maher, 432 U.S. at 473-474).

The Court and its individual Justices have repeatedly utilized the "unduly burdensome" standard in abortion cases.[8]

The requirement that state interference "infringe substantially" or "heavily burden" a right before heightened scrutiny is applied is not novel in our fundamental rights before heightened scrutiny is applied is not novel in our fundamental-rights jurisprudence, or restricted to the abortion context. In San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 37-38 (1973), we observed that we apply "strict judicial scrutiny" only when legislation may be said to have "'deprived,' 'infringed,' or 'interfered' with the free exercise of some such fundamental personal right or liberty." If the impact of the regulation does not rise to the level appropriate for our strict scrutiny, then our inquiry is limited to whether the state law bears "some rational relationship to legitimate state purposes." Id. at 40. Even in the First Amendment context, we have required in some circumstances that state laws "infringe substantially" on protected conduct, Gibson v. Florida Legislative Investigation Committee, 372 U.S. 539, 545 (1963), or that there be "a significant encroachment upon personal liberty," Bates v. City of Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516, 524 (1960).

In Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678 (1977), we eschewed the notion that state law had to meet the exacting "compelling state interest" test "whenever it implicates sexual freedom." Id. at 688, n. 5. Rather, we required that, before the "strict scrutiny" standard was employed, it was necessary that the state law "impos[e] a significant burden" on a protected right, id. at 689, or that it burden an individual's right to decide to prevent conception or terminate pregnancy by substantially limiting access to the means of effectuating that decision. . . . (Id. at 688 (emphasis added)).

The Court stressed that "even a burdensome regulation may be validated by a sufficiently compelling state interest." Id. at 686. Finally, Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485 (1965), recognized that a law banning the use of contraceptives by married persons had "a maximum destructive impact" on the marital relationship.

Indeed, the Court today follows this approach. Although the Court does not use the expression "undue burden," the Court recognizes that even a "significant obstacle" can be justified by a "reasonable" regulation. See ante at 434, 435, 438.

The "undue burden" required in the abortion cases represents the required threshold inquiry that must be conducted before this Court can require a State to justify its legislative actions under the exacting "compelling state interest" standard.

[A] test so severe that legislation rarely can meet it should be imposed by courts with deliberate restraint in view of the respect that properly should be accorded legislative judgments (Carey, supra, at 705 (POWELL, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment)).

The "unduly burdensome" standard is particularly appropriate in the abortion context because of the nature and scope of the right that is involved. The privacy right involved in the abortion context "cannot be said to be absolute." Roe, 410 U.S. at 154. "Roe did not declare an unqualified 'constitutional right to an abortion.'" Maher, 432 U.S. at 473.

Rather, the Roe right is intended to protect against state action "drastically limiting the availability and safety of the desired service," id. at 472, against the imposition of an "absolute obstacle" on the abortion decision, Danforth, 428 U.S. at 70-71, n. 11, or against "official interference" and "coercive restraint" imposed on the abortion decision, Harris, 448 U.S. at 328 (WHITE, J., concurring). That a state regulation may "inhibit" abortions to some degree does not require that we find that the regulation is invalid. See H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 413 (1981).

The abortion cases demonstrate that an "undue burden" has been found for the most part in situations involving absolute obstacles or severe limitations on the abortion decision. In Roe, the Court invalidated a Texas statute that criminalized all abortions except those necessary to save the life of the mother. In Danforth, the Court invalidated a state prohibition of abortion by saline amniocentesis because the ban had "the effect of inhibiting . . . the vast majority of abortions after the first 12 weeks." 428 U.S. at 79. The Court today acknowledges that the regulation in Danforth effectively represented "a complete prohibition on abortions in certain circumstances." Ante at 429, n. 11 (emphasis added). In Danforth, the Court also invalidated state regulations requiring parental or spousal consent as a prerequisite to a first trimester abortion because the consent requirements effectively and impermissibly delegated a "veto power" to parents and spouses during the first trimester of pregnancy. In both Bellotti I, 428 U.S. 132 (1977), and Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979) (Bellotti II), the Court was concerned with effective parental veto over the abortion decision.[9]

In determining whether the State imposes an "undue burden," we must keep in mind that, when we are concerned with extremely sensitive issues, such as the one involved here, the appropriate forum for their resolution in a democracy is the legislature. We should not forget that "legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270 (1904) (Holmes, J.) (Maier, 432 U.S. at 479-480 (footnote omitted)).

This does not mean that, in determining whether a regulation imposes an "undue burden" on the Roe right, we defer to the judgments made by state legislatures.

The point is, rather, that, when we face a complex problem with many hard questions and few easy answers, we do well to pay careful attention to how the other branches of Government have addressed the same problem (Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. 94, 103 (1973)).[10]

We must always be mindful that

[t]he Constitution does not compel a state to fine-tune its statutes so as to encourage or facilitate abortions. To the contrary, state action "encouraging childbirth except in the most urgent circumstances" is "rationally related to the legitimate governmental objective of protecting potential life." Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. at 325.

Accord, Maher v. Roe, supra, at 473-474 (H. L. v. Matheson, supra, at 413 (footnote omitted)).

Section 1870.03 of the Akron ordinance requires that second trimester abortions be performed in hospitals. The Court holds that this requirement imposes a "significant obstacle" in the form of increased costs and decreased availability of abortions, ante at 434-435, 435, and the Court rejects the argument offered by the State that the requirement is a reasonable health regulation under Roe, 410 U.S. at 163. See ante at 435-436.

For the reasons stated above, I find no justification for the trimester approach used by the Court to analyze this restriction. I would apply the "unduly burdensome" test, and find that the hospitalization requirement does not impose an undue burden on that decision.

The Court's reliance on increased abortion costs and decreased availability is misplaced. As the city of Akron points out, there is no evidence in this case to show that the two Akron hospitals that performed second trimester abortions denied an abortion to any woman, or that they would not permit abortion by the D&E procedure. See Reply Brief for Petitioner in No. 81-746, p. 3. In addition, there was no evidence presented that other hospitals in nearby areas did not provide second trimester abortions. Further, almost any state regulation, including the licensing requirements that the Court would allow, see ante at 437-438, n. 26, inevitably and necessarily entails increased costs for any abortion. In Simopoulos v. Virginia, post, p. 506, the Court upholds the State's stringent licensing requirements that will clearly involve greater cost because the State's licensing scheme "is not an unreasonable means of furthering the State's compelling interest in" preserving maternal health. Post at 519. Although the Court acknowledges this indisputably correct notion in Simopoulos, it inexplicably refuses to apply it in this case. A health regulation, such as the hospitalization requirement, simply does not rise to the level of "official interference" with the abortion decision. See Harris, supra, at 328 (WHITE, J., concurring).

Health-related factors that may legitimately be considered by the State go well beyond what various medical organizations have to say about the physical safety of a particular procedure. Indeed, "all factors -- physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age -- [are] relevant to the wellbeing of the patient." Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973). The ACOG Standards, upon which the Court relies, state that [r]egardless of advances in abortion technology, midtrimester terminations will likely remain more hazardous, expensive, and emotionally disturbing for a woman than early abortions (American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Technical Bulletin No. 56: Methods of Midtrimester Abortion 4 (Dec. 1979)).

The hospitalization requirement does not impose an undue burden, and it is not necessary to apply an exacting standard of review. Further, the regulation has a "rational relation" to a valid state objective of ensuring the health and welfare of its citizens. See Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 491 (1955).[11]

Section 1870.05(B)(2) of the Akron ordinance provides that no physician shall perform an abortion on a minor under 15 years of age unless the minor gives written consent, and the physician first obtains the informed written consent of a parent or guardian, or unless the minor first obtains "an order from a court having jurisdiction over her that the abortion be performed or induced." Despite the fact that this regulation has yet to be construed in the state courts, the Court holds that the regulation is unconstitutional because it is not "reasonably susceptible of being construed to create an 'opportunity for case-by-case evaluations of the maturity of pregnant minors.'" Ante at 441 (quoting Bellotti II, 443 U.S. at 643-644, n. 23 (plurality opinion)). I believe that the Court should have abstained from declaring the ordinance unconstitutional.

In Bellotti I, the Court abstained from deciding whether a state parental consent provision was unconstitutional as applied to mature minors. The Court recognized and respected the well-settled rule that abstention is proper where an unconstrued state statute is susceptible of a construction by the state judiciary "which might avoid in whole or in part the necessity for federal constitutional adjudication, or at least materially change the nature of the problem" (428 U.S. at 147 (quoting Harrison v. NAACP, 360 U.S. 167, 177 (1959))).

While acknowledging the force of the abstention doctrine, see ante at 440-441, the Court nevertheless declines to apply it. Instead, it speculates that a state juvenile court might inquire into a minor's maturity and ability to decide to have an abortion in deciding whether the minor is being provided "'surgical care . . . necessary for his health, morals, or wellbeing,'" ante at 441, n. 31 (quoting Ohio Rev.Code Ann. 2151.03 (1976)). The Court ultimately rejects this possible interpretation of state law, however, because filing a petition in juvenile court requires parental notification, an unconstitutional condition insofar as mature minors are concerned.

Assuming, arguendo, that the Court is correct in holding that a parental notification requirement would be unconstitutional as applied to mature minors,[12] I see no reason to assume that the Akron ordinance and the State Juvenile Court statute compel state judges to notify the parents of a mature minor if such notification was contrary to the minor's best interests. Further, there is no reason to believe that the state courts would construe the consent requirement to impose any type of parental or judicial veto on the abortion decisions of mature minors. In light of the Court's complete lack of knowledge about how the Akron ordinance will operate, and how the Akron ordinance and the State Juvenile Court statute interact, our "'scrupulous regard for the rightful independence of unnecessary interference by the federal courts with proper and validly administered state concerns, a course so essential to the balanced working of our federal system (Harrison v. NAACP, supra, at 176 (quoting Matthews v. Rodgers, 284 U.S. 521, 525 (1932)).

C

The Court invalidates the informed consent provisions of § 1879.06(B) and § 1879.06(C) of the Akron ordinance.[13] Although it finds that subsections (1), (2), (6), and (7) of § 1879.06(B) are "certainly . . . not objectionable," ante at 445-446, n. 37, it refuses to sever those provisions from subsections (3), (4), and (5) because the city requires that the "acceptable" information be provided by the attending physician when "much, if not all, of it could be given by a qualified person assisting the physician," ibid. Despite the fact that the Court finds that § 1879.06(C) "properly leaves the precise nature and amount of . . . disclosure to the physician's discretion and 'medical judgment,'" ante at 447, the Court also finds § 1879.06(C) unconstitutional because it requires that the disclosure be made by the attending physician, rather than by other "qualified persons" who work at abortion clinics.

We have approved informed consent provisions in the past even though the physician was required to deliver certain information to the patient. In Danforth, the Court upheld a state informed consent requirement because

[t]he decision to abort, indeed, is an important, and often a stressful one, and it is desirable and imperative that it be made with full knowledge of its nature and consequences (428 U.S. at 67).[14]

In H. L. v. Matheson, the Court noted that the state statute in the case required that the patient be advised at a minimum about available adoption services, about fetal development, and about foreseeable complications and risks of an abortion. See Utah Code Ann. 76-7-305 (1978). In Planned Parenthood of Central Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 65-67 (1976), we rejected a constitutional attack on written consent provisions (450 U.S. at 400-401, n. 1).

Indeed, we have held that an informed consent provision does not "unduly burde[n] the right to seek an abortion." Bellotti I, 428 U.S. at 147.[15]

The validity of subsections (3), (4), and (5) is not before the Court, because it appears that the city of Akron conceded their unconstitutionality before the court below. See Brief for City of Akron in No. 79-3757 (CA6), p. 35; Reply Brief for City of Akron in No. 79-3757 (CA6), pp. 5-9. In my view, the remaining subsections of § 1879.06(B) are separable from the subsections conceded to be unconstitutional. Section 1870.19 contains a separability clause which creates a "presumption of divisibility," and places "the burden . . . on the litigant who would escape its operation." Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 335 (1936) (opinion of Cardozo, J.). Akron Center has failed to show that severance of subsections (3), (4), and (5) would "create a program quite different from the one the legislature actually adopted." Sloan v. Lemon, 413 U.S. 825, 834 (1973).

The remainder of § 1879.06(B), and § 1879.06(C), impose no undue burden or drastic limitation on the abortion decision. The city of Akron is merely attempting to ensure that the decision to abort is made in light of that knowledge that the city deems relevant to informed choice. As such, these regulations do not impermissibly affect any privacy right under the Fourteenth Amendment.[16]

Section 1870.07 of the Akron ordinance requires a 24-hour waiting period between the signing of a consent form and the actual performance of the abortion, except in cases of emergency. See § 1879.12. The court below invalidated this requirement because it affected abortion decisions during the first trimester of pregnancy. The Court affirms the decision below, not on the ground that it affects early abortions, but because "Akron has failed to demonstrate that any legitimate state interest is furthered by an arbitrary and inflexible waiting period." Ante at 450. The Court accepts the arguments made by Akron Center that the waiting period increases the costs of obtaining an abortion by requiring the pregnant woman to make two trips to the clinic, and increases the risks of abortion through delay and scheduling difficulties. The decision whether to proceed should be left to the physician's "discretion in the exercise of his medical judgment." Ibid. (quoting Colautti, 439 U.S. at 387).

It is certainly difficult to understand how the Court believes that the physician-patient relationship is able to accommodate any interest that the State has in maternal physical and mental wellbeing in light of the fact that the record in this case shows that the relationship is nonexistent. See 651 F.2d at 1217 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). It is also interesting to note that the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists recommends that,

[p]rior to abortion, the woman should have access to special counseling that explores options for the management of an unwanted pregnancy, examines the risks, and allows sufficient time for reflection prior to making an informed decision.

1982 ACOG Standards for Obstetric-Gynecologic Services at 54.

The waiting period does not apply in cases of medical emergency. Therefore, should the physician determine that the waiting period would increase risks significantly, he or she need not require the woman to wait. The Court's concern in this respect is simply misplaced. Although the waiting period may impose an additional cost on the abortion decision, this increased cost does not unduly burden the availability of abortions or impose an absolute obstacle to access to abortions. Further, the State is not required to "fine-tune" its abortion statutes so as to minimize the costs of abortions. H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. at 413.

Assuming, arguendo, that any additional costs are such as to impose an undue burden on the abortion decision, the State's compelling interests in maternal physical and mental health and protection of fetal life clearly justify the waiting period. As we acknowledged in Danforth, 428 U.S. at 67, the decision to abort is "a stressful one," and the waiting period reasonably relates to the State's interest in ensuring that a woman does not make this serious decision in undue haste. The decision also has grave consequences for the fetus, whose life the State has a compelling interest to protect and preserve. "[N]o other [medical] procedure involves the purposeful termination of a potential life." Harris, 448 U.S. at 325. The waiting period is surely a small cost to impose to ensure that the woman's decision is well considered in light of its certain and irreparable consequences on fetal life, and the possible effects on her own.[\[17\]](#)

Finally, § 1870.16 of the Akron ordinance requires that

[a]ny physician who shall perform or induce an abortion upon a pregnant woman shall insure that the remains of the unborn child are disposed of in a humane and sanitary manner.

The Court finds this provision void for vagueness. I disagree.

In Planned Parenthood Assn. v. Fitzpatrick, 401 F.Supp. 554 (ED Pa.1975) (three-judge court), summarily aff'd sub nom. Franklin v. Fitzpatrick, 428 U.S. 901 (1976), the District Court upheld a "humane disposal" provision against a vagueness attack in light of the State's representation that the intent of the Act "is to preclude the mindless dumping of aborted fetuses onto garbage piles." 401 F.Supp. at 573. The District Court held that different concerns would be implicated if the statute were, at some point, determined to require "expensive burial." Ibid. In the present cases, the city of Akron has informed this Court that the intent of the "humane" portion of its statute, as distinguished from the "sanitary" portion, is merely to ensure that fetuses will not be "dump[ed] . . . on garbage piles." Brief for Petitioner in No. 81-746, p. 48. In light of the fact that the city of Akron indicates no intent to require that physicians provide "decent burials" for fetuses, and that "humane" is no more vague than the term "sanitary," the vagueness of which Akron Center does not question, I cannot conclude that the statute is void for vagueness.

Roe recognized that the State possesses important and legitimate interests in protecting maternal health and the potentiality of human life. These "separate and distinct" interests were held to grow "in substantiality as the woman approaches term and, at a point during pregnancy, each becomes 'compelling.'" 410 U.S. at 162-163. The state interest in maternal health was said to become compelling "at approximately the end of the first trimester." Id. at 163. Before that time, "the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left to the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician." Id. at 164. After the end of the first trimester, "a State may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health." Id. at 163. The Court noted that, "in the light of present medical knowledge . . . , mortality in abortion may be less than mortality in normal childbirth" during the first trimester of pregnancy. Ibid.

The state interest in potential human life was held to become compelling at "viability," defined by the Court as that point "at which the fetus . . . [is] potentially able to live outside the mother's womb, albeit with artificial aid." Roe, 410 U.S. at 160 (footnote omitted). Based on the Court's review of the contemporary medical literature, it placed viability at about 28 weeks, but acknowledged that this point may occur as early as 24 weeks. After viability is reached, the State may, according to Roe, proscribe abortion altogether, except when it is necessary to preserve the life and health of the mother. See id. at 163-164. Since Roe, the Court has held that Roe "left the point [of viability] flexible for anticipated advancements in medical skill." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 387 (1979).

The Court has also identified a state interest in protection of the young and "familial integrity" in the abortion context. See, e.g., H. L. v. Matheson, 450 U.S. 398, 411 (1981).

Although the Court purports to retain the trimester approach as "a reasonable legal framework for limiting" state regulatory authority over abortions, ante at 429, n. 11, the Court expressly abandons the Roe view that the relative rates of childbirth and abortion mortality are relevant for determining whether second trimester regulations are reasonably related to maternal health. Instead, the Court decides that a health regulation must not "depart from accepted medical practice" if it is to be upheld. Ante at 431. The State must now "make a reasonable effort to limit the effect of its regulations to the period in the trimester during which its health interest will be furthered." Ante at 434 (emphasis added).

[3]

The Court holds that the summary affirmance in Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services, Inc. v. Bowen, 496 F.Supp. 894 (ND Ind.1980) (three-judge court), aff'd sub nom. Gary-Northwest Indiana Women's Services, Inc. v. Orr, 451 U.S. 934 (1981), is not, as the court below thought, binding precedent on the hospitalization issue. See ante at 433, n. 18. Although the Court reads Gary-Northwest to be decided on the alternative ground that the plaintiffs failed to prove the safety of second trimester abortions, ante at 433, n. 18, the Court simply ignores the fact that the District Court in Gary-Northwest held that "even if the plaintiffs could prove birth more dangerous than early second trimester D&E abortions," that would not matter insofar as the constitutionality of the regulations were concerned. See 496 F.Supp. at 903 (emphasis added).

[4]

Irrespective of the difficulty of the task, legislatures, with their superior factfinding capabilities, are certainly better able to make the necessary judgments than are courts.

One study shows that infants born alive with a gestational age of less than 25 weeks and weight between 500 and 1,249 grams have a 20% chance of survival. See Phillips, Little, Polivy, & Lucey, Neonatal Mortality Risk for the Eighties: The Importance of Birth Weight/Gestational Age Groups, 68 Pediatrics 122 (1981). Another recent comparative study shows that preterm infants with a weight of 1,000 grams or less born in one hospital had a 42% rate of survival. Kopelman, The Smallest Preterm Infants: Reasons for Optimism and New Dilemmas, 132 Am.J.Diseases of Children 461 (1978). An infant weighing 484 grams and having a gestational age of 22 weeks at birth is now thriving in a Los Angeles hospital, and the attending physician has stated that the infant has a "95% chance of survival." Washington Post, Mar. 31, 1983, p. A2, col. 2. The aborted fetus in Simopoulos v. Virginia, post, p. 506, weighed 495 grams and had a gestational age of approximately 22 weeks.

Recent developments promise even greater success in overcoming the various respiratory and immunological neonatal complications that stand in the way of increased fetal viability. See, e.g., Beddis, Collins, Levy, Godfrey, & Silverman, New Technique for Servo-Control of Arterial Oxygen Tension in Preterm Infants, 54 Archives of Disease in Childhood 278 (1979).

There is absolutely no question that in the current era there has been a sustained and progressive improvement in the outlook for survival of small premature infants (Stern, Intensive Care of the Pre-Term Infant, 26 Danish Med.Bull. 144 (1979)).

Interestingly, the Court in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976), upheld a recordkeeping requirement as well as the consent provision even though these requirements were imposed on first trimester abortions and although the State did not impose comparable requirements on most other medical procedures. See id. at 65-67, 79-81. Danforth, then, must be understood as a retreat from the position ostensibly adopted in Roe that the State had no compelling interest in regulation during the first trimester of pregnancy that would justify restrictions imposed on the abortion decision.

[7]

For example, the 1982 ACOG Standards, on which the Court relies so heavily in its analysis, provide that physicians performing first trimester abortions in their offices should provide for prompt emergency treatment or hospitalization in the event of any complications. See ACOG Standards, at 54. ACOG also prescribes that certain equipment be available for office abortions. See id. at 57. I have no doubt that the State has a compelling interest to ensure that these or other requirements are met, and that this legitimate concern would justify state regulation for health reasons even in the first trimester of pregnancy.

[8]

See Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 147 (1976) (Bellotti I) (State may not "impose undue burdens upon a minor capable of giving an informed consent." In Bellotti I, the Court left open the question whether a judicial hearing would unduly burden the Roe right of an adult woman. See 428 U.S. at 147); Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 640 (1979) (Bellotti II) (opinion of POWELL, J.) (State may not "unduly burden the right to seek an abortion"); Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 314 (1980) ("The doctrine of Roe v. Wade, the Court held in Maher, 'protects the woman from unduly burdensome interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy,' [432 U.S.] at 473-474, such as the severe criminal sanctions at issue in Roe v. Wade, supra, or the absolute requirement of spousal consent for an abortion challenged in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52"); Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 446 (1977) (The state interest in protecting potential human life "does not, at least until approximately the third trimester, become sufficiently compelling to justify unduly burdensome state interference . . ."); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 705 (1977) (POWELL, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment) ("In my view, [Roe and Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965),] make clear that the [compelling state interest] standard has been invoked only when the state regulation entirely frustrates or heavily burdens the exercise of constitutional rights in this area. See Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 147 (1976)"). Even though the Court did not explicitly use the "unduly burdensome" standard in evaluating the informed consent requirement in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, supra, the informed consent requirement for first trimester abortions in Danforth was upheld because it did not "unduly burde[n] the right to seek an abortion." Bellotti I, supra, at 147.

[9]

The only case in which the Court invalidated regulations that were not "undue burdens" was Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), which was decided on the same day as Roe. In Doe, the Court invalidated a hospitalization requirement because it covered first trimester abortion. The Court also invalidated a hospital accreditation requirement, a hospital committee approval requirement, and a two-doctor concurrence requirement. The Court clearly based its disapproval of these requirements on the fact that the State did not impose them on any other medical procedure apart from abortion. But the Court subsequent to Doe has expressly rejected the view that differential treatment of abortion requires invalidation of regulations. See Danforth, 428 U.S. at 67, 80-81; Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464, 480 (1977); Harris, 448 U.S. at 325. See also Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, post, p. 476.

[10]

In his amicus curiae brief in support of the city of Akron, the Solicitor General of the United States argues that we should adopt the "unduly burdensome" standard, and, in doing so, we should "accord heavy deference to the legislative judgment" in determining what constitutes an "undue burden." See Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae 10. The "unduly burdensome" standard is appropriate not because it incorporates deference to legislative judgment at the threshold stage of analysis, but rather because of the limited nature of the fundamental right that has been recognized in the abortion cases. Although our cases do require that we "pay careful attention" to the legislative judgment before we invoke strict scrutiny, see e.g., Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. at 103, it is not appropriate to weigh the state interests at the threshold stage.

The Court has never required that state regulation that burdens the abortion decision be "narrowly drawn" to express only the relevant state interest. In Roe, the Court mentioned "narrowly drawn" legislative enactments, 410 U.S. at 155, but the Court never actually adopted this standard in the Roe analysis. In its decision today, the Court fully endorses the Roe requirement that a burdensome health regulation, or as the Court appears to call it, a "significant obstacle," ante at 434, be "reasonably related" to the state compelling interest. See ante at 430-431, 435, 438. The Court recognizes that "[a] State necessarily must have latitude in adopting regulations of general applicability in this sensitive area." Ante at 434. See also Simopoulos v. Virginia, post at 516. Nevertheless, the Court fails to apply the "reasonably related" standard. The hospitalization requirement "reasonably relates" to its compelling interest in protection and preservation of maternal health under any normal understanding of what "reasonably relates" signifies.

The Court concludes that the regulation must fall because "it appears that during a substantial portion of the second trimester the State's regulation 'depart[s] from accepted medical practice.'" Ante at 434. It is difficult to see how the Court concludes that the regulation "depart[s] from accepted medical practice" during "a substantial portion of the second trimester," ibid., in light of the fact that the Court concludes that D&E abortions may be performed safely in an outpatient clinic through 16 weeks, or 4 weeks into the second trimester. Ante at 436-437. Four weeks is hardly a "substantial portion" of the second trimester.

In my view, no decision of this Court has yet held that parental notification in the case of mature minors is unconstitutional. Although the plurality opinion of JUSTICE POWELL in Bellotti II suggested that the state statute in that case was unconstitutional because, inter alia, it failed to provide all minors with an opportunity "to go directly to a court without first consulting or notifying her parents," 443 U.S. at 647, the Court in H. L. v. Matheson held that unemancipated and immature minors had "no constitutional right to notify a court in lieu of notifying their parents." 450 U.S. at 412, n. 22. Furthermore, the Court in H. L. v. Matheson expressly did not decide that a parental notification requirement would be unconstitutional if the State otherwise permitted mature minors to make abortion decisions free of parental or judicial "veto." See id. at 406-407.

Section 1870.06(B) requires that the attending physician orally inform the pregnant woman: (1) that she is pregnant; (2) of the probable number of weeks since conception; (3) that the unborn child is a human being from the moment of conception, and has certain anatomical and physiological characteristics; (4) that the unborn child may be viable and, if so, the physician has a legal responsibility to try to save the child; (5) that abortion is a major surgical procedure that can result in serious physical and psychological complications; (6) that various agencies exist that will provide the pregnant woman with information about birth control; and (7) that various agencies exist that will assist the woman through pregnancy should she decide not to undergo the abortion. Section 1870.06(C) requires the attending physician to inform the woman of risks associated with her particular pregnancy and proposed abortion technique, as well as to furnish information that the physician deems relevant "in his own medical judgment."

[14]

The Court in Danforth did not even view the informed consent requirement as having a "legally significant impact" on first trimester abortions that would trigger the Roe and Doe proscriptions against state interference in the decision to seek a first trimester abortion. See 428 U.S. at 81 (recordkeeping requirements).

[15]

Assuming, arguendo, that the Court now decides that Danforth, Bellotti II, and H. L. v. Matheson were incorrect, and that the informed consent provisions do burden the right to seek an abortion, the Court inexplicably refuses to determine whether this "burden" "reasonably relates" to legitimate state interests. Ante at 430 (quoting Roe, 410 U.S. at 163). Rather, the Court now decides that an informed consent provision must be justified by a "vital state need" before it can be upheld. See ante at 448.

[16]

This is not to say that the informed consent provisions may not violate the First Amendment rights of the physician if the State requires him or her to communicate its ideology. See Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705 (1977). However, it does not appear that Akron Center raised any First Amendment argument in the court below. See Brief for Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., in No. 79-3701 (CA6), pp. 18-23; Reply Brief for Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., in No. 79-3701 (CA6), pp. 26-33.

[17]

On the basis of this analysis of the waiting period requirement, the Court charges that "the dissent would uphold virtually any abortion-inhibiting regulation. . . ." Ante at 421, n. 1. The waiting period requirement is valid because it imposes a small cost when all relevant factors are taken into consideration. This is precisely the reasoning that JUSTICE POWELL employs in upholding the pathology report requirement in Planned Parenthood Assn. of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, post, p. 476 (report requirement imposes a "comparatively small additional cost," post at 489).

Case Against Condoms: Family Values Vs. Safe Sex

A Reflection by His Eminence Alfonso Cardinal Lopez Trujillo
President, Pontifical Council for the Family
December 1, 2003

Introduction

1. The mass media have circulated news that I granted an interview to the BBC, which was broadcasted last October 12, 2003, on the eve of Pope John Paul II's 25th Anniversary in his service as Bishop of Rome. On that occasion, I answered different questions for more than an hour, especially those dealing with the family. But, surprisingly, what was shown from the whole interview on the BBC Panorama's film, Sex & The Holy City, were merely three questions of less than half a minute each, the answers to which were certainly much more complete. The program apparently tried to deliberately and systematically criticize the Catholic Church for supposedly contributing to the death of people by not allowing the use of condoms to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS.

The bishops of England and Wales have rightly complained to the BBC for that film, which, along with another program, was "biased against and hostile to the Catholic Church," and which has "given offense to many Catholics . . . For many decades the BBC has deserved [and] enjoyed a worldwide reputation for fairness and objectivity, especially in its News and Current Affairs. This reputation is increasingly tarnished." [1] Many individuals and groups also manifested their disgust with the said BBC's Panorama program. [2]

In that interview I warned about "safe sex," stating that one cannot truly speak of objective and total protection by using the condom as a prophylactic, [3] when it comes to the transmission not only of HIV/AIDS (Human Immunodeficiency Virus, which causes the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), but also of many other STDs (Sexually Transmitted Diseases). I emphasized that in order to control the pandemic, it is necessary to promote responsible sexual behavior that is inculcated by means of authentic sexual education that respects the dignity of man and woman, and that does not consider others as mere instruments of pleasure and thus objects "to be used." I also said that such responsible sexual behavior takes place only in conjugal love, assuming the responsibilities of marriage as a reciprocal, exclusive and total self-giving of a man and a woman in a community of love and life.

Therefore, my position was absolutely clear against the so-called inordinate sex, against promiscuity that is fueled today by certain permissive political measures and certain means of communication. That is why I reminded the audience that the Church teaches a moral position that is valid for all, both believers and non-believers. I also proposed that the Ministries for Health should require labels for condoms, as they do in the case of cigarettes, stating that the protection condoms provide is not total and that the risks are indeed significant. [4]

In order to stress that the level of protection provided by the condom against HIV/AIDS and STDs is not sufficient, I also referred to a certain permeability suggested by the results of scientific investigations. Such concern also has to be given attention considering that the AIDS virus is 450 times smaller than the sperm cell-in addition to other risks brought about by different factors in the condom's structure and in its actual usage.[5]

The Catholic Church's Criticism of the Condom in AIDS-Prevention Programs

2. The Catholic Church has repeatedly criticized programs promoting condoms as a totally effective and sufficient means of AIDS prevention. The different Bishops' Conferences all over the world have expressed their concern regarding this problem. The Catholic Bishops of South Africa, Botswana and Swaziland categorically "regard the widespread and indiscriminate promotion of condoms as an immoral and misguided weapon in our battle against HIV/AIDS for the following reasons: The use of condoms goes against human dignity. Condoms change the beautiful act of love into a selfish search for pleasure-while rejecting responsibility. Condoms do not guarantee protection against HIV/AIDS. Condoms may even be one of the main reasons for the spread of HIV/AIDS. Apart from the possibility of condoms being faulty or wrongly used, they contribute to the breaking down of self-control and mutual respect."[6]

The Sub-commission for Family and Life of the Spanish Episcopal Conference said that the campaigns that promote the condom in Spain to supposedly stop HIV/AIDS are gravely irresponsible for three reasons: "because they tend to be deceitful, because they hide information, and because they do not contribute towards prevention, but rather to a greater spread of risky behavior, since they imply that the health authorities are giving their approval to behavior and lifestyles that are responsible for the epidemic."[7]

The Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines maintained that while "an encounter with people infected with HIV-AIDS should be a moment of grace-an opportunity for us to be Christ's compassionate presence to them as well as to experience His presence in them," nonetheless, [t]he moral dimension of the problem of HIV-AIDS urges us to take a sharply negative view of the condom-distribution approach to the problem." Besides, "[a]s in contraception, so also in preventing HIV-AIDS infection condom use is not a failsafe approach."[8]

Even earlier, the bishops of the United States of America affirmed in their 1987 statement: ". . . abstinence outside of marriage and fidelity within marriage as well as the avoidance of intravenous drug abuse are the only morally correct and medically sure ways to prevent the spread of AIDS. So-called safe sex practices are at best only partially effective . . . As the National Academy of Sciences has noted in its study of AIDS, 'many have argued that it is more accurate to speak in terms of "safer" sex because the unknowns are still such that it would be irresponsible to certify any particular activity as absolutely safe'."[9]

3. I thought that the Church's position and the reasons behind it were already well-known. I am quite concerned because people, especially the young, are misled when total protection is seemingly offered to them, while in fact there is no such total protection. Aware of the immensity of the pandemic, while at the same time maintaining the different but complimentary levels of what is moral and what is merely hygienic, I wanted to speak out regarding the need not only to contain the continuous expansion of this pandemic, but also the need to prevent condom users from getting an infection that they previously thought was impossible to get, and which until now has had lethal consequences.

There are persons at risk of being contaminated, even though they think that their sexual relations, from the hygienic point of view, are totally safe. How many fall victim to this error? They would have taken a different attitude, at least to a certain extent, had they been given more valid and objective information. Indeed, a great number of sources giving the correct information on condom ineffectiveness are public, but, apparently many are not well publicized. The mere fact that this discussion has led persons to doubt to a certain extent the effectiveness of condoms in preventing infection is already, I think, a timely service. The reader is invited above all to reflect why, despite the invitation to promiscuity made by the "safe sex" campaign and the distribution of an enormous quantity of prophylactics where the pandemic is more widespread, the problem of infection has become even greater.[10]

These are precisely the points I wish to consider in this present reflection, with the aid of information gathered from different sources. I have no reason to doubt the expertise of persons and institutions with internationally renowned competence on these matters. The position of the Church is truly human and responsible: it is a call to fully respect the human person's freedom and dignity. The family suffers, above all in the poor countries. The fact that families and youth are oftentimes misinformed and given false security should not be tolerated any longer. It is clear that if I make this reflection, it is because of the close relationship between family and procreation, and also because matters regarding the family touching on condoms and other contraceptives pertain to our field of work. In describing the tasks of the Pontifical Council for the Family, the Apostolic Constitution Pastor Bonus states that it "strives to ensure that the rights of the family be acknowledged and defended even in the social and political realm. It also supports and coordinates initiatives to protect human life from the first moment of conception and to encourage responsible procreation." [11]

As a Father of the Church said, "We should not be ashamed of the things that God has created." Not only should we not be ashamed of things created by God, we should also defend them, for everything that he has created is good. Human sexuality, conjugal love, responsibility, freedom, bodily health: these are God's gifts to us that we have to treasure.

The Concern of Some Moralists Raised by Studies Indicating that Condoms Might Not Provide Total Protection Against the Transmission of HIV and STDs

4. I mentioned earlier that I thought the position of the Church and the foundations of my assertions were already well-known. On the other hand, it might also be possible that this position is still unknown to many, as manifested in concrete campaigns where scientific aspects are mixed with certain economic interests on the part of condom producers, and with an "ideology" of the powerful against the poor in line with "population control."

A well-known and authoritative moralist, Dionigi Tettamanzi, who is now the Cardinal of Milan, tackled these matters in a voluminous book, Nuova Bioetica Cristiana, published in 2000. He clearly shows why the condom cannot guarantee the so-called "safe sex" when used as a prophylactic. "The Ministry of Health [in Italy], through the National Commission for the fight against AIDS, often supplies the following information to children, youth, and other interested parties: 'The chances of contamination increase with more unprotected intercourse; thus, if you are not sure of your partner, always use a condom' [12] But is the condom truly an effective means to stop contamination? Some critical reflections become necessary.

The first reflection is of a properly hygienic nature. It is said that the condom is to be used as a 'defense' measure, as a 'barrier' so as not to contaminate and be contaminated during sexual intercourse. Now, what is at stake, that is, caring for one's health (and life) and another's, calls for an accurate critical analysis of the real efficacy of this defensive means or barrier.

"There are two types of efficacy that could be considered in particular. First, 'technical' efficacy: since when did the condom 'prevent' the risk of contamination? In scientific circles, it is openly admitted that condoms are in fact not 100% safe. On an average, it is said that there is a 10-15% inefficacy, since the AIDS viruses are much more 'filtrating' [able to pass through] than the sperm. [13]

Therefore, even at a 'technical' level of efficacy, one should question the scientific seriousness and the consequent professional seriousness of the condom campaign. There is a great risk involved: to 'deceive' persons by propagating 'safe sex because one is protected', while in fact it is not safe, or is not safe in the way it might be thought to be. The illusion becomes much more dangerous and serious when there is an even greater duty for persons 'at risk' or who indulge in promiscuous sexual relationships not to spread the infection (both to the partner and, eventually, to present or future children)." [14]

5. Another Italian moralist, Elio Sgreccia, currently a bishop and Vice-President of the Pontifical Academy for Life, wrote that campaigns based only on the free distribution of condoms, "can become not only fallacious, but counterproductive and encourage . . . the abuse of sexuality; at any rate, they are devoid of truly human content and do not contribute to holistically responsible behavior." [15] Many other moralists and experts also tackled these questions, including Lino Ciccone and Jacques Suaudeau, some of whom will also be cited in this paper.

Cardinal Tettamanzi further notes along this line that it is totally unacceptable for the State to organize and promote "safe sex" campaigns, because of the lack of efficiency of condoms as a "barrier" against infection, and especially because of the danger of an irresponsible use of sexuality. For instance, when a soldier receives a condom, he knows that he should avoid contamination; but at the same time he is being induced to believe that any form of sex is licit. To these considerations one must add the risks to an individual's freedom of choice: when the "safe sex" campaign is undertaken in such a way that it exerts undue pressure on youth and on the public in general, together with an illusion of the condom's efficiency, it becomes tantamount to an imposition. [16] There is a paradox here in that the State (which claims to be neutral) is allowed to actively propagate and spread contraceptives, while it would be accused of being denominational if it undertook an educational campaign on the value (including hygienic) of marital fidelity! [17]

The Same Concern, from Non-Ecclesiastical Circles

6. The concern that condoms do not provide total protection against AIDS and STDs is not at all new, nor limited to Church circles. Dr. Helen Singer Kaplan, who founded the Human Sexuality Program at the New York Weill Cornell Medical Center, Cornell University, wrote in her book, The Real Truth about Women and AIDS: "Counting on condoms is flirting with death" [18]. A Dutch medical journal also stated that "Practice shows that there is a great need for a method that prevents both HIV as well as pregnancy. Sad to say, the people still have not become aware that this method cannot be the condom." [19] In the 1980s and the 1990s, questions on the real protection provided by condoms arose from electron microscopic studies on the latex material, a concern related to the fact that the AIDS virus is about 25 times smaller than the sperm cell's head, 450 times smaller than the sperm cell's length, and 60 times smaller than the syphilis bacterium. [20]

In 1987, the Los Angeles Times published an article entitled "Condom Industry Seeking Limits on U.S. Study." [21] It stated that "[t]he condom industry has launched an intensive campaign to weaken, delay or possibly shut down a federally funded Los Angeles study of the effectiveness of condoms in preventing transmission of the AIDS virus . . . The research has taken on a new element of urgency in the wake of a series of questions raised about the ability of condoms to reliably prevent the spread of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)." [22] Two years later, the same reporter wrote in an article, "4 Popular Condoms Leak AIDS Virus in Clinical Tests," that "Four of the nation's most popular condom brands permitted the AIDS virus to escape in laboratory tests conducted for UCLA, prompting researchers to warn users they should not assume that all condoms work equally well in preventing spread of the disease . . . Overall, among the thousands of condoms tested, the study found that 0.66% of condoms--more than one of every 200--failed, either allowing water or air to escape, breaking in tensile strength tests or leaking the AIDS virus." [23]

As a summary of these and other studies, Dr. John Wilks stated the following in his Letter to the Editor in the Nov 17, 2003, issue of The Australian: "In 1989, the Los Angeles Times reported that four of the nation's most popular condom brands permitted the AIDS virus to escape in laboratory tests conducted for UCLA, . . . Carey and associates (Sexually Transmitted Diseases, 1992) reported that HIV-sized particles leaked through 29 of 89 commercially purchased latex condoms in simulated intercourse . . . Voeller ('AIDS Research and Human Retroviruses,' 1994) reported that leakage of virus-sized particles occurred in different brands of condoms of different ages at a rate of 0.9 per cent to 22.8 per cent in the laboratory setting . . . Lytle and others ('Sexually Transmitted Diseases,' 1997) reported that under test conditions, 2.6 per cent of latex condoms allowed some virus penetration . . ." In still another test, only 30% of membrane samples from "Trojan" brand condoms were found to be absolutely without defects. [24]

On the other hand, a British newspaper reported that "the organisation [World Health Organisation] says 'consistent and correct' condom use reduces the risk of HIV infection by 90%. There may be breakage or slippage of condoms . . ." [25] The International Planned Parenthood Federation even gave a higher failure rate, stating that "use of condoms reduces by approximately 70% the total risk between unprotected sex and complete sexual abstinence. This estimate is consistent with findings from most epidemiological studies." [26]

It should be stated that the remaining 10-30% from these figures, which represent the failure range, is relatively high when one deals with a potentially mortal disease such as failure rate, is relatively high when one deals with a potentially mortal disease such as AIDS, especially if there is an alternative that provides absolute protection against the sexual transmission of the same: namely, abstinence before marriage, and fidelity to one's spouse.

Given that AIDS is a serious threat, any inadequate information based on false security offered by condoms used as prophylactics would be a grave irresponsibility. Hence, a continuous effort to present the correct information clearly and comprehensively, avoiding all ambiguities and confusion, is certainly called for—not only for the benefit of the public in general, but also in order to help the sincere and countless efforts to prevent the pandemic of AIDS and the other sexually transmitted diseases.

The Workshop Summary: Scientific Evidence on Condom Effectiveness for Sexually Transmitted Disease (STD) Prevention

7. The above cited medical literature and many others have opened several questions regarding condom effectiveness in preventing sexually transmitted diseases. In fact, on June 12-13, 2000, four US government agencies responsible for condom research, condom regulation, condom use recommendations, and HIV/AIDS and STD prevention programs co-sponsored a Workshop precisely "to evaluate the published evidence establishing the effectiveness of latex male condoms in preventing HIV/AIDS and other STDs." The four agencies were the US Agency for International Development (USAID), Food and Drug Administration (FDA), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), and the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The Workshop Summary: Scientific Evidence on Condom Effectiveness for Sexually Transmitted Disease (STD) Prevention was later prepared by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the National Institutes of Health, and the Department of Health and Human Services, and was published on July 20, 2001.[27]

The Workshop's focus was on "the latex male condom for the prevention of HIV/AIDS and STDs during penile-vaginal intercourse." "Representatives of the sponsoring agencies and outside experts were asked to work as a panel," including experts on "STDs, genitourinary tract anatomy, contraception, condoms, behavioral science, epidemiology, medicine and public health." "The workshop examined only peer-reviewed literature [a total of 138 papers] because these studies have been subjected to independent scientific evaluation prior to publication." An additional 42 other papers are cited in the Workshop Summary.[28]

The said Workshop Summary explains that available scientific evidence indicated that the condom reduces the risk of AIDS/HIV by 85%.[29] There is then a 15% risk that remains.

The Workshop also studied in particular the transmission of other genital infections, and the usual conclusion is that studies demonstrated either no or some protection through condom use, or that there is insufficient data to confirm risk reduction. The diseases studied individually are the following: Gonorrhea (caused by Neisseria gonorrhoeae), Chlamydial infection (Chlamydia trachomatis), Trichomoniasis (Trichomonas vaginalis), Genital Herpes (Herpes Simplex Virus or HSV), Chancroid (Haemophilus ducreyi) and Syphilis (Treponema pallidum).[30] The Human Papillomavirus (HPV) is given some more attention, with the conclusion stating clearly that "[t]here was no evidence that condom use reduced the risk of HPV infection . . ."[31]. HPV is a very important STD associated with cervical cancer, which in the US kills many more women than the HIV. [32]

There is no such thing then as a 100% protection from HIV/AIDS or other STDs through condom use today. This data should not remain unnoticed, since many users, including youth, think that the condom provides total protection.

In connection with these findings presented in the Workshop Summary, the Catholic Family and Human Rights Institute made a report, "Physicians Groups Charge US Government with Condom Cover-Up," stating that "[g]roups representing over 10,000 doctors have accused the US Government's Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) of covering up the government's own research that shows that condoms do not protect individuals from most sexually transmitted diseases." According to the report, these groups claim that, ". . .the CDC has systematically hidden and misrepresented vital medical information regarding the ineffectiveness of condoms to prevent the transmission of STDs. The CDC's refusal to acknowledge clinical research has contributed to the massive STD epidemic." [33]

8. In an article subsequent to the Workshop Summary, [34] four of the Workshop panel members, along with other experts, further analyse points and issues stemming from this Workshop, such as the definition of terms, [35] risk prevention (i.e., provides absolute or total protection) versus risk reduction (i.e., provides partial protection), [36] cumulative risk, factors that influence condom effectiveness [37] and public health implications.

In their article, Fitch, et al. emphasize that the cumulative risk factor is very significant. "For example, an intervention that is 99.8% effective for a single episode of intercourse can yield an 18% cumulative failure rate with 100 exposures." [38] Likewise, based on an International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) article, "the risk of contracting AIDS during so-called 'protected sex' approaches 100 percent as the number of episodes of sexual intercourse increases." [39] IPPF is an institution promoting all forms of "birth control."

What has to be considered, therefore, is not only the risk of each single condom use, but also of its continued use, a risk which dramatically increases in the long run. This means that the safe sex Russian Roulette becomes even more serious with repeated condom use.

Condom Failure and Pregnancy

9. Most probably related to the condom's efficiency in preventing the transmission HIV/AIDS and STDs is its efficiency in preventing pregnancy. The WHO explains that perfect use of the condom does not prevent pregnancy all the time. "Estimated pregnancy rates during perfect use of condoms, that is for those who report using the method exactly as it should be used (correctly) and at every act of intercourse (consistently), is 3 percent at 12 months" [40]. Needless to say, the condom's typical use, which includes perfect and imperfect use (i.e. not used at every act of intercourse, or used incorrectly) is much less effective in preventing pregnancy. "The pregnancy rate during typical use can be much higher (10-14%) than for perfect use, but this is due primarily to inconsistent and incorrect use, not to condom failure." [41] Indeed, pregnancy in spite of condom use is well documented, with the Pearl index placed at around 15 failures per 100 women within the first year of use.[42] If pregnancy may occur in spite of condom use, wouldn't it be only logical to conclude that the condom also allows transmission of HIV and STDs, given that the disease-causing organisms may be present with the sperm cells, in the seminal fluid, and even elsewhere, such as on skin surfaces not covered by the condom? Moreover, one must consider that a woman can become pregnant only during her fertile days (approximately 5-8 days in a cycle, taking into account the sperm's lifespan inside her body), while the HIV and STDs may be transmitted on any day.

Condom Failure and Its Latex Material

10. The above considerations on studies pointing towards condom failure are not limited to theoretical arguments. That condoms may be defective is not mere theory, but a fact confirmed by real-life experiences in the real world. One may perhaps assume that in the condom's ideal or perfect state, that is, with a surface with no defects whatsoever, the latex material theoretically might provide a high degree of protection against the passage of HIV-sized particles. However, when it comes to the actual or real state of latex materials, in distributed items such as condoms, the situation could be quite different.

For instance, some permeability and electric tests indicate that latex may allow passage of particles bigger than the HIV.[43] Likewise, holes and weak spots in condoms may be detected by tests, as can be seen in a 1998 article on the US Food and Drug Administration website. "Condom manufacturers in the United States electronically test all condoms for holes and weak spots. In addition, FDA requires manufacturers to use a water test to examine samples from each batch of condoms for leakage. If the test detects a defect rate of more than 4 per 1,000, the entire lot is discarded. The agency also encourages manufacturers to test samples of their products for breakage by using an air burst test in accordance with specifications of the International Standards Organization." [44] If four leaking condoms are allowed in every batch of 1,000, there could be hundreds of thousands or even millions of leaking condoms circulating all over the world, either sold or distributed for free, and most probably contributing to the spread of HIV/AIDS and STDs. Does the public know this? Does the public know that the risks increase the more often and the more promiscuously one is exposed, considering the cumulative risk factor, as explained earlier?

Cardinal Eugenio De Araujo Sales, who was for many years Archbishop (and now Emeritus) of the immense Archdiocese of Rio de Janeiro, recently stated in a newspaper article that several lots of condoms (some from leading brands) were recalled from the market in Brazil in 1999, 2000 and 2003, due to failure in different tests and to the discovery of counterfeit products.[45] According to Cardinal Sales, the 1999 recall, for example, involved 1,036,800 units of the condom Prudence, the third leading brand in Brazil, because it failed the test done by Inmetro, the government's Ministry for Development, Industry and Exterior Commerce. Even prior to these comments made by the Cardinal, the consumer group Civitas International stated that, "In 1991, IDEC [Instituto Brasileiro de Defesa do Consumidor] published a study that reported that five out of the seven top condom brands in Brazil, including the nation's number one brand, Jontex, manufactured by Johnson and Johnson, flunked international safety tests." [46]

11. Condoms, in addition to having possible manufacturing defects, could undergo deterioration during shipping, handling and storage, and even further degradation after purchase by the end user. To a greater or lesser degree, factors such as the following have been proposed as possibly contributing to the degradation of latex (and thus to condom failure): exposure to sunlight, heat (including body heat when placed in pockets or wallets), humidity, pressure, certain spermicides and even to atmospheric ozone.[47] Besides, the condom may still suffer last-minute physical damage immediately prior to or during actual use, such as contact with pointed or sharp objects including fingernails.

The US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) website warns that, "[c]onsumers should make sure the condom package is undamaged, and check each condom for damage as it is unrolled to be used. The condom should not be used if it is gummy or brittle, discolored, or has a hole. Condoms also should not be used after their expiration date or, if they don't have an expiration date, more than five years after the date of manufacture. Only water-based lubricants (for instance, glycerine or K-Y jelly) should be used with latex condoms, because oil-based lubricants such as petroleum jelly weaken natural rubber." [48] If such precautions exist, it must be because real dangers also exist-in this case, a life-threatening danger, that would be irresponsible to simply take lightly.

There are also condoms made from other materials such as polyurethane, which are "comparable to latex condoms as a barrier to sperm and HIV virus", and natural membrane (lambskin) condoms, "which are useful in preventing pregnancy, [but] are not effective protection against HIV or other sexually transmitted diseases. Although sperm cannot pass through the lambskin material, small microorganisms, including HIV, can penetrate these condoms." [49]

Even in the case of serodiscordant couples, from the medical perspective, the condom does not seem to be the real answer: among consistent condom users, there is still the possible transmission of the HIV. [50] The Workshop Summary discussed earlier also says that "[t]here is demonstrated exposure to HIV/AIDS through sexual intercourse with a regular partner (with an absence of other HIV/AIDS risk factors). Longitudinal studies of HIV- [negative] sexual partners of HIV+ [positive] infected cases allow for the estimation of HIV/AIDS incidence among condom users and condom non-users. From the two incidence estimates, consistent condom use decreased the risk of HIV/AIDS transmission by approximately 85%." [51] To further promote "safe sex", some have advised the use of a double condom, the efficiency of which remains questionable, taking into account the different factors presented above. [52]

User-Related Condom Failures

12. Aside from the above considerations on the physical integrity of the condom, one must also remember that condoms are often used improperly. For instance, one might flip the condom over after starting to apply it on the wrong side, allowing sperm, if already present, to be introduced directly into the vagina. Starting intercourse without a condom or taking it off during intercourse, not holding on to the condom during withdrawal, not withdrawing while the penis is erect, reuse of condom, etc., are some other examples of incorrect condom use, which could easily take place. One study shows that in vivo, slipping and rupture of the condom account for 0.1-16.6% and 0.5-6.7% of condom failure, respectively. [53]

The typical, real-life use of condoms is far from perfect; it is rather frequently used inconsistently and incorrectly. This is not difficult to understand, given that consistent inconsistently and incorrectly. This is not difficult to understand, given that consistent use requires an enormous amount of self-discipline (and memory), and correct use requires a relatively meticulous 7-step process, if one follows the guidelines laid down by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.[54] In one of their brochures, the Medical Institute (Texas) says, "When given a basic list of procedures for correct condom use, less than half of sexually active adolescents report they use condoms correctly." [55] Without going into detail, suffice it to say that the sexual act, because of its instinctive and passionate aspects, and at times the absence of a minimum of self-control, brings along with it the above-mentioned risks before, during and after the use of the condom.

The Medical Institute (Texas) explains the results of inconsistent condom use in the most simple terms: "What if I use them most of the time? You're at risk. In fact, the CDC says, 'Used inconsistently (less than 100 percent of the time), condoms offer little more protection than when they are not used at all.'" [56]

HIV/AIDS Increase and Decrease with Condoms and Chastity, Respectively

13. That condoms do not provide total protection against the transmission of HIV and STDs is compounded by the fact that the "safe sex" campaigns have led not to an increase in prudence, but to an increase in sexual promiscuity and condom use.[57]

In fact, there are studies showing that HIV/AIDS cases increase as the number of condoms distributed also increases.[58] Human behavior is an important factor in the transmission of AIDS. Without adequate education aimed at abandoning certain risky sexual behavior in favour of well-balanced sexuality, as in pre-marital abstinence and marital fidelity, one risks perpetuating the pandemic's disastrous results.

There are reports supporting the idea that where abstinence before marriage and fidelity to one's spouse have been successfully promoted, the HIV/AIDS pandemic has dramatically decreased. For instance, Uganda has pushed for a chastity-based program, and there the incidence of HIV/AIDS is managed relatively better than in other countries. "As AIDS sweeps across Africa, Uganda remains a lone success story, as millions of Ugandans have embraced traditional sexual morality, including sexual abstinence outside of marriage and fidelity within marriage, in order to avoid infection. But the international AIDS community has been reluctant to promote this strategy elsewhere, continuing, instead, to place its faith in condoms." [59]

In connection with this, the U.S. Agency for International Development, in its case study, Declining HIV Prevalence, Behavior Change, and the National Response. What Happened in Uganda?, states in a table showing HIV trend and behavioral data in Uganda, Kenya and Zambia, that, "prevalence declines in Uganda relate more to reduction in sex partners than condom use." [60] Similarly, the Joint United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) AIDS epidemic update of December 2003 states: "HIV prevalence continues to recede in Uganda, where it fell to 8% in Kampala in 2002—a remarkable feat, considering that HIV prevalence among pregnant women in two urban antenatal clinics in the city stood at 30% a decade ago. Similar declines echo this accomplishment across Uganda, where double-digit prevalence rates have now become rare . . . To date, no other country has matched this achievement—at least, not nationally." [61]

In Thailand and in the Philippines, the first HIV/AIDS cases were reported in 1984; by 1987, Thailand had 112 cases, while the Philippines had more, with 135 cases. Today, in the year 2003, there are around 750,000 cases in Thailand, where the 100% Condom Use Program had relatively great success. On the other hand, there are only 1,935 cases in the Philippines[62] - and this, considering that the Philippines' population is around 30% greater than Thailand's! Relatively low rates of condom use by the people in general, and staunch opposition from the Church[63] and a good number of government leaders against the condom program and sexual promiscuity, are well-known facts in the Philippines.

Commenting on some of these reports, Jokin de Irala, Professor of Epidemiology and Public Health at the University of Navarre, Spain, said: "That which is being done in many countries is simply irresponsible. To trust condoms blindly without anything else in the preventive strategy, when it has been seen that such method has not been sufficient to stop the epidemic in groups that are a priori very concerned, such as homosexuals, is an error that can end up having to be paid dearly . . . The people could demand from their authorities greater seriousness and originality when it comes to resolving these problems. They should ask at least for the same courage that has been shown, for example, when the fight against tobacco was started seriously. We cannot remain passive, naively believing that such a complex problem could be solved by a 'patch' such as the condom."[64]

14. As to the transmission of HIV in general, even though the WHO affirmed in 2002 that 99% of HIV infections in Africa were due to non-protected intercourse, one should also consider what some authors have recently put expressed, that is, the possibility that the majority of new HIV/AIDS cases in Africa are not due to sexual relationships, but rather to the reuse of needles for injections, given the inadequate sanitary infrastructure in the continent.[65] In this sense, the present orientation of the anti-AIDS efforts focusing exclusively or heavily on condom distribution is obviously insufficient and questionable.

The Right to Correct and Complete Information

15. AIDS represents a serious danger for which there is still no cure. Condom users should be guaranteed their ethical and juridical rights to be correctly and completely informed of the risks involved in the sexual transmission of this disease, and of the true effectiveness of the prophylactic. Given the AIDS pandemic proportion, what the Church aims for is not mere risk reduction (which is actually transformed into risk augmentation if the real risks of transmission are not explained to the public), but rather risk elimination; not partial protection, but total protection; not relative protection, but absolute protection. It is truly misleading to say that one promotes "safe sex", when in fact one is actually promoting "safer sex", that is, sex that is safer than not using a condom at all; but it is still far from being total protection. To claim that it is "technically correct" to say that the condom "provides protection" (leading people to think they are fully protected), when in fact one actually means that it "provides partial protection", or "85-90% protection", or "relative protection", is to lead many to their death. To emphasize that the condom "reduces risks", but hiding the fact that it "does not eliminate risks", leads to confusion.

To advertise that the condom is "effective in preventing transmission of HIV and many other STDs" or "will help reduce the risk of their transmission" (perhaps claiming that in other STDs, or will help reduce the risk of their transmission (perhaps claiming that in some countries its production has already been perfected), when one actually means that it is "up to a certain degree effective in preventing HIV and some STDs but not totally, and that there is no evidence that it reduces the risk of HPV infection", then this is not only a lack of respect for women's rights; it is outright anti-woman, and anti-man as well. To encourage "behavior change" among adolescents in sex education programs, when one actually means "to encourage them to use a condom when they engage in pre-marital sex", while at the same time encouraging pre-marital sex itself, is to destroy not only adolescent reproductive health, but also their emotional, mental, health, and spiritual health, and indeed their future and entire lives.

16. The false security generated by the "safe sex" campaigns are hindrances to this right to correct, complete information. Appeals from true, sincere consumer and health advocates, especially authentic women's health advocates, to fully and clearly reveal available information on condom effectiveness (or rather, ineffectiveness), have been frequently falling on deaf ears, for one reason or another. Such appeal is based on the right of the consumer to know the true characteristics of the product he or she is using—even more if such characteristics have a bearing on the consumer's health and life. The public has to be informed that the condom does not guarantee total protection against AIDS and other STDs. In the same way that cigarettes carry the warning that the smoke they produce is dangerous to the health of the smoker and those nearby, perhaps condoms should also be required to carry warning labels, on their packaging and on the shelves and apparatus where they are displayed, stating that they do not guarantee total protection against HIV/AIDS and STDs, or that they are not safe.

Dr. Luis Fernández Cuervo of El Salvador even goes a step further, alluding to the possibility of taking legal action against those who promote "safe sex", similar to the legal action taken against tobacco companies. "If a habitual smoker contracts cancer he or she can legally sue the tobacco company, making it liable. This way, in the United States, they have obtained juicy millions in compensation (?!). As if a smoker did not know, for more than fifty years now, that tobacco could lead him or her to cancer! But if a person who is sexually promiscuous and uses the condom becomes sick with AIDS, this person has no right to sue the laboratory that manufactured the condom, nor the many groups that promote the condom as 'safe sex'. This is odd, very odd." [66]

17. The HIV/AIDS and STD pandemics continue to grow, in spite of the great efforts to curb their growth. Taking into account the data presented in different studies and experiences on the field, the idea of "safe sex", as it has been presented in condom campaigns, seems false, or at least dubious, and thus has to be submitted to scrutiny. What is more, since there is a certain level of risk, it is also a grave responsibility of national and international institutions, both public and private, as well as of the mass media, to contribute to providing correct, complete information about the existence of these risks, which could lead people to their death. Formal protests have been and should continue to be made by those who think that certain groups hinder such efforts to bring the whole truth into light. [67]

It is true that even medicines cannot be expected to be 100% effective or safe all the time for all users, but it is still acceptable to use them in spite of the risks. In these cases, it is also the patient's right to be informed not only of the medication's intended cases, it is also the patient's right to be informed not only of the medication's intended effects, but also of the possible risks, side effects and other complications, as well as, very importantly, the alternatives. In the case of HIV/AIDS and STD prevention, "safe sex" campaigners should fully reveal the condom's risks, and perhaps even describe the diseases the users might contract as a consequence of condom failure. And also very importantly, they should present the "alternative" solution (which is actually the "primary" solution), that is 100% effective against the sexual transmission of these diseases; it involves no expense, and even strengthens the person's character and freedom: abstinence before marriage, and fidelity to one's spouse.

The Church Promotes Life, Through a Real Protection from HIV/AIDS and STDs

18. The statements reflecting the hard fact of condom failure by no less than international and national agencies, along with the scientific studies and real-life experiences, go totally against the accusations made against the Church: namely, that the Church contributes to the death of millions by not promoting or allowing the use of condoms in the fight against the pandemic. Indeed, shouldn't it be the opposite: that is, that those promoting the condom without properly informing the public of its failure rates (both in its perfect use and in its typical use, and the cumulative risks), have led to, lead to, and will continue to lead to the death of many? Are there not many who fall victim to a false sense of security generated by campaigns promoting "safe sex", oblivious to the fact there are multiple factors that lead to condom failure?

Victims of the "safe sex" fallacy tell us, in the numerous centres caring for HIV/AIDS patients promoted by the Catholic Church, that if they had only known the real risks beforehand, if only they had been properly informed, they would not have engaged in promiscuous sexual behavior, they would not have entered into sexual relationships outside of marriage, and they would have remained very faithful to their families. The Catholic Church is very close to the AIDS patients, and welcomes them with charity, defending their human dignity, and recognizes the drama they undergo, with the mercy shown by the Good Samaritan. Cardinal John O'Connor, the late Archbishop of New York and great pro-life leader, used to visit clinics for AIDS patients once a week. The Catholic Church can surely claim expertise in the fight against the HIV/AIDS pandemic, providing 25 percent of all the care worldwide, having committed professionals and volunteers, religious and lay alike, to care not only for the individuals but also for their families, in the most holistic manner, respecting the dignity of the human person and the family through the proper use of sex and promoting the life-long commitment of spouses. [68]

19. For those who have already exposed themselves to the risks outlined above, a responsible mode of action would be to determine whether or not one might have already been infected, considering that a real danger exists. Each person has the obligation to take care of his or her health and that of others, and to do so, each person has the right to be aided by society as far as possible. Moral as well as epidemiological considerations urge those who have repeatedly exposed themselves to potential contamination to undergo tests to determine whether they in fact might have already been infected with the HIV or other microorganisms causing STD.[69] Not to do so would mean not to take necessary precautions to preserve one's health and life, and that of others. Not to take the tests could mean to unknowingly contribute to the spread of the others. Not to take the tests could mean to unknowingly contribute to the spread of the debilitating, deadly disease to one's own family and society at large. These persons should be encouraged and helped to approach international and local institutions offering voluntary counselling and testing services for those who may need them.

The Church is ready to help. Through the generosity of millions of people, including persons of other faiths who collaborate in our apostolate, the Catholic Church is able to provide 25% of services for HIV/AIDS patients, and to run a great number of hospitals, clinics and other health care facilities worldwide. The Church continues to undertake the promotion of authentic reproductive health and women's health, which includes complete information using unambiguous terminology, and a truly safe sexual practice based on authentic human sexuality.

The Need to Rediscover Truly Responsible Sexual Behavior

20. It is obvious that this article can only be limited to a few but serious investigations, focusing on the sexual transmission[70] of HIV/AIDS and STDs. There are many more studies explaining that condoms do not provide total protection against these diseases, many of which could be easily found on the internet. One has to seriously distinguish between the proper use of the condom and the failures of the same due to different causes. Regarding the latter, the user can not be safe, just as in the case of other accidents with regrettable consequences. The greatest force of these considerations is the call to avoid the various consequences of disordered sexual behavior, and even worse, the risk of promiscuity, even prior to considering the use of the condom itself. Rather than focusing merely on the aspects dealt with by the expert investigators, one has to keep in mind above all the integral good of the person, in line with the proper moral orientation, which will be necessary to provide total protection against the spread of the pandemic. With or without the threat of HIV/AIDS and STDs, the Church has always called for education in chastity, premarital abstinence and marital fidelity, which are authentic expressions of human sexuality.[71]

Moreover, the Church does not propose the development of condoms with better quality that would assure 100% effectiveness against the transmission of HIV and STDs.[72] What is being proposed is to live one's sexuality in a way that is consistent with one's human nature and the nature of the family. It has to be mentioned too that the WHO admits that abstinence and marital fidelity is a strategy capable of completely eliminating the risk of infection from HIV and other STDs; condoms, on the other hand, reduce the risk of infection.[73]

21. It is important, by way of synthesis, to transcribe the recommendation made by Luc Montagnier, who is credited with having discovered the HIV: "Medical means are not enough . . . In particular, it is necessary to educate the youth against the risk of sexual promiscuity and wandering."[74] The CDC has likewise informed that, "the only strategies of prevention that are truly effective consist in (sexual) abstinence and sexual relations with a non-infected partner, while respecting reciprocal fidelity."[75] This is why one of the most important Italian infectious diseases experts, Prof. Mauro Moroni, affirms that, "AIDS is a typical behaviorally spread epidemic . . . If those behaviors are removed, AIDS could be stopped without any specific prophylactic intervention."[76] Prof. Lino Ciccone adds: "Therefore a true and effective prevention is above all the set of initiatives that aim at putting an end to whatever promotes sexual laxity, presented as a triumph of liberty and civilization-similar to what is being done to help youth not to fall into the slavery of drugs or to free them from them. In other words: true prevention takes place only through a serious educational effort. An education free from equivocations and widespread reductive concepts, which leads to the discovery, or rediscovery, of the values of sexuality and a correct scale of values in human life.

"Any other option that excludes such ways, or worse, that implies an ulterior push towards sexual promiscuity and/or the use of drugs, is anything but prevention, and to promote the same is tragically deceitful. A typical example of this mystification are all the campaigns that promise victory over AIDS only if the use of the condom is generalized. In this way sexual promiscuity is encouraged, which is the first cause of the epidemic." [77]

Ciccone's observations coincide fully with the serious problem that I have wanted to delve into. "It has to be noted moreover that it becomes an authentic crime, when one endorses as guaranteed the defense against infection when the condom is used. This is the message that is also launched with the slogan related to the condom of 'safe sex'. As a contraceptive the condom already registers a notable margin of failure, but, as a defense against sexually transmissible diseases, the failure is decidedly much higher. The following is a very recent and authoritative confirmation coming from a scientific source: 'In general terms the barrier methods [. . .] protect against sexually transmitted diseases (risk reduction of around 50%). [. . .] This protection takes place with regards to many pathogenic agents: Papilloma virus [. . .], HIV.'" [78]

Conclusion: The Need to Strengthen Marriage and the Family

22. I have presented in a conference in Chile the detrimental effects of going against human dignity, of trivializing the true meaning of sex, and of making instrumental and commercial the use of sex. [79] A lifestyle that is disordered and corresponds neither to the totality of the human person nor to the will of God, cannot be a true good. We have seen how different peoples have been wounded by such trivialization of sex. In general, cultures have always distinguished between sex without responsibility and sex that is protected by marriage, in favour of the family.

Some might say that this is an excessive demand. But we have to be confident that the Lord, "will not let you be tempted beyond your strength." [80] In several places there is an emergence of youth movements whose members publicly promise to maintain a responsible attitude towards sex, and to remain chaste, abstaining before marriage, and to be faithful to their spouses. For what reason then should this model not be presented to youth, especially at a time when there are many problems in a society that seems to be confused? The fight against the HIV/AIDS pandemic also has to tackle disordered sexual behavior.

23. Marriage has to be presented as something precious, something that will help bring happiness and fulfilment to a person, as couples undertake a life-long project of mutual, exclusive, total, irrevocable and sincere self-giving. "In the 'unity of the two', man and woman are called from the beginning not only to exist 'side by side' or 'together', but they are also called to exist mutually 'one for the other' . . . This mutual gift of the person in marriage opens to the gift of a new life, a new human being, who is also a person in the likeness of his parents."[81]

Prof. Livio Melina, a moral theologian, reminds us that a culture of the family is essential for the family to be strengthened in two evidently fragile, central points: fidelity in love, and parenthood. Regarding the crisis of fidelity, he says that it is manifested "as an incapacity to maintain continuity in time to the delightful event of affection: it is becoming more rare for love to 'have a story', to be prolonged in time, to be constructed and thus become a habitable home.[82] The romantic conception of love, which dominates today, perceives love as a spontaneous event, outside the control of freedom, disengaged from the ethical responsibilities of providing care and diligent work, dissenting from institutionalization."[83]

The Holy Father Pope John Paul II said, "A pastoral proposal for the family in crisis presupposes, as a preliminary requirement, doctrinal clarity, effectively taught in moral theology about sexuality and the respect for life . . . At the root of the crisis one can perceive the rupture between anthropology and ethics, marked by a moral relativism according to which the human act is not evaluated with reference to the permanent, objective principles proper to nature created by God, but in conformity with a merely subjective reflection on what is the greatest benefit for the individual's life project. Thus a semantic evolution is produced in which homicide is called 'induced death', infanticide, 'therapeutic abortion', and adultery becomes a mere 'extra-marital adventure'. No longer possessing absolute certainty in moral matters, the divine law becomes an option among the latest variety of opinions in vogue."[84] Chesterton with his pleasant irony said that what is lacking, as with the birds, is to construct a "stable nest", if they are truly mature.

Prof. Melina further comments that a culture of the family will also help solve the crisis of parenthood, "manifested as a refusal to assume the burdens, perceived as too heavy, to give life to children."[85] Such crisis has given rise to what we have oftentimes described as the "demographic winter." The crisis of fidelity and the crisis of parenthood are but dimensions of the crisis of the moral subject, that is, of the person. Melina proposes two paths or ways to reconstruct the moral subject: the way of virtues, and the way of interpersonal relationships.[86]

24. It is true that where there has been no education towards a serious responsibility in love; where the dignity especially of women is not given sufficient importance; where a faithful monogamous relationship is ridiculed; where condoms are distributed to the youth in parties and to children in schools; where immoral lifestyles are diffused and all forms of sexual experience are regarded as positive; and where parents are not allowed to give adequate formation to their children: such "impossibility" turns into a serious, limiting condition. The end result is not only alarming in terms of the spread of HIV/AIDS, but in that man and woman can no longer have full confidence in each other. What will become of these children's future, without the proper information and the necessary parental guidance?

But the greatest help that the Church, and perhaps all people of good will, could offer to curb this terrible pandemic, relying on Divine Providence, is to strengthen the family.[87] The different groups, movements, associations, institutes and centres that work in favour of family and life have special roles to play. The family is the Domestic Church and the basic unit of society, the school of virtues the first environment where children receive their education from their first educators, their parents. Catholic families should become examples of holiness, letting their close relationship with God in their life of prayer and in the sacraments overflow into a genuine concern for others. The Holy Father has repeatedly insisted, "Family, become what you are!." May the family truly become what it really is, after the example of the Holy Family, the model for all families.

If it is true that the channel of diffusion of the AIDS virus is 'inordinate' sexual behavior, the truly and fully effective means of prevention does not lie in favouring such inordinate sexual behavior along with a certain 'barrier' to the infection, but rather in orienting and favouring 'orderly' sexual behavior. If one remains imprisoned in the logic of inordinate sex, the technical precautions become too weak against a driving force that, although indirect, is not repelled."

Sexual behavior itself

multi-sectoral responses, do not affect HIV infection rates directly. Sexual behavior itself must change in order for seroincidence to change. According to Stoneburner, the effect of HIV prevention interventions in Uganda (particularly partner reduction) during the past decade appears to have had a similar impact as a potential medical vaccine of 80 percent efficacy."

The Lexicon reviews a range of possibilities as its full title suggests.

By setting forth the content and the truth which must guide correct applications, our authors seek to enlighten people on some ambiguous or confusing terms and jargon difficult to assess. In this area, there is a cultural inclination that makes it difficult to give a correct interpretation.

To deal with this, one has to track the invention, development and spread of the terms. Cases often arise in which one notices that terms are coined that do not completely hide an intention in an effort to tone down expressions to avoid causing shock and an instinctive rejection. This is the case with the clever phrases: "voluntary interruption of pregnancy" or "pro-choice".

Many expressions are used in parliaments and world forums with concealment of their true content and meaning, even for the politicians and members of parliament who use them, due to their weak background in philosophy, theology, law, anthropology, etc. This represents the greatest obstacle for a correct understanding of certain terms. The purpose of the Lexicon is to assist in such cases and to awaken interest in order to promote serious and objective information, and stimulate the desire for a deeper formation in this field where several sciences and critical disciplines converge.

Juridical positivism worsens the problem since a law's quality is no longer determined by the human person as a whole, but by the accepted procedure by which a law is formulated in accord with the will of the majority. This leads to a concept of "political truth" and of democracy that will not escape from the concept of law as what is imposed by the strongest.

There are many obscure concepts which are hard to understand because their content requires calm and patient investigation. This is of course complicated by those who refuse to accept natural law and to give law an ethical foundation. Obviously, we cannot marginalize the riches of faith that confirm and deepen what reason understands.

The teaching of the Catechism of the Catholic Church is timely: "The intimate community of life and love which constitutes the married state has been established by the Creator and endowed by him with its own proper laws.... God himself is the author of marriage' (Gaudium et spes, n. 48). The vocation to marriage is written in the very nature of man and woman as they came from the hand of the Creator. Marriage is not a purely human institution despite the changes it has undergone through the centuries in different cultures, social structures and spiritual attitudes. These differences should not cause us to forget its common and permanent features. Although the dignity of this institution does not appear everywhere with the same clarity, a certain sense of the greatness of the matrimonial union exists in all cultures because 'The well-being of the individual person and of both human and Christian society is closely bound up with the healthy state of conjugal and family life' (Gaudium et spes, n. 47)" (n. 1603).

It is not the intention of this project to combat or oppose institutions or persons or even less to impose upon them. Rather we want to propose, to persuade lovingly, directing people towards the truth with respect, in the hope of beginning and reinforcing a fruitful dialogue. We cannot escape the truth to which human beings have a right in order to live with genuine freedom.

Certain expressions exploit the uninformed people who use them and, since they are deceived by their ambiguity, they are not aware of the deception. In this way, one tries to manipulate public opinion by concealing the unpleasant or shocking aspects of reality and of the truth. Since the terms that have been made up are not really innocent, their authors seek to promote their methods as a way to reach their goals by changing the meaning of the terms. They do this to avoid rejection, which they see as a possible risk.

The cunning use of ambiguous terms has reached worrisome levels. People are beginning to speak of an Orwellian language. In his book "1984", the famous writer George Orwell criticized the totalitarian usage in which, for the sake of propaganda, certain words, repeated to create conditioned reflexes, eluded the ability of the intelligence to grasp their meaning and ended by having exactly the opposite meaning: for example, "slavery" means "freedom", "evil" is identified with "good", and "falsehood" with "truth".

One must note that one of the most disturbing symptoms of a weakening of morality is the confusion of terms which lead to degrading levels when they are used with cold calculation to obtain a semantic change, changing the meaning of words in a deliberately perverted way.

This incredible ability for semantic change that demonstrates the emptiness of an anthropology, appears in the concepts of "rights", that has become selective and capricious.

The universality of rights is not always consistently recognized, indeed, "exceptions" are made which deny the quality and comprehensiveness of rights, especially with regard to what is stated in Article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of person". The striking spread of the massacre of abortion shows how some make relative a right that should be universal. John Paul II wrote: "All human rights are in fact closely connected, being the expression of different dimensions of a single subject, the human person.... Defence of the universality and indivisibility of human rights is essential for the construction of a peaceful society and for the overall development of individuals, peoples and nations" (Message for World Day of Peace, 1 January 1999, n. 3; ORE, 23 December 1998, p. 10).

With the escalation of ambiguity, new rights have even been proposed, not as victories for previously unrecognized issues that deserve serious consideration, but as new forms of manipulation. Allow me to quote a valid reflection. Fr Lobato wrote explaining the term "new rights": "Taken individually these concepts seem fascinating; however it is not a question of newness but more precisely of a true difference of language, that aims at removing certain human rights from every ethical norm, to relegate them to the realm of privacy by means of ambivalent language which advances ideas and practices that contradict their immediate meaning. A term is manipulated and camouflaged in order to penetrate all sectors through the powerful means of communication. An ever greater separation exists between thought, reality, and the word that expresses it, which is the subject of manipulation. In the end, the three concepts that the words seemed to convey are denied: newness, rights, and the 'humanum'. In order not to offend the ear, alternative words or phrases are used to replace them, for example: the voluntary interruption of pregnancy for abortion, euthanasia for induced death, the morning-after pill for an abortifacient".

The Church is often presented as an obstacle to freedom, discouraging and intolerant. Hegel's affirmations are quite fitting: "But that man should be free in himself and for himself, by virtue of his very substance, that he should be born free as man was unknown to Plato, Aristotle, Cicero or to the Roman jurists, although the source of human rights lies in this concept alone. Only in the Christian principle does the individual personal spirit essentially assume an infinite, absolute value; God wants us to give help to all human beings. In the Christian religion, the doctrine that all men are equal before God because Christ has called them to Christian freedom has made headway". He says further: "These assertions ensured that freedom became independent of birth, social class, education, etc.... The purport of this principle, has acted like leaven down the centuries and millenniums, producing the most gigantic revolutions" (cf. G.W.F. Hegel, Lessons on the History of Philosophy 1, Italian edition, 1998, p. 61).

Certain commonplace terms give rise to special difficulty. This is the case with the concept "discrimination".

Ambiguity is particularly dangerous since at first it arouses a sympathetic reaction: who is not opposed to all forms of discrimination? This seems to derive from respect for human rights. However, the first concrete favourable reaction changes once the concrete content is more closely examined. In parliaments, in the name of non-discrimination, bills are introduced for de facto unions and for those between homosexuals and lesbians even with the possibility of adopting children.

A recent case that can illustrate this problem (and which is a case in point) is that of the CEDAW. These letters stand for "Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women". This turns out to be evidently hostile to the family which is presented as a place of modern slavery. Consequently, it is claimed that being a wife and mother is equivalent to being discriminated against by those who uphold the moral principles that are anchored in true human rights. Although the "right" to abortion is not mentioned directly, in a subtle way this option is not excluded. Discretely, without making a fuss, the possibility will be taken up in other ways, either through the interpretation of the definitely ambiguous meaning of the phrase "reproductive health", or with recourse to the instruments of abortion, or with the introduction of a new definition of abortion, confined to the later stages of pregnancy and not from the moment of conception to the implantation of the embryo. We are faced with a conceptual storm.

In some cases the equivocations are actually crude and broader. In the name of women's rights and as one of them, not only is abortion presented as if the embryo were the mother's property and indeed an appendage, but people have even come to the point of fighting pregnancy as though it were some kind of disease, and the "unborn" child an unjust assailant. For some time there has been talk of an "antibaby vaccine". We are in the eye of the storm that began with secularization and ethical relativism.

Heidegger's thoughts on the ambiguity and truth of language are well known. Equivocation does not help authenticity (for Heidegger, in his complex language and his original thought man is "the shepherd of being"; the truth is not the conformity of judgement with being, but a way in which reality reveals itself [it is the a-lethe-ia] which is not concealed and has in language "the home of being". Truth is an unveiling. Gossip, curiosity and equivocation attack the authenticity of this unveiling [cf. Martin Heidegger, Being and Time]).

The Holy Father has described "a society which is sick" from many points of view, since "our society has broken away from the full truth about man, from the truth about what man and woman really are as persons" (Letter to Families Gratissimam sane, n. 20). He then refers to the falsification produced by certain modern instruments of the mass media that "are tempted to manipulate the message, thereby falsifying the truth about man" (ibid.). Public opinion is under systematic pressure: "At times it appears that concerted efforts are being made to present as 'normal' and attractive, and even to glamourize, situations which are in fact 'irregular'" (ibid., n. 5).

A typical example is the case of "free love". Suggestive words that imply a universe of freedom when in fact, instead of freedom, a true and proper slavery prevails. John Paul II says, without mincing his words: "Opposed to the civilization of love is certainly the phenomenon of so-called 'free love'.... To follow in every instance a 'real' emotional impulse by invoking a love 'liberated' from all conditionings, means nothing more than to make the individual a slave to those human instincts which St Thomas calls 'passions of the soul'. 'Free love' exploits human weaknesses; it gives them a certain 'vener' of respectability with the help of seduction and the blessing of public opinion. In this way respectability with the help of seduction and the blessing of public opinion. In this way there is an attempt to 'soothe' consciences by creating a 'moral alibi'.... A freedom without responsibilities is the opposite of love" (ibid., n. 14).

The Holy Father has also denounced such widely used expressions as "prochoice", which is camouflaged as the real exercise of freedom: "In the context of a civilization of pleasure, woman can become an object for man, children a hindrance to parents, the family an institution obstructing the freedom of its members. To be convinced that this is the case, one need only look at certain sexual education programmes introduced into the schools, often notwithstanding the disagreement and even the protests of many parents; or pro-abortion tendencies which vainly try to hide behind the so-called 'right to choose' ('pro-choice') on the part of both spouses, and in particular on the part of the woman. These are only two examples; many more could be mentioned" (ibid., n. 13).

In the United States, a semantic battle is being fought: to react to "pro-choice", pro-lifers say that the best "pro-choice" is "pro-life".

In Evangelium vitae (Gospel of Life), the Pope, with prophetic vigour, has denounced the systematic malice of changing the word "delitto" (crime) into the word "diritto" (right). "We shall concentrate particular attention on another category of attacks, affecting life in its earliest and in its final stages, attacks which present new characteristics with respect to the past and which raise questions of extraordinary seriousness. It is not only that in generalized opinion these attacks tend no longer to be considered as "crimes"; paradoxically they assume the nature of "rights", to the point that the State is called upon to give them legal recognition and to make them available through the free services of health-care personnel. Such attacks strike human life at the time of its greatest frailty, when it lacks any means of self-defence. Even more serious is the fact that, most often, those attacks are carried out in the very heart of and with the complicity of the family - the family which by its nature is called to be the "sanctuary of life" (Evangelium vitae, n. 11).

The Pope recently expressed his concern in an address to a group of Bishops from Brazil: "A pastoral proposal for the family in crisis presupposes, as a preliminary requirement, doctrinal clarity, effectively taught in moral theology about sexuality and the respect for life.... At the root of the crisis one can perceive the rupture between anthropology and ethics, marked by a moral relativism according to which the human act is not evaluated with reference to the permanent, objective principles proper to nature created by God, but in conformity with a merely subjective reflection on what is the greatest benefit for the individual's life project. Thus a semantic evolution is produced in which homicide is called induced death, infanticide, therapeutic abortion, and adultery becomes a mere extra-marital adventure. No longer possessing absolute certainty in moral matters, the divine law becomes an option among the latest variety of opinions in vogue" (Address to the Brazilian Bishops from the East II Region on their ad limina visit, 16 November 2002, n. 6; ORE, 27 November 2002, p. 3).

Curiously, a great many ambiguous expressions originate in the idea that changes are called for by "modernity", itself a term that needs to be explained. This is how Thomas Mann describes "modernity": "One of the features of our time is the way a problem is made of everything, even of eternal things, sacrosanct, indispensable and primordial which, today, have become apparently impossible, apparently obsolete, and irreversibly so.... Freedom, individualism, a stronger sense of the personality ... and the idea of the 'right to happiness', stir up discontent and the desire for liberation" (Thomas Mann, Letter on Matrimony).

For some years now, the Pontifical Council for the Family has been observing the escalation of this process that gives rise to confusion. In France recourse to the term "interruption of pregnancy" has already become a current euphemism for "abortion". A few years ago, during the celebration of the International Year of the Family, the coordinating agency of the United Nations began to apply the word "families" only in its plural form, and with reluctance used the word "family" in the singular in order to impose a painful veto on the model of family as desired by God in his project of Creation: the family based on marriage, the patrimony of humanity. Thus, under the umbrella of the term "families", all kinds of unions could safely shelter, like the family "clubs" to which Louis Roussel referred in his book La famille incertaine (cf. Ed. Odile Jacob, 1 March 1989), where the natural institution of the family was rejected and reduced to mere agreements or elastic pacts in a perspective of "privatization". He was an active ideologist of the International Year of the Family. The logo for that occasion, as people will remember, showed a roof beneath which two hearts were joined with an arrow shooting towards the infinite. In this way the uncertain future of the family was depicted and its disappearance in the future, often foretold, although it is no more founded in reality than it is in the predictions. Even anti-family ideologies have had to admit this fact.

It was obvious, precisely regarding the International Year of the Family, that there was a deliberate intention to circulate ambiguous slogans and expressions to exploit the many who were poorly informed and frequently also badly formed, at least in the area of an integral humanism, as Paul VI pointed out in his Encyclical Populorum progressio on social doctrine, and, particularly, in an anthropology that has ethical substance: "What must be aimed at is complete humanism. And what is that if not the fully-rounded development of the whole man and of all men? A humanism closed in on itself, and not open to the values of the spirit and to God who is their source, could achieve apparent success. True, man can organize the world apart from God, but 'without God he can organize it in the end only against man. An exclusive humanism is an inhuman humanism'. There is no true humanism but that which is open to the Absolute and is conscious of a vocation which gives human life its true meaning. Far from being the ultimate measure of all things, man can only realize himself by reaching beyond himself. As Pascal has said so well: 'Man infinitely surpasses man'" (Populorum progressio, n. 42).

At the International Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo in 1994, an attempt was made to exploit a concentrated, ideological functionally organized cargo which, in addition to setting in motion mechanisms that would turn out to be inconsistent myths such as that of "a revolution or population explosion", aimed at sounding the alarm concerning population growth, resorting to such expressions as "sexual rights" and "reproductive rights" (just as, previously, the phrase "Family Planning" had served to encourage contraception and to make people reject the natural methods as ineffectual).

By these expressions, however, indeed there was a strategy to remove adolescents and young people from their family and from the education and upbringing of their parents by saturating them with information on "free" choices in order to avoid pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases, and by disseminating, without other further "pressures", every type of contraceptive. Naturally, at the Cairo Conference, no one excluded recourse to abortion as a right. The Messages the Holy Father sent to Heads of State and to Mrs Nafis Sadik were necessary, to call attention to the "life style" that was to be imposed upon young people, and remind governments of their responsibility for youth (cf. Message to Heads of State, 19 March 1994; ORE, 20 April 1994, p. 1; cf. Message to Mrs Nafis Sadik, Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund and Secretary General of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, 18 March 1994; ORE, 23 March 1994, p. 1).

Later on, an interesting case with regard to the term "gender" was the preparation and the actual event of the Beijing Conference on Women. The Pontifical Council for the Family drew attention to the ambiguous and ideologized use of it that was being introduced, despite the fact that the Holy See Delegation had been assured of the intention to use this term with its "traditional" meaning. It did not take long for people to realize the serious implications of this issue and the great need for clarification. The family and life are inseparable poles of the same reality, the same truth that is a Good News, a Gospel: "Christians also have the mission of proclaiming with joy and conviction the Good News about the family, for the family absolutely needs to hear ever anew and to understand ever more deeply the authentic words that reveal its identity, its inner resources and the importance of its mission in the City of God and in that of man" (Familiaris consortio, n. 86). The family and life are being literally bombarded by a deceptive language that does not encourage but complicates dialogue between individuals and peoples. Without the pursuit of the truth, the universe of freedom is contaminated and in serious danger. There is no freedom without truth.

Thus we have listed 78 terms. The majority were addressed by qualified authorities which can be seen at first glance, and by other experts, who are less famous but know well the topic entrusted to them.

When on the occasion of the Extraordinary Consistory celebrated in May 2001, I told the Cardinals present about the Lexicon project, they welcomed the idea enthusiastically, and so later on did the journalists. Since we received offers from publishing houses of different languages and nations, it is our intention to publish the volume in various languages. We decided to begin with the Italian version, and entrusted it to the Dehonian Publishing House, with which we have had the positive experience of the promotion of our Familiaris consortio that very soon went to a second edition.

our Enchiridion, that very soon went to a second edition.

The approval of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith which has fully supported our ideas gave us great pleasure. The text, edited by competent professionals, gathers the contributions into a single volume, published in accord with technical and lexicographical criteria, such as the alphabetical order of the terms, a brief introduction to the content of each article (set off from the text by a different typeface) and a brief biographical note on each author.

We hope that the Lexicon will be a useful tool for the noble and urgent cause of the family and life. We are conscious that the creation of ambiguities is great and that a later edition might need to be updated with new entries. In this attempt to shed light on the ambiguities through a prolonged pursuit of the truth, guided by reason and illumined by faith and in total obedience to the Magisterium, we hope that the reader will discover the genuine content and objectives which are part of the Gospel proclamation "sine glossa".

An Endorsement of the new "Lexicon: Ambiguous and Debatable Terms Regarding Family Life and Ethical Questions."

We are all called to seek and embrace the truth. In ethical matters, this demands a willingness to understand the natural law and the moral code that is derived from it. When Jesus said "I am the truth" he was affirming the fact that this truth is of vital importance to each one of us. If we are seriously to come to grips with truth, then we need to find a way of dialoguing with one another which is devoid of any ambiguity. That is why words and the meaning of words matter.

Today, many traditionally accepted understandings of terms such as family, sexuality, maleness, femaleness and parenthood have been proposed as 'dominant discourses' that have imposed injustice and intolerance. Many people today argue that it is community consensus which should be used as the arbiter of meaning in language. In such societies, however, the language that is used to communicate with one another becomes highly malleable and manipulable.

So we are told that marriage may mean relationships which involve two men, or two women, or in the case of so-called polyamorous relationships, a variety of other possibilities. We allow such re-definitions to go unchallenged at our peril. Marriage is the union of a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others, voluntarily entered into for life with an openness to the gift of children. The radical social experimentation of the 'sex-on-demand', 'divorce-on-demand' and 'children-on-demand' revolutions of the past few decades has employed a variety of 'language linguistics' to undermine our understanding of marriage and family. Terms such as pro-choice, homophobia, gender preference and safe sex have caused great uncertainty about the true nature of many of the issues under discussion.

It is not 'homophobic' to affirm the true meaning of marriage. It is not anti-choice to name the darkness of abortion for what it truly is. The beauty of the complementarity of male and female is a manifestation of the Creator's design and of his plan for humanity; it is not simply the current dominant social construct of gender preference. In sharp contrast to secular 'safe sex' messages, the Church offers much more, not less. By advocating abstinence prior to monogamous and lifelong marriage, the Church proposes a model for sexual intimacy which respects both the gift of human sexuality and the dignity of the human person. The bitter fruits of the deliberate obfuscation of the truth and beauty of marriage and family are now evident in an increasingly brutalized form of sexual promiscuity, violence, depression, and the disease, and the social isolation which sexual promiscuity, violence, depression, and the disease, and the social isolation which it brings.

It is of vital importance for the New Evangelisation called for by Pope John Paul II that we seek to re-claim our culture. This can only be achieved if we embark on a path of ensuring that all those who are open to the Church's voice understand what is being proclaimed. The Church needs to express clearly what She means, particularly in the language and terms that are used in reference to life, marriage and family.

As a loving Mother and guide, the Church has the obligation to educate both the faithful and the wider community. Political leaders and legislators along with those who work in the field of the social sciences, are entitled to an authentic presentation of the depth of the Church's moral wisdom of the past two millennia. The Church cannot shirk her responsibility to assist in properly forming the consciences of all those involved in crucial public debates. In this way, she fulfills the role entrusted to her, calling all people to embrace the truth of Christ and his Church through the exercise of true freedom: "If you continue in my word, you are truly my disciples; and you will know the truth and the truth will make you free." (In 8: 31-32).

This long awaited English translation of the Lexicon will be an invaluable resource to all those who genuinely seek to understand the profound truth, goodness and beauty of marriage and family. It is a gift to the faithful and to the broader community from the Church. In response, each of us is called to reflect on how we can best use it to proclaim the authenticity of Christ's message, especially in the areas of marriage and family in the third millennium. It will greatly assist all those of good will who seriously wish to learn the truth about marriage and family and to embark on the New Evangelisation.

The Pontifical Council for the Family has given the Church a practical and inspiring text in this volume. It is practical because it helps us to strip away misleading notions about basic concepts. It is inspiring because it lifts up ideals rooted in faith, illuminating the truth about the human person.

The Declaration of Independence, a founding document for the United States, affirms that a human being enters the world endowed by our Creator with "certain inalienable rights," including "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This Lexicon spells out various ways in which the right to life, the first and most fundamental of our rights, can be subverted by the improper use of language.

To the extent that the lessons of the Lexicon are learned and taught, the true Culture of Life will flourish among us. May the Lord bless each user of this volume with a deepened reverence for God's marvelous gift of life.

Those of us who live in contemporary western societies are all too familiar with what has become known as the "culture of spin". Language has always been the tool of propaganda, but it is also, these days, the object of ordinary - sometimes even well-meaning - manipulation. There is now almost no area of public affairs which is unaffected by the sophistication of public relations and advertising.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in the realm of bioethics, sexuality, and the family. Rapid technological progress is pushing constantly at the boundaries of legislation while well-organised lobbies seek social or parliamentary legitimation for particular groups and lifestyles. Words are chosen to conceal, not reveal, hard truths, or to attempt to divert people away from an unpleasant aspect of a thing onto another thing that seems virtuous or cosy. "Public awareness" campaigns are launched to which politicians are pressured to respond. This is the ordinary currency of contemporary western democracy, to which the Church must adapt if it is to defend the values of the Gospel.

This Lexicon is a powerful instrument for that defence which will do much to help prevent the privatisation of truth. It takes words and concepts that are often chosen by campaign groups and lobbies in order to persuade public opinion and shows, through the light of reason and from the tradition of Catholic insights through the ages, how such words have often become detached from their true meaning.

In Britain we are very familiar with the obfuscations of terms such as "interrupting a pregnancy" or "dying with dignity"; the reality of abortion and euthanasia, both of which entail the deliberate death of human beings, is glossed over in such language. Campaigners who would like to see fewer poor babies being born promote "reproductive rights" in the developing world; those who believe that homosexual couples can be considered a form of marriage promote "civil partnerships". There are countless examples of this deliberate obfuscation: sometimes the expressions are so self-evidently euphemistic that they make us smile; sometimes, however, they simply deaden language, leaving us bored or confused and utterly unaware of the realities to which they point.

The problem with this kind of language is not just that it is used to promote causes often at odds with the Catholic moral understanding. It also inhibits proper public debate. When great ethical issues are discussed in the media or in Parliament, the objective should be to come to grips with the truths involved, and to enable societies to discern what is in the common good. The misuse of language conceals truth, and so deprives public opinion of its proper democratic role.

When language is reunited with the truth, it is like a cold shower. That is the effect of the Lexicon: each of these terms or phrases has been in some way hijacked; the Lexicon secures their release and restores them to the moral universe in which they should properly be situated. In its pages, the riches of Catholic moral insight have been thoroughly mined; magisterial insights are deftly summarised; the definitions are informed by reason and faith in equal measure. In the darkening thickets of language detached from moral realities, the Lexicon shines as a clear and penetrating light. I hope that opinion formers, politicians, and all those engaged in public affairs will keep it close by them, as a guide for their consciences and a gift to the societies in which they live.

Report by Adolfo J. Castañeda, Vida Humana Internacional

One of the main pro-abortion strategies being foisted on Latin America today is the so-called "morning after pill" (MAP). MAP is simply the use of higher dosages of contraceptive pills some time after a sexual act in which no contraceptives were used. In most of Latin American countries abortion is illegal. However, the pro-abortionists (IPPF, the UN, CFFC and others) deny that MAP has an abortifacient effect. They deny that MAP's anti-implantation effect is abortifacient, an effect which is clearly mentioned by the FDA, Plan B and the rest of the pharmaceuticals that manufacture contraceptive pills. The reason they deny this, incredibly, is the unscientific claim that pregnancy begins at implantation and not at conception or fertilization, contradicting what every major embryology texts says. In this way abortionists can claim that MAP is not abortifacient in countries where abortion is illegal.

That was the main reason why Leonardo and Martha Lorena Casco, who were recruited for the pro-life cause by Magaly Llaguno in 1983, asked me to go to their country, Honduras, to tape a couple of programs for EWTN in Spanish. The Honduran Catholic Channel's studio is where EWTN in Spanish tapes the popular series "Hablando claro con el Padre Alberto" ("Straight Talk with Father Alberto). And we did talk straight about MAP to a million plus audience! Leonardo, a lawyer and a pro-lifer with international experience, Fr. Alberto and myself completely took apart the bogus anti-life arguments about MAP and warned the entire Hispanic world about this chemical baby-killing arsenal.

But, that wasn't all. I ended up taping not one, but three programs! The second one was on the hot issue of human cloning and stem cells. For that topic Fr. Alberto and I relied on the expertise of Alejandro Leal, PhD in genetics and President of HLI's affiliate in Costa Rica. Fr. Alberto and I tackled the ethical part of the issue and Alejandro the scientific aspect of it. Obviously, faith and reason do not contradict each other, since they come from the same Author of Life. And life indeed is at stake here, millions of precious little embryos, our brothers and sisters, are killed every day by the techniques designed to clone them with the bogus pretext of discovering "cures" for incurable diseases. It is absolutely scandalous how the secular press trumpets this unethical lie. Rarely, if ever, do they cover the ethical and real cures derived from adult stem cell research.

Lastly, we taped a program on a lighter yet important topic "My Husband Doesn't Want To Go to Church". Latin American machismo coupled with the surrounding popular culture has led to this problem. It has reminded me of how important dads are for marriage, the family and the whole culture of life. If the father's true Christian love is there, most likely there will be discipline, respect for God, woman and sexuality and most likely there won't be promiscuous sex, abortions and the rest of the anti-life mess we are experiencing today.

During my stay at the Cascos', where I enjoyed the best of Honduran hospitality, I had the opportunity to share and strategize at length with Leonardo, to be interviewed by the major Honduran radio station, "La Voz de Honduras" HRN, on the above issues and to meet with a Nicaraguan couple who have recently established a crisis pregnancy center (CPC) in that country. They know our affiliate there, Dr. Rafael Cabrera, and I told them about HLI's CPC joint project with Mexican affiliate which was helpful to them.

I would like to thank EWTN, Fr. Alberto and most specially the Cascos, not only for giving HLI and VHI this opportunity to share the Gospel of Life, but also for the superb hospitality of the latter. I came back to the Miami office really enthused by this experience.

The promotion of abortion legalization in Latin America is not as evident as the pro-life movement would think. It is often covered up in strategies and euphemisms such as "reproductive health", "reproductive rights" and "sexual health". It is the purpose of this report to show how the legalization of abortion (both chemical and surgical) is indeed couched in terms such as the above and how to expose them, so that the people in these countries can defend themselves against the "culture" of death.

Then, my computer got a virus just the day before taking the plane, when I was making final preparations with the educational materials I was to take with me. Thanks be to God, again I was able to resolve that problem. Finally, the flight I was supposed to get on was canceled without notice! I did finally get on a plain to Bolivia the next day, May the 24th. Read More...

All travel expenses were covered by HLI and VHI. Adolfo Castañeda was asked to explain to the people of Bolivia about the anti-life term and consequences of 'reproductive health'. At this moment, the Parliament of Bolivia is reviewing a legislative measure titled Sexual and Reproductive Health Law, at the request of Hon. Carlos Mesa, President of Bolivia. Although the legislative measure does not mention abortion, it does state that the people will be 'educated' on contraception, sex education and homosexuality.

Adolfo Castañeda and Mario Rojas, Deputy Director of ANEPROVIDA (a nuclear engineer who volunteers his time to help the pro life mission in Bolivia), visited the cities of Cochabamba (Tuesday, August 3), La Paz (Wednesday, August 4), Sucre (from Friday, August 5, to Sunday, August 8), and Santa Cruz (from Monday, August 9, to Tuesday, August 10).

On Tuesday, August 3, in Cochabamba, Adolfo was asked to be part of a press conference, held at the Archdiocese of Cochabamba. Afterwards, they met with Monsignor Abel Costas, a retired bishop in Tarija, and later gave an interview to Red Uno Televisión, which will be seen in several cities in the country. On that same day, they gave another interview for publication in the special supplement Ambulancia of La Opinión, the major newspaper in the country. In the evening, they gave a talk titled: The Truth about Sexual and Reproductive Rights at the International Level, which was attended by over 2000 people. The mini-newsletter She's A Child-Not A Choice, published by Human Life Alliance in Minnesota, USA, was especially prepared by VHI and HLI Bolivia for Bolivians in Spanish for the distribution of 50,000 copies; HLI covered the printing costs. In all other cities visited, Adolfo gave the same talk, and the same mini-newsletter was distributed. The next day, Wednesday, August 4, Adolfo gave a one hour and a half interview on Canal 20 Televisión, during its program Aló Marianela.

Soon after, on the same day, they traveled to La Paz. Due to plane delays, they were unable to make it on time to grant an interview to Radio Erbol. Nonetheless, they left several packages of pro life educational material, including the mini-newsletter, at the radio station. In fact, everywhere they went, they left a package of the same educational material with ecclesiastical leaders, pro life local lay leaders, and people in the media. Later, they met with Monsignor Ivo Scapolo, Apostolic Nuncio in Bolivia and a strong supporter of HLI Bolivia. Afterwards, they gave an interview to Red ATB Televisión, the major television network in the country. Later, they participated in a panel with Father Javier Llorente on Canal Católico Televisión, which is managed by Opus Dei in Bolivia and has a wide national reach. Still later, Adolfo gave a talk to 200 seminarians, priests and laity at the Saint Jerome Major Seminary. At the end of the talk, Adolfo held his weekly radio program by telephone with Radio La Paz in Florida, USA, which is managed by the Archdiocese of Miami; he spoke of his events in Bolivia. In the evening, Adolfo and Mario gave yet another talk to 600 people in the auditorium of the LaSalle School.

On Thursday, August 5, in the morning, Adolfo and Mario went to Sucre, where they were received by Mrs. Martha Gómez, Secretary of the Civic Committee of Sucre; Mrs. Felipa Barzola, Director of Lay Ministry in Sucre; and by the staff of Canal 11 Universitario Televisión. Later, accompanied by SER Jesús Pérez, Archbishop of Sucre, they held a press conference attended by people in newspaper, radio and television. In the afternoon, they gave a talk at the Salesian Coliseum, attended by 1,100 teenagers.

On Friday, August 6, Adolfo and Mario were invited to participate at the Te Deum Mass offered by, Archbishop Pérez of Sucre; in attendance were several members of the Government of Bolivia, including Hon. President Carlos Mesa. Archbishop Pérez thanked President Mesa for not having signed the anti life legislation and returning it instead to the Parliament of Bolivia for further discussion. In the afternoon, Adolfo and Mario participated in a meeting with pro life and pro family organizations (composed of Catholic, evangelical and civic leadership) that are opposing the anti life law now being debated in Bolivia. During the meeting, they discussed the anti life activities of pro abortion organizations, including those of Catholics for a Free Choice, the World Health Organization, the Population Council, Marie Stopes International, USAID, UNFPA, and IPPF Bolivia.

On Saturday, August 7, Adolfo and Mario participated in one of the regular meetings held by ANEPROVIDA in Sucre, and left much pro life educational material with them. In the evening, they were part of a two-hour six-member ecumenical panel discussion on life issues, transmitted by Canal Católico Televisión. During his turn, Adolfo spoke of the international anti-life movement.

On Sunday, August 8, Adolfo and Mario attended Mass at the Chapel of ANEPROVIDA in Sucre. Father Nicolás Velázquez, the Mass celebrant, particularly thanked Adolfo and Mario for their pro life work in the city. During the intercessory prayers request, Adolfo asked for the conversion of IPPF. In the afternoon, ANEPROVIDA Sucre held another meeting, where Adolfo explained the anti life strategies of IPPF and gave them the example of the sex education program sponsored in El Salvador by the national government, IPPF El Salvador, UNICEF, and USAID. Adolfo gave them a compact disc with his Power Point presentation on the international anti-life plans and strategies of IPPF.

In the late afternoon, Adolfo and Mario traveled to Santa Cruz where they were received by Mrs. Gabriela Terceros-Eterovic, Director of ANEPROVIDA Santa Cruz. The next day, Monday 9 August, Adolfo and Mario visited the Pastoral Family Office of the Archdiocese of Santa Cruz, where Adolfo was interviewed by the press. Later, Adolfo, Mario and Gabriela met with two evangelical leaders to explain to them the significance and consequences of the anti-life legislative measure being debated in their country. Afterwards, Adolfo and Mario gave a two-hour interview on Radio Betania, managed by the Charismatic Renewal ministry. In the evening, Adolfo gave a talk to 500 people at the Don Bosco School auditorium.

On Tuesday, August 10, Adolfo and Mario gave an interview on Red ATB Televisión in Santa Cruz. Later they gave a talk on chastity at the Uboldi School attended by 200 high school students, and which was well received. Afterwards, Adolfo gave a telephone interview to Radio Grigotá. In the afternoon, Adolfo and Mario gave a live interview at Radio Santa Cruz. In the evening, they held a meeting with the members of ANEPROVIDA Santa Cruz, and gave them pro life educational material sent by VHI.

Let us ask God to bless all of the pro life efforts of HLI, VHI and HLI Bolivia and its affiliates, particularly in the cities of La Paz, Sucre and Santa Cruz. May these simple but great efforts bear fruit in the cause for life and family in Bolivia!

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: How the Definition of "Conception" has Evolved, and Why This Is Important

SHARE

How the Definition of "Conception" Has Evolved, and Why This is Important.

The Future of Pro-Life Activism. The current paramount objective of "reproductive" research is to find the ideal abortifacient - one that will kill the preborn child every time without side effects to the woman. This emphasis on abortifacients, rather than contraceptives, has come about because abortifacients in general eliminate or greatly reduce user error, whereas contraceptives, which always remain under the control of the user, have much higher failure rates than abortifacients and are therefore less effective.

In other words, abortifacients are much more efficient at ending pregnancies than contraceptives are at preventing them. The average user effectiveness rates of oral contraceptives, IUDs, Norplant and Depo-Provera are about 94 percent, and the average user effectiveness rates of the male and female condoms, cervical caps, diaphragms and sponge are only about 83 percent (see Chapter 21, "Contraception," for individual method and user effectiveness rates).

This means that as women change their preferences from surgical abortion to chemical abortion, the future of pro-life activism lies not as much outside the abortion mills as it does inside and outside the major pharmaceutical corporations.

Of course, no matter how effective abortifacients are at killing preborn children, just as they did with contraception, pro-abortionists will demand surgical abortion as a "backup." After all, abortifacients have been freely available since the mid-1960s, but have not significantly affected the abortion rate. This means that we will always have abortion mills - at least, until the law or public outrage shuts all of them down.

How the Definitions Have Evolved. In 1963, the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) defined "abortion" as "all the measures which impair the viability of the zygote at any time between the instant of fertilization and the completion of labor." [1]

Until the mid-1960s, scientists universally acknowledged that conception happened at the moment of fertilization of the ovum by the spermatozoa, somewhere in the Fallopian tube. But pro-abortionists and population controllers already had their sights set on a shift from contraceptive to abortifacient methods of birth prevention, and abortifacient research was already ongoing in Japan and several European countries.

In order to make abortifacients acceptable to women, and to circumvent laws designed to prohibit abortion, the pro-abortionists realized that they had to blur the line between contraceptive and abortifacient action.

They could do this only by changing the definition of "conception" from fertilization [union of spermatozoa and ovum] to implantation. Under the new definition of "conception," if a device or drug - such as an IUD or Depo-Provera - prevents implantation, then no abortion takes place. Under the new definition, abortion would only occur if a chemical or device killed a preborn child who had already implanted in the endometrium (lining) of the uterus.

The pro-abortionists' continuing agitation for a change in terminology finally bore fruit in 1965, when the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology (ACOG) published its first Terminology Bulletin, stating that "Conception is the implantation of a fertilized ovum." This semantic subterfuge resulted in the Bulletin inventing two misleading terms for early abortion: "Post-conceptive contraception" and "post-conceptive fertility control." [2]

The deception by the medical establishment regarding the definition of "conception" coincided exactly with its devaluation of the preborn child. Neither change in attitude nor terminology was based upon some revolutionary discovery in medical technology or knowledge: The changes were made purely to further the anti-life goals of the medical profession and the pro-abortionists.

Dr. J. Richard Sosnowski, head of the Southern Association of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, a member group of ACOG, clearly highlighted this strategy in his 1984 presidential address:

I do not deem it excellent to play semantic gymnastics in a profession ... It is equally troublesome to me that, with no scientific evidence to validate the change, the definition of conception as the successful spermatic penetration of an ovum was redefined as the implantation of a fertilized ovum. It appears to me that the only reason for this was the dilemma produced by the possibility that the intrauterine contraceptive device might function as an abortifacient. [3]

Summary of the Changes. Figure 2-1 summarizes the changes that have occurred in medical terminology that are relevant to the early preborn child.

Term	Pre-1965 Definitions	Post-1965 Definitions
Fertilization	Sperm unites with egg	Sperm unites with egg
Conception	Sperm unites with egg	Implantation (7-10 days after fertilization)
Embryo	The human being from first cell division until 35-40 days after fertilization	The human being after implantation, until 35-40 days after fertilization
"Pre-embryo"	Nonexistent term	The tissue (non-human being) after fertilization and before implantation

How the New Definitions Work to Kill Preborn Babies. The new (post-1965) definitions have implications far beyond that of the field of abortifacients. The new terms represent "non-inclusive" language that excludes preborn children before implantation. The new definitions will become more and more important, especially if the public and pro-life activists accept them without dispute.

Under the new terminology, few people will object to in-vitro fertilization (IVF), where fertilization takes place in a laboratory dish. The least perfect blastocysts (very early developing human beings) are simply discarded. If these are mere "pre-embryos," who will care?

What's more, not many people will care if "pre-embryos" are experimented on. And few will protest when, eventually, all "pre-embryos" are systematically screened for all known birth defects, with only the most perfect allowed to continue developing. We already see strong agitation for universal genetic screening shortly after true conception. This is one of the inevitable consequences of the Human Genome Project, which has mapped every human chromosome and will eventually compile every possible genetic defect that can befall human beings.

The Bottom Line. As the battle over abortion shifts from retail surgical baby-killing to wholesale chemical baby-killing, pro-lifers must use precise and unchanging language and terms on the ever-changing battlefield. The babies cannot afford sloppy or imprecise pro-abortion language because confusion and uncertainty always work to the advantage of the anti-lifers.

Traditionally, pro-life activists have proclaimed that "Life begins at conception."

In the Brave New World of silent abortions and shifting terminology, this statement, although it is true, is not specific enough to counter the shifting terminology of the anti-life forces.

The vast majority of preborn children who die at the hands of abortionists are not killed by vacuum machines or curettes, but by injections and pills.

In order to fight for all preborn children, pro-lifers must declare what has always been true, but which is now particularly relevant: "Life begins at fertilization!"

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: The Definition and Types of Abortifacients

SHARE

The Definition of "Abortifacient."

A true contraceptive agent prevents conception by one or more of four specific actions. It can:

- place an actual mechanical barrier such as a condom or cervical cap between the sperm and ovum to prevent them from uniting;
- thicken the cervical mucus;
- inhibit ovulation, thereby preventing the release of a mature ovum; and
- block the Fallopian tube or vas deferens through sexual sterilization.

All of these means prevent a new human being from being created.

By contrast, an abortifacient destroys the preborn child who is already conceived. The general definition of "abortifacient" is "a drug or agent that induces an abortion." [4]

Depending upon the type of abortifacient, this killing can take place at virtually any stage of pregnancy, by preventing implantation of the blastocyst (the very early developing human being), by killing the unborn child shortly after implantation, or by killing the child later in pregnancy.

Pro-abortionists are now distorting even the meanings of the terms "abortion" and "abortifacient" in order to blur the distinction between true contraceptives and abortifacients.

The Different Types of Abortifacients

It has been said that man's greatest ingenuity is displayed in time of war.

This is especially true in the war against his own fertility.

At this moment, extensive research is being conducted on a bewildering array of more than 200 actual and potential abortifacient agents, covering the complete alphabet from alcyonacean soft corals to zoapatle aqueous crude extract, or ZACE.

The research trend in "family planning" is towards pure abortifacients. The ultimate objective is to develop a monthly pill that will not only ensure sterility, but will also cause a cessation of menstruation. The most effective of the many abortifacients currently under research include progestin-carrying IUDs, steroid-containing vaginal rings and diaphragms, and progestin-only creams that could be rubbed on the skin (in other words, an abortifacient skin lotion).[5]

As one cartoonist noted a few years ago, scientists whose product killed preborn children used to moan "We're ruined!" Now they happily exclaim "We're rich!"

There are generally two classes of abortifacient in existence and under research today, as shown in Figure 2-2.

Types of Abortifacients

The first type of abortifacient includes drugs and devices designed to continually maintain a certain level of hormones in the woman's body and repeatedly kill early preborn children before or at implantation (without the woman's knowledge). These include;

- (1) Oral contraceptives (OCs);
- (2) Intrauterine devices (IUDs);
- (3) Depo-Provera; and
- (4) Norplant and Norplant-2 (Jadelle).

The second type of abortifacient kills a preborn child who is known or suspected to exist. These abortifacients include;

- (5) The RU-486 abortion pill;
- (6) The methotrexate/misoprostol (M&M) combination; and
- (7) "Emergency contraception." This type of abortifacient regime has many forms, including;

- the "Yuzpe Regimen," which consists of taking combined ethinyl estradiol/levonorgestrel pills at a higher than normal dose;
- taking pills specifically designed to cause early abortions. These are often called "emergency contraceptive pills (ECPs)," "morning-after pills (MAPs)" and "postcoital contraception," and consist of high doses of the artificial steroids found in oral contraceptives. Two examples are Plan B and Preven.

The remainder of this chapter describes these abortifacients and their effects in detail.

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: (1) Oral Contraceptive Pills (OCPs)--Part 1

SHARE

(1) Oral Contraceptive Pills (OCPs).

The 'Sexual Revolution.' The majority of women who want to inhibit their natural fertility now turn to the birth control pill. "The Pill" became widely used in the late 1960s and was hailed as a panacea — and it also helped fuel the 'Sexual Revolution.' About 11.7 million American women now use this method of artificial birth control. [6]

Convenience-minded women in general either do not know or no longer care that all birth control pills on the market today are abortifacients. In fact, the introduction of such proven abortifacients as Norplant/Jadelle and RU-486 may cause the percentage of women using the birth control pill to decline substantially in the near future in favor of methods that are advertised as abortifacient in character.

The historically sharp dividing line between birth control and abortion has well and truly been obliterated by the "New Abortionists:" The pharmaceutical companies.

How the Birth Control Pills Work. Users of the "old" high-dosage birth control pills experienced relatively severe side effects. However, many of these pills were generally considered non-abortifacient in their two-fold modes of action. The pills would thicken cervical mucus and inhibit ovulation, but they would generally not inhibit implantation of the blastocyst (the five-day old, 256-cell developing human being) in the uterine lining.

However, the new low-dosage pills have three modes of action; they thicken cervical mucus, inhibit ovulation, and block implantation, as described below.

- Mode of Action #1: Suppression of Ovulation. When the female reproductive system is functioning normally, the hypothalamus (the part of the brain containing the vital autonomic regulatory centers) controls the release of gonadotropin-releasing hormone (GnRH), which signals the pituitary gland to secrete luteinizing hormone (LH), which in turn assists ovulation and coordinates the release of estrogen and progesterin from the ovaries.

When a woman ingests oral contraceptive pills, they literally hijack her reproductive system. The pills cause the ovaries to maintain a steady high level of estrogen and/or progesterin production, depending upon the type and brand of pill being used. Thus, the woman's body is essentially "tricked" into acting as if it is continuously pregnant. The hypothalamus adjusts to this high level of hormone secretion and essentially shuts off GnRH production. Therefore, the production of luteinizing hormone by the pituitary gland is also inhibited, and ovulation either ceases or is drastically curtailed.

During those months that ovulation is suppressed, the mode of action of the oral contraceptive pill is contraceptive in nature.

- Mode of Action #2: Cervical Mucus Effects. Oral contraceptives also cause changes in the consistency and acidity of cervical mucus, making it more difficult for sperm to penetrate and live in the cervix — a second contraceptive effect.
- Mode of Action #3: Endometrial Effects. The third effect of oral contraceptives on the body is to cause certain changes in the endometrium (lining of the uterus), making implantation more difficult. In a cycle where ovulation was not prevented and fertilization takes place, the Pill causes a "silent abortion."

Most of the older "high-dose" oral contraceptive pills functioned mainly by inhibiting ovulation and affecting the cervical mucus, making them primarily two-fold in function. Sometimes, however, breakthrough ovulation occurred, and so the older pills were occasionally abortifacient in their actions.

All of the newer oral contraceptive pills on the market today not only often suppress ovulation and affect the cervical mucus, they often make implantation of the developing human being impossible. This three-fold mode of function means that all of the newer oral contraceptive pills function at least part of the time as abortifacients.

The Types of Oral Contraceptive. Three general classes of oral contraceptive pill are manufactured in the United States and other countries and used worldwide. These are the high-dose pill, the low-dose pill and the "mini-pill."

The following paragraphs describe these pills and their modes of action. Figure 2-3 summarizes the hormonal contents of the general classes of pills, and Figure 2-4 lists some of the manufacturers of the pills in the United States.

Type of Pill	Milligrams of Progestin	Micrograms of Estrogen
(1) High-dose pill	1 to 12 milligrams	60 to 120 micrograms
(2) Low-dose pill	1 to 2.5 milligrams	50 to 80 micrograms
(3) Mini-combination	0.5 to 1.5 milligrams	20 to 35 micrograms
(4) Mini-pill	0.075 to 0.35 milligrams	NONE

(1) The High-Dose Pill. The Searle Pharmaceutical Corporation developed the first oral contraceptive, Enovid, in the late 1950s. In keeping with its defensive anti-lawsuit strategy, the company tested the Pill on Puerto Rican women before concluding in 1961 that it was safe for women on the American mainland to use.[7]

Experimentation on foreign women is a typical tactic of the major pharmaceutical Experimentation on foreign women is a typical tactic of the major pharmaceutical companies. They often test birth control chemicals and devices on poor women in developing countries so any mistakes or serious health problems are easier to cover up. Poor women in poor countries have little recourse when their health is destroyed or damaged by this kind of testing. This is because the companies bring huge amounts of money to their homelands, and protest against the programs can easily be suppressed by local or national governments.

Enovid and other high-dose pills, which have generally fallen out of favor in the United States but are still widely used in developing countries, contain from 1 to 12 milligrams of progestin and/or 60 to 120 micrograms of estrogen, a natural female hormone. This high dosage has a variety of effects, including blurred vision, nausea, weight gain, breast pain, cramping, irregular menstrual bleeding, headaches, and possibly breast cancer.[8]

The high-dose pills are primarily two-fold in action. Their primary mechanism suppresses gonadotropin production and therefore ovulation. They also cause changes in the consistency and acidity of cervical mucus, making it more difficult for sperm to penetrate and live in the cervix. Finally, they occasionally cause certain changes in the endometrium (lining of the uterus), making implantation more difficult.

When the high-dose pill functions by this last mechanism, it is an abortifacient if the woman experiences a "breakthrough" ovulation. Such "breakthroughs" occur during about 1 to 12 percent of all cycles.

Beginning about 1975, pill makers, in reaction to bad publicity about the severe side effects of the high-dosage pills, steadily decreased the content of estrogen and progestin in their products.

(2) The Low-Dose Pill. Eventually — in the West, at least — the older "high-dose" pills gave way to the new, abortifacient "low-dose" pills. Ortho/Johnson & Johnson, G.D. Searle/Monsanto, and Syntex, the three largest manufacturers of OCs in the United States, voluntarily withdrew their "high-dose" products from the U.S. market in 1988 on the advice of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA). These were the last commercially-available pills in the United States containing more than 50 micrograms of estrogen.[9]

The low-dose pills contain from 0.35 to 15 milligrams of progestin in the form of norethindrone, norgestrel, ethyndiol diacetate, or norethindrone acetate and from 0.7 to 2.0 micrograms of estrogen in the form of ethinyl estradiol or mestranol, a tremendous drop in estrogenic potency compared to the high-dose pills.[10]

The low-dose pills work in essentially the same manner as the high-dose pill. However, a much higher percentage of ovulation occurs in women who use the low-dose pills, due to the much lower estrogen dose. This means that women who use these pills frequently conceive, and the low-dose pills prevent implantation of the new human life, thereby acting more often as true abortifacients.

(3) The Mini-Pill. Scientists have not pinpointed the primary mechanism of action of mini-pills (progestin-only pills), although women who use them frequently ovulate. Therefore, these pills function primarily as abortifacients.

It is known that pills that contain only progestin alter the cervical mucus. They also interfere with implantation by affecting the endometrium (lining of the uterus) and suppressing ovulation in some women by reducing the presence of follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH).

This mechanism is confirmed by the Food and Drug Administration, which has stated that "Progestin-only contraceptives are known to alter the cervical mucus, exert a progestinal effect on the endometrium, interfere with implantation, and, in some patients, suppress ovulation." [11] The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), in its 1984 pamphlet "Facts About Oral Contraceptives," compared the performance of high-dose pills to mini-pills:

It is possible for women using combined pills (synthetic estrogen and progestin) to ovulate. Then other mechanisms work to prevent pregnancy. Both kinds of pills make the cervical mucus thick and "inhospitable" to sperm, discouraging any entry to the uterus. In addition, they make it difficult for a fertilized egg to implant, by causing changes in Fallopian tube contractions and in the uterine lining. These actions explain why the minipill works, as it generally does not suppress ovulation [emphasis added].

The makers of the mini-pills also admit this mode of action. For example, Syntex Laboratories announced that its progestin-only pill Norinyl "... did not interfere with ovulation ... It seems to affect the endometrium so that a fertilized egg cannot be implanted." [12]

In other words, the Pill is now truly abortifacient "birth prevention" — not conception control, as may have originally been intended when the first oral contraceptives were being developed.

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: (2) Intrauterine Devices (IUDs)

 SHARE

(2) Intrauterine Devices (IUDs).

What is an Intrauterine Device? The intrauterine device is a foreign body made of a non-reactive plastic such as polyethylene, inserted into the uterus to prevent implantation of the developing human being. Some IUDs include active chemicals, such as progesterone or copper, which slowly diffuse into the uterus for an enhanced abortifacient effect.

More than 2,000 years ago, camel drivers knew about the contraceptive effect of intrauterine devices. They would commonly insert small round stones into the uteri of their female camels in order to prevent pregnancy on long journeys.

Whether or not human females used this method is unknown. However, we do know that the first modern-day IUD, the Grafenberg Ring, was placed on the market in 1915.

Several other companies immediately saw the opportunity for profit, and by the mid-1930s, there was a proliferation of IUDs for sale. They sported intimidating names such as the Sterilette, the Collar-Button, the Wishbone, the Silkworm Pust, and the Star. Some of the devices were of fine quality, but many were made of "... cheaper, noncorrosive metals, or of celluloid, bakelite, and chromium-plated metals rather than gold." [35]

According to one expert, "Sometimes these [cheaper IUDs] were claimed to be made of solid gold in order to enhance the price, and a few practitioners took economic advantage of the need and ignorance of women." [36]

More than 70 different types of IUDs have been manufactured over the last half-century. Some of these have consisted of polyethylene with barium sulfate so they could be detected by X-rays. The Dalkon Shield, which was withdrawn from the market in 1974 due to a number of maternal deaths, was of this type.

Other IUDs, including the Progesterone-T, were loaded with varying doses of progesterone crystals that were usually suspended in silicone oil. This IUD released about 24 milligrams of progesterone a year. It was originally promoted under the truly Orwellian label "Uterine Therapeutic System." [37]

The copper IUDs (including the "Copper-7," "Copper-T" and "Tatum-T") discharge from 50 to 75 micrograms of ionic copper into the uterus each day. These copper ions interfere with the life-sustaining functions that regulate implantation of the new human life in the uterus. Copper has been proven to be the active agent in these IUDs because identical devices are ineffective without the element. Each copper IUD is effective at causing early abortions for about four years. [38]

The only IUDs now available on the American market are;

- The Copper T 380A (ParaGard), produced by the Population Council, and marketed first by GynoPharma, a small "front" corporation set up to avoid legal liability, and currently by FEI Women's Health LLC of New York City. [39] The Paragard consists of a flexible T-shape containing copper collars on both arms and a copper coil along the stem, and is supposedly good for six years. More than 25 million of these IUDs have been distributed in seventy countries. [40]
- The LNG-IUS, or "Mirena," is produced by Berlex Laboratories in Montville, New Jersey. It was approved for use in the United States in 2000, and about three million women use it. This IUD released levonorgestrel at a rate of about 20 micrograms per day, declining to 14 micrograms per day after five years.

- The progesterone T (Progestasert, by ALZA Pharmaceuticals in Mountain View, California), caused an anti-estrogenic effect. It was first used in 1976 and was discontinued in 2001. The Progestasert only functioned effectively for about one year.[41]

How Do IUDs Work? The different IUDs have different modes of action. They prevent sperm from fertilizing ova, release ions (primarily copper) that interfere with fertilization, thicken the cervical mucus, and inhibit sperm capabilities. These are all contraceptive effects. But IUDs also irritate the endometrium (the lining of the uterus) and make it inhospitable to the blastocyst (the very early developing human being), an abortifacient effect.[42] There is some disagreement among medical authorities over the contraceptive effects of IUDs, but these experts do agree that IUDs prevent implantation.

The American Medical Association's Committee on Human Reproduction has said that "the action of the IUDs would seem to be a simple local phenomenon. That these devices prevent nidation [implantation] of an already fertilized ovum has been accepted as the most likely mechanism of action." [43]

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA), which studies birth control methods before releasing them to the market, has observed that "IUDs seem to interfere in some manner with the implantation of the fertilized egg in the lining of the uterine cavity. The IUD does not prevent ovulation." [44]

The International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) states that:

At the end of 1986 the WHO [World Health Organization] Scientific Group on the Mechanism of Action, Safety, and Efficacy of IUDs looked into this aspect [mechanism of action] of the use of IUDs very thoroughly. Their main conclusions stated that all IUDs stimulate a foreign body reaction in the endometrium which is potentiated by the addition of copper, and progestagen-releasing IUDs produce endometrial suppression similar to that seen when the drug is administered by other routes, e.g., orally or by injection.[45]

However, the results of 18 studies of women with IUDs found that the devices do not always prevent implantation. A major study showed that an average of 28.6 percent of all implanted pregnancies that occurred with the IUD in place were eventually aborted, and another 8.4 percent resulted in life-threatening ectopic pregnancies that required surgery. [46] Scientists have confirmed this method of action with sophisticated radioreceptorassay and radioimmunoassay techniques that can detect pregnancy as early as six days after conception.[47]

A study team in the early 1970s published a very detailed exposition on the suspected mode of operation of the intrauterine device;

It is generally believed that the contraceptive action of the nonmedicated IUDs involves the production of a local sterile inflammatory reaction. As with any instrumentation, insertion of an IUD introduces some bacteria from the cervix and vagina into the endometrial cavity. Within two to four weeks after insertion of the device, the uterine cavity becomes sterile. However, the presence of an IUD initiates mobilization of leukocytes from the capillaries into the endometrial stroma and surface epithelium. Polymorphonuclear leukocytes appear first, followed by lymphocytes, eosinophils, macrophages and plasma cells. This leukocytic response, which persists as long as the macrophages and plasma cells. This leukocytic response, which persists as long as the IUD remains in place, creates an endometrial environment hostile to the blastocyst. Such macrophages also accumulate in the endometrial cavity and phagocytosis of spermatozoa occurs, thereby preventing fertilization. The degree of this inflammatory response seems to be related to the material used in the construction of the IUD. ... The FDA has recently approved a T-shaped IUD (Progestasert) which releases 65 mcg. of progesterone per day for one year. The minute amounts of progesterone released by the system cause endometrial glandular atrophy and decidual changes in the stroma, creating an environment hostile to nidation. Effects on sperm migration and sperm capacitation have also been postulated. The effect of the natural hormone is localized at the endometrium because the small amount of progesterone released each day (only a fraction of the total body production) is metabolized rapidly as it traverses the endometrial layer, so that little progesterone is absorbed systemically. Hence, unlike oral hormonal contraception, the progesterone IUD does not inhibit ovulation or affect the length of the menstrual cycle.

While the IUD is effective in preventing over 98 percent of intrauterine pregnancies, it is less than 90 percent effective in preventing tubal pregnancies. If a patient becomes pregnant while she still has an IUD in place, the chances are more than one in 20 that the pregnancy is ectopic. ... About half of the patients who conceive with an IUD in place will abort; the rest will carry to term, with no problem to the mother or the fetus.[48]

In summary, every IUD currently or previously manufactured prevents implantation: they are therefore all abortifacients. In other words, these devices insure that the purpose of the womb is perverted completely, to the point where the uterus is as barren and hostile to new life as a desert.

Complications Associated with IUD Use. Until about 1960, the medical community generally criticized IUDs because of their obvious and severe side effects. However, this criticism was generally muted because birth control choices were limited before the widespread distribution of the birth control pill.

Alan Guttmacher, president of Planned Parenthood, stated in 1959 that "Intrauterine devices are mentioned only to be thoroughly condemned because of their ineffectiveness, their potential source for infection and irritation, as well as their carcinogenic potential." [49]

Although IUD technology had not advanced in the slightest, the entire medical community performed an abrupt about-face in the mid-1960s and began to accept the device. Interestingly, this change in heart was simultaneous with its flip-flop on abortion.

The Food and Drug Administration's Ad Hoc Committee on IUD Safety met in 1974 for the purpose of summarizing complaints received about the various IUDs on the market at that time.

The Committee received reports of 238 cases of spontaneous septic abortion from women who had become pregnant with IUDs in place. Of these women, 21 died. The Dalkon Shield was involved in 14 of these deaths and 209 cases of septic abortion, and the Lippes Loop caused 5 deaths and 21 septic abortions.[50] Overall, there were about 15,000 IUD-related hospitalizations annually in the early 1970s.[51]

A.H. Robin Pharmaceuticals made the Dalkon Shield IUD from 1971 to 1974. Documented reports of severe injuries began to surface almost immediately after initial distribution, and on 29 June 1975, the FDA announced it intended to "... require special warning notices for users of the intrauterine devices, the contraceptives that were linked to 43 deaths in recent years." [52] A.H. Robin pulled the Dalkon Shield from the market in 1975. By 1985, 42,000 women had sued the company for damages relating to sterility.

1975. By 1985, 13,000 women had sued the company for damages relating to sterility, miscarriages and pelvic infections. Incredibly, some population controllers, including Stephen Mumford and Elton Kessel, who peddle the dangerous sterilizing chemical quinacrine in developing countries, are trying to sanitize the image of the Dalkon Shield so it can make a comeback.[53]

Ortho Pharmaceuticals withdrew its Lippes Loop from the American market in 1985, and G.D. Searle withdrew its Copper-7 and Tatum-T IUDs in 1986 when its liability insurance lapsed. Searle also faced 775 lawsuits from women who suffered injuries from their IUDs or who conceived malformed babies when the devices did not work properly.

According to a literature review of the journals Contraception and Fertility and Sterility over the period 1980-1995, harm associated with current IUD use includes (but is not limited to);

- sterility:
- hemorrhage:
- perforation of the uterus, colon, bladder or small or large intestine:
- cervical lacerations:
- cervical dysplasia (developmental abnormalities):
- deep embedding of the IUD (a serious problem in developing countries, where women may have had the devices in their uteri for a decade or more):
- fragmentation of the IUD:
- dysmenorrhoea (painful menstruation):
- development of hydatidiform moles:
- menorrhagia (excessive menstruation):
- salpingitis (inflammation of uterine tubes):
- pelvic inflammatory disease (PID, which often leads to infertility or sterility). The incidence of PID in users of an intra-uterine device is nine times higher in those who do not use the device and have not had children, and two to three times for those who have not used the device and who have had children:[54]
- compared to pregnant women without IUDs, those using IUDs have a threefold higher risk of spontaneous abortion. They also face a 50-fold higher risk of death from septic spontaneous abortion and a 6 to 20 times greater risk of ectopic pregnancy:[55]
- cervical erosion:
- cystic masses on the pelvis; and

- tubal infertility.

The IUD and "Contraceptive Imperialism." IUDs have confronted the anti-fertility industry with a number of insurmountable problems, the greatest of which was the proven danger of the devices. This did not stop the IUD manufacturers from turning a tidy profit by dumping their products on the poor women of developing countries.[56]

Despite being faced with nearly 1,000 lawsuits claiming damage from its Copper-7 and Tatum-T IUDs, the Searle company stated that it would continue to make IUDs for women in developing countries (for population control programs funded by the United States and other Western countries).[57] This is yet another example of the West's "contraceptive imperialism" — a willingness to dump unsafe and even lethal products on poor women of the developing world after judging them too risky for Western women.

Health risks associated with IUDs are a serious matter with grave implications that are not immediately evident. Women normally lose an average of 35 to 40 cubic centimeters (cc) of blood during their menstrual period, but women using a loop IUD lose about twice as much blood, and those who use copper IUDs lose about 50 cubic centimeters of blood. This shows that IUDs are especially ill-suited for use in developing countries, where anemia and malnutrition are often endemic, especially among women and children.[58]

Despite the obvious dangers of IUDs, the American Public Health Association (APHA) backed Searle and other IUD manufacturers by launching a campaign to distribute IUDs to Third World women and to get the U.S. government to assume much of the pharmaceutical company's legal liability for IUD damages, thus letting the corporations act with virtual impunity.[59]

Mission Field: Asia-Ligaya

DR. LIGAYA ACOSTA , ASIA

Dr. Ligaya Acosta makes her home in the Philippines, where for more than 28 years she had previously worked against the culture of life as a loyal government employee for the Department of Health. During that time, she was a firm believer in population control and an avid promoter of contraceptives. She also served for 15 years as manager of the Information-Education and Communication office and as a trainer for those working with AIDS/STD victims. With a Doctorate in Management, and Bachelor degrees in Law and Social Work, she was well qualified for her government post.

In 2004, Dr. Acosta began to see the international pro-death propaganda for what it really was. She began doing independent research (which in part included reference materials from HLI), and after nearly 3 decades as an avid promoter of contraceptives and population control, Dr. Acosta made a 180-degree turn and became a pro-life advocate and activist.

By the end of 2004, her conversion was complete. Then, with passion and resolve, she turned her attention to defending human life, faith, marriage, and the family, and to exposing the deadly deception of the culture of death that she had known all too well. She left her job and high-paying consultancies in February 2005 and began her new campaign for life.

In 2007, Dr. Acosta joined the HLI team, and since then she has done extensive activism work all over the Asian region.

Former President, Human Life International

Fr. Euteneuer resigned as president of HLI in August, 2010. Rev. Thomas J. Euteneuer (EYE-ten-our) became president of Human Life International in December 2000. Human Life International is the world's largest pro-life organization with affiliate offices and associates in eighty countries around the world. In nine years of service to this unique mission Fr. Euteneuer has traveled more than one million miles as a pro-life missionary and has visited fifty-seven countries.

Rev. Euteneuer was born in Detroit, Michigan in 1962, the fourth of seven children born to Joseph and Mariann Euteneuer. He has a Bachelor's degree in Philosophy from the University of Notre Dame in Indiana as well as a Licentiate degree in Biblical Theology from the Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome, Italy. He is fluent in Spanish.

While in college, Rev. Euteneuer participated in the Marine Corps Officer Candidate Program, attended basic training at Quantico, Virginia and graduated at the top of his Company. After discerning that the Lord was calling him to the priesthood rather than the Company. After discerning that the Lord was calling him to the priesthood rather than the military, he entered the seminary. After his ordination in 1988, Fr. Euteneuer served as a parish priest in five parishes of the Diocese of Palm Beach, Florida, secretary to the diocesan bishop, director of vocations, and spiritual moderator for the diocesan Respect Life office.

His pro-life activity began in the early years of his priesthood with prayer vigils, pilgrimages, pickets at abortion mills, sidewalk counseling and the establishment of a crisis pregnancy center across the street from an abortion mill in 1999.

Since taking office at HLI, Rev. Euteneuer has spoken directly to tens of thousands of people all over the world spreading the Gospel of Life and has appeared frequently on EWTN and other media. He has been featured in Human Events and Envoy magazine and has appeared on local and national television many times. His now-famous Fox News interview with Sean Hannity on the subject of contraception has merited him both praise and criticism for his defense of Church teaching (see video below). He was awarded the John Cardinal O'Connor Award for Life from Legatus in 2005 and the "Soldier of the Church Militant" Award from the Brent Society in 2007.

(3) Depo-Provera

How Depo-Provera Works. Depo-Provera's active ingredient is depot-medroxyprogesterone acetate (DMPA), a synthetic form of the natural hormone progesterone, originally developed for the treatment of uterine cancer in the 1950s. The woman receives 150 milligrams of DMPA via deep intramuscular injection every three months.

Depo-Provera was approved for use in the United States in October 1992. In June of 1993, however, Canada's Department of Health and Welfare prohibited the use of Depo-Provera, saying that the drug did not meet Canadian safety standards as a contraceptive.[60] Depo-Provera is now available in more than 90 countries and is particularly popular among population controllers in Indonesia, Jamaica, Thailand, Kenya and New Zealand.

As with all other abortifacients that may pose a danger to Western women, Depo-Provera was extensively tested on Third World women first. The World Health Organization (WHO) used Depo on more than 11,000 women in Kenya, Mexico and Thailand before submitting it to the FDA for approval.[61]

According to Upjohn's information pamphlet on Depo-Provera, the compound "inhibits the secretion of gonadotropins which, in turn, prevents follicular maturation and ovulation and results in endometrial thinning. These actions produce its contraceptive effect." [62] The pamphlet also says that Depo-Provera:

- "[Has a] contraceptive effect produced by inhibiting the secretion of gonadotropins (FSH, LH), which prevents follicular maturation and ovulation.
- Suppresses the endometrium [the mucous membrane lining the uterus] and changes cervical mucus."

In other words, Upjohn acknowledges that Depo-Provera acts as an abortifacient.

Many women's menstrual cycles continue when using Depo-Provera: 43 percent after 12 months and 32 percent after 24 months.[63] This data shows that the compound does not completely suppress ovulation in a large percentage of women who use Depo-Provera.

Contraceptive Technology confirms that Depo-Provera has a three-way mode of action. It inhibits ovulation and thickens cervical mucus (which are both contraceptive actions), but it also alters the endometrium (the lining of the uterus) so that its degree of receptivity to the blastocyst (very early developing human being) is significantly decreased. According to Contraceptive Technology, "Other contraceptive actions include the development of a shallow and atrophic [thinning] endometrium ..."

When Depo-Provera works in this way, it is an abortifacient.[64]

Adverse Reactions to Depo-Provera. Upjohn's information pamphlet on Depo-Provera lists more than 60 adverse reactions suffered by women who use the compound.[65]

Women on Depo-Provera report an average weight gain of 5.4 pounds in the first year and 16.5 pounds over six years. Depo-Provera users commonly experience osteoporosis (loss of bone mass).[66] Some users also suffer jaundice, a decrease in glucose tolerance and convulsions.

In women who have used Depo-Provera for the first time within the last four years, and who are under 35 years of age, the risk of breast cancer increases 129 percent.[67] No increased risk of ovarian, liver or cervical cancer is apparently associated with the drug's use.

Use of Depo-Provera may be associated with ectopic pregnancy, thrombophlebitis (inflammation of blood vessels associated with blood clots), pulmonary embolism (obstruction of the pulmonary artery by a blood clot, air bubble, or other material), cerebrovascular disorders, and partial or complete loss of vision in mothers, and polysyndactyly (webbing and extra digits of the hands and feet), hypospadias (genital tract abnormalities) and chromosomal anomalies among infants born to them.[68]

More than five percent suffer headaches, nervousness, abdominal pain or discomfort, dizziness or asthenia (weakness or fatigue). One to five percent reported one or more of these ailments: Decreased libido (sexual desire) or anorgasmia, depression, nausea, insomnia, leukorrhea (abnormal vaginal discharges), pelvic and breast pain, rashes, hot flashes, edema (swelling), vaginitis and acne.[69]

The information pamphlet lists 48 other symptoms reported by lesser numbers of patients, including chest pains, pulmonary embolus, allergic reactions, anemia, tachycardia (racing heart rate), fever, hoarseness, blood dyscrasia (abnormal blood chemistry), rectal bleeding, breast lumps or nipple bleeding, paralysis, facial palsy, uterine hyperplasia (abnormal growth of the uterus), varicose veins and deep vein thrombosis.[70]

(4) Norplant and Jadelle.

The History of Norplant. The Population Council (founded by population controllers John Rockefeller III and Elton Kessel) originally owned the patent for Norplant, which was developed by embryologist Sheldon Segal of the Rockefeller Foundation. Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories of Philadelphia, a subsidiary of American Home Products Corporation, produced the abortifacient, which cost women about $870 to produce about five years of barrenness.[71] The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved the abortifacient Norplant for public use on December 10, 1990.

Norplant was formally introduced to the American public in February 1991.

As of December 2004, about one and a half million North American women had used Norplant. More than 50,000 of these women have brought more than 200 lawsuits, including 70 class-action suits, against Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories.[72] The legal complaints allege inadequate warnings of side effects, prolonged menstrual bleeding, headaches, large weight gains, personality disorders, hair loss and depression. Wyeth-Ayerst won three jury verdicts, a score of summary judgments, and the dismissal of 14,000 claims. In 1999, it offered $1,500 cash settlements to the remaining 36,000 women who alleged that they had been injured by Norplant.[73]

In 1999, Norplant distribution ceased in the United Kingdom, and three years later it stopped in the United States, although supplies continued to be used until 2004.

The original Norplant is being succeeded by Norplant II, brand-named "Jadelle." Like the original Norplant, Jadelle was developed by the Population Council and manufactured by Finland's Schering Oy Pharmaceuticals. Jadelle consists of two small (2.5 millimeter X 43 millimeter) silicone rods, each containing 75 milligrams of levonorgestrel in a polymer matrix. The Food and Drug Administration approved Jadelle on May 31, 1996, and it is also effective for five years. Jadelle has not yet been marketed in the United States, but as of January 2007, it is being used all over the world by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) as a successor to the original Norplant.

Implantation and Extraction Procedures. Insertion and extraction procedures for Norplant and Jadelle are similar. Both consist of silastic (silicone rubber), the same material used in heart valves and medical tubing.

A physician begins the insertion procedure by making a 1/8-inch incision about six inches above the woman's elbow. He then loads the capsules one by one into her arm in a fan-shaped pattern using an insertion tube.[74] He uses local anesthetic for both the implantation and extraction procedures.

In many cases, removing the six tubes of the original Norplant is trickier than implanting them because the tubes become coated with fibrous tissue and gradually anchor into the surrounding tissue (i.e., they grow into the arm). This is a result of trauma caused by the implants being pushed into the tissue and a low-level inflammatory reaction to the tube's foreign substance. Such difficulties will probably also be associated with Jadelle.

How Norplant and Jadelle Work. Norplant and Jadelle are members of the single-synthetic hormone class of abortifacients that includes the "mini-pill" and the Progestasert intrauterine device (IUD).[75]

Once implanted, Norplant and Jadelle slowly release levonorgestrel (a low-dosage progestin used in many birth control pills), which is an abortifacient that prevents implantation of the developing human being in the uterus.

Norplant and Jadelle both have a three-fold mode of action. They inhibit ovulation, thicken cervical mucus, and alter the endometrium (the lining of the uterus) so that its degree of receptivity to the blastocyst (early developing human being) is significantly decreased.[76] A test of 41 women using Norplant for one year showed that 24 women experienced a suppressed uterine lining, 12 had an irregular uterine lining, and only five had normal (unchanged) uterine linings.[77] Thus, Norplant had a clearly abortifacient effect in up to 88 percent of the women tested.

The mode of action of both Norplant and Jadelle are based upon a timed release of the abortifacient levonorgestrel. This means that a woman using either will occasionally ovulate and conceive, and will therefore be aborting at least once or twice each year.

Norplant/Jadelle's Side Effects. According to Dr. John Hildebrand, an expert in human reproduction, the synthetic hormone in NORPLANT

... louses up the lining of the uterus. It produces exhaustion of the endometrium, depriving the lining of the uterus of the hormonal support that it needs. [The drug] disturbs all factors in the blood system. The drug is long-acting because the body can't digest these new analogs. The body sees this as an abnormal thing and tries to get rid of it. When it can't, it sets up violent reactions inside us. In the sense that we are all different - that our enzymes are as individual as our fingerprints - nobody can be certain of the effects this drug will have.[78]

We are now beginning to get an idea of the galaxy of negative side effects suffered by Norplant users. Since Jadelle releases exactly the same chemicals, we can expect its users to suffer the same side effects.

Although they naturally vary widely from woman to woman, the range of typical Norplant side effects generally include;

- changes in the endometrium (uterine lining);

- odd menstrual bleeding patterns;

- spotting between menstrual periods;

- missed or prolonged menstrual periods;

- dizziness;

- thrombosis (formation of blood clots);

- liver dysfunction;
- headaches;
- sudden weight gain or loss;
- ectopic pregnancy;
- nervousness;
- nausea;
- breast pain;
- hirsutism (abnormal body hair growth);
- high blood pressure;
- arm numbness;
- allergic/immune reactions;
- "migration" of the six polymer capsules; and
- ironically, a decreased sexual appetite.[79]

One Texas survey showed that eight percent of Norplant users experienced pseudo-tumor cerebri, a condition where increased fluid pressure in the brain crushes the optic nerve and causes partial or complete permanent blindness.[80]

A study conducted in Singapore concluded that after one year of use, women "... may have an increased predisposition to thrombosis as evidenced by significant increase in platelet count and aggregability." The results also show that NORPLANT acceptors may have an enhanced potential for hypercoagulation ... "[81] Another study showed that there was a significant increase (58%) in bilirubin in women who used NORPLANT for a year, indicating that the abortifacient may cause serious liver dysfunction.[82]

The United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has warned that NORPLANT "... should not be used by women who have acute liver disease, unexplained vaginal bleeding, breast cancer, or blood clots in the legs, lungs, or eyes."

Groups that were already deeply involved in abortion, contraception, and population control predictably downplayed the side effects of the drug in their literature. The April 1990 issue of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) newsletter Medical Bulletin stated that NORPLANT's most serious side effects were weight gain and a "... greater risk that the pregnancy will be ectopic than if the user were not using NORPLANT." The article failed to mention impacts such as allergic/immune reactions, 'migration' of the six polymer capsules, or most of the side effects listed above.

Norplant: Targeting the Poor Worldwide. It is standard operating procedure (SOP) for contraceptive manufacturers and population controllers to target Third World women with new or untested abortifacients. In addition, the old high-dose birth control pills and various IUDs that have proven too dangerous for North American women to use are shipped overseas by the tens of millions.

At the turn of the 19th century, the sun never set on the British Empire. If an empire could be defined as control of the wombs of poor women in developing countries, there is a new empire upon which the sun never sets - the empire painstakingly constructed by Western contraceptive imperialists.

Since the mid-1970s, the United States has been deeply committed to both domestic and foreign population control programs. More than twenty billion dollars of our tax money have been used to implement many questionable programs, including, most notably, the Chinese forced-abortion atrocity.[83]

The National Security Council (NSC) is the highest U.S. bureaucracy charged with the planning and direction of foreign policy. One of the most vital aspects of this policy is population control.

One highly sensitive NSC document entitled "Implications of Worldwide Population Growth for U.S. Security and Overseas Interests" was written in 1974 and only declassified in late 1990. This document served as the foundation for our country's anti-natalist population philosophy.

The document stated that "Commitment to population stabilization will only take place when leaders of less-developed countries (LDCs) clearly see the negative impact of unrestricted population growth and believe it is possible to deal with this question through governmental action."

The document also suggested that United States food assistance might be made conditional depending on the LDC's population control performance but that "... it is important in style as well as substance to avoid the appearance of coercion ... mandatory programs may be needed and that we should be considering these possibilities now."

In 1976, the Interagency Task Force on Population Policy for the Under Secretaries Committee of the NSC found that "In some cases, strong direction has involved incentives such as payment to acceptors for sterilization, or disincentives such as giving low priorities in the allocation of housing and schooling to those with larger families. Such direction is the sine-qua-non [essential essence] of an effective program."

Anti-lifers betray their racist and eugenicist roots most plainly when they express their fear of the population increase in developing countries. They believe that the currently poor nations with large populations will eventually attain massive economic power and will present unwanted competition for the United States.

This fear was explicitly outlined in National Security Study Memo 200 [NSSM 200], or the "Kissinger Report". This document clearly outlined how and why the United States felt that it had to hold down the populations of developing nations;

The U.S. economy will require large and increasing amounts of minerals from abroad, especially from less developed countries. That fact gives the U.S. enhanced interest in the political, economic, and social stability of the supplying countries. Wherever a lessening of population pressures through reduced birth rates can increase the prospects for such stability, population policy becomes relevant to resource supplies and to the economic interests of the United States. ... It is vital that the effort to develop and strengthen a commitment on the part of the LDC ["lesser developed countries"] leaders not be seen by them as an industrialized country policy to keep their strength down or to reserve resources for use by the "rich" countries. Development of such a perception could create a serious backlash adverse to the cause of population stability. ... The conclusion of this view is that mandatory [population control] programs may be needed and that we should be considering these possibilities now. ... On what basis should such food resources then be provided? Would food be considered an instrument of national power? Will we be forced to make choices as to whom we can reasonably assist, and if so, should population efforts be a criterion for such assistance? ... No country has reduced its population growth without resorting to abortion. ... Pay women in the LDCs to have abortions as a method of family planning. ...

The parallels to the U.S.-funded Chinese program (described in Chapter 4, "China's Forced Abortion Program") are obvious.

Norplant Used in Developing Nations. Norplant was the final product of 24 years of Population Council research. In 1990, the USA became the 17th country to accept it for distribution. The abortifacient had been tested continuously since 1972 on women in several developing countries, including Haiti, Indonesia, Brazil and Bangladesh, by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), which provided most of the $20 million in research costs.[84]

At a 1990 meeting of the American Public Health Association (APHA), Dr. Shayam Thapa claimed that, although doctors were eager to implant the drug, only one-fourth of Bangladeshi women who wanted the capsules removed could find a doctor willing or trained to do so.[85]

In 1990, the Hai News, a Korean newspaper, reported that UBINIG, a Bangladeshi health advocacy group, had uncovered "gross violations of medical ethics" in the testing and distribution of Norplant under the auspices of the USAID and Family Health International (FHI). Medical personnel did not inform Bangladeshi women that the drug was experimental and that it had possible side effects. They bribed many women to use the drug and instructed them not to report side effects so the test program results would be skewed to "show" lower rates of health problems. When women became too sick to avoid seeking medical attention, the medics withheld proper care from them, and told them that they would have to refund the cost of the Norplant if it was removed - an impossibility since this sum was more than a year's wage. Many women suffered severe eye problems and even blindness, yet the summary reports on the effectiveness of Norplant contained no mention of these side effects.[86] devices on poor women from developing countries so that any mistakes or serious health problems are easier to cover up. One advantage to this tactic is that poor women from foreign countries have little recourse when their health is destroyed or damaged by this kind of testing, because the companies bring lots of American dollars to their homelands and any agitation against the programs can be easily suppressed by local governments.

In the opinion of the 'new abortionists,' it is just too bad if their 'guinea pigs' are damaged. As one gynecologist who was testing Norplant heartlessly proclaimed, 95% of our clients belong to the very poor class. They are responsible for giving birth four or five times. Since they cannot remember to take birth control pills every day, long-acting contraceptives are much better for them. ... In order to have a good thing there is always a price to pay. If two or three women die - what's the problem? The population will be reduced.[87]

When the birth control product is judged safe for American women to use, the product is marketed in the United States.

If the product is used by American women but later turns out to be unhealthy despite the initial program of foreign testing, the pharmaceutical companies flood developing countries with their abortifacient devices and drugs in the name of "foreign aid" and "population control." They have taken this course of action with several IUDs, the injectable abortifacient Depo-Provera, and many brands of high-dose birth control pills.

If this is not an overt and concrete expression of racism, what is?

For more information on various forms of United States "contraceptive imperialism," see Chapter 18, "The International Abortion Situation."

Norplant Used in the United States. Immediately after Norplant was introduced to the American public, several judges ordered women (always poor Blacks) onto the drug because they had been convicted of abusing previous children. In one such case, Tulare County (California) Superior Court Judge Howard R. Broadman gave Darlene Johnson a very simple but coercive choice: Be chemically sterilized with Norplant or go to jail for two to four years.[88]

Nor did it take state legislatures long to perceive the dramatic possibilities of using the drug. Kansas H.B. 2089 identified Norplant by name in an act that would provide help to female welfare recipients only if they agreed to be implanted.[89]

With so many influential people pushing abortion and birth control on poor minority women, it is inevitable that their secret racist agenda will slip out occasionally. Strangely, these stories seem to have little effect on the blissfully unaware public. Typically, those pro-abortion groups that claim to be fighting for the rights of minorities ignore them entirely.

In a classic recent example, deputy editorial page editor Donald Kimelman of the Philadelphia Enquirer stated in a December 12, 1990 article, chillingly entitled "Can Contraception Reduce the Underclass?," that

As we read these two stories [about Norplant and Black poverty], we asked ourselves: Dare we mention them in the same breath? To do so might be considered deplorably insensitive, perhaps raising the specter of eugenics. But it would be worse to avoid drawing the logical conclusion that foolproof contraception could be invaluable in breaking the cycle of inner city poverty - one of America's greatest challenges.[90]

Kimelman went on to suggest that welfare mothers could be implanted with Norplant for free and perhaps receive increased welfare benefits as a reward. He apparently failed to realize that this was one of the first elements of the coercive Chinese population program that now features mandatory sterilization and forced abortions even in the ninth month of pregnancy.

We might ask ourselves this question: If Kimelman and his fellow "thinkers" were truly concerned about poverty in general, why do they not also recommend the use of Norplant for poor White women?

Others apparently asked this same question. Vanessa Williams, president of the Philadelphia chapter of the National Association of Black Journalists, called Kimelman's article "A tacit endorsement of slow genocide." [91]

Inquirer columnist Steve Lopez sarcastically suggested on December 16th that contraception would not reduce the underclass quite so fast as "just shooting them."

The Philadelphia Enquirer publicly apologized for its racist article on the 22nd of December, after a wave of complaints. But the damage had been done; the racist thinking of the pro-abortionists and some very influential people had been exposed once again.

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: (5) The RU-486 Abortion Pill--Part 1

 SHARE

(5) The RU-486 Abortion Pill.

Dreams of an "Ultimate Pill." At one time, the lives of preborn children had some value to the pharmaceutical companies, which actually worked hard to avoid injuring them as they concocted their various chemical mixtures.

As national morality loosened, especially after abortion was legalized, such companies no longer needed to consider the effects of various "birth control" methods on the life of the developing human being. The health of the mother became the only criterion.

And so, the ideal "contraceptive" gradually evolved into a device or drug that would not only prevent ovulation and fertilization, but eliminate early pregnancies as well. In the 1970s, Garrett Hardin and other population theorists dreamed of such a major "contraceptive" of the future, which would most likely take the form of an abortifacient pill.[92]

With RU-486, it seems that the anti-life genie has granted their unholy wish.

The Origin and History of RU-486. The original manufacturer of the RU-486 abortion pill (originally labeled ZK 95.890, but now classified as Roussel-Uclaf 38486, or RU-486 for short) was the French company Groupe Roussel-Uclaf, a subsidiary of the West German pharmaceutical giant Hoechst.

It is a little-known but revealing fact that Hoechst changed its name from the original "I.G. Farben" after World War II in an attempt to shake its loathsome reputation. I.G. Farben made a tidy profit during the war from the manufacture of the cyanide gas Zyklon-B, used to exterminate Jews and other people in the "showers" of the Nazi death camps.

Now Farben's descendant will make a profit by exterminating millions of preborn babies.

Ironically, the Pill's inventor, Etienne-Emile Baulieu of France's National Institute of Health and Medical Research, is Jewish. He was born in 1926 to a doctor named Leon Blum, and changed his name in 1942, presumably to avoid being killed by the Zyklon-B gas made by the same company he works for today.

On September 23, 1988, the French government, which just happens to own 36.25 percent of Roussel's stock, approved distribution of the abortion pill on the condition that it be administered only in approved medical centers and only until the seventh week of pregnancy. The manufacturer was immediately swamped with tens of thousands of pro-life protest letters, and more than 20,000 French pro-life activists marched in Paris streets in opposition to the Pill.[93]

For months, Dr. Edouard Sakiz, Roussel-Uclaf chairman, watched pickets outside his window at work. Pro-lifers publicly condemned his new product as "a chemical weapon that would poison the still-tiny children of a billion Third World mothers." Jean-Marie Cardinal Lustiger, Archbishop of Paris, condemned the Pill as being "extremely dangerous," both physically and morally.

On October 26, 1988, about one month after government approval of the Pill, Roussel-Uclaf suspended distribution in China and France because of the "outcry of public opinion at home and abroad." Andre Ullman of Roussel-Uclaf, who helped develop the Pill, said that a boycott figured heavily in the company's decision to stop making the drug.

The predictable backlash from the left wing was incredibly vehement, even by its low standards. Faye Wattleton, former president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, squawked that the suspension was "... a tragic display of cowardice and a shocking blow to women around the world." [94]

Liberation, France's largest left-wing daily newspaper, sneered at the Catholic Church in its front-page article entitled "The Diktat of the Bigots." The political weekly L'Evenement du Jeudi sniveled about "... the brutal return of the Inquisition." The French Family Planning Movement (including, of course, Planned Parenthood) trotted out its usual mix of tired slogans and twisted grammar to condemn "... this new assault by conservative religious forces. After having set the fires of intolerance with the Scorcese film ["The Last Temptation of Christ"], the traditionalists and Catholic reactionaries now want to impose their reactionary laws on women." [95]

Meanwhile, Baulieu was whipping up support for his death pill at the World Congress of Gynecology and Obstetrics in Rio de Janeiro before 9,500 doctors and researchers. He denounced Roussel-Uclaf and called the decision to stop making the Pill "morally scandalous," a description that amused many French pro-lifers. Apparently, Baulieu has no problem at all engineering the deaths of millions. According to him, this genocide is perfectly legal and moral.

Then, on October 29, 1988, the French press reported that the government ordered the company to resume distribution of the death pill. Health Minister Claude Evin, quoting France's 1975 law legalizing abortion, stated that the Pill was "the moral property of the women of France." Evin had invoked, for the very first time, a 1968 French law that allows the government to directly intervene when the "interests of public health" are endangered. Evin simpered that "I was doing what I could to make sure France did not surrender to pressure groups animated by archaic ideologies" [such as Christianity]?

The press lied about this incident, saying that the French government demanded that Roussel resume distribution of the Pill. In reality, the government merely requested the company to resume distribution. In the interest of fairness, however, it must be noted that the 'request' was coercive - Roussel-Uclaf would lose its license to manufacture the Pill to another company if it did not comply with the government's wishes.

Baulieu, the killer pill's inventor, was now in the spotlight and parroted the usual pro-death lies. "One hundred and fifty thousand women die annually from botched abortions. RU-486 could save the lives of thousands of women," he said. When asked for documentation, Baulieu simply ignored the questions in the pro-abort manner easily recognized all over the world.

Incredibly, pro-abortion groups even began to promote Baulieu for a Nobel Prize nomination! It would be interesting indeed to see how the Nobel Committee would justify elevating Baulieu to the same stature as Mother Teresa of Calcutta, who labored to save life rather than destroy it, and who condemned abortion during her Nobel Prize acceptance lecture.

This dramatic move by the French government relieved Roussel-Uclaf of any responsibility for its actions, and company spokesmen merely shrugged their shoulders and said, in effect, "What can we do? The government has ordered us to continue." This total lack of resistance to government intrusion into its affairs made it quite plain that Roussel-Uclaf welcomed the diversion of attention and the shifting of moral responsibility to the French government so that it could get on with mass production of its astronomically profitable killing pill.

The invention of the abortion pill caused great excitement among pro-abortion groups in the United States. Several groups whose sole or primary purpose was to propagandize the public soon sprang up, including Every Child a Wanted Child (California) and the Reproductive Health Technologies Project (Washington, D.C.).

When the French government ordered the continued production of the Pill, Kate Michelman of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL), attempting to cram as many trite slogans as possible into a single sentence, enthused that "The French government has taken a strong stand against intolerance and in favor of the health of women. We support this action and the message it sends to those who seek to impose their will on all of us."

Roussel-Uclaf spokesmen have insisted that their product was not intended to be a morning-after pill. Those familiar with the pro-abortion mentality know for certain that it indeed will become a morning-after pill, a convenient birth control method for women who don't want to be subject to the side effects of the regular birth control pill. Of course, the ultimate pro-abortion objective is to simply have women take an early abortion pill each month. A writer for the pro-abortion front group 'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC) says that

If RU-486 is also used monthly, proliferators would have a hard time convincing the public that the drug isn't just another contraceptive. Indeed, a 1982 New York Times story on Baulieu and RU-486 described the drug as "a new birth control pill." Planned Parenthood released a "Fact Sheet" in October that refers to RU-486 as a type of "interceptor (luteal contraception)." If most people hear a new drug described as "birth control," they'll think of the Pill and IUD, not abortion. ... If more women come to use RU-486 than traditional contraceptives, abortion would be the preferred method of birth control in the United States.[96]

A total of 793 French clinics were initially authorized to use the abortion pill. The cost for an RU-486 abortion was about $256, eighty percent of which was borne by the Socialist government.[97]

However, Roussel-Uclaf initially distributed the Pill only in France and the People's Republic of China, because the company leadership was not eager to start a worldwide debate. In reality, they were particularly concerned about the financial muscle of American pro-life groups.

The Archbishop of Lyon, Cardinal Albert Decourtray, summed up the feelings of Christians everywhere neatly as he said that "The Pill now produces a process which allows abortion to seem like a contraceptive. In other words, it tends purely and simply to numb the conscience about both the act itself and its moral gravity. A follower of Christ cannot accept it."

In November of 1988, the Vatican clarified its definition of abortion to include the use of drugs like RU-486, which are used specifically to kill the unborn child. Such use, they said, is an excommunicable offense for Catholics, the same as procuring a surgical 'elective' abortion. For further information on this teaching, read Chapter 9, "Catholic Church Teachings on Abortion "

Church Teachings on Abortion.

An affiliate of Roussel-Uclaf, Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceuticals of Somerville, New Jersey, holds the option rights for the drug in the United States. Hoechst-Roussel is a part of Hoechst Celanese, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Hoechst AG. Celanese has average annual sales of $1.7 billion.

The United Nations World Health Organization (WHO) conducted detailed tests with RU-486 and a similar drug, ZK 98.734, produced by Schering AG.[98] It is obvious that WHO would have no particular interest in RU-486 unless the Pill would aid its population control programs. Baulieu has cited his own concern about the "complications of overpopulation" as one of the reasons he developed the abortion pill.[99]

On September 28, 2000, the RU-486 abortion pill was approved for use in the United States. After one year, only 12 percent of all abortionists had provided the drug to women. Most likely it was not more popular because of two reasons: (1) it requires at least three visits to the abortionists, and (2) it is about $150 more expensive than an early surgical abortion.[100]

The Population Council tested RU-486 on 2,100 American women between October 1994 and December 1995. This trial deliberately excluded women over 35 years of age and those who smoked more than ten cigarettes each day. As a result, the Food and Drug Administration advises doctors to "treat these patients with caution," and also to be very careful with women taking anticonvulsants or anticoagulants.

The Population Council gave the rights to produce RU-486 to the New York-based marketing firm Danco Laboratories, which plans to sell a chemical equivalent under the name Mifeprix or "Early Option." The Shanghai-based Hua Lian Pharmaceutical Company makes the drug compound.[101]

Since the RU-486 abortion pill was approved for general use in the United States, nearly a million preborn children have lost their lives to it, as shown below.

This table shows 35,300 medical abortions for the first six months of 2001. The text below this box on page 13 states that 72 percent of these abortions were done with mifepristone (RU-486). This means that about $(35,300 \times 2 \times .72) = 51,000$ RU-486 abortions were performed in the United States in 2001.

(2) In reply to an inquiry, a May 29, 2007 e-mail message from Cynthia Summer, DrPH, of Danco Laboratories, stated that about 725,000 women have used Mifeprix for medical abortion in the United States during the time period 2001-2006, inclusive. She did not have the year-by-year breakout for these numbers, so the numbers for 2002-2007 are estimates based on a standard growth curve.

How RU-486 Works. RU-486's scientific name is mifepristone. It imitates progesterone, the hormone that signals the uterus to become receptive to the fertilized egg. The abortion pill is used in tandem with a prostaglandin that prepares the uterus for evacuation.

RU-486 contains a progesterone analogue (imposter) that "plugs in" to the uterine progesterone receptors, but does not deliver the message that progesterone is supposed to transfer naturally. These hormone impostors are commonly labeled "anti-hormones."

Once the anti-hormone has occupied the progesterone receptors, the blastocyst (early growing human being) is denied attachment and simply starves for want of nutrients and oxygen. He or she is expelled after several days. This mechanism of action works to kill preborn children in the first eight weeks of pregnancy.

Most abortion pills, including RU-486, are about 80 percent effective when used by themselves and about 95 percent effective when accompanied by one or two subsequent injections of synthetic prostaglandin E or Sulprotone. The abortion pills are used to kill babies of less than five weeks gestation, and their efficiency decreases dramatically past seven weeks' gestation.

Naturally, pro-abortionists know the RU-486 pill is a true abortifacient, and they know, in fact, that it was designed to be a true abortifacient. They recognize the value of lying to the public about its intended effects because they know the public is much more comfortable with contraception than with abortion.

For example, the National Abortion Federation (NAF) says in an article entitled "Successful Strategies: Managing the Media"

When polls have been conducted on RU-486, the new French pill, the results vary depending on how the question is asked. If RU-486 is referred to as an 'abortion pill,' it has significantly less support than if it is called a new form of birth control. In many polls, the description can change support by as much as 15-20 points and determine if a majority of those polled are in favor of the Pill.[102]

Etienne-Emile Baulieu has said "I don't like abortion and I don't like talking about it. I am a physician and would rather talk about saving life. I am not really for abortion, I am for women ... I resent it when people present the very early interruption of pregnancy as killing a baby, morally or physically. I think it's a crime to say that." [103]

In order to blur the line between contraception and abortion, anti-lifers commonly call abortion pills "menses regulators," "post-coital contraceptives," "emergency contraceptives" and "contragestives."

In case there is any confusion, we can simply quote the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL, now 'NARAL Pro-Choice America'), which has said that "RU-486 is properly called an 'abortifacient.' Because it is a drug that can induce a menstrual period after the implantation of a fertilized egg in the uterus, it can terminate a woman's pregnancy in its earliest stages." [104]

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: (6) The Methotrexate/Misoprostol-Cytotec (M&M) Combination

 SHARE

(6) The Methotrexate/Misoprostol-Cytotec (M&M) Combination.

One abortifacient in particular has emerged recently as the next contender for the widespread killing of preborn children - the methotrexate/misoprostol combination under investigation by Dr. Richard U. Hausknecht of the Mount Sinai School of Medicine and funded by the Population Council.

This drug combination is 96 percent lethal through nine weeks of pregnancy. First the woman receives an injection of methotrexate. This drug inhibits cell growth and division and works by interfering with the growth of the embryo and placenta by blocking folic acid (Vitamin B) uptake. It has been used since 1985 to successfully terminate ectopic pregnancies and treat cancer, psoriasis and rheumatoid arthritis.

Five to seven days after the methotrexate injection, the woman returns to the abortionist's office for a vaginal suppository containing misoprostol (Cytotec), an ulcer drug that causes uterine contractions. Within two days, cramping and bleeding occur, followed by the abortion, usually at home. Then the woman returns to the abortionist's office a fourth time to confirm that the pregnancy is ended. In about ten percent of all cases, a second suppository is required. If this also fails, a suction abortion is done.

Both methotrexate and misoprostol have been approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for non-abortion purposes. No further government oversight is necessary because any drug approved by the FDA for any use may be used by any licensed physician for any purpose, although "off-label" uses may expose them to liability.[120]

The confirmed side effects of methotrexate include;

- liver and chromosomal damage;
- infertility;
- birth defects;
- liver toxicity;
- induced cancer;
- convulsions;
- vomiting;
- diarrhea;
- stomatitis;
- severe blood disorders;
- behavioral abnormalities;
- pneumonitis;
- fever;
- coughing; and;
- death.[121]

The documented side effects of misoprostol (Cytotec) include;

- spotting;
- cramps;
- hypermenorrhea (excessive menstrual bleeding);
- menstrual disorders;
- nausea;
- ...

- vomiting; and
- severe headaches.[122]

(7) "Emergency Contraception."

Introduction and History. For decades, pro-abortionists and "family planners" have searched for new and better ways to kill early preborn babies with chemical compounds and devices already approved by the Food and Drug Administration. The methotrexate/misoprostol combination described above is one of the results of this ongoing search.

Anti-lifers have also promoted another type of abortifacient potion, the "Yuzpe Regimen," which consists of women taking combined ethinyl estradiol/levonorgestrel pills at a higher than normal dose. This kind of abortifacient is ideal for women who are forgetful or lazy about taking their pills.[123]

Pro-abortionists dishonestly call this "emergency contraception" - another attempt to erase the distinction between true contraception and abortifacient action. Pills taken under the Yuzpe and similar regimens are often called "emergency contraceptive pills (ECPs)," "morning-after pills (MAPs)" and "postcoital contraception."

When pro-lifers hear pro-abortionists using these and similar terms, they can be sure that they are referring to abortifacient cocktails.

Remember that this is how the anti-lifers work. They create a phony "crisis" in order to enact their agendas, and then work hard to make sure that the original "emergency" becomes an accepted routine. For example, in France, anti-lifers were pushing "emergency contraception" in 1998. By November 2000, the French parliament voted to allow school nurses to distribute the morning-after abortifacient pill in junior and senior high schools to girls with no lower age limit [in other words, girls as young as ten or eleven years old]. In January 2002, the government decreed that French girls as young as 11 years old can get the morning-after abortifacient pill for free in pharmacies, without a prescription or parental authorization.[124]

Since the medical profession switched the definition of "conception" from fertilization to implantation in the mid-1960s for the sole purpose of paving the way for new abortifacients, it does not feel it is lying when it claims that "emergency contraception" does not cause abortions. Contraceptive Technology Update insists that Scientists believe the [morning after] procedure works in one of two ways: Either by keeping the ovary from releasing an egg, or by changing the uterus in such a way that the egg may not attach and develop into a pregnancy. MAP does not cause an abortion ... RU 486 is different from MAP as it is used later and causes an already implanted ovum/embryo to detach from the uterine lining, which is why it has been called the "abortion pill" [emphasis in original].[125]

Yet More Empty Promises. One of the primary tactics anti-lifers use to achieve their agendas is to make all kinds of unsubstantiated promises to the public if only they are allowed to have what they want.

They promised that contraception would not lead to a degradation of marriage.

They promised that abortion would lead to healthier women and a decrease in child abuse.

They promised that the RU-486 abortion pill would cure a wide range of diseases, from heart disease to cancer

And now, they are promising that "Emergency contraceptives could cut in half the number of unwanted pregnancies in the U.S. and prevent 800,000 abortions every year." [126]

Are we foolishly going to believe their empty promises yet again?

The Teachings of the Catholic Church on Abortifacients

The Catholic Church has clarified its teachings on abortion to encompass new abortion compounds and methods. This became necessary due to the production of various new abortifacients and fabricated definitions of life promulgated by the medical profession.

On November 24, 1988, The Pontifical Commission for the Authentic Interpretation of the Code of Canon Law declared that abortion is not only "the expulsion of the immature fetus," but is also "the killing of the same fetus in any way and at any time from the moment of conception."

"Conception" in this case refers not to implantation, but to fertilization.

This definition of abortion forbids the use of any of the following:

- all oral contraceptive pills because every oral contraceptive pill made today causes early abortions part of the time;
- mini-pills, morning-after pills and true abortion pills such as RU-486;
- injectable or insertable abortifacients such as Norplant and Depo-Provera; and
- all intrauterine devices (IUDs), all of which are abortifacients and act by preventing the implantation of the already-fertilized zygote.

As for the RU-486 abortion pill, Albert Cardinal Decourtray of Lyon summed up the feelings of Christians everywhere: "The Pill now produces a process which allows abortion to seem like a contraceptive. In other words, it tends purely and simply to numb the conscience about both the act itself and its moral gravity. A follower of Christ cannot accept it."

John Rock. The Time Has Come [Avon Books, 959 Eighth Avenue, New York, New York 10019, 1963], 186 pages, 75 cents originally. This book is profoundly interesting from a historical point of view because the author, one of the original developers of the birth control pill, tells us why we Americans (and Catholics in particular) should accept the birth control pill. The book, written five years before the encyclical Humanae Vitae was released, was published when birth control was being debated as hotly as abortion is being debated now. It is also fascinating because it gives precisely the same reasoning as pro-abortionists do now. The author inadvertently gives us a classic treatise on the intimate connections between abortion and birth control.

Barbara Seaman. The Doctors' Case Against the Pill [Garden City, New York: Doubleday & Company, 1980], 230 pages. This book, which comes highly recommended by the pro-abortion Neofeminist group The Boston Women's Health Book Collective (of Our Body fame), covers in great detail the many aspects of the debate surrounding the birth control pill, with the vast majority of the emphasis on the physical dangers associated with it - blood clots, heart disease, strokes, diabetes, cancer, jaundice, gum disease, sterility, genetic changes, irritability, depression, urinary infections, and arthritis. Alternatives to the Pill are also discussed.

Facts of Life: Chapter 3: Exceptions for Abortion: Advantages and Disadvantages of the Two Primary Pro-Life Strategies

SHARE

Advantages and Disadvantages of the Two Primary Pro-Life Strategies.

Overview. Pro-life groups and individuals generally advocate two overall strategies: The "pragmatic" (also called "practical" or "realistic") and the "full protection" (also called "absolutist," "purist" or "no exceptions") approaches.

The "Pragmatic" Strategy. Currently, the more popular of these two strategies is the "pragmatic" approach, which asserts that pro-life activists should work for whatever protective laws they can get passed in light of prevailing local conditions. In a liberal state, the best that pro-lifers may think they can do is pass a parental notification law, work for stricter state regulation of abortion mills, end public abortion funding, or enact humane fetal disposal laws. This strategy assumes all abortions are bad, but that it may be possible to save some babies with a partial abortion ban or with stricter clinic regulations.

The main advantage of the "pragmatic" strategy is obvious. The abortion industry can only work at peak efficiency if there are absolutely no restrictions on it. Any restriction or regulation of abortion centers by the State will increase costs and decrease profits. In the short run, since most abortionists are motivated by money, this saves preborn children.

Another important advantage of "pragmatic" activism is that it is more likely to bring short-term victories that keep individuals and organizations motivated. Unfortunately, many pro-lifers have been infected with the "win or else" mentality, so they become lax and unmotivated if they cannot immediately see the fruits of their labors. This is why 80 to 90 percent of new pro-life activists "burn out" within one year. It is the rare person who can doggedly carry on for years in the face of a long string of defeats, or who can continue working without actually seeing babies saved as the result of his work. Almost everyone needs an occasional victory to boost morale.

Advocates of the "pragmatic" strategy point out that a total ban on abortions in the United States and most other Western countries is simply out of the question under current conditions. Even if such a law were passed by a legislature or enacted by popular vote, it would inevitably be struck down by the courts. "Pragmatists" assert that it is far more likely that abortion will ultimately be banned by an "incrementalist" strategy that takes one small step at a time.

The main disadvantage of the "pragmatic" strategy is subtle but extremely important. If pro-lifers give the impression that they are simply working with the State to regulate baby-killing, the credibility of the movement will be destroyed or irreparably damaged. Since pro-lifers claim that all babies are equally valuable, they may appear to be hypocritical to try to save some while apparently abandoning others.

This is a misperception that pro-abortion groups emphasize for propaganda purposes. For example, the pro-abortion front group 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC, formerly RCAR) says, "Opponents of abortion rights walk a fine line within their own movement when they condone any abortion. Based on their own definition, they are guilty of being accessories to "murder" in certain circumstances by accepting rape and incest exceptions." [1]

Any intelligent person can see the fallacy of this kind of thinking. One useful analogy is the "sinking ocean liner." If hundreds of people are in danger of drowning and all you have is a six-person life raft, the right thing to do is to save a handful of people. RCAR would have the public think this means the rescuers "condoned" the drowning of all of the other people and were therefore accessories to their deaths, which is obviously illogical. RCRC's propaganda is clearly aimed at goading pro-lifers into formulating and supporting legislation that could not possibly stand a court challenge.

The "Full Protection" Strategy. The second pro-life strategy is the "full protection" approach, which works toward a complete ban on all abortions without compromise. "Full protection" pro-life activists refuse to willingly yield any preborn children to the abortionists's knife.

The most crucial advantage to this strategy is that it is consistent in holding that every preborn life is equally precious. In the long run, the public will perceive the pro-life movement as having greater integrity. This steadfast and absolute adherence to the sanctity of life in all cases may indeed lead to ultimate victory.

However, the strategy's main disadvantage is that its adherents must be willing to suffer a long string of defeats, with few preborn children being saved in the interim.

Another point is central to the debate between "pragmatic" and "full protection" pro-lifers. Even if a paramount Human Life Amendment (HLA) were passed by Congress and withstood court challenges, abortions would continue by the hundreds of thousands each year. As described in Chapter 1, gender feminists have vowed to set up "underground railroads" and "menstrual extraction" clinics in order to bypass any law that protects preborn children. History has also shown us that illegal abortionists operated in plush offices with the full knowledge of police for decades before Roe v. Wade. All over the world police, district attorneys, judges and juries allow "illegal" abortion mills to operate with impunity. What evidence do we have that the situation would be different after abortion is criminalized? In reality, it will be much worse, since society has become accustomed to the "convenience" of legalized abortion, and will strongly resent having it removed.

What is the Answer? Both "pragmatic" and "full protection" pro-lifers see every baby as equally precious in the sight of God. Contrary to what pro-abortionists say, trying to save some babies does not imply abandoning others.

Evangelium Vitae [¶73,90] teaches,

... when it is not possible to overturn or completely abrogate a pro-abortion law, an elected official, whose absolute personal opposition to procured abortion was well known, could licitly support proposals aimed at limiting the harm done by such a law and at lessening its negative consequences at the level of general opinion and public morality. This does not in fact represent an illicit cooperation with an unjust law, but rather a legitimate and proper attempt to limit its evil aspects ... the Church encourages political leaders, starting with those who are Christians, not to give in, but to make those choices which, taking into account what is realistically attainable, will lead to the re-establishment of a just order in the defense and promotion of the value of life ... Here it must be noted that it is not enough to remove unjust laws. The underlying causes of attacks on life have to be eliminated, especially by ensuring proper support for families and motherhood. A family policy must be the basis and driving force of all social policies policies.

It must be noted that Evangelium Vitae is specifically written to address the question of an elected official whose absolute personal opposition to procured abortion was well known. Pro-lifers should always advocate personhood and all of its protections for every pre-born child. In helping elected officials who meet the criteria specified in EV ¶¶73,90, any proposed legislation must be in keeping with the following two principles:

1. The legislation must treat all preborn children equally. When working on legislation or litigation, pro-lifers must treat every preborn child with equal dignity. Every preborn baby, regardless of health or circumstances surrounding conception, is equally precious in the eyes of God, and therefore every preborn baby is deserving of equal protection. Laws which classify some babies as not as worthy of protection as others (as with fetal deformity, rape and incest exceptions) are inherently illicit. Parental consent laws are also illicit, because it can never be allowable for a grandparent to give permission to execute his or her own grandchild.

By contrast, imperfect legislation does not divide preborn babies into classes. It treats all of them equally. Measures that treat all preborn babies as equally valuable involve parental notification, abortion funding cuts, decent burial requirements, laws that require that only licensed physicians commit abortions, and tighter abortion mill regulations.

In summary, pro-lifers may work for imperfect laws, which treat all preborn babies equally. However, they may never work for illicit laws, which divide preborn babies into classes and judge some to be worthy of protection and some unworthy of protection.

2. The legislation must avoid "life" and "health" exceptions. Pro-lifers must always remember that the standard "health of the mother" exception always means abortion on demand in practice. Pro-abortionists use the World Health Organization definition of "maternal health," which is "A state of complete physical, mental, and social well being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity."

Pro-lifers must also not allow pro-abortionists to play the victim and trick them into supporting even a so-called "life of the mother" exception for abortion. Many high-volume abortionists have claimed that all abortions are medically necessary since, as they falsely allege, they are safer than childbirth.[2] Modern medicine has virtually eliminated maternal deaths due to pregnancy, as Alan Guttmacher and Bernard Nathanson have attested. In those extremely rare cases when the mother's life truly is threatened by pregnancy (such as with cancer of the uterus or ectopic pregnancy), she may undergo an operation whose purpose is to save her life, even though the preborn child dies as an indirect result of the procedure. This principle is known as the "double effect," and is described later in this Chapter.

The Bottom Line. In 2002, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF) clarified the duties of Catholics regarding abortion legislation in its "Doctrinal Note on Some Questions Regarding the Participation of Catholics in Political Life." This Note said that

In this context, it must be noted also that a well-formed Christian conscience does not permit one to vote for a political program or an individual law which contradicts the fundamental contents of faith and morals. The Christian faith is an integral unity, and thus it is incoherent to isolate some particular element to the detriment of the whole of Catholic doctrine. A political commitment to a single isolated aspect of the Church's social doctrine does not exhaust one's responsibility towards the common good. Nor can a Catholic think of delegating his Christian responsibility to others; rather, the Gospel of Jesus Christ gives him this task, so that the truth about man and the world might be proclaimed and put into action.

When political activity comes up against moral principles that do not admit of exception, compromise or derogation, the Catholic commitment becomes more evident and laden with responsibility. In the face of fundamental and inalienable ethical demands, Christians must recognize that what is at stake is the essence of the moral law, which concerns the integral good of the human person. This is the case with laws concerning abortion and euthanasia (not to be confused with the decision to forgo extraordinary treatments, which is morally legitimate). Such laws must defend the basic right to life from conception to natural death.

In summary, then, Evangelium Vitae recognizes the distinct limitations and strictures that pro-life politicians must labor under, and it allows them to work for and vote for imperfect legislation. However, no such limitations exist for Catholics who are not directly involved in the political process. The CDF Note quoted above makes it perfectly clear that it is impermissible for Catholics to work for illicit legislation that treats some preborn babies as unworthy of protection.

Never Give Up! Evangelium Vitae recognizes that it will be impossible to ban abortion by either the "full protection" or the "pragmatic" strategy until the family has been strengthened and has regained its proper place as the "sanctuary of life" in society.

As long as a society accepts the anti-life mentality, trying to ban abortion is like trying to empty the ocean with a child's plastic bucket. Pro-abortionists are correct in only one aspect of their thinking: No-one can legislate morality. Changing the laws may help greatly, but is not the final answer to the slaughter of preborn children.

The ultimate answer to the killing is to convert the hearts and minds of each person in society. By working to strengthen Church and family, pro-lifers will eventually rise up and gain control of the courts, the legislatures, the media, the professions and the schools.

Only then will every preborn child be safe.

Until this happens, every pro-life activist should memorize 1 Corinthians 15:58, which tells us "Never give in then, my dear brothers, never admit defeat; keep on working at the Lord's work always, knowing that, in the Lord, you cannot be laboring in vain."

Facts of Life: Chapter 3: Exceptions for Abortion: The Basic Arguments Against "Hard Case" Abortions

The Basic Arguments Against "Hard Case" Abortions.

Introduction. We can make three fundamental logical arguments against all "hard case" abortions.

1. The first is purely practical: The true "hard cases" (life of the mother, rape and incest and fetal defects) are extremely rare, as described below.
2. Pro-abortionists use any law that allows hard case abortions to gain and maintain abortion on demand.
3. Finally, handicapped preborn babies and those conceived through rape and incest, are just as worthy of protection as all other preborn babies.

The following paragraphs expand upon these arguments.

(1) The Rarity of the "Hard Cases." People commonly overestimate the probabilities of very rare catastrophic events such as earthquakes and airplane crashes. People also tend to grossly overestimate the number of abortions committed for the classic "hard cases" of rape and incest, eugenics and life and health of the mother.

Figure 3-1 shows that all "hard cases" combined make up only about 0.7 percent of all abortions committed in the United States today (about one out of every 143 abortions). This means that 99.3 percent of all abortions are committed basically because the mothers think that a child would adversely impact their lifestyles. Figure 3-1 gives some idea of the relative magnitude of the number of "hard case" and "lifestyle" abortions committed in the United States each year.

The numbers in Figure 3-1 are almost exactly confirmed by a survey of more than 120,000 aborting women performed by the states of Louisiana, Nebraska and Utah during the years 1996 to 2004. The combined studies showed the following reasons that women obtained abortions;

State Surveys on Why Women Obtain Abortions

Numbers can only go so far in helping others understand women's motives for having abortions. There is nothing as persuasive as actually surveying women in abortion mills and asking them why they think they must have abortions.

The Alan Guttmacher Institute (AGI), which is the research arm of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) did exactly this in 1988 in the United States.

The AGI surveyed 1,900 women in 38 states who were waiting for abortions, and asked them to fill out a form that detailed their motives for aborting.

The results of this survey are shown in Figure 3-2. They are fascinating and we can draw many conclusions from them. For example:

- According to the women themselves, the "hard cases" of mother's health, rape and incest, and fetal deformity (eugenics) account for only seven percent of all abortions. Pro-lifers should remember that abortionists and health professionals have found that pregnancies that threaten mothers' physical health or lives are very rare indeed. Also, careful study of statistics reveals that very few women become pregnant from rape or incest (see the discussion on the rarity of rape- and incest-caused pregnancies in this Chapter). Finally, we must remember that many women who abort for eugenic reasons may believe their preborn child is severely handicapped based on various prenatal tests, but the odds reveal that most of these babies are perfectly healthy.
- Most women who have abortions, regardless of their ages, say "a baby would change my life." This seemingly innocuous statement shows just how drastically the Culture of Death has infected the thinking of the Western world. Most people now see a baby as a curse and a burden instead of a precious gift. The AGI poll shows that husbands, boyfriends and parents have this attitude, too.
- The percentages of some excuses, such as "I can't afford a baby right now" and "I'm not ready for the responsibility" do not change with age as much as we might have thought. These excuses give us insight into the mentality of women who have abortions, and can increase the effectiveness of sidewalk counselors, crisis pregnancy center or Birthright workers, and others who have contact with mothers contemplating abortion.

In 1998, the AGI published the results of studies showing that "lifestyle" reasons also predominate among aborting women all over the world. Its summary of surveys performed in 26 countries outside the United States showed that the primary reasons for aborting given by the 62,658 women interviewed were:

- "I want no (more) children" (30.9%);
- "I want to postpone childbearing" (21.1%);
- "Having a child will disrupt my education or job" (19.9%)
- "My mental health is at risk" (9.8%);
- "I can't afford a baby now" (6.6%);
- "I have a problem with my relationship or my partner does not want this pregnancy" (4.4%);
- "There is a risk to fetal health" (negative eugenics) (3.1%);

- "I am too young; my parent(s) or other(s) object to my pregnancy" (1.5%);
- "My physical health is at risk" (1.1%); and
- Other reasons (1.6%).[7]

Since rape and incest are included under "other reasons," we may conclude that a maximum of 5.8 percent of all abortions performed in other countries are done for the "hard cases," and a minimum of 94.2 percent are performed essentially to "save the mother's lifestyle."

(2) "Hard Cases:" Wedge for Abortion on Demand. In every one of the 112 countries that now have actual or practical abortion on demand, the first step the pro-abortion forces took was intense lobbying for abortion in the so-called "hard cases" - the mother's life and health, fetal deformity (eugenics) and/or rape and incest.

Any lawyer will tell you "hard cases make bad law," but this principle has not stopped pro-abortionists all over the world from using the classic "hard cases" to introduce first contraception and sterilization, then abortion, then infanticide and finally euthanasia.

In reality, what are the typical 'hard cases' for pro-abortionists?

Try Daniel and Marjorie Reiley Maguire, formerly of 'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC). Daniel said of his wife; "She is anti-abortion, as you would know, but allows for tragic moral exceptions." What are these "tragic moral exceptions?" She says "Such factors as your age, health, financial ability to care for yourself and a child, the health of the fetus, whether you are married or single, the kind of emotional support you have from family or friends, and your plans for your own future need to be considered in deciding if your reasons are justifiable." [8] In other words, any reason at all is a "tragic moral exception" for pro-abortionists [try asking any pro-abortionist activist the question: "Under what conditions would you deny a woman an abortion?," and they will refuse to answer and immediately try to divert attention away from your question].

Once the pro-abortionists secure abortion for any of the "hard cases," they point out the "inconsistency" in the laws in order to justify abortion on demand.

Abortionists expand even a life-of-the-mother exception to mean abortion on demand in practice since, according to the pro-abortion mentality, all "unwanted pregnancies" threaten the life of the mother, as described below.

(3) A Preborn Child is Created in the Image of God. According to Jeremiah 1:5, God tells us, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you; before you came to birth I consecrated you." The Psalmist (139) tells us, "It was You who created my inmost self, and put me together in my mother's womb; for all these mysteries I thank You: For the wonder of myself, for the wonder of Your works."

A child conceived by incest or rape, or a child with a birth defect, is still a child - no matter how violent the crime that led to his existence or how serious his disability. We poor human beings, with our limited intelligence and vision, cannot even begin to perceive the intricacies of God's plans for our own lives, let alone His intentions for a child who has not even been born yet.

child who has not even been born yet.

It is God Himself, and God alone, Who confers value upon a human being. People often say we are created in His image - and misunderstand this phrase to mean His physical image. But our chief similarities to God lie not in our physical resemblance to Him, but in our spiritual likeness to Him.[9] In this way and no other are we all truly equal in the sight of God. And because we are created in His spiritual image, abortion, in a very real sense, amounts to an attack on God Himself.

The Great Commandment is to love one another as God has loved us. Abortion is never an act committed in love, despite what some pro-abortion propagandists tell us. As described above, the main motivations behind abortion are shame, guilt and a desire for a more comfortable lifestyle.

Handicapped children and those conceived by rape and incest present us with a difficult problem. Society's answer to this problem will decide whether we truly reflect the glory of God in our spiritual selves. If we welcome the child who is "less than perfect," in either his appearance or his abilities or the circumstances of his beginning, then we are truly a human - and godly - people. If we reject the child in our midst, we are rejecting God's gift to us - and therefore God Himself.

Abortions Committed to Preserve the Life or Health of the Mother.

The Two-Step Pro-Abortion Strategy. Since the mid-1960s, pro-abortionists have used a time-tested two-step strategy for imposing actual or practical abortion on demand in more than one hundred countries all over the world.

The first step in the grand scheme is to legalize abortion for the "hard cases" of life of the mother, fetal abnormalities and rape and incest. Once a country legalizes abortion for any reason, pro-abortionists find that it is always much easier to impose abortion on demand. So, the second step is usually to legalize abortion "for the mother's health" - which, in practice, is exactly the same as abortion on demand.

Enacting a law to allow so-called "abortion on request" is merely a formality, and does not increase the number of abortions already being committed.

The statutes of 46 States regulating abortion before 1965 explicitly allowed abortion to save the life of the mother. Of the four States that did not explicitly allow an exception for the life of the mother, State courts found that such laws did indeed implicitly allow such an exception. These exceptions were used if there was any doubt at all that a mother's life would be imperiled by a continuing pregnancy; abortionists obviously did not wait for women to reach death's door.

It was generally expected that a woman seeking an abortion to preserve her health was in dire mental or physical condition indeed. However, lawmakers reasoned that it was hardly moral or fair to kill a preborn child for a chronic health problem that was induced by pregnancy and would clear up after delivery. Therefore, before 1965, "mother's health" was generally interpreted to mean a truly life-threatening situation. In other words, a "mother's life" exception was approximately equivalent to a "mother's health" exception.

It is interesting that Margaret Sanger and her American Birth Control League (ABCL) used "hard cases" and the "health of the mother" argument in the fight for contraception as well. One article in the Birth Control Review lamented that

The New York State law, for example, allows physicians to give married patients [contraceptive] advice when it is necessary for the cure or prevention of disease ... What are the health reasons necessitating Birth Control advice? Women with tuberculosis, cancer, diabetes, severe heart disease, epilepsy, kidney disease, insanity, high blood pressure, severe anemia, etc. would endanger their lives and health by repeated pregnancies, ore even, in many cases, a single pregnancy ... From the standpoint of preventive medicine, most women would be considered eligible for Birth Control information just after a severe operation, for a period after confinement, or while nursing a baby. What about the mother who has borne eight children in ten years, whose husband is an habitual drunkard? Shall anyone say that such a mother's health is going to be uninjured by more pregnancies? ...[10]

Why Pro-Lifers Must Oppose "Health of the Mother" Exceptions. At first glance, it may seem heartless for anyone to oppose abortions committed in order to preserve the physical or mental health of women. However, we must remember that abortionists will interpret any loophole - even a "life of the mother" exception - to mean abortion on demand.

Abortionists all over the world use the definition of "maternal health" set by the World Health Organization (WHO): "A state of complete physical, mental, and social well being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity." [11] The U.S. Supreme Court defined maternal health to include "mental health" in its United States v. Vuitch decision (402 U.S. 62, 71-72 (1971)), and expanded this to say that virtually all factors of any type are relevant to the mother's health, including "physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age" (Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 [1973]).

Some pro-abortion judges have gone to even more ridiculous extremes in their mad rush to prop up the abortion 'right.' Perhaps the most absurd example was provided by Judge John F. Dooling when he overturned the Hyde Amendment. Dooling asserted on page 309 of his opinion that "Poverty is a medical condition." [12] Most abortionists take these definitions at face value, because they cover all possible excuses for abortion throughout all nine months of pregnancy;

- Abortionist Warren Hern states, "It appears that "unwantedness" may be regarded as a major complication of pregnancy, with surgical intervention in the form of abortion as the indicated treatment. ... In fact, a woman seeking an abortion is making a circumstantial self-definition of pregnancy as an illness for which she considers the appropriate treatment to be abortion." [13]
- Abortionist Lise Fortier asserts, "Each and every pregnancy threatens a woman's life. From a strict medical viewpoint, every pregnancy should be aborted." [14]
- Abortionist David Zbaraz seconded Fortier's view when he claimed that all first-trimester and most second-trimester abortions are medically necessary since, as he alleges, they are safer than childbirth. [15]
- Abortionist Michael Burnhill of the National Abortion Federation (NAF) said that a "life of the mother" exception would allow him to perform all abortions he considered "medically necessary," all those that would preserve a "condition in which one can actively participate in one's total life ... " [16]
- According to another author, "A Colorado abortion clinic director claimed that his extensive research showed that carrying a pregnancy to term is about 100 times more life threatening than having an abortion. He, therefore, considered any pregnancy life-threatening and used that as justification, certifying that the mother's life was endangered." [17]

Finally, abortionist Jane Hodgson testified under oath that

In my medical judgment, every pregnancy that is not wanted by the patient, I feel there is a medical indication to abort a pregnancy where it is not wanted. In good faith, I would recommend on a medical basis, you understand, that, and it would be 100% ... I think they are all medically necessary ... Occasionally we will advise these women to carry their pregnancy to term, but most of these are medically necessary because I am considering the woman's physical, mental, emotional and social and welfare and family and environment and all that ... I am concerned with the quality of life, not physical existence.[18]

Hodgson also stated the general pro-abortion attitude towards abortion when she said "A medically necessary abortion is any abortion a woman asks for." [19]

Pregnancy is Rarely a Threat. There exist a number of studies showing how very rare pregnancy is a threat to the life of the mother.

In 1986, the Inspector General of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) issued a report (Control Number 14-60150) that summarized the events leading to 207 Colorado and Ohio Medicaid abortions performed to "save the life of the mother."

Intuition would tell us that an abortion performed to save a woman's life would involve only the most extreme life-threatening physical circumstances. Yet 179 of the 207 abortions (86 percent) "to save the mother's life" were performed in the abortionist's offices, which usually have no advanced medical or resuscitation equipment on hand. Even more startling, 182 of these abortions (88%) were coded as including "no medical complications!"

Three abortionists performed 184 of these abortions (89% of the total) and the HHS report stated that they "... said that pregnancy was more life-endangering to a mother than an abortion, so they signed the certifications on that basis." In other words, the abortionists simply alleged that "childbirth is ten times more dangerous than abortion, so abortion was obviously the way to go."

For a detailed rebuttal to the false pro-abortion premise that abortion is safer than childbirth, see Chapter 7, "Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion."

Medical Conditions that Do Not Require Abortion. The complete list of all conditions that may still endanger a pregnant woman's life is extremely short. These conditions include acute heart and kidney diseases and advanced hypertensive diseases.

Playing the System to Get Abortions. It does no good whatsoever for pro-life legislators to strictly define "health of the mother" exceptions in the law, because abortionists and unscrupulous women will lie as aggressively as they can to commit abortions. After all, what is a little rationalization and lying to women determined to kill their own preborn children and to people committed to earning money by killing them?

All existing evidence shows that from 90 to 99 percent of all abortions are justified under "mental health" criteria when reasons for abortions must be given;

- Dr. E. James Lieberman said this about those states that had already legalized abortion for the mother's "health" before Roe v. Wade: "In recent years, 90 percent of all legal abortions performed in the United States were justified on psychiatric grounds, since there are few physical conditions which stand in the way of normal gestation and parturition." [20]
- Dr. Benjamin N. Branch confirmed this number when he revealed, "until June 1970, almost 90 percent of abortions in New York were in fact certified as necessary to protect emotional health." [20]
- This kind of dishonesty still occurs on a vast scale. A comprehensive review of the reasons given for abortions in Louisiana during 1975-1988 found that abortionists committed 99.1 percent of all abortions for "mental health" reasons. [21]
- Widespread exploitation of the "mental health" dodge is not a purely American phenomenon: Abortionists are the same the world over. For example, of the 168,297 abortions committed in England in 1988, 92% were for "mental health reasons" and 6.6% had no reason given. The person who made a determination of mental problems was not a psychiatrist but the abortionist himself! [22] Perhaps this explains why a full 100% of the abortion justifications for "mental health" were labeled either "neuroses" or "depression," which no reputable psychiatrist or psychologist would ever do. Professor Myre Sim, lecturer in Psychiatry at Birmingham University, recognized that abortionists are certainly not qualified to make psychiatric evaluations; "I was able to demonstrate successfully that psychiatry was competent to deal with all the psychiatric hazards of pregnancy, and that the day that a psychiatrist required a gynaecologist to treat his patients has not arrived." [22]
- According to official data, there were 64,564 abortions in Hungary in 1997, and 97.5 percent of these were carried out due to "serious crisis situation of the expectant mother." [23]

Lucinda Cisler described how women deliberately used bogus health indications ("psychiatric games," as she calls them) to obtain abortions before legalization in the gender feminist "Bible" Sisterhood is Powerful. Her article was aptly entitled "Getting an Abortion - By Hook or By Crook." [24] Many other gender feminist organizations advocate this kind of deception and have promised to teach women how to "get over" on the system if abortion is restricted to "health of the mother" exceptions.

Pro-abortionists have written books describing how to "play the system" by faking physical or mental symptoms in order to get an abortion.

One detailed example of how to lie during an abortion interview appeared in The Abortion Handbook and later in A Woman's Book of Choices:

During the interview, weep, show anger, fear, disgust, outright destructiveness of your clothing or small objects, say, the ashtray on his desk which can be broken on the floor or against a wall. Don't overdo this. You will be billed for the broken things later! Don't break the doctor's head. This is a "no-no" ... How's your attention span? ... You can't seem to concentrate on anything for more than a couple of minutes ... Drop sly hints that you are "attracted" to many strange men sexually. Be dull and very sad. Cry a bit. Just sit in silence, and make him repeat questions as though you hadn't heard a word ... And now for the Manic Scene: Just like the opera, ladies! Brighten up, beam like a sunrise ... let your thoughts gallop wildly ... your speech flows like the Danube in flood time ... you might try taking off your shoes, kicking them all the way across his office, wriggling your toes. Then say, "That feels so good, I think I'll take everything off ... (musingly)."[25]

The authors of A Woman's Book of Choices also admit, "Another pre-Roe standby that many women employed successfully was threatening or feigning suicide. ... sympathetic doctors readily used any excuse, no matter how flimsy, to do what came in late pre-Roe days to be called "therapeutic abortions." [25]

Even pro-abortion congresswomen see no problem with lying in order to get what you want. This shows how far the rot of the Culture of Death has set in - any act, no matter how despicable, is justifiable if you want something badly enough. When eligibility for abortion funding under the Hyde Amendment was expanded to include rape and incest in 1992, Congresswoman Nita M. Lowey (D.-New York), Chair of the House Reproductive Choice Caucus, said "I'd tell my constituents, 'Send a letter. Say you were raped. Say it was incest. Say you have heart disease.'" [26]

Facts of Life: Chapter 3: Exceptions for Abortion: How the Principle of the "Double Effect" Applies to Abortion

SHARE

How the Principle of the "Double Effect" Applies to Abortion.

The Concept. The Catholic Church and most other religions recognize the moral principle of the "double effect."

As applied to abortion, this means that any treatment done to save a woman's life that also results in the death of a preborn child is not a true abortion, since the primary purpose of the treatment was to save a life, not take one. Even if the death of the baby is a foregone conclusion, such an action is not an abortion, because the death was an indirect effect of the surgical procedure.

Two examples illustrate this principle. If a doctor treats a woman's high blood pressure by aborting her child, he has committed a direct abortion. He is guilty of killing the child in order to treat the condition of the mother. However, if he has to perform a hysterectomy in order to remove a cancerous uterus, he is focusing on the organ itself in an attempt to heal the mother. If the mother was pregnant at the time, this is an indirect abortion - the purpose of the operation was removing the uterus, not the preborn child.

In other words, the purpose of the second procedure was not to kill the child in order to preserve the mother's life, but to save the mother's life by removing the organ, not the child. If possible, the doctor must delay treatment as long as possible in order to save both the mother and the child. In some cases, such as with ectopic pregnancies, this is not possible.

Pope Pius XII clearly described the principle of the "double effect:"

It has been our intention here to use always the expressions "direct attempt on the life of the innocent person" [and] "direct killing." The reason is that if, for example, the safety of the life of the future mother, independently of her state of pregnancy, might call for an urgent surgical operation, or any other therapeutic application, which would have as an accessory consequence, in no way desired nor intended, but inevitable, the death of the fetus, such an act could not be called a direct attempt on the innocent life. In these conditions the operation can be lawful, as can other similar medical interventions, provided that it be a matter of great importance, such as life, and that it is not possible to postpone it till the birth of the child, or to have recourse to any other efficacious remedy ... Both for the one and the other, the demand cannot be but this: To use every means to save the life of both the mother and the child.[58]

Some of the treatments that may indirectly kill a preborn child include certain cancer treatments; hysterectomy (removal) of a cancerous or severely traumatized uterus; and salpingectomy (the removal of a Fallopian tube), which is the most common application of the "double effect" as applied to abortion.[59]

Some pro-abortionists assert that the double effect applies in the case of all abortions, because they say all pregnancies threaten the life of the mother or are more dangerous than abortion. This position is due to a ridiculously broad definition of "threats" to the life and health of the mother, and is completely illicit. The "double effect" applies only in the case of an actual and proximate threat to the life of the mother. Such instances are rare indeed.

Frances Kissling, President of 'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC), shows us how far pro-abortionists will reach in order to justify abortion on demand;

For example, the just war theory accepts the taking of human life if one's own life or that of another is directly threatened. A just abortion theory would therefore permit a woman whose life was in danger to have an abortion - an act now prohibited by church law. Just war theory has also accepted that war can be warranted to protect a nation's integrity, particularly if the violation of a nation would result in the erosion of values judged to be equal to or greater than life itself. This could include territorial violation that would result in loss of liberty or traditional freedoms such as religion and speech. Could not a just abortion theory admit that threats to a woman's physical and emotional health are a violation of bodily integrity comparable to national integrity? Could not a woman's capacity to care for existing children and children to come, her ability to function as a fully contributing member of our society and her sense of self identity and purpose be seen as values proportional to the potential value of fetal life?[60]

Ectopic Pregnancies. The most common application of the "double effect" occurs in the case of an ectopic (tubal) pregnancy - when the embryo implants in the Fallopian tube, instead of completing its journey to the uterus.

Such implantation is inevitably fatal to the woman if her pregnancy progresses too far.

It is quite possible for a baby to implant virtually anywhere in the mother's abdominal cavity and survive. Recently, a mother gave birth to a perfectly healthy baby boy who had somehow migrated out of a rupture in the uterus and had implanted in the vicinity of her stomach.[61]

The surgical procedure used to remedy this situation is fairly simple to describe. The surgeon first must use ultrasonography to diagnose the unruptured tubal pregnancy. He then inserts a laparoscope (small camera with light) through an incision in the abdominal wall and locates the distended fallopian tube. He then laterally incises the tube and suctions out the embryo.[61]

Legally and medically, then, this procedure is the same as a typical suction abortion. Morally, however, it is different in several critical ways. In the majority of cases, the pregnancy is wanted. And, most importantly, the intent of the surgical procedure is to save life, not extinguish it.

In the future, doctors hope to be able to remove the embryo intact and transfer it to the uterus, where it will be successfully implanted.

All pro-life groups (including Catholic organizations) concede that such procedures are necessary.

The Rarity of Pregnancies Resulting from Rape and Incest.

"How I am grieved by the indignities I have suffered, and revolted by rank smells
How I despise the nomad land and hate the nomad sky!
When I became pregnant with a Buranian child, I wanted to kill myself.
Yet once I bore it, I found the love of mother and child.
His looks are strange and his speech is different, yet my hate turns into love.
Deep inside, I feel the tug of my heartstrings.
Morning and evening he is with me.
How can I not pity that which my womb has borne and my hand nurtured?"
— Lament of a Chinese noblewoman who was kidnapped and raped by barbarians in 195 A.D.[62]

"[My mother] finally approved of her unwanted one, whom she had borne so long ago in such great pain and sorrow and humiliation ..."

"Some people disclaim their natural heritage. I always name my origin. It didn't hold me back and neither has my color. I was born in poverty. My father raped my mother when she was 12. Now they've named a park for me in Chester, Pennsylvania."
— Renowned Gospel singer Ethel Waters.[63]

Introduction. From an ethical and logical standpoint, the number of pregnancies from rape and incest in most countries is simply irrelevant to the moral case against these exceptions. A baby conceived through violence is as blameless and innocent as one conceived in marriage, and is therefore deserving of the same protection. Either all preborn babies are worth saving, or none of them are.

As the pro-abortion front group 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC) says, "Opponents of abortion rights walk a fine line within their own movement when they condone any abortion. Based on their own definition, they are guilty of being accessories to "murder" in certain circumstances by accepting rape and incest exceptions." [64]

However, it is very useful to be able to show just how rare rape- and incest-caused pregnancies really are, because pro-abortionists have persuaded the public that the number is huge. A 1990 national Wirthlin poll found that the average respondent's guess at the number of abortions committed for rape and incest was 21 percent of the total number of abortions in the United States.[65]

As correctly pointed out by one of the most rabidly pro-abortion groups in the world, pro-lifers must never apologize for fighting rape- and incest-justified abortions. If we even begin to think that preborn lives are disposable for any reason other than to save another human life, we set the life of the preborn below that of other human beings — and this is what started our nation and our world on the road to abortion on demand in the first place!

There is no question that rape is traumatic. But why pile trauma upon trauma by insisting on abortion to 'remedy' rape? As reformed abortionist Bernard Nathanson, has so eloquently stated,

Rape is a heinous, ineradicably humiliating act of violence imposed upon an defenseless woman. The key word is 'ineradicable,' for the destruction of the innocent human being created as a result of that act can never eradicate the unspeakable emotional and psychological residue of that rape. To the contrary, it can only compound the residue with another deadly act of violence. ... If a part of a human community were not at stake, no woman should be required to undergo the degradation of bearing a child in these [rape and incest] circumstances, but even degradation, shame, and emotional disruption are not the moral equivalent of life. Only life is. ... [66]

As with any other problem pregnancy, the woman's problem is not that she's pregnant. The main problem is how others treat her. Rape and incest victims have always unjustly been victims of the "Scarlet Letter Syndrome," but 'treating' this problem of societal perspective with abortion is like saying that the woman is a hopeless case or 'damaged goods.'

Basile Uddo, Professor of Law, Loyola School of Law, says it best;

Abortion is to rape and incest what morphine is to pain — a superficially appealing, temporarily relieving, woefully inadequate response to something serious. The immediate benefits only mask the deeper wounds, which can fester to the point of great injury. A physician would never 'treat' his patient only with morphine unless his was a hopeless case. To 'treat' rape and incest pregnancies with abortion is a way of saying these women are hopeless cases — violated, tainted, damaged goods, for whom abortion is a way to scrub away the 'scarlet letter.' [67]

Former rape counselor Sandra Mahkorn, M.D., says that

The central issue then, should not be whether we can abort all pregnant sexual assault victims, but rather an exploration of the things we can change in ourselves, and through community education, to support such women, through their pregnancies. The 'abortion is the best solution' approach can only serve to encourage the belief that sexual assault is something for which the victim must bear shame — a sin to be carefully concealed. [68]

What is more caring — to sneer at a rape victim's problem and just tell her to 'get rid of it,' or to respect the life within her and give her whatever real help she needs?

In summary, the tragedy is the rape — not the child that is conceived. Contrary to what pro-abortionists apparently believe, two injustices do not equal a right or a healed life. The greatest pain of the first injustice lasts nine months, but the pain of the abortion 'remedy' lasts a lifetime.

Some may answer that the woman has a right to be free from assault. This is true, of course, but in the case of abortion for rape, the assault has already happened. Just as the woman has a right to be free from assault, so does her preborn baby. Allowing her abortion for rape under this argument is like saying that anyone who is assaulted can find healing and peace by going out into the street and punching the first person he or she sees.

Abortion = Infanticide for Many Women. According to experts at the University of British Columbia's Department of Psychiatry, "Whatever may be the case at the conscious level, at a much deeper level, abortion is regarded by many women as infanticide." [69]

Obtaining an abortion may not be much of a problem for a hard-core, heartless pro-abortion gender feminist, but what about a woman who truly believes that abortion is the killing of a human being?

According to various polls, more than sixty percent of all women in the United States believe that preborn children are human beings. [70]

The Eugenics Argument. Some self-proclaimed pro-abortion genetics 'sexperts' insist that rape-caused pregnancy must end in abortion because the child (if male) will turn out to be a rapist, as well.

This is utter hogwash. Nobody has ever even attempted to perform a study that examines the allegation that the tendency to commit rape or any other crime is hereditary. Psychiatrists and psychologists agree that the making of a criminal is primarily due to environmental effects.

Many pro-abortionists are so racist they see dark skin as a sort of a birth defect. For example, lobbyists for the Medical Association of Georgia urged Governor Lester Maddox to pass an initial rape and incest exception for abortion, asking him how he would feel "... if a White girl got raped by a Negro and then became pregnant." [71]

In any case, how many persons think that there should be capital punishment for rapists? Obviously, not too many. If this majority of people do not favor capital punishment for the obviously guilty rapist, why then should they favor it for the innocent child, who has committed no crime whatsoever?

Try This ... Pro-life debaters might like to try this theoretical question on their "pro-choice" friends: Take a newborn baby conceived by rape or incest and lay him next to a newborn conceived in a loving marriage. Then ask a pro-abortionist if they could tell you which one was the result of a rape by comparing their appearance and behavior.

Then try this second question: Would a pro-abortionist think less of an adult neighbor who was conceived by rape than he would of another neighbor who was conceived within marriage? The answer (if the pro-abort still retains a shred of human kindness) should be "no." Regardless of the answer, ask if the pro-abortionist would kill his neighbor merely because he or she was conceived as a result of rape? After all, that is what a woman is doing in cases of abortion for rape and incest.

Pro-abortionists say that they want abortion for rape and incest instances based purely on the circumstances of the baby's conception. This is the same as saying that children conceived out of wedlock are somehow less worthy than those conceived within marriage.

These children used to be called "bastards," and they carried a heavy load of shame and discrimination throughout their lives.

Now our solution is much simpler.

We just kill them.

This kind of appeal is particularly powerful when addressing high schoolers, since a large number of them are now 'illegitimate,' and most are painfully aware of the fact.

Rape and Incest: Wedge for Abortion on Demand. Speaking for leading pro-abortion Congressman Les AuCoin [D.-Oregon], legislative aide Ron Fitzsimmons revealed the true anti-life strategy behind trying to get abortion funding for rape. In a January 1990 briefing to pro-abortion activists, he said that the objective of the 1990 session was to write a very loosely-worded "rape and incest" exception to the Hyde Amendment. This exception was intended to be open to abuse, so pro-life congressmen would have no choice but to vote against it and the President would have no choice but to veto it.

The pro-abortionists would then trumpet the "insensitivity" of the President and the pro-life congressmen in an attempt to discredit them and defeat them in the November elections. As Fitzsimmons said during the briefing session; "It's hard to ignore the rape and incest victims. But I can speak for my boss, he felt that in the long term what we want is full Medicaid funding. And the only way we're going to get that is to get the votes in, for people who will vote that way." [72]

Manipulating the 'System.' Women who are willing to kill their own preborn children for mere convenience obviously see lying as a relatively small crime. Rebecca Chalker and Carol Downer admit in their A Woman's Book of Choices that "Before abortion was legal, women sometimes got abortions by claiming that they had been raped." [73]

Pro-abortion women have continued to lie on a huge scale, as proven by the Hyde Amendment's varying effects upon the level of Federal funding of abortions since 1977.

The Hyde Amendment cut off Federal funding for convenience abortions, and paid for 17,983 abortions to save the life of the mother and for rape and incest in Fiscal Year 1981.

In Fiscal Years 1983 and 1984, only abortions to save the life of the mother were allowed under the Amendment, and the average number of abortions paid for during these two years plunged to 411.

This means that about $(17,983 - 411) = 17,582$ abortions were performed for claimed "rape and incest" under the Hyde Amendment in 1981.

This brings up a very interesting point. To begin with, about 20 percent of all women in the United States qualify for Federal abortion funding under this Amendment due to their low incomes. As mentioned above, the average number of rapes in the United States each year over the period 1980-1997 inclusive was about 179,980.

If this number is divided by five in order to find out approximately how many low-income women were raped during these years, we arrive at 36,000.

In other words, these low-income women are claiming that $(17,582/36,000) = 49$ percent of all of their rapes resulted in pregnancies!

To take this analysis one step further, Figure 3-5 shows that about 0.8 percent of all women who are raped actually become pregnant as a result of the act. This means that the number of women who claimed that they were raped to get a free Federal abortion was (49 percent/0.8 percent) = 61 times the number that were actually raped.

In other words, more than 98 percent of them lied to get a free taxpayer-paid abortion!

Lyin' All Over the World. The phenomenon of women lying to obtain abortions is certainly not unique to the United States. Just as a bogus gang-rape was used as the basis of the Supreme Court decision to usher in abortion on demand in the United States, a girl who claimed that she was a victim of a gang-rape drove the first wedge into Britain's protective abortion laws in 1938.

According to sworn testimony, professional pro-abortionists alleged that a 14-year old girl was lured into a stable to see a horse with a wooden leg (I swear I am not making this up) and was supposedly gang-raped by four guardsmen. She became pregnant, and went to a crusading abortionist (Alec Bourne), who gave her a free abortion. He then turned himself in. In the resulting case of law, Rex v. Bourne, Judge Alex McNaghten decided that delivery of the baby would impair the girl's mental health, and acquitted the abortionist.

Naturally, the guardsmen were never called into court to answer to the charge of rape — and for good reason. The incident never happened.

At the other end of the world, a New Zealand commission that liberalized that country's abortion laws recommended against a rape and incest exception since the likelihood of false reports and the difficulty of checking them would render the exception utterly meaningless.[74]

The Impacts of Lying. When an abortion law is liberalized to allow exceptions for rape and incest, the number of women claiming rape just so they can get a free abortion invariably multiplies by a factor of two, five or even ten. Just as inevitably, all available rape-crisis resources are overwhelmed by the sudden explosion of referrals. Women who were really raped will be victimized a second time because of these liars, and agencies and the public will eventually begin to regard even genuine claims of rape as "crying wolf."

Additionally, these callous and uncaring women will stretch law-enforcement agencies to the limit. The results may be twofold: When the lying woman is quizzed regarding her "rape," she may feel pressured to come up with a name — any name, and innocent men will be prosecuted and even jailed (although this result may be welcome to the gender feminists who claim that "all men are, by their very natures, rapists").[75]

Secondly, the chances of real rapists being caught will drop drastically due to overloading of investigative agencies, and these predators will be perfectly free to rape and rape again.

In just one of thousands of cases of false rape accusations, an 11-year old girl accused her mother's boyfriend, Ivie Cornell Norris, of raping her repeatedly. Cornell was convicted and sent to prison. After he had languished there for more than a year, the girl admitted that she had lied. Her story was based on an episode of the television program "21 Jump Street," which had depicted a rape.[76]

Norris' life was destroyed; he lost his job, his freedom, his reputation, his girlfriend, and all of his savings over this spurious charge. This is typical of the impacts on a man who is imprisoned on a false rape charge. Gender feminists know full well that Norris' story might be repeated thousands of times annually if women try to get abortions under rape and incest exceptions. But, since they couldn't care less about the impacts of their decisions on men, they cannot be expected to promulgate any kind of safeguard against this terrible abuse.

The Pennsylvania Abortion Control Act of 1988 required women who claimed to be victims of rape or incest to report their crimes before getting a free abortion from the state. The reporting of rapes jumped significantly the very first month the law was in effect, and police reported that some women admitted that they were reporting rapes just to get a free abortion.[77]

When large numbers of pro-abortion women start lying to get their free abortions, the situation makes it next to impossible for law enforcement agencies to find and prosecute real rapists. As Ferris B. Lucas, Executive Director of the National Sheriff's Association, said in 1983;

We do, however, wish to comment on the provisions that would allow federal funds to be paid for abortions performed for treatment of rape or incest victims only. The wording would lead a person desirous of an abortion to make false reports to law enforcement agencies which would have to be checked and investigated to some length. These crimes are not easy ones to prove or disprove and resultantly require many man-hours of investigation. American law enforcement agencies are presently overburdened and do not have this vast amount of time available.[78]

This explosion of uncaring liars first occurred in Colorado, when the Model Penal Code abortion law revisions were passed in 1967. This law allowed abortions only to save the life of the mother for rape and incest, and for the mother's health. Of the 1,850 legal abortions performed in Colorado the first year under this law, 18 percent (or 333) of the mothers claimed to be rape victims.[79]

According to the statistical analysis performed earlier in this Chapter, it is probable that at least 330 of the 333 were lying. This percentage is buttressed by the fact that, in all of these cases, not a single rapist was arrested or even identified, a statistical impossibility in light of the fact that more than half of all rapes are committed by men that the victim knows.

The Frequency of Eugenic Abortions

No Heart Leads to No Soul. The birth defects argument is perhaps the most loathsome of all of the rationalizations for prenatal killing used by pro-abortionists.

While they fight for handicapped parking spaces for those who cannot walk, and while they make sure they have sign language interpreters and wheelchair ramps at their conferences, pro-abortionists see no hypocrisy in advocating abortion for babies whose only crime is that they are less than perfect.

This is pure and simple discrimination.

People do not abort a handicapped baby because he would be unhappy. Handicapped people usually are just as happy as those who have no handicaps. People commit eugenic abortions for selfish reasons, regardless of what they say - because the child would make them unhappy.

What is particularly distressing about eugenic abortions is the fact that no child, no matter how severely handicapped, is unwanted. None of the more than 100 organizations consisting of the parents of handicapped children has ever endorsed abortion. In fact, many of these organizations have standing offers to adopt any child with handicaps.[94]

This means that no eugenic abortion is truly necessary - but many are undoubtedly carried out because genetic counselors and abortion clinic staff do not tell parents about these organizations.

Abortion as the Eugenicist's Tool. The elimination of human beings solely because they have mental and physical limitations is the dream of the pseudoscientific worldview known and universally condemned as eugenics, which is the systematic destruction of "life devoid of value." Today, of course, we use the politically correct term "insufficient quality of life."

The Decree of the Congregation of the Holy Office on Eugenics of March 18, 1931 answered a question about the legitimacy of a practice that was beginning to flourish in the United States:

Question: "What is thought of the theory called "eugenics," whether positive or negative, and of the means indicated by it to improve the human race without taking into consideration neither natural or divine or ecclesiastical laws relative to marriage and individual rights?"

Answer: "The theory of "eugenics" is to be held entirely blameable, false and condemned, in accordance with the Encyclical on Christian Marriage, Casti Connubii, December 31, 1930.

Margaret Sanger, the founder of Planned Parenthood and a serious disciple of the eugenics philosophy, longed for "a race of thoroughbreds" through positive eugenics - the breeding of "good stock." Now abortionists would like to improve the gene pool through negative eugenics, the "weeding out" of those human beings they consider unsatisfactory.

Marjorie Reilly Maguire and Daniel C. Maguire, formerly of the fake religious front group 'Catholics' for a Free Choice, said heartlessly, "while you are making your [abortion] decision, do not let yourself be a victim of romantic thinking about the beauty and value of handicapped children ... such children place extreme demands upon a family." [95]

And Kenneth Vaux, Professor of Ethics at Baylor College of Medicine, shows that such thinking will inevitably lead to abortion on command:

I am told by a reliable scholar that a major private health insurance company is contemplating the policy of requiring amniocentesis or other acceptable forms of antenatal diagnosis for all pregnant women holding a policy with the company. If a diagnosis of congenital defect is made, insurance will be dropped on the potential child. In other words, abortion will be required ... We have a legal obligation to protect the unborn from the cruel and unusual punishment of genetic disease. Surely we need ponder whether the abnormal merit our protection, even in utero. We now have the possibility, which means the responsibility, of deciding whom we will admit to the human community. [96]

Frequency of Birth Defects. There are about 4.1 million births per year in the United States, and about 1.3 million abortions, for a total of 5.4 million pregnancies not concluding in miscarriage. The average age of pregnant women is 26. [97] Considering the data given in Figure 3-6 and the distribution of pregnancies by age not ending in miscarriage, there are about 4,400 cases of Down's Syndrome and about 22,000 cases of other serious fetal genetic defects per year

Prenatal Genetic Testing.

Amniocentesis. Amniocentesis is usually performed after the 16th week of pregnancy on the preborn babies of mothers who have abnormal alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) concentrations, whose families have a history of birth defects, or who are more than 35 years old.[98]

Guided by ultrasound, the doctor inserts a needle through the abdominal wall into the uterus and withdraws about an ounce of amniotic fluid. Labs grow fetal cells in the fluid for three to four weeks, and examine the cell for chromosomal abnormalities (karyotyping). Abortions are committed about 32 to 45 days following the test. The risks to the baby from the "amnio" range from 0.5 percent to 2.0 percent fatalities by miscarriage.[98]

In the October 1986, issue of Ob-Gyn News, Dr. Ann Tabor reported that her randomized study of 2,264 women in the 25-34 age group showed that 23 women - or one percent - had miscarriages directly caused by amniocentesis. The test detected abnormalities in only one percent of the babies, meaning the amnio killed as many healthy babies as it detected babies with abnormalities.

The vast majority of mothers who have eugenic abortions do so at 20 weeks or more, when their babies weigh about a pound. If abortion is the "treatment of choice," the babies die either by being cut apart (D&E abortion) or, less frequently, by one of the other grisly late-term abortion techniques such as dilation and extraction (D&X). Chapter 1 on abortion describes these procedures.

The major risks of amniocentesis include maternal hemorrhage and infection, fetal puncture wounds, pneumothorax (injection of gas into the mother's pleural cavity), laceration of the baby's spleen, damage to the placenta and/or umbilical cord, and the baby's death from exsanguination (loss of blood).

Chorionic Villus Sampling (CVS). This procedure is physically similar to amniocentesis, but can be done about eight weeks earlier. A doctor uses a plastic catheter to clip villi (hairlike structures) from the placenta, and the results of chromosomal tests are available within a week. The risks of fatality to the baby are greater than with "amnio," however: From one to five percent miscarriages.[98]

Maternal Serum Alpha-Fetoprotein (AFP). AFP is a maternal blood test performed from the 13th to 20th weeks of pregnancy. Neural tube defects (such as anencephaly or spina bifida) in a baby may cause his kidneys to release elevated levels of AFP into the mother's bloodstream, and lower levels signal the possibility of Down's Syndrome. The blood test must be confirmed by ultrasound and/or amniocentesis. The risk to the baby or mother is nil for the blood test by itself.[98]

Ultrasonography. Ultrasound uses high-frequency sound waves that reflect off a preborn child's internal organs and appear on a sonography screen. At the 20th week, ultrasound can spot various defects in the spine, kidney, heart, and skeleton. The test can also determine the position of the placenta.[98] Abortionists sometimes use sonograms to position a baby for the kill.

The effects of sonograms on preborn babies are unknown. It is possible that delayed-onset effects of ultrasonography may be significant, and research into this area continues.

Prenatal Testing - The Eugenicist's Ultimate Tool. As the medical profession accepts the various gene-selection technologies, and as they become more and more accurate, interest will inevitably turn to cost containment, and the degree of coercion will certainly become greater.

Some insurance plans already refuse to pay for deliveries or care of infants with genetic defects if the parents do not accept amniocentesis and abortion to "select out" the "defectives" who have serious birth defects.

In 1975, Anthony Smith wrote, "Medical opinion is generally firm. It recommends that amniocentesis should be offered to the patient only on the clear understanding that if the fetus is found to be affected, the pregnancy will be terminated. Abortion laws were unthinkable a dozen years ago. Amniocentesis laws, currently unthinkable, may also be with us before so very long. There will be eugenic strides ..."[99]

Kenneth Vaux, Professor of Ethics at Baylor College of Medicine, reports, "Marjorie Shaw, one of the world's most outstanding geneticists, argues that genetic disease is the same as communicable disease, and therefore should be isolated and quarantined as a public health measure - not allowed to transmit itself."[100]

And, on April 4, 1976, the New York Times editorialized, "In the far future a subsidy - by insurance companies or the government - might be available if the procedure [amniocentesis] could be shown to save money. Researchers at Columbia University School of Public Health have proposed a voluntary program of screening all pregnant women 40 and over and eventually [a mandatory program to screen] all pregnant women to prevent 90 percent of Down's Syndrome."

The crushing weight of godlike 'professional opinion' already acts to compel parents to abort preborn babies who are diagnosed as being handicapped. The National Institutes of Health (NIH) found that parents aborted more than 95 percent of all preborn babies who were found "defective" by prenatal genetic tests.[101]

It seems that we no longer have room for handicapped people on this perfect planet of ours.

Can We Ever Morally Justify Prenatal Testing?

In the realm of prenatal testing, motive determines permissibility.

Most prenatal testing is done in order to find and kill preborn children who fail to "measure up" to parents' and physicians' high standards. Prenatal testing for this purpose is illicit. However, tests for the purpose of healing preborn children are allowable.

The Vatican's Donum Vitae answers all the fundamental moral questions about prenatal diagnosis succinctly and completely:

Is Prenatal Diagnosis Morally Licit?

If prenatal diagnosis respects the life and integrity of the embryo and the human tetus and is directed towards its safeguarding or healing as an individual, then the answer is affirmative.

For prenatal diagnosis makes it possible to know the condition of the embryo and of the fetus when still in the mother's womb. It permits, or makes it possible to anticipate earlier and more effectively, certain therapeutic, medical or surgical procedures.

Such diagnosis is permissible, with the consent of the parents after they have been adequately informed, if the methods employed safeguard the life and integrity of the embryo and the mother, without subjecting them to disproportionate risks. But this diagnosis is gravely opposed to the moral law when it is done with the thought of possibly inducing an abortion depending upon the results: a diagnosis which shows the existence of a malformation or a hereditary illness must not be the equivalent of a death-sentence. Thus a woman would be committing a gravely illicit act if she were to request such a diagnosis with the deliberate intention of having an abortion should the results confirm the existence of a malformation or abnormality. The spouse or relatives or anyone else would similarly be acting in a manner contrary to the moral law if they were to counsel or impose such a diagnostic procedure on the expectant mother with the same intention of possibly proceeding to an abortion. So too the specialist would be guilty of illicit collaboration if, in conducting the diagnosis and in the communicating its results, he were deliberately to contribute to establishing or favoring a link between prenatal diagnosis and abortion.

In conclusion, any directive or program of the civil and health authorities or of scientific organizations which in any way were to favor a link between prenatal diagnosis and abortion, or which were to go as far as directly to induce expectant mothers to submit to prenatal diagnosis planned for the purpose of eliminating fetuses which are affected by malformations or which are carriers of hereditary illness, is to be condemned as a violation of the unborn child's right to life and as an abuse of the prior rights and duties of the spouses.[102]

What the Anti-Lifers Say.

"Socialism should make it possible to regulate the reproduction of human beings. We should be able to produce human beings under a quota system, just as we produce bicycles and tons of steel."

- Vice Premier Chan Muhua, Director of the Chinese Family Planning Board.[1]

Chinese and American anti-lifers claim that there is no such thing as a "forced abortion." They say that stories of forced abortions in China are merely fairy tales spun by "anti-choice propagandists" so that they may "force their narrow views on other countries" by destroying or hobbling international United States population control assistance programs.

As Qian Xinzhong, Minister in Charge of the State Family Planning Commission, states: "State guidance is by no means a compulsory command; we absolutely oppose compulsory methods."[2]

Those who support and applaud China's forced abortion and sterilization program also claim that "anti-choice fanatics" hope to eliminate 'reproductive rights' in the United States by using these "fictional" stories to frighten people with the specter of coercion.

Finally, the pro-abortionists strain credulity to the limit by alleging that a forced abortion program cannot happen in the United States - unless the pro-life movement makes significant progress and establishes a eugenics program that eliminates the "unfit" and encourages the "fit" to breed more!

The Origins of the Chinese Population Control Program.

The Basic Philosophy. The vast majority of people (even most pro-abortionists) agree that forcing women to have abortions is not a good thing.

So where does the coercive population control philosophy come from?

It originates in the same place from which all anti-life monstrosities emerge: The utilitarian philosophy. This worldview holds that a goal that is deemed to be "good" by the people in power may be attained by any means available.

Not by moral means.

Not by ethical means.

Just by any possible means.

The Chinese are adhering to a simple five-step syllogism. It is summarized as follows;

1. Too many people = bad.
2. We have too many people.
3. We have the necessary degree of control over our populace.
4. Therefore we can reduce our population.
5. So we will reduce our population by all available means.

Those who think that this view seems simplistic should not chuckle too soon. American abortionists and their toadies have been saying exactly the same thing for more than a quarter of a century, although their statements are couched in a luxurious layer of soothing Newspeak and reassuring (but meaningless) qualifications.

For example, abortionists Selig Newbardt and Harold Schulman claim in their "how-to" book Techniques of Abortion that "An abortion should not infringe upon the rights of any other woman or man. A continuing pregnancy might infringe on these rights - because a new person has to have clean air, clean water, electric power, dispose of his waste materials, be educated, and require protection and health services." [3]

Notice that the authors' sweeping statement qualifies any "continuing pregnancy" - wanted or not - as a possible violation of the rights of others. This philosophy, if accepted widely enough, will certainly mandate abortion wherever it holds sway.

This is precisely the mentality that eventually led to the Chinese forced abortion program. As shown later in this Chapter, many or most of the 'leading (b)lights' of the pro-abortion movement have been calling for mandatory contraception, abortion, sterilization and euthanasia in this and other countries since the late 1960s.

Goals of the Forced Abortion Program. Most pro-life activists have heard at least sketchy details about China's forced abortion program. The direct cause of this coercion is the ridiculous goal set by China's "one child" policy planners in 1980: population stability at 1,054 million by the year 2004, with a precipitous decline to only 370 million by the year 2080.

This utterly unrealistic goal will supposedly be achieved by firmly controlling the country's massive population by any necessary means. These means include forced abortion, forced sterilization, forced use of contraceptives, and widespread female infanticide.

Origins: The National Security Council. Since the mid-1970s, the United States has been deeply committed to both domestic and foreign population control programs. Billions of dollars of our tax money have been used to implement many questionable programs, including, most notably, the Chinese forced-abortion atrocity.

The National Security Council (NSC) is the highest U.S. bureaucracy charged with the planning and direction of foreign policy. One of the most vital aspects of this policy is population control.

The idea that drives NSC population control policy is fundamentally racist and elitist. The concept is this: If there are too many of "them" (people of foreign races) and too few of "us" (pure White and other acceptable American races), then the worldwide influence of the United States will decline, and eventually, if the situation becomes serious enough, our country will cease to be a "global player" entirely. Therefore, we must use our vast reserves of "foreign assistance" money now to cut down on threatening "foreign" populations, while we still have the chance.

This policy is a very slightly altered version of the Nazis' Lebensraum concept, the driving force behind the extermination of the Jews and the initiation of World War II.

One highly sensitive NSC document entitled "Implications of Worldwide Population Growth for U.S. Security and Overseas Interests" was written in 1974 and was only declassified in late 1990. This document served as the foundation for our country's anti-natalist population philosophy. It is also known as National Security Study Memo 200 [NSSM 200], or "The Kissinger Report."

The document states that "Development of a worldwide political and popular commitment to population stabilization is fundamental to any effective strategy. This requires the support and commitment of key LDC leaders. This will only take place if they clearly see the negative impact of unrestricted population growth and believe it is possible to deal with this question through governmental action."

NSSM 200 goes on to suggest that United States food assistance might be made conditional depending on the LDC's population control performance. More significantly, the document states that United States agencies should be planning on the use of force in the future: "It is important in style as well as substance to avoid the appearance of coercion. ... mandatory programs may be needed and that we should be considering these possibilities now."

In 1976, the Interagency Task Force on Population Policy for the Under Secretaries Committee of the NSC found that "In some cases, strong direction has involved incentives such as payment to acceptors for sterilization, or disincentives such as giving low priorities in the allocation of housing and schooling to those with larger families. Such direction is the sine-qua-non [essence] of an effective program."

The Report asks some very interesting questions;

- "On what basis should such food resources then be provided? Would food be considered an instrument of national power? Will we be forced to make choices as to whom we can reasonably assist, and if so, should population efforts be a criterion for such assistance?"
- "Is the U.S. prepared to accept food rationing to help people who can't/won't control their population growth?"
- "Are mandatory population control measures appropriate for the U.S. and/or for others?"

Architect of the Program: The UNFPA. For many years, the United States government has lavishly funded the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) with tens of millions of our tax dollars. One of the main targets of UNFPA money is the People's Republic of China (PRC).

The United States government is certainly not the only massive funder of UNFPA. For example, the Canadian government, through the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), gave $9.1 million Canadian to UNFPA in 2000 despite its knowledge of the evidence of China's forced abortion program.[4]

Although spokesmen for the organization have stridently disavowed responsibility for China's coercive programs, UNFPA's plan was laid out in many of its internal memos, including a January 15, 1985 briefing note entitled "The United Nations Population Fund and China;"[5]

- UNFPA contributed more than $100 million to China's population control programs;
- UNFPA bought and custom-designed a $12 million IBM computer complex specifically to monitor the population program;
- UNFPA provided the technical expertise and personnel that trained thousands of Chinese population control officials;
- UNFPA presented China with the United Nations' award for the "most outstanding population control program;" and
- UNFPA only stated that the coercive programs should cease because they were causing the Chinese "negative image problems" - not because the programs were inhuman genocide, but because they had been caught in the act.

When the horrors of the Chinese population control program were finally laid bare, U.S. funding to the UNFPA was cut off. Planned Parenthood, despite having the evidence of the Chinese atrocities before it, protested strongly and lobbied vigorously in a vain attempt to get UNFPA funds reestablished.

Meanwhile, the parent organization of the UNFPA participated in the cover-up as well. The United Nations has gone on record as saying that "Although some have accused the family planning programme of employing coercive methods, the [Chinese] Government has never sanctioned the use of coercion." [6]

Pro-abortion denials hold little credibility, especially in light of Chinese national and provincial laws demonstrating the coercive nature of the one-child policy;

- Central Committee Directive Number 7 of 1983 reads "All state officials, workers and employees, and urban residents, except for special cases which must be approved, may have only one child per couple." [7]
- Shanxi Province Communist Party Chief Zhang Boxing issued a directive on July 10, 1983 as follows: "Those women who have already given birth to one child must be fitted with IUDs, couples who already have two children must undergo sterilization of either the husband or the wife, and women pregnant outside the Plan must abort as soon as possible." [8]
- In April of 1992, the Chinese National People's Congress adopted Article 42 of a law that states: "When a wife terminates gestation as required by the family planning programme, her husband may not apply for a divorce within six months after the operation."
- In April 1988, Fujian Province adopted birth control regulations which stated that "Persons not meeting legal age requirements shall be prohibited from marrying or bearing children. ... Unplanned births shall be prohibited."
- In April 1990, Henan Province adopted "Rules and Regulations on Family Planning," which states in Article 11 that "Birth of the second child must be strictly controlled, and birth of the third child must be prohibited." [9]
- Finally, on December 29, 2001, the 25th session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress formally approved China's first law on population control and family planning, whose purpose is to further advance its one-child policy. Li Peng, Chairman of the legislature, said the law would "stabilize" China's family planning policy, which had been in place since 1980. [10]

As background, the legislation that offended Planned Parenthood was enacted in 1985. The Kemp/Kasten Amendment, named after its chief sponsors, cut off "population assistance" money to "... any organization or program which, as determined by the President, supports or participates in the management of a program of coercive abortion or involuntary sterilization."

Following passage of the Kemp/Kasten amendment and the repeal of a law that guaranteed funding of the UNFPA, the Reagan Administration found that UNFPA had violated the Kemp/Kasten amendment in China. UNFPA's funding was cut off, and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upheld the action.

"Family planners" saw this as a direct attack, and they reacted predictably: By pouring millions of dollars into another trademark ad/smear campaign filled with distortions and outright lies. The Chinese took leading population controllers on carefully structured tours of their country, and the anti-populationists obediently reported to the public that they personally saw no forced abortions (as if the Chinese would lead them to a clinic filled with screaming women enduring forced third-trimester abortions)! Werner Fornos, head of the Population Institute, insisted that 'disincentives' were used in China, but never 'coercion.'

The UNFPA itself operates family planning programs in 32 counties, or county-level municipalities, throughout China. In fact, its offices are often co-located with local Family Planning Offices. Therefore, there is no possible way that UNFPA cannot know about the draconian forced-abortion program in China. Yet it claims that Chinese "women are free to voluntarily select the timing and spacing of their pregnancies;" that there are no family planning targets or quotas; that abortion is not promoted in China as a method of family planning; and, finally, that coercion does not exist![11]

In 1986, Rafael Salas, UNFPA's then-Executive Director, said that "Each country has its view of what is free, a free choice. If you refer to the case of China, I am very sure that the Chinese themselves will say that within their cultural norms, they are not at all coercive. Maybe from Western standards, these might not be totally acceptable, but then each country must determine that for themselves."[12]

In 1989, UNFPA's Executive Director Nafis Sadik claimed on CBS's "Nightwatch" television program that the UNFPA "does not support abortion programs anywhere in the world," and is "not supporting coercion in any form." She also continued to insist that China's population control policies are "purely voluntary."[13]

Twelve years later, Sadik was still in denial despite a mountain of evidence contradicting her stubbornly-held beliefs. She said that "China has every reason to feel proud of and pleased with its remarkable achievements made in its family planning policy and control of its population growth over the past 10 years. Now the country could offer its experiences and special experts to help other countries."[14]

Continuing the Program. After hearing repeated denials of wrongdoing, that International Spy and Enemy of the People Steven Mosher decided to check the current situation in China. Despite numerous bureaucratic obstacles thrown in his path, he managed to visit several rural villages for four days in June of 1987. Upon his return, he published articles showing that forced abortions and sterilizations were still taking place in China. The United States Agency for International Development (USAID), after reviewing the UNFPA "family planning" program, agreed that China's family planning program "remains systematically coercive."[15]

However, the pro-aborts apparently still couldn't care less about forced abortions. For example, virulently pro-abortion senator Daniel Inouye of Hawaii attempted to reinstate funding for UNFPA, but was rebuffed by the Senate Appropriations Committee, 14 to 11, on December 3, 1987.

As final proof of China's program of forced baby-killing, the United States House of Representatives on December 10, 1987, adopted a resolution sponsored by Congressman Chris Smith that "... strongly condemns the continued violations of human rights by the Government of the People's Republic of China, including the one-child-per-family policy adopted in 1979 that relies on coercion, economic penalties, and forced abortions, often late in pregnancy ..."

Interestingly, the Chinese Family Planning Association - which implements the coercive program in China - is an affiliate of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). Cash grants from IPPF to the Chinese birth control program rose tremendously about the time the Chinese coercive population control program was publicized: From $5,600 in 1982 to $750,000 in 1985, a 134-fold increase in just three years![16] Significantly, at about this time, the IPPF changed its logo from a two-parent/two child design to a two-parent/one child design.

The Philosophy of American Leftists.

It is an exceedingly curious fact that many dedicated American Communists bitterly denounce the United States government for purportedly "dictating to women how they can control their own bodies," while wholeheartedly applauding China's forced-abortion and forced-sterilization program. In fact, these people hold up China's population control program as a "model for the entire world to follow."

United States citizens William H. Draper and Andrew P. O'Meara, both of whom have long histories of involvement in international population control, wrote a preface to a widely-distributed Chinese family planning manual. This manual was written in English and sponsored by the Victor-Bostrom Fund and the Population Crisis Committee (PCC).

Draper and O'Meara spoke of using "postconceptive means" to control the "rising tide of excess and unwanted children." Draper parrots that "We must control our population if life is to be worth living." Guest writer Edgar Snow makes the amazing statement that "There are no illegitimate children in China." [17] No prize for guessing why — illegitimate children are forcibly aborted!

In this family planning manual, the Chinese speak plainly of "population control propaganda," "enforcement mechanisms and surveillance procedures," [17] and call "excess" children an "offense to the Government" (Government with a capital "G")!

Interestingly, the words "Planned Parenthood" appear dozens of times in the text.

The rest of this Chapter describes some of the hideous crimes against born and unborn humanity now occurring in the People's Republic of China.

Involuntary Contraception and Early Abortions in the PRC.

Ann Landers: "If a woman who has three children becomes pregnant with a fourth, is an abortion compulsory?"

Chief of Staff of the Peking Hospital: "No, but we send a member of the Revolutionary Committee to educate her. After a visit or two, the woman almost always agrees that abortion is best." [18]

The Women's Federation at 'Work.' There is obviously no "right to privacy" in the PRC, especially when the subject is human reproduction. The euphemistically-named 5,000,000 member "Women's Federation" is the Gestapo of the Chinese family planning program, a kind of grown-up and fully-empowered National Organization for Women.

It aggressively 'educates,' detects pregnancies, and accompanies women to the abortion clinics to insure that they don't have a change of heart (thus performing a service identical to our 'clinic escorts'). In the factories, the Women's Federation even records and publicly displays a chart of each woman's menstrual cycle and insures that she uses contraception.

This type of coercion, of course, is nothing new. It has been endured under totalitarian regimes since the beginning of recorded history. For examples the Japanese Shoguns, particularly during the Tokugawa Dynasty, adhered strictly to zero population growth. Every family was allowed but two children; the third was suffocated upon birth under the rule of mabiku, or "thinning out." [19]

Roasted Uteri and Other Atrocities. The United States suffers about 1.4 million surgical abortions per year. This is a large number, but we are rank amateurs compared to the Chinese. Over the time period 1975 to 2006, the Chinese have committed more than 300 million surgical abortions, with an almost incomprehensible high of 14,371,843 in 1983 alone. [20]

Official statistics show that about 95 percent of these abortions are performed before 24 weeks gestation. This means that half a million are performed past the point of fetal viability each year!

Since about 80 percent of China's population lives in rural areas, many early abortions are performed by methods that have been designed to use locally available materials. One of the most popular is to create powerful suction by burning flammable liquid in a stoppered series of two jars. [21] This method is very efficient, and most "barefoot doctors" and many of the Communist Chinese cadre members are trained to construct and use it.

However, the injuries inflicted by constructing or using such a crude apparatus improperly can be hideous. In some cases, the amateur 'abortionist' loses control of the suction tip and extracts neat plugs of the uterine wall, possibly penetrating arteries and leading to hemorrhaging that can only be controlled in a modern hospital that may be hundreds of miles away. The suction tip may completely penetrate the uterine wall and shred other vital body organs. Most appalling of all, burning liquid may be inadvertently injected into the uterus if instructions are misinterpreted, causing the woman to die in unspeakable agony.

Death caused by a roasted uterus takes anywhere from thirty seconds (if the woman is lucky) to a week — or even longer.

Forced Late Abortions in the PRC.

The Program. China commits about 200,000 third-trimester surgical abortions annually. Most of these babies are fully viable when they are killed, and virtually all of these abortions are performed against the mother's will. Researcher Steven Mosher has described how pregnant women are imprisoned in a small room, isolated from their families, and are not even allowed to leave so that they can change clothes or go to the bathroom. While they sit in misery on hard wooden benches, they are perpetually berated by shifts of professional cadre, who shout that they must perform their "duty to the State and the Party" by aborting.[22]

This barbaric brainwashing endures for weeks on end if necessary, until the helpless mothers finally break down and agree to 'voluntary' abortions. This is how Chinese 'family planning' officials can insist with straight faces that there are no forced abortions or illegitimate children in their country.

Pro-abortion propagandists play the same lying word games all over the world.

After she finally breaks, a woman in her last trimester is generally taken to the local abortion mill and injected with Rivalor (du zhen, or "poison shot"), which causes congestive heart failure in the unborn baby. The child usually dies in agony over a period of about a day, and is then delivered dead.[22]

Not only are the women themselves brutalized, but entire villages are held in terror by China's "Planned Birth" policy. When one family produces an "over-birth," the entire village is often penalized with huge fines, leading to an atmosphere of mistrust and resentment among families, a situation which the Communists actively encourage, since a united village is a strong village and may cause problems for them down the road. In many cases, homes in villages that house families with more than one child are bulldozed or burned. Planned Birth officials round up all women of childbearing age and force them to witness the destruction. This method is known as "killing the chicken to scare the monkey," and is popular in maintaining Communist power and keeping the people in a perpetual state of terror.

Every woman must pledge to be sterilized immediately following her second birth. If she refuses to do so, she may be beaten, fined or jailed. Every fertile woman must have a urine test and ultrasound completed every three months. If a woman tests positive for pregnancy, she must immediately have an abortion.[23]

Torture, Murder and "Choice." The examples of torture and murder inflicted by the Chinese government on helpless women and their families are endless, and certainly represent only the tip of the iceberg. Often brave relatives must risk their lives in order to reveal these atrocities to the rest of the world.

- Zhou Jianxiong was a 30-year-old agricultural worker from Hunan Province. His wife suddenly left their home without telling him where she was going. Officials from the local birth control office suspected that she was "pregnant without permission." Zhou was arrested on May 13, 1998 and tortured in order to force him to reveal the whereabouts of his wife. The officials hung Zhou upside down, whipped and beat him with wooden clubs, burned him with cigarette butts, and branded him with him with wooden clubs, burned him with cigarette butts, and branded him with soldering irons. He became doubly incontinent, and his body was covered in excrement. The officials then tied wire around his genitals and ripped off his penis. He died on May 15, 1998.

When Zhou's mother tried to obtain his release, she too was arrested and imprisoned. Officials forced her to stand perfectly still for hours and listen to her son being tortured to death in an adjacent room.

For these atrocities, the Mayor of Chunhua Township proposed giving the murderers "administrative detention" for 15 days.[24]

- Birth control officials in Caidian Village, Hubei Province injected a nine months pregnant mother with a poison shot to kill her baby. When the baby was born alive, they instructed the father to get rid of him. The father dutifully threw his own baby into the cess pit of a men's public toilet behind the village government offices. Liu Juyu heard the baby crying and rescued him. While Liu was feeding the baby on her doorstep, five birth control officials approached, grabbed the baby and threw him on the ground. They kicked the baby repeatedly as he screamed on the ground, then took him to a nearby paddy field where they drowned him. This murder took place on August 15, 2000.[24]
- At sunrise on May 15, 2001, Sun Zhonghua, 34, from a farming family in Xiapu County near the provincial capital of Fuzhou, was forcibly abducted from her home by local birth-control officials. The officials told Sun that they were taking her to the nearby birth control clinic for sterilization, a procedure they had previously been pressing her to submit herself to. She refused once again, displaying documents obtained from a local hospital proving that the sterilization would endanger her health because of a medical condition. Despite this, the birth control officials forced her into a waiting car and drove away.

Later that day, the officials informed Sun's relatives that she had died after jumping from the fourth floor of the building housing the local birth-control administration. Family members who were allowed to see her body discovered large bruises all over her body and head. "There is no way she could have received those injuries from jumping to her death," said one relative. Sun's relatives tried to get police to take action, but were ignored.[25]

- The Population Research Institute (PRI) interviewed a young woman who went into hiding to avoid being forced to have an abortion. Family planning officials attempted to coerce her family members into revealing her whereabouts by arresting her mother, her father, her brother, her sister, her mother-in-law and her brother-in-law, all of whom were jailed for four months. They were only released after they had paid a fine of 17,000 renminbi [$2,040], equivalent to several years' income. While they were imprisoned, family planning officials armed with jackhammers appeared at the woman's home, and the homes of her brother-in-law and father-in-law. They smashed huge holes in the floors, walls, ceilings and roofs of these homes. They also removed the windows and doors to the homes and confiscated them. Finally, they destroyed or stole all the furniture and belongings in the homes.

The woman herself reported that she must now pay an additional 17,000 renminbi fine for her child to be legally registered and permitted to attend school. These exorbitant fines constitute an additional form of coercion, and a warning to others who might violate the one-child policy.[26]

Interestingly - but not surprisingly - even after Amnesty International and the Population Research Institute had revealed the above hideous details, not a single pro-

Population Research Institute had revealed the above hideous details, not a single pro-abortion group denounced the forced abortions, the jailings, the torture and the murders committed by Chinese birth control officials. Quite the contrary - they demanded more funding for the United Nations Population Fund when President George W. Bush zeroed out its spending in early 2002.

China's Infanticide.

Introduction. As bad as forced abortions are, the most extreme horrors of the Chinese program are reserved for those poor mothers who somehow manage to hold out against the brutal pressure, or who conceal their pregnancies in some remote part of the Provinces. This illegal activity is common enough to be referred to by the Chinese as "childbirth on the run."

The Law and Second Children. Couples in rural areas are only allowed one or, at most, two children. Any third child is officially labeled "excess," and law dictates that these "excess" children be delivered in the commune clinic. Large red placards proclaim that "THE CLINIC WILL NOT BE RESPONSIBLE FOR ANY MISHAPS THAT OCCUR DURING THE BIRTHS OF EXCESS BABIES." [27] This is a wise disclaimer, since the infant mortality rate for third babies in these clinics is a perfect one hundred percent!

If a mother tries to give birth to a third child, she is led to believe that perhaps an exception will be made in her case. She is soothed and told that all will be well — that she and her child will be taken care of. Everything is, indeed, all right until the baby's head crowns. The "barefoot doctor" then locates the fontanelle (soft spot) on the baby's head, and injects a formaldehyde solution through it into the baby's brain. As the mother watches in horror, her child thrashes in agony as its brain slowly liquifies. [27] Of course, the "doctor" will merely shrug and disavow knowledge of what is happening, and the injection site in the fontanelle is so small that it is undetectable by the grieving mother.

Michael Weisskopf of The Washington Post describes this type of murder;

In the Inner Mongolian capital of Hohot, however, hospital doctors practice what amounts to infanticide by a different name, according to a Hohot surgeon who would not allow his name to be used for fear of reprisal. After inducing labor, he revealed, doctors routinely smash the baby's skull with forceps as it emerges from the womb. In some cases, he added, newborns are killed by injecting formaldehyde into the soft spot of the head. He estimated that hundreds of babies die this way in his hospital every year. [28]

"Post-Natal Abortion." Occasionally, the child may escape the clutches of the clinic until it is born. But the cadre members are prepared for this event as well. They carry 'chokers' in their bags, which are similar to the white plastic tie-wraps used as handcuffs by some United States police departments. This 'choker' is simply placed around the living baby's soft neck and cinched down hard. The baby will flail its little legs and arms helplessly, dying painfully of strangulation over a period of about five minutes, usually in full view of the poor mother, as a "Lesson in obedience to the Party and to the wishes of the State." [29]

The sad little carcasses that result from this pro-abortion butchery rarely goes to waste; they are commonly thrown to the commune pigs, who gleefully tear the tiny delicacies apart.

Imagine, for a moment, that you are a newborn baby emerging from the warmth and safety of your mother's womb. Imagine that, instead of being held in your mother's loving arms, someone seizes you, chokes the life from you, and throws your broken, dead little body to the animals as waste. Is this what God intended?

Steven Mosher has documented cases where a mother has given birth to twins, and has then immediately been faced with an inhuman 'Sophie's Choice' — Party officials ask her which twin she wants to keep. The other twin is executed on the spot.

He describes the plight of a woman who was unfortunate enough to have borne twins;

In one incident shortly after I left Guangdong Province, a young woman pregnant for the first time gave birth to twin boys. What should have been an occasion for rejoicing quickly turned tragic as the cadres asked her which one she wanted. "Both of them," she replied, but to no avail. One of the babies — she could not and would not choose which — was taken from her and put to death.[30]

Chapter 9 of his book, "Birth Control: A Grim Game of Numbers," deals with China's forced-abortion and one-child policy, which leads also to female infanticide when the first baby is a girl.

Gender Imbalance in the PRC.

Since boys are valued more than girls in China, female infanticide ('femicide') is common. The March 3, 1983 People's Daily admitted that "The butchering, drowning, and leaving to die of female infants has become a grave social problem."

The history of China's newborn male-to-female sex ratio is shown below. Until about 1990, amniocentesis, sonography, and other means of detecting fetal sex before birth were almost unknown outside the largest Chinese cities, so it is obvious that the vast majority of these 'disappearing' girls were killed at birth, when their parents discovered their sex.

The Chinese sex ratio is becoming more and more unbalanced as ultrasonography to identify female preborn children becomes more widespread outside the cities. Therefore, female sex-selection abortions are replacing female infanticide.

Nevertheless, as Figure 4-1 shows, at least 10.3 million girls are missing in China because they were either killed before birth by sex-selection abortion or murdered after birth through female infanticide — their only crime being that they were conceived female.

Number of Girls Aborted or Murdered at Birth in China Because They Were Female, 1976-2005[31]

Age Group	Boys in Age Group	Actual Girls in Age Group	Natural Girls in Age Group	Shortfall of Girls

5-9	50,042,000	44,940,000	47,209,000	2,269,000
10-14	53,933,000	48,369,000	50,880,000	2,511,000

25-29	50,157,000	47,203,000	47,318,000	115,000
	312,218,000	284,257,000	294,544,000	10,287,000

The implications of this gender imbalance are numerous and profound;

- China's population will start declining as soon as 2025, according to the United Nations Population Information Network. Fast-track city dwellers — the very people that China hopes will power its economic engine — are having almost no children at all. In Beijing and Shanghai, the population would be shrinking were it not for an influx of migrants from the countryside. More than a fourth of all young urban couples will not have any children at all, and most refuse to follow Chinese tradition and take care of their elderly parents.[32]
- Kang Ling of the Secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation estimated that, by 2010, there will be 40 million males of marriageable age who will be unable to find wives as a partial result of this mass femicide.[33] Other experts say that there are this many young men who cannot find wives right now. Zhu Zhixin, the Commissioner of the National Bureau of Statistics in China, said that the increased use of ultrasound machines to identify female fetuses and abort them had helped skew China's sex ratio to the point that men outnumber women by approximately 41 million in China, which had a population of 1.26 billion in 2001.[34]
- Beijing's China News Service has announced that 93 percent of unmarried adults in the Beijing area are men. Single men outnumber single women by a million in the 29 to 49 age group in Beijing alone. Men's prospects for marriage, of course, are even bleaker in the rural areas, where female infanticide is most prevalent.
- The gender imbalance already has contributed to the common practice of kidnapping rural women and selling them as brides to farmers. The Chinese Communist Party has revealed that, in 1990 alone, authorities discovered more than 19,000 cases of women sold against their will, and more than 60,000 people implicated in this trafficking were arrested. In the year 2000, 110,000 women were freed during a crackdown on human trafficking, but millions more will never be found. If the gender ratio imbalance continues to worsen, it could also further fuel the rapid spread of prostitution in the nation's cities.[35]

A gross gender imbalance is only one ghastly aspect of the wonderful new world that the anti-lifers are dreaming of: The world where they will have complete control. This is the ultimate result of losing respect for God and for the lives of the most wonderful of His creations, human beings. This is what the anti-lifers so passionately desire for all of us.

Steven Mosher's Experience.

At the center of the storm resides Steven Mosher, Director of the Population Research Institute (PRI), who observed first-hand and then exposed the practice of forced abortion in China while he was researching his Ph.D. dissertation for Stanford University.

The reaction by pro-aborts at both ends of the globe was predictable. His doctoral dissertation committee did not deny any of the facts in his project, but denied him his doctorate on the grounds that he had caused "... an erosion of trust between himself and Stanford's Anthropology Department." [36] Naturally, when Mosher and others demanded proof of this serious charge, there was none forthcoming. The committee reluctantly acknowledged that his research was "outstanding in nature," but added that "There are things better left unsaid." [36] This attitude of censorship is quite typical of the anti-life mindset.

China formally charged Mosher with "crimes against the people," including spying, bribery, smuggling, and slander against China. China's Ministry of Public Security (similar to the Russian KGB) honored him with the title "international spy." Pro-abortionists in both China and the United States called him a liar and a counterrevolutionary, and stated flatly that his charges were pure "fabrications." [36]

Of course, those without a vested interest in these atrocities saw things differently. The Wall Street Journal, renowned for its dispassionate and even-handed reporting, stated that "No one has ever raised significant objections to the veracity of Mr. Mosher's revelations. ... If it were not for Mr. Mosher's courage, the world would never have learned of the horrors he discovered in Guangdong [Province]." [36]

Applause from the United States.

Support for Forced Abortions. Pro-abortion groups like to say that pro-lifers who do not vigorously condemn clinic bombings actually support such actions by their silence.

Since no national pro-abortion group in this country has condemned forced abortions in China, we can use the identical logic to arrive at the inescapable conclusion that Planned Parenthood, the National Organization for Women, and all other pro-abortion groups support forced abortions.

The proof is in the [non]speaking.

Planned Parenthood Supports Forced Abortions. The International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) has a long record of supporting and encouraging forced abortions in the People's Republic of China.

Dr. Alan F. Guttmacher, former President of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, stated more than thirty years ago that "Each country will have to decide its own form of coercion and determine when and how it should be employed. At present, the means available are compulsory sterilization and compulsory abortion. Perhaps someday a way of enforcing compulsory birth control will be feasible" [37] someday a way of enforcing compulsory birth control will be feasible. [37]

In the mid-1980s, a Planned Parenthood panel said that "[We recommend] compulsory abortion of out-of-wedlock pregnancies. ... payments to encourage abortions ... and compulsory sterilization for those who have had two children ... Coercion [in population programs] may become necessary. Such force may be required in areas where the pressure is the greatest, possibly in India and China." [38]

More recently, the IPPF enthused that "China is the most extraordinary success. Irrespective of media speculation about that [population control] program, on the whole this is carried out in a very responsible way." [39]

The National Organization for Women (NOW) Supports Forced Abortions.

However, pro-abortion support for forced abortions is by no means limited to a refusal to attack the programs. The most vociferous American supporter of China's forced abortion program is undoubtedly Molly Yard, former president of the National Organization for Women (NOW).

In the midst of the Congressional debate over the issue, Yard, during her March 1989 appearance on the Oprah Winfrey Show, continued to offer support, excuses and rationalizations for mandatory abortions by asserting that "I consider the Chinese government's [population control] policy among the most intelligent in the world. ... It is a policy limited to the heavily overpopulated areas, and it is an attempt to feed the people of China. I find it very intelligent."

Shortly thereafter, she said in an April 7, 1989 press conference that criticism of China's family planning program comes "from a lot of people who don't know what they're talking about." She also said that "China's population is so enormous that if they didn't control it, they wouldn't be able to feed their people. The Chinese government doesn't coerce people. They use education. It's very clear when you're there. You can't miss it. Even if you can't read the language, you can't miss it." [40]

Even after viewing the mountain of evidence that convinced Congress that our tax dollars are supporting coercion in China, Yard continued to ignore the facts and sidestep the central issue. During her keynote address at the 1990 NOW National Convention, she asked "What is moral about denying family planning funds to China, which is what the United States has done, because the Chinese have a policy of allowing abortions and encouraging a one-child family? What is moral about insisting that our point of view should be adopted by the Chinese when the only responsible policy they can have is to control family planning?" [41]

The Population Institute Supports Forced Abortions. The pro-abortionists are so intent on their agenda that some of them went so far as to oppose the Justice Department's giving sanctuary to women who were fleeing to America to escape Chinese brutality.

Sarah G. Epstein, a member of the advisory board of the Population Institute, went on the offensive;

I am aghast that the Justice Department granted three Chinese couples asylum under guidelines for Chinese citizens who "express a fear of persecution upon return because they refuse to abort a pregnancy or resist sterilization."

I have twice been to China and have studied China's birth policy in cities and rural areas. Only about 20 percent of Chinese families choose to be one-child families. As such, they have certain privileges. No one prevents the others from having two or more children. Indeed, those who choose one child are counseled not to have a sterilization until the child is 10 or 12 years old in case something happens to the only child (or in case they change their minds). ...

The Chinese system is both compassionate and fair. For example, if an oldest child is handicapped, the family can have a second child with all the privileges of an only child. If both parents are only children, the same thing. If the parents belong to minority groups (5 percent of the population), they can have more than one child, with all the benefits of an only child. ...

Allowing any pregnant Chinese couple to gain asylum here on assertion of fear of forced abortion at home (as illegal in China as it is in the United States) makes a mockery of our asylum law. There are people who truly need asylum, and irresponsible use of refuge in our country will make it only harder in the long run for true political refugees. Let us work out a rational population policy for our own country and respect policies of other countries that are dealing humanely with the critical need to slow population growth.[42]

Zero Population Growth (ZPG) Supports Forced Abortions. Incredibly, Zero Population Growth (ZPG) founder and perennial popcon hack Paul Ehrlich found a forum in the [formerly] prestigious National Geographic Magazine. On page 922 of the December 1988 issue (the one with the flashy full-holograph cover), Ehrlich praised China's coercive population-control program as "remarkably vigorous and effective" and applauded China "as a leader in a grand experiment in the management of population and natural resources."

The Worldwatch Institute Supports Forced Abortions. Lester R. Brown, president of the Worldwatch Institute, stated in the May 8, 1985 New York Times that "The main difference between China and other densely populated developing countries ... may be that the Chinese have had the foresight to make projections of their population and resources and the courage to translate their findings into policy." [43]

Other Pro-Abortion Support for Forced Abortions. In prefaces to various Chinese family planning manuals, William H. Draper and Andrew P. O'Meara say that "The methods and techniques used in the People's Republic of China will be of great interest to other nations," and ask "Why not adopt China's population goals and methods?" [44]

In June of 1992, the ubiquitous Garrett Hardin (a member of the American Eugenics Society who himself has four children) said in Omni Magazine that "I give the Chinese credit for officially recognizing that they have a problem and for having the nerve to propose the single-child program ... They have failed, however, by not making this directive universal throughout the country. The one-child policy is only enforced in congested urban areas." [45]

And, of course, in 1983, Ted Turner, founder of the Cable News Network (CNN), produced a half-hour bogus "documentary" entitled "A Finite World: China," which praised the forced-abortion and sterilization program there. For this enthusiastic endorsement of population coercion, he was awarded the "Media Excellence Award" by the Population Action Council (PAC). [46]

Turner's support of forced abortion is longstanding. He addressed the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association (NFPRA) on February 16, 1990

Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association (NFPRHA) on February 10, 1983, where he was awarded the group's President's Award for his support of the United Nations Populations Fund (UNFPA). The previous year, Turner and his wife, Jane Fonda, gave $1 billion to the United Nations for population control programs. During the lavish banquet, Turner said that while he is the father of five children, he fathered most of them before he was 30 when he didn't know any better. He added, "Once they were here, I couldn't shoot them." He also said now he believes an ideal world population would be 2 billion — a drastic decrease from the current population. He claimed that "We could do it in a very humane way if everybody adopted a one-child policy for 100 years."

In other remarks during the NFPRHA convention, Turner said that the Ten Commandments are outdated and stated, "If you're going to have 10 rules, I don't know if adultery should be one of them." When asked what he would say to Pope John Paul, he responded with a bigoted anti-Polish ethnic joke ("Ever seen a Polish mine detector?"), and suggested the Holy Father should "get with it. Welcome to the 20th century." [47]

These revealing episodes show us exactly where the population controllers stand on forced abortions.

Ted's pro-abortion, pro-euthanasia Hollywood stars certainly haven't helped the poor women in China exercise their "right to choose." In fact, as more Chinese atrocities are revealed one by one, Hollywood seems to get behind the coercion more and more.

Turner's Better World Society (BWS) demonstrated its wholehearted support of China's forced-abortion program when it presented its 1988 "Envision a Better World" Award to the head of the China Family Planning Association, Wang Wei. Attending the lavish banquet were, among other stars, "New Age" guru Shirley MacLaine, Margot Kidder, Turner, Carl Sagan, Robin Chandler Duke, Jean-Michel Cousteau, and "good Catholic" Phil Donahue. [48]

As expected, the pro-abortion American media did not hesitate to defend the Chinese population control program. In June 1983, the New York Times praised China as "... the country that has been most effective in implementing birth control and population planning." [49]

A particularly virulent supporter of coerced family planning is the Times' Anthony Lewis, whose hobby until about mid-1988 seemed to be condemning Jerry Falwell for mixing religion and politics while praising anti-apartheid Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa for getting into politics up to his neck.

The same Anthony Lewis excused the 1975 forced march of three million people from Pnomh Penh because, as he said, it was being done to build "a vision of a new [Communist] society," and branded objections to the atrocity from the United States as "cultural arrogance." In 1987, he acknowledged that the Chinese population control program includes forced abortion and sterilization, but stated that "The propriety of the methods used to discourage children is a fair question. But outsiders should not make ringing statements about it without understanding the reality of the problem China faces." [50]

The Current Situation — and the Future.

The Slaughter Continues. The policies of China's family planning program are still being rigorously enforced. Third or fourth babies are automatically slated for abortion. Second babies are also killed if they are conceived less than a fixed period of time after the first — usually four or five years.

The one-child policy, as it is currently applied, is summarized by Central Committee Directive Number 7 of 1983: "All state officials, workers and employees, and urban residents, except for special cases which must be approved, may have only one child per couple."[51]

A more detailed statement regarding the basics of China's inhuman population control program is the directive by Shanxi Province Communist Party Chief Zhang Boxing, issued on July 10, 1983: "Those women who have already given birth to one child must be fitted with IUDs, couples who already have two children must undergo sterilization of either the husband or the wife, and women pregnant outside the Plan must abort as soon as possible."[52]

This is the essence of 'reproductive choice' in the People's Paradise.

There are no exceptions to the "one child" policy in the city, but if couples in the country should have "real difficulty" with their first child — which means that it is a girl — they may be allowed to have a second. Of course, women have no choice when it comes to being neutered. The official Central Committee policy, handed down in 1983, dictates that women with one child be fitted for an IUD, and women with two children be sterilized, whether they want to be or not.

Finally, on December 29, 2001, the 25th session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress formally approved China's first law on population control and family planning, whose purpose is to further advance its one-child policy. Li Peng, Chairman of the legislature, said the law would "stabilize" China's family planning policy, which had been in place since 1980.[53]

Chinese Officials Respond to Criticism. Predictably, Chinese officials at first blandly denied that forced abortions or sterilization had ever been a part of their population control policy, and tried to shift blame by alleging that these coercive measures were strictly due to the "enthusiasm of local officials for the population program."

Then, when the growing pile of evidence became too large for them to ignore, Chinese bureaucrats took the position that any protest against these brutal actions was meddling in their internal affairs. As early as January 11, 1985, Chinese embassy aide Shi Chengxun denied reports of female infanticide and defended his country's coercive population control program with a statement that was hauntingly familiar to American pro-lifers; "Precisely because of this important [population control] policy, the Chinese people's material and cultural life has been improved, the old have been taken better care of, and babies have become fewer but healthier."[54]

Perhaps the most comical statement was made by Jin Mingai, mayor of Daijiawan Village, who claimed that "There is no infanticide here. The peasants would never drown their own daughters." [55]

The reason that Jin's statement is so funny is that Daijiawan Village has no girl children at all under the age of twelve.

On March 16, 1989, Ministry spokesman Li Zhaoxing said that "It is a country's sovereign right to decide its own population policy." [56]

A burst of defensive essays appeared in the English translations of Chinese magazines following disclosures about their coercive population programs and the widespread publicity about the mid-1989 Tianenmen Square massacre. The bottom line of these essays was that "There are no universal and abstract human rights ... from the Marxist standpoint, all rights emerge historically and are based on economic relations in society." [57]

This final statement is the philosophical underpinning for the entire Chinese program. Several Provincial governments have adopted a program of compulsory abortion and sterilization for tens of thousands of retarded women in some districts. In Gansu Province, for example, official Xiao Shuzi stated that "The purpose of the [compulsory sterilization] law is to raise the quality of our population and of our nation." [58]

By May of 1990, 5,500 compulsory sterilizations had taken place in Gansu Province, and officials stated that their goal was to sterilize most or all of the Province's 260,000 mentally handicapped persons by the end of 1990. [59]

Dr. Blake Kerr, a physician who has long been involved in civil rights, reported in early 1989 that coerced sterilizations and abortions were still widespread in China. They are primarily performed by "roving birth control teams," whose pay depends upon a quota system. Dr. Kerr reported that several Tibetan monks witnessed such a team functioning outside their monastery in Amdo; "All pregnant women in the village had abortions followed by sterilization, and every woman of childbearing age was sterilized. We saw many girls crying, heard their screams as they waited for their turn to go into the tent, and saw the growing pile of fetuses build outside the tent, which smelled horrible." [60]

Merely an 'Image Problem.' According to Nafis Sadik, former Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), which helped design and execute the Chinese population program, such abuses should be halted — not because they are intrinsically immoral acts, but because "the Chinese need to counter their negative image" in the hope of getting UNFPA funds reinstated by the United States. This attitude is typical of the international popcon fanatics — the only real evil is a tarnished image.

All of these measures mean that China's population is aging faster than the population of any other country in history except Japan. By the year 2010, the elderly retired will outnumber workers. Since China is not a rich country, this will place an intolerable burden on its economic system.

China is falling into a demographic hole of its own construction. However, it is quite well prepared to climb out, using the same Draconian methods it used to dig the hole in the first place. Following the lead of eugenicists and euthanasiasts like Joseph Fletcher, China's intellectuals are already preparing mathematical formulas to assess the 'suitability' of its citizens to live.

One such crude assessment table and several possible outcomes are shown in Figure 4-2.

How easy it is to classify entire groups of people out of existence! And yet, we Americans cannot look down our noses at these 'barbaric' Chinese — we have been doing the same thing, albeit in a more genteel and covert manner, for decades. Remember Baby Doe of Bloomington, Indiana? And Nancy Cruzan? And the thousands of others that have joined them in death because of they were "inconvenient?"

The final result of all of this is predictable — and entirely inevitable. Shortly after the turn of the century, the elderly — perhaps those of a fixed age — and those who fail to pass enough mental tests like those shown in Figure 4-2 will be forced to attend to garner enough points in tests like those shown in Figure 4-2, will be forced to attend 're-education' sessions that get progressively longer and more intense until the attendees finally realize the mistake they are making by continuing to be useless eaters. They will then unanimously 'volunteer' for euthanasia.

And who in the United States will applaud then?

Culling the "Undesirables." The Chinese social engineers are already putting their euthanasia assessment tables into action as they rush to fulfill demand in the growing world market in organ trafficking, while accomplishing the goal of ridding their society of the growing number of "undesirables."

According to Chinese dissident and former political prisoner Harry Wu, there are now ninety hospitals in China capable of performing kidney and cornea transplants. The going price for kidneys is $30,000, and several hospitals are now doing a more complicated (and far more lucrative) liver transplant procedure.

The demand is there — but what about the supply?

There are currently 68 offenses punishable by death in the People's Republic of China, which carries out twice as many executions as the rest of the world combined. [61] These crimes include such nonviolent crimes as reselling value-added tax receipts, theft, burglary, hooliganism, seriously disrupting public order, pimping, trafficking of women, the taking of bribes, corruption, forgery and tax evasion.[62] It is estimated that there are at least 10,000 executions in China annually, and that 1,600 of these prisoners voluntarily or involuntarily donate 3,200 organs per year.[63]

Since many Chinese people engage in money-making practices that carry the death penalty, the authorities have a ready-made supply of organs available — the many prisoners who receive the death penalty every year.

Wang Guoqi, a former surgeon for the People's Liberation Army (PLA), testified before Congress that bodies of executed prisoners are usually rushed to an autopsy room, where doctors extract skin, kidneys, livers, bones, and corneas for research and experimental purposes. The skin of the corpses is sold to burn victims for 10 renminbi (about $1.20) per square centimeter, or $7.80 per square inch.[64] Acquiring skin from executed prisoners usually takes place around major holidays such as the Chinese New Year, or during the government's "Strike Hard" campaigns against crime, when prisoners are executed in groups. After a prisoner is executed, teams of doctors have 15 seconds to get his corpse to a waiting ambulance, where other physicians quickly extract his or her kidneys and other desirable organs. Finally, the doctors turn the corpse over to another team which specializes in stripping skin from bodies, and this task is completed in 10 to 20 minutes.

Believe it or not, some prisoners are still alive and breathing after their kidneys are extracted and during the process of removing their skin![64]

None of this is done with informed consent — or anesthesia.

Finally, the ransacked, mutilated corpse is delivered to a crematorium.

Dr. Wang said that "After all extractable tissues and organs were taken, what remained was an ugly heap of muscles, the blood vessels still bleeding, or all viscera exposed. Then the corpse was handed to the workers at the crematorium." [64]

Dr. Wang participated in these ghastly procedures more than a hundred times, so he is eminently qualified to testify as to the inhumane nature of the Communist regime. He has since repented of his involvement in these horrors.

Naturally, the Chinese government has alleged that his testimony was "riddled with lies." Chinese public relations official said that "His account of the executions is lies. Chinese public relations official said that "his account of the executions ... is something out of his imagination ... an anti-Chinese farce," and suddenly the Chinese government began to make all kinds of allegations of illegal activities against Dr. Wang. [65]

This, of course, is how Communists and other anti-lifers everywhere operate: Lie, dodge the questions, and slander those who oppose you. After all, how can a government admit such horrors?

In 1994, Mr. Wu secretly videotaped the comments of a hospital worker in Zhengzhou City, who had extracted organs at execution sites many times. The worker said "A shot in his head, blow away his brain, and the guy is brain dead. He has no more thinking, ceases to be a human being, just a thing, and we use the waste." [66]

Mr. Wu posed as a prospective organ buyer at the First University Hospital in Chengdu. A Chinese doctor making a sales pitch to him boasted that

The quality of our kidneys is better than in America, because we can remove the kidney fast and at the appropriate time. Basically, as soon as we know the donor is brain dead, we can get at the kidney with the minimum of fuss and we can guarantee several kidneys in one month. The distance between where we remove the kidney and the transplant is short. We can do it in, oh, less than 10 hours. In America it takes more than 20 hours. [66]

A reporter from the South China Morning Post inquired about the possibility of a liver transplant for a friend. A doctor at the Sun Yat Sen University of Medical Sciences in Chengdu told him,

[T]he organs are of good quality as they come from young prisoners. ... I cannot make it too clear ... if you miss this chance [before Lunar New Year], you may have to wait until Labor Day. Some prisoners have been sentenced earlier. We will have some organs this month. Of course, we have to match the patient's blood type, but no need to worry. There will be lots. [67]

Mr. Wu also caught on tape the comments of a grateful transplant recipient at Huaxi University of Medical Sciences in Chengdu, who said that "They told me my kidney came from an executed prisoner because you get them fresh that way. From the taking out of the kidney, it is only a few hours to get it transplanted in me." [68]

This patient was one of six who had received a "fresh" kidney that same day. It is unlikely that it was a mere coincidence that the Chinese government carried out a mass execution only 10 miles away just a couple of hours before the transplants took place. [68]

Wei Jingsheng, from Columbia University's Human Rights Center, testified Congress that, while he was on death row, a guard told him that often organ removal itself is used as a means of execution. The guard said "There are almost no exceptions. They first are given anesthesia. Just the same as killing a pig. ... We use cloth to wrap them up and bring them to the execution ground. No one cares if they are alive or dead." [69]

Gao Pei Qi, the onetime deputy chief of the Public Security Bureau in Shenzhen, China, testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1995 regarding informed consent for the condemned prisoners.

He said that

In the 10 years that I worked for the Public Security Bureau, I never saw or heard anything to suggest that death row prisoners were asked for consent before donation anything to suggest that death-row prisoners were asked for consent before donating organs. Nor was the family asked. In fact, more often than not, the prisoner's family would be held under house arrest while the executions were taking place. Only by agreeing to pay the authorities for the urn would they be able to collect the ashes.[70]

In keeping with the practice of corrupt Communist systems everywhere, only the rich have access to the bountiful harvest of organs from executed prisoners. The priority list is as follows;

1. high-ranking government officials or members of the military;
2. wealthy overseas Chinese and other foreigners who can pay the fees the Chinese government demands;
3. rank and file members of the military; and
4. members of the public.[71]

Naturally, only categories (1) and (2) ever have the opportunity to take advantage of organ transplants.

A number of Americans, usually Chinese-born, have taken advantage of the lucrative Chinese organ trade. In 1998, Mr. Wu worked with the Federal Bureau of Investigation to set up a sting operation that caught Wang Cheng Yong and Fu Xingqi, two suspected organ brokers who resided in Queens. Wu got Wang and Fu to arrange for patients to fly to China for kidneys and to smuggle corneas, which can keep for weeks when frozen, for sale abroad.[72]

Professor Nancy Scheler-Hughes, program director of Organ Watch, congratulated Dr. Thomas Dilio and Harry Wu for their courage and stated how "the complicity of Chinese doctors in these highly medicalized executions whereby the condemned prisoner is carefully examined, incubated, and "prepped" for organs harvesting minutes before he is executed by a bullet to the head, is reminiscent of Nazi medicine as practiced in the death camps."[73]

Support for a Forced Abortion Program in the United States.

"The greatest evil is not now done in those sordid "dens of crime" that Dickens loved to paint. It is not even done in concentration camps and labor camps. In those we see its final result. But it is conceived and ordered (moved, seconded, carried and minuted) by quiet men in clean, carpeted and well-lighted offices, by quiet men with white collars and cut fingernails and smooth-shaven cheeks who do not need to raise their voices. Hence, naturally enough, my symbol for Hell is something like the bureaucracy of a police state or the offices of a thoroughly nasty business concern."
- C.S. Lewis, The Screwtape Letters. [74]

The True Meaning of 'Pro-Choice.' For more than two decades, the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) and many other popcon fanatics have lavishly praised the Chinese population control program, and have held it up as a model for other countries - including the United States!

At the same time, any pro-life activist who points at China and raises the specter of reproductive coercion in the United States is roundly criticized and ridiculed as being an alarmist - not only by pro-abortionists, but by know-little Christians as well.

Pro-lifers are not merely being alarmist. There are concrete reasons for worry. American scholars have been discussing direct and indirect coercion in many areas of reproduction for more than 25 years. If indirect mechanisms for the application of force are successfully installed, and if they function efficiently and quietly enough, direct coercion is absolutely inevitable.

As always, this force will first be applied to the handicapped and weak. Already parents and doctors allow thousands of handicapped newborns to die of starvation and thirst in this country every year (for documentation of the spreading practice of infanticide in the United States, see Chapter 23, "Euthanasia"). And soon, parents may not even have the choice of bearing a less-than-perfect child.

For example, demographer Bernard Berelson has recommended a Federal fertility control program that would include childbearing licenses, temporary or permanent enforced sterilization at the whim of the government, compulsory sterilization for all men with three children, and mandatory abortion in many cases if the government saw fit. [75]

Population controller Paul Ehrlich has given us a detailed view of what he envisions for the United States of the future in his 1968 book The Population Bomb;

The battle to feed all of humanity is over. In the 1970's the world will undergo famine - hundreds of millions of people are going to starve to death in spite of any crash programs embarked upon now. At this late date nothing can prevent a substantial increase in the world death rate. ... We must have population control at home, hopefully through a system of incentives and penalties, but by compulsion if voluntary methods fail. We can no longer afford merely to treat the symptoms of the cancer of population rain. ... we can no longer afford merely to treat the symptoms of the cancer of population growth; the cancer itself must be cut out. Population control is the only answer [prologue] A minimum of three and a half million people will starve to death this year [1968], mostly children. But this is a mere handful compared to the numbers that will be starving in a decade or so. And it is now too late to take action to save many of those people [page 17]. ... Our first step must be to immediately establish and advertise drastic policies designed to bring our own population size under control. We must define a goal of a stable optimum population size for the United States ... and move rapidly toward that goal. ... we also are going to have to adopt some very tough foreign policy positions relative to population control. How do we go about it? Many of my colleagues feel that some sort of compulsory birth regulation would be necessary to achieve such [population] control. One plan often mentioned involves the addition of temporary sterilants to the water supplies or staple food. Doses of the antidote would be carefully rationed by the government to produce the desired population size. Those of you who are appalled at such a suggestion can rest easy. The option isn't even open to us, thanks to the criminal inadequacy of biomedical research in this area [pages 135-136]. ... A Federal Department of Population and Environment (DPE) should be set up with power to take whatever steps are necessary to establish a reasonable population size in the United States and to put an end to the steady deterioration of our environment. The DPE would be given ample funds to support research in the areas of population control and environmental quality. In the first area it would promote intensive investigation of new techniques of birth control, possibly leading to the development of mass sterilizing agents such as were discussed above [page 138].

Edgar Chasteen, author of The Case for Compulsory Birth Control and a board member of Zero Population Growth (ZPG), has even proposed a two-child law for the United States which reads as follows;

As of January 1, 1975, it shall be unlawful for any American family to give birth to more than two children. Any family already having two or more natural children on that date shall not be allowed to give birth to another. Toward this end, it is hereby lawfully determined that all Americans above the age of 10 years will, at least one year prior to the aforementioned date, present himself/herself for reversible immunization against fertility at a local county health department or physician's office. An official "Certificate of Immunization" shall be issued to and in the name of each citizen so treated. Said certification shall be signed by the authorized medical practitioner who administers the immunization, and shall be entered into the official records of the county in which immunization occurred. After marriage, any citizen may present himself/herself at a local county health department or physician's office and obtain a fertility restorer. At the birth of the second child, immunity against fertility shall be readministered to both parents. If the first birth shall be multiple, no other births shall be permitted to that mother, and both parents shall thereupon be re-immunized.[76]

Figure 4-3 is a compendium of more quotes made by population controllers in support of their goal of a program of forced contraception, abortion, and sterilization in the United States. The reason that so many quotes are presented is that it is necessary to emphasize that such desires on the part of the population controllers are not unique to to emphasize that such desires on the part of the population controllers are not unique to just one or two individuals - most or all of our country's well-known antinatalist agitators favor mandatory population control measures for the United States.

"It has been concluded that mandatory population control laws, even those requiring compulsory abortion, could be sustained under our existing Constitution if the population crisis became sufficiently compelling to endanger the society. A few consider the situation already serious enough to justify some forms of compulsion. ... "Just as we have laws compelling death control, so we must have laws requiring birth control - the purpose being to ensure a zero rate of population increase. We must come to see that it is the duty of the government to protect women against pregnancy as it protects them against job discrimination and smallpox, and for the same reason - the public good. No longer can we tolerate the doctrinaire position that the number of children a couple has is a strictly private decision. ... Such laws would serve not only to defuse the population bomb, but also to protect first-born children against too prolific reproduction by their parents."

Therefore, since we must restrict the rate of population increase, we should also be giving careful consideration to the quality as well as the quantity of people generated. ... "I am told by a reliable scholar that a major private health insurance company is contemplating the policy of requiring amniocentesis or other acceptable forms of antenatal diagnosis for all pregnant women holding a policy with the company. If a diagnosis of congenital defect is made, insurance will be dropped on the potential child. In other words, abortion will be required. ... We have a legal obligation to protect the unborn from the cruel and unusual punishment of genetic disease. Surely we need ponder whether the abnormal merit our protection, even in utero. We now have the possibility, which means the responsibility, of deciding whom we will admit to the human community."

The Ultimate Goal: Compulsive, Sterile Sex. Paul Ehrlich of Zero Population Growth (ZPG) has recommended with a straight face that the Federal government allocate funds to develop mass sterilizing drugs that could be added to the water supply in all major American cities to curtail or destroy fertility.[77] Dr. Mary Calderone of Physicians for Social Responsibility takes this atrocity one step further: she has stated that she wants both contraceptives and aphrodisiacs added to the water supply.

What a noble vision! Unlimited compulsive, animal-like, sterile sex. Is this the best that Calderone and her peers envision for the human race? Is this their idea of the pinnacle of human evolution?

Facts of Life: Chapter 4: China's Forced Abortion Program: The Results of Coercion in the United States

The Results of Coercion in the United States.

"No woman is forced to abort a pregnancy in this country. ... It must be stated as fact that no one is forced to submit to an abortion, that the power of the state has not been used in a coercive manner, and that Americans have not been forced or propagandized into supporting that which offends their religious beliefs or their moral convictions."

— Rabbi Charles D. Mintz of the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC, formerly RCAR).[78]

Advocaton and Implementation. Some may claim that coercive programs such as those practiced in the People's Republic of China could never be instituted in the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave.

Bitter experience has already proven such people wrong — many times over.

Under a utilitarian worldview, it is simply not possible to advocate eugenics and coercive population programs without implementing them.

Already in this country, we forcibly abort the mentally handicapped, coercively sterilize the unwanted, and systematically euthanize the inconvenient. Such individual actions, because they are so universally repulsive, are committed under a cloak of the strictest secrecy. Only the family, the doctors, and the judges know, and they aren't telling.

Only when some ghastly foul-up is committed, only when the well-oiled wheels of death squeak loudly, does the truth reach the light of day.

Forcibly Aborting the Handicapped. For example, a mentally handicapped teenager was aborted in her second trimester on October 22, 1981, at the Reproductive Health Services abortuary in St. Louis. She died following complications due to the abortion.

She did not give her consent to the abortion. In other words, the abortion was committed in the absence of her freely willed choice. Yet the owner of the abortion mill — Judith Widdicomb — was the Executive Director of National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL). And Frank Susman, a local American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) lawyer and "regular attorney" for the clinic, had petitioned a local court for the abortion.[79]

Keep in mind that NARRAL and the ACLU proclaim loudly to anyone who will listen that they champion "free choice." But, as always, actions speak louder than words. When the opportunity comes to force abortions on those who cannot resist, these and other pro-abortion groups are the first to take advantage of the situation.

Despite their protestations to the contrary, pro-abort groups are the greatest danger to "free reproductive choice" in the world today.

Pushing Sterilization on the 'Undesirables.' American population controllers generally confined themselves to theorizing and philosophizing until the early 1920s, when state and local governments began to "test" (purely for academic or fiscal reasons, of course) some of their more apparently innocuous schemes. These plans, of course, targeted those who had the weakest voices; the poor and the institutionalized.

Eventually, of course, the population controllers and eugenicists discovered the simplest and most effective way of preventing the "less desirable classes" from reproducing — widespread involuntary surgical sterilization.

The first American law mandating the sterilization of 'undesirables' was passed at the end of World War I. The operations were performed in "mental health facilities" on "unwed mothers, prostitutes, petty criminals and children with disciplinary problems." [80]

In 1927, Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes delivered the Court's Buck v. Bell decision upholding the widespread enforced eugenic sterilization of poor Black women in several states. In his opinion, Holmes wrote that "We have seen more than once that the public welfare may call upon the best citizens for their lives. It would be strange if it could not call upon those who already sap the strength of the State for these lesser sacrifices. ... Three generations of imbeciles are enough." [81]

Justice Holmes had once remarked that "I see no reason for attributing to man a significance different in kind from that which belongs to a baboon or a grain of sand." [82]

By 1933, thirty states had enacted laws that mandated sterilization for the poor. [83] These laws were modeled on the Model Eugenical Sterilization Law, promulgated by Harry H. Laughlin, director of the Eugenics Record Office. This legislation called for the sterilization of criminals, mental patients, the retarded, the blind, deaf, diseased, and alcoholics, and for dependents upon society — the homeless, orphans, and tramps. [84]

The Nazis, of course, were corresponding with their American counterparts, and simultaneously enacted the 1933 Law for the Prevention of Progeny with Hereditary Disease. This law was the basis for Hitler's race purification program, and was directly patterned after the American Model Eugenical Sterilization Law. [85]

Forty years later, a Federal court found that, under these laws, 100,000 to 150,000 women were sterilized annually without their knowledge or consent under these federal programs. From 1924 right up until the early 1970s, more than 7,500 poor men and women were forcibly sterilized in the State of Virginia alone every year. [86]

After the initial sterilization programs had been enacted with little fuss from the public, other eugenicists, sensing that their "window of opportunity" had arrived, demanded that the American eugenics program "progress" even further, and as quickly as possible. Frederick Osborne called for the mandatory segregation of those persons with birth defects and mental disabilities in state-run institutions. Even if such unfortunates recovered, a condition of their release would be mandatory sterilization. Osborne also demanded mandatory sterilization of all those who carried hereditary disabilities (which would account for more than 20 percent of the population), and mandatory contraceptive use by all those whose family history indicated a predisposition towards serious hereditary defects (another twenty percent of the nation's population).

The Programs are Gone, But the Racism Remains. Vestiges of these racist eugenics programs still linger to this day. The federal government continues to fund 90 percent of the cost of sterilization of poor women under Medicaid and other family planning programs, but will not pay for infertility treatments. And poor women are now being coerced into using the implantable abortifacient Norplant, as described in Chapter 2, "Abortifacients."

And, of course, we still have many influential pro-abortion pro-eugenics scientists calling for enforced sterilization and abortion. Dr. Cecil B. Jacobson, Chief of the Reproductive Genetics Unit of George Washington University Hospital, asserts that "I can't imagine any reasonably responsible person arguing against the abortion of mongols ... If we could tell what fetuses are going to be affected with cancer in their 40s and 50s, I would be for aborting them now." [88]

And, in a 1979 symposium sponsored by the March of Dimes, bioethicist Joseph Fletcher claimed that "People who carry genetic disease should be prevented from having children. We ought, in conscience, to have a humane minimum standard of reproduction, not blindly accepting the outcome of every conception. And we ought to act on our genetic information to prevent the birth of children below that minimum." [89]

The only reasons we do not hear more about these quotes is that these people move in influential circles that most of us never breach, and that the anti-life media hushes up their indiscretions so that the public never hears about them.

For more information on the racism of abortion (including the court-ordered use of sterilizing and abortifacient 'contraceptives'), see Chapter 6, "The Racism of Abortion."

Although the practice of enforced sterilization has largely been stamped out, it is interesting to note that Neofeminists commonly use it as a red herring by tying it to abortion 'rights.' Despite the fact that they were responsible for the atrocity of forced neutering, one of the favorite slogans of the Neofeminists is 'NO FORCED STERILIZATION! NO COMPULSORY PREGNANCY!'

Conclusions.

The quotes and actions of Planned Parenthood and the population controllers prove conclusively that they are anything but "pro-choice." They are now irrevocably on record as favoring mandatory abortion and forced sterilization for women who "breed excessively."

In other words, PP and its contemptible ilk obviously favor not just 'abortion on demand,' but also 'abortion on command!'

Jacqueline R. Kasun, Ph.D. The War Against Population: The Economics and Ideology of Population Control [Ignatius Press, 15 Oakland Avenue, Harrison, New York 10528, 1987]. One of the most popular myths of our time is the Malthusian notion that the world's population is exploding, so that disaster is inevitable (even imminent). Therefore, the population control fanatics state as fact that governments and individuals have the duty to control procreation, no matter what means are necessary. The population controllers use billions of our tax dollars to advance U.S. "contraceptive imperialism" all over the world. This book examines and effectively debunks the basic assumptions of the international population control network.

Mr. Mosher, a Chinese-American scholar who was denied his Ph.D. because he revealed details of China's forced-abortion policy, outlines various Chinese government policies and their impacts on the common Chinese worker and rural dweller. Chapter 9 of his book, "Birth Control: A Grim Game of Numbers," deals with China's forced-abortion and one-child policy, which leads also to female infanticide when the first baby is a girl.

"I found myself in danger, I cried out in despair
I prayed, "Lord let them hear me! Let just one person care!"
I raised my voice to heaven as the train kept moving on
As we passed behind the church yard I could hear their worship songs
I cried out all the louder to the Christians there inside, but they raised the chorus louder not hearing me outside
I know they heard the whistle and the clacking of the tracks
They knew that I was going to die and still they turned their backs
I said, "Father in Heaven how can your people be so very hard of hearing to the cry of one like me?"
I shouted, "Please have mercy! Just a prayer before I die!"
But they sang a little louder to the Holy One on high.
They raised their hands to Heaven but blood was dripping down
The blood of all the innocent their voices tried to drown
They have devotions daily, they function in My name and they never even realized it was I upon that train."
- Penny Lea. "Sing a Little Louder!"[1]

What the Pro-Abortionists Say.

"In our view, individuals who exhibit the least human dignity are those who compare the Holocaust, the mass murder of 6 million Jews, to abortion. There exists no comparison more immoral or depraved. It is both illogical and outrageous to suggest that the calculated murder of millions of children and adults can be equated with an individual woman's decision to terminate her pregnancy ..."

- Sol Gordon.[2]

Why Such Vehemence?

"The greatest evil is not now done in those sordid "dens of crime" that Dickens loved to paint. It is not even done in concentration camps and labor camps. In those we see its final result. But it is conceived and ordered (moved, seconded, carried and minuted) by quiet men in clean, carpeted and well-lighted offices, by quiet men with white collars and cut fingernails and smooth-shaven cheeks who do not need to raise their voices. Hence, naturally enough, my symbol for Hell is something like the bureaucracy of a police state or the offices of a thoroughly nasty business concern."

- C.S. Lewis, The Screwtape Letters.[3]

The Psychology Behind the Reaction. Sol Gordon is certainly not alone in his condemnation of pro-lifers for their audacity in comparing the Nazi Holocaust to the New Age holocausts of abortion, infanticide and euthanasia.

Pro-abortion medical 'ethicist' Dr. Sissela Bok insists that any comparison between the original and American Holocausts is "an inflammatory toying with human fears," and British euthanasiast Glanville Williams calls such comparisons "ridiculous fantasies" and says that "No proposal for reform, however strong the argument in its favor, is immune from the 'wedge' objection [the 'slippery slope']."

It is obvious that a spurious or truly ridiculous comparison would not receive the dignity or effort of a logical reply. However, if well-known pro-abortionists feel driven to denounce the Holocaust/abortion analogy with such incandescent vehemence, we have some indication that the analogy is at least partially true, or they wouldn't feel threatened by it.

Pro-abortionists will scoff, of course, but psychologists know that the most vicious reactions occur to a statement that comes uncomfortably close to some secret that a person wants hidden or obscured.

Abortion pushers passionately loathe the "American Holocaust" analogy precisely because it is so fitting and because it hits so very close to home.

Pro-abortion propagandists are very disturbed about this comparison, and for good reason - their thin veil of privacy will be ripped away if the public sees the pervasive parallels between themselves and the Nazis, and so they attack the comparison with incredibly vehemence.

The 'abortion mentality' might just as well be called the 'eugenics mentality;' we, not God, determine who will be born into this world (or who will remain here). This mindset cuts across all borders and issues; it can be applied to birth control, abortion, sterilization, euthanasia, and even genocide!

In any case, we know from experience that the only reason certain people react with rage to the "abortion Holocaust" term is because they love abortion. They do not shout abuse when an environmentalist speaks of a "salmon Holocaust," as when one Northwest writer said that "Salmon were found dead in a net pen below the Ice Harbor Dam Monday, where scientists were monitoring the migration. ... This isn't just a case of salmon murder. It's a Holocaust. What do we do to stop it?"[4]

These pro-abortionists did not even raise their voices in protest when Ingrid Newkirk, founder and director of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA), compared Jews to chickens, of all things, when she claimed that "When it comes to feelings, a rat is a pig is a dog is a boy. They are all mammals. They all feel pain. There is no rational basis for saying that a human being has special rights ... 6 million people died in concentration camps, but 6 billion chickens will die this year in slaughterhouses."[5]

Anti-lifers also display a rigid double standard when pro-lifers use swastikas to symbolize the abortion-Holocaust connection.

Why don't they get angry when pro-abortion groups use swastikas and images of Adolf Hitler against pro-lifers? Why don't they complain when 'gays' use as one of their primary symbols another prominent Nazi symbol - the pink triangle that Hitler used to brand homosexuals in the concentration camps? And where is their outrage over the Olympic torch, which was invented by German Carl Diam in 1916 and first used during the Nazi-sponsored Berlin Olympics in 1936?[6]

A Detailed Example of Overreaction. It is very important for pro-life debaters to know exactly why pro-aborts object so strenuously to the Holocaust comparison. If pro-abort 'logic' can be effectively debunked, the pro-lifer can show just how Nazi-like the thinking of the anti-lifers really is in the process.

The 1990 National Organization for Women (NOW) fundraising comic book "Choices" very neatly encapsulated all of the pro-abortion objections to the "American Holocaust" comparison in a two-page piece entitled "Donahue."

It seems amusing that pro-abortionists constantly push their propaganda in comic book form; perhaps they realize that the only people who will believe their swill are those who operate with a comic-book and bumper-sticker mentality.

In this story, a woman quotes a Catholic man (with a classic stern, staring, White 'Big Brother' face), a guest on the "Donahue" television talk show. Her rebuttal to his statements follows, with editorial replies to her rhetorical questions added in brackets.

Analysis of the "Choices" Objection to the American Holocaust Analogy

"Hitler had a conscience, he [the "Donahue" guest] said. Hitler made a conscious decision to kill Jews. If Hitler had a Christian conscience, he said, it wouldn't have happened. This guy kept calling a woman's choice the "Abortion Holocaust." This pisses me off!

"I mean, does this guy really think that a woman's right to decide for herself can be equated with ovens and gas chambers and medical experiments?" [The unborn are indeed incinerated in specially-made Austrian ovens after they are killed. Late-term babies are also the subjects of ghastly medical experiments].

"Can he actually compare getting on a bus to go to a clinic with being herded onto trains like cattle (actually, worse than cattle), and being delivered into the gates of hell, gates with names like Auschwitz, Dachau, Bergen-Belsen, Treblinka?" [Women are herded into clinics by escorts, rushed through assembly-line abortions, and hustled out the door as soon as they can stagger a few steps. No time to think it over, no other options, no informed consent. And the clinics, by whatever name, are the gates to the tortures of Hell for their unborn children].

"Does he really believe that going through an elective ambulatory procedure is the same as being strapped down on a table and having your ovaries irradiated and then removed, without consent, without anesthesia?" [Unborn babies - and now, even newborn anencephalic babies - do indeed often have their organs removed without consent and without anesthesia].

"Jesus Christ! And that's the only Christian thing I can say about it! How dare he equate the suffering of millions upon millions (and not only Jews) which was thrust upon them by a madman and his murdering hordes, with a conscience, Christian or otherwise ... with personal choice?" [Call it anything you like, but the only difference is this: Instead of having black-garbed SS troops oversee the execution of millions, now the victim's own mothers willingly carry them to the slaughter - all in the name of 'freedom of choice!']

The final panel shows the woman, with a determined look on her face vividly reminiscent of a Red Chinese propaganda poster, volunteering for "Clinic Defense," as she gallantly thinks, "I'm insulted. No, it's worse. I'm disgusted. As a Jew ... and as a woman." [We pro-lifers are disgusted, too - and that is why we so adamantly oppose this slaughter of the innocents]!

In summary, the only difference between the Nazi and American Holocausts is that the ability to make the decision to kill has been delegated from the Nazi death camp (Vernichtungslager) commandants and doctors to individual women. The main event - the killing - still takes place.

In fact, it may be said that the American Holocaust is far worse than the Nazi

In fact, it may be said that the American Holocaust is far worse than the Nazi Holocaust, not only in sheer numbers of deaths, but in the fact that tens of millions of women have had their consciences deadened to the point that they want to abort their children for convenience.

The Responses. Notice the tone of the above pro-abortion tirades. These rhetorical explosions illustrate the only two possible pro-abortion responses to the Holocaust comparison;

1. Sol Gordon simply states his opinion; as always, there are no attempts to refute or discuss, only to condemn, the Holocaust comparison.
2. The "Choices" comic-book writer merely asks a long line of rhetorical questions for the purpose of obscuring the comparison.

Notice also that both writers puff up like fat toads with sheer indignity and bitterness. This is all the pro-abortionists can do. After all, it is virtually impossible to disprove such a complex analogy. It is much easier to obscure it with the diversion provided by an explosion of indignant words.

Pro-lifers have an easy task with the Holocaust parallel; all we have to do is highlight just a few of the many parallels between the original and current Holocausts to get our points across. It is up to the pro-aborts to disprove the analogy, which of course is impossible.

When Pro-Abortion 'Jews' Object.

"The Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights shares the outrage of our member Jewish groups and other member religious bodies over statements by persons in the anti-choice movement equating the practice of abortion with the Nazi Holocaust."

- Mary Jane Patterson, President of the Board of Directors of the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC).[7]

They Fake a Good 'Indignant' ... At no time do secular Jewish abortophiles become more indignant than when pro-lifers explain and publicize the many parallels between the original Nazi Holocaust and the one occurring in the Western nations right now. The intensity of their reaction to such analogies is almost comically vitriolic.

When a pro-lifer confronts a 'Jewish' abortion-lover on the topic of abortion, the situation can get very sensitive. The Jewish pro-abort will always divert attention from the focus of the debate and will always accuse the pro-lifer of "anti-Semitism." This reaction is guaranteed; the Jewish pro-abort simply does not have the intelligence or the imagination to formulate any other response. The Jewish pro-abortionist is taking the classic 'victim stance,' and the pro-lifer must not let him get away with it.

Anti-Semitism once referred to those who hate Jews; now it refers to those that anti-life Jews hate.

The only possible way to deal with this nonsense is with a powerful and focused counterattack. The pro-lifer should state that the "anti-Semitic" accusation is flatly stupid and illogical, and should explain the many parallels between the Old and New Holocausts. If the situation is particularly 'hot,' he can simply emphasize the central point by asking again and again: "Who did all the killing in the first Holocaust? And who does all the killing now?"

There is no way around this parallel for the pro-abort.

The pro-life debater must recognize that real Jews are pro-life. Only Modernist or revisionist 'Jews' are pro-abortion, just as only Modernist or revisionist 'Catholics' are. In other words, people who claim to be both "pro-choice" and "Jewish" are really not Jewish at all, just as self-described 'Catholic' pro-abortionists are not Catholic at all.

Revisionist 'Jews' As Bigots. Strangely, the same people who snivel about "religious bigotry" are usually virulent anti-Christian bigots themselves. More particularly, most pro-abortion 'Jews' seem to have a strong anti-Catholic bias that they do not even seem to be aware of.

For example, 'Jewish' abortophile Regina Barshak squawked loudly when pro-lifers dared to draw the Old/New Holocaust analogy in her presence;

For the purposes of this political campaign, they [pro-lifers] help themselves at the expense of cheapening the memory of those millions of murdered men, women and children, - as well as at the expense of the personal distress caused by an apparently disrespectful use of events. ... It must be noted that while millions of men, women and children relentlessly dragged themselves to their death under the boots of their tormentors for nearly a decade, neither the voices of the prestigious leaders of the Vatican - nor the voices of "Value of Life" persons - were heard on behalf of these tortured lives. Now this world drama is exploited in the form of a callous and cheap and convenient cliché for the self-serving purposes of a political controversy.[8]

Inconsistency and Hypocrisy. Notice how pro-aborts like to have it both ways; when pro-lifers enter the political arena, abortophiles snivel that they are trying to impose a "profoundly religious" viewpoint on everyone - and then, when pro-lifers try to become involved in church activities, the abortion issue suddenly becomes a "political campaign," as Barshak asserts.

Pro-lifers should not be misled by the agonized bleating of secular so-called 'Jews' who aggressively promote abortion. For these people, preserving their precious abortion 'right' is infinitely more important than honoring the memory of the victims of the original Holocaust.

The Real Scoop on the Vatican. Not only is Barshak's knowledge of history absolutely abysmal, but her transparent anti-Catholic bigotry clearly shows. Prominent Jewish leaders have acknowledged the actions of the Vatican and of various Fundamentalist churches in saving the lives of tens of thousands of Jews during World War II.

During the War, Pope Pius XII authorized the issuing of more than 10,000 Vatican ration tickets, identity cards, and other papal documents to refugees at great risk to both himself and the Vatican. The Vatican's Crusade of Charity directly assisted more than 695,000 victims of the war, including a large percentage of Jews.

Pope Pius XI even issued an encyclical condemning Nazism on Palm Sunday of 1937 entitled Mit Brennender Sorg ("With Burning Anxiety"). The document, which referred to Hitler by name as "a mad prophet possessed of repulsive arrogance," was smuggled into Germany, where it was read by all of the German Bishops from their pulpits.[9].

The Nazi national newspaper Volkischer Beobachter viciously attacked Pius, characterizing him as "the Jew-god in Rome." [10]

Himmler's deputy, Paul Heydrich, commented that "The Pope has repudiated the National Socialist New European Order. ... He is virtually accusing the German people of injustice toward the Jews and makes himself the mouthpiece of the Jewish war criminals." [11]

The Pope personally saved the lives of hundreds of Jews by paying to the Nazis a ransom of one hundred pounds of gold, obtained by melting down religious vessels. And the Pope and his officials established 180 places of refuge within the cramped confines of the Vatican, which sheltered more than five thousand Jews during the Nazi occupation of Rome.[12]

On Christmas Day of 1942, a New York Times editorial praised Pope Pius XII in the following glowing terms;

The voice of Pius XII is a lonely voice in the silence and darkness enveloping Europe this Christmas. In calling for a 'real new order' based on 'liberty, justice and love' to this Christmas. ... in calling for a 'return to social and international principles capable of creating a barrier against the abuse of liberty and the abuse of power,' the Pope put himself squarely against Hitlerism. Recognizing that there is no road open to agreement between belligerents 'whose reciprocal war aims and programs seem to be irreconcilable,' he left no doubt that the Nazi aims are also irreconcilable with his own conception of a Christian peace.[13]

The Chief Rabbi of Rome, Israel Zolli, and his wife became Catholic in 1945 and took the baptismal name Eugenio, the given name of Pope Pius XII. The Rabbi, who had offered himself as hostage for his fellow Jews during the War, was declared dead by his former synagogue, which declared several days of fasting in atonement for his conversion.[14]

Additionally, at least a dozen Catholic priests are honored as "Righteous Gentiles" with trees planted along the Avenue of the Just at Yad Vashem in Jerusalem.[15]

When Pius XII died in 1958, Israeli Foreign Minister Golda Meir declared that "When fearful martyrdom came to our people in the decade of Nazi terror, the voice of the Pope was raised for the victims." Israeli official Pinchas E. Lapid wrote in 1967 that the Catholic Church saved anywhere from 700,000 to 860,000 Jews during the Holocaust. [16]

But these historical facts mean nothing to common bigots like Barshak, who will slavishly ignore all evidence in their almost pathological desire to condemn the Catholic Church, which remains the single greatest obstacle to their treasured goal of free and easy abortion on demand.

Barshak and her repulsive ilk simply base their bigotry upon the opinions of other bigots, one of the first of whom was Rolf Hochhuch.

Just More Communist Lies. Pope Pius XII died in 1958. Just five years later (now that he was unable to defend himself), anti-Catholics launched their flood of backstabbing criticisms and slander with an undistinguished Berlin play in February of 1963. The heretofore-unknown German playwright Rolf Hochhuch produced Der Stellvertreter ("The Deputy"), which, among other things, alleged that Pius XII was a "war criminal" because he was "totally silent" on the question of Jewish extermination; that he actually approved of and assisted the Nazi regime in many ways; and that he urged the United States to join Hitler in attacking the Soviet Union in 1945.[17]

Lieutenant General Ion Mihai Pacepa is the highest-ranking intelligence officer ever to defect from the former Soviet bloc. His book Red Horizons, which revealed the inner workings of the Soviet propaganda machine, has sold millions of copies and has been published in 27 countries. He has revealed that Der Stellvertreter is, in fact, nothing more than a KGB-backed smear campaign against Pope Pius XII.

General Pacepa revealed that, early in 1960, Soviet premier Nikita Khrushchev approved a plan sketched out by then-KGB chairman Aleksandr Shelepin and Politburo member Aleksey Kirichenko. The KGB had been battling the Vatican for years, correctly identifying the Holy See as its mortal enemy, and had smeared it with a crude propaganda campaign that had seen only limited success.

But then the KGB had hit upon a much more direct and effective strategy: To discredit the Vatican by portraying it as a supporter and ally of Nazism.

Operating under the principle "Dead men can't defend themselves," the KGB began to search for a way to corrupt the memory of Pope Pius XII, who had died two years earlier, in 1958. The KGB knew better than to give even the slightest appearance of Soviet involvement in such a propaganda campaign, so it had to find a "proxy propagandist."

The super-secret attack on Pius XII was carried out under the code name "Seat-12," and began with three Romanian men posing as priests stealing hundreds of documents from the Vatican Archives and the Apostolic Library, and passing them on to the KGB.

General Ivan Agayants, head of the KGB's disinformation department, was confronted with a problem after examining all of these stolen documents. Not one of them supported the idea that Pope Pius XII was even slightly anti-Semitic. So Agayants hit upon a brilliant plan - to write a play alleging that Pope Pius XII was, indeed, a virulent anti-Semite.

Agayants sketched an outline of the play, and convinced Erwin Piscator, founder of Berlin's Proletarian Theater, to produce the play. Agayants and Piscator gave credit for the play to an obscure West German playwright named Rolf Hochhuth and, in 1963, it was released under the title Der Stellvertreter: Ein Christliches Trauerspiel ("The Deputy: A Christian Tragedy").

This play's central theme was that Pius XII had actually encouraged Hitler to proceed with the Final Solution against the Jews. The play was distributed complete with a large package of what Hochhuth called "historical documentation," which was in reality documents that he or the KGB had faked or made up themselves.

The Deputy was a badly-written and horribly-acted play based on faked documents, written and produced by liars and cheats. Still, it had a huge impact on the reputation of Pope Pius XII, despite the fact that, in 1974, KGB Chairman Yury Andropov conceded that his organization should never have attacked Pope Pius XII due to lack of evidence that he was actually an anti-Semite.[18]

A Rabbi Speaks. In an article entitled "Israel's Holocaust," Rabbi Jacob Neusner poignantly describes the terrible irony whereby American Jews loudly support the killing of millions of Jewish babies, which in turn threatens Jews in general more directly than Hitler's legions ever did;

As the numbers [of abortions] mount up, when do considerations of volume enter in and validate calling the annihilation of millions of lives "a Holocaust?" I think they do. Here is a Holocaust today. Every Jewish child born in the State of Israel is a survivor of the Holocaust sustained by Israeli law.

The State of Israel rightly invokes the Holocaust as a primary cause in the creation of the state itself: A refuge and a hope for the victims of the Holocaust. But its liberal abortion laws, the prevalence of abortion as a medium of contraception, the routine character of decisions to abort as a perfectly ordinary medical procedure - these political facts of public policy constitute the counterpart to the race laws and state-organized offices and institutions of mass murder that shame Germany through all eternity.

The difference is, Germany has acknowledged its shame. But for the annual annihilation of tens of thousands of Jewish children, the State of Israel acknowledges nothing. And, here at home, American Jewry's consensus is one-sidedly pro-choice. In desperation I try to tell myself abortion is not a Jewish issue. But the Torah intervenes, teaching that human life comes from God. And, when it hits within a family, it becomes very much a Jewish issue, too, no less than it is a Christian and a Muslim issue.

The abortionists call themselves "pro-choice." Indeed so, and the Torah teaches, "Choose life." [19]

The Dangers of the Slippery Slope.

"If you want a picture of the future, imagine a boot stamping on a human face — forever!"

— George Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four.

Introduction. Perhaps the one aspect of the new and old Holocausts that disturbs pro-abortionists the most is pro-life insistence upon the existence of the looming "slippery slope."

If the public finally realizes that abortion inevitably leads to euthanasia (and therefore poses a direct and clear threat to them), the anti-life agenda will be exposed. The pro-abortionists know that the spurious "right to privacy" on a national scale is the only thing that can preserve their "progress" down the slippery slope. They will do anything to maintain this strategic veil of secrecy.

Incrementalism is the Key. The Nazis skidded down the "slippery slope" with incredible speed, traversing the complete course from selective eugenic sterilization to genocide in only nine years. They violated the principle of incrementalism (gradualism), which states that social change must occur at a rate that is virtually unnoticeable to the public. If change proceeds too quickly or in steps that are too obvious and threatening, people will vigorously oppose the movement. We 'modern' people are following the same road, albeit at a more measured and leisurely pace. We are paying attention to the principle of incrementalism.

After reviewing the medical war crimes trials at Nuremberg, the World Medical Association (WMA) adopted the Declaration of Geneva in 1948. This document read, in part; "I will maintain the utmost respect for human life, from the time of conception; even under threat, I will not use my medical knowledge contrary to the laws of humanity." [20]

With Nazi atrocities still vividly in mind, researchers and physicians generally held to the Declaration of Geneva, and to the more comprehensive Hippocratic Oath, for about two decades after World War II concluded.

The Wall of Protection is Doomed. But then cracks began to appear in the armor of the physician's regard for human life. Once again, the eugenicist/utilitarian mindset began to appear in isolated instances. And, as we all know after being taught the lesson twice (with contraception and then abortion), after the first crack appears, the wall is doomed.

Two famous physicians/researchers injected live cancer cells into elderly patients at Brooklyn's Jewish Hospital and Medical Center in the mid-1960s. In the first publicized case of infanticide, doctors at Johns Hopkins Medical Center allowed a baby boy with Down's Syndrome to starve to death in 1971. [21]

Soon thereafter, the United States Supreme Court bestowed upon us abortion on demand throughout the entire nine months of pregnancy. In 1983, doctors starved Baby Doe of Bloomington, Indiana to death. Although an estimated 2,000 infanticides had been occurring in this country every year, what made this case significant was that it was the first court-sanctioned instance of euthanasia in this country (for further information on the history of the euthanasia movement in the United States, see Chapter 23, "Euthanasia").

It was not long before late-term aborted babies became prey to experimentation while they were still alive and feeling pain, as condoned by two leading medical researchers;

Since we know we are going to destroy, dismember and discard the fetus in a procedure known as abortion, it seems a small indignity to expose it to rubella vaccine just prior to that termination. The medical ethic 'do no harm' would, of course, be violated — but we have already violated that principle when we accepted the concept of abortion. The ultimate harm of destroying the fetus trivializes that which precedes it.[22]

Compare the above statement to the one made by Nazi Dr. Julius Hallervorden, quoted at the Nuremberg trials in 1945: "If you are going to kill all these people, at least take the brains out so that the material may be utilized." [23]

The Similarities Between the Nazi and American Holocausts.

"Nazism is merely applied biology."
- Rudolf Hess [24]

Introduction. The proof (or rebuttal) of any comparison is found primarily not in the differences between two or more entities or ideas, but in the similarities.

The similarities between the Nazi and American Holocausts are simply too profound and numerous to ignore. They include:

1. the identical country of origin (the United States);
2. the identical pervasive use of propaganda and deceptive language (Newspeak);
3. the identical justification of the atrocities;
4. early medical leadership of the Holocausts;
5. dehumanization of the victims; and
6. the identical anti-life, Hegelian philosophy of those in power.

These similarities are not trivial or tangential in nature; they address the very heart of the matter. The philosophies and the methods employed by both the Nazis and the pro-abortionists are identical!

The following paragraphs discuss these similarities.

Similarity #1: Country of Origin.

The Land of the Free Leads the Way. It may be almost incomprehensible to the close-minded and those who would like to avoid shame by rewriting history, but the philosophy of the Nazi eugenics movement was not framed and nourished in Germany.

It was conceived, developed and nurtured in our own "land of the free" - the United States!

Statements of the Eugenicists. The proof is in the statements made by leading American eugenicists, racists, and euthanasiasts during the period from the mid-1920s to the mid-1930s, when their movements flourished.

Several years before the Third Reich was founded (i.e., in the mid-1920s), Hitler and his cronies were avid readers of American eugenicists, including especially the pathologically anti-Semitic Madison Grant.

Grant argued that "sentimental beliefs" (such as Christianity) short-circuited the practice of infanticide, which he saw as a natural weeding-out process necessary to the preservation of the species.[25]

Grant and Dr. Lothrop Stoddard exerted great influence "... in awakening in Germany ... the movement for the preservation and increase of the Nordic race." Stoddard asserted that compulsory sterilization of the "unfit" was a "gift" from the American eugenics movement.

It is interesting that the masthead slogan of the Birth Control Review was "Creating a Race of Thoroughbreds." In 1933, the magazine featured an article entitled "Eugenic Sterilization: An Urgent Need," authored by Adolf Hitler's Director of Genetic Sterilization and founder of the Nazi Gesellschaft fur Rassenhygiene [Society for Racial Hygiene] - Ernst Rudin!

Lothrop Stoddard sat on the board of the American Birth Control League (later the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA)) in the 1930s. The Birth Control Review enthusiastically endorsed his book The Rising Tide of Color Against White World-Supremacy. In this book (introduced by fellow racist/eugenicist Madison Grant), Stoddard demonstrates beyond a shadow of reasonable doubt the intimate connections between abortion, eugenics and goal-oriented racism, both in the Nazi regime and in latter-day America;[26]

... upon the quality of human life all else depends ... none of the colored races shows perceptible signs of declining birth-rate, all tending to breed up to the limits of available subsistence ... It can mean only one thing: a tremendous and steadily augmenting outward thrust of surplus colored men from overcrowded colored homelands ... But many of these relatively empty [Northern] lands have been definitely set aside by the white man as his own special heritage ...

His ["colored" man's] outstanding quality is superabundant animal vitality. In this he easily surpasses all other races. To it he owes his intense emotionalism. To it, again, is due his extreme fecundity, the negro being the quickest of breeders. This abounding vitality shows in many other ways, such as the negro's ability to survive harsh conditions of slavery under which other races have soon succumbed ... black blood, once entering a human stock, seems never really bred out again ...

White men cannot, under peril of their very race-existence, allow wholesale Asian immigration into white race-areas ... The grim truth of the matter is this: The whole white race is exposed, immediately or ultimately, to the possibility of social sterilization and final replacement or absorption by the teeming colored races.

And, of course, the more primitive a type is, the more prepotent it is. This is why crossings with the negro are uniformly fatal. Whites, Amerindians, or Asiatics - all are alike vanquished by the invincible prepotency of the more primitive, generalized, and lower negro blood.

... whether we consider interwhite migrations or colored encroachments on white lands, the net result is an expansion of lower and a contraction of higher stocks, the process being thus a disgenic one.

For race-betterment is such an intensely practical matter! When peoples come to realize that the quality of the population is the source of all their prosperity, progress, security, and even existence; we shall see much-abused "eugenics" actually moulding social programmes and political policies ... we or the next generation will take in hand the problem of race-depreciation, and segregation of defectives and abolition of handicaps penalizing the better stocks will put an end to our present racial decline.

Notice how, near the end of the second paragraph, Stoddard lets slip that he does not consider Blacks to be human. Does this sound familiar? Remember that Margaret Sanger, founder of Planned Parenthood, heartily approved of the contents of The Rising Tide of Color.

Notice also how Stoddard waxes prophetic in the last paragraph. His prophecy, unfortunately, has turned to fact. It is our benighted generation that has taken up the task of "abolishing handicaps" and dealing with "race-depreciation" by employing the devastatingly effective weapon of racially-directed abortion.

H.L. Mencken, another leading American eugenicist, urged that "A resolute attack be made on the fecundity of all the males on the lowest rung of the social ladder." [27]

Yet another American eugenicist demanded that Hitler be made an honorary member of the American Eugenics Record Office. [28]

Charles Davenport grumbled that "Our ancestors drove Baptists from Massachusetts Bay into Rhode Island, but we have no place to drive the Jews to. Also, they burned the witches, but it seems to be against the mores to burn any considerable part of our population." [29]

The Courts Go Along. With so many leading American 'thinkers' advocating such a fashionable, utilitarian, and 'socially beneficial' course of action, is it any surprise that their depraved fantasies were placed into concrete action, despite Constitutional safeguards?

The United States court system bestowed its imprimatur upon eugenics in 1927, when Supreme Court Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote the majority opinion in the Court's Buck v. Bell decision upholding the enforced eugenic sterilization of poor Black women. Holmes held that "We have seen more than once that the public welfare may call upon the best citizens for their lives. It would be strange if it could not call upon those who already sap the strength of the State for these lesser sacrifices. ... Three generations of imbeciles are enough." [30]

This eugenic sterilization law was reversed by the Supreme Court only as recently as 1972. But the damage had been done. Following the lead of the Supreme Court, thirty states had enacted laws that mandated sterilization for the poor by 1933. [31]

These laws followed the Model Eugenic Sterilization Law, promulgated by Harry H. Laughlin, director of the Eugenics Record Office. They called for the sterilization of criminals, mental patients, the mentally handicapped, the blind, deaf, diseased, and alcoholics, and for dependents upon society - the homeless, orphans, and tramps. [32]

From 1924 to the early 1970s, more than 7,500 poor men and women were forcibly sterilized in the State of Virginia alone. Of course, these operations were performed in approved "mental health facilities" on "unwed mothers, prostitutes, petty criminals and children with disciplinary problems." [33]

Other laws drafted by American eugenicists mandated segregation of those with birth defects and mental disabilities in state-run institutions. No inmate ever left these places with their reproductive organs intact - they were all neutered like stray dogs. In some states, all of those inmates who carried hereditary disabilities were sterilized. Other state regulations mandated contraceptive use by all whose family history indicated a predisposition towards serious hereditary defects. [34]

Resurrection of the Horror. A person with common sense might think that this type of thinking would die out after the eugenics-driven horrors of World War II. Unfortunately, those who long for a better world right now always desire it at the expense of those they consider inferior to themselves, as shown by the quotes in Figure 5-1.

Quotes by American and European Eugenacists

"Do our nobly intended welfare programs promote dysgenics - retrogressive evolution through the disproportionate reproduction of the genetically disadvantaged?"
- Nobel Prize winner William Shockley Chase, quoted in Mark Haller's Eugenics (New Jersey: Rutgers University Press), 1963, page 482.

"No newborn infant should be declared human until it has passed certain tests regarding its genetic endowment and that if it fails these tests, it forfeits the right to live."
- Nobel Prize winner Dr. Francis Crick. Pacific News Service, January 1978.

"How far should we defend the right of a parent to produce a child that is painfully diseased, condemned to an early death, or mentally retarded? In our society, a parent does not have the right to withhold an education from his children. Does he then have a right to produce a child that is uneducable?"
- J.F. Crow, "Conclusion, Advances in Human Genetics and Their Impact on Society." Birth Defects, September 1972, page 16.

"With savages, the weak in body or mind are soon eliminated; and those that survive commonly exhibit a vigorous state of health. We civilized men, on the other hand, do our utmost to check the process of elimination; we build asylums for the imbecile, the maimed, and the sick; we institute poor laws; and our medical men exert their utmost skill to save the life of everyone to the last moment. There is reason to believe that vaccination has preserved thousands, who from a weak constitution would formerly have succumbed to smallpox. Thus the weak members of civilized society propagate their kind.

"No one who has attended to the breeding of domestic animals will doubt that this must be highly injurious to the race of man. It is surprising how soon a want of care, or care wrongly directed, leads to the degeneration of a domestic race; but excepting in the case of man himself, hardly anyone is so ignorant as to allow his worst animals to breed."

- Charles Darwin, quoted in Mark Haller's Eugenics (New Jersey: Rutgers University Press), 1963, page 4.

"Soon it will be a sin of parents to have a child that carries the heavy burden of genetic disease. ... We are entering a world where we have to consider the quality of our children."

"Eventually, when public opinion is prepared for it, no child shall be admitted into the society of the living who would be certain to suffer any social handicap - for example, any physical or mental defect that would prevent marriage or would make others tolerate his company only from a sense of mercy. ... Life in early infancy is very close to nonexistence, and admitting a child into our society is almost like admitting one from potential to actual existence, and viewed in this way, only normal life should be accepted."

- Bioethicist Millard Everett, Ideals of Life. Quoted by C. Everett Koop, M.D. "The Slide to Auschwitz." Human Life Review, Summer 1982.

"With the availability of the technology and know-how permitting prevention of many genetically-based congenital abnormalities, there may be developing as a corollary a social attitude which demands such use. In general, if a congenital abnormality can be avoided, then it should be avoided, and those individuals who do not partake of these advances will be socially ostracized."

- Hastings Center bioethicist John Fletcher, quoted in Sorenson, "Some Social and Psychological Issues in Genetic Screening." Symposium on Intrauterine Diagnosis (D. Bergsma, editor). 1971, page 177.

"People who carry genetic disease should be prevented from having children. We ought, in conscience, to have a humane minimum standard of reproduction, not blindly accepting the outcome of every conception. And we ought to act on our genetic information to prevent the birth of children below that minimum."

- Hastings Center bioethicist Joseph Fletcher, during his address of the second national Symposium on Genetics and Law, held in May of 1979 in Boston and sponsored by the March of Dimes.

"If the greatest good of the greatest number (i.e., the social good) were served by it, it would be justifiable not only to specialize the capacities of people by cloning or by constructive genetic engineering, but also to bio-engineer or bio-design para-humans or "modified men" - as chimeras (part animal) or cyborg-androids (part prostheses). I would vote for cloning top-grade soldiers and scientists, or for supplying them through other genetic means, if they were needed to offset an elitist or tyrannical power plot by other cloners - a truly science-fiction situation, but imaginable. I suspect I would favor making and using man-machine hybrids rather than genetically designed people for dull, unrewarding or dangerous roles needed nonetheless for the community's welfare - perhaps the testing of suspected pollution areas or the investigation of threatening volcanos or snow-slides.

"People who appeal to Brave New World and Nineteen Eighty-Four and Fahrenheit 451 forget this, that the tyranny is set up first and then genetic controls are employed.

run, to be sure, but with our separation of baby making from lovemaking, both become more human because they are matters of choice, and not chance. This is, of course, essentially the case for planned parenthood. I cannot see how either humanity or morality are served by genetic roulette.

"To be men we must be in control. That is the first and the last ethical word. For when there is no choice, there is no possibility of ethical action. Whatever we are compelled to do is a-moral.

"Rights are nothing but a formal recognition by society of certain human needs, and as needs change with changing conditions, so rights should change too. The right to conceive and bear children has to stop short of knowingly making crippled children - and genetics gives us that knowledge ... It is human need that validates rights, not the other way around."

"In the far future a subsidy - by insurance companies or the government - might be available if the procedure [amniocentesis] could be shown to save money. Researchers at Columbia University School of Public Health have proposed a voluntary program of screening all pregnant women 40 and over and eventually [a mandatory program to screen] all pregnant women to prevent 90 percent of Down's Syndrome."

- April 4, 1976, New York Times editorial.

"Society as the trustee of life is responsible to life for every botched life that comes into existence; and as it has to atone for such lives, it ought consequently to make it impossible for them ever to see the light of day: it should in many cases actually prevent the act of procreation, and may, without any regard for rank, descent, or intellect, hold in readiness the most rigorous forms of compulsion and restriction, and, under certain circumstances, have recourse to castration. ... "Thou shalt do no murder," is a piece of ingenuous puerility compared with "Thou shalt not beget"!!! ... The [unhealthy] must at all costs be eliminated, lest the whole fall to pieces."

- Friedrich Nietzsche, quoted in Mark Haller's Eugenics (New Jersey: Rutgers Press) 1963 page 53

"There is now no reasonable excuse for refusing to face the fact that nothing but a eugenics religion can save our civilization from the fate that has overtaken all previous civilizations."

- George Bernard Shaw, quoted in Mark Haller's Eugenics (New Jersey: Rutgers Press), 1963, page 19.

There is ample evidence that the Nazi "quality of life" ethic not only survives to this day, it flourishes and receives wide acceptance and support. This phenomenon is particularly evident when we examine the situation surrounding abortion and sterilization.

Dr. H.G. Whittington unconsciously betrayed the Holocaust-abortion connection when he wrote that "The [abortion] counselor must help the applicant [for abortion] face a painful existential dilemma: whether to kill one nascent human being in order to enhance the quality of life of another person. ... Society legalizes abortion to enhance the quality of human life." [35] This is just as the Nazis exterminated the Jews to enhance their 'quality of human life' and Lebensraum.

This utilitarian, anti-life attitude even extends to minorities, who should know far better than the rest of us what oppression is, and who should know the true value of human life. For example, as a "somewhat chilling surprise" to the researchers who did a survey of Black health workers and opinion leaders, 73 percent of those polled approved of the involuntary sterilization of mentally handicapped and mentally ill women. Similarity #2: Use of Newspeak.

"Neither American nor German history justifies the leap from that proposition [that legalizing abortion is to legalize murder] to the view that Americans reason like Nazis and have "simply declared the unborn to be nonhuman.""

- "Of Analogy and Abortion." The New York Times, March 15, 1984.[37]

The Purposes of Newspeak. Both the National Socialist (Nazi) movement and the modern pro-abortion movement use nice-sounding words to salve the consciences of their respective followers.

Despite luxuriant growths of Newspeak, the average German knew precisely what was going on. And so does the average American. But the average German was afraid to take action. And so is the average American. Ditto for the churches. The public and the churches, just as much as the actual killers, use these terms to give themselves an excuse not to stop the killing. The average do-nothing "Christian" uses these words when he talks about abortion and infanticide with other average do-nothing "Christians."

Examples of Newspeak. Notably, both the Nazis and the American pro-abortion movement habitually use inflammatory Newspeak as propaganda for the purpose of degrading and dehumanizing both their victims and their opposition.

Tens of thousands of Jewish, Gypsy, and handicapped children were killed by the "Reich Committee for Children." Those sickly persons who would be eliminated were identified by the grandly-named "Committee for Research on Hereditary Diseases and Constitutional Susceptibility to Severe Diseases." These unfortunate people were carried to concentration camps by the "Non-Profit Patient Transport Corporation," and their passage was funded by the "Charitable Foundation for Institutional Care." [38]

The Nazis used a vast galaxy of terms when referring to the extermination of the Jews; "resettlement," "evacuation," "clearing the area of Jews," "cleansing," "disinfection," "special treatment," "moving off to labor in the East," "injecting off," "putting to sleep like animals," "discharging," "cleaning-up of the Jewish question," and "the final solution to the Jewish question" are just a few of the euphemisms they employed.

The words employed by the Nazis and the pro-abortionists to label the essential elements of their respective Holocausts - the victims, the killing, the killers, the killing places, and the opposition - are shown in Figure 5-2. The similarities are absolutely striking.

Just "Ordinary Men" Like You and Me ... And so, after a dozen years of this kind of soothing and reassuring German propaganda, the Nazi High Command recruited 3,000 ordinary, everyday men from all walks of life in the Spring of 1941 for a "special assignment."

After several months of training, these 3,000 men were organized into four special-purpose battalions (Ersatzgruppen) and given their assignment: To roam the vast reaches of Eastern Europe and ruthlessly exterminate all of the Jews and Gypsies they found.

Within nine months, these 3,000 men had killed 1.5 million men, women and children - an average of 500 murders per man! Some of the killers were sickened at first, but soon grew used to the ceaseless slaughter. For month after month, they killed 8,000 people per day (they got weekends off, of course), and their leaders - who were specially trained and instructed to watch for psychological impacts among the men - reported almost no distress or misgivings.

After the war, hundreds of these men underwent intensive and detailed psychological tests on the belief that they were psychopaths specifically recruited by the Nazis for their genocidal task. But the Summary Report found that there were no more psychological anomalies in this group than in the general population. The only characteristic common to all of them was that they were all completely desensitized to violence and killing.[39]

In other words, they were just ordinary Germans.

Just like ordinary Americans.

Most of the Nazi killers of the World War II concentration camps were also perfectly ordinary men, as described in Christopher Browning's book Ordinary Men (Harper-Collins, 1992). Browning describes the activities of a military reserve unit, the 101st Police Battalion, which was comprised entirely of Bremerhaven steelworkers.

It was the job of these men to "process" new arrivals at the Polish concentration camps, including Auschwitz. When trainloads of Jews and other "undesirables" arrived at the camps, the steelworkers would first separate small children from their mothers. Then they would slaughter the mothers. Finally, they killed the little children with clear consciences, since, without mothers, their "quality of life" (Lebensqualität) would be too low.[40]

And so, the members of this unit - which consisted entirely of perfectly ordinary men - slaughtered thousands of infants and little two- and three-year old girls and boys, and claimed at the Nuremberg trials that they were merely participating in "acts of mercy."

A Bogus Comparison? Pro-abortionists (especially allegedly 'Jewish' pro-aborts) scoff at the idea that Americans have been desensitized to violence. They simply claim that no rogue battalions wander the countryside slaughtering millions in the United States.

What is the truth? Have Americans been desensitized to violence towards the unborn - or have they not?

Pro-aborts are not really raving demons, although they may appear to be at times. They are perfectly ordinary human beings - just like you and me - who just happen to have bought into the deadly "quality of life" ethic.

Today, abortion clinic workers echo the same words used by the Bremerhaven steelworkers as they fruitlessly tried to defend themselves against charges of mass murder and genocide at the Nuremberg trials. Many abortuary staff have candidly admitted that, if it were legal to kill perfectly healthy four- and five-year old boys and girls in clinics, they would gladly help.

A typical interview;

Question: "Oh, so as long as you make money, it doesn't matter?"

Abortion mill employee: "As long as it's food in my stomach, no, it doesn't matter. It is legal ... It is legal ... It is legal!"

Question: "So if they legalized killing four-year-old children, you would have no problem?"

Abortion mill employee: "No, I would not have a problem ... My conscience is very clear ..."[41]

If this is not a classic example of desensitization, what is?

If we have not been desensitized, why do late-term abortionists speak of desensitization in precisely the same words that the German "ordinary men" did?

A nurse and abortionist describe the process;

You have to become a bit schizophrenic. In one room you encourage the patient that the slight irregularity of the fetal heart is not important, everything is going well, she is going to have a nice baby, and then you shut the door and go into the next room and assure another patient on whom you just did a saline abortion that it's fine if the heart is already irregular, she has nothing to worry about, she is not going to have a live baby. I mean you definitely have to make a 180-degree turn, but somehow it evolved in my own mind gradually, and I have no trouble now making the switch ...[42]

If we have not become desensitized, how can abortionist Warren Hern calmly and dispassionately describe the dismembering of a two-or three pound viable baby like this?

We have reached a point in this particular technology where there is no possibility of denial of an act of destruction on the part of the operator. It is before one's eyes. The sensations of dismemberment flow through the forceps like an electric current ... The procedure changes significantly at 21 weeks because the fetal tissues become much more cohesive and difficult to dismember. A long curved Mayo scissors may be more cohesive and difficult to dismember ... A long curved Mayo scissors may be necessary to decapitate and dismember the fetus.[43]

If we are not desensitized, how can another late-term abortionist compare pulling apart viable babies "like chickens?": "It's difficult to pull apart a chicken when it is newly killed. You have to cook it first, and then it comes apart very easily. It's the same here [when doing a late-term abortion]."[44]

And how can a nurse sound almost joyful at the prospect of assisting at late-term prostaglandin abortions, if she has not been desensitized?

It's a really interesting thing that is happening. It's fascinating, when you can think about it clinically and not get involved in the babies, or the people ... Several times I saw really beautiful things happen, I mean it's physically beautiful. Sometimes you can see the vagina opening up and the entire thing coming out at once. ... It's a really interesting thing, and it got me very excited.[45]

Finally, how can we compare living unborn babies to "warts" or "fingernail clippings" if we have not become desensitized to the unceasing slaughter that is happening in our own communities right now? As Maryland abortion mill worker Pam Crosby says, "For the most part it [fetal remains] is thrown out like in many doctors' offices. If you had a wart removed or whatever [chuckle] you could make that analogy."[46]

Most appalling and frightening of all, how can the majority of the American public believe that abortion is the killing of a living human being - yet still want to keep the procedure "safe and legal" - if it has not been profoundly desensitized?

Similarity #3: Justifying the Holocausts.

The perpetrators of any oppression must rationalize their actions for two reasons: (1) to deceive the public, and, much more importantly, (2) to deceive themselves.

The greater the offense against humanity, the more aggressive the propaganda and the deeper the self-deception.

Unlike the Nazi Holocaust, the abortion Holocaust involves millions of perpetrators, some ignorant of, and some in complete command of, the facts. The most pervasive and deceptive propaganda is directed towards those women who have had or are about to have abortions.

Figure 5-3 shows some of these self-excusing rationalizations. Notice the heavy dependence on the idea that "if it's legal, it's right." Notice also that physicians are not killers, just "instruments," as if they were dull and simple tools without judgment, morals, or discernment. Finally, observe that the appeals to the public are framed in terms of "the common good."

Similarity #4: Medical Leadership.

Physicians — not black-clad Schützstaffel thugs — developed the philosophy and methodology of the Nazi Holocaust. Almost all of the leading German, British, and American eugenicists admired by the leaders of the Third Reich were doctors.

The American Holocaust was initiated by anti-lifers and opportunistic politicians, but physicians soon took over the pro-abortion movement's leadership. Warren Hern, Bill Baird, Bernard Nathanson, Henry Morgentaler, Willard Cates, Alan Guttmacher, and many other pro-abortion strategists and leaders were physicians.

The attitude that is most striking is the bare, stark utilitarianism shown by these Nazi and pro-abortion so-called 'physicians.' Placed in a position where they could literally dictate life or death with impunity, they soon reverted to relying upon their own instincts for guidance instead of a truly caring, God-inspired set of immutable rules.

What we must remember is that the anti-life mentality is purely utilitarian. It believes that it can eliminate anything (or anyone) that is inconvenient or useless. Adolf Hitler describes his Hegelian ethic in his work Mein Kampf ["My Struggle"]; "Everything must be examined from this [utilitarian] point of view and used or rejected according to its utility." [49]

In the current age, situation ethics reign supreme in the United States, just as they did in Nazi Germany a half-century ago.

Similarity #5: Dehumanization of the Victims.

"Those who use this [Holocaust] analogy maintain that the proponents of freedom of choice have dehumanized the unborn child, just as the Nazis dehumanized the Jew. This is not true."

- Rabbi Charles D. Mintz, 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC).[50]

It is so much easier to eliminate a class of people whom you have first carefully stripped of their human dignity. We have done this so many times that historians have lost count. Yet we still refuse to learn our lessons from history.

The same anti-lifers who call the unborn "protoplasmic rubbish," "gobbets of meat," "parasites," and "blobs" fume about how women were historically oppressed and 'kept down' by men who viewed them as 'weaker vessels' with no talents other than having and raising babies.

Black 'leaders' like Jesse Jackson and Coretta Scott King, who refer to the unborn as "products of conception" or "contents of the uterus," snivel about the injustices that White men heaped on Blacks more than a century ago, robbing them of their humanity by calling them "brutes, obscene with animal appetites, vicious, and illegitimate," and "ignorant, perverse, wicked, the pest of White men, agents of Satan." [51]

According to the Nazis, Jews and others not of Aryan quality "... had to be treated like tuberculosis bacilli, with which a healthy body may become infested. This was not cruel, if one remembers that even innocent creatures of nature, such as hares and deer, have to be killed, so that no harm is caused by them." [52]

In Mein Kampf, Adolf Hitler variously referred to Jews as "maggots in a rotting corpse;" "a plague worse than the Black Death;" "mankind's eternal germ of disunion;" "drones in the human hive;" "spiders sucking blood out of the people's pores;" "a pack of rats eating one another;" "the eternal bloodsucker;" "the vampire of peoples;" and "a harmful bacillus that spreads," among many other degrading terms. [53]

Figure 5-5 shows the striking sameness of the language of dehumanization. Killers invariably cloak their acts of genocide with words of kindness, compassion and concern; "empty," "removal," "evacuation," and "treatment," to name just a few. The perpetrators wear the thick and nearly impenetrable cloak of respectability, and anyone who dares question it is ruthlessly suppressed.

Are Pro-Lifers Like Nazis?

"The ill-conceived "love of neighbor" has to disappear, especially in relation to inferior or asocial creatures. It is the supreme duty of a national state to grant life and livelihood only to the healthy ... in order to secure the maintenance of a hereditarily sound and racially pure folk for all eternity. The life of an individual has meaning only in the light of that ultimate aim, that is, in the light of his meaning to his family and to his national state."

- Dr. Arthur Gütt, Nazi Director of Public Health.[54]

Why Do They Make This Bogus Comparison in the First Place? Pro-abortion propagandists love to compare the pro-life movement to the Nazi movement. They do this for two reasons;

1. To imply that pro-lifers are 'right-wing fanatics' and "brownshirted thugs" who attempt to deprive others of their most fundamental human rights. For example, abortionist Warren Hern says that "The general atmosphere is one of survival. Twenty-five percent of the [abortion] clinics have been bombed. This is a highly repressive, totalitarian [pro-life] movement, similar to the Brown Shirts who broke windows in Jewish shops in Germany."[55]
2. To attempt to compare themselves to the most pitiful and well-known victims of recent times; the Jews, who were experimented upon and slaughtered like cattle, and whose bodies were stacked like cordwood by the Nazis.

The Specific Allegations. The pro-aborts say that the Nazis banned abortion, just like the pro-lifers want to do. They say that "Hitler and his Nazis were anti-choice, too."

One crude pamphlet distributed by the violent pro-abortion group Refuse and Resist includes perhaps the most laughably stupid and inept propaganda ever spewed by any anti-life group. Its cover reads "Meet the Father of the "Right to Life" Movement. Some men just TALK about outlawing abortion. He DID it!

It contains much of the same mindless history revisionism as is featured on Refuse and Resist's Web site, as follows;

Typical Crude Pro-Abortion Narrative Propaganda
Claiming that Adolf Hitler was "Pro-Life"

Outlawing Abortion Was - and Is - a Nazi Program!

If there is one man in history who can be credited with launching the compulsory child bearing movement. it is Adolph Hitler. Hitler's "right to life" accomplishments after coming to power are summarized by one historian: "On May 26, 1933, two pieces of penal legislation. ... prohibit[ed] the availability of abortion facilities and services. More important was the stricter handling of the old anti-abortion law, resulting in a 65 percent increase in yearly convictions between 1932 and 1938, when their number reached almost 7,000. From 1935 on, doctors and midwives were obliged to notify the regional State Health Office of every miscarriage. Women's names and addresses were then handed over to the police, who investigated the cases suspected of actually being abortions. In 1936 Heinrich Himmler, head of all police forces and the SS, established the Reich's Central Agency for the Struggle Against Homosexuality and Abortion, and in 1943, after three years of preparation by the Ministries of the Interior and of Justice, the law entitled Protection of Marriage, Family, Motherhood called for the death penalty in 'extreme cases'."

Today's anti-abortionists, who bomb women's medical clinics, harass women seeking abortions, preach a traditional male-dominated family, and espouse the subordination of women to the state and church as "breeders," can certainly identify with a record like that! Like their storm-trooper predecessors, they delight in inflicting cruelty on women. Women who are already having to deal with unwanted pregnancies are screamed at, have pictures of aborted fetuses pushed in their faces, and are told that they simply must carry the fetus to term - in order to suffer the further pain of giving up an actual child. Sweet people, these "right to lifers"!

And like their Nazi forebears, many of today's anti-abortionists are quite willing to accept abortion when the pregnancy is the result of "race mixing." When asked about the case of the white women allegedly raped by the Black paroled convict Willie Horton, Vice President Quayle quickly allowed that she should of course get a "d and c" (a fancy word for an abortion)! These are the same kind of reactionary politicians who have "no problem" with the sterilization of minority women.

There is more at stake than a group of religious fanatics trying to impose their views on everyone else. The issue of abortion is the doorway through which many people are brought to the broader reactionary agenda of restoring America's "glory" as the undisputed imperial power in the world and upholding conservative domination at home. Maintaining the "sanctity of motherhood," keeping the women at home and subservient to the father and the state, is part and parcel of this. "Right to Life" means Father Right - and Fatherland - uber alles![56]

Naturally, the pamphlet and Web piece do not feature a single footnote. This is understandable, since every fact stated in both is completely false. The sole purpose of such consistent and indignant lying is to propagandize followers into hating their opponents.

The rest of this section addresses the specific charges that Refuse and Resist and other pro-abortion groups churn out in their propaganda.

The Nazis Were Leftists. To begin with, the German Nazi Party bore all of the characteristics of a left-wing organization. Consider the name of the party: "Nazi," which meant Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei, or National Socialist German Worker's Party!

Fascism is and always has been a leftist ideology. It is almost identical to National Socialism (Nazism), whereas international Socialism is generally referred to as Marxism.

Adolf Hitler himself said on October 7, 1933 that "It is thus necessary that the individual should finally come to realize that his own ego is of no importance in comparison with the existence of his nation, that the position of the individual ego is conditioned solely by the interests of the nation as a whole." [57] Hitler's statement is a concise summary of "collectivism" (the German term), or 'Socialism' as it is now known.

Compare this philosophy to modern attitudes, described in almost the same words by world-famous Harvard psychologist B.F. Skinner; "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are basic rights. But they are the rights of the individual and were listed at such a time when the literatures of freedom and dignity were concerned with the aggrandizement of the individual. They have only a minor bearing on the survival of a culture." [58]

The ideologies of Mussolini's Fascists dovetailed very nicely with Nazism. Both systems centralized power, promoted collective labor, and considered unionization one of the highest goods. Under Hitler's regime, public expenditures ballooned, and social welfare programs proliferated. One of the primary motivating factors in the early (pre-invasion) stages of aggressive German foreign policy was the need for more and more support for these programs. In fact, Hitler is still admired today by some left-wingers for his extraordinarily lavish and expensive social programs.

The Nazis progressively exerted a greater and greater degree of control over the people, and eventually used the fledgling German film industry to launch an extensive and pervasive propaganda campaign directed at the people. The primary focus of this campaign: Individual rights and autonomy, the "right to privacy" and the "freedom of choice" (Auswahlfreiheit) while, at the same time, these rights were actually being eroded to an unprecedented degree.

Conclusion: Some Pointed Questions. In summary, what can we say about the "pro-life Hitler" analogy other than the fact that it is completely false, a product of fevered imaginations, blind hate and simple barefaced lies?

We must ask ourselves: Who are the real spiritual descendants of the hated Nazis?

The essence of "pro-choice" is deciding who you want and who you don't want on an individual scale. Nazism was deciding who you wanted and who you didn't want on a national scale.

"Pro-choicers" want healthy babies - not handicapped ones.

They want babies "conceived in love" - not those begotten by the violence of rape or incest.

They want to determine the sex of their children through sex selection.

"Pro-choicers" want babies who are convenient - not "unwanted" or "inconvenient."

What is the difference between the "pro-choice" philosophy and that of Hitler, who said that he valued only Aryans and not Jews or Gypsies, Catholics or the handicapped?

Only a matter of scale. The killing done by pro-choicers puts Hitler and his thugs to shame.

And, for the sake of fairness and balance, we should ask: Who is the real father of the modern "pro-choice" movement?

He was the man who said

It is unjust to cut short the days of a well-shaped person; it is not unjust, I say, to prevent the arrival in the world of a being who will certainly be useless to it. ... The penalty against child-murdering mothers is an unexampled atrocity. Who then has a penalty against child-murdering mothers is an unexampled atrocity. Who then has a greater right to dispose of the fruit than she who carries it in her womb? ... To interfere with the usage a woman chooses to make of it is stupidity carried beyond any conceivable extreme.[59]

Facts of Life: Chapter 5: The Holocaust Analogy to Abortion: The History of the Nazi Abortion Program

The History of the Nazi Abortion Program.

"Once in power, the Nazis made "motherhood" into an official honor and abortion became a symbol of degeneracy."

- The Revolutionary Communist Party of the United States.[60]

Introduction. When pro-abortionists allege that the Nazis were "anti-choice," they are mouthing a classic half-truth. Hitler and his eugenicist physicians banned abortion only for pureblooded Aryan women (who were a minority within German borders at the time).

Although the Nazis banned abortion for Aryan women, they enthusiastically peddled and promoted abortion for non-Aryans. In fact, the Nazis mandated legalized abortion in several European countries where it had never been legal before. They recognized that abortion could be an extremely effective population control tool.

This is comparable to the current United States practice of "contraceptive imperialism;" pro-abortionists push very hard for funding for the United Nations Fund for Population Assistance (UNFPA), which in turn helped plan and direct the Chinese forced-abortion program, as described in Chapter 4, "China's Forced Abortion Program." The 'developed' nations also fund the distribution of abortifacients like Depo-Provera and Norplant in 'developing' countries. Depo was banned in the United States until very recently. And many of the intra-uterine devices (IUDs) that killed hundreds of women in the United States and were subsequently pulled off the domestic market are now being shipped overseas in great quantities.

It is also interesting to note that pro-abortion American doctors and medical schools have recently either removed the prohibition against abortion from the Hippocratic Oath or have disavowed the Oath altogether. This action, of course, is part of the necessary program of preparation for medical horrors yet unknown to the public, including mass euthanasia, experimentation upon newborns, human cloning, and genetic manipulation on a mass scale.

The Nazis had to jettison the Oath as well, as described by Dr. Georg August Wetzl, who was responsible for the hideous Nazi "cold experiments;"

The Hippocratic Oath ... is an honorable historical document, which, however, does not altogether fit present times. If it is to be applied today, the wording has to be exchanged very extensively, and in these reformulations a series of new oaths have been drawn up which have only a vague relationship to the ancient Hippocratic Oath ... a [theory of] medicine based on the principle of nil nocere [do no harm] is a very impoverished medicine, and we are unfortunately not in a position to carry on medicine on that simple principle today.[61]

In summary, pro-abortionists who call pro-lifers "Nazis" are engaging in classic transference; they are labeling their opposition with the very qualities that they detest in themselves.

The following paragraphs trace the history of the German abortion program.

The Planning Begins. Nazi physicians, ethicists, and planners had been greatly influenced by the thinking of American eugenicists, as described previously in this Chapter. The Hegelian (utilitarian) "ethic" held by the eugenicists deemed that there was such a thing as human life not worth living. Once this initial assumption had been made, of course, the definition of "unworthy" inevitably expanded to suit the needs of those in power at the time.

This type of thinking dovetailed nicely with Hitler's developing philosophy. In his book Main Kampf, he wrote that the government had seven chief responsibilities. One of these was "... to maintain the practice of modern birth control. No diseased or weak person should be allowed to have children." [62]

As early as the Summer of 1932, the leaders of the Nazi Party met in Munich to discuss population policy as it would be applied to non-Aryan peoples. Demographic and agricultural experts warned that the "tremendous biological fertility" of the Eastern European regions must be dealt with by the implementation of a rigidly-enforced depopulation policy (whose elements remarkably resemble the current coercive Chinese population program described in Chapter 4, "China's Forced Abortion Program").

Hitler, who personally attended at this conference, warned that "What we have discussed here must remain confidential." [63]

In 1933, the compulsory sterilization law for the mentally handicapped and crippled went into effect. On October 8, 1935, Germany promulgates the Erbgesundheitsgesetz - "hereditary health laws." One of these laws legalized abortion for "just the hard cases" - rape, incest, and if either parent had a hereditary disease that might lead to deformation of the fetus. [64]

Hitler's Personal Views On Abortion. Over and over again, pro-abortionists tell us that Adolf Hitler enacted restrictive abortion laws for "the protection of motherhood." This is absolutely true - but only for Aryan motherhood. Once again, the pro-abortion liars are only telling a small portion of the story.

Adolf Hitler, were he living today, would make a superb pro-abortion propagandist. His views exactly paralleled those of the modern-day abortionists, who have tried to hard to exterminate the Black race ever since Margaret Sanger's early birth control programs.

Hitler believed that rights only belong to those strong enough to defend them - just as American pro-abortionists do. He insisted in Mein Kampf that the weak or small had "no inalienable right to life" (Lebensrecht) - just as American pro-abortionists do. [65] Those physicians who dared resist Hitler's program of abortion on demand for women of unfit race were labeled "reactionary" and "enemies of women" (misogynists) while those who supported the program were called "sensible" and "friends of women" - the identical words used by American pro-abortionists today. [66]

Poland's Martyrdom. The German Blitzkrieg ("lightning war") swept into Eastern European countries in 1939. The Nazi eugenicists and population planners were not far behind the tanks.

After the 1939 invasion of Poland, the "Reich Commission for Strengthening of Germandom" (RKFDV), an SS (Schützstaffel) organization, issued the following policy statement on November 25;

All measures which have the tendency to limit the births are to be tolerated or to be supported. Abortion in the remaining area of Poland must be declared free from punishment. The means for abortion and contraceptive means may be offered publicly without police restriction. Homosexuality is always to be declared legal. The institutions and persons involved professionally in abortion practices are not to be interfered with by police.[67]

Until this time, abortion had been illegal in Poland. The Nazis introduced "safe and legal abortion" for the first time - for the specific purpose of limiting the future Polish population. It is absolutely fascinating to note that the key slogan of this program was "Freedom of Choice!" (Auswahlfreiheit).

The German Ministry of the Interior reviewed and approved of this program in May 27, 1941, and, on October 19 of the same year, the Polish population program was put into action. Hitler's July 23 decree, described below, extended the identical policy of "contraceptives and abortion on demand" to the other parts of Nazi-occupied Eastern Europe.[68]

The Eastern European Offensive. In mid-1942, "Operation Blue," the German offensive in Eastern Europe, was succeeding brilliantly.

In mid-July of this year, Karl Brandt, Hitler's personal physician, and Martin Bormann, Hitler's personal secretary, conducted a tour of the Soviet Ukraine for the purpose of reviewing population demographics. Bormann subsequently stated to Hitler that "In view of the large families of the native population, it could only suit us if girls and women there had as many abortions as possible." [69] Bormann stated in an August 11, 1942 letter to Hitler that

The Slavs are to work for us. Insofar as we do not need them, they may die. Therefore, compulsory vaccination and German health service are superfluous. The fertility of the Slavs is undesirable. They may use contraceptives or practice abortion, the more the better. Education is dangerous. It is enough if they can count up to 100. At best an education which produces useful coolies for us is admissible. Every educated person is a future enemy. Religion we leave to them as a means of diversion. As for food, they will not get any more than is necessary. We are the masters; we come first.[70]

Reichsführer Adolf Hitler strongly agreed with this assessment, actually incorporating Bormann's language in his own directives;

The Slavs are to work for us. Insofar as we don't need them they may die. Therefore compulsory vaccination and education are superfluous. The fertility of the Slavs is undesirable. They may use contraceptives or practice abortion - the more the better. ... In view of the large families of the native population, it could only suit us if girls and women there had as many abortions as possible. Active trade in contraceptives ought to be actually encouraged in the Eastern territories, as we could not possibly have the slightest interest in increasing the non-Germanic population.[71]

On July 22, Brandt and Bormann proposed a restrictive population policy to Hitler, and on the very next day, the Führer approved it. The resulting eight-paragraph secret order was, as one historian stated, "... perhaps the most extreme policy statement ever issued from the Führer-Hauptquartier." [72]

The population control policy included a paragraph that paraphrased Hitler's wording;

When girls and women in the Occupied Territories of the East have abortions, we can only be in favor of it; in any case we should not oppose it. The Führer believes that we should authorize the development of a thriving trade in contraceptives. We are not interested in seeing the non-German population multiply.[73]

The Whole Filthy Package. A short April 27, 1942 statement by Berlin population and demographics expert Professor Heinrich Wetzel (reproduced below in its entirety) summarized the entire Nazi population control program for Eastern Europe. Notice carefully the striking similarities this program has to the one that has been implemented in the United States by pro-abortion groups.

Every propaganda means, especially the press, radio and movies, as well as pamphlets, booklets, and lectures, must be used to instill in the Russian population the idea that it is harmful to have several children. We must emphasize the expenses that children cause, the good things that people could have had with the money spent on them. We could also hint at the dangerous effect of childbearing on a woman's health.

Paralleling such propaganda, a large-scale campaign would be launched in favor of contraceptive devices. A contraceptive industry must be established. Neither the circulation and sale of contraceptives nor abortions must be prosecuted.

It will even be necessary to open special institutions for abortion, and to train midwives and nurses for this purpose. The population will practice abortion all the more willingly if these institutions are competently operated. The doctors must be able to help out, in case there is any question of this being a breach of their professional ethics. Voluntary sterilization must also be recommended by propaganda.[74]

By this time, the Nazis recognized that personal and professional consciences were often deeply troubled by the practice of widespread and easily-available abortion. Heinrich Himmler soothed these troubled consciences by issuing a decree in March of 1943 that is remarkable similar to those promulgated by our own American Medical Association; "The Russian physicians or the Russian Medical Association, which must not be informed of this order, are to be told in individual cases that the pregnancy is being interrupted for reasons of social distress." [75]

During the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal, Major General N.D. Zorya, Assistant Prosecutor for the USSR, testified that

According to an official announcement of the German Farmers' Union in Carinthia

(Landesbauernschaft Karnten) of 10 August 1944, issued in Klagenfurt, every case of pregnancy of non-German women was to be reported, and in all such cases these women were to be obliged to have their child 'removed by operation in a hospital.' The announcement itself explains that in cases when non-German women give birth to their children this 'creates difficulties for their use in work,' and besides, it is also 'a danger for the population policy.' Furthermore, this announcement states that the Office of Labor Service should try to influence these women to commit an abortion.[76]

The Aftermath of Murder. After the war, the Nuremberg Trials brought most of the Nazi war criminals involved in Germany's population control programs to justice. Between October of 1947 and March of 1948, the United States Military Tribunal prosecuted the leadership of the RKFDV in its 'Case 8.' One of the charges was that "Protection of the law was denied to the unborn children of the Russian and Polish women in Nazi Germany. Abortions were encouraged and even forced on these women." [77]

One of the RKFDV documents entered into evidence by the U.S. prosecution stated that "It is known that racially inferior offspring of Eastern workers and Poles is to be avoided if at all possible. Although pregnancy interruptions ought to be carried out on a voluntary basis only, pressure is to be applied in each of these cases." [78]

The Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal indicted and convicted ten Nazi leaders for "encouraging and compelling abortions," an act which the Tribunal characterized as "a crime against humanity." [79]

As with their other crimes against humanity, the Nazis protested that "we were just following orders." Lieutenant General Richard Hildebrandt, the SS Chief of the RKFDV's Race and Settlement Office in Berlin, stated that "Up to now nobody had the idea to see in this interruption of pregnancy a crime against humanity." [80]

He was given a 25-year sentence.

Other officers of the RKFDV were meted sentences ranging from ten years for Fritz Schwalm, a "Racial Examination Officer," to life imprisonment for Ulrich Griefelt, the organization's Chief Executive Officer. [81]

Other evidence submitted into evidence included a July 13, 1943 German military report referring to "an intensification of countermeasures" against Ukrainians, including the "forcible abortion of pregnant women." [82] Other women within the borders of Germany itself were forcibly aborted as punishment for attempting to avoid forced labor in German factories. [83]

When we conduct our "Nuremberg Trials" for United States abortionists and euthanasia pushers, we can be sure that those who have committed latter-day crimes against preborn and helpless humanity will cling to the same empty excuses as a futile defense.

The Genocide Treaty. With the atrocities of Nazism still fresh in the minds of the world, international lawyers soon drafted the "Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide," which defines "genocide" as "acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical (ethnic), racial, or religious group."

Article II of the Convention further defines "genocide" as "imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group." [84]

But Hitler was a Catholic - Right?

The Internet is replete with charges that Adolf Hitler was a good practicing Catholic. Many of these claims are posted on Catholic-hating Web sites, and some other allegations can be found on pro-abortion sites. Most of the photos and quotes are either doctored or outright fabrications, as you will find out if you try to track down their references. These bigots point out that Hitler was born to Catholic parents (which is certainly true), but then conveniently neglect to mention that gave up the Faith during his schoolboy years and, after leaving home, never attended Mass or received the Sacraments.

The photos of Hitler shown before Catholic churches or with priests and bishops were taken while he was trying his hardest to win over the Catholic vote, which did not respond well to him at all.[85] Hitler had not yet proven himself a threat to humanity and, once he had shown his true colors, received stiff opposition from leading bishops and priests in Germany.

There is no doubt that Hitler saw Christianity as his greatest enemy, and was himself in no way, shape or form Christian. As President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was conducting his wartime "fireside chats" for the American people, Hitler was doing the same. He called these his Tablette Gespräche, or "table talks." He frequently voiced his hatred of Christianity during these talks, as shown in Figure 5-6. While reading Hitler's quotes, notice the startling similarity between them and those of modern-day Christophobes.

Quotes by Adolf Hitler Expressing His Hatred of Christianity in General and Catholicism in Particular

"Why not [make peace with the churches]? That will not prevent me from totally uprooting Christianity in Germany and eliminating it lock, stock and barrel. It is, however, decisive for our people whether they have the Judeo-Christian faith and its flabby morality of sympathy, or a strong, heroic faith in god in nature, in god in one's own people, in god in one's own fate, in one's own blood. ... One is either a Christian or a German. One can't be both."

- Adolf Hitler to the Reich Chancellery, quoted in Henry Bordeaux.

Edith Stein: Thoughts on Her Life and Times. Translated by Donald and Idela Galalgher [Milwaukee: Bruce Publishing, 1959], page 20.

"The heaviest blow that ever struck humanity was the coming of Christianity.

Bolshevism is Christianity's illegitimate child. Both are inventions of the Jew. The deliberate lie in the matter of religion was introduced into the world by Christianity. Bolshevism practices a lie of the same nature, when it claims to bring liberty to men, whereas in reality it seeks only to enslave them. In the ancient world, the relations between men and gods were founded on an instinctive respect. It was a world enlightened by the idea of tolerance. Christianity was the first creed in the world to exterminate its adversaries in the name of love. Its key-note is intolerance.

"Without Christianity, we should not have had Islam. The Roman Empire, under Germanic influence, would have developed in the direction of world-domination, and humanity would not have extinguished fifteen centuries of civilization at a single stroke.

"Let it not be said that Christianity brought man the life of the soul, for that evolution was in the natural order of things.

- Hitler's Table Talk, 1941-1944 (Hugh Trevor-Roper, Editor, Norman Cameron and R.H. Stevens, Translators) [London: Weidenfeld and Nicholson, 1973, Second Edition], night of July 11-12, 1941, page 7.

"Christianity is a rebellion against natural law, a protest against nature. Taken to its logical extreme, Christianity would mean the systematic cultivation of the human failure."

- Hitler's Table Talk, October 10, 1941, page 51.

"Christianity is an invention of sick brains: One could imagine nothing more senseless, nor any more indecent way of turning the idea of the Godhead into a mockery. A negro with his taboos is crushingly superior to the human being who seriously believes in Transubstantiation."

- Hitler's Table Talk, December 13, 1941, page 144.

"I shall never come personally to terms with the Christian lie. ... Our epoch will certainly see the end of the disease of Christianity."

- Hitler's Table Talk, February 27, 1942, page 343.

"The fact that the Japanese have retained their political philosophy, which one of the essential reasons of their success, is due to having been saved in time from the views of Christianity. Just as in Islam, there is no kind of terrorism in the Japanese State religion, but on the contrary, a promise of happiness. This terrorism in religion is the product, to put it briefly, of a Jewish dogma, which Christianity has universalized and whose effect is to sow trouble and confusion in men's minds."

- Hitler's Table Talk, April 4, 1942, page 393.

"It is deplorable that the Bible should have been translated into German, and that the whole of the German people should have thus become exposed to the whole of this Jewish mumbo-jumbo. So long as the wisdom, particularly of the Old Testament, remained exclusively in the Latin of the Church, there was little danger that sensible people would become the victims of illusions as the result of studying the Bible. But since the Bible became common property, a whole host of people have found exposed since the Bible became common property, a whole heap of people have found opened to them lines of religious thought which - particularly in conjunction with the German characteristic of persistent and somewhat melancholy meditation - as often as not turned them into religious maniacs. When one recollects further that the Catholic Church has elevated to the status of Saints a whole number of madmen, one realizes why movements such as that of the Flagellants came inevitably into existence in the Middle Ages in Germany.

"As a sane German, one is flabbergasted to think that German human beings could have let themselves be brought to such a pass by Jewish filth and priestly twaddle, that they were little different from the howling dervish of the Turks and the negroes, at whom we laugh so scornfully."

- Hitler's Table Talk, June 5, 1942, page 513.

"During the years of our struggle Rosenberg once submitted to me the draft of a leading article he proposed publishing in reply to the attacks of the Catholic Church. I forbade him to publish it; and I still think it was a great mistake that Rosenberg ever let himself be drawn into a battle of words with the Church. He had absolutely nothing to gain from it; the hesitant Catholics of their own free will regarded the Church with a critical eye, and from the truly devout not only could he expect no fair hearing for his "heretical outpourings," but he must also have realized that the opposition propaganda would condemn him for his meddling in matters of faith and successfully point to him as a man guilty of mortal sin.

"The fact that I remain silent in public over Church affairs is not in the least misunderstood by the sly foxes of the Catholic Church, and I am quite sure that a man like the Bishop von Galen knows full well that after the war I shall extract retribution to the last farthing. And, if he does not succeed in getting himself transferred in the meanwhile to the Collegium Germanicum in Rome, he may rest assured that in the balancing of our accounts, no "T" will remain uncrossed, no "I" undotted!"

- Hitler's Table Talk, July 4, 1942, page 555.

"The Church of to-day is nothing more than a hereditary joint stock company for the exploitation of human stupidity."

- Hitler's Table Talk, August 1, 1942, page 607.

"Paul of Tarsus, who was originally one of the most stubborn enemies of the Christians, suddenly realized the immense possibilities of using, intelligently and for other ends, an idea which was exercising such great powers of fascination. He realized that the judicious exploitation of this idea among non-Jews would give him far greater power in the world than would the promise of material profit to the Jews themselves. It was then that the future St. Paul distorted with diabolical cunning the Christian idea. Out of this idea, which was a declaration of war on the golden calf, on the egotism and the materialism of the Jews, he created a rallying point for slaves of all kinds against the elite, the masters and those in dominant authority. The religion fabricated by Paul of Tarsus, which was later called Christianity, is nothing but the Communism of to-day."

This book is an incredibly detailed presentation of the hundreds of parallels between the Nazi holocaust of World War II and the one going on in the United States right now. Traces the development of the holocausts from years before they 'went public' to their final horrible configurations. The best available documentation of the more than 225 intimate parallels between the original Holocaust and the one now being perpetrated in our country. A 'must read' for pure interest and fascinating facts.

"Now the womb of the Black woman is seen as the latest battleground for oppression. In times past, the Blacks couldn't grow kids fast enough for their 'masters' to harvest. Now that [Black] power is near, the 'masters' want us to call a moratorium on having babies. When looked at in context, the whole [abortion] mess adds up to blatant genocide."

— Erma Clardy Craven, chairwoman, Minneapolis Commission of Human Relations.[1]

What the Anti-Lifers Say.

"If abortion becomes illegal, incredible numbers of poor women, including many women of oppressed nationalities, will die horrible deaths ... there is a very racist side to the bourgeoisie's attacks on abortion. When women of color are denied control of their own reproduction, this contributes to the overall conditions of national oppression in this country ..."

— Revolutionary Communist Party of the United States.[2]

Abortion Is Racial Genocide!

"Government family planning programs designed for poor Blacks which emphasize birth control and abortion with the intent of limiting the Black population is genocide. The deliberate killing of Black babies by abortion is genocide — perhaps the most overt form of all."

— Dick Gregory.[3]

The Argument. Pro-abortionists commonly argue that any pro-life activism directed towards the elimination of legal abortion, including the refusal to fund abortions for poor women is racist, because 'women of color' would not be able to exercise their "Constitutional rights" in the same manner as White women.

Whose "Rights?" Unscrupulous pro-abortionists have made clear their contempt for minorities ever since racists railed against Blacks in Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Review more than a half-century ago.

So why do they cry so loudly about "women of color" now?

The answer is quite obvious. They are using Black and poor women as a cover to protect their "right" to kill their own unborn children. After all, there would not be much public sympathy for the typical abortion patient, who happens to be White, 22 years old, unmarried (and therefore pregnant as a result of premarital sex), and perfectly capable of paying for her own abortion(s).

For further information on abortion statistics, see Chapter 19, "United States Abortion Statistics."

Two False Assumptions. Pro-abortionists who argue that minority women must have easy access to abortion make two false implicit (unstated) assumptions;

- That all people must have equal access to everything, bad or good, in the name of equality. This is equivalent to saying that the criminalization of drug use is racist, because many 'women of color' are poor, and cannot afford the very latest and most potent drugs, and;
- That abortion is a desirable 'good' that must be made available to all women by society.

The Overt Racists in the Pro-Abortion Movement.

"Planned Parenthood's policies are made by upper-middle-class White people who have a fetish about controlling the reproductive capacities of others, especially those who are poor and Black."

— Erma Clardy Craven.[4]

Planned Parenthood's Role. Planned Parenthood, founded by eugenicist Margaret Sanger, promotes abortion relentlessly among Blacks and other minorities. The majority of PP's efficient abortion mills are located in areas generally classified as 'inner city.' These areas possess a very large proportion of minorities — usually more than fifty percent.

In fact, the number of abortion clinics in a city generally correlates closely to the size of that town's minority population. Figure 6-1 shows that there are more than twice as many abortion clinics per million people in cities that have large minority populations, compared to those cities with smaller minority populations.

Planned Parenthood's Views. The Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) was once known as the American Birth Control League, or ABCL.

The primary purpose of this organization was to promote the improvement of human beings through positive eugenics — the systematic breeding of people in order to eliminate bad genes. This would presumably lead to a "race of thoroughbreds."

To many of the writers for the ABCL's Birth Control Review, this meant the strict limiting of births among Black people. Some of their quotes are shown in Figure 6-2, featured in articles with such blatantly racist titles as "Eugenics for the Negro."

Racist Quotes by Writers in Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Review

"Even now in China, people live all the year round on boats because there is no room for them on land.

"I offer for your approval the following remedies [for overpopulation]:

"2a. We may solicit the aid of God by prayer and dropping coins into the contribution box — to hurry along a glacial period. Meanwhile we can beg Him to send down some great pestilence as the Black Death, or a few earthquakes, or a couple of flu epidemics.

"2b. We can always start a war.

"2c. We must get rid of the inferior colored races —

2c. We must get rid of the inferior colored races — the Blacks, the Yellow and the Red races must be exterminated — of course you must convert them first to religion because their souls are very valuable.

"2d. The white race then may proceed as follows: Let the Christians exterminate all Jews and Moslems, then the Protestants kill all Catholics, then let the Ku-Klux-Klan kill everybody except the one-hundred-per-cent; then let the Nordic race with blond hair and blue eyes kill off all the dark complexioned."

"2e. As a last resort the Nordics may cultivate large colonies of Typhoid, Flu or other bacilli and distribute them, as occasion requires, by means of aeroplanes, and manufacture cheaply on a large scale, poison gases and smoke the surplus [colored] population to hades.

"3. Teach and practice scientific Birth Control."

— Bernard Sacks, M.D. "Overpopulation." Birth Control Review,

Volume VIII, Number 9 (September 1924), pages 252 and 270.

"Only the inconceivable eventuality of an alliance of all the other races of the world against the white race could seriously threaten white civilization, and by the time the colored races reach the stage where this would be possible, they will long since have been forced to adopt birth control themselves.

"The whites will practice voluntary restriction of their numbers while "uncivilized" races remain prolific, with the ultimate result of the extermination of white civilization by a 'rising tide of color.'"

— Malcolm H. Bissell. Review of J.B.S. Haldane's book Daedalus

or Icarus: Is Science to Be Man's Servant or His Master? Birth Control Review, October 1924 [Volume VIII, Number 10], pages 277 and 279.

"I am hoping that your influence will be felt among the masses of three races in particular, the Hebrew, the Italian, and the Negro. From casual observation it seems to me that these races are less observant of Birth Control than any others."

— "The Correspondent's Column." Birth Control Review, Volume

IX, Number 12 (December 1925), page 357.

"Too many Negroes are born, too many are sick and too many die each year, for these vital processes consume energy that might otherwise be accumulated for advancement. So the Negro's program should include the conservation of vital energy. The best way and perhaps the only practical way is to control the birth rate. Birth control propaganda and techniques should be disseminated till no more Negro babies are born than can be properly cared for and prepared for efficient citizenship. The great bulk of Negroes everywhere are overburdening themselves with progeny to whom they can give only half a chance in the world. Thus they keep themselves impoverished and their race down. They give themselves impoverished and then race down. They give hostages to the white man by making themselves dependent upon his charity whereas by prudent breeding they might be independent. Dependency of any kind is weakness. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the responsible white community looks upon the average Negro as being irresponsible, without pride or self-respect when he supplies more than his quota of dependents and delinquents? Birth control should be urged as a step toward independence and greater power."

— Newell Sims. "A New Technique in Race Relations." Opportunity,

April 1931. Quoted in Birth Control Review, Volume XV, Number 6

(June 1931), pages 187 and 188.

"I wish to reiterate that all objections to birth control can be met unanswerably except one — that the human race will degenerate if the superior races and the superior classes among civilized races will curtail the number of their offspring while inferior races and the inferior strata in civilized countries will continue their high birthrate. This must be prevented by all means, and it can be if we go about it earnestly and zealously, and if the civilized governments give us their cooperation."

— Editorial in The Critic and Guide, July 1931, quoted in "In the Magazines." Birth Control Review, Volume XV, Number 9

(September 1931), page 268.

"... the mass of ignorant Negroes still breed carelessly and disastrously, so that the increase among Negroes, even more than the increase among whites, is from that part of the population least intelligent and fit from that part of the population least intelligent and ill, and least able to rear their children properly.

"Moreover, they ["negroes"] are quite led away by the fallacy of numbers. They want the black race to survive. They are cheered by a census return of increasing numbers and a high rate of increase. They must learn that among human races and groups, as among vegetables, quality and not mere quantity really counts."

— W.E.B. DuBois. "Black Folk and Birth Control." Birth Control Review,

Volume XVI, Number 6 (June 1932, the "Negro Number"), page 167.

"Basing their prognostications on the Negro's mortality rate as compared with that of the white population, they have seen the solution of the vexatious Negro problem achieved by the mere passing of time. And not a few anthropologists and sociologists have valiantly maintained that the difference in Negro and white mortality rates is conclusive evidence of the innate inferiority of the Negro.

" ... Negroes who by virtue of their education and capacity are best able to rear children shrink from that responsibility and the Negro who, in addition to the handicaps of race and color, is shackled by mental and social incompetence serenely goes on his way bringing into the world children whose chances of mere existence are apparently becoming more and more hazardous.

"The probabilities are that the race problem in America is infinitely aggravated by the presence of too many unhappily born, sub-normals, morons, and imbeciles of both ["negro" and white] races ... For at present the practice [of birth control] is confined to those whose offspring would be best fitted to carry the lance of racial progress."

racial progress.

— Elmer A. Carter. "Eugenics For The Negro." Birth Control Review,
Volume XVI, Number 6 (June 1932, the "Negro Number"), page 169.

"As to the crossing of human races, it may sometimes be harmless, especially if the races are closely allied, but "injury to the constitution may also result from hybridization" (Fischer), and "the crossing of Teutons and Jews, is likely, as a rule, to have an unfavorable effect (Lenz)."

"Indeed, Hitler is said to have studied the Baur-Fischer-Lenz book very seriously, and to have been won over to it, while Lenz has recently written an article favoring Hitlerism.

"Hence, Lenz settles down into the position that "degeneration is the central problem of racial hygiene, and the prevention and the overcoming of degeneration are its main objects." The prevention of degeneration is laudable enough in itself, but how weak-kneed, negative, and uninspiring as the major ideal of eugenics!"

— H.J. Muller. Review of the book Human Heredity, by Erwin Baur, Eugen Fischer and Fritz Lenz. Birth Control Review,
Volume XVII,
Number 1 (January 1933), page 20.

As for the founder of the American Birth Control League, Margaret Sanger envisioned a program that would "... hire three or four colored ministers, preferably with social-service backgrounds, and with engaging personalities. The most successful educational approach to the Negro is through a religious appeal. We don't want the word to go out that we want to exterminate the Negro population, and the minister is the man who can straighten out that idea if it ever occurs to any of their more rebellious members." [5]

This quote causes us to conclude that Planned Parenthood possesses at least a rudimentary sense of humor. The recipient of the very first Margaret Sanger Award in 1963 (bestowed for outstanding dedication to PP's racist principles) was none other than Martin Luther King — the best-known Black minister of his time!

As everyone knows, the future of any country or race lies with its children. Therefore, the most efficient method possible for eliminating an entire race is to destroy its children. And, of course, the easiest and most efficient way to destroy children is to "nip them in the bud," so to speak — by killing them before they are born.

It is interesting that the masthead slogan of the Birth Control Review was "Birth Control: To Create a Race of Thoroughbreds," as shown below. In 1933, the magazine featured an article entitled "Eugenic Sterilization: An Urgent Need," authored by Adolf Hitler's Director of Genetic Sterilization and founder of the Nazi Society for Racial Hygiene — Ernst Rudin!

Lothrop Stoddard sat on the board of the American Birth Control League (later Planned Parenthood) in the 1930s, when Margaret Sanger headed it. Havelock Ellis, one of Sanger's lovers, enthusiastically endorsed Stoddard's book The Rising Tide of Color Against White World-Supremacy in Sanger's magazine Birth Control Review.^[6] In this book (introduced by fellow racist/eugenicist Madison Grant), Stoddard demonstrates beyond a shadow of reasonable doubt the intimate connections between abortion, eugenics and goal-oriented racism:^[7]

... upon the quality of human life all else depends ... none of the colored races shows perceptible signs of declining birth-rate, all tending to breed up to the limits of available subsistence ... It can mean only one thing: a tremendous and steadily augmenting outward thrust of surplus colored men from overcrowded colored homelands ... But many of these relatively empty [Northern] lands have been definitely set aside by the White man as his own special heritage ...

His ["colored" man's] outstanding quality is superabundant animal vitality. In this he easily surpasses all other races. To it he owes his intense emotionalism. To it, again, is due his extreme fecundity, the negro being the quickest of breeders. This abounding vitality shows in many other ways, such as the negro's ability to survive harsh conditions of slavery under which other races have soon succumbed ... black blood, once entering a human stock, seems never really bred out again ...

White men cannot, under peril of their very race-existence, allow wholesale Asian immigration into White race-areas ... The grim truth of the matter is this: The whole White race is exposed, immediately or ultimately, to the possibility of social sterilization and final replacement or absorption by the teeming colored races.

And, of course, the more primitive a type is, the more prepotent it is. This is why crossings with the negro are uniformly fatal. Whites, Amerindians, or Asiatics — all are alike vanquished by the invincible prepotency of the more primitive, generalized, and lower negro blood.

... whether we consider interwhite migrations or colored encroachments on White lands, the net result is an expansion of lower and a contraction of higher stocks, the process being thus a disgenic one.

For race-betterment is such an intensely practical matter! When peoples come to realize that the quality of the population is the source of all their prosperity, progress, security, and even existence; we shall see much-abused "eugenics" actually moulding social programmes and political policies ... we or the next generation will take in hand the problem of race-depreciation, and segregation of defectives and abolition of handicaps penalizing the better stocks will put an end to our present racial decline handicaps penalizing the better stocks will put an end to our present racial decline.

Notice how, near the end of the second paragraph, Stoddard lets slip that he does not consider Blacks to be human.

Does this sound familiar?

Remember that Margaret Sanger, founder of Planned Parenthood, heartily approved of the contents of Stoddard's book.

Notice also how Stoddard waxes prophetic in the last paragraph. His prophecy, unfortunately, has finally been transformed into practice. It is our benighted generation that has taken up the task of "abolishing handicaps" and dealing with "race-depreciation" by employing the devastatingly effective weapon of racially-directed abortion.

Staying the Course. Although it has been challenged to do so many times, Planned Parenthood has never once repudiated the racist attitude or writings of Margaret Sanger. Quite the contrary: The organization is extremely proud of her views!

Faye Wattleton, former president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (and who is herself a token Black), stated at PPFA's annual luncheon in St. Louis, on May 2, 1979, "I believe Margaret Sanger would have been proud of us today if she had seen the directions that we have most recently in this organization taken." [8]

So Planned Parenthood's eugenicist work continues. Sanger's grandson, Alexander C. Sanger, became President and Chief Executive Officer of Planned Parenthood of New York City in January of 1991. This organization has a budget of $30 million a year and 250 full-time workers. Sanger boasted that

I intend to be out on the front lines of our issues. That is why I'm here ... Right now, we have three clinics in this city and I want ten more. We currently have a small storefront office in central Harlem, and it is my first priority to see if we can transform that into a clinic ... With all her success, my grandmother left some unfinished business, and I intend to finish it. [9]

A clinic in Harlem would certainly be an efficient way to "finish" the job of culling allegedly "inferior" genes from the population.

The racists have every reason to be proud. There currently exists a deadly inequity between the abortion ratios of White women and minority women in this country. Figure 6-3 shows that minority women obtain abortions at more than twice the rate that White women do. This Figure also shows that a much greater percentage of the Black race has been wiped out by legal surgical abortion than has the White race. All of this lends credibility to Erma Clardy Craven's statement that abortion is racial genocide. It also dovetails quite nicely with Planned Parenthood's original racist and eugenicist philosophy of "more children from the fit, less from the unfit."

Certainly the current-day racists in the pro-abortion movement have been devastatingly effective. After all, it took 86 years to lynch 3,500 Black people (between Reconstruction in 1882 and the last lynching in 1968). [10] It takes 86 hours to kill that many Black preborn babies with abortion today.

Current Racism. The attitude of utter contempt towards minorities waxes strong among latter-day abortionists. Perhaps this is because more than 90 percent of all abortionists are White males. These abortionists have been far more effective and deadly at exterminating the Black race than any number of goose-stepping Nazi goons could ever be; they have labored in anonymity, virtually unchallenged behind their formidable wall of attorneys and corrupt judges, as they have legally exterminated more than fourteen million Black babies and more than 26 million minority babies since 1966.

Delores Bernadette Grier, in her testimony before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee during its May 1990 hearing on the so-called "Freedom of Choice Act," said that "Black women never requested, demanded nor demonstrated for the right to have an abortion. It was thrust upon us as a solution to our social and economic crises. The White master is still telling Black people what is best for us - death instead of life. 97 percent of the abortionists who kill unborn Black babies are White American males ..."[11]

Edwardian Slips. Sometimes the White racist mega-abortionists and their supporters even 'slip up' in public and reveal their true feelings and objectives, as shown in the following quotes.

Racist Quotes by Modern-Day Pro-Abortionists

"Population control is too important to be stopped by some right-wing pro-life types. Take the new influx of Hispanic immigrants. Their lack of respect for democracy and social order is frightening. I hope I can do something to stem that tide; I'd set up a[n abortion] clinic in Mexico for free if I could. Maybe one in Calexico would help. The survival of our society could be at stake ... The Aid to Families with Dependent Children program is the worst boondoggle ever created. When a sullen black woman of 17 or 18 can decide to have a baby and get welfare and food stamps and become a burden to all of us, it's time to stop. In parts of South Los Angeles, having babies for welfare is the only industry the people have."

- Arizona abortionist and convicted sexual predator Brian Finkel, quoted in Amy Silverman. "The Terminator." Phoenix New Times, June 17, 1999.

"When abortions are illegal, poor women deliver and keep their babies. Then they plunk them in front of a TV set, watch them get abused and conditioned to violence by parades of males, and expose them to all the factors the criminologists describe as the precursors to a life of crime. ... Making abortions freely available to the impoverished young women who produce our criminals is very likely the most important crime-prevention measure adopted in this country in the last 25 years."

Quoted in Mary Ann Kuharski. "Aborting the "At Risk" Population: Racism Rears its Ugly Head." ALL About Issues, Winter 1991, pages 16 and 17 [Bouza described the "at risk" population as "poor, Black and Indian," and said that their offspring are "marked for failure"].

- USA Today columnist and Pacifica Radio talk show host Julianne Malveaux on Justice Clarence Thomas, on the November 4, 1994 PBS "To the Contrary" Show.

"[Whites are] technically clever, yes. Powerful, well-armed and prolific, to be sure; but without an ounce of basic human decency. ... No one whose community of memory was etched with the vision of lynched, barbecued ancestors, no Afro-American person who has seen the flash of greedy, obsessive hatred in the fish-blue stare of a cracker's cocked eyes could help but question his inherent humanness."

- Pro-abortion Harvard sociologist Orlando Patterson, in his book The Ordeal of Integration, as described in Courtland Milloy. "Finding Hope in a Hothouse of Hate." The Washington Post, February 22, 1998, page B1 [Patterson also insists in his book that one in five Whites is a "hard-core racist"].

"If black people kill black people every day, why not have a week and kill white people? ... If your white great-great-grandfather killed my great-great-grandfather, and your white great-grandfather sold my great-grandfather, and your white grandfather raped my grandmother, and your father stole, cheated, lied, and robbed my father, what kind of fool would I have to be to say 'Come, my friend' to the white daughter and son?"

- "Sister Souljah" (Lisa Williamson), quoted in "Under the Rainbow: Jesse Jackson Shelters a Repulsive Bully." World Magazine, July 4, 1992, page 14. Also quoted in "Quotes," World Magazine, June 20, 1992, page 5.

- Albert Brown, M.D., quoted in an April 1998 Los Angeles Times report on abortion "chop shops" that exploit minority women. Quoted in Paul Likoudis. "California Political Races Reflect "Catholic Diversity"." The Wanderer, October 15, 1998, pages 1 and 7.

Even far-Left and Marxist theorists occasionally become momentarily coherent and recognize the starkly racist nature of the abortion-mad population controllers. Alexander Cockburn, one of the most prolific writers on the Left, declared that "The not-so-concealed theme of some major figures in NARAL [National Abortion Rights Action League] and NOW [National Organization for Women] was that abortion should be legal because the most prolific breeders were welfare mothers from the dangerous classes. ... the leader of NARAL in New York lobbied against the provisions to protect poor minority women from involuntary sterilization, and so did Planned Parenthood." Slaughtering Black Women for Money. White male abortionists not only kill Black babies, they also kill young Black women at a tremendous rate.

More than 350 women have died from so-called "safe and legal" abortions. The races of 263 of these women has been positively identified, and are broken out as shown in Figure 6-5.

[A] Legal abortions by race over the time period 1967-2005, inclusive. See Figure 19-5 in Chapter 19 of The Facts of Life, "United States Abortion Statistics," for calculations.

[B] This is a number that shows the legal abortion death rates of women by race. Although this document is certainly not a complete list of legal abortion fatalities, the sample size is certainly representative of the whole. For example, among legal abortion fatalities whose race has been identified, the death rate for White women is (85/22,329,699), or 3.80 deaths per million abortions. The death rate for Black women is (130/14,459,760), or 8.99 deaths per million abortions. Therefore, the legal abortion death rate among Black women is (8.99/3.80) = 2.37 times higher than that of White women. Interestingly, this ratio has held relatively constant since abortion was legalized in the first states in 1967. For example, the risk of a Black woman dying of legal abortion was 2.8 times greater than the risk of a White woman dying of legal abortion during the time period 1972-1974 inclusive [Willard Cates, Jr., M.D., M.P.H., Acting Chief, Abortion Surveillance Branch, Centers for Disease Control Bureau of Epidemiology. "Mortality from Legal Abortions, United States, 1972-1974." Paper given at the Western Regional Conference on Abortion, Denver, Colorado, February 28, 1976, sponsored by the United States Department of Health Education and Welfare (HFW)]

This means that 68 percent of all known legal abortion deaths have occurred among minority women.

By comparison, minority women obtain about 53 percent of all abortions.[13]

This means that the death rate among minority women who obtain abortions is nearly twice as high as that of White women who abort [14]. This number is confirmed by Planned Parenthood, which has admitted that the risks of abortion for Black women are more than three times as high as for White women. Planned Parenthood states that the death rates for second-trimester abortions for Black and White women respectively are 24.8 and 6.8 deaths per 100,000 abortions.[15]

The death rate among poor minority women may be even higher than this estimate, because such women are often disenfranchised from the 'system' and do not trust attorneys or anything to do with litigation, for good reason - and therefore do not press their claims.

The leading medical journal of Great Britain is The Lancet, which states that "'Institutionalized racism" consists of the collective failure of an organisation to provide an appropriate and professional service to people because of their colour, culture or ethnic origin." [16]

If we review the above statistics, it is very difficult to conclude that the abortion industry in the United States is not guilty of "institutionalized racism."

Nobody seems to care about this continuing slaughter, least of all those who hypocritically call themselves "pro-choice." In fact, the pro-aborts put on their best 'indignant' act and puff up with anger and rage whenever anyone suggests that they might be supporting genocide. For example, Helen I. Howe, a spokesperson for the phony front group that calls itself the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice [RCRC, formerly RCAR], alleged that "RCAR views it as an insult to black women to make the generalized claim that abortions performed on black women are genocide." [17]

What is the truth in this matter?

One Black mother, Mattie Byrd, mourned her dead daughter Belinda in a letter to a friend as she said that "I cry every day when I think of how horrible her death was. She was slashed by them and then she bled to death. ... Where is [the abortionist] now? Has he been stopped? Has anything happened to him because of what he did to my Belinda? ... People tell me nothing has happened, that nothing ever happens to White abortionists who leave young Black women dead." [18]

Stephen Pine of the Inglewood Women's Hospital was the busy abortionist who killed Belinda Byrd. She was his 74th abortion of the day!

Pine perforated Byrd's uterus and she died three days later. As a partial result of this botched abortion, the Inglewood Women's Hospital had its license revoked by the State of California and closed down. However, money is a great motivator, and it opened only two weeks later with a different name: The West Coast Women's Medical Group. It was subsequently bought by mega-abortionist Edward Allred (who has also killed several women), and still functions to this day.

The New Eugenics.

"How can the 'Dream' survive if we murder the children? ... Abortion is at the forefront of our destruction ... By taking the lives of our young, and wounding the wombs and lives of their mothers, we are flying in the face of God."

- Alveda King, niece of Martin Luther King Jr.[19].

Spawn of a Rotten Seed. The eugenics movement is inherently and irreversibly racist because it considers minorities to be handicapped or somehow deficient because of their skin color. Chapter 24, "Eugenics," describes in detail how this movement flourished in the United States during the 1920s, and how this line of thought led to the establishment of the Nazi eugenics program in the early 1930s.

One of the first eugenicists was none other than Charles Darwin, who wrote in his work The Descent of Man that;

With savages, the weak in body or mind are soon eliminated; and those that survive commonly exhibit a vigorous state of health. We civilized men, on the other hand, do our utmost to check the process of elimination; we build asylums for the imbecile, the maimed, and the sick; we institute poor laws; and our medical men exert their utmost skill to save the life of everyone to the last moment. There is reason to believe that vaccination has preserved thousands, who from a weak constitution would formerly have succumbed to smallpox. Thus the weak members of civilized society propagate their kind.

"No one who has attended to the breeding of domestic animals will doubt that this must be highly injurious to the race of man. It is surprising how soon a want of care, or care wrongly directed, leads to the degeneration of a domestic race; but excepting in the case of man himself, hardly anyone is so ignorant as to allow his worst animals to breed.[20]

A Eugenics Expert Speaks. A very concise and complete summation of the innate racism of the fully-developed eugenicist philosophy is provided to us by Norman E. Hines in his 1938 book Practical Birth-Control Methods;

All the rights we have are those granted to us by society. Certainly there is no natural right to spawn defective children who must be supported by others through taxation or charity. The crisis in this instance is the enormous expense to the state of the care of the defective classes and the contamination of the biological stock which results from their reproduction ... While sterilization is no substitute for segregation, it is also true that segregation is no substitute for sterilization. They must go hand in hand.

Ever since the rise of the Nazi regime in Germany an objection that has frequently been raised against eugenical sterilization is that a voluntary sterilization program may been raised against eugenical sterilization is that a voluntary sterilization program may turn into a compulsory one. Some thoughtful people sincerely fear this. But the history of eugenical sterilization in the United States and in other democratic countries offers little warrant for the contention. This is the old fallacy of ultimate danger; that if we take step A, it would lead to step B; that if we take step B, it may lead to step C, and so forth without end. The evidence now available shows that even in Nazi Germany, where there is a great deal of compulsion that would not be tolerated by citizens who believe in democracy, there has been as yet no attempt to sterilize any special racial group ...

Most of the objections to eugenical sterilization are based upon unfounded fears, insufficient knowledge, or faulty reasoning. None of the objections has substantial merit. They are comparable to the arguments made ten years ago against birth control, even by some supposedly well-informed individuals, that birth-control devices caused sterility, necessarily led to immorality, would cause 'race suicide,' were unreliable, etc.

... we do not need the defective classes. They are already an excessive burden upon the State. A few special students of the problem even believe that our society is undergoing a "moronization" process; that the intelligence level of the American people is declining because the gifted have few children and the stupid many ... Probably it will take society a span of years to learn how to use it [eugenic sterilization] properly as a weapon for its own improvement ..."[21]

Note the author's representation and summation of classic eugenicist theories, which, despite their antique quaintness, are still deadly poisonous to this day;

- that all rights are granted by the State, even the right to life of the handicapped;
- that "defectives" are expensive and "contaminate the biological stock," and therefore society does not need "the defective classes;"
- that the slippery slope theory (here called the "ultimate danger fallacy" has no merit, and, in fact, all anti-eugenicist arguments are baseless and originate from ignorance; and
- that birth control methods are reliable, do not cause physical damage, do not lead to immorality, and may one day be compulsory.

It is amusing indeed that Hines tried bravely to debunk the "ultimate danger" (slippery slope) theory by stating that there was "little warrant" for the contention that Nazi Germany's voluntary sterilization program might turn into a campaign of compulsory sterilization. Hines' book was first published in August 1938. Unknown to him, a compulsory sterilization program had already begun in Nazi Germany.

He also feigned ignorance of the fact that, by 1938, several states had created Boards of Eugenics that typically endorsed involuntary sterilization and castration for such reasons as "... feeble minded, insane, epileptic, habitual criminal, degenerates and sexual perverts reported to it who will probably become a social menace or ward of the State." [22]

So much for disproving the "slippery slope" theory! And yet, modern-day eugenicists are following Hines' lead as they insist that they can control the extent to which their "reforms" are applied in society.

Eugenics Advances in the '60s. Beginning in 1965, euthanasia and eugenics advocates advanced, almost unseen, behind an almost unbroken string of pro-abortion political and judicial successes. As this multi-pronged wave of death surged forward, the most helpless people of all were naturally the first target most helpless people of all were naturally the first target.

They always are.

And so, the unborn, the old and infirm, and poor minorities found themselves in greater danger than ever before.

"Good Germans" - Again? As far back as 1971 - two years before nationwide legalized abortion - the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence found that "The overwhelming majority of White Americans would be 'Good Germans' if the government turned to massive racial repression." [23]

Why was this study performed in the first place unless members of the Commission perceived an actual threat?

As it turned out, there was ample cause for the Commission's concern; experts testified that there had already been many cases of outright propaganda and coercion directed against minorities by governmental and quasi-governmental agencies in numerous States;

- In the 1960s, Chicago's Planned Parenthood Association sponsored birth control "coffee parties" all over the Black sections of the city - but not a single one in the White-dominated suburbs. [24]
- Representatives of Federally financed family planning programs sent a brigade of "home visitors" and public assistance workers to thousands of homes of indigent Black Pittsburgh women in order to coerce them into visiting and making use of family planning clinic's services. If a woman did not immediately comply, workers would directly threaten her with a cutoff of all public assistance if she had any more children. When Black citizens exposed this coercion and called it "genocide," the Pittsburgh Antipoverty Board voted down funds from the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) that would have continued Planned Parenthood clinics in six of the city's poorer neighborhoods. [25]
- In the 1960s, the South Carolina and Delaware Legislatures considered laws that would mandate the sterilization of all welfare mothers after they had borne two children out of wedlock. In New York, municipal judges commonly offered women the choice of sterilization or no welfare money. [26]
- Dr. Constance Redbird Uri testified before her State legislature that "What is family planning for Indians? The highest priority is abortion. We have been controlled by your government for 200 years now, but you have another weapon [abortion]. We often doubt whether we will be here in another 200 years." [27]
- Raoul Silva testified that "California is waging a war of genocide against Blacks, Latins, and Indians. They offer abortions to minority women who don't even ask - and they get teenage girls to decide for abortion before they're pregnant. That's how they play the genocide game in Los Angeles County." [28]

And They're Still At It ... The corrupt and racist theory of eugenics, which seeks to create a "race of thoroughbreds" through birth control, abortion, and sterilization (without consent, if necessary) certainly did not die with Adolf Hitler in 1945. It is worrisome indeed to discover that some of the world's most distinguished and influential scholars and social engineers still advocate the widespread use of eugenics to rid society of its ever-present "undesirable elements."

- Two-time Nobel Prize winner Linus Pauling has suggested that those who carry "dysfunctional genes" have information on their disabilities tattooed in code onto their foreheads. [29] While we're at it, why don't we take just a few extra minutes and tattoo the numbers "666" there as well?

- 'Distinguished' biologist John Maynard Smith would like to give tax breaks and bonuses to the educated and intelligent who have children and heavily penalize others (i.e. minorities and those with "dysfunctional genes." [30]
- Perhaps not surprisingly, the omnipresent population controller Garrett Hardin weighed in with his eugenicist views in the June 1992 issue of Omni Magazine; "It would be better to encourage the breeding of more intelligent people rather than the less intelligent. ZPG's entire attraction has been among the college population. So in effect, ZPG is encouraging college-educated people to have fewer children instead of encouraging reduced fertility among the less intelligent." [31]
- A Washington state doctor, Bruce Tracy, urged the state Senate to provide sterilization bounties for women on welfare. The measure, Senate Bill 6379, sponsored by Senator Scott Barr, would pay $10,000 to a woman if she agreed to be neutered after her first child, and $5,000 if she agreed after the second child. The bill would also give $500 to men who got neutered after fathering a welfare child. [32]

Norplant: Abort 'Em or Neuter 'Em.

"It takes little imagination to see that the unborn Black baby is the real object of many abortionists. Except for the privilege of aborting herself, the Black woman and her family must fight for every other social and economic privilege. ... The quality of life for the poor, Black, and the oppressed will not be served by destroying their children."
- Erma Clardy Craven.[33]

Introduction. Abortion is a marvelously efficient weapon for the population controllers, but it has its drawbacks. It is expensive, messy, and - worst of all - it is being exposed as a racist institution by the very people the abortionists accuse of being prejudiced.

For decades, the popcon fanatics have dreamed about a means of neutering minority women that would be quick, efficient, and private. And the concept of a "safe and handy" abortifacient is certainly nothing new. A quarter-century ago, Garrett Hardin and other population theorists fantasized that the dominant "contraceptive" of the future would be an efficient abortifacient pill.[34]

Your Wish is Granted, Master. It appears that the science genie has finally granted the population controller's wish. The United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved the abortifacient "contraceptive" Norplant for public use on December 10, 1990.

This "contraceptive," supposedly effective for a period of five years, consists of six small plastic tubes inserted into a woman's upper arm. Once implanted, these tubes slowly release the drug levonorgestrel, an abortifacient that prevents implantation of the developing human being. A woman being used by Norplant will therefore be blissfully unaware that she is aborting several times each year.

The FDA warns that Norplant "... should not be used by women who have acute liver disease, unexplained vaginal bleeding, breast cancer, or blood clots in the legs, lungs, or eyes."

The ominously-named Population Council owns the patent for Norplant and will reap four percent of the colossal profits that will accrue from use of the drug. It is produced by Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories in Philadelphia, a subsidiary of American Home Products, and will cost about $500 to insure about five years of sterility.[35]

For more information on Norplant, see Chapter 2, "Abortifacients."

The Dark Side of the Power. Many people, including Law Professor Charles Rice of Notre Dame university, see a dark side to the great convenience of Norplant. Certain countries, including South Africa, have made the injectable abortifacient Depo-Provera mandatory for teenaged schoolgirls, female prisoners, welfare recipients, and the mentally handicapped. And now, radical thinkers are tentatively suggesting that Norplant be made mandatory in certain cases for women in the United States (for more information on how the United States ships dangerous birth-control devices overseas in information on how the United States ships dangerous birth-control devices overseas in great quantities, see Chapter 18, "The International Abortion Situation").

Oops! With so many influential people pushing abortion and birth control on poor minority women, it is inevitable that their dirty little secret will slip out occasionally. Strangely, these stories seem to have almost no effect on the blissfully unaware public. Typically, those pro-abortion groups that claim to be fighting for the rights of minorities ignore these racist incidents entirely.

In a classic recent example, deputy editorial page editor Donald Kimelman of the Philadelphia Enquirer stated in a December 12, 1990 article, ominously entitled "Poverty and Norplant: Can Contraception Reduce the Underclass?" that "As we read these two stories [about Norplant and Black poverty], we asked ourselves: Dare we mention them in the same breath? To do so might be considered deplorably insensitive, perhaps raising the specter of eugenics. But it would be worse to avoid drawing the logical conclusion that foolproof contraception could be invaluable in breaking the cycle of inner city poverty - one of America's greatest challenges." [36]

Kimelman continued by suggesting that welfare mothers could be implanted with Norplant for free and perhaps receive increased welfare benefits as a reward. He apparently failed to realize that this was one of the first elements of the coercive Chinese population program that now features mandatory sterilization and forced abortions even in the ninth month of pregnancy.

Who is the Target? We might ask ourselves this question: If Kimelman and his fellow "thinkers" were truly concerned about poverty in general, why did he not also recommend the use of Norplant for poor White women?

Others apparently asked this same question. Vanessa Williams, president of the Philadelphia chapter of the National Association of Black Journalists, called Kimelman's article "A tacit endorsement of slow genocide." [37]

Inquirer columnist Steve Lopez sarcastically suggested on December 16th that contraception would not reduce the underclass quite so fast as "just shooting them."

The Enquirer publicly apologized for its racist article on the 22nd of December, after a wave of complaints. But the damage had been done; the truly racist nature of the thinking of some very influential people had been exposed once again.

Abortion As Human Culling. Kimelman was not the only racist journalist to step on his tongue after Norplant was released to the public. Anthony Bouza, the former Minneapolis Police Chief and columnist for the Minneapolis Star Tribune, wrote a 1990 Mother's Day editorial with the incredibly oxymoronic title "A Mother's Day Wish: Make Abortion Available to All Women."

He described the "at risk" population as "poor, Black and Indian," and said that their offspring are "marked for failure." Then he went on by stating that "When abortions are illegal, poor women deliver and keep their babies. Then they plunk them in front of a TV set, watch them get abused and conditioned to violence by parades of males, and expose them to all the factors the criminologists describe as the precursors to a life of crime ... Making abortions freely available to the impoverished young women who produce our criminals is very likely the most important crime-prevention measure adopted in this country in the last 25 years." [38]

Bouza's astounding racist stupidity is even more remarkable in light of the fact that he is a former police chief. If his thesis is true - that abortion is our "most important crime-prevention measure" - why is our country's rape rate 250 percent higher than it was before abortion was legalized in 1973? Why has our murder rate doubled in the last twenty years? Why has child abuse exploded more than 500 percent during the same period? Why is our prison population now nearly one million, double what it was before Roe v. Wade? If abortion is so effective at "crime-fighting," why does the United States possess the dubious distinction of having the largest percentage of its population imprisoned among all the countries of the world, including the former Soviet Union, Cuba, and South Africa?

Don't expect answers to these questions from pro-abortionists - especially pro-abortion journalists. They have a very big axe to grind, and nobody had better bother them with the facts.

Journalists Kimelman and Bouza are not the only people who think that abortion can be used to cull out society's "undesirable elements" - who, incidentally, always seem to come from minority populations.

Dr. David A. Hamburg of the psychiatry department of the Stanford University Medical School has approved of the UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) theory that abortion might be a way to prevent a future Genghis Khan or Hitler from being born.[39] The implementation of such an abortion program would require the mandatory genetic testing of all unborn babies via amniocentesis or chorionic villi sampling (CVS), and the mandatory abortion of those babies whose genes were deemed "unsatisfactory" by the eugenicists. This figure would vary from 20 to 50 percent of all pregnancies.

Getting With the Program. Immediately after Norplant was introduced to the public, several judges ordered women (usually poor Blacks) onto the drug because they had been convicted of the abuse of previous children. In one such case, Tulare County (California) Superior Court Judge Howard R. Broadman gave Darlene Johnson a very simple but coercive choice: Be sterilized with Norplant or go to jail for two to four years. [40]

Number One on the Hit Parade. Of course, Norplant is not the only tool used by modern racists to neuter women from "undesirable" classes. The all-time number one favorite tool for this purpose has been and is the "Mississippi Appendectomy" - surgical sterilization without knowledge or full informed consent of those being operated on.

The United States court system bestowed its imprimatur upon eugenic sterilization in 1927, when Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote the majority opinion in the Court's Buck v. Bell decision, which upheld the enforced sterilization of poor Black women. Holmes held that; "We have seen more than once that the public welfare may call upon the best citizens for their lives. It would be strange if it could not call upon those who already sap the strength of the State for these lesser sacrifices ... Three generations of imbeciles are enough." [41]

Following the lead of the Supreme Court, thirty states had enacted laws that mandated sterilization for the poor by 1933.[42] This eugenic sterilization law was reversed by the Supreme Court only as recently as 1972. But the damage had been done.

These laws followed the Model Eugenic Sterilization Law, promulgated by Harry H. Laughlin, director of the Eugenics Record Office. They called for the sterilization of criminals, mental patients, the retarded, the blind, deaf, diseased, and alcoholics, and for dependents upon society - the homeless, orphans, and tramps.[43] It was not coincidental that Blacks made up a percentage of those sterilized that was grossly out of proportion to their actual representation in such "undesirable classes."

From 1924 to the early 1970s, more than 7,500 poor men and women (almost all of them Black) were forcibly sterilized in the State of Virginia alone. Of course, these operations were performed in approved "mental health facilities" on "unwed mothers, prostitutes, petty criminals and children with disciplinary problems." [44]

Other laws drafted by American eugenicists mandated segregation of those with birth defects and mental disabilities in state-run institutions. No inmate ever left these places with their reproductive organs intact - they were all neutered like stray dogs. In some states, all of those inmates who carried hereditary disabilities were sterilized. Other state regulations mandated contraceptive use by all whose family history indicated a predisposition towards serious hereditary defects.[45]

A person with common sense might think that this type of thinking would die out after the eugenics-driven horrors of World War II. Unfortunately, those who long for a better world right now always desire it at the expense of those they consider inferior to themselves.

Destroying Cultures in Order to Improve Them.

"We hope these words will be carried by the four winds, to reach the ears and hearts of all our Indian Tribes, so that they may learn of the dangers to our tribal survival and be strong against the new enemy. ... We belong to a culture that holds all life to be sacred. ... This belief has sustained our people throughout the long struggle for survival. ... The whiteman's culture that kills its unborn is foreign to our way of life. ... The Great Spirit gave to the Indian Woman the duty to look after each succeeding generation. ... The whiteman's solution to the Indian Woman's poverty is to kill her unborn."

- Indian Women United for Social Justice.[46]

The International Population Control Network. Because of the nature of our country and the free exchange of ideas, truly effective racist policies must "go underground" and employ total secrecy in order to remain in existence. The classic example of this is the concentration of abortion mills in minority neighborhoods, as described earlier in this chapter.

However, there exists a huge and extremely powerful network of organizations that practices overt racism on a grand and international scale. As these institutions, larded with Western money, hold entire nations captive, the American press feigns ignorance and disinterest.

There are several multinational lending corporations in existence today that loan huge sums of money to developing countries so that they may develop and construct large-scale projects to improve the low standard of living of their citizens. The United Nations World Bank (UNWB), for example, has for several years been considering a multi-billion dollar loan to the People's Republic of China for the purpose of constructing the mammoth Three Gorge Project, which would provide electricity and flood control for the large and fertile Dongting plain north of Changsha.

However, in the mid-1960s, Paul Ehrlich's book The Population Bomb kicked off the modern expression of the radical population control movement. This movement, laden with radical environmentalists, sees overpopulation as the root of all evils. Groups like Friends of the Earth and the Sierra Club have been bringing pressure to bear on international lending institutions, demanding that they attach population-control "strings" to their loans.

One suggestion published in a Population Council periodical in the late 1960s was "U.S. insistence on "population control as the price of food aid," with highly selected assistance based thereon, and exertion of political pressures on governments or religious groups impeding "solution" of the population program, including shifts in sovereignty." [47]

These loan preconditions lately feature coercive population-control conditions that, in many cases, give the receiving country a choice: Implement our Western values regarding family and population, and you will get your loan. Otherwise - starve!

Reverend Peter Proeku Dery of Tamale, Ghana, stated that "The World Bank

Reverend Peter Poku Dedei of Tamale, Ghana, stated that "The World Bank denied loans to Ghana until my country agreed to institute a nationwide contraception and family-planning policy. There was also pressure to legalize abortion. The people have so far been able to prevent this, but for how long, I don't know."

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF), the Rockefeller Foundation, the World Bank, and many other rich Western organizations have taken it upon themselves to impose their (per)version of the "perfect world" on other countries. To the extent that this vision provides clean drinking water, sanitation, medical facilities and education, there can be little objection.

But when these institutions demand that poor countries employ population control measures that conflict with their ideology and customs, we are engaging in what can only be called racist "contraceptive imperialism."

The "Threat:" "Differential Fertility"

"It is not easy to get the birth rate down other than by penalizing people and having sterilization and abortion both on demand and by command ... Unless all the population groups accept family planning on a voluntary basis, future generations will have to take these other, less pleasant compulsory measures."

- J. deBeer, M.D., Director-General, South African Department of Health and Welfare.[48]

The economic future of Europe is in grave doubt. The dreaded "Demographic Cross" feared by racists and advocates of the principle of "differential fertility" is finally coming to pass.

In the year 1950, Europe was still relatively young, and comprised more than a fifth of the world's population. Meanwhile, Africa was home to less than ten percent of the world's people. But while Africans continued to have large families, Europeans began to abort, sterilize and contracept themselves out of existence. The continents "crossed over" in about 1997, with each possessing about one out of every eight of the world's people. By 2050, their sizes will have reversed: Africa will have more than one out of every five people, and Europe will have only one out of fourteen. Even more importantly, the average African will be barely 30 years old, while the average European will 53 years old!

Since population equals power, the Danes, Germans, Swedes and French pour tens of millions of dollars into population control each year. The Europeans are now the only continent which is losing population. They have one foot in the grave, and the only way to hold on to their share of the world population is to drag the developing continents into the grave with them.

To whom will the future belong - a young, vigorous, large population, or an old, small, hopeless one?

The answer to that question will be obvious to anyone with a background in social science.

The table below shows the basic figures from the United Nations Population Information Network (POPIN).

The Ultimate Impact of Abortion.

"I fully support the right to life of every human being, from conception until natural death. In addition, I unequivocally endorse a total Human Life Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, that would promote the value and integrity of every human life."
- Dick Gregory.[49]

As described in Chapter 20, "The Demographic Impacts of Abortion," no race or country can continue to exist if it aborts more than half of its heritage. Hong Kong, South Korea, Germany, Italy, and most other European countries are learning the lessons dealt by this painful and apparently irreversible process right now.

If the Black race continues to abort at its current rate, it will inevitably occupy a smaller and smaller percentage of this country's population in comparison to other races. In general, groups of people exert a degree of political and social influence that is roughly proportional to their representation in terms of population. Therefore, as a group slowly shrinks, its influence will shrink at a similar rate. The Black race has always suffered from a disproportionately small degree of influence in society; it simply cannot afford to lose any more.

Only the future will answer the critical questions regarding the demographics of race in the United States. All we can do now is guess and speculate.

But we do know one thing - As Faye Wattleton surmised, Margaret Sanger would certainly have been proud!

Summary - Who Are the Real Racists?

"The whites are getting scared of us blacks getting control. Otherwise, all their population control programs wouldn't be directed at the ghettos. You've got Planned Parenthood ladies calling on us twice a day but nobody is knocking on doors in suburbia and rural areas."

— Mrs. Freddie Mae Brown of the Metropolitan Black Survival Committee of St. Louis.[50]

"Your wife say she's going to destroy your child, and I'm waiting to hear you talk like [your father] and say we a people who give children life, not who destroys them - I'm waiting to see you stand up and look like your daddy and say we done give up one baby to poverty and that we ain't going to give up nary another one."

- Raisin in the Sun.

After all is said and done, we must turn to a tried but true slogan to discern the identities of the true racists in the abortion battle: "What you are doing speaks so loud I can't hear what you are saying " can't hear what you are saying.

So let us summarize the hard evidence in order to make our conclusion;

- Pro-abortionists sometimes allege that Adolf Hitler and other great villains were "pro-life." But, as Chapter 5, "The Holocaust Analogy to Abortion," describes in detail, Hitler prohibited abortion for Aryan women while legalizing and aggressively encouraging it in Eastern Europe. What kind of pro-lifer has ever done that?
- The modern pro-abortion movement arose directly from the eugenics movement, which was led by such people as Margaret Sanger, and which was supported by publicly avowed racists like Lothrop Stoddard and Madison Grant. The pro-abortion movement has never disavowed the views of Sanger, Stoddard or Grant.
- The definition of a "pro-lifer" is someone who sees things from God's viewpoint - that every human being has an immortal soul - and therefore believes that the life of everyone, regardless of sex, race or nationality, is equal from fertilization to the moment of natural death. The pro-life movement is completely inclusive when defending life. By contrast, the pro-abortion movement discards anyone who is not convenient or healthy or "wanted" at the time. Who is more truly inclusive?
- Pro-lifers do not discriminate against anyone when trying to rescue human lives. By contrast,
- Pro-abortionists discriminate against handicapped preborn babies;
- Pro-abortionists discriminate against preborn babies who are not the right sex, through sex-selection abortions.
- Pro-abortionists discriminate against preborn babies who they deem "inconvenient" or "unwanted." This is the heart of all oppression.
- Pro-abortionists have a long and sordid history of discrimination against preborn babies and other people who have darker skin. For example, pro-abortion people have tested abortifacients and sterilizing agents such as Depo-Provera, Norplant and quinacrine on the women of developing countries.
- Pro-abortionists operate many more abortion clinics in minority neighborhoods than they do in White neighborhoods. They have killed more than 26 million preborn minority babies, more than Hitler could ever have dreamed of. They kill minority women twice as frequently as White women through so-called "safe" and legal abortion (see Chapter 19, "United States Abortion Statistics," for documentation).
- Many leading pro-abortionists have uttered racist slurs, as shown above. Not a single pro-life leader has ever done so. You can rest assured, we would have heard all about it if one had.
- Finally, there is not a single pro-abortion group oriented towards Black people. Certainly there are occasional token Blacks used as tools by the pro-abortion movement - Faye Wattleton was one example - but all of the issue-oriented Black groups are on the pro-life side. Some of these are listed below.

Now, we ask again - who are the racists?

By Jean-Louis Bruguès

From the perspective of 22 years of the use of different techniques referred to as "medically assisted procreation" (artificial insemination, in vitro fertilization, GIFT- Gamete intrafallopian transfer-, ICSI-Itracitoplasmic sperm injection- in particular) we understand better today why the Church has firmly condemned these practices. In reality, the very term "assisted procreation" is completely misleading because we are mainly not dealing with "assistance" (which the Church is the first to approve of), but with a substitution. The marital bed is replaced by the laboratory. The husband is replaced by the doctor manipulating the gametes and the union of bodies is replaced by a purely technological act. Medically assisted procreation introduces, with full knowledge, a breach in the most private area, the most personal and perhaps most rich part of the human person. Even if one day improvements in the techniques made it possible to avoid the massive destruction of human embryos currently tied to the practice of in vitro fertilization (IVF) (96% of the embryos are thus "created" only to be discarded) which make it unacceptable, one would still have to nevertheless continue to condemn the procedure which, in the end, is dehumanizing.

Louise Brown was born on July 25th 1978 in Great Britain. She was to be called the first "test-tube baby". The little girl in fact had been conceived thanks to an in vitro fertilization accompanied by a transfer of embryos. This technique was going to be recognized worldwide as IVF-ET (in vitro fertilization and embryo transfer). It has developed in the past 20 years, notably in the context of GIFT (Gamete intrafallopian transfer), but the principle is the same: obtaining the sperm through masturbation, taking the oocytes found using coelioscopy or a sonogram, their production having been stimulated (six to ten are obtained, instead of only one per cycle), fertilization of all the oocytes, implantation of several of the embryos obtained in this way - usually three - in the uterus of a woman who may belong to the initial couple (homologous fertilization) or of a different woman (heterologous fertilization), freezing of supernumerary embryos in liquid nitrogen at 196°C below zero. Pregnancy takes place normally, except that in the case of a heterologous IVF-ET, the child is taken away from the "bearing" mother right from his birth to be given to the social mother.

IVF-ET is indicated essentially in the case of female tubular sterility, when the destruction or blockage of the Fallopian Tubes render impossible, despite normal ovarian production, the encounter of the oocytes and of the sperm in the uterine milieu. It is also proposed in other cases of female sterility: absence of cervical mucus, endometriosis, idiopathic sterility...

Looking at the different stages involved in IVF-ET shows that recourse to this technique raises considerable moral objections. These are grouped into four categories: the questions tied to the dissociation of the acts, those tied to the dissociation of blood relations, the status of the human embryo, and finally, the questions which arise from the new perspectives opened up by this technique and its generalization. Let us analyze them one after the other.

MORAL QUESTIONS TIED TO THE DISSOCIATION OF THE ACTS.

There exists a double dissociation: the one rendered necessary to obtain the sperm and the substitution of the sexual act by a technical act.

•a) The medical community speaks of procuring a sperm sample. In reality, the sperm is obtained by masturbation. Certainly, this act does not present the same moral malice as that habitually attributed to it by Catholic morality. It is neither an act of intemperance, through lack of self-mastery nor the seeking of a solitary pleasure, nor a refusal of procreation, since it has become in a sense its sine qua non condition, nor refusal of sexual relations, since the embrace of their bodies still unites the spouses - in each of these cases envisaged by classical theology, masturbation is qualified as a "gravely and intrinsically disordered act" -, this action however "remains deprived of its unitive meaning" (Donum Vitae, II, 6).

•b) The second dissociation between the sexual act and the act of procreation is even more difficult to analyze. Reduced to its simplest expression, the question posed is the following: does the desire for a child, which is otherwise legitimate, permit the substitution of a technical act for the sexual act? According to Catholic doctrine, there exists an "inseparable connection, established by God, which man on his own initiative may not break, between the unitive significance and the procreative significance which are both inherent to the marriage act" (Humanae Vitae, 12). A first objection is then raised by Catholic morality in the face of IVF-ET, even if homologous: this technique injures the integrity of the act of procreation in its most profound meaning. The Magisterium has not followed the path of the so-called principle of totality, indicated by a few theologians for whom the dissociation became acceptable in the measure in which the technical act of procreation (fertilization of the oocytes) inserted itself into an ensemble of sexual acts through which the spouses continued to manifest their love and to give themselves to each other.

A second objection consists in recognizing that in substituting a technical act to the embrace of the bodies, the relation to the child is perverted. The child is no longer a gift, but a right so that the childless couple would have the right to demand that society place at their disposal the necessary technique to satisfy such a desire, and then the right to demand that technicians "produce" a perfect child. From the moment the technique is applied to human procreation, it causes, as it does anywhere else, the dream of perfection. The child is no longer just "ordered" in a general way but is to be customized down to the last detail. The slightest imperfection is looked for. IVF-ET is thus accompanied by what is called "ordinary" eugenics. The desire for a perfect child assigned to the technique defies any unwished for or programmed difference. The child is wounded in its otherness. Only the sexual act of the encounter between the two bodies respects this otherness.

SEPARATIONS IN KINSHIP

What has just been said is valid for the principle of IVF-ET. The questions examined in this second part are about recourse to a third person, separate from the couple. In the case of dissociation of kinship, we speak of heterologous IVF-ET.

•a) IVF-ET becomes heterologous, in a broad sense, when it calls for another much older assisted procreation technique, artificial insemination with intervention of a third donor of sperm. Catholic reflection on this has led to the formulation of a hitherto undefined right. The Magisterium evoked it on several occasions, without yet defining it in a categorical way. The Donum Vitae instruction speaks of the "child's right to be conceived and brought into the world in marriage and from marriage". It concludes: "Heterologous artificial fertilization violates the rights of the child; it deprives him of his filial relationship with his parental origins and can hinder the maturing of his personal identity" (Donum Vitae, II, 2). In several countries in fact, where "sperm banks" have been created, a couple in which the man suffers from infertility may have recourse to an anonymous donor. This anonymity constitutes an injury for the child who will never know his biological father, nor the family he is coming from; in depriving him of the knowledge of a part of his origins, it keeps him from reaching a full knowledge of himself. Legislation in several countries is currently coming nearer to recognizing this point and no longer is hesitant to evoke a right of the child to the knowledge of his origins.

•b) IVF-ET is said to be heterologous, in a strict sense, when it calls for a woman other than that of the couple, either as donor of her oocytes which are fertilized by the sperm of the husband, or to lend her womb and to carry the embryo until delivery, or to perform both operations, the gift of oocytes and lending her uterus. The practice of using "surrogate mothers" was controversial from its origins. It currently is even less favorably viewed, although it has not completely ceased to exist. Heterologous IVF-ET inflicts on the child a wound of a different nature than the last. According to the terms of the "rental" contract, often agreed to at high expense, the child is taken away from the surrogate mother right after birth. The long established relationship with this woman during the baby's intra-uterine existence, which is known to be critical for personality formation, is brutally interrupted. These stories of the selling or buying of children are as old as humanity. IVF-ET gives them a modern twist. As to the carrying mother, she is "instrumentalized": part of her body was bought, but she is forbidden to give herself to the child. How could she love the child she is supposed to abandon? In so doing, she abdicates her dignity: does not the responsibility to conceive and to bear a child inevitably lead to the responsibility of educating it? The couple is destabilized in the end. Certainly, recourse to a substitutional mother - or to a sperm donor - does not mean adultery, in the strict sense of the term, but it betrays the marriage vows, such as they are conceived by the Catholic tradition, which gives each spouse an exclusive right to the body of the other. The man and the woman find themselves no longer equal before the child who is the biological fruit of one, but not of the other.

Medically assisted procreations (MAP) thus destroys kinship relations. In an extreme situation, a child could have a biological father and social father who bestows his name, a biological mother (the oocyte donor), a surrogate mother, who lends her uterus, and a social mother. Who could maintain that this fragmentation is of little importance and that it does not disturb the construction of the personality of the child? We then see that these procreations bring to the fore the sole fulfillment of the desire of the adults, while relegating to the background the good of the child himself; they even do injury to some of his rights. From the point of view of human morality, does not the decision to give life to a child imply include the desire to give him the best, of guaranteeing him the best conditions of development? Anxious above all to protect the innocent child, Catholic morality brings forth a more radical proposition: every child has the right to be born of a legitimately married couple; "Heterologous artificial fertilization is contrary to the unity of marriage, to the dignity of the spouses, to the vocation proper to parents, and to the child's right to be conceived and brought into the world in marriage and from marriage" (Donum Vitae, II,2).

THE LEGAL STATUS OF THE EMBRYO

The moral objections just mentioned are important. However, those relating to the status of the human embryo are even more crucial. In theory, it would be enough to fertilize only one oocyte; but the chances of success of implantation of this one embryo are too slight, and technicians prefer, as mentioned before, to stimulate the production of oocytes, to fertilize all of them, then to implant a few and to keep the rest in reserve.

•a) Two concrete situations lead then to posing anew the question of the status of the human embryo.

- The technicians only implant a small number of embryos, usually three. They hope only one will reach maturity. If two or even three embryos implant and develop normally, they may decide, with the agreement of the woman or the couple, to take out one or two in order to avoid multiple births. This operation supposes selecting the embryos, therefore a choice; this relates to the "ordinary" eugenics, already mentioned and which has become so common in the MAP milieus. It is euphemistically called "embryonic reduction"; in reality it consists in voluntarily provoking one or more abortions.

- What happens to the surplus frozen embryos? Several solutions may now be envisaged. These embryos may be implanted in the future in the same couple, either because the first one failed, or because the couple wishes a new child several years later. They may also be given to another couple undergoing similar fertility problems; the operation may be performed free of charge - the embryos are donated - or at a cost - the embryos are sold. In the case of lack of interest on the part the initial couple, or of their death, the embryos may be abandoned for scientific research, used for commercial ends, for example in manufacturing cosmetics, or simply destroyed.

These frozen embryos, donated, sold, abandoned, used or destroyed, what are they in reality?

•b) IVF-ET thus brings up again the philosophical question of the status (we would prefer to speak of the nature) of the human embryo at the heart of the technical predicament. Let us begin by recognizing that this practice was only established and generalized in countries having permitted abortion by depenalization or legalization.

In legislation inspired by Roman law, there exist only two categories: persons and property. Is the embryo a person or a thing? We know that two prevailing currents of thought clash on this decisive question. The first has become a clear majority opinion in the Western countries and especially among MAP technicians, who are often tempted by utilitarianism. It essentially comes back to the following proposition: it is the act of recognition, often called the "parental project", coming from the woman, the couple, the practitioners, even from society, which is the basis of humanity. Before this recognition, the embryo can be treated with the greatest liberty, according to the needs of the couple or society, because it would tend to be only an object. After recognition, it would be a developing human person with dignity and rights. The moment of this recognition varies depending on the desires of the persons and national laws.

Without pronouncing decisively on the moment of ensoulment - immediate (as in Gregory of Nyssa) or progressive (as in Thomas Aquinas) - the Catholic tradition has always held that the embryo, that is the being resulting from the fusion of the gametes emanating from a man and a woman, was entirely human and had to be treated "as if it were a person", enjoying the dignity and rights attached to this concept. "The human being is to be respected and treated as a person from the moment of conception; and therefore from that same moment his rights as a person must be recognized, among which in the first place is the inviolable right of every innocent human being to life" (Donum vitae, I, 1). In consequence, it is absolutely unacceptable to voluntarily provoke an abortion. The first prevailing opinion is voluntaristic. The Catholic tradition sees itself as "realist"; it chooses an apparent biological criterion: present scientific knowledge, in fact, certifies that the being resulting from the fusion of the gametes is already unique and has a complete genetic patrimony. It does not become human: from the fusion of the gametes until puberty, it is the same human being developing autonomously, without knowing any significant discontinuities.

c) This position leads to the following practical consequences:

-- every voluntary destruction of an embryo is an abortion. Therefore it may not be admitted by the Catholic conscience.

-- The Roman instruction Donum vitae determined that the freezing of embryos was not in conformity with human ethics: "...those embryos which are not transferred into the body of the mother and are called "spare" are exposed to an absurd fate, with no possibility of their being offered safe means of survival which can be licitly pursued" (Donum vitae, I,5).

-- Since the abolition of slavery, it is forbidden to give or to sell a human person. It is therefore contrary to their dignity to dispose of human embryos by sale or free of charge.

-- It is absolutely contrary to the dignity of the embryo to be used for commercial ends.

-- Like all human beings, the embryo can be the object of observation by practitioners, provided it does not expose the embryo to any risk. Similarly, we may recognize as licit, and sometimes even necessary, experimentation on the embryo, when the research is oriented towards the good of the embryo, for example the treatment of a disease or for its survival.

d) One particular question will take on greater importance in the years to come: are research and experimentation on the human embryo legitimate?

If this research and experimentation aim at insuring the good of the embryo (if for example they try to heal it), they are morally acceptable. The embryo is then considered as a human person, apt to receive care, even if they incur the risk inherent to all medical experimentation. On the other hand, it is not in conformity with the dignity of the human embryo to be used in scientific research or experimentation for the needs of society (Donum vitae I, 4). This question is of great importance currently. One must understand in fact, that at the origins of IVF-ET oocytes were fertilized because we did not yet know how to freeze them, and the embryos were frozen. Scientific articles published in the course of the past few months have just confirmed the successful freezing of oocytes. It has therefore become unnecessary to produce spare embryos in order to freeze them. Yet in Western countries, pressure from drug companies and even public opinion has become particularly strong: we expect from the experiments on embryos significant advances in improving drugs and treatments of certain diseases. Will the legislator resist the alliance of utilitarian mentalities and financial interests? Probably not. Here again, we will have recourse to linguistic sleight-of-hand: while we will continue to strongly affirm that one may not "manufacture" human embryos for research and experimentation, we already speak of "totipotent" stem-cells created for the express purpose of research and experimentation to which we deny the name of embryos. IVF-ET has then opened the door to the massive production of human embryos which, destined to serve the needs of society, are set aside and then destroyed.

OPEN PERSPECTIVES FOR IVF-ET

In its beginnings, IVF-ET was presented as a technique to fight infertility. In reality, it does not treat infertility itself, since after the coming of the child, the woman will still have the same difficulties; she contents herself to go around it.

However we did perceive well that this technique opened the perspective of a real abyss for the future of man, such as ectogenesis, the gestation of human embryos by animal species, cloning, embryonic biopsy, the substitution of the embryonic nucleus by a nucleus sampled from an adult human being, not to mention so called preventative by a nucleus sampled from an adult human being, not to mention so called preventative medicine...

Faced with such perspectives, the human spirit may oscillate between two attitudes. The first would be that of awe and enthusiasm: has not man become able to penetrate into the arcane mysteries of nature and take for himself some of her secrets? Catholic morality chooses another attitude. Certainly, technical progress is worthy of the greatest encouragement. But it ought not to be done at any price. It is not itself an ethical imperative. IVF-ET confers on humans, or for the whole of society, a right to life and death over its most weak members: embryos. God alone possesses this right. The danger that increasingly manifests itself consists exactly in allowing one to believe that man has already become a demi-god and that he occupies the place left vacant by the driving away of all transcendence by secularization.

The desire for a child is one of the most admirable there is, but it has a strong narcissistic component. A dark future may be feared when it allies with scientific techniques and requires of them this perfection expected of old from a divine miracle. Human freedom has everything to fear from such an alliance.

BIOETHICS COMMITTEES

By Elio Sgreccia

Bioethics Committees (BCs) went from emergency bodies to having a support function and becoming a constant point of reference, so much so that by March 31st 1976 they were formally instituted by a sentence of the Supreme Court of New Jersey. There are four main reasons for which the support of such Committees may be justified: 1) to bring together disciplines, that are becoming ever more specialized and susceptible of considering cases sectorially and reductively to safeguard the good of the entire person in the different phases of research and assistance; 2) to find a common field of dialogue - among the various models and visions of man and over the ethical problems in healthcare - allowing for a confrontation of the various ethics, including the so-called secular ones; 3) to spare physicians from bureaucratic, political and economic restrictions, granting them a just deontological autonomy in their decisions; 4) finally, to safeguard the rights of the patient. Today UNESCO tends to become a reference point for institutional bioethics: it has an inter-ministerial committee composed of ministers or delegates of the member countries. Furthermore, within the European Union and various other nations, at national and local levels, there are many BCs. BCs have two critical characteristics: interdisciplinarity and pluralism. In the first instance respect for the autonomy of the various disciplines involved is sought, while these disciplines agree on their behalf to combine their findings for a judgment that might offer a better answer to the ethical requirement of being licit or not, and under what conditions. A major challenge in respecting the autonomy of the various disciplines, lies in the integration of their judgments - especially while evaluating them ethically and expressing them according to anthropologic values - with the deontological and juridical norms. In the second instance, pluralism, the challenge is quite complex, since what is at stake is to reconcile models that are completely different and at times even opposed, also in relation to different religions. Neither the application of minimal ethical standards nor the mere careful following of procedures (informed consent of the patient, majority ethics, etc.) nor the existing international reference points, such as the Helsinki Declaration, are always satisfactory solutions. The following contribution offers some models of methodology that may help in such complex cases. INTRODUCTION

It is known for being an institution or organism consisting of specialists of various disciplines, who are consulted with the aim of clarifying problems of a bioethical nature that may arise in biomedical research at the level of treatment or management.[\[1\]](#)

Bioethics has been defined as a systematical reflection on the problems posed by interdisciplinary and pluralistic bio-medicine, in the light of moral principles and norms:[2] therefore various sciences may be involved, experimental or non-experimental (biology, medicine, law, ethics etc.), and specific themes may be tackled starting from different moral visions and theories (utilitarianism, contractualism, personalism, liberal ethics etc.). The Bioethics Committees equally consist of many disciplines and specialists of various disciplines (interdisciplinarity); each of them may host persons that refer to different moral and philosophical visions (pluralism).

Pluralism may be superseded when such committees are bound to guidelines that refer to one specific vision; for instance: Catholic hospitals will refer to Catholic morals; but where public scientific or health institutions are concerned, pluralism and a knowledge of the various ethical theories or visions are required even from the specifically religious Bioethics Committees, so that the users and the public may consult them and ask for meetings and justification of the decisions that are being made.

How pluralism is managed within the Bioethics Committees is the most delicate item of their life and validity and, as we will specify later, it even represents one of the reasons for their existence.

For this reason we wish to briefly go over the historical beginnings of this organism, so that we may rediscover the reasons and motivations that are supporting the institution, and define the methodology and the problems it is interested in, their typology according to specific duties and institutional engagements, especially the criteria used for the elaboration of a judgment, and finally, the characteristics the Committees must have for them to function correctly.[3]

Historical origins

BCs arose first of all because of some situations that were at the limit of the paradoxical and the dramatic (the case of Karen Ann Quinlan and similar situations); today they offer themselves as a sustaining organ for decisions to be taken about protocols for experimentation, or about situations that may offer some innovative character or an uncertain ethical value; i.e., its function has shifted from that of an emergency body to a support function and a consistent point of reference.

Although a 1976 ruling of the Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey (USA) is usually considered as the historical date for the erection of the first formal BC as an institution, one should recognize[4] that from 1971, in a Medico-Moral Guide of the Canadian Catholic bishops, there was a proposal to create, in all Catholic hospitals, medical-moral commissions with some fundamental duties - including educational-formative duties - above all to apply in a single consistent way the Ethical and Religious Directives for Catholic Health Care Facilities, which the National Conference of the Catholic Bishops of the United States had published that year.

Undoubtedly, it was after the ruling of the Supreme Court of New Jersey issued on March 31, 1976 that one of the first BCs was formally instituted, and right from the start various problems arose connected with what function such committees should have.

Let us briefly remember how the decision of the American judges to create a BC developed from the Karen Ann Quinlan case. For a whole year this girl had been living in coma, caused by a very serious neurological trauma, and she had been refused admission by various hospitals and private clinics that considered her state to be irreversible. She was finally accepted in a clinic, the Morris View Nursing Home, and kept alive by sophisticated equipment, in a state of total unconsciousness. The question for public opinion in that far-away 1976, was whether keeping a person alive at all costs in such conditions was licit or whether it would be more just to let nature take its course. Instituting the committee, the Supreme Court put its components in charge of evaluating the reasonable possibilities for Karen Ann Quinlan to reemerge from that condition, with the precise aim to approve or disapprove the final decision: to definitively unplug the equipment keeping the girl alive. It was immediately noticed that the committee had not been asked to approve or disapprove of the decision to suspend care, but rather to deliver a truly clinical-prognostic judgment. Inside the clinic where the girl was hospitalized the committee requested by the Judges was created, consisting of two priests, the health director, a social worker, one physician and a legal counsel. However, doubts about the "competence" of this committee arose: in fact, if the duty assigned to it was to be strictly prognostic, why was there only one physician among its members, and, at that, not a specialist in neurology and not even directly involved in treating the patient?

Thus, as soon as these BCs began to exist in the United States, problems arose about their composition and their role.

Next to this contingent and dramatic motive that led to the institution of a BC, later on, as we already said, the use of such committees was suggested also in ordinary situations, for instance, with reference to protocols for experimentation on the sick or in situations that may occur in the health care arena and through biomedical progress. From being emergency bodies, BCs now function as a support and point of reference in daily practice. Even from the Catholic ethical point of view, as we already said, the need is felt for health workers not to be left alone to face unbearable responsibilities in addressing clinical cases that are becoming ever more complex and problematic. This is why the Charter for Health Care Workers recently issued by the Pontifical Council for the Pastoral Assistance to Health Care Workers refers to the role of the BCs in facilitating the choices that weigh upon the health workers and to oversee them.

BCs expanded rapidly at various levels, both in the Common Law countries and in those countries where legislation governs healthcare: today there are BCs at a national level, as a consulting organ of parliament and the government, and there are local BCs for research institutes and hospitals, and little by little this institution is becoming a component of the dialogue, orientation and decision-making at a pre-judicial and social component of the dialogue, orientation and decision-making at a pre-judicial and social level.

REASONS FOR SUPPORT

The reasons for the BCs[5] vitality and their justification can be summarized in the following four points.

a) The first one is epistemological and consists in the requirement to recreate an "anthropological unity" inside the medical sciences milieu that is becoming ever more specialized and susceptible of treating health problems and situations of disease more sectorially and reductively. The need is felt to look for the good of the whole human person, both in research and while treating the person when it comes to healthcare.

b) The second reason is philosophical-cultural: there is a felt need for dialogue and for finding a common ground of agreement about various models and visions of man and the different ethical problems that refer to medical care. It is well known that there are strong differences and tensions between the various philosophical-ethical lines of bioethical thought. There are liberal models, models of utilitarianism, of contractualism, of principlism, of sociobiology. In our line of thought, that is open to rational reflection and to the contributions given by revelation, we have tried to rediscover a personalism with an ontological foundation, to be ready for an open field debate with the so-called "secular ethics". For the national, and today also for the international committees, this dialogue is the prevalent motivation and function of the committee. Frequent conflicts on the theoretical level, often (but not always) are lessened at the level of practical decisions, where concrete cases impose their elements of objective truth. Further on we will illustrate this aspect of difficult conflicts.

c) The third reason is deontological and political: One wants to support the physician and the deontological autonomy of his decisions in the face of possible bureaucratic conditioning and the risks of politicization, especially in periods of limitations on financial resources.

d) The fourth reason identifies itself with the need to safeguard the patients' rights in times of illness, and to resolve cases that are difficult to settle at the patient's bedside or when an emergency arises. Patient research protocols, the decision to revive or not to revive a low birth weight child in a critical condition, the procedures for organ removal, all require a congruous protection of the patient while supporting the physician's decisions. Sometimes clinical bioethics, though taught to doctors and researchers, does require facing a concrete case.

TYOLOGY AND FUNCTIONS OF THE BCs

CBs came into existence and spread very fast, with very different missions. President Carter had already created a President's Commission for the problems of genetic engineering. Reagan, his successor, confirmed the commission in 1983 while increasing its mandate; in France, since 1984 the Comité d'éthique national consultatif has been active, first nominated by Mitterand; in Italy, in 1990, by a decree of the President of the Council of Ministers, a national bioethics committee was created. So today in most states one can find a bioethics commission or committee at the national level; these committees have even gathered several times in summits celebrated in various parts of the world, and lately their presidents are invited by UNESCO where an international committee has been active ever since the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome was issued in 1997.

UNESCO has now become a point of reference for institutional bioethics, and in its meeting of 22-23 October 2001 there appeared a clear will to establish a universal orientation and to spread bioethics in the entire world, thus encouraging a kind of globalization of bioethics. During this meeting the publication of a universal code of bioethics was proposed, which could present the risk of a "minimal" and pragmatic ethics that is a least common denominator of culture instead of animating it with dialogue towards a growth in civilization.

Within UNESCO there is also an inter-ministerial committee, which is concerned with bioethics and consists of ministers - or minister delegates - of scientific research belonging to the participating countries. Furthermore, the existence of a Bioethics Committee within the Council of Europe, which has had several denominations (CAHBI, CAHGE, CDBI) should not be forgotten together with the one created at the heart of the European Parliament and concerning itself with genetic problems.

Besides this attempt at the "globalization" of bioethics and UNESCO's coordinating the web of national committees, one should consider that each of these committees has produced documents and opinions that constitute an important source for research.^[6] Furthermore, there exists a second level of committees, the "local" ones, which can also be operative at the level of research institutes or in hospitals; at times hospitals, for instance university hospitals, are also research institutes themselves. New committees arise at the hospital or research institute's initiative, with a charter approved by management following traditional norms or by specific ministerial decrees.

Again, these local committees, and especially the hospital ones, can be oriented towards verifying protocols of pharmaceutical experimentation, according to codified norms (in Europe these norms are contained in directive n. 91/507/CEE of July 19, 1991, entitled Good Clinical Practices), or else they can include other finalities also, such as formulating opinions about borderline cases or cases that are difficult to resolve at the level of medical care for patients, and even taking the mission to educate personnel on ethical themes, and more generally, to look after the quality of care being given.

The ends, procedures, the number and qualifications of members must be specified in the charter and, especially where clinical experimentation is concerned, they must be governed closely by the international documents on deontology (Helsinki Declaration, Good Clinical Practices) and by the national laws and/or decrees.[7]

METHODOLOGY AND ELABORATED OPINIONS

Considering their various typologies, for a profitable functioning of these committees two important characteristics have to be reconciled: interdisciplinarity and pluralism.

Interdisciplinarity, which is typical of bioethics, requires that the autonomy of each discipline that concurs in the examination of the specific cases and situations be respected; on the other hand it requires their respective contributions be integrated so that an ethical judgment may be reached: whether the decision is / licit or not / and what are the required conditions for it to be licit?

That the autonomy of each discipline should be respected is something already required by Vatican Council II,[8] and this autonomy is based on the fact that each discipline has its specific arena, its own methodology of research, its criteria for judgment; biology, statistics, ethics, law and deontology, all have different standards of reflection, specific research methodologies and criteria for judgment that agree and are consistent within their own research milieu. In a BC that consists of a physician, a gynecologist, a pharmacist, a specialist in statistics, an ethicist, a deontologist and a jurist, whenever these members will have to make a judgment about experiments with a medicine that may affect the fetus of a pregnant woman, each of them will have to make their own judgment: what are the risks, whether such a risk is justified and proportional, how frequent its occurrence may be, what deontology, ethics and the law have to say about it; these data have to be integrated so as to reach a judgment about the protocol being acceptable or not and to make a decision.[9]

But again, integration can be understood in various ways, according to whether the data to be incorporated belong to the same area of knowledge pertaining to the experimental sciences or else an integration is called for between data belonging to the experimental sciences and those pertaining to values and norms. In the first case, for instance, data coming from biology, pharmacology, gynecology, statistics, belonging to the same experimental area it will be enough for the results to be added one next to the other as in a circle, to formulate a judgment about their factual reality.

When evaluating the data ethically and confront them with values, what is needed is a "triangular" figure, consisting in examining the scientific fact globally and objectively in its entirety (for instance, the data that are known about the taking of a specific drug by a pregnant woman in the light of biology, pharmacology, gynecology, embryology, statistics etc.), after which one has to consider what this implies as far as its anthropological value (the woman or the baby's health) is concerned; and finally what possible side-effects and bioethical considerations may mean in the light of values and norms, and also what norms are already at hand at the deontological and juridical level.

It seems to us that only with this kind of methodology can one be respectful of the autonomy of the sciences and their epistemology, while guaranteeing an interdisciplinary debate that may lead to a bioethical judgment.

The answer is more complex in the pluralistic application. As we know, except for the case of scientific or hospital centers that are formally and from the start professing the same ethical vision (for instance Catholic hospitals and centers), BC components or members, be they professionals or not, may refer to ethical models that differ and are sometimes even opposed to each other; their orientation may be liberal, utilitarian, contractualistic etc.

It is not always possible to reach an agreement by simply confronting single cases and decisions. Pluralism is found also as far as various religions are concerned.

What should the procedures be, for a consensus decision or at least for some decision to be reached?

It would seem that, in relation with the patient or the citizen's good, the path of "minimal ethics" cannot be embraced. Even if we admit that a lowest common denominator could be found between the various currents of thought, which at times can be strongly contrasting, very often what has to be faced is the whether or not to accept the maximum value or not, i.e. life or death: for example, to help a low birth weight newborn baby at risk to live or let it die, to allow assisted suicide or not, to allow "therapeutic" abortion or not.

Nor does a procedural theory seem acceptable, that would consider any decision valid as long as procedures are followed (informed consent of the patient, majority of patients, obeying the law, etc.), because procedural ethics is the ethics of the majority, and does not take into account the objective good nor the person who cannot express their own consent. In fact, some procedures are being used that are founded on criteria that already have a certain consensus: starting from the legislative datum (not always coinciding with ethics) one can examine the datum of the "rights of man" codified by conventions, declarations, recommendations, directives issued by institutions that are present in each continent; in Europe numerous series of norms have been issued by the Council of Europe, by the European Parliament and their BCs.[\[11\]](#) Each BC that is operating in the hospitals or in the research centers considers as a valid reference point the documents of a deontological nature issued by the World Medical Association, particularly the Helsinki Declaration, that up to today has been updated various times, whenever new problems have been arising.[\[12\]](#) The deontological codes that are being published and updated by the doctor's associations - in those countries where they exist published and updated by the doctor's associations - in those countries where they exist - often allow for differences to be overcome, at least within a specific territory.

We- who make reference to the foundation of an ontological personalism - uphold that debate and dialogue should turn towards the global good of the person and should search for the common good through the realization of the good of the single person. The chart which we are reproducing here may help as an orientation for this methodology.

(Chart not included)

But a few controversial items will remain, and require the formulation of the majority or the minority and even the signature of a single member.

This is not only possible but also a duty, because BCs have a consultative character and leave the responsibility on the professional (researcher or physician), who will have to decide, and the presence of different opinions will help him take the decision that remains the responsibility of the person invested with authority.

This does not decrease the importance or the merits of the said committees whose opinions are often required, if not absolutely binding in nature: the effort in searching for a dialogue, for a cultural elaboration and facing the data represent a real patrimony also as far as ethical and bioethical literature are concerned.[\[13\]](#)

[\[1\]](#) In today's literature the prevalent use of the Genitive (Committees of ethics or bioethics as used in Italian) instead of the adjective form (Ethic Committees), intends to explicitly stress the subject-matter and not the quality of the persons or the institution involved. We will use the term Committees of bioethics (Comitati di bioetica (CdB)). The English term is Bioethics Committee (BC).

[\[2\]](#) See the definition of bioethics in Encyclopedia of Bioethics, New York ²1995, It states: "the systematic study of the moral dimensions--including moral vision, decisions, conduct, and policies--of the life sciences and health care, employing a variety of ethical methodologies in an interdisciplinary setting" (p. XXI).

As far as BCs are concerned, Directive 37 foresees that "an ethics committee or some alternate form of ethical consultation should be available to assist by advising on particular ethical situations, by offering educational opportunities, and by reviewing and recommending policies. To these ends, there should be appropriate standards for medical ethical consultation within a particular diocese that will respect the diocesan bishop's pastoral responsibility as well as assist members of ethics committees to be familiar with Catholic medical ethics and, in particular, these Directives".

SHARE

Pregnancies While Using the "Infallible" Pill. From the very first day that it was introduced, the oral contraceptive has been hailed as the solution to "unwanted pregnancies" and the enabler of the "sexual revolution." Continued allegations of high efficiency, combined with the easy availability of abortion as a "backup," have inevitably led to widespread careless use of the Pill. Then the anti-life mentality leads women whose birth control fails to feel entitled to an abortion of the life that technology failed to prevent.

Only about 11 percent of all women who use the Pill do so correctly, according to a 1989 study.[13] This carelessness is the major contributor to an incredible number of unintended pregnancies, especially among younger women. U.S. women who are on the Pill experience nearly a million unintended pregnancies annually, and more than 40 percent of these occur among women 15 to 24 years old. [14]

The method effectiveness of the oral contraceptive pill is 99.7 percent per year. This percentage sounds extremely high; but the method effectiveness refers to the efficiency of the Pill when a woman is in excellent health and uses the Pill without error. When user error and illness is factored in, the result is the actual, or "real world" user effectiveness rate, also known as the overall effectiveness rate, which is only 92 percent per year.[15]

Veteran abortion statistician Christopher Tietze has defined the user effectiveness rate as "Performance under real life conditions, including any accidental pregnancies during regular or irregular use of the method under study by excluding pregnancies following discontinuation of contraception or adoption of another method." [16]

As mentioned before, the "real world" effectiveness rate for the birth control pill is 92 percent per year. This still sounds fairly high until one calculates the probability of a woman becoming pregnant over an extended period of time when using the Pill, as shown below.

Cumulative Probability of Pregnancy Among Women Using Oral Contraceptives

Period of Pill Use	Probability of Pregnancy
6 months	4%
1 year	8%
2 years	15%

2 years	10%
3 years	22%
4 years	28%
5 years	34%
7 years	44%
10 years	57%
Note: Accumulated failure rates are calculated with the formula $1-(1-f)^n$, where f equals the failure rate and n equals the number of years.

In summary, if a sexually active girl of 15 starts using the Pill, and uses it continuously, there is a nearly 50 percent chance that she will become pregnant by the time she is 22!

This statistic is verified by pro-abortionists, including Dr. Christopher Tietze, who said that "within 10 years, 20 to 50 percent of Pill users and a substantial majority of users of other methods may be expected to experience at least one repeat abortion." [17] Tietze is referring to the young women that sidewalk counselors see in droves, trooping into the abortion mills with bemused expressions on their faces and saying "It's okay because my birth control failed!"

Note that Tietze is speaking about repeat (second or more) abortions here. These statistics are significant when one considers that one of the primary goals of school-based clinics (SBCs) is to distribute contraceptives and abortifacients to teenagers without parental consent or knowledge (see Chapter 17 for more information on sex education and SBCs).

These rates are in line with Alan Guttmacher Institute figures that show that half of all abortion patients in 1987 were practicing contraception during the month in which they conceived, and a substantial proportion of those who were not doing so had stopped using a method only a few months before becoming pregnant. The majority of abortion patients who had stopped using a method prior to becoming pregnant said they had most recently used the Pill. [18]

Naturally, these and other statistics are never divulged by those who operate school-based clinics or who push comprehensive sex education programs in our public schools.

For further statistical information on the failure rate of the Pill and other contraceptive methods, see Chapter 21, "Contraception."

The Pill: Unsafe At Any Speed. United States Federal courts have classified the birth control as "unavoidably unsafe." [19] This means that, implicit in a woman's consent to use the Pill is an acknowledgement of physical risk — even if she is not entirely informed of all of its dangers.

This legal classification means that women damaged by the Pill have a much harder time recovering damages. Dr. John Hildebrand, an expert in the field of human reproduction, estimates that more than 500 women die every year because of pill-induced effects. This startling number is confirmed by figures provided by the Alan Guttmacher Institute (the world's foremost abortions statistics analyzer) and one of the foremost abortionists in the United States, Warren Hern, as shown in Figure 2-6.

It is ironic indeed that the same pill that the gender feminists pushed so hard as part of their solution to 'excessive illegal abortion deaths' now kills five to seven times as many women per year as illegal abortions themselves did before Roe v. Wade (see Chapter 7 on "Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion" for a detailed study on maternal morality caused by both illegal and legal abortions).

Cardiovascular Impacts. The most dangerous and well-documented side effects commonly associated with the Pill are heart attacks and strokes. The eight-year Nurse's Health Study at Harvard Medical School found that Pill users are 250 percent as likely to have heart attacks and strokes than those who don't use the Pill, probably because the Pill excessively increases blood clotting ability. One of the major findings of the study was that women who get off the Pill have rates of cardiovascular disease equal to that of the general population after a period of one year.[20]

Breast Cancer. The Fertility and Maternal Health Drugs Advisory Committee is a panel of medical experts that meets to advise the Commissioner of the United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) on matters regarding drugs that disable the female reproductive function. Its advice is non-binding, but it does influence the FDA to a certain extent.

The Committee evaluated a study by Dr. Clifford R. Kay of the Royal College of General Practitioners of Manchester, England. Kay studied 46,000 women, half of which were Pill users and half of which were non-users. He found that Pill users were more than three times more likely to develop breast cancer than non-users between the ages of 30 and 34. Kay stated that the Pill may not have been a contributing factor to the increases in cancer because of its long latent period, but that the Pill may "accelerate" the process if it had already begun.

He also said that it was "absolutely critical" that these studies continue, and if they showed a clear connection between the Pill and cancer, that it would be a "devastating condemnation" of the drug.

A second study by researchers at the Boston University School of Medicine, the University of Pennsylvania, and New York's Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, completed in 1988, showed that the longer women took the Pill, the greater their chances of contracting breast cancer. The risk of developing breast cancer was found to be twice as great by age 45 for women who had used the Pill for less than ten years and four times as great for women who had used the Pill for greater than ten years.

Another 1988 study by the Centers for Disease Control (CDCs) in Atlanta, reviewed by the Food and Drug Administration, found that women who had never had children and who began menstruating before the age of 13 had an increased risk of breast cancer depending on how long they had used the Pill.

Indirect Effects of the Pill: Introduction. The direct results of the Pill, as described above, include at least 25,000 dead women and many hundreds of thousands more seriously injured since 1965.

The indirect impacts of the Pill are much more diffuse but even more damaging to society in general. The Pill indirectly impacts not only women, but men and children as well.

The Pill cannot be assigned all of the blame for these damaging effects. However, since it is a more popular birth control method than any of the other artificial means, it must bear a large portion of the responsibility for sexual promiscuity, the increase of illegitimate births, the explosion of venereal diseases, and the degradation of marriage, as described in the following paragraphs.

Indirect Effect: Increased Promiscuity. It goes without saying that the wide availability a drug like the birth control pill would appeal strongly to those persons with no particular sense of sexual ethics.

After the Pill was introduced in the mid-1960s, pre-marital sex and cohabitation ("shacking up") both almost doubled in a period of only five years. This behavior also increased steeply when abortion was legalized in 1973.

People of all ages (but especially teenagers) are having premarital sex more than ever before. Wife-swapping clubs, organized orgies, the membership of sex addiction treatment organizations like Sexaholics Anonymous, hard-core pornography, and 'fantasy [sex] tours' to Far East nations have increased tremendously.

Even the original developers of the birth control pill now acknowledge that their invention has led to widespread promiscuity. Dr. Robert Kirstner of Harvard Medical School said that "About ten years ago, I declared that the Pill would not lead to promiscuity. Well, I was wrong. The birth control pill has been a major causal factor in the rapid increase in both V.D. and cervical cancer among adolescents by stimulating higher levels of promiscuity" [emphasis in original]."[21]

And Dr. Min-Chueh Chang, one of the co-developers of the birth control pill, has acknowledged that "[Young people] indulge in too much sexual activity ... I personally feel the Pill has rather spoiled young people. It's made them more permissive."[22]

Dr. Alan Guttmacher, former medical director of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, also drew a clear picture of the link between abortion and contraception within the context of increased promiscuity; "When an abortion is easily obtainable, contraception is neither actively nor diligently used. If we had abortion on demand, there would be no reward for the woman who practiced effective contraception. Abortion on demand relieves the husband of all possible responsibility; he simply becomes a coital animal."[23]

Finally, psychologists Eugene Sandburg and Ralph Jacobs noted the obvious connection between contraception and abortion as birth control; "As legal abortion has become increasingly available, it has become evident that some women are now intentionally using abortion as a substitute for contraception."[24]

Drs. Kirstner and Min-Chueh were certainly correct in their assessment of the situation. In 1970, only 4.6 percent of all 15-year-old girls had experienced premarital sex. By 2000, this rate had increased more than eightfold to 40 percent. Of all unmarried girls in the 15 to 19 age bracket, 28.6 percent had had premarital sex in 1970. This rate had more than doubled to 61.4 percent by 1990 [25] had more than doubled to 0.4 percent by 1990.[25]

Indirect Effect: Illegitimate Births. The inevitable result of the combination of increases in premarital sex and of 'unwanted pregnancy' is obviously an increase in illegitimate births and abortion.

Professor Kingsley Davis of the United States Commission on Population Growth and the American Future states that

The current belief that illegitimacy will be reduced if teenage girls are given an effective contraceptive is an extension of the same reasoning that created the problem in the first place. It reflects an unwillingness to face problems of social control and social discipline, while trusting some technological device to extricate society from its difficulties. The irony is that the illegitimacy rise occurred precisely while contraceptive use was becoming more, rather than less, widespread and respectable.[26]

The illegitimacy rate for births among teenaged girls hovered around five to seven percent for decades, until about 1960. Between 1960 and 1970, it doubled as the birth control pill helped usher in the 'Sexual Revolution.' After 1970, the teenage illegitimacy rate literally exploded as comprehensive sex education programs and school-based clinics were introduced.

The overall illegitimacy rate for all children born in the United States was 5 percent in 1960. This rate had increased 600 percent to 35% in 2003.[27]

This phenomenon is not just an ethical or religious concern: It is a profoundly practical one. It is common knowledge among social workers that children born into one-parent families are much more likely to be abused and abusive, to be undereducated, to be under- or unemployed, to have illegitimate children themselves, and to be more prone to criminal activity.

Indirect Effect: Increased Venereal Diseases. Because it is not a 'barrier method,' the birth control pill does absolutely nothing to halt the spread of venereal diseases. Quite the contrary: It has contributed greatly to promiscuity, and venereal diseases have exploded as a result.

In 1920, VD's were concentrated in a very small segment of the population: Prostitutes, a few promiscuous homosexuals, and a small percentage of men (and sometimes women) who had the financial means to seduce a succession of sexual partners.

Only twelve sexually-transmitted diseases (STDs) were catalogued in 1920, and seven of them were rare indeed. Today, there are over 50 recognized strains of STDs, and more are being discovered every year.

AIDS was nonexistent in 1920, and now it has killed more than half a million people in the United States alone.

Dr. V. Livingstone, in her mid-1940s public health work in New York and New Jersey, noted that virtually all long-time prostitutes had contracted cervical cancer from almost continuous sexual activity. Now, fifty years later, there is an incredible rise in the nationwide incidence of cervical cancer among promiscuous young women who are not prostitutes.[28]

Herpes used to be rare in this country, but now more than three million Americans are infected, with 300,000 more joining the ranks of the 'elect' every year. Symptoms include flue-like indications after about a week. The virus usually resides near the spinal cord, and returns to the site(s) of infection at fairly regular intervals, causing successive rounds of symptoms to occur. Genital herpes is very easily transmitted, is incurable, and changes a person's entire lifestyle until the day he or she dies.

The incidence of genital warts (condyloma), which are caused by human papillomavirus (HPV), has increased by a factor of 1,000% since the birth control pill came into wide use. The latent period ranges from a month to a year, so a newly-infected person may transmit the virus very easily before realizing he is diseased. The infected person must usually undergo repeated treatments involving cauterization, laser burning, or use of powerful drugs such as podophyllin or trichloroacetic acid.[29]

Pelvic inflammatory disease (PID) is not an STD, but is commonly caused by gonorrhea, chlamydial infection, and other STDs. It is a broad term referring to a group of infections that lodge in the uterus, ovaries, and Fallopian tubes. About 15 percent of all women will suffer from PID at some point in their lives, and one million new cases are reported each year.

PID is a serious matter. About one-fourth of all outbreaks are severe enough to warrant hospitalization, and about 150 women die of PID each year. PID causes half of the 60,000 annual cases of ectopic (tubal) pregnancies in the United States. Tubal pregnancies account for about ten percent of all pregnancy-related deaths, and its incidence has tripled since 1965. The primary cause of this increase in PID has been the increase of gonorrhea and chlamydia.[30]

In conclusion, the rate of infection with various venereal diseases is greater today than it ever has been in the United States. A large percentage of the blame for this explosion of diseases must be laid squarely on the doorstep of the inventors and peddlers of the birth control pill.

Rolling Stone Magazine had it right when it declared in a March 4, 1982 editorial that "Some wrathful deity is extracting revenge for our decade-long orgy."

Indirect Effect: Degradation of Marriage and Family. Anyone who alleges that the Pill has 'damaged the institution of marriage' is liable to be met with hoots of derision from knee-jerking "New Age" liberals and anti-lifers.

Perhaps we should look at the facts supporting this conclusion before dismissing it out of hand.

In 1965, before the Pill became widely available, about 15 percent of all couples lived together before marriage. The major reason for the relatively low incidence of this arrangement was simple: Living together meant more sex, and more sex meant a greater chance of a pregnancy in a nation where abortion was still illegal.

Today, many young unmarried women are on the Pill. They therefore have no reason not to fornicate freely and cohabit before marriage if they feel like it.

As a result, more than 40 percent of all couples in the United States now live together ("shack up") before marriage. Their usual alleged excuse: They want to make sure that they're "compatible." They don't want to rush into something that might not work and cause pain for everyone involved. They say that it's best to have a trial run first.

Just to make sure, you see.

Sound sensible?

Of course it does!

/s it sensible?

Of course not!

In 1989, James Bumpass, James Sweet, and Andrew Cherlin of the University of Wisconsin completed a long-term study to determine the effect of pre-nuptial cohabitation on marriage. Their findings showed that more than 75 percent of all couples who lived together before marriage eventually divorced. This is a rate of more than 50 percent greater than the general population![31]

Why is this?

There are two primary reasons;

1. People who 'shack up' generally have a loose and flexible morality (sure it sounds "judgmental," but think about it). True commitment and a willingness to 'work at it' are far more important to the success of a marriage than a self-serving "fling." Obviously, many of those who 'shack up' do not intend to get married initially, but kind of "fall into it."
2. Those who have 'shacked up' are naturally far more likely to commit adultery in marriage than those who haven't. This makes sense — adultery is, like premarital sex, a tangible result of lack of discipline and self-control. Many of those who get used to "serial monogamy" before marriage see no reason why they can't continue to practice it after marriage.

So it is obvious that the Pill has contributed greatly to our country's exploding divorce rate, which was about 18 percent in 1965 and now stands at about 50 percent. [32]

Unfortunately, the innocent children of divorced couples are always those who suffer the most. But the gender feminists and sexologists simply write them off as sort of "collateral damage," inevitable victims of the Sexual Revolution and the war against one's own sexuality. According to the 'sexperts,' there can be no impediment to the rush for self-gratification, self-indulgence, self-actualization, or self-destruction — not even children, regardless of whether they are born or preborn, and regardless of how much they will be hurt.

Implications for Pro-Life Activists. Millions of women in the USA and all over the world use oral contraceptives. Many women who would never even consider a surgical abortion now use low-dose oral contraceptive pills that cause them to abort a new life an average of once or twice every year. A large number of women who say that they are pro-life use these pills, many at the urging of their husbands. These are usually the women who are ignorant of the Pill's abortifacient mode of action, those who think that their way of life requires that they use the Pill, or those who cannot mentally make the connection between contraception and abortion.

'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC) plays upon this theme constantly. It conducts well-publicized 'surveys' that purport to show that 75% to 80% of all Catholic women are on the Pill. Knowing how little CFFC regards the truth, it is not surprising that this number is an exaggeration. Nevertheless, the actual figures are still distressingly high.

The 1988 National Survey of Family Growth, conducted by the National Center for Health Statistics, surveyed thousands of married Catholic couples of childbearing age and found that;

- 40 percent of Catholic women use the Pill;

- 16 percent of the women had been neutered;
- 9 percent of the men had been neutered;
- 8 percent use some other artificial method of conception regulation;
- 2 percent use some form of natural family planning; and
- the remaining 25 percent use no form of fertility control, because they are either naturally infertile or are attempting to get pregnant.[33]

Some researchers (using very conservative figures) have calculated that the oral contraceptive pill directly causes between 1.53 and 4.15 million chemical abortions per year in the United States — up to two and a half times the total number of surgical abortions committed every year![34]

This means that "pro-life" women who are using an oral contraceptive or some other means of abortifacient birth control are committing abortions themselves on a frequent basis. These abortions are "silent" and unseen, but they are no less abortions in the eyes of God than are gruesome third-trimester D&X abortions. There are many "pro-lifers" who are using these pills and who are involved in their promotion and distribution. These people must consider whether they can, in good conscience, criticize women whose action differs from their own only in that they have to drive to an abortion mill to commit it.

Facts of Life: Chapter 2: Abortifacients: (5) The RU-486 Abortion Pill--Part 2

 SHARE

Side Effects of the Abortion Pill on Women. There has been much dispute over when the RU-486 abortion pill begins to lose its killing power.

According to a September 29, 1989 New York Times article, "RU-486 starts losing effectiveness after six weeks of pregnancy." This, of course, is when most women are beginning to wonder if they are pregnant. In his March 1990 American Health interview, Baulieu confirmed that the drug's optimum use is "within three weeks of a missed period."

This means that women will inevitably take the drug as a "morning-after pill" or as a monthly insurance policy, and will therefore suffer enhanced and more severe side effects.

It is quite obvious, because of its very nature, that RU-486 will cause serious health problems for women. The "old" high-dosage birth control pills (described previously) caused a myriad of serious side effects, and those pills merely suppressed ovulation. It takes little imagination to conjure up visions of what the much more powerful RU-486 may do. All test reports written so far document severe bleeding, cramping, nausea, and vomiting.

Dr. Frank Young, head of the Food and Drug Administration, wrote in a June 9, 1989 letter to Rep. Robert Dornan (R.-Cal.) that RU-486 "... has potential side effects such as uterine bleeding, severe nausea, vomiting and weakness, which might require prompt medical intervention."

Just three days earlier, the FDA had issued an "import alert" that instructed its regional officers to seize any imported RU-486 pills not being used strictly for research purposes.[105]

It is also significant that the chemical composition of RU-486 is similar to DES (diethylstilbestrol), which caused reproductive system malformations and sterility in the female children of women who took it (giving rise to the term "DES daughters").

Of course, none of the reports written about the abortion pill mention the ultimate psychological trauma that they will cause. No longer will the abortionists be able to soothe women with gentle talk of "products of conception" that are ushered quickly and quietly out of their sight before they are even seen.

When a woman now cramps, bleeds, and delivers her tiny baby into her own hands, she will instantly know the truth. And the truth will hit her like a sledgehammer.

Pro-lifers consider it very significant that even most pro-abortion experts consider RU-486 much too dangerous for use without proper medical supervision.

In April of 1989, Roussel sent a letter to all French abortionists acknowledging the risks associated with RU-486. This directive instituted stricter controls and procedures regarding its use, and urged all abortionists to install cardiac resuscitation equipment in every one of the clinics where RU-486 is administered. These precautions were due to the fact that at least one woman had died of cardiac arrest immediately after taking the drug.[106]

The letter cited a 9.5% complication rate among the 33,000 women who had been aborted with the Pill. These effects included pelvic pain, weakness, nausea, vomiting, headache, and dizziness.[107]

A simultaneous Roussel release stated that the company had decided not to sell

RU-486 to the People's Republic of China because the country's "medical facilities are too primitive" and were "not equipped to distribute it safely." [108]

However, Eleanor Smeal, former president of the National Organization for Women (NOW), boldly displayed a blithe pro-abortion contempt for scientific evidence by proclaiming "our reading of the scientific data shows that there are essentially no side effects" related to RU-486. [109]

As Abraham Lincoln once said, "It's hard to see the truth through a gold eagle [a $20 coin]."

Baulieu has also said that the abortion pill provides "immense hope" for third-world women. These are the poor women who will inevitably fulfill their ignorant dual role as guinea pigs and profitable dumping grounds for contraceptives and abortifacients (such as the old high-dose birth control pills and many IUDs) that are considered simply too risky for use by women in the United States.

Side Effects of the Abortion Pill on Preborn Babies. The abortion pill's sole purpose is to kill preborn babies. According to Baulieu, the RU-486 pill proved 95.5% "effective" at destroying preborn babies during tests administered to 4,000 pregnant French women when given in tandem with prostaglandins.

However, the drug apparently has severe impacts on babies that it does not kill. Andre Ullman of Roussel's Medical Laboratories reported one instance where a woman had taken RU-486, had not aborted, and then changed her mind and wanted to keep the baby. She went into premature labor and delivered a severely deformed stillborn child at 6 month's gestation.

This is another reason that surgical abortion will not disappear from the medical scene if RU-486 becomes widely distributed. Assuming that two million RU-486 abortions take place every year in the United States, a 5% failure rate means that there will be thousands of poor little deformed preborn babies every year that will still have to be disposed of by the sharp knives of the abortionists.

RU-486 - A Miracle Cure? The pro-abortion forces that have worked to spread the RU-486 poison pill all over the world consistently use the old "bait and switch" tactic. They insist they are "pro-RU-486" - not because it is an abortifacient, but because it will allegedly cure a wide range of diseases. They insist that THAT is why they really want to bring it to the United States, and, of course, that is why no reasonable person would want to oppose it.

As one example, at a November 19, 1990 House subcommittee hearing, pro-abortionists cited a long list of ailments that could supposedly be cured or ameliorated by the abortion pill: AIDS, cancers of the breast and ovaries, Cushing's Syndrome, brain and prostate cancer, diabetes, osteoporosis, hypertension, and even obesity. Louise Tyrer, Vice-President of Medical Affairs for the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, asserted that "We must fight to ensure that scientific progress and the right to practice medicine in the best interest of our patients is not stifled by the ideological perspectives of a few who would force their moral views on the rest of the world." [110]

Note that RU-486 pushers never state categorically that their pill is useful for treating illnesses because no researcher has ever provided any evidence showing that RU-486 is useful for anything other than killing preborn babies. [111] So they play on people's emotions and load their sentences with disclaimers, like one study that stated "[research] suggests that RU-486 may have potential value in AIDS" (emphasis

... [research] suggests that RU-486 may have potential value in AIDS [emphasis added].[112]

Among many others, Canadian neurologist Paul Ranalli recognizes that the benefits of RU-486 are strictly speculative: "As an antiprogestin agent, RU-486 has properties that might offer theoretical value in Cushing's Disease (an adrenal disorder), meningioma (a largely benign brain tumor), and breast cancer, but despite some of the recent hype, studies to date have failed to show any benefit whatsoever in any of these conditions." [113]

These claims are so spurious, and the propaganda so transparent, that even some committed pro-abortionists are voicing their opposition to RU-486. For example, three women professors have extensively documented the dangers of RU-486 and the claims of efficacy against various diseases, and conclude that "These claims have an all-too-wondrous ring of promise subsequently turned peril." Their book, entitled RU 486: Misconceptions, Myths, and Morals, also describe how the abortion pill increases instead of decreases physician control and how it is dumped on Third World women. [114]

Pro-lifers must not be hoodwinked by the intense glare of publicity surrounding the abortion pill. Pro-abortionists obviously could not care less about the other alleged uses of the abortion pill, or else they would have been involved in fighting other diseases long ago. Their sole purpose in spreading RU-486 all over the world is to promote abortion by making baby-killing even more private and difficult to oppose than it is now.

What RU-486 Means to the Abortionists. Since evil people tend to remain mired in evil due to their spiritual inertia, abortionists will remain abortionists, and surgical abortions will still go on.

Pro-abortionists favor the abortion pill for several reasons;

(1) Abortionists' fees will not decrease, but may very well increase dramatically. Their charge for two or three office visits will be equal to or greater than the current cost of a surgical abortion.

(2) Of course, RU-486 will not actually decrease the number of surgical abortions, as the pro-abortionists promise. Many women will wait too long to use RU-486 in the false belief that it can be used much later than it actually can be used. And so, these women will resort to surgical abortion by the millions. Additionally, the Alan Guttmacher Institute has found that 43.3 percent of all women who get surgical abortions now use no method of contraception whatsoever. [115] Naturally, these women will also find RU-486 a simple and convenient pill to "pop" every month in order to remain sterile - especially if powerful pro-abortion groups and their allies can coerce the Federal and state governments to foot the entire cost of the Pill, as they most certainly will attempt to do.

(3) The pro-abortionists think that privacy for the abortionist and the aborter will be total. They say that it will be difficult or impossible for pro-life activists to discover who is prescribing the Pill. They claim that rescue missions, sidewalk counseling, and picketing will all be rendered useless, and so pro-lifers everywhere should just give up and go home. Of course, they are not stating the obvious: That abortion mills everywhere will simply continue to commit both surgical and chemical abortions. The 'players' will remain simply continue to commit both surgical and chemical abortions. The players will remain the same. Of course, doctors who do not do surgical abortions now will think that they are safe from discovery and can prescribe the abortion pill secretly; but pro-lifers will find out about them.

We always do.

(4) No longer will abortionists and their staffs have to endure the psychological trauma of seeing the dead babies that result from surgical abortion. The women will endure this trauma entirely by themselves as they deliver their tiny dead babies into their own hands at home.

The Media Beats the Drum. Marie Bass, former political director of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL), and Joanne Howes, former Planned Parenthood Federation of America chief Washington lobbyist, have assembled a five-fold media strategy to get the media to accept RU-486.

They formed an explicitly pro-abortion lobbying and propaganda organization entitled the "Reproductive Health Technology Project," whose purpose is to collect and distribute only favorable information on the abortion pill. Bass and Howes developed and disseminated a high-powered press kit that included sample charts and graphs and photos. Reporter Charles Durrant described these: "Those press kits were impressive. In fact, they were a lazy reporter's gold mine. Everything you needed for a really fantastic story - or a series of stories - was right there at your fingertips. I don't think I've ever seen anything like it."

The Five-Part Bass & Howes Strategy for Encouraging Media Acceptance of RU-486

- (1) "Emphasize the possibility that the drug could very well end the whole public abortion struggle by making clinic protests obsolete."
- (2) "Emphasize the dearth of other contraceptive options available - particularly in comparison with what is available in other parts of the world."
- (3) "Emphasize the issues of privacy, ease, safety, choice, and freedom, rather than of abortion and politics."
- (4) "Emphasize the possibility of other medical benefits of the drug, such as treatment of breast cancer and Cushings Syndrome."
- (5) "Emphasize the threat to the freedom of ongoing medical research that a rejection of the drug might bring."

Reference: This strategy is described in George Grant. "Media Bias and Abortion." Legacy, October 1991, page 1. Newsletter of Legacy Communications, Post Office Box 680365, Franklin, Tennessee 37068.

Given the deeply ingrained pro-abortion bias of the media, this set of instructions worked very well indeed. A survey of more than two hundred magazine and newspaper articles on RU-486 during the time period 1989-1990 showed that only 9 percent mentioned any of the Pill's numerous and serious complications or side effects; only 8 percent quoted any pro-life experts or sources; and a lopsided 96 percent cast the Pill in a "very favorable" light. Bass said that "Press coverage really is good, if you think about it - sometimes I worry that it's almost too good." [116]

Naturally, Hollywood jumped on the pro-death bandwagon, and many pro-abortion actresses began to shrilly push the RU-486 abortion pill as hard as they could. Cybill Shepherd said that "My daughters, indeed all American daughters, deserve the option to use RU-486, as it may develop into a new form of birth control." [117]

'Prestigious' Awards. Another tactic used by the pro-abortionists to advance a cause is to confer upon each other 'prestigious' awards. This deception looks good to the public eye until examined closely.

In September of 1989, Baulieu was named one of six recipients of the Albert Lasker Medical Research Award, which the September 28, 1989 New York Times labeled "one of the most prestigious" medical awards in existence. [118]

The real reason this award was made was soon revealed: Deeda Blair, a Lasker Foundation vice president, said in the November 1989 issue of Vanity Fair, "That's the purpose of giving awards: to call attention to an advance."

The Devil and his slaves never rest, so pro-lifers must remain eternally and relentlessly vigilant.

Birth Control = Abortion? The Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) trotted out yet another of its doctored public opinion polls which 'showed' that 59 percent of adults in the United States approve of RU-486. Predictably, in keeping with PP's standard deceptive tactics, it conveniently 'forgot' to mention in their poll how RU-486 works. PP merely described it as a safe, new type of birth control pill.

The final result of all of this pro-abortion deviousness, of course, will be that women will be genuinely damaged by the abortion pill because they think it is merely a safe contraceptive. Then, they will be left out in the cold because they will be unable to recover actual or punitive damages.

This decisively demonstrates just how much these companies (and the pro-aborts) really care about women.

RU-486's Uses. There is no question that a market for the Pill exists in the United States. In fact, a large quantity of RU-486 could be used in school-based sex clinics. In the December 22, 1986 edition of the Boston Globe, Dr. Allen Rosenfield, chairman of Planned Parenthood's board of directors, exulted that "RU-486 is a major step forward for teenagers ... If girls who suspect they are pregnant could come to a clinic for a pill when their period is late, they would probably show up a lot earlier than they do now. Most current restrictions, such as parental notification laws, would be unenforceable." [119]

This quote shows that your school-aged daughters are the most accessible and obvious targets for these killing pills. Teenagers are easily intimidated by medical authority and will be easy prey for the sex clinic strategists, who have already stated that they intend to ignore parental consent or notification laws (see Chapter 17 for detailed information on how school-based clinic leaders deliberately plot to freeze parents out of their children's decisionmaking processes).

Is This the End for the Pro-Life Movement? The abortion pill's chemical composition is rather simple, and therefore would be relatively easy for any well-equipped private laboratory to reproduce. Free of quality control, these private labs may churn out pills of dubious quality that may have even more profound side effects upon women than RU-486 - and this is bound to happen whether or not the United States legalizes the abortion pill.

Therefore, within a few years, pro-lifers will be fighting the wide distribution of some form of abortion pill, whether or not the Pill is legalized.

Faye Wattleton, former director of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, once again publicly flaunted her profound ignorance of the pro-life movement and its philosophy as she said "The right-to-lifers are fighting the last gasp. If these drugs get to the market, it is really all over."

Wattleton is wrong, of course. Pro-life activists will continue to fight for the lives of the preborn. Every type of death pill is so dangerous that they all require at least four doctor-supervised visits. Our current abortion mills will simply 're-tool' in order to administer the pills. Pro-lifers will continue to rescue, picket, and sidewalk counsel at these death camps, and will probably reach even more women, since twice as many visits are required than for a surgical abortion.

And so, the situation (and the players) will remain exactly the same.

And, of course, the eternal moral battle will continue until the end of time.

The Bitter Fruits of Abortion

Presented to the "State, Life, Family" Conference, Kiev, Ukraine

Introduction

Back in the late 1960s in the United States, pro-abortion groups promised us that the rewards would be great if we legalized abortion. A group called NARAL promised us that "Legal abortion will decrease the number of unwanted children, child abuse cases, and possibly subsequent delinquency, drug addiction, and a host of social ills believed to be associated with neglectful parenthood."¹

This is how the Devil works: He promises us everything, then betrays us. No wonder he is called "a liar and the father of lies."

A few prophetic people, like Father Paul Marx, the founder of Human Life International, realized that the pro-abortionists were lying. But even Father Marx could not have seen just how bad things would really get after abortion was legalized;

- Several abortionists in the United States specialize in killing unborn babies right up until the moment of birth with a hideous procedure called dilation and extraction, or 'partial-birth abortion.' The abortionist delivers the baby feet first, all but the head. Then he uses a special tool to break a hole in the baby's head and sucks the brains out. Most of these babies and their mothers are perfectly healthy, and almost all of the babies would be perfectly normal if they traveled just three more inches down the birth canal.
- Many doctors say that, since abortion is legal right up till the moment of birth, that it should be legal after birth as well. If a mother changes her mind and does not want to have the baby after it is born, these doctors let the child starve to death, or kill it outright. They call this "fourth-trimester abortion" or "a second chance at choice." More than a dozen abortionists have been charged with killing newborn babies. We suspect that thousands each year are simply left to die.
- Hundreds of women have died of so-called "safe and legal" abortion in the United States. Most of these deaths were avoidable, since the worst doctors in the profession seem to become abortionists because they cannot get work anywhere else in the medical field. In one case, abortionist Alicia Hanna Ruiz killed a mother of four, then tried to stuff her dead body in the trunk of her car right in front of two of her children. In another case, abortionist David Benjamin punctured the uterus of a mother of four and then just walked away, allowing her to bleed to death. Both abortionists were convicted of murder.
- More than four out of five abortions in the United States are performed on single women. Abortion has become a fast and easy "eraser of mistakes" for women who have sex before marriage. But they are often victims, as well as their unborn babies, because their boyfriends now expect them to abort if they get pregnant, and get violent with them if they do not. At Human Life International, we have documented more than fifty cases of boyfriends murdering their girlfriends because they would not get abortions. And, since the pregnancy of the girlfriend is usually not reported when newspapers write about these crimes, we can estimate that at least one hundred boyfriends kill their pregnant girlfriends each year because they would not get abortions. In one particularly horrible case, a boyfriend lured his 15-year-old pregnant girlfriend into a forest, killed her by jamming a branch down her throat so hard it tore her tongue out, and then crushed her skull with a 15-kilogram rock.

- Abortion has destroyed millions of marriages and engagements in the United States. I have seen husbands standing around outside abortion clinics with sad looks on their faces. When I ask them why they do not do anything to protect their own child, they just shrug and say "What can I do? Abortion is a woman's right and I can't interfere." Studies have shown that a great majority of marriages and pre-marital friendships break up within two months after an abortion.
- And, of course, the psychological impact on women is huge. It has to be when one commits such a profoundly unnatural act. Any priest can tell you about women confessing their abortions from 10, 20, 30, even fifty years previously. Their dead children will just not let them rest. My mother Pamela died in July 1991. On the last day of her life, she confessed to my wife Kathy that she had had an abortion forty years earlier, in 1951. She felt compelled to tell someone about this event after all those years. Significantly, she never told my brother or I that she had aborted our older brother or sister.

We are all pro-life here. We are aware of the terrible effects abortion has on the family, on the fathers, on other children, and most of all on aborting women themselves. But we often lose sight of the wider effects of abortion, of contraception and sterilization, and of the Culture of Death itself. This "anti-life mentality" does not only affect individuals and families; it has terrible effects on ethnic groups, on nations, and even on entire continents.

What I am here to talk to you about today is about the more sweeping, large-scale impacts of abortion.

The Demographic Fruits.

Introduction. The most profound impacts of the Culture of Death indirectly affect everyone on earth. But almost nobody thinks about demographics, or the characteristics of a nation's population, because these effects take place so slowly.

The direct cause of abortion is the separation of sex from procreation. Nowhere is this more obvious than in Europe, which has been in the grip of the anti-life mentality since World War I.

There are many demographic impacts caused by the Culture of Death in general and by abortion and contraception in particular. In Europe, these effects are;

- a declining population
- decreasing support ratios
- collapse of the family
- the influx of Islam
- declining economic power

Plunging Populations

Demographers use a very important term called the total fertility rate (TFR), which is the average number of babies each woman has during her lifetime. In order for a developed nation to replace its population, its TFR must be about 2.2.

Not one of Europe's 39 countries is currently replacing its population. Sixteen of the lowest twenty TFRs in the world belong to European nations, and the highest European TFR is Albania's 2.03, still well below replacement. Europe's average TFR is now 1.35, which means that Europe's population is about to plunge.

There are currently eighteen countries in the world whose population is actually declining. Fifteen of these are in Europe. In fact, Europe is the only continent whose total population is now declining. Historically, this has only happened during famine, epidemic or war. This is the first time in the history of the world that an entire continent's population is declining due to people simply not having any more babies, for no more pressing reason than they do not want them any more.

The only European country with laws that fully protect preborn children or allow for only a "life of the mother" exception is tiny Malta, home to just 1/20 of one percent of Europe's population. Even Ireland's strong traditional protection of preborn children is eroding rapidly, with ten thousand Irish women and girls travelling legally into England for abortions every year.

Support Ratios

The nations of Europe are already feeling the profound demographic effects of their longtime anti-life policies. These include rapidly dropping support ratios.

The support ratio is the number of working people (aged 20-64) supporting each retiree (assumed to be 65 years old and older). In the year 2000, the European support ratio was 4.1. In other words, slightly more than four workers were supporting each retiree. This ratio will shrink to about 1.7 by the year 2050, collapsing national social security systems and retirement plans and leading to a huge push for cost-cutting in the health care area. This will obviously also lead to a sustained push for euthanasia. We have already seen this in the Netherlands, the first nation to legalize euthanasia. Keep in mind that the Netherlands is one of the youngest nations in Europe.

Collapsing Families

In Europe, the Culture of Death has successfully undermined its two great enemies: Faith and family. There has been a huge increase in the number of divorces (from 125,000 in 1960 to about 750,000 in 2001); births to unwed mothers (4.5 percent of all births in 1960 to about 25 percent in 2001); unemployment (from five million in 1977 to more than 15 million in 2001); and a huge increase in abortions, from about 250,000 in 1960 to more than a million annually today among the EC12 countries alone.²

Europe and Islam

The United Nations estimates that there will be an influx of about 50 million Muslims by the year 2025, mainly from North Africa. Because they are generally a very religious people, Muslims tend to integrate poorly with secular European society, a situation causing great tension and conflict that will only worsen in the future.³

Muslims, who are generally very pro-life, know that they can conquer the world, if not with the sword, then with patience and with their children. As Atifa Dawat, an Iranian delegate to the July 1985 conference entitled "Forum '85," in Nairobi, Kenya, stated, "The more children we have, the better. When there are enough Muslims in the world, then we will have world victory."⁴ If 'Christians' continue to selfishly abort their children while Muslims continue to have large families, then Islam truly deserves its "world victory."

In Germany, rioting has broken out in response to the incoming flood of foreign workers (gastarbeitern, or "guest workers") who are needed in order to make up for the fifteen million Germans who have been aborted over the past thirty years. As expected, the world media has painted this as a "right-wing backlash," with a "small minority of Nazis" causing nationwide disruption. Common sense reveals the truth: Germany is caught in an impossible situation. It must become an ethnic melting-pot with great speed in order to survive, and almost all Germans, regardless of age, resent the influx of foreigners, which has caused their taxes to more than double since 1980.

European countries that have been victims of permissive abortion for even longer periods than the United States are feeling ethnic impacts right now. In Paris, the largest city in the nation known as the "eldest daughter of the Church," there are now more mosques than there are Catholic churches!

As The Wall Street Journal observes;

Fewer Europeans are practicing Catholics than ever and the size of nominally Christian families in Europe has been shrinking for decades. By contrast, many Muslim immigrants are enthusiastic practitioners of their faith and often have more children than the European average. The Muslim population in Europe has doubled in the last decade, according to United Nations estimates. There are now more Muslims in Italy than Jews or Protestants. The first mosque in Rome opened in 1995 and perhaps 100 have opened on the Italian peninsula since 1989. Islam is now the number two religion in France; Muslims edged out Protestants several years ago. There may be as many as five million practicing French Muslims today, a number roughly equivalent to the number of practicing French Catholics ...5

This state of affairs is a direct result of falling Europe birthrates; the last year "native" Europeans replaced themselves was 1973, and since then, there has been a shortfall of tens of millions of births required to replace the population.⁶ Until now, massive immigration has made up for the shortage of babies. But now the population of Europe, despite this immigration, is declining for the first time since the Black Death of 1347-1351.

Loss of Economic Power

According to the United Nations definition, there are 39 nations in Europe with a population of greater than 100,000 in the year 2000. The UN has projected the average age of the people in each nation of the world by 2050.

By 2050, fifteen of the twenty oldest nations on earth will be European. Thirty-four of the oldest fifty will be European. By 2050, Europe will be by far the oldest nation on earth.

This table shows the average age of people by continent in 2050;

Europe	52.3 years
Latin America	46.6 years
North America	45.1 years
Asia	45.1 years

Oceania	44.7 years
Africa	30.7 years
World	42.5 years

Twelve European nations -- including Ukraine -- will have an average age of more than 50 years. The youngest nation in Europe will be Albania, with an average age of 42 years. By comparison, the average age of Nigerians will be 20 in 2050. Liberians will enjoy an average age of 23, and Somalians will average 22 years of age.

In Ukraine, 40 percent of the people will be aged 60 and over, and only 14 percent will be children under 15, compared with 27 percent children and 10 percent over 60 in Nigeria. The United Nations has also predicted that 43 nations will actually decline in population by 2050. Two-thirds of these (29) are European nations.

Europe is currently losing about a million people a year, and this trend is accelerating fast. If we use the historically more accurate low variant, the United Nations predicts that the European population will collapse from its current 725 million to 565 million by the year 2050 -- a loss of 22 percent. And this accounts for massive immigration from the South.

The fact that the European population is both aging and getting smaller does not bode well for European economic power in the future. We all know that the future belongs to the young; and this does not just refer to our children, it refers to entire nations and continents as well.

As we have already said, by the year 2050 the European population will be rapidly shrinking. It will be about 565 million. By comparison, the population of the United States will be about 355 million. In 2050, the average European will be 52 years old. The average American will only be 45. With its vast storehouses of technology and natural resources, the United States will be much better positioned to lead the world economy than the European Union. But here is another strange demographic effect: By 2050, more Americans will speak Spanish than English, because English-speaking Americans are dying out and Hispanics are having large families!

But where will the real power be in half a century?

Probably not in North America or in Europe.

In Africa!

This continent has already begun to exploit vast natural resources that may dwarf the combined assets of both the European Union and the United States. And Africa will have the people to capitalize on its natural wealth. By 2050, the population of Africa will have nearly doubled to 1.515 billion. And the average age of Africans will be only 31, fourteen years younger than any other continent.

If African nations can overcome AIDS and official corruption, there will be no stopping Africa from dominating the world's economy and moral values for decades to come. In the United States, we already see this effect with the large numbers of African priests coming to our parishes. Father Boniface Osuji from Nigeria once told me that African priests see the United States as mission territory, since so few people go to church there.

Trying to Stop the Dying Process

At least a dozen European countries have recognized the danger posed by plunging birthrates, and have tried to reverse the process, but with little success. History shows us that once the people of a nation are conditioned to believe they should live for themselves and that children are a burden, it is virtually impossible to persuade them otherwise.

As one example, European population alarmists have been exaggerating the high cost of raising children for decades in their campaign to get people to have smaller children. When the terrible demographic effects of too few babies become obvious, the governments try to reverse the thinking of the people, but with little effect. The people remember only that babies are messy, noisy and expensive.

This is why the La France a besoin des enfants! [France needs babies!] campaign failed.⁷ And this is why, when the German State of Brandenburg offered to pay its citizens US $650 to have a child, there was not even the slightest change in the birth rate. People were insulted that the government had told them for years that raising a child cost more than $300,000, then turned around and offered them just $650 to have babies. No wonder Wolfgang Jahmer, director of a social welfare program in Schwerin, Germany, said that "We have some fears that the tree of life may be falling."⁸

Germany's culture is extremely top-heavy with elderly people, and visiting American pro-lifers have noted the common sight of dogs being dressed up in expensive clothes and even being wheeled about in baby carriages!⁹

The only answer to this situation is for pro-life activists to convert the hearts and minds of the people one by one. This will take as long to do as the population controllers took to destroy the European's love of children. We are talking about a process that will take at least a generation. The conversion of hearts is our greatest mission. If the current generation refuses to have children, and if nothing changes their minds, then we must evangelize their children.

Conclusion

Now that I have thoroughly depressed you, I do not want anyone here to go out and commit suicide. There are too few Europeans as it is.

So now I will give you the good news.

The future belongs to the people who have babies.

Nations -- and now even entire continents -- are dying. Ethnic groups are simply disappearing. But we see signs of hope everywhere in the world today;

- Since the current Pope took office in 1978, there has been a 64 percent increase in the number of seminarians worldwide. And groups like Human Life International and Priests for Life are doing their best to reach these young men with pro-life materials and instruction.
- In the United States, pro-abortion families are dying out because they average only about one child. Pro-life families are flourishing because they average between three and four children each. Public opinion polls show that Americans are becoming more pro-life by about one percent per year. Within the next ten years, you are going to see huge changes in our pro-abortion law, which is one of the worst in the world. We are beginning to destroy pro-abortionism at its roots in the United States and we are beginning to destroy pro-abortionism at its roots in the United States, and we think the same will begin to happen in Europe soon. The evil weed of anti-life thinking cannot be killed from the top down; it will die from the roots up. How can the Culture of Death win? It contains the seeds of its own sterile destruction.

- Even in nations that have had abortion for almost a century, the people are recognizing the terrible effects and are rising up against it. In Russia, the young pro-life movement is making strong advances, giving the people a message they have never heard before. And in South Africa, the nation with the world's worst abortion law, pro-lifers are defying the repressive regime and are speaking out in greater and greater numbers.
- Finally, and most importantly, we were made to fight -- to fight for Faith, for life, for family, for country -- to fight for the values that dignify humanity, that care for the least and most helpless among us, that lead to true liberty and freedom. There can be no higher calling. We should be sincerely grateful to God for this matchless opportunity to serve Him! Our Lord told us to "Go forth and make disciples of all nations" [Matthew 28:19], and there is no better way to achieve this than by saving lives and souls in the pro-life movement. And our reward will be great, but only if we fight on until the end: "... and you will be hated by all nations for My Name's sake. And then many will fall away, and betray one another, and hate one another. And many false prophets will arise and lead many astray. And because wickedness is multiplied, most men's love will grow cold. But he who endures to the end will be saved" [Matthew 24:9-13].

We have to fight with all our might, but do not worry too much if you lose and lose again. Nothing tempers a soul like the pro-life movement, where we are taught to endure and have faith. If ever you get discouraged, just remember the words of 1 Corinthians 15:58: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that in the Lord your labor is not in vain."

Women: Between Abortion, Cloning and Prostitution Another Battle at the UN

By Marie and Joseph Meaney

The United Nations made a highly significant pro-life move on March 8, 2005. This will come as a surprise to many HLI Special Reports readers who have seen numerous accounts of the different anti-life activities by UN agencies and at UN meetings in the past decades. The United Nations Declaration on Human Cloning calls on all member states to "prohibit all forms of human cloning inasmuch as they are incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life."

The UN General Assembly approved the measure by a vote of 84 countries in favor vs. 34 against. In a typical example of UN inefficiency, at least five nations who had expressed their desire to vote for the ban did not manage to arrive on time to vote; despite our best efforts to mobilize their participation, 37 others chose to abstain even though many were in favor of the ban on cloning. We, my wife Marie and I, were privileged to be at the UN headquarters in New York doing pro-life work for HLI from February 28th to March 11th during which the historic vote took place. We were accompanied by several HLI delegates from Latin America led by Julia Regina de Cardenal, director of the HLI affiliate in El Salvador. The UN declaration concluded four years of hard work by pro-lifers and especially by the government of Costa Rica to have a universal call to ban human cloning. It is also important to note that the Bush administration solidly backed the measure, and many believed a Kerry administration would have managed to kill it.

A near total media blackout surrounded this UN- declaration, one of the most important since its founding. The main reason was a liberal bias in the press favoring a very different kind of ban. Some European Union nations and others, intent upon defending the interests of their bio-tech industry, pushed until the very end for a human cloning ban which only covered reproductive cloning and allowed for "therapeutic cloning." What they call "therapeutic" is the creation of human embryos through cloning for the purpose of harvesting their stem cells or organs resulting in the child's death in a shocking kind of scientific cannibalism. The developing nations also insisted that language be included to protect women from being used as "human egg farms" for the millions of ova that would be needed to do "therapeutic" cloning on a massive scale.

This all occurred during the sessions of Beijing +10, the ten year review conference following the 1995 UN Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing, China. At that time the Clinton administration, with Hilary Clinton personally leading the charge, had pushed strongly for an international woman's "right to abortion". The Holy See, other countries and pro-life non-governmental organizations (NGOs) courageously fought and prevented this from happening. Nonetheless, the "Beijing Platform for Action" document has been used by radical groups to argue for just such a "right."

How times have changed! Pro-lifers and the Bush administration now insisted on an explicit clarification that the Beijing document does not include a "right to abortion."

Heretofore the American delegation under ambassador Ellen Sauerbrey proposed an amendment to the official Beijing +10 Declaration, stating that: "they [the original Platform for Action and the new Declaration] do not create any new international human rights and that they do not include the right to abortion." This continues the positive trend of the pro-life side going on the offensive rather than only fighting defensive battles as in the past.

For one week, liberal countries such as the European Union (EU), New Zealand, Canada, Australia, South-Africa as well as radical NGOs fought the US-proposed amendment while HLI and the pro-life coalition supported the inclusion of the unambiguous pro-life statement. The tactics the other side used turned against them, however, for they kept repeating that the original Beijing-document does not include the "right to abortion" and that it was therefore unnecessary to put this in writing. They never explained why they were so adamant about preventing the pro-life language from entering the document, if it was redundant. Instead, they accused the US of blocking progress and further discussions, whereas this was precisely what they were doing. In the mean time we were lobbying aggressively to support the US-proposed pro-life amendments and had to admire their firm and principled stance. Though the amendment was ultimately not accepted, it ended with a positive outcome for the pro-life side, since liberal countries and radical NGOs were forced to make reiterated statements re-affirming that abortion is not included as a human right.

It takes a special kind of patience to do pro-life work at UN meetings. The proceedings can go on almost endlessly over major or minute points of difference in the wording of declarations and treaties. Marie and I monitored the sessions and discussed with country delegates the pro-life merits of the language being discussed day after day. Crucial meetings are often closed to NGO delegates, however, and so the pro-life representatives must speak with international ministers and ambassadors in the hallways and corridors in various languages. Despite the frustrations and exhausting work associated with these meetings, they can bear fruit in unexpected ways. Marie and I first met as young pro-life delegates to the Second UN World Conference on Human Settlements in Istanbul, Turkey in 1996 and we married in 2000. Whereas our group of five college students was a rarity among the professional pro-lifers then, one now finds dozens of students from places like the Franciscan University of Steubenville and Regina Apostolorum in Rome who come to volunteer and enthusiastically support the pro-life cause.

The UN attracts the most varied kinds of birds. We saw several individuals whose gender was not easily discernable. The "Youth for Women's Rights Caucus" passed around a flier at the end of the conference, demanding abortion, contraception, comprehensive sex-education and that the UN "recognize and protect the right to sexual pleasure and to enjoy our sexuality free of shame, guilt, violence and coercion." The Journal of Catholics for a Free Choice (CFFC), inappropriately named "Conscience", was distributed, featuring an article on the pro-life situation in Lithuania attacking HLI and Father Tom Euteneuer for promoting an "extreme conservative Catholic position." They recognize HLI is a major opponent to their agenda of contraception, abortion and sex-education. On the other end of the spectrum, there were several Franciscan Friars of the Renewal standing out in their grey habits and bringing back some sanity to this Tower of Babel. One sometimes gets the feeling at UN-headquarters that one is walking around an airport terminal all day long without ever going anywhere.

However, great progress was made on the issue of human trafficking and prostitution. The US proposed a resolution against international sex trafficking, since this is one of the most common and terrible forms of women's exploitation around the world. The Bush administration has made this a top priority, and at face value it would seem that a conference on women's rights would enthusiastically embrace this initiative. Some nations, with New Zealand and the EU in the lead, rejected any reference to prostitution or sexual exploitation, preferring a more vague reference to exploitation in general. The motivation seemed to be liberal laws and attitudes in these countries in favor of legalized prostitution. A shocking statistic circulating at the conference was that 5 % of the Dutch economy comes from their sex-industry, and the money has increased by 25% over the last decade. Their lame argument that legalizing prostitution prevents trafficking is proven wrong by the fact that 70% of their prostitutes are from Central and Eastern Europe. The American proposal focused on punishing the traffickers and clients rather than prosecuting the many enslaved prostitutes - a model that has worked well in the otherwise liberal country of Sweden. The resolution was in danger of being blocked, but thanks to the aggressive lobbying by our pro-life coalition passed and was even co-sponsored by 50 countries. The distribution of a flier entitled "Pimps and Panderers: Governments block consensus on resolution to protect women from sexual exploitation" made a great impact, shaming the liberal nations into relenting in their public opposition. HLI has long seen the significance of the issue and has contributed to the rehabilitation of former prostitutes all over the world.

HLI-supporters should take pride in the ground gained through the pro-life work at the UN since the 1990s. Such concrete measures as the UN ban on cloning and the Doha Declaration passed by the UN General Assembly in December 2004 defining marriage as the union of a husband and a wife and recognizing the fundamental importance of the family to society have all become official UN pronouncements. The feminist-inspired daily newspaper at Beijing +10 reported the event was "a reality check" and a disappointment for the activists who saw it as "Beijing Betrayed". Our HLI group and all the pro-lifers left encouraged and inspired to continue, since most of the nations of the world are clearly pro-life and need our support to prevent a small group of countries from imposing their radical anti-life agenda on the world. Many HLI-leaders actively followed the events and supported us in their respective countries during the UN-conference for which we are very grateful. This is the time to press forward.

SEMINARIANS FOR LIFE INTERNATIONALTM FACT SHEET - AIDS and the Big Lie About Condoms

By Joseph Meaney

HLI Director of International Coordination

The issue of condoms has become ideologically charged in recent years. A good example of this is the August 2004 statement by Timothy Wirth, president of Ted Turner's United Nations Foundation. Mr. Wirth states, "The United States and others have started questioning the efficacy of condoms. To condemn women by indifference to science and by failure to provide tools for their own protection may not meet the technical definition of crimes against humanity, but it is certainly gross negligence toward humanity." In point of fact, he and all others who promote condoms are the ones who will face the verdict of history as having done a grave wrong to humanity.

It is an undeniable fact that AIDS cannot be transmitted sexually if a person remains chaste before marriage, marries a virgin, and stays monogamous during marriage. All reasonable scientists must admit this fact. It is clear that those who follow the Church's teaching on sexual morality have almost no chance of getting sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS. Promoters of condoms and "Safe Sex" are nonetheless desperate to find some way to prevent these diseases, while also permitting sexual promiscuity to continue on a vast scale.

Clearly, no one would be comfortable promoting an airline that had major safety failures on 10 percent of its flights resulting in the death of passengers. Condoms, however, have a far worse protection record against such fatal diseases as AIDS. Msgr. Jacques Suaudeau, a medical doctor and official of the Pontifical Academy for Life, has written an excellent article on why the condom is unacceptable on scientific and moral grounds. He cites studies showing that condoms have failure rates in preventing pregnancy, averaging 15 percent. This failure rate is scary considering the human sperm is much larger than the HIV virus. Further, researchers R. Gordon and S.C. Weller found condom failure rates as high as 23 and 31 percent respectively. It is a tragedy that many AIDS prevention programs today provide a false sense of security to those most vulnerable.

When reasonable people advocate the Church's age-old message of chastity, the immediate rejoinder from the condom promoters is that such ideas are completely unrealistic and old-fashioned. Condom promoters combine a radical contempt for human self-control with a lack of elementary psychological insight. People can control their free will. Vigorously promoting chastity has shown concrete positive results. Uganda is an example of this. The Ugandan government reduced AIDS prevalence rates greatly by heavily campaigning for abstinence and fidelity. In the United States, also, we have seen lower rates of teenage promiscuity and pregnancy due to abstinence education.

The condom is an immoral and scientifically flawed instrument. The failure rate of condoms is such that not even a rational pagan should find them acceptable. We must continue to proclaim the truth that only chastity and fidelity can be successful in the fight against AIDS.

The Case Against Condoms

The Scientific and Moral Basis for the Teaching of the Catholic Church on Preventing the Spread of Disease

You will learn the full truth about condoms and the beauty of the Catholic Church's unchanging response to an escalating culture of death. Be able to step up to the plate to boldly proclaim the unequivocal truth about

- the scientific and proven ineffectiveness of condoms or so-called "safe sex" to fight the AIDS pandemic;
- the lies of the condom-mania propaganda;
- the unchanging immorality of condoms or "safe sex" to stem the tide of AIDS;
- the marvelous plan of God for human sexuality, as the answer to the AIDS/STD pandemic.

Through a comprehensive 2-pronged approach, you will find the scientific and moral truth concerning the world's serious health crisis - the ramifications of today's hedonistic lifestyles. Once you read the well-researched information, you will be able to put to rest any lingering doubts about "safe sex" propaganda. You will begin to appreciate that it is the truth of Jesus Christ, as taught through the Magisterium of the Catholic Church, that indeed has "the words of life" for a dying world.

Case Against Condoms: Death by Latex

By Brian Clowes, PhD

Director of Research Worldwide

Human Life International

WARNING: In order to completely and accurately describe the subject matter, this document contains explicit information about human sexuality which is not appropriate for minors or for persons who are morally vulnerable to such material.

Introduction: Basic Concepts.

The Underlying Problem. It is common knowledge among health professionals that sexually-transmitted diseases (STDs), some of which are incurable and/or fatal, have found fertile ground to multiply in societies that permit and even celebrate all forms of permissive sex. Unfortunately, most people, for fear of appearing "backwards" or "repressive," treat this glaringly obvious fact like a basilisk -- they dare not look at it or even speak about it.

The response of most 'developed' world governments at every level, and the reaction of various social service agencies to this explosion of STDs, was as predictable as it was pitiful: They took the inherently Humanistic position that Americans (not just teenagers) are mere animals. Since they can't be trusted to control their sexual urges, we might as well make it as safe for them as possible to have sex with whomever they please.

The government's weapons of choice were not chastity and monogamy, but 'education' and condoms. Even Bill Clinton's Surgeon General, Joycelyn Elders, sported a "rubber tree" on her desk -- festooned, of course, with condoms.

And so, with intriguing names like "Arouse," "Embrace," "Excita," and "Pleaser," condoms crowd pharmacy shelves and restroom walls, leering at potential users and proclaiming the merits of "family planning" and "safe sex" on their vividly-colored packages.

Unfortunately, members of the public uncritically accept the government, and the condom manufacturers, at their word. And nobody (except a few pro-lifers, who are universally ignored) seems to be asking the most vital question of all.

If condoms are so effective at preventing pregnancy and AIDS transmission, why do nations that stress their use continue to experience a rapidly-escalating rate of teen pregnancy and an exploding AIDS epidemic?

Due to the highly charged aspects of the issues related to contraception (i.e., school-based clinics, the teen pregnancy "epidemic," and the spread of AIDS), there is much conflicting information on the effectiveness of the most commonly-used nonpermanent true contraceptive method in the world, the male condom, at preventing pregnancy, AIDS, and sexually transmitted diseases.

In order to conduct an intelligent conversation on this topic, we must first review a few basic facts.

Types of Condoms. Three types of male condoms are commonly available today;

- (1) By far the most commonly used condoms are made from natural rubber latex. These are the most effective at preventing pregnancy and STDs, and make up about 97 percent of all condom sales in the United States.
- (2) A small number of condoms are made from the intestinal caecum of lambs, and are called "natural skin," "natural membrane" or "lambskin" condoms. Experts generally agree that skin condoms are not effective as latex condoms at preventing AIDS and STDs.
- (3) A third type, generally becoming more available, are the condoms made from synthetic materials including polyurethane. These are more resistant to deterioration than latex condoms and are generally believed to provide a similar level of protection against pregnancy and STDs [1].

Definition of Terms. The book Contraceptive Technology is the most authoritative source of information on all methods of birth control in the world today. This two-inch thick book is often referred to as the "family planner's bible," and is revised every few years in order to include updated information. The latest edition was published in 2004, and it is considered by family planners to be the "last word" on all matters contraceptive.

Family planners use four terms when referring to the failure rate of a contraceptive or abortifacient method;

- (1) The "efficacy" of a birth control method refers to the protection its users receive under ideal conditions.
- (2) The "effectiveness" of a method refers to the protection its users receive under actual conditions of use, and includes user error.
- (3) The "method failure rate" refers to malfunctions of the method itself when a couple use it perfectly. For condoms, the method failure rate is two percent. This does not mean that two percent of condom uses will result in pregnancy. It means that, if there are one hundred couples that use a condom perfectly over an entire year of use, only two will experience pregnancy. Since the average couple in the United States has sexual intercourse 83 times a year, this means that, among one hundred perfect method users, there will be two pregnancies for every 8,300 uses of the condom.
- (4) The "user failure rate" reflects not perfect use, but typical use, and includes all user errors. According to Contraceptive Technology, 15 of 100 typical condom-using couples will experience pregnancy within the first year of use.[2]

The basic problem is as follows. No matter how much 'safe(r) sex' education is taught, no matter how many bowls of free condoms are left in plain view, and no matter how much contraceptive marketing is propagated. there are a number of mechanical and human factors that simply cannot be controlled [3];

- Condoms break and slip off;
- They age. One study found that the breakage rate for condoms increased from 3.6% for new condoms to as high as 18.6% for condoms several years old.[4]
- They deteriorate in even the best of conditions, but even more rapidly in extremely cold or hot situations. Condom wrappers recommend storing the product at temperatures between 59 and 88 degrees Fahrenheit. One researcher found that, at major condom distribution points in New Jersey and New York, boxes of condoms were left outdoors in the ice and snow during the dead of winter. During the summer months, the researcher took photographs of eggs frying on the floors of dozens of trucks and containers where condoms were stored in temperatures exceeding 180 degrees.[5] High temperatures cause oxidation and freezing temperatures cause crystallization in some of the chemical compounds that make up condoms, leading to cracking, drying, shrinking and drastic loss of flexibility and strength. Keep in mind that condoms exported from the United States sit in uninsulated shipping containers in extreme weather conditions for even longer periods of time;
- If taken out of the package and left unused for a long period of time, they are liable to ozone deterioration, which causes damage invisible to the eye;
- Improper use of oil-based lubricants can degrade them;
- They get broken in their packages;
- They have allowed rates of manufacturing defects. The present acceptable quality limit (AQL) for North American condom manufacturers is 99.6% of condoms free of leaks. The British AQL is 97%, and the Dutch AQL is 96.5%;
- The users are caught up in passion and do not properly follow the ten- to sixteen-step process for safe usage [6];
- The users are compromised by the use of alcohol, marijuana, illegal drugs, prescription and over-the-counter drugs, or exhaustion; and
- Bodily secretions can get around and over a condom even if it performs perfectly.

The Primary Danger -- Not Pores, But Catastrophic Failure.

"Counting on condoms is flirting with death."

-- Dr. Helen Singer-Kaplan, founder of the Human Sexuality Program at the New York Weill Cornell Medical Center, Cornell University.[7]

Overview. Although latex condoms appear to occasionally be permeable to the AIDS virus, by far the greatest danger of infection lies in their propensity to burst, tear and slip off.

Even if only a few HIV viruses did pass through a porous condom, the risk of infection would still be extremely small; but in those cases where condoms fail catastrophically, massive exposure to the HIV virus is inevitable. In cases of failure during intercourse with an HIV-infected person, there is the distinct possibility of a protracted and extremely unpleasant death.

The Studies The frequency of condom breakage depends upon many factors

The Studies. The frequency of condom breakage depends upon many factors, including the type of lubricant used and the brand of condom. Contraceptive Technology tallied the results of fifteen studies involving a total of 25,184 condoms used during heterosexual intercourse and found that 4.64 percent of all of the condoms broke and 3.44 percent of them partially or completely slipped off, for a total of 8.08 percent, or about one in twelve.[8]

Summary of Studies

Average breakage rate of all condoms: $1,168/25,184 = 4.64\%$

Average slippage rate of all condoms: $636/18,495 = 3.44\%$

Total failure rate of all condoms: 8.08%

According to Contraceptive Technology, the condom's user effectiveness rate is 85 percent [9]. This means that, under real-world conditions, a woman whose sexual partners use condoms for every act of sexual intercourse has a 15 percent chance of becoming pregnant in a year.

Keep in mind that these are the lowest rates that can generally be expected, since they assume 100% condom usage.

According to United States Census Bureau sources, about 6.8 million couples use condoms as their primary means of contraception in the USA.[11] 15 percent of this number means that about one million unwanted pregnancies occur every year due to condoms breaking, a number equivalent to half of the unintended pregnancies in the United States annually!

This experience is mirrored in many other surveys of people who use condoms under real-world conditions;

- 1,609 of 4,666 women (34.5 percent) obtaining abortions at the Leeds Marie Stopes International abortion clinic were using condoms that failed [12].
- 27% of the abortions performed at Paris' Hospital St. Louis are done because of condom failure.[13]
- A 1996 study of students requesting "emergency contraception" at the Rusholme Health Center in Manchester claimed condom failure.[14]
- In Botswana, HIV prevalence among pregnant urban women rose from 27 percent to a staggering 45 percent from 1993 to 2001 as condoms sales tripled. In Cameroon a staggering 40 percent from 1999 to 2001 as condom sales tripled. In Cameroon, adult HIV prevalence rose from 3 percent to 9 percent as condom sales rose from six million to 15 million during the same period [15].

- Cambodia instituted a "100% Condom Program" early on in its fight against AIDS. Condom use rocketed from 99,000 in 1994 to 16 million in 2001. Reported HIV infections more than kept pace, soaring from 14 in 1994 to more than 16,000 in 2001 [16].
- When United States Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders was Arkansas Health Director from 1987 to 1992, she pushed condoms by every means possible, including in 24 high schools. The results were predictable. The teen pregnancy rate in Arkansas rose 17 percent between 1989 to 1992, the syphilis rate among teenagers rose 130 percent, and the HIV rate rose 150 percent [17].

Figure 3 includes many quotes from leading experts who have shown in studies that condoms are dismal failures at preventing pregnancies.

Understandably, for practical and ethical reasons, few studies have actually used live couples to test HIV transmission rates. A University of Miami Medical School study showed that three out of 10 women whose HIV-infected husbands faithfully used condoms contracted AIDS-Related Complex (ARC) in an 18-month period.[18]

This translates into an infection rate of 21 percent per year, 38 percent in two years, 51 percent in three years, 70 percent in five years, and 91 percent in 10 years. One article in The Lancet concluded that

The possible consequences of condom failure when one partner is HIV infected are serious enough and the likelihood of failure sufficiently high that condom use by risk groups should not be described as 'safe sex.'... Condoms have a substantial failure rate: 13-15% of women whose male partners use condoms as the sole method of contraception become pregnant within one year.[19]

Figure 4 consists of quotes from leading experts who believe that condoms are ineffective at preventing AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

"After reviewing the extensive literature on contraception, some variation in results is found. Reported failure rates for condom use vary from about 2 to 35 unplanned pregnancies per year, but a conservative consensus reveals a rate in the range of 8 failures per 100 users each year in the general population. Simple mathematics would conclude that after five years, the number pregnant with this method would be five times the yearly rate. Thus, after five years of condom use, there would be about forty pregnancies in this group of 100 real people ..."

I think these results certainly tell us right off that one condom is not the same as the next. Koop and AIDS groups and others promoting condoms have been very careless about that point ... The Lifestyles Conture, Trojan Ribbed Natural, Trojan Ribbed and Contracept Plus all showed evidence of virus leakage. The effectiveness of condoms at preventing AIDS is obviously much lower than their effectiveness at preventing pregnancy, for two primary reasons;

- A couple can conceive during only a fraction of the menstrual cycle (the "fertility window"), about five to seven days per cycle. It is possible, however, to be infected with HIV at any time during the menstrual cycle.
- A sperm cell is massively larger than an HIV virus. The head of a sperm cell is about 3,000 to 5,000 nanometers in diameter, and an HIV virus is about 100 to 120 nanometers in diameter (1 nanometer = one billionth of a meter).[20]

Condoms and Leakage.

The Primary Point to Remember. There is a lot of debate in the pro-life community today over whether or not latex condoms have pores large enough to leak the HIV virus.

As this booklet will describe, the latex condom does indeed occasionally leak the HIV virus. However, the following point cannot be stressed enough:

The risk of HIV leakage by latex condoms is trivial when compared to the risk of massive exposure to the HIV virus caused by the condom's propensity to frequently break, tear or slip off.

Pro-lifers should not allow themselves to be dragged into a long, drawn-out discussion on whether or not condoms have pores big enough to leak the HIV virus. This is a distraction from more important issues, because nobody can prove on the spot whether or not they actually do leak the virus. After all, how many people carry a portable electron microscope around with them? There are hundreds of studies on both sides of this question.

In any discussion of condoms, pro-lifers should stay on much firmer ground and speak about the condom's frequent catastrophic failure rate.

A Complicated Question. Much debate exists over whether latex condoms provide protection against the HIV virus. The Centers for Disease Control (CDCs) assert that unbroken and properly used latex condoms can block the AIDS virus.[21] The basis for this claim is a series of studies that show that latex condoms are 99 percent or more effective at stopping the AIDS virus.

Two serious flaws are inherent in each of these studies:

- (1) An extremely small sample size was used in each study (only one to 10 condoms of each brand); and

(2) In-vivo conditions of actual intercourse were not simulated.

The inherent, naturally occurring flaws in natural rubber (latex) range from 5 to 70 microns in diameter.[22] The average sperm cell is about 5 microns in diameter, and the average AIDS virus is about 0.1 micron in size.[23] This means that, in terms of size, an AIDS virus can pass through a latex flaw as easily as a house cat can walk through an open double garage door. Pro-abortionists and others loudly deny this fact, but offer no evidence whatsoever to back up their claims.

However, before concluding that latex condoms do not protect against the AIDS virus, two factors must be taken into account:

(1) Condom advocates stress that water molecules "stick" to each other through hydrogen bonding. Therefore, they say, it is very doubtful indeed that an AIDS virus in a water-based suspension of any type would be able to pass through a hole even 100 times its own diameter in the absence of motion, friction, pressure and corrosion stresses. The clumped water molecules "bridge" the condom gaps, in other words.

However, condoms do indeed leak water, as shown by the standard condom permeability test. This involves filling a condom with 300 milliliters of water, tying it off, and then rolling it on paper to assist in detecting leaks.

In one study, scientists deliberately punctured condoms with holes about 10 microns in diameter, then subjected them to the standard water permeability test. 75 percent of the condoms passed the test, despite the fact that they were riddled with holes 100 times the diameter of the AIDS virus.[24]

In a second test, holes were artificially introduced into condoms of several brands. Those containing holes 1 micron in size -- ten times the diameter of the HIV virus -- passed the leakage test 90 percent of the time. In this latter test, a surfactant (which reduces water cohesion) was introduced into the liquid. Most condom lubricants act as surfactants.[25]

These studies prove that condoms do indeed leak water, regardless of what its surface tension may be.

(2) Latex condoms are "double-dipped," meaning that all or most of the voids left from the first layer will be filled by the second. Repeated SEM (scanning electron microscope) photos of stretched condoms show no apparent voids, even at a magnification of 2,000X.[26]

Once again, this fact is irrelevant in light of the fact that, as shown above, a large percentage of condoms that have passed the standard water leak test do indeed leak HIV-sized particles.

An Engineering Analysis of an SEM Image. Point (2) above is repeatedly used by condom advocates to argue that latex condoms are extremely effective at blocking the HIV virus. Indeed, when a latex condom is stretched and viewed under the extreme magnification possible with a scanning electron microscope, no pores seem to be present.

When an SEM image of stretched latex shows no pores, we must remember that stretching applies only one type of stress on a material: Uniform lateral stress. This is the kind of stress that is applied to a child's balloon when it is blown up -- equal and constant pressure is applied to every square inch of the surface of the balloon.

An SEM cannot provide us with an accurate "picture" of pores in a condom under conditions of actual use, because the SEM can only provide still shots of a condom with uniform lateral stress applied to it.

It is physically impossible to simultaneously simulate for an SEM picture the other four types of stress that are applied to a condom during intercourse:

- (1) pressure stress (perpendicular to the axis of the lateral stress). This would be like taking the child's balloon and stretching it from pole to pole;
- (2) shear stress (high twisting or angular stresses at critical points). This would be like holding the child's balloon at both ends and twisting the poles in opposite directions;
- (3) friction stress (abrasion occurring during lateral movement between two surfaces in contact). This would be like taking the child's balloon and rubbing it across a sticky surface; and
- (4) corrosion stress caused by a mixture of body fluids and lubricants, whose effect is greatly enhanced by the repeated and simultaneous application of mechanical stresses.

To say that a latex condom is safe because it shows no pores when only one out of five types of stress is applied to it is like saying that a new type of jeep is safe for heavy off-road use because it can be driven in a straight line at 25 MPH on a smooth and level road without falling apart.

The fact that latex condoms do indeed contain pores was highlighted by a major 1992 Food and Drug Administration (FDA) study, the first to simulate actual conditions of sexual intercourse. This study showed detectable leakage of HIV-sized particles in one-third of the condoms tested.[27] Significantly, all of these condoms had previously passed the standard water leakage test.

Again, those who debate the merits and demerits of condoms should remember that the head of a human sperm cell is approximately 50 microns (0.002 inches) in diameter, and the head of an HIV virus is about 0.1 microns in diameter.[28] This means that a sperm cell, which is effectively blocked by an unbroken latex condom, is about 100 million times more massive than an HIV virus.

This contrast in size is proportional to a five-ton bull elephant standing next to a small housefly.

Condoms and the Prevention of Sexually Transmitted Diseases.

"There is no such thing as safe sex for someone contemplating sex with an HIV-positive person."

-- Dr. Michael Gottlieb, the scientist who made the original report to the Centers for Disease Control on gay-related immune deficiency (GRID), which was later relabeled AIDS.[29]

Health authorities agree that condoms (when used perfectly and when they do not break, leak or slip) effectively block such sexually transmitted diseases as gonorrhea and syphilis. However, condom misuse or breakage can cause massive exposure to these diseases, just as with the HIV virus.

What's more, even consistent perfect use of unbroken condoms will not protect against STDs that are spread by skin-to-skin contact, such as human papillomavirus (HPV) and herpes simplex virus (HSV), which frequently infect the entire genital area. Finally, many STDs, such as gonorrhea and herpes, are transmitted by oral sex, which is usually practiced with multiple sexual partners.[30]

These problems partly account for a resurgence in certain STDs;

- Genital chlamydial infection is the most common bacterial STD in the United States, and is the leading cause of preventable infertility and ectopic pregnancies. Half a million new cases of chlamydia (the most common sexually transmitted disease) are reported each year.[31]
- Genital warts (condyloma acuminata) are caused by human papillomavirus (HPV), the most common viral STD in the United States, accounting for three million new cases each year. HPV is present in an estimated 50 percent of all sexually active young women, and, as with other STDs, is associated with multiple sexual partners and with earlier intercourse.
- There are about 400,000 new cases of gonorrhea in the United States each year, many of which are caused by strains resistant to treatment, and up to one-fourth of all infected men have no symptoms. Gonorrhea can also infect other mucous membranes, including the mouth. The disease can have extremely serious consequences if left untreated, including sterility, pelvic abscesses and severe health problems for infants born to infected mothers.[32]
- Hepatitis B is a particularly dangerous problem in some developing countries. It can lead to chronic hepatitis, cirrhosis, cancers, hepatic (liver) failure and death. There is no cure for Hepatitis B, and up to 20 percent of the general population in many developing countries show signs of infection.
- Herpes genitalis is caused by the herpes simplex virus (HSV) and infects about 30 million people in the United States today, most of whom show no symptoms. Those who do show symptoms may have painful ulcers in the genital or mouth area.
- Pelvic inflammatory disease (PID) is a result of infection with other STDs and viruses/bacteria such as gonorrhea and E. Coli. PID afflicts one million American women each year, 20 percent of whom require hospitalization. PID also inflames the Fallopian tubes and is a leading cause of ectopic pregnancy.
- Syphilis, one of the deadliest STDs, recently reached its highest level in 40 years, with 134,000 people in the United States newly infected in 1990.[33] Untreated syphilis can lead to rashes, lesions, paralysis, aneurysms, blindness and death.

Health professionals often assert that there are "epidemics" of teen pregnancy, AIDS, alcoholism and drug use. Some of these allegations are exaggerated and are not supported with proper statistical analysis.

But declarations of an epidemic of STDs are certainly not exaggerated. With more than 100 million people infected with one or more of 20 STDs in the United States alone, it is unrealistic to expect that a paper-thin, nearly weightless sheath of polyurethane or latex will slow down the epidemic.

The only way to completely eradicate all STDs is to follow God's plan for our sexual lives: Abstinence before marriage and fidelity after.

Of course, the sex educators and condom sellers tell us that this is not a "realistic" solution.

They are wrong.

Since abstinence/fidelity is the only solution that will work, it is the only realistic solution as well. Perhaps if the health professionals struggle unsuccessfully for another decade or two trying to contain the STD epidemic with impractical means, they too will reach the same conclusion. Unfortunately, the price of their education will be steep indeed -- millions of lives needlessly lost and more millions of lives spent in unnecessary misery.

Teenagers and Condoms.

The New York Times Speaks. In 1997, The New York Times front-paged a study alleging that passing out condoms in school does not increase teenage sex, which flies in the face of common sense.[34]

If schools passed out coupons for free beer at local ABC stores, would beer consumption by teenagers increase?

Of course it would! Anyone who says otherwise is just not in touch with reality.

Saying that passing out condoms does not increase sexual behavior is kind of like saying that passing out cars and keys does not increase driving behavior.

In any case, the lead researcher of the study cited by the Times was none other than Sally Guttmacher, daughter of Alan Guttmacher, who did more to spread abortion and contraception around the world than anyone else in history. The study was funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, which pours millions of dollars into organizations that promote condoms.

The Times seems to be completely blind to preordained conclusions brought on by a massive conflict of interest, but only if such conflicts exist on the anti-life side of various issues.

Would the Times accept such a study (much less put it on the front page) if it was conducted by a well-known pro-life priest and funded by the Vatican? Of course not! The Times would dismiss the study without even reading it.

But not if it has the 'right' conclusions ...

In light of their dismal record, the only thing more illogical than adults using condoms is adults providing condoms to teenagers, especially in the public schools.

Rebuttal by the Alan Guttmacher Institute. An article in the Alan Guttmacher Institute's Family Planning Perspectives quoted an annual condom failure rate of 18.4 percent among teenaged girls under 18 years old. This means that more than half of the users will be pregnant within three years.

The authors also said that "These rates are understated because of the substantial under-reporting of abortion among single women; if abortion reporting was complete, failure rates would be 1.4 times as high as they appear high." [35]

Results of School Condom Studies. These figures have been borne out in studies of those public schools that have distributed condoms to their students.

One writer describes the dismal results of one of the first free-condom programs to be instituted at a high school in the United States;

In the three years since this [Adams City, Colorado] high school became one of the first to hand out condoms, the birth rate has soared to 31% above the national average of 58.1 births per 1,000 students [annually].

Last year, 76 of Adams City students became teen mothers. This year, more than 100 births are expected. That's left people at this school, recognized throughout Colorado for its cutting-edge educational and social programs, searching for explanations." [36]

International Case Studies Showing Condom Ineffectiveness Against HIV/AIDS.

Uganda. In 1986, President Yoweri Museveni took office and immediately started an intensive campaign to change the widespread incidence of risky sexual behavior in Uganda.

In 1991, Uganda had one of the highest adult HIV infection rates in the world. Fifteen percent of all adults in the country were infected. Ten years later, Uganda had cut its HIV infection rate by two-thirds, to only five percent. It was the only nation in Africa that cut its HIV infection rate during this time period, and its decline in HIV prevalence was the greatest of any country in the world.

The key to this tremendous decline was an approach that other nations declined to embrace: The ABC Program, or Abstain from sex until marriage, Be faithful to your partner, and use Condoms if you do not practice abstinence or fidelity. The entire focus of the message was not simply to "condomize" the population, but to reduce risky sexual behavior.

The consistent broadcasting of the ABC message through all governmental, educational, religious and communications networks, in time, built up what researchers called a "highly effective social vaccine against HIV," or a massive behavioral change among the people of the nation. The 2000-2001 Ugandan Demographic and Health Survey found that 93 percent of Ugandans had changed their sexual behavior to avoid HIV/AIDS.

According to the Heritage Foundation, the primary lessons learned from the Uganda experience are;

- (1) High-risk sexual behaviors can be discouraged and replaced by healthier lifestyles. Ugandans gradually accepted what they call "zero grazing," or faithfulness to one partner.
- (2) Abstinence and marital fidelity appear to be the most important factors in preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS. Contrary to all expectations, young Ugandans widely embraced the pro-abstinence message. From 1989 to 1995, the percent of unmarried young men having sex plunged from 60 percent to 23 percent, and the percent of unmarried young women having sex dropped from 53 percent to 16 percent.[37] This proves that teenagers are not mere animals who are helpless slaves of their "raging hormones."
- (3) Condoms do not play the primary role in reducing HIV/AIDS transmission. As President Museveni himself remarked, "We are being told that only a thin piece of rubber stands between us and the death of our continent. Condoms have a role to play as a means of protection, especially in couples who are HIV-positive, but they cannot become the main means of stemming the tide of AIDS." [38] The Ugandan government targeted only extremely high-risk groups, including prostitutes, with condoms. The vast majority of Ugandans rejected the use of condoms. Anne Peterson, M.D., USAID's Director of Global Health, says that "Condoms play a role. They are better than nothing, but the core of Uganda's success story is big A, big B, and little C." [39]

In stark contrast to Uganda, the countries with the highest rate of condom availability still have the world's highest AIDS rates -- Zimbabwe, Botswana, South Africa and Kenya.[40]

- (4) Religious organizations are crucial participants in the fight against AIDS [41]. Most condom-promoting organizations believe that purely secular organizations should have a monopoly in the battle against HIV/AIDS, and that religious organizations have no place in the fray. From the very beginning of the ABC program, Christian, Jewish and Muslim faith-based organizations played a central role.

The ABC program has been intensively studied and deemed effective by many leading international health organizations, including;

- the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), which says that "This dramatic decline in [HIV/AIDS] prevalence is unique worldwide, and has been the subject of intense scrutiny;" [42]
- the Joint United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS);
- the United Nations World Health Organization (WHO); and
- the Harvard Center for Population and Development Studies.[43]

Despite the obvious success of the Ugandan ABC program, which has undoubtedly saved hundreds of thousands of lives, condom promoters continue to discount abstinence in favor of programs that have been proven ineffective.

For example, the Global HIV Prevention Working Group issued a July 2002 report entitled Mobilization for HIV Prevention: A Blueprint for Action, which emphasizes sex education, condom distribution, needle exchange programs and increased availability of and access to anti-retroviral drugs in its program. It briefly mentions Uganda's success story but attributes its drops in HIV infection rates primarily to massive condom story, but attributes its drops in HIV infection rates primarily to massive condom promotion and distribution programs, which did not actually occur in the country [44].

In reality, condoms do not impede the spread of AIDS. In 2004, the journal Studies in Family Planning concluded that "No clear examples have emerged yet of a country that has turned back a generalised epidemic primarily by means of condom promotion." [45]

The Philippines and Thailand. The second real-life example of how condoms fail to stop the spread of HIV/AIDS is presented by the Philippines and Thailand, two Southeastern Asian nations with approximately the same populations.

In 1984, the first case of HIV was detected in both of these nations. By 1987, Thailand had 112 cases of AIDS, and the Philippines had 135 cases. In 1991, the World Health Organization predicted that, by 1999, Thailand would have 70,000 deaths from the disease, and the Philippines would have 85,000 deaths.

In 1991, both nations took concrete and comprehensive measures against the spread of the HIV virus -- but both directed their efforts in completely different directions.

The Thai Minister of Health enacted a "100% Condom Use Program." All brothels were required to have supplies of condoms, and condom vending machines were installed in all supermarkets, bars, restaurants, and other public gathering places. This program was widely accepted and implemented by the people of Thailand.

Two years later, Rene Bullecer, M.D., received authorization from the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) to establish the organization AIDS-Free Philippines as its official program to combat HIV/AIDS nationwide. The government signed on to this effort as well.

By the end of 2003, the disparity in the effectiveness of both types of programs had become glaringly obvious, as shown in this table; [46]

Parameter	Thailand	Philippines
Adults and Children Living with HIV	570,000	9,000
AIDS Deaths in 2003	58,000	500
Population	62,833,000	79,999,000
HIV Infection Rates Per Mission	9,072	113

This table shows that the Thai HIV infection rate is eighty times higher than the Filipino HIV infection rate.

The current rate of HIV infection in the United States, with all of our sex education, all of our sexual freedom, all of our advanced antiviral drugs, and all of our billions of condoms, is 3,900 per million, thirty times higher than in the Philippines.[47]

What lesson does this teach us?

USAID has concluded that the reason that the Philippines has such a low incidence of HIV/AIDS is that youth have a very high rate of abstinence and married people largely remain faithful to their spouses. The USAID report grudgingly admitted that "The Catholic Church must be credited with influencing sexual behavior."[48]

'Abstinence has a High Failure Rate.' Pro-condom groups often denigrate abstinence because they say it is ineffective. For example, A poster distributed by 'Catholics' for a Free Choice says that "Abstinence has a high failure rate." [49] The idea behind this slogan is that people get passionate and engage in sexual intercourse despite intentions or formal vows to the contrary.

This is an illogical and inconsistent allegation. Failures are not attributed to any method of birth control if it is simply not used. If a formal study of condoms finds that several pregnancies resulted from couples intending to use condoms but failing to do so, these pregnancies will properly not be attributed to the condoms themselves.

The same criteria should be applied to abstinence. If, for whatever reason, a couple engage in sexual intercourse, resulting exposure to pregnancy or STDs cannot be attributed to abstinence, because it was not used.

They Simply Refuse to "Get It." Despite the stunning success of Uganda at reducing its AIDS epidemic, and the Philippines at avoiding it altogether, population controllers, "family planners" and pro-condom ideologues continue to vigorously promote programs that are proven failures. These groups and people have the attitude that theirs is the only "realistic" solution to the AIDS crisis, even when they are confronted with abundant and vivid evidence to the contrary.

Why do they do this, in light of the fact that they are obviously causing many deaths and much misery?

(1) This is the result of a venerable mindset that holds that human beings are essentially no different from animals in the area of sexuality, and that they have either no free will or greatly diminished free will.[50] This is an old and outdated philosophy, and must be jettisoned in favor of more modern and effective thinking. Unfortunately, the people who hold this quaintly antiquated viewpoint are usually the "family planning" and "reproductive health" experts who fund and execute programs involving condom distribution.

(2) It's their job. If they give up their hold on condoms, they might be out looking for gainful employment. Peddling condoms is a very profitable venture indeed, and the resulting income must be protected, regardless of the health risks to those using the product. In 1987, the Los Angeles Times reported that "The condom industry has launched an intensive campaign to weaken, delay or possibly shut down a federally funded Los Angeles study of the effectiveness of condoms in preventing transmission of the AIDS virus." [51]

(3) Condoms are part of the web of "progressive" thinking that is more rigidly dogmatic than the beliefs of any religion. One of the precepts of this mode of thinking is that "condoms are good."

(4) Population controllers and condom pushers are just plain lazy. It is far easier to throw condoms at a problem than it is to go through all the trouble of changing behavior.

(5) The organizations that think this way have a strong bias towards racist population control programs. Lothrop Stoddard sat on the board of Margaret Sanger's American Birth Control League (later the Planned Parenthood Federation of America). In Sanger's publication The Birth Control Review, Lothrop vividly portrayed the racist's fear of "differential fertility," a dread that still exists among population controllers today;

... upon the quality of human life all else depends ... none of the colored races shows perceptible signs of declining birth-rate, all tending to breed up to the limits of available subsistence ... It can mean only one thing: a tremendous and steadily augmenting outward thrust of surplus colored men from overcrowded colored homelands ... But many of these relatively empty [Northern] lands have been definitely set aside by the White man as his own special heritage ...

His ["colored" man's] outstanding quality is superabundant animal vitality. In this he easily surpasses all other races. To it he owes his intense emotionalism. To it, again, is due his extreme fecundity, the negro being the quickest of breeders. This abounding vitality shows in many other ways, such as the negro's ability to survive harsh conditions of slavery under which other races have soon succumbed ... black blood, once entering a human stock, seems never really bred out again ...

White men cannot, under peril of their very race-existence, allow wholesale Asian immigration into White race-areas ... The grim truth of the matter is this: The whole White race is exposed, immediately or ultimately, to the possibility of social sterilization and final replacement or absorption by the teeming colored races.

And, of course, the more primitive a type is, the more prepotent it is. This is why crossings with the negro are uniformly fatal. Whites, Amerindians, or Asiatics -- all are alike vanquished by the invincible prepotency of the more primitive, generalized, and lower negro blood.

... whether we consider interwhite migrations or colored encroachments on White lands, the net result is an expansion of lower and a contraction of higher stocks, the process being thus a disgenic one.

For race-betterment is such an intensely practical matter! When peoples come to realize that the quality of the population is the source of all their prosperity, progress, security, and even existence; we shall see much-abused "eugenics" actually moulding social programmes and political policies ... we or the next generation will take in hand the problem of race-depreciation, and segregation of defectives and abolition of handicaps penalizing the better stocks will put an end to our present racial decline.[52]

Indeed, some have raised a troubling question: If the USA and the developed world know that condoms are ineffective, why do they keep shipping billions of them to Africa every year? The ideal form of genocide is that which few expect -- claiming to assist a people while actually helping them to do nothing more than exterminate themselves.

Despite the proven track record of Uganda's ABC program, many influential organizations and people continue to criticize it and the USA's support of it;

- U.S. Representative Barbara Lee said that "In an age where five million people are

- U.S. Representative Barbara Lee said that "In an age where five million people are newly infected each year and women and girls too often do not have the choice to abstain, an abstinence until marriage program is not only irresponsible, it's really inhuman. Abstaining from sex is oftentimes not a choice, and therefore their only hope in preventing HIV infection is the use of condoms." [53]
- Adrienne Germain, president of the International Women's Health Coalition (IWHC), said that "The Bush administration position basically condemns people to death by H.I.V./AIDS, and we're talking about tens of millions of people." [54]
- Mary Crewe, Director of the Centre for the Study of AIDS at the University of Pretoria, said that "ABC is a middle-class, middle-aged response to an epidemic, all overlaid with a kind of morality that doesn't hold any more." [55]
- Jonathan Cohen of Human Rights Watch said that "Governments should be promoting condom use, not treating condoms like contraband. The clear result of restricting access to condoms will be more lives lost to AIDS." [56]
- Stephen Lewis, the United Nations Secretary General's special envoy for HIV/AIDS in Africa, said that "There is no question in my mind that the condom crisis in Uganda is being driven and exacerbated by PEPFAR [the U.S. administration's AIDS assistance program] and by the extreme policies that the administration in the U.S. is now pursuing in the emphasis on abstinence. ... That distortion of the preventive apparatus is resulting in great damage and undoubtedly will cause significant numbers of infections which should never have occurred." [57]
- Paulo Roberto Teixeira, the AIDS Program Coordinator for Brazil's Health Ministry, said that "Millions and millions of young people are having sexual relations. We cannot talk about abstinence. It's not real." [58]

Lying in Order to Sell Condoms. Edward C. Green, a senior research scientist at the Harvard School of Public Health, and a former condom advocate, has said, "The way condoms are marketed in Africa and other developing parts of the world is as if they were 100 percent safe. Condoms have brand names like Shield and Protector that gives the impression that they are 100 percent safe." [59]

This statement is certainly true. The most powerful visual tool used to market condoms in Africa is the large and colorful billboards that are built next to major thoroughfares and painted on stone walls near stadiums, schools, and other places where large crowds of people regularly congregate. None of these billboards even hint at the failure rate of condoms; in fact, the opposite is the case. They all state plainly that, in order to be completely safe from HIV/AIDS, you must use condoms.

Conclusion: Of Parachutes and Prophylactics.

If parachutes had the abysmal safety record that condoms do, skydiving would have been outlawed long ago. Add to this the fact that tens of thousands of people die of AIDS and other sexually-transmitted diseases for every person who dies in a parachuting accident, and it is obvious that we are suffering from a major case of worldwide myopia. It is also obvious that most people would choose sudden death by parachute failure than a lingering, hideous wasting away at the 'hands' of the AIDS virus.

Condom promoters often make the following analogy.

If your child was in an airplane that was going to crash, wouldn't you want him or her to have a parachute, even if it was only 90 percent effective?

This is obviously a false analogy.

If you, as a parent, already know that the airplane your children want to fly on is unsafe and will probably crash, your only realistic option is to stop him or her from boarding it in the first place!

Good Housekeeping Magazine will not even accept condom advertisements, because they are not reliable enough for its "Seal of Approval." [60]

Apparently, when it comes to birth control, anything goes. What is apparently important is not whether or not you are safe, but whether or not you think you are safe.

The Family Planners `Speak.' Perhaps family planners were at their most eloquent and revealing when they were not saying anything at all. In 1987, 800 sexologists gathered for a conference in Heidelberg, Germany. Dr. Theresa Crenshaw, past President of the American Association of Sex Educators, Counselors and Therapists (AASECT), asked the assembly how many of them would have intercourse with the HIV-infected partner of their dreams using a latex condom. Not a single one raised their hand. Dr. Crenshaw concluded that "Putting a mere balloon between a healthy body and a deadly disease is not safe." [61]

The United States government pamphlet entitled "Condoms and Sexually Transmitted Diseases" says "Condoms are not 100 percent safe, but if used properly will reduce the risk of sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS."

Read this quote again. What the United States government is telling us is that condoms reduce the risk of a disease that is 100 percent fatal!

This has led to a phenomenon that one expert delicately terms a "disservice." Susan Weller says that

A negative effect has been the misinterpretation and misinformation regarding condom effectiveness. The public at-large may not understand the difference between 'condoms may reduce risk of' and 'condoms will prevent' HIV infection. It is a disservice to encourage the belief that condoms will prevent sexual transmission of HIV. [62]

There are hundreds of sources that claim that condoms reduce HIV transmission from 80 to 90 percent. This is absolutely true -- but only if we compare (1) people using condoms to (2) people not using condoms at all.

But this is a false choice. The condom promoters simply assume that people are going to have extra-marital sex because they can't help themselves. Such thinking is called "risk reduction," and is ultimately fatalistic. It assumes that people are largely powerless to change their risky behaviors, and assumes that people who are generally acting irrationally (by engaging in high-risk sexual behavior) will suddenly begin acting rationally when handed a condom.

The real decision is (1) to abstain or (2) to use condoms during extramarital sex. Abstinence is obviously safer.

The condom promoters are offering people a choice that is similar to this: If a person is going to run into burning buildings just for thrills, it is much better for him to wear a fireproof suit than not to wear a fireproof suit.

What we are saying is simply this: It is far better not to run into that burning building at all.

In another major study, the nation's most trusted consumer's advocacy group, the Consumer's Union (CU), interviewed 3,300 of its readers in order to determine the effectiveness of condoms at preventing conception and disease. CU also mechanically tested 16,000 condoms of 37 different varieties and brands. It published the results of its studies in the March 1989 issue of Consumer Reports. About one-fourth of the Consumer Union's readers reported at least one instance of condom breakage in a one-year period, and about one in eight experienced two or more incidents of breakage in one year. Using these and other data, CU estimated that an average of one condom in 165 broke during heterosexual intercourse, and about one in 105 broke during anal intercourse. This failure rate was much lower than that produced by most other studies. The results of this study were not included in this Chapter because CU relied heavily on self-reporting, which is inherently unreliable ["Can You Rely on Condoms?" Consumer Reports, March 1989, pages 135 to 141].

Other studies do not rely on self-reporting, but rigorously document all procedures. One such study found that 15.1% of 405 condoms broke or slipped off [James Trussell, David Lee Warner and Robert A. Hatcher. "Condom Slippage and Breakage Rates." Family Planning Perspectives [Alan Guttmacher Institute], January/February 1992 [Volume 24, Number 1], pages 20 to 23].

- "Our alternative solution is to be ready as educators and parents to help young people obtain sex satisfaction before marriage. By sanctioning sex before marriage, we will prevent fear and guilt. We must also relieve those who have them of their fears and guilt feelings, and we must be ready to provide young boys and girls with the best contraception measures available so they will have the necessary means to achieve sexual satisfaction without having to risk possible pregnancy. We owe this to them" [Dr. Lena Levine. "Psychosexual Development." Planned Parenthood News, Summer 1953, page 10.

The documents indicate that the attempt to force major modifications in the condom study was apparently motivated by industry concerns that the research might conclude that no American-made condom is currently able to consistently prevent the spread of HIV."

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: A Brief Historical Overview of the Abortion Debate

"Figures never lie, but liars sure do figure."

— Mark Twain.

What the Anti-Lifers Say.

"On Friday the north lawn of the United Nations was ablaze with 500,000 carnations placed there by the International Planned Parenthood Federation. The flowers weren't celebratory. They were grave markers — for the 500,000 women who die each year around the globe from the complications of pregnancy and childbirth. ... Yet almost all of these deaths can be [sic] prevented — if these women have the choice to avoid pregnancy, and have a chance for medical care."

— "Mothers, Flowers and Death." The New York Times Editorials/
Letters, May 10, 1992, page 16E.

Every pro-abortion group in the United States claims that the availability of legal abortion is a vital necessity for the maintenance of women's health, because thousands of women died of illegal abortions every year in this country before the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision. They also allege ad nauseam that, if we "turn the clock back" to the days when women were forced to seek out back-alley butchers, our emergency rooms will once again overflow with desperate women who have been mangled by quacks and "home remedies." Then they bravely raise their little fists into the air and shout "We will never go back to the days when women died of unsafe, illegal abortions!"

Besides, say the pro-abortionists, abortion is six [ten, twelve, twenty, pick a nice round number] times safer than childbirth.

Introduction and Overview.

The single most effective tactic used to obtain abortion on demand in the United States and in many other countries was the assertion that a huge number of women died of complications due to illegal and unsanitary abortions each year before the procedure was legalized.

This central element of the eternal debate over abortion is of genuine interest to activists and scholars on both sides of the issue because it presents legitimate questions that must be addressed when considering the fundamental merits of both the pro-abortion and anti-abortion positions. Additionally, the historical background of the abortion debate and the tactics used by early pro-abortion activists make fascinating reading.

This Chapter analyzes the claims made by pro-abortion activists regarding illegal abortion deaths both in the United States and in foreign countries, and shows that these numbers had no scientific support and were greatly exaggerated. It also shows that the majority of maternal deaths arising from complications due to legal abortion are not properly reported for a number of reasons, and estimates the approximate numbers of abortion-related deaths that are currently occurring. This Chapter also discusses the claim that abortion is much safer than childbirth, and shows that this allegation is unscientific and false. Finally, it discusses the increasing dangers to women's health posed by the resurgence of "self-help" abortions.

A Brief Historical Overview of the Abortion Debate.

"The illegal abortionist has played an essential role in the evolution of modern industrial urban living, with its low birth rates, intensive education, and nuclear family system. He or she was classed as a criminal, but without their help, history would have taken a different course."

— Malcolm Potts, Peter Diggory and John Peel. Abortion [Cambridge University Press, 1970].

Although there has been continued agitation for abortion law reform or repeal in the United States since at least the 1920s, the modern abortion-rights movement generally traces its origins to 1959, when the American Law Institute (ALI) published its proposed revisions to existing state abortion laws.

At the time the ALI promulgated its completed Model Penal Code, abortion was illegal in every state except to preserve the life of the mother.[1] The Code provided that abortion be performed in licensed hospitals if the pregnancy was the result of rape or incest, or to preserve the mental or physical health of the mother.

While such revisions were being proposed, the modern pro-abortion movement constructed and refined its framework of strategies and slogans. The heart of this plan was a brilliant two-pronged approach which took advantage of the traditional concern of Americans for the well-being of pregnant women.

The first element of this scheme would obtain exceptions for the woman's "physical and mental health," and would subsequently expand this definition to the point where it meant abortion on demand in practice. Pro-abortion strategists recognized from the very beginning that this process would take place, and, in fact, the United States Supreme Court made this expansion a reality in its January 22, 1973 Abortion Decisions, Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton. [2]

The second component of the overall pro-abortion strategy was intended to generate public fear and loathing over the apocryphal "back-alley" abortion. Pro-abortion leaders began to circulate and publicize the claim that 5,000 to 10,000 women died each year due to complications incurred from illegal abortions, and combined this number with lurid and graphic stories of "back-alley" abortion mills designed to simultaneously inspire disgust and sympathy in lawmakers and in members of the public. [3]

Both elements of this plan were intended to serve a single purpose: To secure and then retain abortion on demand.

Eight years after the American Law Institute's model abortion law was proposed, Colorado became the first state to adopt a more permissive statute allowing abortion for the mother's life and rape and incest. By December of 1970, a total of 14 states had liberalized their abortion laws. [4]

At this point, the "Abortion Revolution" stalled. When it appeared that no further states would enact liberal abortion laws, pro-abortion activists twice attempted to legalize the procedure via referendum in 1972. They were defeated both times, by a crushing 79%-21% margin in North Dakota, and by 62% to 38% in Michigan.

It soon became evident to abortion activists that the struggle was in virtual stasis. While some states were leaning towards permissive abortion laws, others conducted polls that showed the people to be heavily against such actions, and some states that had enacted permissive statutes appeared on the verge of re-criminalizing the procedure.

The abortion debate remained essentially deadlocked until the Supreme Court's Abortion Decisions of January 22, 1973.

It should be noted that, when an exception to save the life of the mother was not explicitly stated, such intent was understood to be present in any case by the Courts.

[2] The Supreme Court of the United States never explicitly stated that its purpose was to authorize abortion on demand. However, the practical effect of its definitions of maternal 'health' is abortion on demand in practice. The Court defined maternal health to include "mental health" in its United States v. Vuitch decision (402 U.S. 62, 71-72 (1971)), and expanded this to hold that virtually all factors of any type are relevant to the mother's health; "... the medical judgement may be exercised in the light of all factors — physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age — relevant to the well-being of the patient. All these factors may relate to health. This allows the attending physician the room he needs ..." (Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 192 (1973)).

[3] Two of the co-founders of the organization that was then called the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (NARAL), Dr. Bernard Nathanson and Larry Lader, were among the first to circulate these figures. Report on Encuentro Internacional "Vida y Familia" in Cochabamba, Bolivia
Adolfo J. Castañeda, Vida Humana Internacional
May 23-25, 2003

The God of Life was certainly planning great things for Bolivia, for I had never before encountered so many obstacles when preparing for a conference overseas. For starters, I lost my passport two months before leaving. Thanks to God I was able to get a new one in time for my departure. Then, my computer got a virus just the day before taking the plane, when I was making final preparations with the educational materials I was to take with me. Thanks be to God, again I was able to resolve that problem. Finally, the flight I was supposed to get on was canceled without notice! I did finally get on a plain to Bolivia the next day, May the 24th.

Bolivia, a country the size of Texas and California combined, is in the heart of South America. It has no outlet to any ocean, but plenty of rivers with delicious fish. This land of about 8 million people (mostly Catholic) and a very low population density of less than 10 persons per square mile, is also blessed with natural gas, gold, silver and a great variety of vegetables, including more than 20 different types of potatoes. Unfortunately, years of governmental corruption, cocaine trafficking and leftist agitation have impoverished this beautiful country. Nevertheless, Bolivia does have very capable people, including professionals, experts in technology and scientists, who can turn it around.

I arrived at Cochabamba, the third largest city, early in the morning, after flying all night. I was immediately taken to the First International Conference "Life and Family" by Mrs. Nora Rojas, the wife of Mr. Mario Rojas, the Executive Director of ANE Provida, our affiliate in Bolivia. ANE stands for "Apostolado de la Nueva Evangelización" ("New Evangelization Apostolate") - a Catholic evangelization movement that started at Cochabamba, but that has gone international. It has the blessing of the local bishop and is very faithful to the Magisterium. It emphasizes the Eucharist and devotion to Our Blessed Mother (you can't go wrong with that!). Needless to say, all pro-lifers were worried about my delay and praying their hearts out for my successful arrival.

The Conference was a huge success. About 600 professionals attended, most of them were young educators - that was the emphasis of the event. Its international character was due to the fact that 4 out of the 6 speakers were from outside the country, myself included. Dr. Concepción Morales, from Pro-Vida Cuba (an organization which belongs to the Catholic Church in that country), spoke to an attentive crowd about the consequences of abortion and contraception, and also about the benefits of NFP, of which she is an expert. Another expert of NFP, Dr. Blanca Neira, a leader of CEPROFARENA, our affiliate in Peru, also spoke about this issue. Carlos Beltramo, also from Peru and a leader of ALAFA (a pro-family organization active in Latin America), addressed attendants on the topics of chastity and the importance of the family in building the Culture of Life.

The two national speakers were Fr. Miguel Manzanera, SJ, an expert in bioethics and the President of ANE Provida, who spoke on the status of the human embryo and on respect for the dignity; and Dr. Silvestre Arza, another expert in bioethics, who gave a respect for the dying, and Dr. Silvestre Arze, another expert in bioethics, who gave a talk on the correct approach to organ transplants. He based his definition of death on the Holy Father's careful approach to this delicate issue.

I gave three conferences. The first was on the immorality of human cloning and its ethical alternatives (a hot topic at this moment in Bolivia). The second one was on the true meaning of human sexuality - here I discussed chastity, marriage and celibacy, as well as the evils of contraception, fornication and homosexual activity, among others. I emphasized why these things are wrong and I also explained the beauty of Church teaching about the wonderful gift of human sexuality. My final talk was on the work Vida Humana Internacional does in the Hispanic world - for which I used a Power Point Presentation. I also brought with me 70 pounds of educational materials, which will be greatly used by the local pro-lifers.

The Conference ended with a beautiful Mass (without liturgical abuses). It was presided by His Excellency Archbishop Ivo Scapolo, Apostolic Nuncio to Bolivia, who came down from La Paz (the capital) to be present for the entire event. Concelebrating were His Excellency Tito Solari, Archbishop of Cochabamba; His Excellency René Fernández, Retired Archbishop of Cochabamba; His Excellency Luis Sainz, Auxiliary Archbishop of Cochabamba; His Excellency Abel Costas, Retired Bishop of Tarija; Fr. Manzanera; Fr. Víctor Benavente, Rector of San Luis Seminary; Fr. Franco Gasparini and Fr. O'Brien, a Maryknoll missionary, who has worked for many years in La Paz. There were also several seminarians from San Luis Seminary.

That evening, I personally gave to Mons. Scapolo and to Mons. Solari copies of two manuals we have prepared for the bishops in the Hispanic world. One of them is about how to help persons with homosexual inclinations live a chaste life. The other one is about post-abortion healing and reconciliation.

The Conference also received a lot of press coverage in the local newspapers. One of them, Los Tiempos ("The Times") sent a reporter to interview the speakers. I was interviewed on human cloning. During my last day in Bolivia, May the 26th I was again interviewed, this time more extensively, by the same newspaper on the same topic.

The next day of the Conference, Sunday May the 25th, we held training sessions. Drs. Morales and Neira and I addressed over 30 leaders on pro-life strategies and counter arguments to the anti-life lies and deceptive language. I must point out that those present were people who also attended the Conference and who were not only from Cochabamba, but from other cities as well, including La Paz, Santa Cruz and Tarija. Bolivia is by no means a small country, so the pro-lifers traveled quite a bit to be present there. In four hours these attentive people, most of them professionals, including doctors and educators, were drilled on IPPF, the UN, the anti-life feminists and their deceptive arguments, such as "reproductive health", "gender perspective" and "safe and legal abortion", among others.

Bolivia is a special target of IPPF, which makes the ridiculous claim that its birth rate is too high (thank God it's about 4 children per woman of child-bearing age in a practically empty country!) They also claim that too many women are dying from clandestine abortions. That's the same argument pro-aborts made over 30 years ago in the U.S. to legalize abortion and make it "safe" - not for the unborn child nor for his mother, of course, but for the pockets of the abortion business. This "safe and legal abortion" dangerous nonsense is the same garbage that IPPF, the UN and their cohorts are pushing all over Latin America. Can you help us stop them?

pushing all over Latin America. Can you help us stop them?

The next day, Monday morning, May the 26th, I did not leave Bolivia on the flight I was scheduled to. Yes, it did happen again! Although this time I was "mysteriously" put out of that flight and into the one leaving that evening. But it was providential. As you know, God writes straight with crooked lines. That day I was invited to speak, along with Dr. Morales, to the student body of a school of nurse assistants. The school, which belongs to the government of Bolivia and which is partially financed by the government of Japan, is into the "reproductive health", and the pro-contraception sex "education" baloney. They had a full colored brochure, sponsored by the pro-abortion Pathfinder Fund, telling how "wonderful" pills, IUDs and condoms are. Of course, it did not say a word about the abortifacient effects or about the dangers to women's health of the first two, nor about the high failure rate in preventing AIDS of the latter. When it came to NFP, it reduced it to the "calendar" method.

Dr. Morales had a field day shocking the students, most of whom were young women, about the abortifacient nature of the Pill and the IUD, as well as the deceptive "safety" of the condom. She also chastised the brochure for being "over 70 years outdated" and proceeded to debunk the myths about the modern methods of NFP. In the afternoon she would continue to explain how NFP works and its wonderful benefits for marriage.

I began my talk by astounding the audience with the fact that nowadays Japan is the country whose government gives more money to the international anti-life movement -- the very same government which is funding their school! I then told them which organizations belong to the death "culture": IPPF (including its affiliate in Bolivia: CIES), the UN, UNFPA, UNICEF, "Catholics for a Free (or rather, Fatal) Choice", the anti-life feminists, etc., etc.

I told also them that no loving husband would want his wife to be pumped with more that 150 different chemical reactions into her body (that's the effect of the Pill), nor having a dangerous piece of plastic perforate her uterus (that's a possible effect of the IUD). I then told them (by now they were dumbfounded) that a loving husband, if serious reasons were present to space the birth of children, would want to preserve the delicate and wonderful inner ecology of his wife by means of NFP. I finally told them that Bolivia's greatest natural resource was not natural gas, nor minerals, nor fruits, nor any of the rest; but Bolivians themselves, especially Bolivian children. And that no foreign country or organization should come to tell them how many children they ought to have or kill - nor should their own government cooperate with them.

Curiously enough, at the end, nobody asked any questions or made any comments. I wondered what happened between the students and the personnel in charge of the school after I left at noon. For, from time to time, some of the latter came to peek at our talks, which were delivered almost always only to the students. I hope they didn't "crucify" Dr. Morales, who stayed there the rest of the afternoon. Poor Dr. Morales, I think I left her with a "hot potato"!

I left Bolivia tired but happy. I think the pro-life cause is in very good hands there. ANE Provida has leaders who are both capable and solidly based on the spiritual life. They are faithful to the Magisterium and supported by their local bishops. But they now face two big challenges. The first one is the weak abortion law they have in Bolivia. It does not protect life unconditionally, but allows babies to be killed when they are conceived out of rape and when their mothers have a health problem while carrying them in their wombs. These two so-called "exceptions" are, of course, at least potentially, abortion on wombs. These two so-called "exceptions" are, of course, at least potentially, abortion on demand. That's especially so if the term "health" is interpreted broadly, as happened in the U.S. and as the pro-abortion, UN-dependent World Health Organization has defined "health".

The second problem is the fact that in vitro fertilization (IVF) is not even regulated at all. This, in a way, is schizophrenic. Because a country that forbids, even though weakly, the killing of unborn children, should also prohibit the killing of human embryos by means of IVF. The danger is that, just as they did with abortion, Bolivian legislators might prohibit IVF but with exceptions.

ANE Provida needs all the help it can get from all of us. It needs to educate its people about the humanity of the unborn child (including the embryo), the inhumanity of abortion and IVF and the monstrosity of a law that allows the killing of innocent human beings by means of so-called "exceptions".

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank Fr. Manzanera, Mr. Rojas, his wife Nora and the rest of the collaborators of ANE Provida for the great pro-life work they do and for the wonderful hospitality they showed me.

U.S. ORGANIZATIONS & FOUNDATIONS LAUNCHING ANTI-LIFE ATTACKS ON HISPANIC COUNTRIES

An Overview by Vida Humana Internacional
Human Life International's Hispanic Division
January 2005

Latin America and the Caribbean are under siege by U.S. anti-life organizations and foundations. Countless attacks on life, family and even Hispanic culture are being perpetrated by them, with the objective of changing the pro-life/family values of entire countries. A quote from Mariana Schkolnik, a consultant with the social development division of the U.N.'s Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, is a good example of the objectives in this anti-life agenda : "Reducing unwanted pregnancies requires cultural changes...this includes adjusting traditional gender roles, erasing the social stigma attached to abortion, and changing outdated family laws".

Anti-Life Parliamentarians Lobbying Foreign Governments

In an article titled "Reproductive Health: A euphemism Used to Promote Abortion",¹ Vida Humana Internacional (VHI - Human Life International's Hispanic Division, www.vidahumana.org), denounced this clever strategy being used to try to legalize abortion in Latin America. A number of countries in the Eastern hemisphere have already approved "reproductive health" legislation which includes abortion rights. ² Recently the Bolivian congress fell into the same trap, when a "reproductive health" bill was secretly approved. Although it does not directly mention abortion, the legalization of abortion is now being promoted by the anti-life movement worldwide, as "a reproductive health need" and it is obvious that legislation would pave the way for abortion legalization in Bolivia. Planned Parenthood's Deadly Invasion

By Magaly Llaguno

Unborn Americans who die at Planned Parenthood's "health clinics"; and their mothers, who suffer abortion's after effects and sometimes also die at these killing centers, are not the only victims of this evil organization. Planned Parenthood crossed over the border and invaded Mexico and other Latin American countries, over 30 years ago.

The Family Planning International Assistance Program (FPIA) was started in 1972 by Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), U.S. associate member of the International Planned Parenthood Federation\Western Hemisphere Region (IPPF\WHR), which has affiliates in every Latin American country. FPIA's objective is "to increase access to reproductive health services and strengthen support for reproductive rights in strategically selected countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean." 1 It supports those organizations that promote "sexuality education and contraceptive services among adolescents" and "safe abortion services". 2

In 1994, FPIA assisted 25 projects in 17 countries, including Nicaragua, Bolivia, Ecuador and Mexico. The Nicaragua project according to PPFA, also provided abortion and MR [menstrual regulation, early abortion] services." 3 A report on Family Planning International Assistance which accompanied a letter from FPIA dated July 10, 1995, states that Si Mujer clinic in Managua, Nicaragua, included "the provision of induced abortion services." FPIA also supported "menstrual regulation services" in the "Sacaba health post" in Bolivia. By 1996, PPFA had already poured more than 285 million into FPIA, its international service arm.

Through the Global Partners program, PPFA's "international public service policy and service initiative", "partnerships" between PPFA affiliates in the U.S. and "family planning" organizations in other countries were established. 4

For example, the Tampico branch of IPPF's Mexico affiliate, MEXFAM, is receiving assistance from Planned Parenthood of Houston & Southeast Texas (PPHSET). When MEXFAM officials visited Houston, PPHSET threw a party attended by "the offices of several legislators and the mayor", and the Houston Chronicle devoted "important space...to coverage of MEXFAM's first visit to Houston." "PPHSET, with the assistance of MEXFAM Tampico, has initiated its own "promotoras" program in Houston's low-income, largely Hispanic East End neighborhood." In Mexico and other Latin American countries, "Promotoras...go door to door in their own neighborhoods to offer family planning information, contraceptives and clinic referrals." 5

These are some of the other Planned Parenthood "partners" in Latin America:

Planned Parenthood of Amarillo and the Texas Panhandle and MEXFAM, IPPF affiliate in San Luis Potosí, Mexico. 6

Planned Parenthood of Palm Beach and Treasure Coast Area in Florida, and APROFAM, IPPF affiliate in Guatemala. 7

Planned Parenthood of Columbia/Willamette and Asociación Demográfica Costarricense, IPPF affiliate in Costa Rica. 8

Planned Parenthood of Southern Arizona and Asociación Demográfica Salvadoreña, IPPF affiliate in El Salvador. 9

Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania and Sí Mujer's "reproductive health clinic" in Nicaragua. Sí Mujer is that country's main feminist pro-abortion group. 10 "Over 80 % of the FPIA funded projects are with women organizations or women's leaders." 11 "Youth partnerships" have also been established. 12 Planned Parenthood's interest in reaching Hispanic youth is obvious when you see its very sexually explicit "Teenwire" website, which has an entire section in Spanish.

Planned Parenthood Federation of America has complained that "countries in Latin America and the Caribbean have the strictest abortion laws in the world." 13 So through its international arm FPIA, it is promoting the legalization of abortion in Latin American countries, where for the most part it is illegal. In its 1991 Annual Report FPIA stated: "Abortion services became an increasingly important component of the FPIA program last year"; and it boasted that it had completed "abortion related projects" in Mexico and Peru, where laws still protect most unborn babies. 14 FPIA also works in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua, as well as Asia and Africa, "to increase access to safe quality abortion services." 15

What PPFA lost in U.S.A.I.D. funds because of the Mexico City Policy and its refusal to stop promoting and/or practicing abortions; American foundations such as Prospect Hill, Erik E. & Edith H. Bergstrom, The Prudential, David and Lucille Packard, Wallace Global Fund, William and Flora Hewlett, etc.; replaced more than adequately. The latter one gave PPFA for its FPIA international program $2,750,000 between 1999 and 2002. 16

Between 1999 and 2000, the David and Lucille Packard Foundation provided almost nine million dollars to anti-life groups and organizations in Mexico. Among them, GIRE (Mexico's main pro-abortion feminist organization) and the so-called Catholics for a Free Choice, which got 3 million of those funds "to develop a long-term regional plan for improving reproductive rights in Latin America" and $655,000 for a "collaborative reproductive rights initiative focusing on Catholic communities in Mexico". The Mac Arthur Foundation and the Ford Foundation have also given a great deal of financial help to the pro-abortion movement in Mexico. 17

FPIA was among the organizers and co-sponsors of a pro-abortion conference in Cuernavaca, Mexico in November 2001, called "Unwanted Pregnancy and Abortion: Public Health Challenges in Latin America and the Caribbean." 18 The program for the conference was painstakingly detailed, as if to design a how-to manual to procure legal abortion in the countries where it is illegal. Laws were reviewed, attitudes were researched and the use of surgical and chemical abortion methods were discussed. Some of the talks given during this three day conference included: "How to manage pain after D&C abortions...", "Cost of maintaining abortion illegal in Chile", "Investigation as a strategy to improve abortion politics in Nicaragua" and "Talking about abortion to diverse audiences" by Frances Kissling, president of so-called "Catholics" for a Free Choice, which is another Planned Parenthood ally. 19

The efforts of Planned Parenthood and its cohorts have paid off in one of Mexico's states. In January 2002, seven of the eleven members of Mexico's Supreme Court, voted in favor of legalizing abortion in cases of rape and fetal malformation or disease, by declaring the pro-abortion Robles Reform, which had been approved the previous year, constitutional.²⁰ Pro-abortion legislator Rosario Robles (the reform is named after her), claimed: "It is a triumph of the women's movement and an advance of the right to choose".²¹ Planned Parenthood Federation of America and American foundations, helped achieve that tragic triumph of the pro-death forces in Mexico and are active in other countries too.

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: The Prevalence of Illegal Abortions

The Prevalence of Illegal Abortions.

"Approximately 1.5 million safe and legal abortions are provided each year in the U.S. If abortions were made illegal once again, the number of illegal abortions would probably reach 1,000,000 per year ... Approximately 125,000 women would suffer major complications, such as hemorrhage, infections and sterility."

— 1989 Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) pamphlet entitled "The Bush Administration: Dragging Us Back to the Back Alley."

Claims by the Pro-Abortionists. Uncertainty over the number of illegal abortions performed in the United States prior to the Abortion Decisions parallels the running dispute over the numbers of maternal deaths caused by complications due to these procedures. If a reliable estimate can be made of the number of illegal abortions performed in the United States before legalization, established mortality ratios can be applied in order to confirm or refute estimates of illegal abortion deaths.

The most common pro-abortion figure cited regarding illegal abortions was approximately one million per year in the two decades preceding Roe v. Wade. Pro-life activists dispute this figure and contend that the real number was much lower, usually in the vicinity of 100,000 to 200,000 per year.

Documentation for the figure of one million illegal abortions per year was very seldom advanced by pro-abortionists, but it appears to be based on a 1934 study that makes the unsubstantiated assumption that there was one illegal abortion for each 3.55 births. This figure was a simple extrapolation based on the case histories of 10,000 women who received services at New York City's Margaret Sanger birth control clinic during the time period 1925 to 1929.[5]

Abortion statistician J.M. Finnis gives us a detailed background on the invalidity of pro-abortion estimates;

For example, the great majority of commentators in recent American law journals accept that 1,200,000 is a plausible estimate of the number of abortions per annum in the United States. But on examination it appears that this figure is based on a study published in 1934 — according to which it may be assumed that there is one illegal abortion for every 3.55 live births. And this latter figure is an extrapolation from the case histories of 10,000 women who attended the Margaret Sanger birth control clinic in New York City between 1925 and 1929!

Another widely accepted figure for the United States is 600,000 per annum — this by extrapolation from the case histories of the women who volunteered the information in Kinsey's famous study of female sexuality [a group which included a negligible proportion of blacks and Catholics, and which was unrepresentative even of urban white women]. The statistics committee at a 1958 conference called by Planned Parenthood agreed that the number may be between 200,000 and 1,000,000, and that there is no way of determining the number more closely than that.

One should not assume that the lower limit of 200,000 is a sacred figure. Consider, for example, the study done in Indianapolis in 1941-42, involving married, white Protestant couples: 1.9 percent of their pregnancies ended in illegal abortions. If we were to extrapolate this figure and apply it to the United States for the year 1940, it would have meant that there were 48,000 illegal abortion in the United States in that year. If we were to increase this number by 50 percent to allow for population growth up to the year 1969, we could be estimating the number of illegal abortions per year in the United States as roughly 72,000. Clearly, this also is an unrepresentative sample, but it serves to indicate the range of extrapolations based on unrepresentative samples that could be used to sway public opinion.[6]

In other words, the "one million" figure makes two very bold and unfounded assumptions in addition to the ratio mentioned above;

1. that all women in the United States possessed the same relevant characteristics as those visiting an illegal birth control clinic in the largest city in the land, New York; and that
2. all women had the same access to illegal abortion networks as did women in the illegal abortion capital of the country, an obvious impossibility.

It should be noted that, in the first full year after abortion was legalized (1974), there were a total of 745,000 legal abortions and an estimated 50,000 illegal abortions, for a total of about 800,000.[7] To assert that the total numbers of abortions in this country would decrease dramatically as a result of legalization is grossly illogical. After all, what other illegal activity would decrease if it were legalized?

A second figure advanced by pro-abortionists is 600,000 illegal abortions per year. Once again, this number is based on a large number of unwarranted assumptions and originates in a study whose methodology was questionable at best.

In his 1952 publication entitled Sexual Behavior in the Human Female, 'sexologist' Alfred Kinsey committed the same fundamental errors that he did in his 1948 Male Report. [8] To begin with, all of Kinsey's conclusions were based upon information gleaned from volunteers. This "volunteer bias" invariably skews study results. Additionally, Kinsey made no attempt to attain a representative cross-section of American women. His sample included a negligible number of Catholic, Protestant, and minority women (all of whom were relatively conservative in their sexual practices at the time), and was considered unrepresentative of even urban White women. These errors unquestionably caused an unacceptable degree of bias towards very liberal sexual practices, including abortion.[9]

The dangers of such errors can be illustrated by applying the same procedure to a similarly unrepresentative sample. A 1941-1942 study of White Protestant couples in Indianapolis showed that a mere 1.9 percent of their pregnancies ended in illegal abortions. If this percentage were applied to the American population in, say, 1965, we can conclude that only 71,500 illegal abortions took place nationally that year, which is perhaps an unrealistically low figure.

An Estimate of Illegal Abortion Prevalence. In its 1978 A Speaker's and Debater's Notebook, the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL, now NARAL Pro-Choice America) quotes an illegal abortion maternal death rate of 40 per 100,000, and an annual total of 200,000 illegal abortions before Roe v. Wade.

The late Dr. Christopher Tietze of the Population Council, the country's most experienced abortion statistician, believed that the illegal abortion death rate was about 100 deaths per 100,000 abortions.[10] The Centers for Disease Control estimates that about 150 women died annually as a result of complications suffered due to illegal abortions in the decade before the first state legalized the procedure, leading to a total of perhaps 150,000 annual illegal abortions in the early and mid-1960s.[11]

Statistically, these numbers lead to two alternatives, only one of which is logical and realistic;

(1) NARAL is admitting that there were only about 80 annual deaths due to illegal abortion before Roe v. Wade (i.e., 200,000 illegal abortions times 40 deaths per 100,000). This agrees almost perfectly with the Centers for Disease Control figure of 90 fatalities in 1972. Either this number is correct, or;

(2) using the maternal death ratios given above (40 per 100,000) and NARAL's claimed 5,000 to 10,000 annual maternal deaths, this means that there were from 12.5 million to 25 million illegal abortions annually in the United States before Roe v. Wade, an obvious absurdity.

These estimates are entirely typical of a number of approximations that have been made by experts in the field of abortion epidemiology and statistics. Higher estimates are generally accompanied by little or no documentation.

Of the above two choices, it is perfectly obvious that option (1) is the only one that can possibly be correct; there were about 80 to 90 maternal deaths annually from illegal abortion before Roe v. Wade.

This figure is supported by the famous 'sexologist' Dr. Alfred Kinsey, who found that, before legalization, about 90 percent of all abortions in the United States were performed by licensed physicians in clinics that rivaled hospitals in terms of cleanliness, expertise, and up-to-date equipment.[12] Kinsey, speaking at the famous 1955 conference on induced abortion held by Planned Parenthood, said that "I will add that about 87 per cent of all the induced abortions that we have in our records were performed by physicians. It is only about 8 per cent that were self-induced, and if you were to throw out all those, it would not materially change the over-all picture of induced abortions." [13]

Two years later, Dr. Mary Calderone wrote that "The [Planned Parenthood] conference estimated that 90 per cent of all illegal abortions are done by physicians. Call them what you will, abortionists or anything else, they are still physicians, trained as such; and many of them are in good standing in their communities. ... There were only 260 deaths in the whole country attributed to abortions of any kind [in 1957]." [14]

It can therefore be concluded that from 150,000 to 200,000 illegal abortions took place annually before the process of legalization began.

How Many Women Died Due to Illegal Abortion Complications?

"Before Roe v. Wade, hundreds of thousands of women had illegal abortions [annually], and one in 10 of them died."
- July 7, 1989 USA Today staff editorial.

Introduction. In October of 1989, when several minor restrictions on abortion were enacted by the Pennsylvania State legislature in its modified Abortion Control Act, local pro-abortion activists and lawmakers immediately began to make numerical claims that even most other pro-abortionists found embarrassing. The local pro-aborts claimed that Mexico has the same number of abortions that the United States does, although they are all illegal there and the Mexican population is much smaller than that of the United States (101 million vs. 278 million at the time); that 140,000 women died of illegal abortions every year in Mexico (according to the United Nations, the actual number is 159); and that this many women would die in the United States if abortion were criminalized again.[15] This is a factor of exaggeration amounting to one hundred thousand percent, or a thousand times the actual number!

Although this is one of the most extreme claims recently made regarding criminal abortion mortality, the pro-abortionists bandy about many round numbers without substantiation, and all of them seem to end in "000." There are literally hundreds of examples of such lying;

- Two days after the Supreme Court's Webster v. Reproductive Health Services decision, the daily newsmagazine USA Today stated as fact in an understandably unsigned staff editorial that "Before Roe v. Wade, hundreds of thousands of women had illegal abortions [annually], and one in 10 of them died."

Using the pro-abort's own figures of 200,000 to one million illegal abortions per year, USA Today is therefore stating that 20,000 to 100,000 women died of illegal abortions every year before Roe. This amounts to an exaggeration factor of 55,555 percent over the actual figure!

- A San Francisco pro-abortion group calling itself "Men Who Care About Women's Lives," which including Brian Willson (the 'peace' activist who lay on railroad tracks in front of a 200-ton locomotive and lost his legs as a result), echoed the most popular figure when it mailed 10,000 wire coathangers to President George Bush in 1989, representing the "number of women who will die annually should pro-choice be outlawed." [16]
- A New York Times writer claimed that "Their histories date back to women who had back-alley abortions that resulted in internal infections and other, more disturbing, complications. Legalization has largely eliminated these things, as well as the estimated 5,000 annual abortion-related deaths in the years before Roe ... Unfortunately, their [19th Century doctors] successful effort to make abortion illegal simply drove it into the back alley, where, according to some estimates, as many as two million abortions a year were performed - a number that if even half accurate should sober up today's Victorian nostalgists. ... [Abortionist David Bingham says] "I save lives. I respect these people who have picketed outside my office for 25 years, in and out of snowstorms ... I know what would happen if they were successful politically - a lot more tragedy, a lot more deaths. I saw what it was like when it was illegal. Look - we have saved tens of thousands of lives, maybe hundreds of thousands. ... The day abortion became legal in New York State was also the day that we - in Detroit - noticed that the number of patients coming into the hospital with 'miscarriages' plummeted." [17]

Pro-Abortionists Repudiate the Claims. Without question, the most effective lie the pro-abortion movement used to obtain abortion on demand in the USA and many other countries was the allegation that thousands of women died of illegal, unsanitary abortions each year before the procedure was legalized.

The numbers "5,000 to 10,000" were nice and round and sounded eminently plausible. They were therefore uncritically accepted by most of the media, some of the Courts, and many members of the public.

However, the pro-abortionists never presented a particle of solid evidence whatever to support their statistics. They didn't have to - the media and the courts were on their side. Therefore, they could lie with total impunity.

However, in the early 1970s, numerous pro-abortionists acknowledged that these numbers were greatly exaggerated even as they were being used as a potent tool for advancing abortion rights.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, one of the founders of the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (now NARAL Pro-Choice America), and the former owner of the largest abortion clinic in the world (the Center for Reproductive and Sexual Health, or C*R*A*S*H) states in a quote widely used by pro-lifers to highlight the dishonesty of pro-abortionists;

How many deaths were we talking about when abortion was illegal? In NARAL, we generally emphasized the frame of the individual case, not the mass statistics, but when we spoke of the latter it was always '5,000 to 10,000 deaths a year.' I confess that I knew the figures were totally false, and I suppose the others did too if they stopped to think of it. But in the 'morality' of our revolution, it was a useful figure, widely accepted, so why go out of our way to correct it with honest statistics? The overriding concern was to get the [abortion] laws eliminated, and anything within reason that had to be done was permissible. [18]

Many other pro-abortionists freely admitted that the "pro-choice" movement simply lied about the number of women who died of complications due to illegal abortions;

- Pro-abortion writer Marian Faux confirms the thought processes behind what she labels "propaganda" in her book Roe v. Wade; "An image of tens of thousands of women being maimed or killed each year by illegal abortion was so persuasive a piece of propaganda that the [pro-abortion] movement could be forgiven its failure to double-check the facts." [19]

We have to wonder if Faux would be so "forgiving" of pro-lifers who deliberately lied and exaggerated the numbers of women currently dying of legal abortion.

- Dr. Malcolm Potts of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, one of the original activists who helped promote abortion throughout the world, claimed in 1970 that "Those who want the [abortion] law to be liberalized will stress the hazards of illegal abortion and claim that hundreds, or thousands, of women die unnecessarily each year - when the actual number is far lower." [20]

- Even the gender feminist "Bible," Sisterhood is Powerful, recognized that "A study made in the 1930s, before the development of antibiotics made even illegal abortion less deadly than it used to be, came up with this number of 10,000 deaths; but it is no longer anywhere near the truth and has no place in any serious discussion of abortion." [21]

The "Official" Figures Are Confirmed By European Experience. According to the United States Bureau of Vital Statistics and the Centers for Disease Control, the last time 1,000 women died of illegal abortions in the United States was in the year before penicillin became widely available to the public - in 1942. From this date, the number of maternal deaths due to illegal abortions declined steeply until it stabilized at about 90 to 150 per year during the decade preceding Roe v. Wade. [22]

It is important to note that the most impressive drop in abortion mortality was prior to legalization in 1973. The United States maternal mortality rate (which accounts for all deaths due to abortion, childbirth, and ectopic pregnancies) per 100,000 live births declined almost linearly from 37.1/100,000 in 1960 to 9.9/100,000 in 1978, for an average annual decline of 1.5/100,000. The rate was 29.1 per 100,000 in 1966, the year before the first state legalized abortion and 14.6/100,000 in 1974, the year after Roe v. Wade, representing an average annual decline of 1.8/100,000. In 1987, the rate was beginning to flatten out at 6.6/100,000 as the lowest practicable level was being approached. [23]

Note that Figure 7-1 shows a steady and steep decline in abortion deaths from 1942 on, finally stabilizing at about 25 to 30 per year in 1976 and then dropping again to about 20 per year in 1980. This decline is clearly unrelated to the legal status of abortion. Once again, it is critical to note that the most impressive drop in abortion mortality was prior to legalization. This steady trend reflects advances in medicine and the introduction of safer abortion techniques, both legal and illegal.

This Report is available on the Web site of the Centers for Disease Control (CDCs) at <http://www.cdc.gov>. Note that the figures in the above table include maternal deaths due to spontaneous abortions [early miscarriages] and an "unknown" category. These latter categories are excluded in Figure 7-3.

This steady trend reflects advances in medicine and the introduction of safer abortion techniques, both legal and illegal. This statistical inclination is accompanied by a steady decline in overall maternal mortality, and some pro-abortion activists have claimed that easy availability to abortion has been a key factor in this trend. However, Dr. Bernard Nathanson has also said that

In fact, the lowering of maternal mortality has been due largely, if not entirely, to advances in anesthesia techniques; the development of new and more powerful antibiotics; the emergence of realtime ultrasound; major strides in laboratory technology with a deeper understanding of the mechanisms of infectious disease; more sophisticated transfusion techniques and - perhaps most important - a higher and more standardized level of training of nurses, medical students and resident physicians in obstetrics and gynecology.[24]

It is important to note that the death rates for legal abortions in European countries were virtually identical to the death rates for illegal abortions in the United States. Since legal abortions in Europe were performed under the best prevailing conditions at the time, we must conclude that the vast majority of illegal abortions performed in the United States took place under similar favorable and sanitary conditions, not seedy back-alley abortion mills, as described later in this Chapter.

The actual maternal death rates for abortions in three countries in the late 1940s were;

Sweden (legal), 250 per 100,000, 1946-1948;
Denmark (legal), 195 per 100,000, 1940-1950;
U.S. (illegal), 165 per 100,000, 1940-1950.[25]

Another fact the pro-abortion movement absolutely cannot afford to admit is that the country with the lowest maternal mortality in the world in 1996 was the Irish Republic, with 1.83 per 100,000 live births - a nation where abortion is illegal. By contrast, the United Kingdom and the Netherlands, where abortion is free for all women, have 7.72 and 9.64 deaths per 100,000 live births respectively.[26]

Documentation Problems? The argument most often used by pro-abortion groups against these "official" illegal abortion-death figures is that almost all of the deaths caused by illegal abortion before 1973 were not reported or properly documented.

However, this obviously cannot be the case. As described above, the maternal death rate declined smoothly during the legalization period 1966 to 1974. If the cause of thousands of annual maternal deaths was suddenly removed during this time frame, a precipitous drop could have been expected in the absolute numbers of maternal deaths attributable to all causes. However, there were only about 1,100 maternal deaths from all causes in 1966, and there was a smooth decline in the numbers of maternal deaths each year not only over this time period but in the several years following it as well, after abortion had been fully legalized throughout all fifty states (see Figure 7-3).[27]

Additionally, when a woman died of a botched or self-inflicted illegal abortion before 1973, the cause of death became quite obvious during the autopsy (which is required for deaths under unknown circumstances), and this type of death was officially recorded as such by a physician who had no personal interest in the case and had no reason to falsify the death certificate. Illegal abortion deaths were invariably reported to the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the U.S. Public Health Department. In fact, many physicians who wanted to see abortion legalized went public with such deaths in order to push for abortion law reform or repeal.

The abortion-death reporting situation is now exactly the opposite of what it was before abortion was legalized. Instead of being properly reported, many abortion-caused deaths are covered up for obvious reasons by attribution to other causes, as described later in this Chapter.

The Way it Was: Illegal Abortions Before Roe v. Wade.

"Most illegal medical abortionists will not handle a case when the pregnancy is beyond the twelfth week, but there are no doubt some exceptions. The technique of the well-accredited criminal abortionist is usually good. They have to be good to stay in business, since otherwise they would be extremely vulnerable to police action."

— Alan Guttmacher, M.D. Babies by Choice or by Chance [Garden City, New York: Doubleday, 1959], page 216.

First: The Way It Wasn't. It was relatively simple for pro-abortionists to create apparently plausible statistics regarding illegal abortion deaths, but putting a face on the suffering allegedly endured by a vast number of women was another matter entirely.

One tactic that is still very commonly used by pro-abortion writers and speakers involves lurid descriptions of the ordeals purportedly suffered by the vast majority of the women who sought illegal abortions before Roe v. Wade.

It is very instructive and interesting from a historical perspective to examine the extraordinary differences in descriptions of the "typical" illegal abortion experiences advanced by pro-abortion activists and by the illegal abortionists themselves.

The old lies about maternal abortion deaths worked extremely well before abortion was completely legalized, and so the pro-abortion forces and their toadies in the press began to work the same angle in mid-1989, when it appeared that Roe v. Wade was in danger of imminent demise after the Supreme Court's Webster decision. There appeared to be an unofficial but enthusiastic contest waged among pro-abortion writers to see just who could produce the most graphic and sensational picture of 'the way things were.'

This, of course, is the classic way to identify people with closed minds: They simply discard or ignore all evidence that does not agree with their conclusions.

One excellent specimen of the "horror" genre is provided by Brett Harvey of Mother Jones Magazine, who wrote that It's hard for today's young women to imagine abortions in dark, dirty rooms that smelled of Clorox, done by doctors who breathed bourbon fumes and copped a feel before they got to work, and warned you not to scream or they'd walk out and leave you alone in the middle of nowhere. Or self-aborting alone in your college dorm room, scared to tell anyone, watching your metal wastebasket fill up with blood, flushing the fetus down the toilet, terrified that it would clog the plumbing and you'd be found out. Or being rushed to the hospital hemorrhaging from a perforated uterus, only to be interrogated by police officers demanding to know where you got the abortion ...[28]

One obvious purpose of the almost incandescent level of anger that saturates these anecdotes is to generate indignation that will be translated into action. In other words, "back-alley" abortion stories are excellent tools for recruiting sympathetic readers into ..

the pro-abortion cause.

Other pro-abortion writers have added a second purpose to their prose: The slandering of pro-life activists. The purpose of such classic "mixed" propaganda is to generate sympathy for the underdog and hatred and distaste towards the opposition.

One obvious characteristic of these ravings is the almost explosive level of indignation and anger that seems to boil off the page as pro-aborts compete with each other to see who can make up the most garish and ridiculous story. Notice the extremely high degree of artificial outrage Sherry Matulis demonstrates as she describes "Why Abortion Must Remain the Law of the Land" in her article of the same name in The Humanist;

I'd like to see how they'd ["holier-than-thou" pro-lifers] fare if they were put in the position of being young and raped and pregnant and scared witless — if they thought that they could very well die and leave two little children motherless. I'd like to see if their smug pseudomorality would hold up if they had to experience firsthand what a real "abortion mill" was all about: The incredible, indescribable filth and stench. The cobwebs hanging from the ceiling. The blood-spattered floor. The two-aspirin "anesthetic." The slop bucket at the end of the old enameled kitchen table. The drunken old butcher coming at them, a whiskey glass in one hand and a sharp instrument in the other, saying to them "You can take your pants down now, but you shoulda — ha, ha — left 'em on before." Putting his fist in their faces and saying, "This is gonna hurt and you'd better keep your mouth shut or I'll shut it for you! Whacking away at their insides for 15 eyeball-popping minutes. And then — insult added to injury — offering them $20 of their $1,000 back for "a quick blowjob" ...

Women young, old, black, white — known to the medical books only by their initials and their perforated or Lysol-damaged wombs and their resultant infections and suffering and eventual deaths ... Women with bent heads and unbent coathangers, screaming in the night — dead at 16, 18, 20, 22. Women for whom the phrase right to life was totally without meaning or substance, who were murdered as surely as putting a gun to their heads by the same sort of blue-nosed and hypocritical element in our society that once again rears its ugly, unfeeling head to laud what might be and to condemn what is ... [emphasis in the original].[29]

The Illegal Abortionists and Their Supporters Speak. The above passages are entirely typical of descriptions rendered by pro-abortionists over the past quarter-century. When reading such prose, it is almost possible to see the writers shudder with mock horror as they eagerly paint the classic caricature of the filthy (and invariably male) back-alley butchers who terrorized women while taking their last few grocery dollars, and as they describe the ordeals of horribly lacerated women dying in unspeakable agony after undergoing abortions in fleabag motel rooms, in kitchens, and even in the back seats of beat-up cars.

The truth of the matter is far different from the fiction. Far from being a filthy back-alley butcher, the typical illegal abortionist was a licensed medical professional (usually a medical doctor) practicing in a clean, spacious, and antiseptic suite of offices. He or she enjoyed the respect and the protection of the police and many of the community's most distinguished citizens.

Illegal abortionist "Dr. Edith" was a professional, like the vast majority of her peers.

She said that "In those days [in the 1940s], in any large city, there was quite an assortment of illegal abortionists, and some of them were quite good. ... They did safe, clean abortions, and it was good money for them. ... We had two good abortionists in Baltimore." [30]

Dr. Alan Guttmacher described another professional abortionist who was so respected in his community that he could even speak about his activities at public meetings without fear of prosecution;

However, more than two decades ago [in the 1930s], Baltimore's Dr. B. made the statement at a public meeting, in which the danger of abortion was being overemphasized by some well-meaning do-gooder, that in 12,000 illegal abortions with which he had been personally associated there had been only 4 deaths. It is to be remembered that this remarkable record predated antibiotics. [31]

However, the evidence that abortion used to be "safe and illegal" extends far beyond the anecdotal. 'Sexologist' Dr. Alfred Kinsey noted that "... about 87 per cent of all the induced abortions that we have in our records were performed by physicians." [32] Dr. Mary S. Calderone, founder of the Sexuality Information and Educational Council of the United States (SIECUS), confirmed Kinsey's conclusions. She wrote that "The [Planned Parenthood] conference estimated that 90 per cent of all illegal abortions are done by physicians. Call them what you will, abortionists or anything else, they are still physicians, trained as such; and many of them are in good standing in their communities." [33]

Prolific author and leading population controller Garrett Hardin asked

Who performs illegal abortions? Here popular literature goes far astray with its lurid pictures of back-street quacks — filthy, ill-trained and incompetent. There are quacks, to be sure, but they are in the minority. Most abortions are performed by licensed physicians, usually at some personal risk. Dr. [Alan] Guttmacher [Medical Director of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America] estimates that 80 percent of the abortions in the U.S. are performed by M.D.'s; Dr. [Mary S.] Calderone says 90 percent. In one noted instance of record, a single physician in the Baltimore region, Dr. G. Lotrell Timanus, performed over 5,000 abortions before he was stopped by the law. Is it fair of us to ask physicians to perform operations that we are unwilling either to forego or to legalize? [34]

As described earlier, the primary motivation claimed by pro-abortion activists in their crusade to remove all restrictions on abortion was a concern for maternal health.

However, the true objective of eliminating abortion laws was more utilitarian. Pro-abortionists hoped to eliminate the laws, not to defuse the danger of back-alley abortionists — but to codify and expand existing practice in order to allow doctors to more easily obtain insurance and legal coverage.

As psychiatrist Dr. Jerome Kummer acknowledged, "Proposed legislation to change existing abortion laws is merely codifying that which reputable physicians, and I'll use that word again — reputable physicians — in some of our leading hospitals have been doing for a good many years." [35]

In other words, the great 'reform/repeal' effort was strictly a sound business strategy.

Decades later, free-standing abortion clinics are still nothing more than moneymaking machines for entrepreneurs. In 1985, 75 percent of all abortions performed in the United States took place in clinics that killed 1,000 or more preborn children per year. The two percent of clinics that committed more than 5,000 abortions per year accounted for one-fifth of all abortions in the country.[36] Abortionists like Edward Allred and Canada's Henry Morgentaler run chains of killing centers that have made their owners millionaires many times over.

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: Lifestyles of the Rich and Unscrupulous Lifestyles of the Rich and Unscrupulous. Pro-abortion writers often described illegal abortionists as filthy butchers when it was necessary to generate legislative or public indignation.

 SHARE

However, when it was convenient, illegal abortionists were portrayed as sympathetic and heroic individuals who risked their careers and livelihoods for a pure and noble cause, because they "felt sorry for women in desperate straits," or because they "believed in the cause of women's freedom." Some writers, including Malcolm Potts, even believed that illegal abortionists were necessary in order for a modern society to evolve properly; "The illegal abortionist has played an essential role in the evolution of modern industrial urban living, with its low birth rates, intensive education, and nuclear family system. He or she was classed as a criminal, but without their help, history would have taken a different course." [37]

Naturopath Ruth Barnett, an acquaintance of Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger, gives us a truly fascinating glimpse into the life of a typical big-city illegal abortionist. Barnett performed approximately forty thousand illegal abortions during the period 1918 to 1968 in Portland, Oregon. At least 70 percent of these women were referred to her by reputable practicing physicians. [38]

Barnett's story has intrigued abortion historians for many years. During her half-century of illegal activity, Barnett earned the equivalent of more than $40,000,000 in 2007 dollars. As she explained, "My income during the years at the Stewart Clinic was as much as $182,000 a year. I make no apologies for earning that kind of money ..." [39]

Barnett considered herself to be quite a philanthropist. For example, she used tens of thousands of dollars of her own money to reopen the Portland Meadows horse-racing track after the disastrous Vanport Flood of 1948. Barnett's only daughter, Margaret St. James, was married and divorced ten times, including three times in one year. St. James boasted that "I married everybody who asked, like throwing cards up in the air. If you didn't like how they fell, you got divorced." [40]

Because of her promiscuous lifestyle, St. James often employed her mother's "services," and was aborted by her six times. Her mother supported all ten of her husbands, and lavished many costly gifts upon her, including a huge home with a full-time cook, housekeeper, nurse and gardener. St. James remembered cardboard boxes stuffed with money scattered around her mother's house. [40]

Barnett operated her "abortion mill" freely and openly in Portland for 33 years without being hampered by police, who simply winked at her activities. Her longevity record was nearly doubled by Dr. Albert Littlefield, who ran a high-volume illegal abortion mill in Portland for 65 years without being investigated by the police a single time.

There is no doubt at all that, if these practitioners were butchering women as pro-abortionists claim, the police would have immediately moved in and closed them down. As Dr. Alan Guttmacher acknowledged, "They have to be good to stay in business, since otherwise they would be extremely vulnerable to police action." [41]

And Barnett was very good indeed. She stated that "And there is one figure of which I am entirely certain. In all those [40,000] abortions over all those years, I never lost a single patient " lost a single patient.

It is important to note that Barnett was not a medical doctor, that she had absolutely no formal medical training, and that her abortion training consisted solely of performing abortions.[42] And yet her safety record is probably unsurpassed by any legal abortionist who has performed as many (or more) abortions.

Barnett also left us a revealing glimpse of her 'front-alley' abortion clinic, which was worlds apart from the filthy hovels that pro-abortionists so eagerly present as the reality;

In the movies, they always depict the fallen woman sneaking up a dirty, rickety stairway to a dismal room — or making her way, furtively, into a dark alley that leads to a decrepit shack where some alcoholic doctor or untutored butcher performs the abortion. A clinic such as mine was not that way at all. It was a bright, cheerful place where women's problems were handled quickly, efficiently and with dignity, no matter what the circumstances of the patient."[43]

Barnett also described the lavish lifestyle of another local illegal abortionist, Dr. Ed Stewart, operator of the Stewart Clinic on Broadway Street;

He owned and operated a racing stable, and played an important role in making horse racing a respected activity in Oregon. He was a cultured man. A connoisseur of art, he kept impressive collections of paintings both in his clinic and his home ... Dr. Stewart's [abortion] rooms were beautifully furnished. There were eleven of them and they took up nearly the whole eighth floor of the Broadway Building. His reputation had been flawless and his name was known throughout the Northwest wherever women were in trouble.[44]

Barnett was not the only abortuary operator in the "Abortion Capital of the Northwest." In her book, she describes the office of George Watt, another illegal abortionist; "Here, as in his consulting room, I was impressed with not only the antiseptic cleanliness but the wholesome purity that stems from plenty of hot water and soap suds."[45]

Finally, in 1951, Barnett was arrested for the first time — and, revealingly, her troubles with the law were not initiated by police, but by an ambitious newspaper journalist who was determined to make a name for himself. As Detective Barney Shields reminisced, "We never bothered any abortion clinics. Everybody knew of them ..."[46]

This kind of statement makes pro-lifers wonder whether the police will enforce the law against illegal abortionists as enthusiastically (and brutally) as they do against rescuers, should abortion again become illegal.

Domestic "butchers" were certainly not the only topics favored by pro-abortion writers. Their pulp novels and propaganda flyers are frequently crowded with descriptions of the archetypical squalid Mexican abortion mill and vivid portrayals of hideous ordeals involving drunken, untrained, lecherous Mexican abortionists. These provide an interesting but primarily fictional portrait of the way things were before Roe v. Wade.

One Zero Population Growth writer describes a report from a young woman whom she referred to an abortionist named "Dr. Ponce" in Mexico City:

Things were really good down in Mexico City. Everything happens so fast there is almost an aura of fantasy. The clinic (more like a mansion really) is very nice and comfortable. There were about seventeen women there the morning I had the D&C done, plus some in the afternoon. They get you up right after and feed you fruit and drink and cookies right away — helps take your mind off the cramping. Some of us went sightseeing that afternoon. Mexico City is really nice, and I had no trouble at all with any facet of the journey or my stay there. ... One young woman added, somewhat apologetically, "You know, in a way it was almost fun." [47]

This description of Mexican abortion mills is obviously far more accurate than the popular vision that has been foisted off on the public for many years. This is due to several reasons;

- If illegal abortionists were so plentiful and easy to access in the United States, why would anyone want to go all the way to Mexico — unless the abortion "experience" there was better than it was in the United States? Many women obviously saw an unplanned pregnancy as an opportunity to do a little tourism in Mexico and incidentally get an abortion on the side, guaranteeing their anonymity.
- How could individual women have learned about Mexican abortion mills? Think of how difficult it would have been for an average woman to make such a connection. Obviously, pro-abortion organizations acted like "funnels" by referring women to the illegal Mexican abortion mills. They operated sub rosa referral centers and even, in some cases, ran bus lines to abortion mills in Juarez and Tijuana [48]. They often boast about such activities today. Members of these pro-abortion groups claimed to "care deeply about women," and would therefore take care not to refer them to "butchers."
- If illegal abortionists ran assembly line abortion mills that charged a thousand dollars apiece, as the pro-aborts claim, does it make any sense that they would run the archetypical "filthy warrens?" Wouldn't they instead try to increase business by maintaining spotlessly antiseptic clinics like those operated by Portland, Oregon illegal abortionist Ruth Barnett? After all, competition would be cutthroat in a booming business like illegal abortion, and reputation would be everything!

Recalling the "Bad Old Days" for Current Political Advantage. The most powerful weapon used by pro-abortion strategists is unquestionably the fabricated image of thousands of suffering and desperate women being brutalized at the hands of back-alley butchers. This weapon was used to legalize abortion, and pro-abortionists are now reviving it in their continuing political efforts to keep abortion legal. Nevertheless, a chronic lack of attention to detail often exposes such stories as outright fiction.

When the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARRAL, now NARAL Pro-Choice America) perceived a growing threat to "abortion rights" in the mid-1980s, it attempted to capitalize on this theme with its "Silent No More" campaign. NARAL hoped to gather tens of thousands of vividly-written stories of women who had had illegal abortions (or who knew other women who had done so), and planned to publicize them aggressively in order to influence public opinion on abortion.

NARAL made its biggest push for stories in May of 1985, when it advertised widely among its 200,000 members and the public, asking for letters detailing experiences with among its 200,000 members and the public, asking for letters detailing experiences with illegal abortions. NARAL proudly claimed that it received "Tens of thousands of letters" — but, mysteriously, only 68 were submitted to the Congressional Record for publication on May 22nd, 1985, and even these were of truly wretched, even laughably horrible, quality.

For example, one rambling letter in the Record claimed that "Thirty-five years ago I was pregnant — my baby had died in 4th month of pregnancy but because of abortion being illegal I couldn't have an abortion — I had to carry that dead child for 5 months before I finally aborted it myself. I carried that child for 5 agonizing months knowing I was carrying a dead child — please legalize abortion — it must be pro choice." [49]

Anyone knowledgeable in fetal development or obstetrics will realize that the situation described in the above letter is, at best, dubious from both the medical and legal standpoints.

It was revealing to note that most of NARAL's letters were written not by women who were in truly desperate circumstances, but by women who wanted abortion to remain legal for purely selfish reasons of convenience. One typical letter asserted that

My abortion occurred when I was a married adult woman. I simply had not fully dealt with the role of motherhood, and how it might impact upon the rather new career path which I was pursuing. I was not raped. I do not think I carried a deformed fetus. I was not a teenager. I was simply a woman who believes that her uterus was her own, as was the decision as to when or if it would bear a child. [50]

NARRAL and other pro-abortion groups sponsored scores of public "readings" all over the country, where women would stand and read their letters of victimization before crowds of weeping sympathizers. All of these letters were similar in one critical respect: The 'victim of illegal abortion' was invariably anonymous. When pro-life activists in several cities asked questions about the persons in the letters, they were met with shouts accusing them of "insensitivity!"

The pro-abortionists used two anonymous plaintiffs to secure abortion on demand in this country. The stories manufactured by (and for) these plaintiffs were outright lies, as the plaintiffs themselves have revealed. Whenever they initiate litigation to overturn abortion restrictions, pro-aborts also use anonymous plaintiffs, because they cannot produce anyone who is really damaged by the pro-life laws. And now, anonymous 'victims' are used in an attempt to curry sympathy with the public in an effort to keep abortion legal.

Pro-lifers should not be afraid to challenge these "Silent No More" stories as the lies they most certainly are.

Perhaps the most spectacular story regarding a 'victim' of illegal abortion was provided Frank Mendiola, a Los Angeles homosexual and pro-abortion activist.

NARRAL used Mendiola's extremely graphic "Silent No More" tale as the centerpiece of one of its national fundraising letters. This undated appeal, which was signed by NARAL's then-Executive Director Kate Michelman, listed a series of anonymous 'victimization' stories, including one that read: "Frank, who wept as he told of his beloved twin sister, who bled to death from an illegal abortion after being brutally raped at the age of 14."

Mendiola was very much in demand at pro-abortion rallies. He would read his 'open letter' to President Reagan describing how his twin sister 'Rose Elizabeth' died from a botched illegal abortion. Mendiola sobbed about how "She bled to death on a kitchen table. Yes, Mr. President, on a kitchen table."

It was not long before Mendiola's story began to come apart at the seams under the glare of publicity surrounding a related matter. According to the December 10, 1987 issue of the Los Angeles Times, Mendiola called in numerous bomb threats to abortion clinics, abortionists, and even his own home so that "... you people, the media, will come down with a harder line on those people who are harassing the clinics."

Further investigation into Mendiola's background revealed that he had been lying about his 'twin sister' dying on a kitchen table, because he had no twin sister — in fact, he had no sisters at all![51]

At his trial, Mendiola was given a one-year suspended sentence because, as the judge put it, he had "good intentions." [52] Now imagine any judge suspending sentence on any pro-lifer for threatening to bomb an abortion mill because he had "good intentions!"

Pro-aborts packed the courtroom in Mendiola's support. Many members of the "Committee for Reproductive Rights" appeared at his trial, and Sherna Gluck of the CRR said that "Clearly, the whole thing is very sad. I just feel very badly for him. He is a very fine person, and I guess the worst one can say is he is just confused. I'm sure it was [done] with the very best of intentions." [52]

Even when Mendiola was exposed and confronted with his lies, he merely altered his story to say that it actually had happened to a sister's friend, and that "I was her voice." Naturally, he refused to identify the person in question. The reason he didn't simply describe his sister's friend in the first place is obvious.

This incident helps illustrate the incredible arrogance of pro-abortionists who will continue to lie like rugs even when they are caught red-tongued, and shows how out of touch with reality they really are.

Mendiola's bogus story also helps to call into question all of the other pro-abortion propaganda stories of women who died of illegal abortions before the procedure was legalized. At least 95 percent of these "Silent No More" stories are complete fabrications, as proven elsewhere in this Chapter.

Additionally, this dramatic case confirmed what pro-lifers have asserted for many years: that pro-abortionists threaten and commit violence against their own clinics in order to discredit pro-lifers.

The Battle of Gory Photographs. Pro-life activists routinely display graphic pictures of aborted preborn babies. The pro-abortion comeback to this tactic is to wave around photographs of nude women who have supposedly butchered themselves through self-inflicted abortions. These usually feature unclothed women in fetal positions on a blood-soaked carpet, with the instruments of their 'demise' in obvious view.

The surgical "instrument" is invariably either a carefully arranged coat hanger, knitting needle, or bottle of lye skillfully placed so the large-print label can be read by the viewer.

Curiously, identical pictures in different publications refer to different names, times, places of death, and method of illegal abortion. All of these pictures are supposedly extracted from the files of medical examiners — but what reputable medical examiner would release photos of murders or suicides to the general public?

We obviously should give this pictorial 'evidence' about as much credence as the pro-abortion's tearjerker "Silent No More" fiction competition, sponsored by national pro-abortion groups to emphasize the "dangers of illegal abortion." In this contest, as described previously, women write allegedly factual stories about beloved mothers, daughters, aunts, nieces, and friends who have died of illegal abortions.

Whenever the story-tellers are asked for further details, they cleverly say that they don't want to compromise the dead person's privacy (as if a dead person cares a whole lot about her privacy). In those few cases where details can be checked, as in the case of Frank Mendiola's nonexistent sister, the stories invariably turn out to be lies.

The same holds true for photographs of women supposedly killed by illegal abortions. No pro-abortion group has ever provided adequate documentation for even one of these photographs. And yet these people, who so casually and skillfully lie about literally every aspect of abortion, will become indignant indeed if their documentation is questioned.

General Conclusions. As far as the archetypical illegal abortionist is concerned, Ruth Barnett is certainly closer to the reality than some filthy, lecherous Mexican butcher. About two hundred thousand illegal abortions were being performed annually before 1970, and the primary motivation for legalization was not a concern for maternal health but a desire to integrate a common procedure into legitimate medical practice.

This acknowledged propaganda campaign worked so well that already euthanasiasts are using it as a template. One doctor recently commented that "Legalization [of euthanasia] will give security to doctors and patients because they'll know their rights and it will take away those behind-the-curtain cases." [53]

It is obvious, from reading about the exploits of Dr. Jack Kevorkian and others, that euthanasia is already a common practice in this country. The objective of the euthanasiasts is legalization of a widespread medical practice, and the propaganda tools they are using are the same well-worn ones employed by pro-abortionists in the mid-1960s.

Commentary: Llaguno: Eulogy for a Great Pro-Life Catholic

By Magaly Llaguno

2005

It is not very often that one can find someone totally committed, not only to proclaiming the Catholic faith but also to really living it. Everything that person says and does is rooted in faith. One such person is Ivan Ortiz, who recently went home to God the Father.

Ivan was one of those Christians who actively seek the opportunity to do good deeds. One small example is the story told by Father David Smith during Ivan's funeral. Father Smith said that when Ivan found out that he needed a car in order to be able to perform his priestly duties, he went online, found him one and gave him the funds to purchase it. Many more examples such as this one could be given. The fact that the church was totally full during Ivan's funeral services, shows how much he was loved and how much good he had done. Ivan's wife Rosemarie and his two sons spoke beautifully from the pulpit, about his life as a husband and a father.

But in my opinion the greatest acts of charity that Ivan ever did, were done in defense of his Catholic faith and of unborn children; in his speeches and in his writings. Ivan, even though he was very seriously ill and suffering greatly because of his cancer, held a meeting at his home and urged his friends to organize a fundraiser for Vida Humana Internacional (VHI), Human Life International's Hispanic Division in Miami. A long time supporter, Ivan was concerned over the future of the VHI affiliates that are defending life & family throughout the Hispanic world, and in need of financial support in order to continue their life-saving work.

A small group of Ivan's friends, moved out of love for him and as a tribute to him, helped organize a beautiful fundraising dinner for VHI. But Ivan was so ill, that he could not even attend. However, using a phone he addressed those who were present with beautiful, faith-filled words, urging them to support VHI's work. Because of Ivan's and of his faithful friends' efforts, funds were raised for the work of saving unborn lives being done by VHI's affiliates.

From the time that Ivan was diagnosed with cancer to the time he died, he valiantly fought for his own life, as he had fought in defense of unborn babies' lives. I have never seen any human being suffer that much, and bear it without any complaints. It was obvious that God was giving him the supernatural graces that he needed to persevere in faith, right up until the end. He was an example of fortitude in spite of great suffering that inspired all who visited him.

Ivan was an active member of Legatus, an organization of ambassadors of Catholic values in the market place. He was also involved with NARTH, which successfully helps people suffering from a homosexual orientation to live a normal life. He was a member of St. Robert Bellarmine Catholic Church in Miami, and was greatly loved by the pastor, Father Omar Huesca. The funeral services were held at that church by Fr. Huesca.

Ivan's earthly life ended on January 28, 2005. However, his legacy lives on in every unborn baby that will be saved from abortion, because of his contribution to the pro-life movement in Latin America.

In an article titled "Reproductive Health: A euphemism Used to Promote Abortion",¹ Vida Humana Internacional (VHI - Human Life International's Hispanic Division, www.vidahumana.org), denounced this clever strategy being used to try to legalize abortion in Latin America. A number of countries in the Eastern hemisphere have already approved "reproductive health" legislation which includes abortion rights. ² Recently the Bolivian congress fell into the same trap, when a "reproductive health" bill was secretly approved. Although it does not directly mention abortion, the legalization of abortion is now being promoted by the anti-life movement worldwide, as "a reproductive health need" and it is obvious that legislation would pave the way for abortion legalization in Bolivia.

The president of Bolivia vetoed the bill and sent it back to the congress for public and open discussion. However, pro-lifers in that country believe, that the cards are already stacked in favor of its approval. Aided by UNFPA (United Nations' Fund for Population Activities, a close ally), the Inter-American Parliamentary Group on Population and Development (IAPG), which is International Planned Parenthood Federation's (IPPF'S) "legislative arm", established its branch in Bolivia November 19, 2003, just before the final vote on the "reproductive health" bill took place. There are now 14 Senators and 34 representatives, who confirmed in writing their membership in this anti-life organization last November in the Senate Hall. ³ A Bolivian legislator is a member of the IAPG board of directors, along with legislators from Uruguay, Brazil and Panama. ⁴ Another Bolivian legislator, Dr. Javier Torres Goitia, a founding president of IPPF's other political outreach, the Medical Parliamentarians, was appointed to IAGP's Advisory Committee. He represented the Minister of Health of Bolivia, at the International Conference of Parliamentarians on the Implementation of the ICPD Program of Action, celebrated in Ottawa, Canada in 2003. That conference was attended by over 100 parliamentarians, representing 70 countries. ⁵ IAPG parliamentarians from Peru, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela, met with Bolivian parliamentarians to discuss legislation in that country, before the reproductive health bill was approved. ⁶

According to its website at <http://iapg.org>, the "IAPG works with individual members of parliament, all-party national parliamentary groups and decision makers from different countries in the Americas." At the regional level, they work in partnership with three parliamentary regional bodies: the Latin American Parliament (PARLATINO), the Central American Parliament (PARLACEN), and the Andean Parliament (PARLANDINO). At the United Nations, the IAPG monitors the United Nations international conferences and preparatory committees to promote the participation of parliamentarians and to ensure that their role is included in the language of the UN outcome documents." They also "seek to foster the links between parliamentarians, intergovernmental agencies, and local NGOs working on sexual and reproductive health and rights issues and women's empowerment." The " IAPG is composed of legislators from all the countries of the Americas in which there is a legislative body" , and their main objective is to re-inforce the role that parliamentarians have in getting the 1994 Cairo U.N. Conference agreements adopted by all the governments in the region. ⁷ In fact, that was the main reason given for the approval of the above mentioned legislation in Bolivia. The people of that country were not consulted or even informed about it before it was approved.

In December of 2000, Alvaro Alonso, the Minister of Labor and Social Security of Uruguay, accompanied by Hernan Sanhueza (who until recently was IPPF WHR's Regional Director and IAPG's Executive Coordinator), attended the launching in Paris of the Inter-European Parliamentary Forum on Population and Development. 8 In the year 2002, abortion on demand during the first three months was legalized in Uruguay's House of Representatives. June 12 of 2003, before the aforementioned proposed legislation was voted on by the Senate, IAPG organized "an informative session" on emergency contraception (EC) in the Uruguayan congress, in order "to make legislators and participating agencies aware of the importance of emergency contraception for women's reproductive and sexual health", and to "generate a favorable attitude among legislators, in order to carry out new parliamentary activities where it concerns these issues." 9 Fortunately, because of the work of the pro-life movement in that country (which is mainly composed of the two VHI/HLI affiliates), the Uruguayan Senate rejected the bill.

One of IAPG's objectives is "to have emergency contraception (EC) officially included" in the official government programs. 10 IAPG has been very successful in getting this objective achieved in a number of Latin American countries. Big battles against the distribution and use of EC are taking place in Chile, Colombia and Mexico. On January 21, 2004, the Mexican Secretary of Health introduced EC in the government family planning programs, and the National Pro-Life Committee is suing the Mexican government. 11

Argentinian, Mexican and Peruvian IAPG parliamentarians traveled to Colombia to discuss with Profamilia, the IPPF affiliate, "sexual health programs for youth" and specifically EC. They also met with Colombian government officials. Colombia approved a "National Sexual and Reproductive Health Policy" in 2003, of which EC is an essential part.12

In view of all this information recently uncovered by Vida Humana Internacional, Magaly Llaguno, its executive director, commented : "Since at least 1995, IPPF's Inter-American Parliamentary Group parliamentarians have been boldly lobbying the governments of many countries. 13 If that's not 'foreign intervention', what is?"

Commentary: Llaguno: Movement Underway to Liberalize Abortion Laws in Latin American Countries

The population control movement is constantly launching anti-life campaigns in Hispanic countries, for the widespread promotion of abortifacient contraceptives; as well as hedonistic sex education programs. The anti-life movement that has been at work in all these countries for many years is promoting all of these evils that pave the way for the legalization of abortion.

A battle is underway in many Latin American countries to liberalize abortion laws. According to Latin American pro-life leaders, abortions are already being performed in their countries-where abortion is illegal for the most part-through "emergency contraception" and "menstrual regulation" or "induction." These are euphemisms for early abortion-the first caused by the pill and the IUD, and the second by using suction equipment imported into Latin America and other developing countries to "treat incomplete abortions." In fact, Latin American doctors have been encouraged at conferences, held in the United States as early as 1976, in the performance of these "menstrual extractions."

In order to counteract these anti-life attacks on Latin America-funded by countries such as the United States, Canada, Japan and by many American anti-life foundations-pro-life and family leaders are in desperate need of help.

This is exactly why Human Life International launched Vida Humana Internacional (VHI), its Hispanic Division in Miami, Florida. VHI provides assistance, training and educational materials to pro-life leaders in as many as 16 countries including the United States, which is also being targeted by anti-life organizations like Planned Parenthood. VHI offers excellent materials and assistance to these pro-lifers and to those who work with them. It organizes pro-life and family conferences and training sessions for leaders. It collaborates with Latin American bishops, some of whom support VHI not only with their prayers but also with their donations. The importance of the missionary work that VHI does in the Hispanic world cannot be underestimated. More than 48 percent of the world's Catholics are Hispanics.

VHI began in a small room in my home at the request of Fr. Paul Marx, Human Life International's founder. With the experience of 14 years of pro-life work (at that time), I was able to fit right into HLI's worldwide apostolate. From that small room VHI has expanded to a multi-nation educational effort that is reaching Hispanics as far away as Australia through the use of modern technology.

VHI has its own website in Spanish at www.vidahumana.org, which is constantly being enlarged to include all the most important aspects of every topic related to the defense of life and family. In one month alone-May 2001-VHI's website received more than 927,000 hits! There are now more than 22 life and family issues on VHI's website, including information on Catholic Church doctrine.

VHI's Spanish language, bimonthly newsletter, "Escoge la Vida" reaches countless thousands through print and the Internet. It is being used in the preparation of radio and television programs. VHI's articles and news are reproduced by important publications, including major newspapers in the United States and a number of Hispanic countries. Its radio and television programs are reaching millions in the Hispanic world.

VHI is not only providing valuable resources on life and family issues, but also the latest pro-life updates through a free weekly information service (in Spanish), which is sent to thousands by e-mail and posted in the "Noticias" (news) section of VHI's Spanish language website.

There are many other successes that we could mention concerning the pro-life/family movement in Hispanic countries, such as: the many countries that have declared March 25 the Day of the Unborn Child; Costa Rica's decision to outlaw in vitro fertilization and Chile and El Salvador changing their constitutions to give full protection to unborn children.

Because we at VHI have been so actively involved in establishing pro-life/family groups throughout , those groups are 100 percent pro-life: they don't just fight surgical abortion—they also fight against contraception, sterilization and hedonistic sex education. Pro-life and family leaders in those countries are very aware of the connection between these evils. Because of VHI's help and guidance, they are able to continue the fight against not just surgical abortion (which is just one of the consequences of family breakdown), but also the anti-life mentality and its underlying hedonistic view of marriage, children and the family.

VHI thanks Human Life International's benefactors, who through their generous donations have made it possible to do such incredible work throughout the Hispanic world. I have been with HLI for 18 years. The greatest success that HLI's Hispanic Division, Vida Humana Internacional (VHI), has achieved is, without a doubt, the countless organizations that have sprung up all over Latin America, the Caribbean and Spain, that are defending life/family. HLI/VHI has helped create a very active, vibrant, growing pro-life/family movement in these Hispanic countries. New organizations are still being founded and the movement keeps growing. HLI/VHI and our generous supporters have made this possible!

Much is at stake at this moment, however, and the next few years will be crucial. Please pray for VHI and all the pro-life and family leaders it provides assistance to.

Many countries in Latin America as well as the Caribbean are 100 percent pro-life, but that is beginning to change, little by little. Groups such as Planned Parenthood, the dissent group [ex-] Catholics for a Free Choice, the United Nations (particularly through its CEDAW initiative) and others have been implementing attacks on these life-loving families. They promote contraception, sex education and abortion under the all-too-familiar guise of "reproductive health."

Much more remains to be done because all these groups count on HLI/VHI to continue providing them with the resources to do their work and to grow. They are facing the greatest anti-life attacks ever, funded mostly (unfortunately), by U.S. foundations and organizations.

And VHI is on the forefront of countering these attacks. Here are listed just a few of the future projects we hope to cultivate to keep the anti-life agenda at bay:

The bishops who are presidents of the Episcopal Conference in their Hispanic country, as well as those who are executive secretaries and presidents of the Family Life Pastoral, have all received from VHI a letter encouraging them to start a pastoral (similar to the Courage program) in their diocese, to help those Catholics suffering from same-sex attraction disorders who wish to live a chaste life. In the letter, VHI offered the bishops assistance and materials. Currently, VHI is in the process of writing, translating and compiling educational materials in Spanish, which will be sent to the bishops in Latin America, the Caribbean and Spain. VHI hopes to be able to conduct training for this type of work in Mexico if the funding can be obtained. We would like to offer scholarships for bishops, priests, psychologists and psychiatrists and pro-life and pro-family leaders.

Another project is the Aid to Women Network, which is our new Mexican affiliate. If we can secure funding, we hope to continue our collaboration with the Network in helping to open more crisis pregnancy centers throughout Latin America. Training sessions have already been held in several countries, and centers have opened because of them.

Vida Humana Internacional thanks you for your continued support-spiritual as well as financial-so that these projects and all of our work around the world can continue.

The Increasing Threat to Maternal Health Posed by Legal Abortion.

"Traditionally, the medical profession has been unwilling to present concrete facts to the public concerning the possible dangers associated with various procedures. Perhaps it is now time for doctors to be more open and honest and to encourage better education of the community. The general public should be allowed to know that mid-trimester abortions are not simple, safe procedures and that they may carry a significant risk, not only of morbidity, but of death."

— "Midtrimester Abortion and Its Complications." Editorial in the Medical Journal of Australia, January 22, 1977, page 38.

Introduction and Overview. When abortion was illegal, it was in the best interests of the pro-abortion movement to greatly exaggerate the numbers of maternal deaths that resulted from clandestine procedures. Since 1973, the situation has been reversed, and pro-abortionists downplay or simply ignore the physical dangers of legal abortion as part of their strategy to keep "safe and legal abortion" an inseparable component of the medical and social landscape.

According to a wide range of sources, there can be no question that the number of severe injuries inflicted upon women by abortion has been increasing since 1973 instead of decreasing.

The Back-Alley Abortion Mills Move to Main Street. Immediately upon legalization in New York State, a number of large-volume illegal abortion entrepreneurs immediately grasped the opportunity to make a killing — in more ways than one. These unscrupulous operators presented a much greater threat to women than illegal abortion mills did before legalization.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson was the former operator of the world's largest abortion clinic. In his capacity as the Chairman of the Medical Committee for the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (NARAL, now the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League), he made detailed remarks concerning the health hazards posed by high-volume abortion mills at the May 12, 1972 annual meeting of NARAL's Executive Board. These clinics performed an incredible 300,000 abortions annually in New York City immediately after legalization in that state.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson's Comments on Early Legal Abortion Clinics

"[Comments by] Bernard Nathanson, M.D., Chairman, NARAL Medical Committee.

Problems with Law and Clinics -

(a) Much money made - kickbacks, stealing patients, etc. by fly by night unsavory characters.

(b) Some unsafe practices - brought on by greed. ...

(c) State and City lax in enforcing health codes and licensing of clinics. Of the 30 clinics in New York [City], 25 are unlicensed and vicious financially, poor medically, 5 are licensed and safe."

Two decades after Dr. Nathanson's comments, many freestanding abortion clinics remain unlicensed and "poor medically." Just a few of the most egregious examples of freestanding front-alley abortion mills are listed below.

In many cases, legal abortion deaths are entirely preventable, and are caused by sheer carelessness on the part of abortionists. Unsubstantiated horror stories regarding illegal abortion ordeals have been supplanted by evidence found in trial proceedings involving the relatives of women who have been killed by physicians who would rival any fictional Tijuana 'butcher' of the pre-Roe days. The legalization of abortion was a goldmine for unscrupulous and unethical operators. Some current abortionists seem to be almost insane in their reckless disregard for human life, both born and preborn, as described in the following paragraphs.

Remember that hundreds of abortionists have lost their licenses and have been charged with every imaginable manner of crime from rape, torture and mass murder to peddling pornography and belonging to pedophile groups.

The examples listed below represent only about one percent of the total number of convictions that have been gained against legal abortionists in this country.

- Richard Muncie was an illegal abortionist. He killed a woman in 1968 when he botched an abortion, was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to prison, and had his medical license suspended.

Once he had completed his jail sentence, he went into a business that was more fitting to his abilities — he opened an antique shop. Immediately after the United States Supreme Court issued its Roe v. Wade decision, he went to court and got his medical license back. He is now performing abortions again.[54]

- In 1986, Newark, New Jersey abortionist E. Wyman Garrett was charged with gross malpractice and a number of other offenses in connection with the substandard care he gave to at least 40 women, mostly abortion patients.

Garrett aborted a 14-year old girl in his office. He did not give her proper care when she began suffering complications, and she died on the table. He then altered her medical records in an attempt to cover up his role in her death. For this series of offenses, he also pled no contest to violating various state laws.

His privileges were suspended at University Hospital in 1988 when he killed another woman there.

In 1986, Garrett pled "no contest" to an array of charges in State court. These specifications including performing a very late-term abortion so negligently that the baby survived it; leaving a baby's head inside a woman's uterus after an abortion; and falsifying medical records to cover up several cases of severe abortion complications.

Judge Sybil Moses, who conducted an administrative hearing on Garrett, noted that he had made hundreds of thousands of dollars on abortion without paying income taxes and was a chronic liar and falsifier of medical records. She said that he had an extremely "cavalier attitude toward patient safety," and asked for the revocation of his medical license.

Garrett, during his testimony, called his abortion patients "pachyderms" (i.e., female elephants) and "actresses" when they displayed symptoms of acute complications caused by his abortion procedures.

- One of the greatest threats to women's health is Los Angeles' Inglewood Women's Hospital, which could have served as the prototype for the apocryphal illegal abortion mill. This 'Hospital,' which, under California law, was immune from licensing requirements or inspections by the state health department, performed only one operation: Abortions. An average of a thousand of the procedures were carried out each month in the facility's single operating room.

Patients were rushed through four-minute abortions where the tables and floors were stained with the blood of previous patients. Medical personnel did not wash their hands or equipment between procedures, and patients under anesthesia were not properly monitored. Many patients were not given proper on-site post-abortion checkup and were urged to leave before they were ready "in the interest of maintaining the facility's busy operating schedule." Health records were routinely falsified, and one doctor was fired because he complained about the inadequate care being given to patients. One health inspector expressed amazement at the clinic's "out of control" and "battlefront conditions." [55]

Eventually, the deaths of five women and nearly 200 health code violations led the State of California to close the clinic. However, it was reopened only two weeks later with a different name, and was subsequently bought by Edward Allred.

The abortion mill is still functioning today.

- On March 4, 1975, Robert Sherman performed an incomplete abortion on 16-year old Rita McDowell. When she began to suffer an extremely elevated temperature the next day, McDowell's mother telephoned Sherman, who refused to speak to her.

Four days later, Rita died of kidney failure and massive infection. During Sherman's murder trial, prosecutors showed that he deliberately performed incomplete abortions on women so that he could charge them additional fees for followup care. He also allowed a nurse's aide to perform surgery, regularly re-used syringes and other disposable items without even sterilizing them, failed to have urine samples checked to confirm pregnancies, failed to check aborted fetuses for completeness, and covered up his role in McDowell's death by fabricating administrative records and tampering with medical records. Sherman even ordered that the paper sheets used on the abortion tables not be changed after each patient. Testimony during trial indicated that Sherman "... would [simultaneously] operate with one hand, and eat a tuna fish sandwich with the other, and talk to his stockbroker on the phone." [56]

Sherman's murder trial ended in a mistrial because he allegedly developed "heart problems" during the proceedings. He pled guilty to repeated charges of perjury in exchange for prosecutors dropping the murder charge. Prosecutors defended the plea-bargain on the grounds that "We believe these felony convictions will prevent the defendant from ever practicing medicine again."

They were dead wrong, of course. Sherman served two years in a federal prison, then moved to Boston and immediately began to perform abortions again. [57]

- Arnold Bickham had spent two years in prison for fraud and had lost his state medical license due to incompetence and malpractice. He was also barred from receiving Medicaid funds due to his "providing grossly inferior care." After regaining his license, he performed an abortion on 18-year old Sylvia Moore on New Year's Eve, 1986. She slipped into deep shock and began bleeding profusely. Bickham called her "lazy" because she was in shock and could not stand on her own, and he then pushed her out of the clinic in a wheelchair and left her on the sidewalk. Her mother managed to get her to a nearby hospital, but she had no pulse or blood pressure upon arrival and she died a short time later. An autopsy revealed that she had suffered severe lacerations of the uterus, cervix, and vagina. She also had a plastic foreign object (an abortionist's tool) lodged in her uterus near a large perforation. The presiding medical examiner ruled her death a homicide due to Bickham's extreme negligence and his abandonment of a patient in severe distress. As a result of Sylvia Moore's death, Bickham's license was suspended a second time. This did not stop him from performing abortions, however, and he was arrested after attempting to elude police in September of 1989 for practicing medicine (primarily abortions) without a license. [58]

Bickham was the highest paid Medicaid recipient in the nation with $792,266 in 1974. In 1975, he was the highest paid in Illinois with $519,189. In 1976, he received $370,541, third highest in Illinois. This is a total of more than $1.68 million over a period of only three years — $1.68 million of our tax money for killing more than 10,000 preborn babies.

When women are badly injured at abortion clinics, they are often whisked away from the clinic and dropped off at the nearest emergency room. After Jacqueline Bailey died at the Pacific Glen Hospital on December 2, 1977 after a saline abortion, George Finn, the attorney for the Bailey family, estimated that the abortion clinic took in $1.2 million in abortion fees that year alone. He remarked that "Poor people aren't getting any better treatment now than they were when they were getting butchered in Tijuana or being dumped on a doorstep in some back alley. Now they are being dumped on a hospital doorstep." [59]

Moneymaking Machines. More than three decades after legalization, many free-standing abortion mills are prodigious moneymaking machines for medical entrepreneurs. Currently, 85 percent of all abortions performed in the United States take place in high-volume abortuaries that perform 1,000 or more of the procedures annually. The forty clinics (two percent of the total) that perform more than 5,000 abortions per year accounted for one-fifth of all of the abortions in the country. [60]

Abortion is tailor-made for moneymaking because overhead is very low, and it is possible for abortionists to perform 50 or 60 of the repetitive procedures in a single day's work. Several professional abortionists, including Arnold Bickham, Edward Allred, and Henry Morgentaler, run chains of centers that have made their owners millionaires many times over.

Arnold Bickham, whose exploits are described earlier, received $1,681,996 in Medicaid funds during a single three-year period for performing abortions. Edward Allred's chain of abortion mills stretch from Modesto to San Diego and have performed more than 1.2 million abortions. They gross an estimated $25 million per year partly due to the "assembly line" five-minute abortions that are Allred's stock in trade. As of 1989, more than 100 medical malpractice lawsuits had been filed against Allred's clinics. [61]

What is the Actual Degree of Abortion Mortality Underreporting?

Overview. This Chapter has demonstrated that the total number of legal and illegal abortions performed in the United States increased by a factor of about tenfold in approximately a decade (1967-1977).

There can be no doubt that the average mortality rate due to abortion declined significantly as the procedure made the transition from nearly 100 percent illegal to nearly 100 percent legal over this ten-year period. This is primarily due to the fact that the few true non-M.D. 'quacks' who were in operation at the time of legalization accounted for the majority of criminal abortion deaths and injuries and were immediately put out of business, since only doctors could subsequently legally perform abortions.

However, there is ample evidence showing that this increased degree of safety is nearly offset by the huge increase in the sheer numbers of abortions now being performed.

As calculated above, about 150,000 to 200,000 illegal abortions took place annually before Roe v. Wade. The overall maternal death rate was about 50 to 100 per 100,000 abortions, and about 90 percent of these abortions were performed by fully-trained medical doctors. Since the raw total number of annually abortions increased by a factor of about ten, the procedure would have to become ten times as safe if the number of women dying of abortion was to remain constant.

There are many indications that such a prodigious leap in quality control was not accomplished;

- The Commission on Professional and Hospital Activities found that, in 1969, about 9,000 women were admitted to hospitals across the United States for treatment of injuries directly caused by abortions. In 1977, that figure had nearly doubled, to 17,000.[62] If we assume that the proportion of deaths to serious injuries remained the same, then deaths due to legal abortion would have nearly doubled as well, to about 300 per year. Although the actual number of maternal deaths is probably not this high, the true figure is certainly higher than the "official" (i.e., Centers for Disease Control) reported figure of 8 to 10 annual deaths.
- The famous Chicago Sun-Times "Abortion Profiteers" series of December 1978 showed that 12 women had died of 'safe and legal' abortions in Chicago during a single year in the town's abortuaries, which performed about 30,000 abortions per year. If this number is extrapolated to include the 1.5 million abortions performed every year in the entire country, we arrive at a total of 600 women dying every year of 'safe and legal' abortions! Although the actual number of maternal deaths was probably not this high, the true figure was certainly higher than the "official" reported figure of 15 to 20 annual deaths in the late 1970s.

- Dr. Matthew Bulfin polled 486 obstetrics/gynecology specialists at a May 1974 convention in Las Vegas regarding their experiences with deaths and complications relating to legal abortion. The results were startling. Dr. Bulfin found that 87% of the attendees had hospitalized women and girls suffering from complications due to legal abortions, and 91% said they personally had to treat women and girls with such complications. Most significantly, 6% of the respondents said that at least one of their patients suffering from legal abortion complications later died as a result of their injuries.[63]

It is important to note that these statistics applied to legal abortion only fifteen months after Roe v. Wade, and only about one-fourth of the OB/GYNs who performed abortions as a significant part of their practices were represented by the survey. Considering that there had been 2.43 million legal abortions performed in this country to May 1974, this means that the legal abortion death rate was about 5 per 100,000, indicating that there were about 100 abortion deaths per year by 1975. [64]

Dr. Bulfin concluded that "Deaths and near deaths do occur with every type [of] abortion procedure. As the vast majority of abortions are done for social reasons, the deaths and near deaths that do occur from the operation are especially tragic." A number of physicians acknowledged that abortion is one of the extremely rare surgical procedures performed in which the operating surgeon seldom sees the complications caused by his actions.[65]

Despite all of this tragedy, and despite the fact that pro-abortionists portray themselves as 'champions of women's rights,' the pro-aborts will not even acknowledge these women's deaths!

This shows just how much they care for 'women's rights.'

Every major pro-life group has documentation on women who have died of so-called 'safe and legal' abortions, but whose deaths are not noted because of statistical chicanery. It is certain that 50 to 100 women die of abortions every year now — about one-third of them 'on the table,' but most within one week due to abortion-related complications (see calculations supporting this number in Figure 7-3). It is also obvious that almost all women who die several days after an abortion will have causes of death other than the abortion itself listed on their death certificates. Yet these deaths should properly be included in the total abortion mortality figures.

This would mean that as many or more women are dying now as did before abortion was legalized. How could this be possible?

Flaws In the "Official" Abortion Death Count. The most commonly-cited source of abortion mortality statistics is the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), which has reported that an average of 11.2 women died of complications arising from all kinds of abortions annually during the decade 1983-1992, the latest ten years for which complete information is available.[66]

The data provided by CDC is inherently incomplete, and therefore greatly underestimates the number of abortion deaths that occur in the United States today. This is because, when abortion was legalized in 1973, the strategic motivation for reporting abortion-related maternal deaths vanished. Reporting data on abortion mortality and morbidity became largely voluntary, and all such data since 1973 is based entirely upon estimates.

I here are several statistical reasons why the "official" estimated count of abortion deaths is too low. These variables are listed below and described in the following paragraphs.

1. Reporting maternal deaths is voluntary, and therefore incomplete.
2. Most deaths occur after women leave the abortion mills.
3. Many victims travel more than 50 miles to the abortion clinics and identification is therefore hindered.
4. Abortion is frequently seen as a tool of genocide by members of minority groups, and this and other reasons engenders mistrust in the "system."
5. Death certificates that are completed for women who have died due to abortion-related complications frequently list causes of death other than abortion.

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: (1) Reporting is Entirely Voluntary and is Therefore Incomplete

 SHARE

(1) Reporting is Entirely Voluntary and is Therefore Incomplete. There has been no legal requirement for physicians to report maternal abortion deaths and complications since the procedure was legalized in 1973. Most states therefore do not report maternal abortion deaths at all, and a few states submit only incomplete data. The Centers for Disease Control (CDCs), which compiles and summarizes this information, receives only sketchy data from California, Texas, Florida and Illinois, which account for more than half a million abortions annually, or one-third of the nation's total.

Given the stigma that persistently accompanies the act of abortion and the human instinct for self-preservation, it naturally follows that many or most abortion deaths, injuries, and other mishaps will not be voluntarily reported. As abortion statistician Dr. Willard Cates has logically argued, "It's like turning yourself in to the IRS for an audit. What is there to gain? The tendency is not to report because there are only negative incentives." [67]

Another doctor states that

Complications following abortions performed in free-standing clinics is one of the most frequent gynecological emergencies encountered. Even life endangering complications rarely come to the attention of the physician who performed the abortion unless the incident entails litigation. The statistics presented by Cates represent substantial under reporting and disregard women's reluctance to return to a clinic, where, in their mind, they received inadequate treatment. [68]

A survey of abortionists demonstrated that a majority of physicians who perform large numbers of abortions feel that they are pariahs within their own profession. [69] Additionally, a maternal abortion death reflects discredit not only upon the abortionist, but upon the medical profession in general. In many cases, maternal abortion deaths only come to light when relatives of the deceased women take legal action.

The reporting system itself is deeply flawed and contributes to incomplete data regarding maternal abortion deaths. The United States Public Health Service (USPHS) is one of several Federal agencies that monitors the reporting of abortion statistics, including those dealing with complications and death. In its Handbook on the Reporting of Induced Termination of Pregnancy, the USPHS describes how to fill out the form used to collect abortion data. This form is called the "U.S. Standard Report of Induced Termination of Pregnancy."

One of the items on the form concerns abortion complications. The USPHS instructions read "If no complications have occurred at the time the report is completed, check 'none.' This item will provide data regarding the risk of induced termination." [70]

In the vast majority of cases, the form is either filled out immediately after the abortion procedure, or after the woman has left the premises. Therefore, if she suffers severe complications or dies later, these incidents will usually not be reflected in the USPHS reporting summary. In fact, up to 40 percent of all abortion deaths occur a significant amount of time after the victims leave the abortion facilities. [71]

This underreporting means that the statistics collected and reported by the Federal

This underreporting means that the statistics collected and reported by the Federal government have little bearing on reality. For example, at least five women died due to abortion-related causes in California in 1983 and 1984 — including Patricia Chacon, Inez Herron, Cora Mae Lewis, and Yvonne Tanner — but the State reported no maternal abortion deaths for either year.[72] And, in 1989, at least three women died due to complications arising from legal abortions in Maryland — including 16-year old Erica Richardson and Debra Gray — but the State's Department of Health and Mental Hygiene reported no abortion deaths for that year.[73] Richardson's autopsy report (Prince George #89-593) reveals why; she was the subject of a typical abortionist's coverup. On the report, the item "How Injury Occurred" was answered as "therapeutic misadventure." The "Manner of Death" blank was filled in with the single word "Accident."

The States of California and Maryland have not corrected their records. Nor have the Centers for Disease Control. The CDCs do not search vigorously for information, nor do they research abortion deaths; they rely entirely upon the information that is voluntarily provided by the States.

In fact, many abortionists will not report complications (or even routine statistical data), even when state law mandates such reporting. Records of state litigation are replete with the accounts of battles between abortion clinics and state agencies over the reporting of such data.

(2) Most Deaths Occur After The Victim Leaves the Abortion Mill. As described previously, physicians are not required to report abortion-related complications that arise once a woman has left an abortion clinic. This would constitute an almost impossible task in any case.

The only abortion-related deaths that are reported by clinics are those resulting from immediately fatal injuries inflicted during the procedure itself, commonly referred to as "on-the-table" complications. The most frequent causes of such deaths are hemorrhage, pulmonary embolism, and anesthesia complications.[74]

When a woman suffers acute complications several hours or days after an abortion, she will usually report to the hospital emergency room nearest to her, as instructed by the forms she has signed or as advised by abortion clinic personnel. Additionally, she will not feel compelled to return to the facility that caused her difficulties in the first place. In such cases, the emergency room physicians who treat women for physical damages inflicted by abortion generally do not investigate further, and the cause of such injuries is usually not listed as abortion. Often, this occurs even when a dying or unconscious patient is taken directly from the abortion clinic to the emergency room: If the actual death occurs at the hospital, the death certificate may contain no reference whatsoever to the abortion mill, the abortionist, or that an abortion was ever performed.

In addition to their failure to report subsequent deaths caused by abortion injuries, official statistics tabulators, including the Centers for Disease Control, do not count as abortion-related deaths those women who die as a result of abortion's indirect effects. Such cases include missed ectopic pregnancies or subsequent ectopic pregnancies directly or indirectly caused by damage inflicted during abortion procedures; complications related to premature delivery of subsequent children directly resulting from damage inflicted during abortion procedures; blood incompatibility complications caused when abortion providers fail to give Rho-GAM shots to RH-negative women; and from suicide brought on by acute depression or post-abortion syndrome (PAS).[75]

A typical abortion-related suicide was described at a conference of OB/GYNs; "An 18 year old female underwent suction curettage for a suspected pregnancy of 8 weeks duration. She committed suicide 3 days after the procedure having expressed guilt. ... There had been no pregnancy tissue in the suction specimen, but [the] patient was never told this." [76]

Abortion statistician Dr. Christopher Tietze describes other cases where women have committed suicide due to guilt caused by their abortions, only to have the coroner discover that they had never even been pregnant. [77] This type of case is certainly noteworthy. But how many women who actually did kill their preborn babies decide to do away with themselves as well?

Nobody knows.

(3) Travel Hinders Identification. Privacy is extremely important to women who obtain abortions for a variety of reasons.

Many women who obtain abortions are ashamed or embarrassed by the circumstances under which they got pregnant and/or by the act of killing their preborn child. Additionally, most women do not live in direct proximity to an abortion clinic. Finally, most abortion clinics do not perform abortion past twelve weeks' gestation. Therefore, a large percentage of women cross state lines or travel to another city in order to maintain anonymity or to obtain late-term abortions, which account for about half of all abortion-related fatalities. About 30 percent of all women travel more than fifty miles to the clinic where they are aborted, and a third of these travel up to 100 miles. [78]

If a woman returns to her home town and then dies of abortion-related complications after several hours or days, her death is extremely difficult to trace if no family member or friends know that she obtained an abortion, or where the abortion occurred. And one researcher has found that women who know that they are having serious physical complications rarely return to the clinic where they had their abortions;

Complications following abortions performed in free-standing clinics is one of the most frequent gynecological emergencies encountered. Even life-endangering complications rarely come to the attention of the physician who performed the abortion unless the incident entails litigation. The statistics presented by [Willard] Cates [a leading CDC abortion statistician] represent substantial underreporting and disregard women's reluctance to return to a clinic, where, in their mind, they received inadequate treatment. [79]

Such a case has been described as follows; "The [abortion] patient was quite obviously exsanguinated [dead from loss of blood]. The husband had learned only that morning that a saline infusion had been performed in another state where she had given a fictitious name and address. Her husband had found her unresponsive in the bathroom with evidence of massive blood loss." [80]

In cases where a woman crosses state lines to obtain an abortion and later dies in her home state, the abortion may not be reported by the home state because the cause of death occurred in another state. Additionally, from the viewpoint of the state, no useful purpose would be served by expending resources in attempting to track down the abortionist involved with the death.

In any case, mortality reporting practices vary widely from state to state and even within states. For instance, New York State courts do not cross-index lawsuits, so an abortionist is somewhat insulated from research into his records regarding his involvement in previous litigation. Additionally, many county coroners do not keep cross-indexed records of people who die due to complications arising from medical malpractice. Furthermore, many states do not investigate deaths when an attending physician certifies that a death does not involve direct evidence of foul play.

Pariahs they may be, but abortionists are well-protected by the medical profession, which sees them as a repulsive necessity.

(4) Mistrust of the "System" By Members of Minority Groups. A disproportionate percentage of the women who succumb to abortion complications live below the poverty line. The relatives or friends of many poor women who have died of abortion are unaware of their remedies at law, are intimidated by the legal system or mistrust it, or are afraid of reporting problems due to fears of retaliation.

Some prolific abortionists appear to see members of minority groups as inferior human beings who pose a threat to democracy, and have stated that the control of the population of these groups is highly desirable. In light of these attitudes, at least some of the mistrust on the part of minority groups seems to be justified.

Edward Allred, who owns a chain of more than 40 abortuaries that perform more than 120,000 abortions per year (primarily in minority neighborhoods), has said that

Population control is too important to be stopped by some right-wing pro-life types. Take the new influx of Spanish immigrants. Their lack of respect for democracy and social order is frightening. I hope I can do something to stem that tide; I'd set up a clinic in Mexico for free if I could. Maybe one in Calexico would help. The survival of our society could be at stake ... The Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] program is the worst boondoggle ever created. When a sullen black woman of 17 or 18 can decide to have a baby and get welfare and food stamps and become a burden to all of us, it's time to stop. In parts of South Los Angeles, having babies for welfare is the only industry the people have.[81]

When a poor minority woman dies at the hands of an influential white abortionist who works at a well-established abortion chain, her death often goes unreported and uninvestigated. Since the majority of women who die of complications due to legal abortions are members of minority groups, this can lead to serious underreporting.

Human Life International has identified the names of more than 350 women who have died of complications due to legal abortion since 1969.[82] The races of 263 of the victims is shown on death certificates or other documentation. Of these, 130 victims were Black, 41 were Latinas, 5 were Asians, two were Native American, and 85 were White.

This means that 68 percent of all known legal abortion deaths where the race of the victim has been known have occurred among minority women. By comparison, minority women obtain only 53 percent of all abortions. It follows that the death rate among women obtain only 50 percent of an abortion. It reveals that the death rate among minority women who obtain abortions is nearly twice as high as that of white women who abort.[83]

Cities with a high percentage of minority residents have nearly twice as many abortion clinics per each million population as do cities with a low percentage of minority residents [84]. It follows that a large percentage of minority maternal deaths will occur at chains of high-volume, high-profit abortion mills purposely located in poorer urban areas by population controllers like Edward Allred. For example, 39 identified abortion deaths have occurred in Los Angeles, a rate five times higher than the nation as a whole. At least 24 of these women were members of minority groups.

The death rate among poor minority women may be even higher than estimated, because such women have been effectively disenfranchised from the "system" and do not trust attorneys and anything to do with litigation, and for good reason.

The poignant letter by Mattie Byrd, a black woman whose daughter died of complications from an abortion performed by white abortionist Stephen Pine, vividly reflects this distrust and anger. She wrote that

I cry every day when I think of how horrible her death was. She was slashed by them and then she bled to death ... Where is the abortionist now? Has he been stopped? Has anything happened to him because of what he did to my Belinda? ... People tell me nothing has happened, that nothing ever happens to White abortionists who leave young Black women dead.[85]

Her 37-year-old daughter Belinda had required Cæsarian sections for each of her previous three children. When she went to abortionist Steven Pine on January 24, 1987, at 19 weeks gestation, she weighed only 95 pounds.

Pine was a very busy abortionist. In fact, Belinda Byrd's preborn baby was the 74th to die at his hands that day!

He perforated her uterus and she died three days later. As a partial result of this botched abortion, the Inglewood Women's Hospital had its license revoked by the State of California and closed down. However, money is a great motivator, and it opened only two weeks later with a different name: The West Coast Women's Medical Group. It was subsequently bought by mega-abortionist Edward Allred (who has also killed several women), and still functions to this day.

For more information on the racist and eugenicist origins of abortion, see Chapter 6 and Chapter 24 respectively.

(5) Death Certificates Often Reflect Other Causes of Death. When a woman dies of complications due to legal abortion, her death certificate often reflects a cause of death that appears to have nothing at all to do with abortion. This greatly complicates the job of tracing individual cases of abortion-related maternal deaths. Abortion statistician Willard Cates, Jr., and his colleagues found that "inadequate physician documentation on the death certificate" is involved in about 40 percent of abortion-related deaths.[86]

This is due to several influences. To begin with, abortion is a business, and there is an obvious business motivation on the part of abortion clinic personnel to obscure the cause of death in many cases [87] For example, when Erica Kae Richardson died after cause of death in many cases. For example, when Linda Rae Richardson died after an abortion performed in a Maryland clinic in 1989, her autopsy report listed "How Injury Occurred" as "therapeutic misadventure" and "Manner of Death" as "accident." After Kathy Denise Murphy died following an abortion at Los Angeles' Inglewood Women's Hospital in 1973, Dr. John Dupont claimed she died of a "breathing disorder." When Lynette Wallace died after an abortion at the same location two years later, another doctor claimed that she died of "cardiopulmonary arrest." [88]

According to Dr. Jack Willke, an 18-year old died of a "safe and legal" abortion in Los Angeles County in 1988. Her death certificate stated that the cause of death was a "spontaneous gangrene of the ovary." This is about as honest as listing "lead poisoning" as the cause of death of a person who was gunned down by killer with a large-caliber pistol.

These abortion-caused deaths would have gone entirely unnoticed if sharp-eyed investigators had not noticed minor discrepancies in reporting. It is certain that many more cases escape detection, because it is usually in the best interests of every medical professional involved to "hush up" the death.

Even if a woman dies of a cause directly related to an abortion, there may be no indication whatsoever that she died before the procedure, if such is the case. Examples would be deaths caused by heart problems or reactions to anesthesia administered before the abortion. Such deaths are generally not attributed to abortion.

A confidential survey by Project Choice revealed that 69% of the nation's abortionists feel that they are not respected in the medical community, 65% feel ostracized because they perform abortions, and 60% say that their prestige is damaged by being identified as a physician who performs abortions.

The CDCs identified ten deaths caused by ruptured ectopic pregnancies over the time period 1973 to 1978. In the typical case, the woman was given a pregnancy test, found that she was pregnant, underwent a standard abortion procedure, and therefore thought that the "problem" was "taken care of." Subsequent abdominal pain may have been dismissed as a minor abortion complication. If an abortion had not taken place, such pain might have led to a closer investigation of the situation and discovery of the ectopic pregnancy.

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: Calculating the Correction Factor

SHARE

Calculating the Correction Factor. Pro-lifers must have a firm grip on the number of women who have actually died of so-called "safe and legal" abortion since 1973. This number is far greater than most pro-abortionists (and members of the public) think, and can be a real shocker when it is properly documented and presented.

The above paragraphs list the primary reasons that the "official" figures for legal abortion deaths are underreported. It is therefore necessary to apply a correction factor to the "official" figures regarding maternal deaths in order to arrive at a more accurate estimate.

All of the information required to calculate this correction factor is contained in the November/December 1979 issue of the Alan Guttmacher Institute's medical reporting publication Family Planning Perspectives.^[89] This data was compiled at a gathering of hundreds of abortionists at a conference entitled "Second-Trimester Abortion: Perspectives After a Decade of Experience," convened on September 27th and 28th, 1979, at the University of North Carolina Medical School at Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

Keep in mind that this information was compiled by, analyzed by, and published by the abortionists themselves. This fact effectively defuses the argument that the statistics are somehow 'biased pro-life propaganda.'

The article describes the most complete study of its type, in which Dr. Richard Selik positively identified and analyzed 104 maternal deaths due to complications arising from second-trimester abortions in the United States during the period 1975 to 1977. He also stated that second-trimester abortions are about 10 times as hazardous as first-trimester procedures, and that ten percent of all abortions were performed in the second and third trimesters, ratios that are still valid.^[90]

Using these figures based upon Dr. Selik's study, it is a simple matter to calculate that there were approximately 198 total positively-identified maternal abortion deaths accounted for during the three-year period 1975 to 1977, as follows.^[91]

The Centers for Disease Control report that a total of 3,530,200 abortions were performed in the United States during the period 1975 to 1977. Ten percent of these (353,000 abortions) were therefore performed in the second trimester.

If, as the article claims, 104 women died of second-trimester abortions during this period, the death rate for such procedures is $$(104/353,000) \times 100,000 = 29.46 \text{ per } 100,000.$$

And, if first-trimester abortions are ten times safer than second-trimester procedures, the death rate for first-trimester abortions is 2.95 per 100,000 performed.

Therefore, total maternal abortion deaths from 1975 to 1977 can be calculated as follows;

	Number of Abortions,	Deaths Per 100,000	Total
--	----------------------	-----------------------	-------

These numbers will probably come as a shock to those people who have not until now realized that nearly 1,800 women have died of so-called "safe" and legal abortion since 1973, the year of the United States Supreme Court decision.

A list of the names of these dead women, copied front-to-back on the same sheet of paper, make an eye-opening flyer that effectively destroys the myth of "safe and legal" abortions. At a debate or presentation, even the most closed-minded person will be forced to reconsider his views on abortion when a pro-life speaker compares the magnitude of the disaster (more than 1,700 deaths since Roe v. Wade) to the number of people sitting in the room.

The Worldwide Abortion Conflict

"It is conservatively estimated that 200,000 women worldwide die every year from abortions that are illegal and unsafe."

— 1989 Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) pamphlet entitled "The Bush Administration: Dragging Us Back to the Back Alley."

Introduction and Overview. The struggle over abortion rights is being waged all over the world. Many developed nations are taking a second look at their permissive abortion laws, primarily due to the adverse demographic impacts being wrought upon their cultures by rapidly-declining birth rates (for a detailed exposition on the demographic impacts of abortion, see Chapter 20). And many developing nations — notably those in Africa — are being pressured by Western population-control organizations to loosen their restrictions on abortion and contraception.

Despite local differences in culture and religion, the characteristics of some aspects of the abortion conflict are startlingly similar to those in the United States. One of these is the persistent pro-abortion claim that abortions kill thousands of women each year in those countries where the procedure is illegal — and, on a worldwide basis, hundreds of thousands or even millions of women each year.

The Allegations Regarding Worldwide Maternal Deaths. Many pro-abortion claims regarding the prevalence of maternal deaths due to illegal abortions in various developing countries exceed the total number of deaths of all women of childbearing age for all reasons in those respective nations.

For instance, before legalization, Indian pro-abortionists commonly claimed that the total number of women dying of illegal procedures was an incredible 600,000 annually. [93] African medical professionals have claimed that as many as 74,000 African women currently die of illegal abortions each year. [94] Pro-abortion activists have also alleged that 140,000 women die of illegal abortions every year in Mexico. [95]

Perhaps the most extreme example of exaggeration is the BENFAM estimate of 400,000 annual deaths due to illegal abortions in Brazil. BENFAM is the Brazilian affiliate of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) figures have showed that only 55,066 Brazilian women between the ages of 14 and 50 died of all causes in 1980. The IBGE figures were confirmed by World Health Organization (WHO) statistics showing that 41,685 Brazilian women between the ages of 15 and 41 died in 1986 and, of these, 241 died of complications due to both legal and illegal abortions. [96]

This means that Brazilian pro-abortionists inflated the actual number of illegal abortion deaths in their country by a factor of 1,660, or 166,000 percent!

It is a simple matter to sum pro-abortion claims regarding deaths due to illegal

It is a simple matter to sum pro-abortion claims regarding deaths due to illegal abortions in a number of nations to produce an aggregate claimed total number of worldwide deaths. These figures include current numbers in countries where abortion is now illegal, and pre-legalization figures in countries where abortion is now legal.

The resulting total number of deaths would be more than two million, which would make illegal abortion the number one cause of death among women of childbearing age on this planet.[97]

Figure 7-4 is a summary of some of the gross pro-abortion lies regarding maternal deaths due to illegal abortions in various countries around the world.[98]

The usual number of total worldwide illegal abortion deaths currently claimed by pro-abortionists is comparatively modest, but is still a gross exaggeration. There are endless examples of this hysteria;

- Dr. Suzanne T. Poppema writes in Ms. Magazine that "Globally, a woman dies every seven minutes from complications of an illegal abortion [this works out to 75,000 per year]. If nonsurgical medical abortions were made available to women everywhere, millions of lives would be saved." [99]
- The United Nations Conference on Population and Development (UNCPD) Cairo draft plan specifically states that the public health problems of unsafe abortions kill an estimated quarter of a million women each year. [100]
- The opening of a May 1999 Alan Guttmacher Institute fundraising letter says

"Dear Friend,

Bamboo sticks ... bleach ... blows to the stomach

What do they have in common?

Each is one of the hundreds of horrendous ways women in some parts of the world still try — and usually fail — to end an unwanted pregnancy.

They do so out of sheer desperation and anguish. They do so regardless of their fears of prosecution. They do so in poverty. They do so when a safe abortion is simply not available.

In fact, each year — according to new information from the Alan Guttmacher Institute — in doing so

-- 20 million women break their country's law;

-- 8 million women endure serious, often untreated, medical complications;

-- 78,000 women die." [101]

The lies go on and on, and the media just uncritically and unquestioningly eats them up, no matter how outrageous or obviously illogical they are. Naturally, when pro-lifers try to submit a letter to a newspaper challenging this number, the editor demands detailed documentation and even then, the paper rarely prints the letter.

The Worldwatch Institute has claimed that 200,000 women die from illegal abortions each year, and from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 more "suffer serious, often lifelong health problems." [102] This number is echoed by virtually every pro-abortion group from the American Civil Liberties Union to Zero Population Growth.[103] In order to whip up support for his death pill, Etienne-Emile Baulieu, the inventor of RU-486, also estimates that 200,000 women die of illegal abortions annually worldwide.[104] And, as always, the paragon of hysteria was the Revolutionary Communist Party of the United States. In the RCP's propaganda organ, the Revolutionary Worker, an understandably anonymous writer complained that

If the people don't succeed in taking the OFFENSIVE and defeating this assault on women, hundreds of thousands of women will suffer mutilation and death from illegal abortions. Today some 200,000 women a year die in Third World countries — one woman every three minutes. And the anti-abortion policy of the U.S. is making the situation even worse [emphasis in the original].[105]

The magic "200,000" seems to carry the same cachet for pro-abortionists on a worldwide level as their discredited "5,000 to 10,000" figure did for the United States. Planned Parenthood is the worst offender in this area, and the figure is repeated so frequently in its literature that it approaches the status of a mantra:

- "It is conservatively estimated that 200,000 women worldwide die every year from abortions that are illegal and unsafe."[106]
- "Hospital records alone show that 200,000 women die from such non-clinical abortions worldwide each year; the real total is estimated to be much higher."[107]
- "Illegal abortions in developing countries result in as many as 200,000 maternal deaths each year."[108]

Despite the occasional pro-abortion claim that the figure of 200,000 deaths was derived from "hospital records" (which would have been a mammoth international accounting task indeed!), no original documentation or impartial verification of this number is ever provided.

One must question why Planned Parenthood continues to use this number, particularly since one of its affiliates is the Alan Guttmacher Institute, which employs the most experienced abortion statisticians in the world.

An Estimate of Worldwide Maternal Deaths Due to Illegal Abortion. The pro-abortion claim that 200,000 women currently die due to complications brought on by unsanitary illegal abortions is a persuasive piece of unsupported and unverified propaganda. However, the legitimate question remains: How many women really die of illegal abortions in the world today?

A few simple calculations will yield a fairly accurate estimate.

A reasonable assumption regarding abortion mortality rates must first be established — an assumption which is favorable to the pro-abortion point of view;

The Alan Guttmacher Institute (AGI) estimates that the worldwide mortality rate for legal abortions is about 0.6 per 100,000.[109] For the purposes of this estimate, it is assumed that illegal abortions are twenty times as dangerous as legal abortions on a worldwide basis — 12 per 100,000, or twice the illegal/legal mortality ratio commonly quoted by Planned Parenthood and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, as described earlier.

The Alan Guttmacher Institute estimates that an estimated 26 to 31 million legal abortions are performed annually in these countries, and 10 to 22 million clandestine abortions are performed in these and other countries each year.[110]

The actual range of maternal deaths caused by complications due to illegal abortion annually worldwide would therefore be;

High Estimate: (22 million X 12/100,000) = 2,640 deaths.

Low Estimate: (10 million X 12/100,000) = 1,200 deaths.

This means that the standard pro-abortion statement that "200,000 women die of illegal abortions each year" is an exaggeration of at least $((200,000/2,640) \times 100\%) = 7,500$ percent!

The Pro-Abortion "Case" Against Childbirth.

"Today it is possible for almost any patient to be brought through pregnancy alive, unless she suffers from a fatal disease such as cancer or leukemia, and if so, abortion would be unlikely to prolong, much less save the life [of the mother]."

— Alan Guttmacher. "Abortion Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow."

The Case for Legalized Abortion Now [Berkeley: Diablo Books, 1967], page 9.

The Pro-Abortion Claims. In accord with their desire to legitimize a procedure that most people find unpalatable at best, various pro-abortion individuals and organizations claim that the abortion procedure itself is six, ten, or even one hundred times safer than childbirth;

- For instance, the National Abortion Federation (which, being the trade union for many abortion clinics, has a definite financial interest in such comparisons) alleges that "Abortion is seven times safer than childbirth, and carries approximately the same risk of death as a shot of penicillin." [111]
- The Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) claims that "Here at home, where it is safe and legal, abortion is twice as safe as tonsillectomy and ten times safer than appendectomy ... abortion is 7 to 28 times safer than giving birth." [112]
- Rebecca Chalker and Carol Downer claim in their book A Woman's Book of Choices "One salient fact that the anti-abortion movement cannot afford to acknowledge is that childbirth is 11 times more dangerous than early termination abortion." [113]
- Finally, in his book Abortion Practice, Warren Hern quotes a mortality rate for childbirth that is an astounding 111 times higher than that for abortion. Perhaps Hern's unsupported statistics (or the huge profits he makes) provide the basis for his bizarre attitude towards pregnancy and childbirth: "Due to the comparative mortality risks of induced abortion and term birth, abortion is the indicated treatment for pregnancy ... The relationship between the gravid female and the feto-placental unit can be understood best as one of host and parasite ... Pregnancy should be seen as a biocultural event in the context of other human illnesses." [114]

As early as the Summer of 1971, the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology (ACOG) filed a brief before the Supreme Court of the United States stating that "The medical procedure of induced abortion is potentially 23.3 times as safe as the process of going through ordinary childbirth." [115] As described above, pro-abortion activists realized before Roe v. Wade that nice round numbers are appealing to the activists realized before Roe v. Wade that nice round numbers are appealing to the public, and so this figure was quickly rounded up to "25" and widely disseminated by the media.[116]

Such allegations had the effect most desired by the pro-abortion movement. In Roe v. Wade, the United States Supreme Court "... took as 'established medical fact' the contention that in the first three months of pregnancy mortality in abortion is less than mortality in childbirth."

Comparing Grapes and Watermelons. There are a number of profound statistical and logical problems with comparing abortion-related mortality and childbirth-related mortality.

To begin with, comparing maternal abortion mortality with maternal childbirth mortality is even more imprecise than comparing apples with oranges; it is analogous to comparing grapes with watermelons.

There are basically four basic differences between abortion and childbirth;

1. Duration. The duration of an abortion is seldom more than two days for the relatively rare prostaglandin or saline procedures, and is most often fifteen minutes or less for first-trimester procedures. The total pregnancy, delivery, and postpartum period averages more than a year in duration. It reflects badly on the relative safety of abortion to even attempt comparing what is alleged to be a "quick and easy" procedure akin to "removing a wart" with a nine-month pregnancy followed by delivery and recovery. [117] After all, the ratio of time involved is about (9 months:15 minutes) = 26,300 to one!
2. Methodology. Abortion is always invasive, and, until this point in time, the vast majority of legal abortions have been surgical procedures. Childbirth involves surgery (Cesarian section) in only about one-fifth of all cases — and this percentage is beginning to decline rapidly. In fact, nearly half of all deaths due to childbirth can be attributed to Caesareans. [118] The comparison between a surgical procedure and a natural process is therefore fundamentally flawed.
3. Functions. Abortion is an artificial and unnatural invasion of the body's reproductive system. Any artificial non-therapeutic interference with any of the body's natural processes may be expected to cause subsequent problems. In the case of 'therapeutic' abortion, these problems probably include increased chances of breast cancer and post-abortal pelvic inflammatory disease (PID), which can lead to an increased probability of tubal pregnancy.[119]
4. Intent. A mother who seeks an abortion wants very badly to kill her child. She does not just want to be rid of the baby; she wants to kill it. This is evidenced by the fact that most aborting women refuse to even consider the adoption alternative. On the other hand, a mother who delivers her baby wants to love and nurture her child.

Why Do Pro-Abortionists Make This Comparison in the First Place? The pro-abortion allegation that abortion is safer than childbirth is peculiar in addition to being imprecise, because there can be no logical rationale for making a comparison between two activities that are associated with such extremely low mortality rates. Although individuals tend to overestimate the probability of extremely rare events, they do not ordinarily base their decisions upon such analyses. For example, very few people would decide between making a 1,000 mile trip by air or by car based exclusively upon the chances of being killed or injured.

The only possible reason that pro-abortionists can have for attempting to contrast abortion and childbirth is to imply that abortion is somehow preferable to childbirth from a medical standpoint.

In fact, many abortionists and other pro-abortionists do claim that all abortions are preferable to all childbirth. For example, abortionist Lise Fortier has suggested that "Indeed, if one were to push logic to an extreme, since abortion is so much safer than childbirth from a strict medical standpoint, every pregnancy should be aborted." [120]

The "abortion/childbirth safety" analogy is unsound because the only figure generally quoted by pro-abortionists is the alleged relative dangers between abortion and childbirth; the absolute degrees of danger (mortality rates per 100,000) are rarely quoted in this context.

The same logic could be used to claim that women should use garden hoses to bathe outside, since more than a hundred women die of falls and drowning in bathtubs each year, while gardening fatalities are much rarer. [121]

By saying that 'abortion is safer than childbirth,' pro-abortionists are implying that abortion is preferable to childbirth, based on an analysis of the comparative hazards of both.

If the pro-aborts were to be consistent, therefore, they should also list (and discourage) all other activities that women participate in that are also more dangerous than abortion.

The pro-abortionists, in pursuit of their hallowed consistency, should also prohibit women from smoking, traveling, swimming, and riding a bicycle and participating in most other sports, because the risks of these activities are greater than the risks of abortion as well.

In fact, pro-abortionists should vigorously insist that women should never shower or take a bath, since more women die in the bathtub each year that are killed by abortion and childbirth combined!

The comparative risks of common activities engaged in by American women are shown in Figure 7-5.

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: What About Other Dangers?

 SHARE

What About Other Dangers? Yet another reason why pro-abort hand-wringing over the 'hazards' of childbirth rings hollow is that the same people who compare the relative risks of abortion and childbirth simply ignore surgical threats to maternal health that dwarf those posed by abortion and childbirth combined.

What about Cesarean sections? The risk of death for a cesarian is two to four times that of natural childbirth, and the frequency of Caesareans have risen from 5 percent to 25 percent of all births, primarily for the convenience of the (usually male) doctors.[122]

This means that at least one thousand women die from mostly unnecessary C-sections each year, but we do not hear a peep from the pro-aborts about such widespread abuse.

And what about hysterectomies? This is perhaps the most-abused operation aimed at either sex, and is used for a variety of purposes, from birth control to controlling headaches. It is estimated that more than 500 women per year die from hysterectomies. [123]

Yet, once again, we do not hear any objections from the pro-aborts.

If pro-abortionists were really concerned about women's health, they would not be attacking or denigrating childbirth — they would instead be vigilantly monitoring the proliferating abuses related to unnecessary C-sections and hysterectomies.

Background on Abortions Performed for Health Indications. One of the most confusing issues regarding the debate over maternal and abortion mortality involves the social evolution of the definition "maternal health," which has expanded beyond its clinical sense to become almost all-encompassing.

The United Nations World Health Organization (WHO) defines "health" as "A state of complete physical, mental, and social well being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity." [124]

Such expansive misuse of this term means that abortionists can justify literally all abortions on the grounds of "protecting maternal health." This attitude has been expressed by a number of abortionists. David Zbaraz has claimed that all first-trimester and most second-trimester abortions are medically necessary purely since, as he alleges, they are safer than childbirth.[125] Michael Burnhill of the National Abortion Federation has said that a "life of the mother" exception would allow him to perform all abortions he considered "medically necessary," all those that would preserve a "condition in which one can actively participate in one's total life ... " [126] Abortionist Jane Hodgson stated her case in much simpler and more direct terms: "In my medical judgment, every pregnancy that is not wanted by the patient, I feel there is a medical indication to abort a pregnancy where it is not wanted. In good faith, I would recommend on a medical basis, you understand, that, and it would be 100% ... I think they are all medically necessary." [127]

This attitude seems to be the norm among abortionists.

And why not?

Doing abortions is how they make money — and lots of it!

The abortionists' thinking is definitely reflected in their practices

The abortionists' thinking is definitely reflected in their practices.

In 1986, the Inspector General of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) issued a report (Control Number 14-60150) that summarized the events leading to 207 Colorado and Ohio Medicaid abortions performed to "save the life of the mother."

Intuition would seem to indicate that an abortion performed to save a woman's life would involve only the most extreme life-threatening physical circumstances. Yet 179 of the 207 abortions (86 percent) performed "to save the mother's life" were performed in doctor's offices, which generally have no advanced medical or resuscitation equipment on hand. Even more startling, 182 of these abortions (88%) were coded as including "no medical complications." Only three physicians performed 184 of these abortions (89% of the total), and the HHS report stated that they "... said that pregnancy was more life-endangering to a mother than an abortion, so they signed the certifications on that basis."

Another indication of the safety of childbirth is the extreme rarity of abortions performed to save the life or health of the mother when rigorous documentation of the procedure is required. Several studies performed in areas that require justification for legal abortions support the view that childbirth is not as hazardous as some pro-abortion organizations claim. Several studies performed over a period of four decades yielded a similarly low percentage of abortions performed to avoid the rare genuine hazards of childbirth.

The first study of abortions performed for health reasons began forty years ago at New York's Mount Sinai Hospital. During the time period 1953 to 1964, there were a total of 57,228 deliveries at Mount Sinai, and 69 abortions were performed for physical health reasons. The study managers admitted in a journal article that the true degree of risk to the mother's health was not assessed in most cases; if there was any doubt whatever about the mother's health, they performed an abortion as a safeguard. Despite the author's liberal attitudes regarding the justification of abortion for the mother's health, the total rate of abortions performed to safeguard maternal health in this study was one in 830 pregnancies, or about one-eighth of one percent. Abortion was not yet legal in New York State during this time period, and so the rate of maternal health problems at Mount Sinai Hospital was not artificially deflated by the easy availability of abortion elsewhere. [128]

In a second study, a total of 358,074 abortions were reported in the United Kingdom for the years 1987 and 1988. Of these, a total of 966 were performed for a "specified medical disorder," i.e., a perceived serious health threat to the mother. This is a total of one pregnancy in 416, or 0.24% (one-fourth of one percent).[129]

Another study of maternal health was performed at the Republic of Ireland's National Maternity Hospital, the largest facility of its kind in Europe. During the ten-year period 1970 to 1979, this hospital was the scene of 74,317 deliveries at more than 28 weeks' gestation. Twenty-one women died in childbirth. Of these 21, seven died of reasons not associated with childbirth and 11 died as a result of unforeseen circumstances (and which therefore could not have been corrected by abortion). Only three deaths were a result of chronic diseases that deteriorated during the pregnancy. This means that 3 of 74,317 delivering women — a total of less than one-one hundredth of one percent — lost their lives as a result of their pregnancies at a hospital that had extensive experience in managing the health of pregnant women.[130]

Aside from exhaustive studies, the best indicator of the number of abortions actually performed for valid health reasons is reflected in modifications in both federal actually performed for valid health reasons is reflected in modifications in both federal and state Medicaid abortion funding standards and the resulting changes in numbers of abortions paid for under the programs.

Until October 1, 1977, the Federal government funded abortions for the life of the mother, for rape and incest, and for the 'health of the mother.' After this date, the Hyde Amendment allowed the government to drop funding for the 'health' exception, while retaining funding for the other exceptions. The results were truly dramatic. In Fiscal Year 1977, before the Hyde Amendment took effect, the Federal government funded 294,600 abortions. With the new restrictions, the government only paid for 2,100 abortions in Fiscal Year 1978 — a decrease of 99.3 percent.[131]

The debate over maternal abortion deaths was thrust into the forefront once more during the debate over the Hyde Amendment. The American Civil Liberties Union revived the two-pronged scare tactic described earlier in this Chapter as it launched an "informational campaign" declaring that "Hundreds of women this year will die because they cannot afford an abortion. Most will be young. Many will be black. All will be poor ... The risk of death is far greater when the operating room is a kitchen table and the surgical instrument a coat hanger." [132]

Instead of "hundreds of women" dying each year because of the Hyde Amendment, the Centers for Disease Control reported that 21 women died of abortion complications in 1977 (the year before the Hyde Amendment was enacted), and 16 died the year the Amendment was in force — a decrease of 24 percent, not an increase of more than a thousand percent as the ACLU had claimed.[133]

On the state level, the best example of such a precipitous drop was experienced in Illinois, which paid for 23,209 abortions in 1976, primarily for the 'health of the mother.' The state paid for just 12 abortions in 1983, after courts upheld a 1977 state law banning the use of state money for abortions unless medically necessary to save the woman's life.[134] This meant that 99.95 percent of all abortions performed in Indiana prior to the cutoff in funding were committed for reasons not related to life-threatening maternal health conditions.

The Abortionists Speak Honestly. Before pro-abortionists finalized their strategy to legalize abortion all over the world, they were much more honest in their assessments of the magnitude of the "threat" that pregnancy posed to women.

Alan Guttmacher of Planned Parenthood did more to promote and spread abortion on demand throughout the world than any other individual. Yet as long ago as 1967 he commented, "Today it is possible for almost any patient to be brought through pregnancy alive, unless she suffers from a fatal disease such as cancer or leukemia, and if so, abortion would be unlikely to prolong, much less save the life." [135] Certainly, with all of the advances in medicine since 1967, cases in which a woman's pregnancy threatens her health are still rarer today (see Chapter 3 for a list of diseases and disorders that are almost never indications for abortion).

Other experts in obstetrics and gynecology have testified as follows;

- Reformed abortionist Bernard Nathanson said in 1990, "The situation where the mother's life is at stake were she to continue a pregnancy is no longer a clinical reality. Given the state of modern medicine, we can now manage any pregnant woman with any medical affliction successfully, to the natural conclusion of the pregnancy: The birth of a healthy child." [136]

- The "Father of Fetology," Hymie Gordon, M.D., Director of Medical Genetics at the Mayo Clinic, said that "In more than 25 years now of medical practice, I have come to learn that if a woman is healthy enough to become pregnant, she is healthy enough to complete the term — in spite of heart disease, liver disease, almost any disease. As far as I'm concerned, there are no medical indications for terminating a pregnancy." [137]
- Dr. Alan F. Guttmacher, former President of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA), said in 1959 that "Twenty-five years ago [1934] the famous triad — heart, lungs and kidneys — were the three black horsemen. They accounted for an overwhelming portion of legal abortions. But with our present miraculous improvements in the treatment of heart disease, lung tuberculosis and kidney ailments, this infamous trio has lost much of its terror, and today relatively few pregnancies have to be terminated on their account. However, as I have indicated earlier in this chapter, three new entities have usurped prominence: Psychiatric difficulties, eugenic considerations and malignancy, or cancer. ... Most abortionists owe half their practices to patients referred by legitimate doctors — patients in whom the legitimate doctor can find no medical reason for abortion." [138]
- Dr. Roy Heffernan of Tufts University Medical School has said that "Anyone who performs a therapeutic abortion is either ignorant of modern medical methods or unwilling to take the time and effort to apply them." [139]
- Drs. John F. Murphy and Diernan O'Driscoll say that "There is now general agreement that pregnancy does not alter the natural history of disease, so that, provided a woman survives the immediate challenge, neither her health nor her life-expectancy is permanently changed." [140]
- Dr. Jasper Williams, Jr., of the Bernard Hospital in Chicago, Past President of the National Medical Association, has said that "Since 1953, I have never seen a patient die who died because she needed an abortion and it could not be performed. Doctors now have the tools and the knowledge with which to work so that they can handle almost any disease a patient may have, whether that patient is pregnant or not, and without interrupting the pregnancy." [141]
- Dr. Patrick Beirne, who specialized in difficult obstetrical situations, has testified in court that "There's virtually no situation now where you must abort or the mother will die." [142]
- Former Surgeon General of the United States Dr. C. Everett Koop said that "The life-of-the-mother argument surfaces in every debate concerning abortion. The fact of the matter is that abortion as a necessity to save the life of the mother is so rare as to be non-existent." [143]

Facts of Life: Chapter 7: Maternal Deaths Due to Abortion: The Mental Health Exception = Abortion on Demand

 SHARE

The Mental Health Exception = Abortion on Demand. The potential for abuse of the term "mental health" is even greater than misuse of the term "physical health" where abortion is concerned. When a definite physical indication for abortion cannot be ascertained, it is a simple matter to use virtually any rationalization to justify an abortion for the mother's mental health.

This has been a common approach since the first states legalized abortion. Dr. E. James Lieberman spoke of those states that had already legalized abortion for the mother's "health" in 1970 when he said that "In recent years, 90 percent of all legal abortions performed in the United States were justified on psychiatric grounds, since there are few physical conditions which stand in the way of normal gestation and parturition." [144]

Two decades later, this phenomenon was confirmed by the Office of Public Health of the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals, which compiles state abortion statistics. Over the 14-year period 1975 to 1988, 202,135 abortions were performed in Louisiana. Of these, the reasons were listed for 57 percent, or 115,243 of the abortions. Of this subgroup, 1,012 were performed for rape, incest, fetal deformity (eugenics), and the mother's physical health. [145] This means that 114,231 abortions, or more than 99 percent, were performed for the mother's 'mental health.'

Pro-abortion activists know that they can portray those who oppose abortion exceptions for the mother's health as unfeeling and judgmental. They also acknowledge that they can use an abortion exception for the mother's 'mental health' to obtain abortion on demand in practice.

In 1988, in anticipation of a possible limitation of Roe v. Wade, many pro-abortion activists began instructing women how to 'act' in order to get abortions should the procedure be limited to 'health' exceptions once again. A good example of this type of chicanery was provided in a recent book by Rebecca Chalker and Carol Downer;

During the interview, weep, show anger, fear, disgust, outright destructiveness of your clothing or small objects, say, the ashtray on his desk which can be broken on the floor or against a wall. Don't overdo this. You will be billed for the broken things later! Don't break the doctor's head. This is a "no-no" ... How's your attention span? ... You can't seem to concentrate on anything for more than a couple of minutes ... Drop sly hints that you are "attracted" to many strange men sexually. Be dull and very sad. Cry a bit. Just sit in silence, and make him repeat questions as though you hadn't heard a word ... And now for the Manic Scene: Just like the opera, ladies! Brighten up, beam like a sunrise ... let your thoughts gallop wildly ... your speech flows like the Danube in flood time ... you might try taking off your shoes, kicking them all the way across his office, wriggling your toes. Then say, "That feels so good, I think I'll take everything off ... (musingly)." [146]

Calculation of Relative Hazard Levels: Proposal for An Original Approach.

(1) Comparison Using Standard Definitions. The calculations used to determine the relative rates of maternal mortality due to abortion and childbirth are straightforward, and are shown in Figure 7-3.

In Figure 7-3, we calculated that an average of about 41 women per year die of complications arising from the huge number of legal abortions currently being performed annually, resulting in an average mortality rate of 3.1/100,000 over the ten-year period 1997-2006.

Figure 7-3 also shows that there were an average of 242 annual maternal deaths attributed to the average of 4,038,300 births that took place each year over the decade 1997-2006. This means that the average mortality rate for childbirth was 6.0 per 100,000, or not quite twice that of surgical abortion.

(2) Redefining the Parameters. For decades, pro-abortion and pro-life statisticians have compared the relative safety of childbirth and abortion and have vociferously disagreed over their methodologies and results.[147]

Such a discussion is largely irrelevant for the reasons described above. A single "average" abortion procedure may indeed have a lower probability of mortality than a single "average" instance of pregnancy and childbirth, but the comparison is largely invalid to begin with due to the vanishingly small chances of death happening in either case.

It is certainly true that there are only two choices available once a woman is pregnant: Childbirth or abortion. However, from a wider perspective, a more equitable, logical, and pertinent comparison would involve the sum total of all hazards related to pregnancy and childbirth compared to the sum total of all of the hazards associated with avoiding pregnancy and childbirth. Such a comparison would have much more relevance to the debate and would be valuable in terms of dispelling public misunderstandings and helping women make a more informed choice about whether or not to conceive a child.

The comparative risks could be entitled "childbirth-related mortality" and "childbirth-avoidance mortality."

Childbirth-related mortality would assess maternal deaths related directly to complications arising from pregnancy and childbirth and those indirect causes of maternal death that are reasonably proximate (i.e., first-order). Childbirth-related mortality would be measured in terms of deaths per 100,000 births, and would include all maternal deaths due to pregnancy terminated by natural means, including miscarriage, natural birth, stillbirth, and ectopic pregnancy, and those deaths due to incidents that do not result in termination of pregnancy;

- embolism;
- hypertensive diseases of pregnancy;
- non-obstetric injuries;
- obstetric hemorrhage;
- cerebrovascular accidents; and
- anesthesia complications.

The critical point to consider here is that, according to the ACOG and other medical institutions, the current definition of "childbirth-related mortality" includes abortion-related institutions, the current definition of childbirth-related mortality includes abortion-related mortality, because the medical community sees "childbirth" as synonymous with "pregnancy" for certain purposes.

In other words, if, in a certain year, 10,000 women died of complications due to legal abortions and only one woman died of childbirth, abortion would still be rated safer than childbirth under this fatally flawed statistical system!

Childbirth-avoidance mortality would measure those deaths resulting directly from all means used to avoid pregnancy or its continuation, including abortion, sterilization, and contraceptive and abortifacient methods, and those indirect causes of maternal death that are reasonably proximate. It would be measured in terms of deaths per 100,000 women using contraception, sterilization, abortifacients or abortion to avoid childbirth.

Some factors that should be taken into consideration include;

- abortion-related deaths "on the table" from anesthesia, bleeding, or shock;
- abortion-related deaths due to abortion-caused physical complications that occur days or even months later;
- extreme depression directly caused by abortion leading to suicide;
- deaths due to related physical complications brought on by previous abortion(s), such as mortality due to the documented concomitant increased risk of ectopic pregnancies;
- physical complications associated with female sterilization; and
- complications associated with the use of contraception and abortifacients, including the intrauterine device (IUD) and the oral contraceptive (OC) pill.

Such a comparison would make a fascinating and extremely complex statistical study. While "on the table" abortion deaths are fairly simple to estimate, firm data concerning abortion's influence on long-term trends such as maternal suicide and breast cancer is scarce. Deaths caused by direct and proximate complications due to female sterilization and hysterectomies performed for birth control reasons are well-documented, but many long-range impacts of these procedures are being debated and firm estimates of mortality due to indirect causes have not been established in the literature.[148] There are studies concerning method-related deaths caused by two of the most popular currently-prevailing methods of contraception, the birth control pill and the IUD, but there is much conflicting evidence concerning their long-range impacts on cardiovascular diseases, breast cancer, and the incidence of ectopic pregnancy.[149]

A further consideration revolves about the fact that, of the sexually active women in the United States who are not naturally or artificially sterile, approximately 11 million do not use contraception of any type, and about 24 million use some method of abortifacient or contraceptive birth control. Since no contraceptive method is perfect, method-related problems and user-related error account for about two and a half million unintended pregnancies per year, half of which end in abortion. [150] This means that one million unintended pregnancies annually are carried to term.

Many experts have acknowledged that the prevention of pregnancy may cause as many deaths as pregnancy itself.[151] For example, Chapter 2 includes calculations that show that over 700 women die of complications due to the use of the oral contraceptive pill in the United States every year.

A thorough investigation into the complex question of the relative dangers of

A thorough investigation into the complex question of the relative dangers of childbearing and its avoidance should be conducted.

(3) Summary and Conclusions. The chances of dying of either abortion or childbirth are vanishingly small for the average healthy woman: About 6 chances in 100,000 for childbirth and about 3 chances in 100,000 for abortion. To put these probabilities into perspective, a woman's chances of dying in childbirth are equal to those of being killed in a car accident over a period of three months of average driving.

A woman who wishes to address her particular situation with a wider perspective should base her reproductive decisions on the risks and probabilities that are associated with the total range of options that are likely to confront her. These include not only the mortality due to abortion and childbirth, but sterilization and contraception as well.

Unfortunately, it will be years before all risks and probabilities are documented, if the task is ever accomplished at all.

The rates provided in this paper are applied to the total number of smoking and nonsmoking women in the United States, and this information is extracted from the Statistical Abstract, Table 13, "Total Population, By Age and Sex: 1960 to 1989;" Table 101, "Contraceptive Use By Women, 15-44 Years Old, By Age, Race, Marital Status, and Method of Contraception: 1982 and 1988;" and Table 201, "Cigarette Smoking, By Age, Sex, Race, and Educational Attainment: 1965 to 1987." These numbers show that an average of 450 women die due to the method-related effects of the birth control pill each year. The intrauterine device (IUD) has had a stormy history. The Dalkon Shield, the Lippes Loop, and other IUDs were linked to at least 43 deaths during the period 1971 to 1974 (Richard P. Dickey, M.D., Ph.D. "The Effect of Recent FDA Legislation on Contraceptive Developments and Safety." 15 International Journal of Gynecology and Obstetrics 111-112 (1977)). Although the primary method of action of the intrauterine device (IUD) appears to be interference with implantation, eighteen studies of patients with IUDs found that 8.4% of all implanted pregnancies that occurred with the IUD in place resulted in life-threatening ectopic pregnancies that required surgery (D.R. Mishell, Jr. "Assessing the Intrauterine Device." Alan Guttmacher Institute's Family Planning Perspectives, May-June 1975, pages 103-111. R.G. Wheeler, R.L. Buschbom, and R.K. Marshall. Finally, IUD users face a 50-fold higher risk of death from septic spontaneous abortion and a 6 to 20 times greater risk of ectopic pregnancy (Willard Cates and John Ory. "IUD Complications: Infection, Death, and Ectopic Pregnancy." Controversies in Contraception, 1979, page 187).

"dangerous back-alley abortions." However, sub rosa illegal abortion networks are still operating for three reasons. Some women simply prefer to be aborted by close friends, no matter what the status of abortion laws are. Secondly, women are 'practicing' in anticipation of the day when abortion is illegal again. Finally, as noted above, "menstrual extraction" helps eliminate the guilt that abortion may cause, because women who use it never really know if they were pregnant in the first place.[155]

... And Home Abortion Parties. A recent article in American Medical News described an illegal 'abortion party' at a woman's house in stomach-wrenching detail. What was so sickening about the article was not the goriness of the abortion (which was not mentioned), but the indifferent way in which the snuffing out of a baby's life was treated by all present at the abortion. For these women, the abortion was not a thing to be agonized over, not a thing to regret in any way, but instead merely an opportunity to 'share an experience with friends.'

The article centers around Maria Romero, an unmarried 20-year old woman who has been shacking up with her boyfriend. When asked how she could have become pregnant while using birth control, Romero just shrugged, grinned, and said "Sometimes I'm kind of lazy about using my cervical cap."

In a hideous parody of a baby shower, the article describes how friends brought gifts to her home on the appointed abortion day. One of the women brought a dozen tiny pink roses.

After assembling, the women then chatted and drank cappucino for a while. Finally, they got down to business. Carla Martinez, a lay person with no medical experience, aborted Romero with a home 'menstrual extraction' kit. Despite Romero feeling significant pain, the procedure is described as safe and almost trivial in nature.

After the abortion, Martinez said that "There are some people who want to see it so they can see there are no body parts, that it's not a baby," and Romero gushed happily that "I think that it's wonderful to share the [abortion] experience with my friends." [156]

Cindy Pearson, who has been promoting self-abortion for nearly a decade, enthused that "This is so fun; this is so great, that we can do this ourselves ... It's just joyful." [157]

These very existence of these 'abortion parties' dispels a number of pro-abortion myths; that 'pro-choicers' are morally superior to 'Operation Rescue types' because they respect the law; that they really care about women's health; and that abortions are invariably the product of long and painful soul-searching by the aborter.

Making Money Off Women's Pain. Small circles of individual women are not the only promoters of self-abortion in the country today.

The Federation of Feminist Women's Health Centers (FWHCs) began selling $89.95 'home suction aspiration kits' in mid-1989, immediately following the Supreme Court's Webster v. Reproductive Health Services decision. These kits consisted of aquarium tubing, Mason jars, and syringes. As Lynne Randall, director of the Atlanta FWHC, said: "Since there won't be enough courageous doctors to break the law, this could be the safest illegal abortion possible." [158] Personnel from the Federation of FWHCs began touring the country in mid-1990, selling and demonstrating their home abortion kits and showing their 28-minute propaganda film "No Going Back." [159]

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration promptly shut down the sales by the FWHCs, because it considered the home abortion kits to be extremely dangerous to women's health. There is, of course, no ultrasound performed during ME, even though this is considered standard practice by most experienced abortionists. One emergency room doctor, commenting on this shortcoming, asserted that "The existence of an ectopic pregnancy or a [hydatidiform] mole would have disastrous results." [160]

Gender feminists are not the only people who are pushing illegal abortion kits. Various Communist and homosexual groups are joyfully leaping into the fray as well. For example, a disreputable group calling itself "Anonymous Queers 1992" circulated diagrams of the "Del-Em" at the pro-abortionist's April 1992 "March for Death" in Washington, DC. [161]

The future and prevalence of ME is in doubt at this time, particularly in light of the introduction of the RU-486 abortion pill and its inevitable black-market imitations. However, the abortion situation is constantly evolving, and its configuration depends to a large degree upon the attitudes of the courts, the media, the legislatures, the churches, and the public. Given the fluid nature of the many aspects of the debate — and the influence of demographics — it is entirely possible that, at some future date, access to abortion will be significantly restricted in the United States. If this occurs, many experienced abortionists will certainly continue to perform the procedure illegally. The practice of 'menstrual extraction' and other 'home remedies' will also spread under such conditions, and will probably account for a large percentage of future maternal deaths due to illegal abortion.

Ironically, any significant future restrictions on abortion will almost certainly be challenged by the same people who are performing "home abortions" and causing the maternal deaths that they will then turn around and use as a centerpiece of their campaign to repeal 'restrictive' laws.

Summary and Conclusions.

The prevalence of maternal deaths due to abortion complications has played a central role in the moral debate since the early 1960s. The most effective weapon used by pro-abortionists to secure abortion on demand was a two-pronged strategy whose centerpieces were the exaggeration of the numbers of women dying of illegal abortions and graphic descriptions of back-alley abortion mills that they held out as the norm.

When abortion was legalized in 1973, the political and strategic status of maternal abortion deaths was suddenly reversed. Instead of being grossly overstated, the numbers of women dying of complications due to legal abortion are now greatly underreported. Abortionists are now a very well-protected part of the medico-legal "system" despite their "untouchable" status, because they are the garbage men of the medical profession. They dispose of unwanted human beings, and their filthy business is considered vital to the welfare of society by modern-day utilitarians. Many abortion-caused deaths are quickly and efficiently covered up, as described earlier in this Chapter.

Another powerful weapon used by pro-abortionists to obtain and then retain abortion on demand was the allegation that abortion is safer than childbirth. However, these two outcomes of pregnancy are in no way comparable for several reasons, as described elsewhere in this Chapter. In any case, the absolute chances of death due to either childbirth or abortion are similar and so small that no important life decision such as childbearing should be based solely upon this factor.

unbearable should be based solely upon this factor.

Data regarding the secondary risks of abortion, pregnancy and childbirth is generally contradictory, and the literature does not contain a detailed comparison of the total risk of childbirth compared to the total risk of childbirth avoidance. The probability that secondary abortion complications may be affecting a significant number of women demands that more comprehensive and conclusive research be done in this area.

A comparison between the total risks of childbirth and childbirth avoidance would better serve the interests of women who are contemplating the possibility of pregnancy than the current rather simplistic debate over the relative hazards of abortion and childbirth.

Finally, the resurgence of "self-help" abortions poses a threat to the health of women, because early abortion or "menstrual extraction" takes place either to "get rid of the period" or before seven weeks' gestation (if the woman is pregnant). In both cases, the uterus is smaller and more vulnerable than it is past eight weeks' gestation. "ME" has never been truly widespread and is a largely symbolic practice. However, the chances of perforation or pelvic inflammatory disease is significant enough that the medical community should unite in condemnation of such procedures being performed by minimally-trained lay people.

Ruth Barnett. They Weep on My Doorstep [Halo Publishers, Portland, Oregon]. May be ordered from Post Office Box 1383, Silver Springs, Florida 32688-1383. 223 pages, $7.45. This is a fascinating account of a naturopath who committed illegal abortions in Portland, Oregon, with the full knowledge of the authorities, for more than 40 years. This book tells the real story of what illegal abortions were like before Roe v. Wade: Barnett describes how immaculate her clinic was, how few complications she had (no deaths in 40,000 abortions), how phony the "back-alley" abortion stories are, and how she accumulated millions of dollars and lives a lavish lifestyle. This book is a "must-read" for any pro-life activist who wants the real scoop on the days of illegal abortions, and not some weepy propaganda piece by fictionalized "brutalized" women.

Rebecca Chalker and Carol Downer. A Woman's Book of Choices: Abortion, Menstrual Extraction, RU-486 [New York: Four Walls Eight Windows Press, 1992]. It is an ominous sign of the times that illegal abortion manuals were printed by the Neofeminists 25 years ago in secrecy and passed hand to hand, and now they are sold in mainline bookstores and sit innocently on library shelves. This book was written by the Neofeminists in anticipation of tougher days, and is a totally unselfconscious description and endorsement of all of the 'self-help' methods of abortion.

Suzanne Gage. When Birth Control Fails: How to Abort Ourselves Safely [Speculum Press/Self-Health Circle, Inc., Post Office Box 1063, Hollywood, California 90028, 1979], 54 pages. A very interesting short book on the equipment that has been used in the past by women's illegal abortion circles, and which will be used in the future when women set up "Jane" networks once again. This book (and others like it) will then be of interest to pro-life activists who are working to derail the abortion movement's "underground railroads." This book shows how to self-examine, how to construct the Del-Em home suction abortion machine, and also gives information on herbal abortions.

Anne Nicol Gaylor. Abortion is a Blessing [New York: Psychological Dimensions Publishers, 1975], 122 pages. This amazingly-entitled book, by a Zero Population Growth fanatic (who hypocritically has four children), accurately reflects the author's attitudes. The book jerkily swings from third-rate psychological analysis of the "antis" (that's us, folks) to virulent anti-Catholic tirades ("card-carrying Catholics" shouldn't be allowed to sit on juries when abortion is involved) to stomach-turning and obviously false tearjerker stories of desperate women who were butchered by illegal abortions. The book makes fascinating reading, however, for many reasons: The crude and nightmarish cartoons (one of which shows a one-ton embryo strangling its mother with its umbilical cord) to women's accounts of trips to Mexico for illegal abortions, which were performed in spotless facilities by polite and accomplished doctors — a very far cry indeed from the alleged butchery that modern pro-aborts like to snivel about.

Thomas W. Hilgers, M.D., Dennis J. Horan, and David Mall (editors). New Perspectives on Human Abortion [Frederick, Maryland: Aletheia Books, University Publications of America, 1981]. A superb compilation of essays by the most experienced pro-lifers in the land, dealing with virtually all of the basic issues involved in taking human life. An excellent primer for any pro-life activist. Articles include "Abortion Related Maternal Mortality: An In-Depth Analysis," on pages 69 to 91, and "An Objective Model for Estimating Criminal Abortions and its Implications for Public Policy," on pages 164 to 181.

Ellen Messer and Kathryn E. May. Back Rooms: Voices From the Illegal Abortion Era [St. Martin's Press, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York 10010, 1988], 230 pages. This interesting book tells the stories of about 25 women who had abortions before it was legal in this country. Several obvious features give it away as a pro-abortion propaganda/fiction piece; all of the women are anonymous; pro-lifers and anyone who stood in the way of "progressive" abortion law repeal or reform are painted as demons; the abortionists are depicted as heroes; and there is a special chapter canonizing Lawrence Lader, Bill Baird, and the "reverend" Robert Hare. Spend a rainy day counting the literally hundreds of inconsistencies physical impossibilities.

Ann Saltenberger. Every Woman Has the Right to Know the Dangers of Legal Abortion [Air-Plus Enterprises, Post Office Box 367, Glassboro, New Jersey 08028, 1983] or Sun Life, Greystone, Thaxton, Virginia 24174, telephone: (703) 586-4898. Reviewed by Daniel J. Martin, M.D. on page 8 of the November 24, 1983 issue of National Right to Life News. This book goes into minute detail about every imaginable type of physical or psychological harm that could possibly arise from abortion. It also addresses the impact on other family members, particularly siblings. The appendix to the book features over 300 references.

Thomas W. Strahan. Detrimental Effects of Abortion: An Annotated Bibliography 2001. This bibliography consists of 1,200 references on 66 abortion-related health topics and is 261 pages long. It is available in a bound printed version as well as an electronic version. For information on ordering the bibliography, contact Acorn Books at 1-(888) 412-2676, or Thomas W. Joseph Meaney, November 4-11, 2008

HLI made its first pro-life missionary trip to the Central African Republic (C.A.R.) when George Wirnkar, our regional coordinator for French-speaking Africa, and I flew there this past November. It was somewhat easier for George to arrive, since Cameroon and the C.A.R. share a long border. From the US, however, one has to fly first to Paris and then catch the one flight offered each week to the capital city of Bangui.

Considering its many natural wonders, the Central African Republic could be a premier tropical tourism destination; instead, it is in disastrous shape. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) ranks the Central African Republic 168th out of 175 countries surveyed in its Human Development Index. Tourist guides to the C.A.R. include warnings about the violence and unrest that are unpredictable and potentially very dangerous.

A COUNTRY VICTIMIZED BY SLAVE TRADERS

What saddened me the most, however, was the excellent book by Pierre Saulnier I read there. It lists the population estimates for the C.A.R. in the 17th century at between 5 and 6 million people.[1] The best available statistics for the current population approximates it at 4.5 million. What happened? The demographic disaster of slave raids did not cease until the very end of the 19th century. Imagine my surprise to learn that the primary culprits were Arab and Muslim slave traders from the Sudan and Zanzibar and from the northern region of Chad. "As recently as the 19th century 20,000 slaves were sold each year on the Egyptian market." [2]

In the midst of severe economic and political difficulties, the Church has grown dramatically and is a dynamic presence in that society. Here are some numbers that illustrate this fact: In 1905, the C.A.R., which is about the size of France, had 450 baptized Catholics in the entire country. By 2000, the number had grown to 708,000 Catholics. The first Central African priest was ordained in 1938. In the year 2000, they had 137 indigenous priests. George Wirnkar and I spoke at the major seminary outside Bangui, which currently has 138 seminarians.

Archbishop Paulin Pomodimo of Bangui received us very kindly. The chancellor of the archdiocese was even sent to pick me up from the airport. Our mission of supporting the Church in defending the right to life and the family corresponds closely with their priorities. We were introduced to Fr. Ignace Bikowo, who recently graduated from the Frenchspeaking John Paul II Institute for Studies on Marriage and Family in Benin. He is just putting into place a pastoral plan for defending life and the family.

Experience has taught us that a most effective way to spread the pro-life message is to use Catholic radio. Fortunately, we found a strong ally in Fr. Bertrand Bailly, director of Radio Notre Dame. He invited us to participate in several interviews, and even call-in shows, during the week of our visit. We discussed all the major topics concerning the culture of death, but AIDS came to the fore as the most serious issue.

The Central African Republic has an HIV/AIDS prevalence rate of 13.5%^[3] among adults, which is the 9th worst in the world. The problem is definitely getting worse, as sexual morality and faithfulness in marriage are not the focus of AIDS prevention efforts. One government employee told me that, when looking at the "AIDS Map" of the country, the areas well known for strong families and marriages had a very low incidence of infection. No one at the national AIDS office seems interested in following up on this insight.

Condoms are being widely promoted in the C.A.R. I saw billboards for the "lover's plus" brand with the name curiously written in English. The local International Planned Parenthood Federation affiliate is deeply implicated in the condom campaigns. Numerous other non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the government health centers are also distributing many condoms in order to saturate their society with them. On the positive side, abortion is illegal, and there is little talk of changing the law in this very pro-childbearing culture. The average family still has 4.2 children.

We spoke with a Catholic nun who leads a major group caring for AIDS sufferers. She has 800 women enrolled who receive the latest drugs. It is truly amazing to see her "before and after" pictures of AIDS-infected persons who look on the brink of death before and perfectly healthy after treatment. A major problem she told us about, however, was the fact that many ladies, who feel fine thanks to their medication, say they want to marry and have children. But, even if their symptoms are virtually gone, they remain HIV-positive and capable of infecting others. The billions of dollars worth of AIDS medication being sent to Africa from the US and other donor countries are slowly transforming the disease for many into an expensive-to-treat chronic condition.

One area that is extremely troubling is the arrival of the Sexual Revolution in the C.A.R. A concerned father told me he had to withdraw his daughters from a high school where prostitution was being organized among the students. Predatory men had managed to corrupt some school girls into becoming their "pimps." At-risk girls typically would receive "gifts" such as cell phones, etc., and then they would be told that they would have to pay for these or provide sexual favors. The teachers in the school did not realize what was going on for a long time. (This situation is not quite as bad as the many scandals from South Africa, where teachers were demanding sex for good grades.) Prostitution remains a big factor in the Central African AIDS epidemic.

CATHOLIC APOSTOLATE HELPS C.A.R. COUPLES AND FAMILIES

One of the groups that will hopefully be able to turn the tide in favor of healthy marriages and families is the Equipes Notre Dame (Teams of Our Lady). Archbishop Pomodimo strongly encouraged us to meet with their leadership and work together. They invited us to a planning meeting and accepted our gifts of molds to produce models of 10-weekold preborn children. These are excellent educational tools to teach children in schools and to help convince mothers not to go through with an abortion. We also brought copies of pro-life films and St. Michael the Archangel prayer cards in French.

The Equipes Notre Dame consists of small groups of married couples who meet regularly to pray together and to discuss their faith and family challenges. It is an excellent support network for Catholics and has a strong component of spirituality. Most remarkable in the Central African Republic is the high caliber of the members, both intellectually and in terms of social position. They can closely monitor the political situation to make sure that no legislation to legalize abortion is brought forward secretly.

Both George and I perceived that the Central African Republic has been spared the aggressive attacks of the abortion promoters until now because the political situation has been so unstable there. As an extremely poor country, however, they are vulnerable to financial blackmail by international institutions. On the other hand, the strong pro-child culture of the C.A.R. and the influence of the Catholic Church are strong bulwarks for the protection of the right to life.

HLI plans to continue working closely with the Church and lay apostolates in the Central African Republic to spread pro-life information and materials. We shall be taking advantage of the well-developed Catholic radio network to air our new HLI programs in French. (An interesting side note here was the news that Radio Notre Dame's transmitter is strong enough to reach the whole country, but the government refuses to grant them the rights to reach further than the area surrounding the capital.)

PARKS FOR HUMANS, ANIMALS FREE TO ROAM

As I was leaving Central Africa, I learned that a large percentage of the country consists of national parks. Central Africans confided to me that they were scandalized by the largely white international environmentalist groups and visitors who demand the elimination of the black human presence from these areas, where populations have lived for thousands of years. The cruel irony of treating humans as pests to be eradicated and animals and plants as invaluable resources is not lost on the people of Africa. It is certainly not the balanced environmentalism that the Church advocates, with man as a steward of nature. HLI recognizes the inverted priorities of radical environmental groups who would "park" humans and subject them to population control while engaging in idolatrous worship of animals and wilderness as a modern manifestation of the culture of death.

Mission Report: Togo Benin Chad: August 2008

George Wirnkar, August 2008

Our HLI missionary travels take a great deal of preparation, especially when making a ground-breaking trip to a country we have never reached before. In parts of Africa, modern means of communication and air transportation are expensive and unreliable. Even a rented car is almost as likely to break down in the middle of nowhere as is a bush taxi. However, prayer and the Holy Spirit keep us going.

RETURN VISIT TO BENIN AND TOGO

I was pleasantly surprised to see that Cotonou International Airport is now Cardinal Bernadin Gantin International Airport. This is in tribute to the first cardinal from Benin, who served in the Roman Curia for many years under John Paul the Great and who recently passed away in his native country.

On this missionary trip, I first drove to Togo, where in December 2006-almost like a thunderbolt-the National Assembly had passed a law that liberalized abortion in what was supposed to be a budget rubber-stamp session. This was a blatant case of manipulation by a handful of elites exploiting the ignorance of lawmakers with the help of some international NGOs (non-governmental organizations). This law is not only immoral but totally repugnant to traditional Togolese values. Our affiliate in Togo clearly has her work cut out for her.

The visit to Togo was critical at this time because of the recent elevation of three holy priests to the episcopate. Father Denis Amouzou-Dzakpah was promoted from Priest-Secretary General of the Bishop's Conference to Metropolitan Archbishop of Lomé. Mgrs. Nicodème Anani Barrigah-Benissan was called home from the Vatican Diplomatic Service to take charge of the Diocese of Atakpame. Former John Paul II Seminary rector, Fr. Jacques Longa, became Coadjutor Bishop of Kara. We are infinitely grateful to the Almighty for raising these distinguished and faithful sons of His to the episcopate in Togo.

Longtime friend, Bishop Benoit Alowonou, welcomed me to his Diocese of Kpalime. We rely on his support, since he is the bishop responsible for the seminary, priests, and religious in Togo. He graciously welcomed me to his residence and made plenty of time for us to discuss our plans and on-going programs. Togo shall host the next HLI Francophone Seminarian Institute in the summer of 2009, and we have received the blessing for this from the Metropolitan Archbishop, H.E. Amousou-Dzakpa.

The high spirits with which I left Kpalime on August 14-the Feast of St. Maximilian Kolbe-were soon put to the test by an attack of malaria. This terrible disease can quickly reduce even the strongest man to helplessness. I arrived in Cotonou, Benin, with a fever of 101.3°. My medical doctor, who is also my niece, immediately prescribed medication for me by telephone text message. Nevertheless, the next day I had a heavy head, intermittent nausea, and balance problems due to the powerful anti-malaria drugs. Trusting in the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary on her great feast (August 15, Feast of the Assumption), I grabbed my pilgrim's baton and headed for Porto Novo.

SEMINARIANS FOR LIFE PROGRAM BEARING SPIRITUAL FRUIT

Assumption Day was to mark one of the high points of my visit. It was a great moment of grace for me to be present at the priestly ordination of 18 priests and 23 deacons in one ceremony for the Diocese of Porto Novo, Benin. Over 10,000 people came, including 155 priests and hundreds of religious. The ceremony was held in the huge square outside the national assembly, which could hardly hold all who came. I also felt that sanctifying these grounds around the parliament building was providential in a climate where African governments are under pressure to legalize abortion.

More than half of the ordinands were members of our seminarian groups from the two major seminaries in Benin. Therefore, the joy of the event included the great satisfaction of knowing that we had helped to make these seminarians well-equipped to bring the Gospel of Life to their people. The joy and the effervescence of the rich local traditions and Yoruba color made me forget my malaria attack while I was at this five-hour ordination Mass. Only profuse sweating reminded me to take my eight-hourly medicine and rest some more.

The number of seminarians in Togo and Benin are the largest they've ever been, and those numbers are growing! This is also a fact in most of Africa. That means increased demands on our time and a need for more publications, materials, and visits to encourage these seminarians who are the hope of the Church. We must continue to follow up and provide printed material, didactic resources, and sometimes equipment like projectors and computers to support their work. Without the generous support of our faithful friends and donors, these, at best, would remain wishes. By the end of 2008, Benin alone will see 80 ordinations. Projections for next year stand at 85. Togo, in 2008, expects 28 priestly ordinations. And there are 14 more Francophone countries that add to the number of newly ordained priests on this continent.

The end of my visit to Togo and Benin saw a joint planning meeting of our affiliate leaders and staff. It is beautiful to see these two neighbors sharing solid cooperation and joint action for life.

FIRST HLI VOYAGE TO CHAD

Chad's problems have made news headlines in the last five years. It is hemmed in by Sudan in the east, Libya in the North, Niger in the west, Central African Republic in the South, and Cameroon in the Southwest. Chad's landlocked population of just over ten million has an HIV prevalence rate of nearly 5%. Estimates that put its Muslim population at 53% and Christian population at 34% (Catholic 20.1%, Protestant 14.2%) are incorrect, I was told, and are inflated in favor of Islam.

Chad is a country blessed with huge oil reserves, but this is being turned into a curse upon its people. Greed has fueled war amongst various factions. The people are poorer than in many other African countries with fewer natural resources. The major seminary in Bakara has no electrical service, and it is only 15 miles outside of the capital, N'Djamena! They use a small generator to have lights a few hours at night. Most incredibly for a leading crude oil exporter, diesel costs $6.06 per gallon.

His Excellency Matthias N'Gateri Mayadi, Archbishop of N'Djamena, opened the doors of Chad's seminaries to us and arranged a meeting for me with the vibrant Family Life Apostolate and the Chastity and Family Life Education teams. I was honored to speak twice during my visit at a meeting of the Charismatic Renewal that gathered 200 leaders from all over Chad.

Chad has two seminaries with a total of about 100 seminarians. It is one of the rare countries of Africa that is not bursting at the seams with priestly vocations. Chad is, in many respects, a place of primary evangelization and has missionaries, mainly from other African countries, in many of their parishes and ministries. We have the arduous task of helping the Church in Chad to strengthen her families, which is the only sustainable way to assure an increase in vocations and authentic evangelization.

Because of political instability and constant rebel incursions, humanitarian organizations are plentiful in Chad. Many organizations friendly to the culture of death, particularly UNFPA, IPPF, and Médecins Sans Frontières (Doctors Without Borders) are hard at work in Chad. The Church's limited chastity program is unique there in providing a truly enduring defense for the young against HIV/AIDS. In many cases, the terrain is wide open for contraception to flourish. Abortion remains illegal but is very easily accessible. I was told of deaths from abortions practiced both in primitive conditions and in medical institutions.

The culture of death is working overtime in Chad. With the economic situation stagnating-despite the oil-the anti-life agenda has many opportunities. Resources available to the Church are extremely limited, but we are blessed to have a Church open and willing to work with us to make things better.

In the years ahead, we shall bring our experience to bear on this land in order to push back abortion and to support chastity and youth education programs. We urgently need to supply films and printed materials to both the Family Life Apostolate in N'Djamena and the Love and Life Education program. We also hope to begin a parish-to-parish-based youth program similar to our Benin affiliate's work. We have already distributed copies of Evangelium vitae, Veritatis splendor, and Humanae vitae to all seminarians in the theological phase of studies at St. Luke Major Seminary in Bakara, Chad. We are preparing a shipment of our well-received The Case Against Condoms book in French as well as other key materials on NFP and the Culture of Life to all of Chad's 100 seminarians. This is the beginning of a great enterprise to revive the to all of Chad's 100 seminarians. This is the beginning of a great enterprise to equip the Church in Chad with all the information and materials it needs to defend life and the family.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA WELCOMES HLI FOR THE FIRST TIME

Frequently, George and I travel together as a team in Africa. This time, however, we parted ways to cover more territory. He flew to Senegal, and I went to Equatorial Guinea. In both cases we were undertaking the very first HLI pro-life missionary journeys to these countries. Another reason for me to go alone to Equatorial Guinea is that George is not fluent in Spanish, the main language there. They are, in fact, the only Spanish-speaking nation in West Africa.

Spain created a small trading post there in the late 18th century, but they were much more interested in developing their colonies in the Americas and the Philippines. During the tide of decolonization, in 1968, they were granted independence. Within a few decades, very large off-shore oil fields were discovered. Equatorial Guinea is now Sub-Saharan Africa's third largest oil-exporter, which has greatly increased the importance of this little tropical nation. Their average per capita income is very high for Africa, but unfortunately, the financial blessings from the black gold are not divided very equitably.

On landing at the international airport in the capital city of Malabo, located on the island of Bioko, it was immediately clear that Guineans are better-off than most of their African neighbors. As in natural resources-rich Gabon, there was no crowd of persons trying to earn a tip by carrying your bag out to the parking lot. I was happy that US citizens do not require a visa for travel to Equatorial Guinea, but the many foreign oil-industry workers have inflated the cost of lodging. It took some searching to find a hotel with reasonable prices.

HLI's PRO-LIFE REPUTATION PRECEDES US

My first stop the next morning was to call on Archbishop Idefonso Obama Obono. Imagine my surprise to learn that "Obama" is a fairly common name in Equatorial Guinea! I came well-introduced with a letter from Archbishop Esua of Bamenda, Cameroon, who knows Archbishop Obama well. It was a very warm welcome. As I began to describe HLI's work to the archbishop, he informed me that he knew all about Human Life International, even though no representative had yet gone to his country. It seems that HLI's pro-life reputation now precedes us before we arrive. Archbishop Obama has read our publications in Spanish and has heard about the good work we are doing through his brother bishops. This was an auspicious beginning to our meeting!

Equatorial Guinea needs HLI's help, Archbishop Obama insisted. Although about 90% of Guineans are baptized Catholics and abortion is illegal, the cultural drift there is going in an anti-life direction. They have only 108 priests to minister to 548 000 going in an anti-life direction. They have only 100 priests to minister to 340,000 faithful.¹ They have many young vocations to the priesthood, but the Church is still critically low on clergy. I was invited to address the priests in the capital city and found out there were only 12!

Equatorial Guinea still has a healthy birthrate of just over five children per family, but the situation is changing fast. Several priests who came from large families themselves told me that their married siblings are generally only having two children. In the cities, the decline in fertility is dramatic. Despite this worrying trend, the ministry of health has family planning as its top priority as well as fighting AIDS through a program that relies heavily on condoms.

I saw a local television program featuring an AIDS prevention program in a small town. Although they began by saying "ABC"-Abstinence, Be Faithful and Condoms-they spent the vast majority of their time promoting condom use and neglecting to mention the terrible failure rates of this method. Guinean priests told me that the Church was usually invited to these AIDS prevention meetings at first, but since they refused to endorse condom use, they are no longer welcome at these sessions.

Looming over Equatorial Guinea, as in much of resource-rich West Africa, is the presence of the Communist People's Republic of China. Thirty percent of their oil is exported to China. There is a large and growing Chinese colony in Equatorial Guinea. As HLI readers know well, the anti-life ideas of China, particularly with regards to training doctors and policy-makers, are a big problem. They are quite eager to export their "success" in family planning and abortion to countries around the world.

We will be establishing a branch of Seminarians for Life International in Equatorial Guinea and will send them our many excellent materials in Spanish. Training sessions for the priests are another high priority. I believe that this small nation is a perfect place for HLI to assist the Church in creating a pro-life stronghold that will successfully resist the assaults of the culture of death. The remarkable Spanish-language pro-life website HLI maintains, www.vidahumana.org, is something that the Guineans are very happy to have at their disposal. They are also looking forward to receiving pro-life films that can be shown in parishes and schools. Once again, HLI is fulfilling its mission of reaching the far-flung regions of the earth with the Gospel of Life.

Mission Report: Malawi: January-February 2008

Emil Hagamu, January-February, 2008

When I left Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, for Malawi on Wednesday, January 23, the weather was sunny and very hot, but on entering Malawi the weather changed to cool and the land was very green. I could see farms of maize and tobacco everywhere. When my hosts, Fr. Alpheus Zikomankhani and Mr. Harris Kachaso came to pick me up an hour after I landed, I realized just how beautiful this tiny country was and why they call it The Warm Heart of Africa. The evergreen vegetation is a wonder in and of itself, and as I took in its beauty, I saw hard working Malawians in the fields-cultivating the land and planting seeds.

This was my fourth visit to Malawi in three years. The purpose of this visit was: 1) to introduce HLI to Church leadership, especially the bishop of Lilongwe Diocese; 2) to conduct a four-day leadership training workshop; 3) to present a pro-life/pro-family program to major seminarians and lay groups within and outside Lilongwe; and 4) to visit pro-life activists and encourage them to do more and recruit new ones to the movement.

TEACHING ON THE THREATS TO HUMAN LIFE

Fr. Alpheus drove us directly to his Madisi parish, where we stayed until Friday morning when we left for Lilongwe and Likuni. During our stay at Madisi, I visited some pro-life activists-those I trained at Chipoka three years ago and others I trained at Mangochi two years ago. On Friday, we traveled to Lilongwe, 80 km from Madisi. There were many pro-lifers who were eagerly waiting to meet us.

On Sunday, I met with 56 members from the Lilongwe Diocese's Christian Family Movement. I gave a talk to them in which I highlighted the many dangers facing the traditional family today, including abortion, contraception, same-sex "marriage," and sex education. On their part, they expressed appreciation for my talk and promised to be on their guard. More importantly, they promised to cooperate with our HLI office in Malawi-which is situated within the same compound-for further information and education whenever our assistance will be needed.

On Monday, our 4-day workshop began. There were a total of 13 participants from various parishes in the Diocese of Lilongwe. The workshop took place at Aonenje Lodge, some 7 miles south of Lilongwe city. Presentations included:

- What is HLI, its Vision, and Mission
- The Miracle of Human Life
- Christian Marriage
- The Christian Family
- Threats to Human Life, Marriage, and Family
- Abortion and its Consequences
- A video presentation called The Silent Scream

- A video presentation called The Great Concern
- Contraception and its Consequences and Church Teachings
- NFP: The Billings Ovulation Method
- The Maputo Protocol.

WIDESPREAD KING CONDOM PROMOTION

Condom advertising has been entrenched in Malawi, making Malawians believe that, indeed, they are the SAVIOR against HIV infection and a method of family planning. On Saturday evening, as I was watching TV in my hotel room, I saw a condom program. In the program, the condom instruction began by defining what a condom is, and one condom was unrolled and showed to the viewing audience. As there is only one TV (MTV: Malawi Television) station in this country, certainly the program was being watched by many people. The program continued by showing the viewers how the condom should be handled, unrolled, and fitted onto the male reproductive organ. This was a very obscene moment! Imagine a program of that nature being shown on the TV without regard to the selection of the audience. Children were watching, as well as young adolescents, the married, and the elderly. Population controllers do not take into consideration people's cultures. Perhaps that is their aim: to destroy Malawi culture.

As I was walking along the streets of Lilongwe, I saw many vehicles with full condom advertisements, especially the special condom brand, "MANYUCHI." If you remember what I reported two years ago, Manyuchi stands for the English word HONEY. So, by advertising the condom as Manyuchi, and through photographs of beautiful women, Population Services International (PSI) wants to convince Malawi people that condoms are sweet as honey and therefore ideal and appropriate for use.

PSI and all condom promoters know very well the failure rate of condoms. Yet they continue lying to people by employing the most deceptive language. The failure rate of condoms will always lead to the DEATH of the infected individual. Pro-lifers can only defeat these lies if they gallantly put in place counter programs and if the Catholic Church stands by their side.

SEMINARIAN WORKSHOP POSTPONED

A seminarian program was scheduled to take place after the four-day workshop. We were to travel to Zomba on February 1. There, I was expected to meet and address major seminarians at St. Peter's Major Seminary and Nankunda Minor Seminary. However, due to the illness of Mr. Harris Kachaso, the HLI contact person in Malawi, the program was postponed. Mr. Kachaso's health failed him even before we started the workshop. I had to do most of the work, planning, coordinating, and presenting all the workshop topics. On Friday, Mr. Kachaso became seriously ill, despite his heroic struggle to work with me. On Saturday, he could not walk nor talk, and it was apparent that he was very seriously sick. I took him to the hotel I was staying at and gave him a room where he could sleep and enjoy a peaceful environment. After taking supper and praying together, I escorted him to his room. On Sunday morning, Mr Kachaso could not wake up. I rushed to pick up his wife and a few friends. With the help of these friends and his wife, I took him to a nearby Lilongwe Mission hospital. He was of these friends and his wife, I took him to a nearby Likuni Mission hospital. He was admitted there for further investigation and treatment. Until Monday, February 4, Mr. Harris Kachaso was receiving intensive care by the medical doctors and nurses at this Catholic Hospital. As I was leaving Likuni for Madisi, his health had slightly improved. He could recognize people who came to see him and could remember the day and date.

[Editor's note: After a brief recovery, Harris became gravely ill again and passed away in August. Please pray for the repose of his soul-he was an heroic pro-lifer! For more on Mr. Kachaso, please see his obituary in HLI's fall edition of FrontLines.]

BISHOP BLESSES HLI

On Monday, February 4, I had the privilege to meet with the Bishop of Lilongwe, His Lordship Remie Ste Marie. He is Canadian by birth and belongs to White Fathers Missionary Religious Congregation. Since I had previously sent him some pro-life material, he already knew my name and therefore he welcomed me very warmly. I gave him one copy of the books The Facts of Life and The Case Against Condoms, some brochures, and HLI's Pro-life CD Library. I also gave him copies of the four books I have written in Kiswahili. This was a momentous event indeed for the three of us who visited him, Fr. Alpheus Zikomankhani, Lilian, and myself.

In my talk with the Bishop, I made a brief presentation of HLI and its mission around the world, the branches, regional offices, and the many affiliates. I told him about our president, Fr. Tom Euteneuer, and his competent staff at HLI headquarters in Front Royal, Virginia. Then, I told him about the early development of HLI Pro-life Malawi. I mentioned the three formation workshops we have had and Dr. Brian Clowes' visit in 2006, which was also instrumental in pioneering the formation of HLI Pro-life Malawi.

At the end of my presentation, I made three requests to the Bishop: 1) upon his discretion, to appoint Fr. Alpheus Zikomankhani, who has been assisting HLI Malawi over all these years of formation, as advisor; 2) if possible, to provide an office for HLI in one of his diocesan buildings since the current one at Likuni Printing Press is very expensive and we cannot afford to continue using it; 3) to bless and support the work that HLI has started for bringing the Gospel of Life and building a culture of life in Malawi.

In his response, the bishop expressed his appreciation for the great work HLI is doing around the world and the initiative it has taken to start a pro-life movement in Malawi, especially in his diocese Lilongwe. He said he has heard about HLI, and he has always supported the pro-life mission. He fully gave his approval to the requests I made to him and promised to work with HLI Malawi in all matters that will need his support or advice. Finally, he thanked HLI for giving him the pro-life material.

I would like to sincerely thank HLI-Central for facilitating the success of this missionary trip to Malawi. Indeed, without the financial and material support from HLI-Central, this program would not have taken place.

Rev. Thomas J. Euteneuer, March 25-29, 2009

Rich in culture, history, and spirituality, this nation suffered from a vicious religious persecution under Communist dictator Joseph Stalin and his successors like very few other nations. The Ukrainian Catholic Church (i.e., Greek or Byzantine Catholic, united with Rome) was the target of forced church closings and absorption into the Orthodox Church, various fraudulent church synods, the martyrdom of bishops, priests, nuns, and laity on an unprecedented scale, and an ongoing campaign to sully and degrade the Faith.

Yet, despite decades of this type of treatment, the Ukrainian Catholic Church went underground and survived with a remarkable resiliency. Robert Royal, in his book, Catholic Martyrs of the 20th Century, mentions that 8 bishops, 1,000 priests, 1,200 nuns and at least 6 religious orders survived intact and emerged from the catacombs once the religious persecution abated in the 1980s (p. 85). In fact, the Church in Ukraine seems to be flourishing now. At the Holy Spirit Seminary in Lviv, where our bioethics conference was held, there are a full 200 seminarians studying for the priesthood, and this does not count Roman Catholic and other religious order seminarians, which amount to hundreds more. Truly, God is blessing this Church for its fidelity.

UKRAINE'S ANTI-LIFE SITUATION

The legacy of atheistic Communism has left deep scars on the nation, one of which is the scourge of abortion. Up to a decade ago, this nation of 47 million people used to have more than 1 million abortions a year. That was an astronomical abortion rate given that the country is one-sixth the size of the US, yet had virtually the same number of abortions. As with all countries under the hammer and sickle of the red menace, abortion was not so much a matter of feminist propaganda-it was part of a materialistic ethic that sought to replace the family with the state. The main airport terminal in Lviv displayed this ethic very clearly in a set of murals that I took pictures of when I was leaving. These paintings showed the "glorious workers' revolution" of the people who were all smiling and grouped in sets of anonymous workers; there were a few kids in the murals but no discernible family units. The clear message was that the children didn't belong to parents in an organic, divinely-ordained institution called the family: they were belong to parents in an organic, intimately organized institution called the family, they were just workers in training. Even today the effects of this control are felt: one sees almost no children on the streets in Ukraine. Children are noticeable by their absence; the fruit of decades of atheism.

REAL GOVERNMENT CONCERNS ABOUT THE FUTURE

Despite its history, Ukraine is one of those countries that are trying to face squarely the coming demographic disaster. A decade ago, Ukraine had a population of 52 million, but because of emigration and the long-term effects of abortion, the number of Ukrainians living in Ukraine is now 47 million and declining. According to the UN Population Division, the 2008 fertility rate was less than one child per family. Surely that must frighten even the most optimistic social planners as they look to the future of their country and wonder who will be there to pay taxes, to provide for the welfare of the elderly and dependent, and to lead Ukraine in the family of nations.

The government has established a special committee to study these problems. There are one million infertile couples, 80% of which are due to the effects of abortion. Abortion has brought immense health costs and hospitalizations, which are placing extra burdens on an already overtaxed healthcare system. As many as 68% of all deliveries have complications and very few of the children born are fully healthy. As a small step to remedying this situation the state is giving generous payments to those families that have a second and third child-I was told that the payments can be as much as the equivalent of a small professional salary per month. They know that the "investment" in their future is well worth the cost.

GOOD NEWS FOR LIFE

The statue of the Virgin Mary in Lviv Park attests to Ukraine's rich religious culture.

In 2003, HLI sponsored a pro-life conference in Kiev in which all denominations were represented and leaders from all sectors of government and healthcare were in attendance. It was a major conference with a major impact. On the heels of that conference Parliament reduced the availability of abortion from 28 weeks of gestation down to 22 weeks. There was also much greater pressure from the churches to reduce or eliminate abortion and many of the pro-lifers were emboldened to begin new initiatives such as training and lobbying and crisis pregnancy centers.

The overall effect of these initiatives from the 2003 conference was a dramatic decrease in abortions in Ukraine. Our HLI representatives told me that in the last decade the number of abortions in Ukraine was reduced from one million abortions down to 200,000 per year-that is an astounding reduction in the killing! In Ukraine it is still possible to walk into abortion clinics and talk to both patients and medical personnel about abortion and convince them not to go through with or perform the procedure. Clearly there is an openness to the message of life both at the government and personal levels that makes Ukraine poised for further reductions. Our only problem is giving the pro-lifers the resources to touch the hearts of as many people as possible.

THE BIOETHICS CONFERENCE AND HLI LEADERS MEETING

My main reason for going to Ukraine was to attend our bioethics conference and bring HLI leaders together for some discussions about Eastern Europe. This was accomplished in full force. The conference was held at the Greek Catholic Holy Spirit Seminary which is right next to the phenomenal new Ukrainian Catholic University (UCU), which hosted many of the sessions. Nearly 400 people attended this conference to their great benefit.

Holy Spirit Seminary where the HLI-sponsored bioethics conference was held.

Sr. Diogena Tereshkevych, associate professor at the department of Philosophy and Economics at the National Medical University in Lviv was the main organizer, and she brought together professionals from every level of government, the churches, and the professions to discuss a whole range of pro-life issues. Great thanks go to Dr. Oleh Kindiy and Fr. Ivan who provided phenomenal translation services to the HLI participants and without whom we would have been unable to appreciate the conference speakers.

The interventions and discussions were too numerous to recount here, but the conference provided ample opportunity for HLI speakers to encourage the pro-lifers there. Of particular note were the talks of Mr. Joannes Bucher (HLI Regional Coordinator), Mr. Paul Vincenti (HLI Malta), and Dr. Antun Lisec (HLI Croatia) who addressed the plenary session in Russian. I had a chance to give a word of warning about the new American anti-life administration, and regular HLI readers can pretty much figure out what I told them about Obama's anti-life record!

The bioethics conference was followed by a day-long meeting with HLI leaders, who came from Austria, Belarus, Croatia, Romania, Poland, and, of course, Ukraine to join us for the discussions. They represented a pretty good cross-section of the HLI family in that part of the world. The meeting provided us with ample time to talk and discuss the future of the pro-life work in Ukraine and other countries of Eastern Europe, and we ended with a pro-life Mass and dinner

HELPING UKRAINE

The resolutions for Ukraine became very clear as a result of our discussions. The most effective thing that pro-lifers do in Ukraine, and one with long-term impact, is to train people in NFP and the pro-life mentality. Our affiliate, the Foundation for Human Dignity, has three or four week-long training sessions per year and wants to increase that number to ten or twelve, and we have promised to help them to do that! They also desperately need to get pro-life literature translated into their language and distributed to as many people as possible. They work hand-in-hand with the few other pro-life organizations in Ukraine, such as the wonderful UCU Family Institute, to other pro-life organizations in Ukraine, such as the wonderful CCC Family Institute, to get the message out as much as possible. There is so much to do but, thankfully, many willing hands! I would like to commend above all Genia Samborska and Aleksander Dubroyer of the Foundation for Human Dignity and those who work closely with them in their spreading of the life message. They are marvels of fidelity and creativity.

When Jesus was beginning His public ministry, He bid His disciples to raise their eyes and behold, "the fields are ripe for the harvest." (Jn 4:35) Indeed, the Lord Jesus is directing our eyes eastward, especially to Ukraine and the post-Communist countries, because the time for harvest is right now. We pray that from this beautiful country that suffered the spilling of so much martyrs' blood, will come the fruits of a new civilization of life and love.

Mission Report: Romania: October - November 2008

Fr. Bill Bellrose, October-November 2008

My first trip to Romania was an eye-opening experience that reconfirmed how great is the need for HLI's Seminarians for Life program. The seminarians of Romania are open to life issues but sorely lacking in materials and training needed to make them tomorrow's pro-life priests. Fortunately, HLI is now there to help remedy this problem.

As I landed in Timisoara, which is in the western part of Romania, I prepared myself for what would be an intensive week of talks and meetings to further the cause of life in what was not so long ago a part of the Eastern Bloc under Soviet rule. To get things under way, I met with the board of HLI's affiliate in Romania, the Gift of Life Association.

It was a good meeting in which we discussed the pro-life movement around the world and in Romania, and it included discussion about the main problems Romanians face and the successes they have enjoyed. In one success story, it was related that many doctors at their hospitals have begun refusing to perform abortions.

However, when discussing the role of the Church in Romania's pro-life movement, the board expressed concern that many of the bishops do not speak out and do not support them in their work. Another challenge in their pro-life movement is that they lack an organized approach to supporting women who want to keep their baby.

My first few days in Romania were productive and busy as I preached at Masses, gave a talk at the Church about the dignity of being human, and prayed at vigils in front of abortion "clinics." I was also able to preach at the Adoration of the Cross and Holy Hours.

OPENING THE DOORS TO SEMINARIANS IN ROMANIA

My travel companion, Fr. Ioan Chisarau, and I made our way around this country, which is slightly smaller than the US state of Oregon, traveling through the mountainous regions to visit both Greek and Roman Catholic seminaries. The first was in Oradea, in the northwest corner. There, I gave a talk to a mixed group of students and seminarians. The rector of this seminary, Fr. Cristian Sabau, is one of the most pro-life rectors in Greek Catholic seminaries in Romania. He is forming new programs on which Fr. Ioan Chisarau, who is the deputy director of the Gift of Life Association, can work with him. Fr. Ioan has been a great supporter of this seminary and has been very influential in the development of its educational program.

I spoke on the international pro-life movement and Fr. Ioan talked about the pro-life movement specific to Romania. We had time for a question-and-answer session, and the seminarians raised very good questions about in vitro fertilization and euthanasia. Overall, the students were very receptive to the message.

SEMINARIANS RECEIVE THE GOSPEL OF LIFE

Traveling east through the mountains, we headed to Cluj, where we met with the pro-life director for the area. We had been told that the seminary there was not receptive to the pro-life message and that it viewed pro-life issues as personal. However, when I spoke with seminarians in Cluj, they seemed open to my message. I had the best reaction from them when I showed them the state of abortion laws around the world. I started with the African map, and then went to Europe. When they saw the contrast between the mostly pro-life laws in Africa and the mostly pro-death ones in Europe, they really started to pay attention. One of the questions I ask them during my talk was how many had read Humanae vitae and Evangelium vitae? And I found that not one seminarian had read either document. I challenged them to read the documents so they would at least know what the Church teaches on these issues. In turn, they asked questions, which were of such a nature that it became clear that the pro-life movement and life issues were indeed very new to them.

I found a similar situation at the seminary in Blaj, where our talk was well attended, and even the rector and a moral theologian joined the seminarians to hear our message. For all their interest in the message we brought to them, not a single student had read either of the papal encyclicals, and the pro-life issues were equally unfamiliar to them.

However, there was no lack of interest on the part of these future priests. After Mass on the following morning, one of the seminarians related to me over breakfast how he had been considering all that I had talked about the previous night. He made an analogy between the sex education course in schools and drug dealers, comparing a teacher giving out free pills and condoms to a drug dealer giving out the first few drugs for free and then charging for them after their "clients" are addicted. This was a very relevant analogy, and the young man became very fired up about pro-life issues. It was good to see.

After breakfast, we met with the Greek Catholic bishop, His Beatitude Major Archbishop Lucian Muresan of the Fagaras and Alba Iulia dioceses. He was very supportive of the pro-life movement, and he thanked us for our work and encouraged us to return. He said he hopes that we can meet again soon to help promote the culture of life.

RADIO INTERVIEWS ON ROMANIAN CHRISTIAN RADIO

Between our talks to seminarians, Fr. Ioan and I did a radio interview on the only Christian radio station in that area of Romania. The interview went well. We were able to talk about the pro-life movement, the effects of abortion on society, and the importance of protecting life from fertilization until natural death. The talk show host asked some good questions, and it was nice to see that the local radio station was not afraid to talk good questions, and it was nice to see that the local radio station was not afraid to talk about life issues.

In Alba Iulia we spoke at the Roman Catholic Seminary, where the rector, Fr. Olah Zoltan, was very cordial and open to us. Again, I asked who had read Humanae vitae and Evangelium vitae, and this was the first place where one person raised his hand to indicate he had read Evangelium vitae. Out of all of the seminaries I visited in Romania, only one seminarian had read one of the two documents. Again, the students were very open to the message, and one of them even volunteered to work with Fr. Ioan at the Gift of Life Association. After the talk, we were able to speak with the rector, and he told us that many of the students entering the seminary were very much in need of basic training on life issues.

At the close of our whirlwind week, we had come full-circle back to Timisoara, where we held a conference for medical students. The topic was science supporting Church teaching, and the students received my talk very well. Their questions were not argumentative, but very open ones, asking primarily about end-of-life issues.

SPIRITUAL FOUNDATION

At the end of the week, I went on a pilgrimage with the Gift of Life Association to Maria Radna shrine. We said the outdoor Stations of the Cross for the unborn child. Then, we had Mass in the Shrine, and I preached on the importance of Mary and prayer in the pro-life movement.

I ended my time in Romania that night with meditations during Adoration of the Cross, which I took from Evangelium vitae, paragraphs 50 and 51, and ending with the last lines, "Grant, therefore, that we may listen with open and generous hearts to every word which proceeds from the mouth of God. Thus, we shall learn not only to obey the commandment not to kill human life, but also to revere life, to love it, and to foster it."

Mission Report: Brazil: September 2008

Raymond de Souza, September 2008.

One of the reasons for my visit to Brazil was to attend and present a talk at a meeting of pro-life leaders, which took place at the Sacred Hearts Retreat House in Brasilia. The meeting was chaired by Dr. Humberto Vieira, Executive Director of HLI's affiliate in Brazil, Pro Vida Familia, and included speakers from various parts of the pro-life movement in Brazil.

Dameres Regina Alves, an Evangelical representing the Evangelical Parliamentary Front and ATINI - Voice for Life - showed a DVD about the horrendous practice still in force among Brazilian Indians to bury children alive when they are born with physical defects (including having a hare lip), are twins, or are simply unwanted. There are many people campaigning to stop the practice and rescue the unwanted children. However, the government agency in charge of native Indian affairs, the FUNAI ("Indian National Foundation"), refuses to interfere because it is their "culture," and therefore they must be left alone. The equivalent agency in the Catholic Church, the CIMI ("Missionary Indigenist Council"), also looks the other way from the cold-blooded murder of children and even refuses to help secure their being adopted outside of the tribe. I met a 14-year-old Indian girl who had been buried alive and later saved by her brother.

Paulo Fernandes Melo da Costa, a Catholic representing PROVIDAFAMILIA, together with the meeting's chairman, Dr. Humberto Vieira, explained what was being done and what more could be done to have pro-life bills passed in Congress and anti-life bills blocked. He is a very good attorney and a knowledgeable man regarding parliamentary procedures. He was unanimously elected Secretary-General of the newlyformed Pro-Life Network in Brazil ("Rede pro-Vida").

I addressed the group and spoke on the current process of de-Christianization in the West, especially regarding family values, thus giving a wider view to the pro-life movement in Brazil. I am grateful for the support given to my presentation by all participants, who said they understood better the role of HLI in the worldwide fight for life. They were delighted with the idea of "Seminarists for Life," the newsletter, the email system, the expansion throughout the Portuguese-speaking world, and they insisted that I keep in touch with all of them.

A PRO-LIFE NETWORK IN BRAZIL

The first two days ran rather smoothly, as talks were given with very lively participation from the audience (as is usual in Brazil). By the last day, however, a prolonged discussion took place regarding the nature, goals, and modus operandi of the proposed national Pro-Life Network. Originally, Dr. Humberto Vieira had wanted a nationwide organization, whose members would be closely linked to the national body; but in the end, other views prevailed, and a rather loose network of autonomous groups was formed into a new juridical entity. In my opinion, it was a balanced compromise and a good step towards giving the pro-life movement a national, united voice, while respecting the autonomy of its members.

Dr. Vieira took me to visit Bishop Dimas Barbosa, the Secretary of the National Conference of Brazilian Bishops, who received us very cordially and showed interest in the work of HLI, especially in the Portuguese-speaking world. He mentioned that a conference of Portuguese-speaking bishops ("Lusophones") would hold a meeting in Macau later in September, and he volunteered to put me in touch with one of the meeting's organizers, who lives in Portugal, in order to secure contacts for future use in the Portuguese-speaking community of nations. He liked the idea of "Seminarians for Life" and was pleased with the development of closer relationships with HLI. All in all, it was a very positive first major step in enabling HLI to work with the Church in Brazil.

In the evening, I gave a one-hour talk at Our Lady of Fatima Archdiocesan Seminary to approximately 100 seminarians. The topic was the culture of death in the context of the de-Christianization of the contemporary world and the necessity of a well-formed battalion of seminarians to confront it. They responded very well, including the priest in charge, a missionary from Colombia, who thanked me for "opening their horizons to the Cause of Life from the local to the worldwide perspective." Seminarian João Paulo is the leader of the Seminarians for Life chapter there, a group of 23 seminarians committed to the Culture of Life. We agreed to keep in touch via email, newsletter, and live chats. He and his friends will make efforts to recruit more seminarians from other places in Brazil.

THE YOUNG FLOCK TO A BRAZILIAN "MARCH FOR LIFE"

Dr. Vieira and I participated in the March for Life called "Brazil Without Abortion." A tall truck with very powerful loudspeakers led the parade, which numbered 20-25 thousand people, at least half of them young.

It started around the cathedral and ended in front of the Congress and Government buildings. Dom João, the archbishop of Brasilia attended the parade, together with a priest of the diocese. I was given the opportunity to address the crowd twice and did so in my capacity as HLI representative and later as a Brazilian citizen.

It was very encouraging to see all the young people there. In my capacity as a Brazilian-born citizen, I had a thing or two to say about the role of abortionists in the Congress and the Senate, as well as the Presidency. The applause indicated that there was a growing discontent with the politicians' performance on the abortion issue, to say the least.

After the March, I went to visit the parish of a 35-year-old Polish priest who is a very enthusiastic pro-lifer. He placed over 20 large placards at the main bus station of Brasilia, where thousands of people pass by to catch their buses home. I had dinner in his parish, and he was delighted with having made my acquaintance. He gave me DVDs and other material to promote - all in Portuguese.

BROADCASTING THE MESSAGE OF LIFE

I then flew to São Paulo and was taken to a town in the interior of the State, Jacareí, where a very active youth group works to fight abortion. Their leader, Jeferson Moraes, took me to the local Catholic radio station, where I was interviewed for 45 minutes. The radio folks want me to contact them from time to time to report HLI news that may interest Brazilians. Jeferson has been in touch with Executive Director of HLI's Hispanic Division, Vida Humana Internacional, Magaly Llaguno, and is organizing a network of youth groups in five Latin-American countries.

From Jacareí, I was taken to the Canção Nova Television Station, where I was interviewed for an hour and a half. The interview was broadcast live via satellite and internet. During the program, several people sent emails asking questions. These emails came from several different states of Brazil, and one even came from New Zealand. The program host, Prof. Felipe Aquino, well-known in Brazil as a lay apologist and author, was very happy to meet me and said that the program is open to me whenever I visit Brazil. When I got back home, there were over 40 emails from people who saw the program and offered support.

The following morning, I was taken to the Interdiocesan Mater Ecclesiae Seminary in the diocese of Campo Limpo, near São Paulo. They brought in some 110 seminarians, coming from all over the country. The talk was very well-received, I was invited to return, and the priests volunteered to put me in contact with their counterparts in the US for future cooperation.

Early in the evening of the same day, I attended a private meeting with some 10 members of the Esperança e Vida pro-life group (Hope and Life), with whom HLI has already cooperated in Portugal and Uruguay.

Mission Report: Mozambique: September 2008

Raymond de Souza, September 2008

The general goal of my visit to Mozambique was to set in motion the HLI Program for Portuguese-speaking countries in Africa. It was my first visit to that country. Emil Hagamu, HLI's Coordinator for Englishspeaking countries in Africa, had already opened a path there in 2007. With his help, I aimed to renew the contacts previously made by him and to make new ones with both lay and ecclesiastics, with a view to establishing a pro-life group there that would work with HLI.

THE PRO-LIFE SITUATION IN MOZAMBIQUE

Coming from Tanzania, Mozambique was for me a refreshing change: they speak a language I understand (Portuguese)! In Tanzania, they speak mainly Swahili, and I was a bit lost there, to put it mildly. However, Mozambique is a Portuguese-speaking country, so I was in my element, as least as far as language is concerned.

I was pleasantly surprised with the city of Maputo. I had thought it would resemble Dar es Salaam, but it is more like Johannesburg than any typical African city - except, of course, that virtually 99% of people there are Africans. A large number of Portuguese people left the country after the Communist takeover in 1975.

Emil and I set up our headquarters at the Santa Cruz Hotel and put the hotel functions room to good use for receiving people in a relaxed and agreeable atmosphere. We also went out to visit some of the contacts and gave two talks, one in the St. Pius X seminary and another in a private home.

Most of the people I spoke to indicated that the main obstacle to the pro-life cause in Mozambique is the difficult situation of the local Church, which is understaffed and seemingly without the required means to counteract the wave of de-Christianization that has swept the country after nearly two decades of Communism. This situation has been worsened by a wave of immorality and promiscuity among the people, coupled by a profound lackof moral teaching among the populace.

And yet the good prospects for the visit could be seen in the variety of good contacts made, the willingness of many of them to cooperate with HLI, and invitations to run a pro-life conference in the near future.

Emil and I began by making a variety of telephone calls to priests and religious. We wanted to know firsthand what their views were regarding the prospects of a serious pro-life campaign in their country.

THE CHURCH IN MOZAMBIQUE

Fr. Albert Buque was our first contact. He is a Mozambican priest in charge of Radio Maria. He showed great interest in the work of HLI and volunteered time in his radio station to promote our initiatives in Mozambique.

Encouraged by that first promising contact, we visited Fr. Rafael Sabate, the rector of the St. Pius X major seminary. He was very friendly to us and took the initiative to invite me to address the 65 seminarians studying there in the course of my visit. That talk took place a few days later, when Emil and I visited the seminary for a great meeting! The overwhelming majority of the young men greeted the talk with much enthusiasm, and several of them came forward to express their desire to become "Seminarians for Life" with HLI. Had there been more time, I would have spent hours answering their questions.

We then met with Fr. Aloysius Kawesi, the archbishop's secretary. He was kind enough to share with us his understanding and concerns about the difficult situation in which the Church finds herself in Mozambique. He took the initiative to invite me to address the whole Bishops' Conference in the course of their meeting in April 2009. He also indicated his willingness to help organize talks for me in various parishes, in the course of a future visit, in preparation of a possible pro-life conference in the capital city.

That was certainly good news. Now it was the time to see the Apostolic Nuncio, His Excellency, Archbishop George Panikulam. He received us at the Nunciature and confirmed what we had heard from the priests. By way of example, he cited the fact that many catechists teach children what they themselves learned as children, as there are no solid catechetical programs available. A similar situation applies to marriage preparation and moral formation in general in the country. He wished us well and recommended that HLI approach the bishops in the first place, in order to organize a concerted effort to help the Church in her pro-life work in Mozambique.

The last priest we met was Fr. Manuel Tavares, a Portuguese Missionary of the Consolata. He showed great interest in HLI, especially by indicating his willingness to cooperate with us in projects carried out in Mozambique. He pointed out the difficulties encountered by the clergy in exercising good influence on the people in matters related to morality. Apparently, marriage is an exception, and cohabitation is the "normal" thing among Mozambicans, especially the young.

The only religious we could meet was a Missionary Sister of the Precious Blood. She was very concerned with the poor moral formation of the youth-which seems to be a constant concern in the country-and she welcomed the presence of HLI in Mozambique.

She also encouraged me to speak at parishes after Mass in order to invite people to attend a pro-life conference in the Archdiocese of Maputo. She promised to pray and help in whatever way she is able to promote the work of HLI in the country.

SPEAKING WITH PRO-LIFE CONTACTS

While in Mozambique, I met with several non-clerical pro-lifers from different backgrounds and walks of life who offered their skills and connections to help HLI advance the pro-life cause in their land. Three of them were law students from the local university. They were very interested in receiving informative material from HLI via email, as well as in helping recruit more people to work for the pro-life cause.

I met with the leaders of two different groups who promised to help HLI promote the Culture of Life in Mozambique. One group was a Catholic network called "Couples for Mary." Its coordinators are a man and his wife who organized a group of some 20 people to attend a talk I gave. All of them showed interest in HLI and wanted to be involved in any activities we may hold in the country. The other group was "Offices for Prayer and Life in Mozambique." Its leaders are a Mozambican and his wife, who showed the utmost interest in getting his network to join efforts with HLI in the country.

Two other people I spoke with proved to have strong pro-life views. One of them was a woman who works at Radio Mozambique on a part-time basis (her husband is its president). She volunteered her assistance in any activities HLI may organize in the country. The other was a young man in his mid-twenties, fluent in English, who admitted to having no particular religion, although the way he spoke revealed his Catholic background. He is keen to help HLI in the country because he sees and understands the horrors of abortion in the United States and elsewhere.

Finally, Mr. Antonio Rodrigues was the only non-African layman we met in Maputo. Being of Indian descent (from Goa), he is the contact person for a group of Goan Catholics in the metropolitan area. He came to see us at the hotel, insisted on driving us to the Apostolic Nunciature and, later, organized a talk in his parish. After the talk, he and his Goan friends treated us to a succulent dinner. All Goans were very friendly, and it would seem that much could be done with them in Maputo.

I came away from this trip to Mozambique with many contacts made and many ideas on how to move forward with the pro-life movement in Mozambique and other Portuguese-speaking countries around the world to advance HLI's mission of creating effective opposition to the culture of death around the world.

HLI missionary Trip to BRAZIL - Reported by Raymond de Souza, April 2009

On April 16, 2009, a grand event took place in the Archdiocese of Olinda and Recife: the International Pro-Life Cardinal von Galen Award was granted to Archbishop José Cardoso Sobrinho in the crowded auditorium of the prestigious Damas College, in Recife.

The Award was granted by Human Life International, the largest pro-life movement of Catholic orientation in the world, which counts on affiliated groups in 86 countries. I have the honor to be its Program Director for Portuguese-speaking countries.

The strong impact provoked by the event among the participants still echoes in many places in Brazil and the world.

THE MISSION

I was charged by the Rev. Fr. Thomas Euteneuer, President of HLI, with the mission to fly from the United States to Recife, taking with me the von Galen Award so that it might be personally delivered to Archbishop Cardoso by our representative in Rome, Monsignor Ignacio Barreiro-Carámbula, who also traveled to Brazil for that specific purpose.

Although I am accustomed to address large auditoriums in many countries, I was

Although I am accustomed to address large auditoriums in many countries, I was deeply impressed by the enthusiastic and euphoric reception of the public who attended the homage given to Archbishop Cardoso. Their joy was noticeably immense and contagious-equally as great was the well-deserved joy of the recipient of the homage.

Archbishop Cardoso had acted like a hero in a very difficult situation: he did not withdraw a single step from his battlefield, in spite of the systematic calumnies spread by the abortionist media and ignorant politicians-and especially in spite of the criticisms he received from various colleagues in the episcopate, both in Brazil and overseas.

But the precious support of ecclesiastics and lay people was not lacking, as I could observe from the presence of practically the totality of the archdiocesan clergy at the event.

In their characteristic mania to play down pro-life events, the media calculated the presence of 1,200 people in the auditorium, but from what I was able to observe, there were there over 2,000 people. Four Bishops, many priests, seminarians and religious of both sexes attended the event, besides people from the most varied parishes in Recife and other cities.

A WATCHFUL SHEPHERD

Over 2,000 people packed the auditorium of Damas College in Recife, Brazil for the presentation of the Cardinal von Galen Award.

During the event, various speakers addressed the floor. The main speaker, Archbishop Cardoso, acknowledged that the Award was a great and beautiful surprise for him. He affirmed that the polemics in which he became involved "is producing many good fruits, since it awoke the conscience of many Catholics about the need to place the Law of God above any human law. I simply explained what the Law of the Church says. I was not the one who approved it. It is the Law of the Church that says: he who commits this crime, is automatically excommunicated."

He simply followed the principles of the Church and of Canon law, principles that appear to have been forgotten by many Bishops these days. He said, "If I had remained silent during that episode, I would have been an accomplice of the crime. I fulfilled my duty."

Archbishop Cardoso thanked all those who cooperated in one way or another in the fight for the lives of three children and also for the messages of support that came to him from many dioceses of Brazil and other countries. "I offer this homage especially to the two babies that were murdered and to their little mother as well," he concluded.

Others were also the recipients of homage from Human Life International with the gift of silver medals: the Vicar General of the Archdiocese, Monsignor Edvaldo Bezerra; the Chancellor, Father Cícero Ferreira; the Rector of the minor seminary, Fr. Moisés Ferreira; the parish priest of Alagoinha, Fr. José Edson; and the Archdiocesan Attorney, Dr. Márcio Miranda.

Mons. Ignacio Barreiro-Carámbula, who represents Human Life International in Rome, said in his address: "I think it is very important to emphasize the protection of innocent human life. For this reason, we grant this Award to Archbishop Cardoso."

In my capacity as envoy of Human Life International from the United States, it was my duty to draw people's attention to the courage shown by the Archbishop, as well as to criticize the pro-abortion media for their partiality and the lukewarm clergy for their inertia. Archbishop Cardoso dared to face everything and everyone, unafraid of unpopularity. He did not succumb under the attacks of the media, because he was not doing something evil, but something good instead.

A JOYOUS OCCASION

The joy and enthusiastic support of Archbishop Cardoso was well illustrated by this report from one of the people present:

"When Archbishop Cardoso was invited to come forward to receive the Cardinal von Galen Award, everyone in the auditorium was thrilled with joy."

"Many were moved to tears, others shouted with joy, others sung, and I was there near the Archbishop, taking photos in my cell phone, seeing his countenance overflowing with joy, thus making it my joy to see him.

The presence of nearly the entire archdiocesan clergy showed how greatly supportive were the local Church members.

"After he received the Award, everyone wanted to congratulate him, and tell him: 'My Lord Archbishop, you are not alone! Jesus Christ is with you and also with us. Please God that you will continue at the helm of our suffered but well-looked after Archdiocese for yet a long time. And when the time will come in God's own good time that you will enjoy your well-deserved rest, may God grant us a pastor like you.'

"I went home with my soul cleansed, breathing the air of a typical night of Recife, with a clear sky and hot weather, certain to walk on the correct side of the road, and also certain to be CATHOLIC above everything else.

"Thank you Archbishop Cardoso, for your witness! I am honored to be part of your Archdiocese."

The example of courage given by Archbishop Cardoso must be seen by all Catholics as a model to be followed: enough of indecision, lukewarmness, and compromise with the Culture of Death! Let us fight with all legal means to eliminate, once and for all, from our nations that cursed plague of abortion!

It is also a fight for our right to exist in peace, defending our families from the attacks of the peddlers of immorality and the Culture of Death that infest many political circles. Because, as the First International Conference to Defend Life affirmed with wisdom and objectivity in Aparecida in February 2008,

"Unless the strategists of the Culture of Death are naïve, and they have already shown that they are not, after the legalization of abortion in Latin America they will be obliged to turn all of their resources towards the work of disfiguration or destruction of the Catholic turn all of their resources towards the work of disfiguration or destruction of the Catholic Church. Behind the problem of abortion is hidden much more than the defense of life of millions of innocent people: The Catholic Church and the Culture of Death cannot coexist in the same world."

Archbishop José Cardoso has already led by his good example. May many Bishops, both in Brazil and overseas, follow it in their own dioceses, because they are responsible for the souls that God Our Lord entrusted to their care.

Mission Report: Rome: March 2008

Joseph Meaney & Brian Clowes, March 2008

A major milestone for Human Life International was the opening in 1998 of our permanent office serving the "Heart of the Church." I had the honor of being the first HLI staff member stationed in Rome where I assisted Msgr. Ignacio Barreiro, the office's long-time director, for four years. This past March, Msgr. Barreiro arranged for a week-long seminarian speaking tour for Dr. Brian Clowes and myself.

Seminaries and religious houses of formation abound in Rome. Msgr. Barreiro receives, in the HLI office, a steady stream of seminarians, priests, and religious who wish to enhance their formation in bio-ethics and life issues. They benefit from a wonderful library and personalized attention. And we now distribute 2,000 copies of the Italian edition of HLI's Seminarians for Life International Newsletter.

FORMING PRO-LIFE PRIESTS IN ROME

On this trip, our first pro-life lectures were given to the Society of Our Lady of the Most Holy Trinity (SOLT) seminarians and priests at their Roman headquarters in the enormous complex built for the Christian Brothers. A special honor was having Fr. Jim Flanagan, SOLT's founder, present for the talks. He thanked us and offered to place all the SOLT fathers in Belize at our disposal for our pro-life campaigns there! They have many parishes, a school, and a Catholic radio station. HLI already owes a debt of gratitude to the Society, since they have assigned Fr. Frank Papa to serve as our chaplain at HLI's international headquarters.

The first talks we gave in Italian were at the international seminary named for Pope John Paul II, located next to the church of San Andrea della Valle. Brian is still waiting for "the gift of tongues," so we translated for him. The 45 seminarians and priests there come from 27 different countries! Two Mexican seminarians approached me afterwards and told me they knew Adolfo Castañeda, who works with Vida Humana Internacional, our regional office for Latin America. They had heard him speak at their home seminaries in Mexico. HLI certainly covers a great deal of ground around the world.

EVANGELIZING THROUGH THE AIRWAVES

Vatican Radio, through my friend Charles Collins, invited me to come to their studios for a series of interviews in different languages about HLI's work during this trip. Their building is located just next to the Tiber at the end of Via della Conciliazione. After doing the first taped program in English, the Spanish and French editions also recorded interviews. This is a far cry from covering the 40 total languages that exist on the Church's radio, but it is a start!

One of our most moving venues for speaking was the headquarters of the Franciscan Friars of the Immaculate just outside Rome. These young sons of St. Francis live radical poverty and apostolic zeal. They do not own the building they are using or any property, for that matter. Their pro-life enthusiasm is beautiful. Once again HLI has a close connection to this religious group. Dan Cortes, who serves as our Internet webmaster, has a brother with the friars. Also, Fr. Luiz Carlos Lodi da Cruz, a Brazilian priest and great pro-life leader, is living with the friars while studying at the John Paul II Institute. He has worked closely with HLI in Brazil, where more than 90% of the people are pro-life!

CATHOLICS SPEAKING UP

We met several famous American Catholics while in Rome. Professor Scott Hahn, from Franciscan University of Steubenville, was taking advantage of spring break to give some lectures at Santa Croce University. Mary Shovlain, who has a Catholic film company that often produces programs for EWTN, is a dear friend of mine and my wife's. We were happy to see her again. CNN's Vatican analyst, Delia Gallagher, is another faithful Catholic we saw. It is a positive sign that there are more and more good Catholics in the news and entertainment industries.

On the traditional feast of St. Thomas Aquinas, Msgr. Barreiro, Brian Clowes, and I drove out to the Italian hill town of Segni for a special celebration with the Incarnate Word Institute. Imagine a small village on a knife-edged ridge, shrouded in fog. The church of St. Peter there is built on the ruined walls of several pagan temples dating back to 700 B.C. We spoke as the guests of honor to all the seminarians, priests and nuns, as well as invited guests. One of our points, that vocations are more frequent in large families, was born out by the testimony of a nun about to make her perpetual vows who is one of 11 kids. The Incarnate Word Institute is originally from Argentina, but they have many vocations now from Ukraine, Egypt, Russia, and even Holland. One of the highlights of the banquet that evening was Dutch sister Van Christus playing the harp.

Militia Christi, a Catholic pro-life group, invited us to participate in a seminar. Msgr. Barreiro has worked productively with them for many years. As is to be expected in Italy, the conference hall was very elegant. One speaker gave a moving testimony of her courage in standing up to the pressure that abortion doctors placed on her. They mistakenly believed her little girl would be born with handicaps, so they tried every means imaginable to make her kill this beautiful child. Dr. Paolo Gulisano did a very good job of showing the origins of the modern abortion legalization movement, starting with Communist Russia in 1920 and Nazi Germany in 1935.

PRO-LIFE POLITICAL VICTORIES

Italy was on the verge of elections in April, and the pro-life issue came to the forefront of the campaign. A famous journalist, Giuliano Ferrara, launched a political party and a movement for a moratorium on abortion. Posters throughout Rome with a picture of a preborn child on them proclaimed "Non Uccidere" ("do not kill"). On International Women's Day, March 8th, Ferrara's movement held a pro-life rally in Piazza Farnese across from the French Embassy that I attended. The feminists were furious and tried to disrupt the event, but the police intervened. On several other occasions, Ferrara was pelted with eggs and tomatoes by violent anti-lifers during campaign rallies in Bologna and Palermo. Pro-lifers had the last laugh, however, because the conservatives won the election and will put an end to the socialists' plans to introduce the RU-486 abortion pill in Italy.

GREAT PRO-LIFE LEADERS

A voyage to Rome is incomplete without a personal pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Peter. My wife, Marie, and I were moved to tears as we walked past Pope John Paul II's grave in the basilica's crypt. Tens of thousands of people still come every day. The author of "The Gospel of Life" will long be remembered, even after the culture of death he fought is buried and forgotten. He, along with my parents, is certainly one of the main reasons I have devoted myself to the pro-life cause.

Cardinal Alfonso López-Trujillo, another person who was a real pro-life father-figure for me during my years in Rome, passed away on April 19, 2008. He did not appear sick during our three hour meeting and lunch with him at the Pontifical Council for the Family just a few weeks before he died. It was a real blessing to see him for the last time. I would like to ask our supporters to pray for his eternal rest and for his successor. Pope Benedict XVI will have a hard time finding a new president of the Council for the Family who is as energetic and articulate.

HLI's outreach to seminarians has reached many of the world's future priests with the message of the Gospel of Life. In March 2008, we spoke in person to almost 900 at our various events in and near Rome. We also took advantage of the Church's communications infrastructure to explain our activities over the airwaves. Finally, we did our part in supporting the Italian pro-life movement at a critical time. It will be a privilege to continue this work in the future with even larger numbers of seminarians and religious in Rome, where all the nations of the world come together to be near the Vicar of Christ.

Mission Report: Dominica: January 2009

SHARE

Brian Clowes, January, 2009

Dominica, the Caribbean's "Nature Isle," is a heavily jungled jewel only about 25 miles long and 12 across at its widest. Only about 70,000 souls populate its steep slopes, mostly along a narrow ledge adjacent to the coastline. A third of the population occupies the capital city of Roseau in the Southwest. However, as the people like to point out, one of Dominica's main exports is Dominicans. Twice as many Dominicans live outside the nation as in it, and this is primarily why the population of Dominica is very slowly declining.

Perhaps the amazing natural beauty and the temperate climate of the island contributes to the people's average life span of 74 years, second only to Canada in the Western hemisphere. In fact, according to local reports, a 124-year-old woman recently died in Dominica.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD: FROM CONTRACEPTION TO ABORTION

Citizens are generally very pro-life, and even Prime Minister Roosevelt Skerit has said that he will never allow abortion in this nation "on his watch." If a woman has an abortion, villagers shun her and call her a "cemetery," pushing the pro-life "womb as a tomb" saying to the next level.

However, not even this tiny, far-flung corner of the Caribbean is safe from the Planned Parenthood ideologues. The Dominican Planned Parenthood Association

The main local newspaper, The Chronicle, named Fr. Cuffy the Dominican "Person of the Year," showing him in his priestly collar and wearing a military uniform as Chaplain of the Dominican Cadet Corps.

(DPPA) does what PP does best - it pushes sex education and distributes contraceptives. It knows full well that all it has to do is wait a few years, and then use the resulting illegal abortions as a propaganda tool to call for the legalization of abortion. In fact, teen pregnancy is not a major problem on the island due to the many illegal abortions that are committed each year. It is only a matter of time before Planned Parenthood and Dominican "women's rights" groups begin to loudly demand "safe" (i.e., legal) abortion.

Father Tom and I felt like rocks being skipped across the Caribbean as we stopped at nearly every island on our way to Dominica. Redemptorist Father Franklyn Cuffy met us at the Melville Hall Airport, and we drove over the central part of the island to reach St. Clement's House, where we stayed. It took an hour to cover 20 miles on a rough one-lane road with amazing vistas around every corner, including the mile-high volcano Morne Diablotins.

Father Cuffy drove us to Soufriere at the very Southern end of the island. Everyone seems to know him, and they shout his name as he drives by. The main local newspaper, The Chronicle, just named him the Dominican "Person of the Year," showing him in his priestly collar and wearing a military uniform as Chaplain of the Dominican Cadet Corps.

On the corner of the block in Roseau holding the Our Lady of Safe Haven Cathedral and Catholic school stands a big poster that shows a couple of kids on it and the slogan "Abstinence: The Best Choice." The implied message is "Abstinence yes, but if not, then contraceptives." This is rather like saying "Abstinence [from robbery] yes, but if not, go ahead and rob people."

RESISTING CONTRACEPTIVE IMPERIALISM

We began our work with the 8:00 A.M. Sunday Mass at the Cathedral. Fr. Tom and Fr. Cuffy concelebrated with the Bishop of Roseau, Gabriel Malzaire. Fr. Tom spoke on the threat posed to Dominica by the culture of death and implored the people to wake up and get active against it. The next morning, we held a press conference, and almost all of the island's major press outlets were there. Fr. Tom, Fr. Cuffy, and Mr. Wendell Lawrence, the head of the Dominican Respect Life Committee, warned about the contraceptive imperialism being foisted off on the world's nations in the name of "women's rights." Fr. Tom's warnings about how condoms merely enable the irresponsibility of men visibly startled the two young ladies in attendance.

In the evening, Fr. Tom and I spoke on Humanae vitae and the Antilles Episcopal Commission's wonderful document "The Gift of Life." Exactly two media people and four other people showed up, because everyone else was sitting at home transfixed by the endless media coverage of the Obama inauguration. "Obama-mania" has a firm grip on the Caribbean. The 30-year campaign of brainwashing people to make decisions not based on logic and facts and reasoning but emotions and personal experience has done its job well. Let's see how fond they are of Obama in about two years when Planned Parenthood is aborting their daughters without their knowledge!

Fr. Cuffy and I also appeared on Marpin Television's "From All Angles" show, debating Valda Durand, an officer of the DPPA. These Planned Parenthood people all have the same debating style, and I suspect they go to some kind of "charm school" in order to learn how to dodge questions and speak in vapid generalities. I finally pinned her down after she insisted yet again that "sexual and reproductive health" is a basic human right. I repeatedly asked if this "right" included abortion, and she finally admitted that it did, after saying that she was not pushing abortion in Dominica. So, the logical question was, "If you believe abortion is a basic human right, why aren't you pushing it?" I also invited listeners to read Planned Parenthood's Vision 2000 document, which instructs all IPPF associations to agitate for the legalization of abortion.

HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

On Thursday, Fr. Cuffy and I traveled to the Christian Brothers' St. Mary's Academy to talk to about 90 teenaged boys. After I had spoken about ethics and personal responsibility, Fr. Cuffy asked how many of the boys would vote for the decriminalization of homosexual activity in Dominica. Every one of the young men gestured "thumbs down." When asked how many would vote for the legalization of abortion, less than 20 percent said they would. There is certainly hope for the future of this island!

Whenever I talk to students, I always emphasize a three-pronged message:

1) We all care about the external environment that we live in, but what about the internal environment? I have seen many young women who are very militant about the environment and their own health, but think nothing of popping a powerful steroidal drug pill into their mouths every day.

Fr. Cuffy speaking to boys at the Christian Brothers' St. Mary's Academy in Dominica.

2) So many people experiment with things that only give temporary amusement, such as sex, drugs, alcohol, money, travel, "personal experience," possessions, power, and so on. But there are only two things that will make you truly content and happy, and that will give you true inner peace: Faith and family. In other words, if you live by the word of God, you will be happy. If you live by the way of the world, you will not be happy.

3) There is an easy way for young people to avoid many heavy worries, and that is to abstain from sex before marriage. We hear so much that abstinence and faithfulness is "unrealistic," but, from a scientific point of view, they are the only solutions to many of the most severe problems afflicting the world today. Those who follow God's simple plan will not have to worry about unwanted pregnancy and single motherhood; sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS; loss of self-respect and their reputations; worrying about what their parents will think; finding and paying for expensive contraceptives/abortifacients and then getting hit with their side effects; abortion and its physical and emotional impacts; raising children alone, usually in poverty; the difficulty in finding a good husband or wife when they already have children; and, most importantly, fear of loss of their souls! Young people should have their eyes and minds fixed on the future, not sweating out the present unnecessarily due to bad decisions.

I also tell the young girls to perform a simple test when they meet a boy they like: Tell him to empty out his pockets. If the boy is carrying a Rosary, he is probably all right. If he has a condom in his pocket, tell him to get lost.

The high point of the trip was January 22, Respect Life Day, when 1,000 little schoolgirls assembled in the Cathedral to pin green ribbons to a large wooden cross Fr.

Fr. Cuffy with girls Convent High School. Behind them stands the wooden cross filled with green ribbons for the Respect Life Day.

Cuffy had made. Fr. Cuffy's "Green Ribbon" campaign has as its centerpiece pro-life activism, but also includes care for the poor and the environment, among other causes. This might be called the "Seamless Garment" in the USA, but it works well in Dominica because it does not ignore or de-emphasize abortion. Fr. Cuffy makes certain that abortion is always front and center, and he consistently shows how it damages all other human causes.

In the evening, we traveled to the Convent High School, where eight schools sent students to make presentations on pro-life issues. Things got interesting when the moderator asked the young people questions after the presentations. The students were unanimous in rejecting abortion even for rape, and they argued very persuasively against it.

On the last day of the mission, Fr. Cuffy and I spoke to the girls at the Convent High School as part of its 150th anniversary celebrations. One girl sang a Calypso song; three other girls read some very good pro- life poetry; and a dozen others danced on the basketball court to the strains of The Lion King's "The Circle of Life." Fr. Cuffy and I crammed a lot of advice into a very short period, and the girls seemed to appreciate it.

As always, when I leave a kind and friendly nation, I feel a clash of emotions - sadness at leaving and eagerness to get back to work in Front Royal. But a week after getting home, I am looking forward to visiting the "Nature Island" again, in the near future.

Mission Report: Costa Rica: October 2008

Joseph Meaney, October 25-29, 2008

If the world resembled the Central American nation of Costa Rica more, it would be a much better place to live. Their constitution and laws protect human life from conception, and therefore all abortions are prohibited, as well as in vitro fertilization (IVF) and the Morning After Pill. Our HLI affiliate in Costa Rica, Asociación para la Defensa de la Vida (Association for the Defense of Life, or ADEVI) is quite active and effective in providing pro-life education and services, such as help with crisis pregnancies. Even in this tropical paradise, however, there are still pro-life challenges.

HLI HUMANAЕ VITAE CONFERENCE

Dr. Alejandro Leal (university professor in genetics) and president of ADEVI saw the need for a conference to counter the growing contraceptive culture in Costa Rica. We discussed this idea at the World Youth Days in Cologne, Germany in 2005. Alejandro and I agreed on the value of promoting the Church's teachings on the regulation of births during the 40th anniversary of Pope Paul VI's encyclical letter Humanae vitae (HV).

Alejandro is proud that the vast majority of his fellow citizens are against surgical abortion. However, contraception, including the abortifacient types, is commonly used. Many doctors have not even heard of Natural Family Planning (NFP). He also told us that he and ADEVI have a good relationship with the bishops, who are quite vocal in support of pro-life issues. A big problem that remains, however, is priestly silence from the pulpit and "follow your conscience" advice in the confessional, rather than the formation of consciences according to the mind of the Church.

The media can be quite bad as well. The day we arrived, the main headline on the front page of La Nación (the most important newspaper in the country) was a statement by the minister of health in favor of introducing the Morning After Pill and denying that it causes early abortions by preventing the implantation of very young preborn children in the uterus. There are also destructive "reproductive health" bills that are regularly introduced in their congress.

The title of the HLI conference was "Simposio Científico Teológico de los Métodos Naturales de Regulación de la Fertilidad" (Scientific and Theological Symposium on Natural Methods of Regulating Fertility). It was held at the Catholic University of Costa Rica. Sponsors included the Pascucci Foundation, which contributed substantially, the Bishop's Conference of Costa Rica, ADEVI, and HLI. Both Adolfo Castañeda, from our Vida Humana Internacional (VHI) Miami regional office for Latin America, and I went down as speakers. Leaders attended from over 12 countries, including: Nicaragua, Peru, Cuba, Panama, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico, El Salvador, Honduras, USA, Spain and Chile.

We were happy to directly reach 300 people during this two-day conference on Natural Family Planning and Humanae vitae. Most of the participants were Catholic lay leaders of family/marriage ministries. There were also many priests and nuns, several of whom were involved in marriage and family ministries or the Bioethics Commission of the Conference of Bishops. A unique aspect of the event was how they organized two tracks: one session in the morning, for those who could take professional time off, and evening sessions for those who could only attend after work.

The opening Mass was presided by Bishop José Francisco Ulloa, Coordinator of Family Ministry for the Costa Rican Bishops. In his homily, Bishop Ulloa left no one in doubt about where the Church stands on life issues. He denounced the promotion of the Morning After Pill by IPPF-Costa Rica and the anti-life aspects of the Regional UN Youth Conference for Ibero-American (Spanish and Latin American) Presidents being held in El Salvador later that very same week.

COSTA RICANS DEFEND THEIR PRO-LIFE LAWS BEFORE THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Ironically, just as our HLI conference began in Costa Rica, our affiliate leader, Dr. Alejandro Leal, had to leave for Washington, DC. He was asked by the Costa Rican government to participate as an expert witness in a hearing before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights regarding a lawsuit against his country. An infertile married couple, with the help of the infamous Center for Reproductive Rights, made a formal complaint that their "rights" were being "violated" by Costa Rica's law against in vitro fertilization. Several years ago, Alejandro and ADEVI had been instrumental in a Costa Rican Supreme Court decision that outlawed any form of IVF. Interestingly, the wife who had initially started the legal action has since converted to the pro-life side in a similar fashion to Norma Mc-Corvey of Roe v. Wade in the US. This did not stop the legal action, however, since they found other couples to sign on to the legal challenge.

The New York-based Center for Reproductive Rights has been trying to bully Latin American countries into changing their prolife laws into pro-death ones in recent years. They had a successful lawsuit in Colombia, which opened the gates for abortion. Ironically, their plaintiff there was a "Monica Roa," a clear reference to Roe v. Wade. Fortunately, Alejandro Leal told us the hearings on Costa Rica in Washington did not go well for the Center for Reproductive Rights.

COSTA RICA ON THE BRINK OF DEPOPULATION

What worries HLI most about Costa Rica is that this small Central American country of only about 4 million inhabitants is on the verge of falling into demographic

~~or only about a million inhabitants is on the verge of falling into demographic~~ decline like so many other places in the world. During the mid 1960's, the average Costa Rican family had about 5 children. Fertility has dropped so fast in recent years, however, that there is no agreement on today's fertility rates. Some demographic sources claim Costa Rica's fertility rate is 2.1 children per family, but locally the rate of 1.7 children is frequently quoted. One area everyone agrees on is that the birthrate is still falling.

During the conference, Adolfo and I gave talks on Humanae vitae and Adolfo gave conference attendees an introduction to the Theology of the Body of Pope John Paul II. I highlighted the prophetic aspects of HV and Adolfo the doctrinal and moral ones. We also informed the audience about the worldwide anti-life movement, with a special reference to Latin America. Adolfo offered the enthusiastic participants the resources of VHI: radio, website, materials, etc. Drs. Concepción Medialdea (Spain) and Sandy Porras (Costa Rica) delivered excellent talks on the more specialized issue of the scientific basis of NFP and the dangers and abortifacient effects of the Pill and other "contraceptives."

We always take advantage of these trips to bring pro-life books and other educational materials. About 100 pounds of books, CDs, brochures, cards and posters we carried to Costa Rica were either sold or given away at the conference. A favorite item among our affiliate leaders was a mold that makes models of a preborn child at 10 weeks of pregnancy. We left several with them, which will hopefully provide a wealth of baby-saving dolls to be used in their crisis pregnancy and educational work.

Getting the pro-life message out through the media is also a high priority on our missionary trips. Adolfo Castañeda was interviewed by Telefides, the Costa Rican national TV station. During the taped interview, which lasted a full hour, he denounced so-called "reproductive health" and explained that it includes the legalization of surgical abortion, pushed by the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) worldwide. I was interviewed by Costa Rican Catholic Radio, and the National Catholic Newspaper, Eco Católico, about the conference and HLI's work. This newspaper does an excellent job of defending the faith and the culture of life.

HLI hopes that Costa Rica will continue to be a pro-life example to the world. They certainly need to rebuild their traditional love of families with several children. One bright spot is the strong effort by the government to fight the abuse of children in prostitution, which is aimed at the many tourists who visit Costa Rica. Upon arrival into the country, everyone now receives a firm warning that the sexual exploitation of children is severely punished. We also cheered when ADEVI obtained a huge victory against IPPF-Costa Rica: the Costa Rican government prohibited any media outlet from advertising the Morning After Pill.

Please pray for Costa Rica, that they will successfully maintain and spread their pro-life culture throughout the world.

culture throughout the world.

Jorge Sorano's protest against reversing the Mexico City Policy

Mission Report: Guatemala: April 2008

Adolfo J. Castañeda, Vida Humana Internacional, and Fr. Tom Euteneuer, April 1-6, 2008

Located in the northernmost part of Central America, just south of Mexico, Guatemala is home to about 14 million people, 60% of whom are Indians. The rest are White descendants of the Spanish. After 35 years of a bloody civil war from 1962 to 1997, Guatemala, which means "Land of Forests" in one of the many Indian languages, has finally settled into a still fragile democracy. Nevertheless, the country has managed to grow economically, although it still remains a poor country, with the indigenous Indian population being the most affected.

Guatemala is besieged by violent gangs (called "Maras") and drug dealers, who find in this small country a sort of haven and stepping stone from Colombia to Mexico and then on to the U.S., thanks to police corruption. The most insidious attacks against life, however, are the ones perpetrated by IPPF (International Planned Parenthood Federation) and IPAS (International Project Assistance Services). IPPF has been in Guatemala since at least 1979. Its affiliate APROFAM and its horrible sex "education" programs are brain-washing Guatemalan youth with their filth and are also deceiving married couples with their abortifacient and other harmful contraceptives. US-based IPAS has been performing clandestine first-trimester abortions with their manual suction machines, euphemistically called "Manual Vacuum Aspiration." There are four in vitro fertilization "clinics," also operating in defiance of the Guatemalan Constitution, which recognizes that life begins at conception.

Nevertheless, Guatemala has been blessed by a fertile and diverse land, and, most of all, by beautiful family- and life-loving people. A Guatemalan gynecologist told us that the word "uterus" in one of the many Indian languages is "utiochil," which literally means "the place of God." I cannot find a more pro-life way of describing a mother's womb! As one of only two countries in all of Latin America in which HLI did not have an established affiliate, the tremendous pro-lifers in Guatemala beckoned HLI to join them for the first major pro-life conference in that country and for the inauguration of our newest associate, the "Family and Life Association" of Guatemala.

SEMINARIANS CONTINUE TO BE HLI'S #1 PRIORITY

I arrived on Wednesday, April 2, 2008 at Guatemala City and was received at the airport by several great pro-life leaders, who took me to my lodgings at the Major Seminary, where practically all of the pro-life activities took place during the following four days. Fr. Tom had arrived the day before and was immediately plunged into a tight agenda that lasted until Saturday, April 5, when he had to leave for his pilgrimage to Our Lady of Guadalupe Shrine in Mexico City. Fr. Tom spoke to about two dozen leaders of a Youth for Life group in a Catholic university in Guatemala City, as well as a teacher's college, to bring a strong pro-life message and strengthen the pro-life commitment of these people. Based on our American experience, HLI operates on the principle that the people of a country will find it much easier to keep abortion out than to try to get it out once it comes in.

On my second day in Guatemala, we participated in a special pro-life seminar held just for the seminarians of the country-250 of them! In true HLI style, our Miami office prepared tons of pro-life material to bring to them, including our Seminarians for Life International Newsletters, which we gladly gave to two seminary rectors, along with tons of other materials that will keep their interest in the life issues alive for many years to come! We also gave them the best that we had to offer from our expertise on the subjects. In the course of six hours, they got their fill of pro-life teaching, and I can guarantee that not even one seminarian left his seat or nodded off during the whole day-I think that's a record!

One seminarian commented after the seminar that he had received a whole course on bioethics in just one day. How true. Here is what they heard:

- Two talks on bioethical issues and Natural Family Planning by Dr. Alejandro Leal, from HLI's affiliate in Costa Rica.
- A talk on the evils of contraception by Dr. Estuardo Carrera, a Guatemalan OB/GYN and head of the newly-formed Office of the Unborn for the Catholic Bishops of Guatemala.
- An introduction to the Theology of the Body of John Paul II and an exposé on dissent in the Church by me.
- Fr. Tom's talk on the international abortion situation and the role of the priest in fighting the culture of death.
- A talk on post-abortion syndrome by Rita Polo de Ponciano, a Guatemalan who is a licensed therapist and the President of HLI's new associate, Life and Family Association.

This was one of the best experiences of seminary training that we had ever had, due to both the quality of the presentations and the reception of the teaching by these good men who will one day be preaching from the pulpits of Guatemala's Catholic parishes.

THE FIRST-EVER PRO-LIFE CONFERENCE IN GUATEMALA

The next couple of days saw one of the most successful pro-life conferences in the Hispanic world. More than 1,200 people of all ages and backgrounds attended. It was the First National Pro-Life Conference in Guatemala, entitled "The Life and Dignity of the Human Person." It was convoked by the Guatemalan Bishops' Conference, and about ten bishops were in attendance, several of them being speakers, including the Apostolic Nuncio. The same speakers from the previous day's course for seminarians were present, giving essentially the same talks. The audience was enthusiastically receptive, especially when several women and one man came forward to give their heart-felt testimonies on post-abortion and post-contraception issues. What topped it all was a beautiful testimony of a lady whose mother gave her life against incredible odds after being raped 40 years ago. Julia Regina de Cardenal, the President of HLI-El Salvador, gave the final stunning talk about how to defend life against the "culture of death."

The whole Conference was transmitted live by Radio María, an international Catholic radio network that reaches at least half of Guatemala; and Jesús-TV, a Catholic TV network, video-taped parts of the Conference and re-transmitted them the following week. So, practically the whole country was educated on pro-life issues!

MEDIA COVERAGE AND GUATEMALA'S FIRST MARCH FOR LIFE

The speakers were also interviewed by Catholic and secular media. "Prensa Libre," the major newspaper in Guatemala, gave a short but substantial report on one of its main pages, with a picture of the pro-life march and pro-life youth concert, with which the Conference ended Saturday night. About 500 pro-lifers took part in it with the seminarians being the loudest and most energetic participants! I did three different radio interviews, along with Fr. Tom and other pro-life leaders, for a total of about four and a half hours of live air time. Two of the stations were Catholic: Radio Estrella ("Star Radio") and local Radio María. One of the local pro-life leaders that accompanied me to Radio María was long-time HLI collaborator and CPC head, Alejandra de Skinner-Klee, the sister of Julia Regina, the leader of HLI's affiliate in El Salvador.

During my last day of activities in Guatemala, Sunday, April 6, Dr. Carrera and I spoke to 40 married couples about the evils of contraception, immoral sex "education," and the beautiful Theology of the Body. The couples belong to a Catholic movement founded right there in Guatemala City called "Victorious Marriages." They were so enthusiastic about our presentations that they wanted to repeat the experience for their counterparts in Miami, where their movement has extended!

One of the most positive outcomes of this visit to Guatemala was the newly founded pro-life organization, named "Asociación Vida y Dignidad" ("Life and Dignity Association") or ASODIV, whose president, Rita Polo, is mentioned above. ASODIV is in the process of becoming the first ever HLI affiliate in Guatemala. Of course, we promised Dr. Rita Polo and ASODIV our full support, and we will surely pray for their pro-life success in Guatemala.

THE BATTLE CONTINUES!

Because of its Catholic heritage, Latin America continues to be the main battle ground for anti-life activities and pressure, but thanks to so many HLI-inspired pro-life groups and organizations that have formed over the past 30 years on the continents of Central and South America, we believe that we stand a fighting chance of keeping legalized abortion out of many areas of this region. We are literally a pro-life David versus a pro-abortion Goliath everywhere, but the Church is our greatest strength, and the deeply pro-life cultures of this Catholic region are the greatest preservative against the decadence of the "culture of death." The battle is far from over, but with HLI's help, Latin American babies will never be without their advocates!

Mission Report: Jamaica: January - February 2008

Fr. Tom Euteneuer, January-February 2008

Teach us true respect for all / Stir response to duty's call / Strengthen us the weak to cherish / Give us vision lest we perish.

These inspiring words are from the Jamaican National Anthem, and they perfectly encapsulate the ideal that Jamaica needs to display as a nation if it is to have a future. The challenge to respect all and to "cherish the weak" is like a clarion call to action at this critical stage in their history. Never before in the life of their nation have Jamaicans been under such a threat. The good, pro-life people on this island are struggling hard to convince their nation that abortion is a deal with the devil that will kill their national soul.

This tiny island of only 2.8 million people, located just south of Cuba, has a rich and varied history from its "discovery" by Christopher Columbus in 1494 to independence from Britain in 1962. The island was taken over by the British in 1655, and it is said that during the 200+ years of British rule, literally every trace of Catholicism was wiped out with not one Catholic priest being allowed to live or work on the island. Catholics are only about 3% of the overall population today. Nonetheless, more than 90% of Jamaicans consider themselves Christians of some sort or another.

Jamaica's deep-seated Christian values, however, often get trampled upon by hedonistic lifestyles that are filtering into their national soul from their northern neighbors. Their unwed pregnancy rate is extremely high, poverty is endemic, crime is rampant, and they always talk about themselves as a Third-World Country even though it is modern in many ways. Jamaica had over 1,500 murders last year due to its strategic position in the Caribbean as a transshipment point for narcotics. Yet, despite these problems, Jamaicans are second to none in their love for life. The vast majority of Jamaicans really understand that there is no reason to kill a baby, ever. They call in to radio talk shows and write letters to the editor to let their pro-life opinions be known. So far, it's their pro-life heart that is saving them.

THE ABORTION PROMOTERS NEVER SLEEP

Despite the fact that the 1861 Offenses Against the Person Act generally prohibits abortions, corrupt doctors have for a long time found a way to circumvent the law, and even to create legal structures to permit and spread the killing. A report presented to the Jamaican Parliament last year stated, with all the radical feminist jargon, that dishonesty and malfeasance are the name of the game in the promotion of abortion, and they criticized the churches as being the main force of opposition.

The abortion report referred to a 1989 memorandum from the Jamaican Ministry of Health that was a watershed: it opened the possibility of abortion for teenagers, rape/incense/life of the mother, and even-if one can believe it-"failed contraception." If anyone ever needs a rationale to explain why contraception leads to abortion, they don't have to find the reasoning in the pro-life camp. The abortion promoters make the case perfectly. In other words, there is almost no reason which would prohibit abortion in Jamaica except the public stigma associated with it and the convictions of the churches if they are organized against it. Those churches are literally what stand the chance of keeping abortion from getting worse in Jamaica. The same can be said for every culture in the world.

ABORTION-ON-DEMAND KNOCKING AT JAMAICA'S DOOR

What the pro-lifers are really fighting in Jamaica, then, is not the legalization of abortion per se, but its total dominance of the culture-that is, abortion-on-demand. The attempt to liberalize abortion in Jamaica is just another page of the abortion playbook. An Abortion Advisory Committee was set up in 2005 to "study" the issue of abortion for a proposed legal reform. The committee's chairman was a doctor who had been the head of Planned Parenthood in Jamaica! It consisted of 13 members, 11 of whom were pro-abortion, including one token minister from the liberal Jamaican Council of Churches and one woman who claims to be a practicing Catholic.

Predictably, this advisory group submitted a report to Parliament last year advocating abortion-on-demand up to 22 weeks and allowing for abortions after up to the point of birth "under exceptional circumstances agreed by the woman and two authorized medical practitioners." In other words, they will tolerate no limits whatsoever to the killing of babies in Jamaica. These are the sentiments of the demonic abortion influence hanging over that island right now.

NEW GOVERNMENT PUTS BABY-KILLING ON FRONT BURNER

A liberal government, the Jamaica Labor Party, came into power last September under the leadership of the Jesuit-educated Prime Minister, Bruce Golding, who proceeded to fast track the effort to liberalize abortion. Immediately the situation reached a critical stage. Parliament set up a special Select Committee to "debate" the issue and create draft legislation for a vote. No serious consultation of the people was scheduled, and they stated that the vote would be a "conscience vote," which is what every cowardly Parliamentary government does when it wants to push a controversial item but does not want the bad publicity to stick. There was no time frame for a vote either, which means they could have had a surprise vote at any time. Creatures of darkness operate this way all over the world-that is, unless they receive the principled resistance of the churches.

HLI assisted an alliance of churches and concerned civic groups with the planning of a press conference that was held at the Knutsford Court Hotel in Kingston on February 7, 2008. The Jamaican Coalition for the Defense of Life wanted to signal to the government in no uncertain terms that they will not accept this plan to legalize abortion-on-demand in Jamaica. It was a magnificent show of solidarity and unity. The speeches of the seven participating groups were just marvelous and are nothing short of the voice of conscience of their nation!

Furthermore, the press conference seemed to have the effect of stopping the momentum of the abortion onslaught. The headlines of both the major daily newspapers on the following day were indicative that the message hit home. The Jamaica Gleaner shouted from the front page in huge bold letters, "Oh, hell no! Church vows war should Gov't legalise abortion." The Jamaica Observer was hardly less emphatic on its front page: "No to abortion. Church, Youth group knock policy review recommendation" with a full-length picture of Roman Catholic Archbishop Donald Reece and Rev. Peter Garth of the Jamaican Evangelical Association.

From that point on, the subject of abortion has been one of the main headlines and "controversial" topics of discussion in the country. Dr. Doreen Brady-West, the marvelous head of the Coalition, was adamant in her testimony from a medical perspective that there is absolutely nothing positive about bringing more abortion into their land. She was featured on the national television news channel that night, along with pictures of literature that HLI had provided to support the pro-life efforts down there.

It is hard to express my admiration at how valiantly the good pro-life people in Jamaica are taking up this battle. Since the press conference, there has been no end of public debate and discussion of the issue of abortion. The Jamaican people are actually getting a good look at what abortion is and what the consequences will be for their society if they liberalize their law. It just goes to show the truth of what HLI has always said: the people of a country never ask for abortion, and when they truly know what abortion entails, they usually reject it.

THE CHOICEST BLESING OF THE EFFORT

I have no doubt that God's grace was operating in an extraordinary way in and through that press conference. Just one month after the press conference was held, the brand new Youth for Life Jamaica group held a public rally and March for Life in the streets of the capital city, Kingston, and by all accounts, the effort was phenomenally successful. In fact, this was the first ever March for Life in Jamaica! Over six hundred young people attended with a marching band, placards, and a profound spirit of joy and zeal. Many of the signs they held were magnificent statements of things we have learned here during many long decades of fighting abortion.

Best of all was that the youth of Jamaica stood up and took a stand against this radical injustice that is being forced on their generation. They are planning two more Marches for Life in other cities of Jamaica, and HLI will certainly accompany them with our prayers and support! These young men and women are the perfect fruit of the pro-life prayers and support. These young men and women are the perfect fruit of the pro-life efforts in Jamaica, and we must thank God that He has seen fit to bless that country with such zeal and enthusiasm for life.

THE BATTLE IS NOT OVER

But keep in mind that the battle is not over! The abortion promoters never sleep, and so the Church must always remain vigilant. Let us continue to pray for the valiant pro-lifers- and above all, the babies-in this island so dear to God.

Mission Report: Belize: February 2008

Brian Clowes, February 13-18, 2008

Belize is in many ways a unique nation. Its population of only 300,000 people is spread out over an area a little smaller than Massachusetts, making it the least densely populated nation in Latin America. Belize is also the only English-speaking nation in Latin America, and boasts a very young and fast-growing population, with an average age of 20 and a population growth rate of nearly two percent. This was a situation that the population controllers found intolerable.

"King Condom" Tries to Conquer Belize

Shortly after Belize won its independence in 1981, the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) established the Belize Family Life Association, comically misnamed, since it works hard to undermine the family and destroy human life. BFLA quickly set up four contraceptive distribution centers in Belize and became involved in the National AIDS Task Force, boasting that it is "the only organization in Belize dedicated primarily to family planning." The results of IPPF's meddling were entirely predictable, as they are all over the world.

Belize soon became a model "Planned Parenthood" society, with three out of four children born out of wedlock. Women still have an average of three or four children in Belize, but often they all have different fathers, and the women have to struggle constantly just to feed their children and themselves, as a succession of men move in and out of the home without a care in the world. As far as the family is concerned, things won't get much worse in Belize because they can't get much worse. As for reducing abortion, contraception failed to get the job done, as always. The number of abortions more than tripled in a decade, from 760 in 1985 to 2,600 in 1996, more than twice the rate in the United States.

THE GROWING BELIZEAN AIDS PROBLEM

Belize also suffers from the highest rate of HIV infection in Central America, and it is accelerating fast (the 2006 UNAIDS estimate shows a 2.5% adult HIV infection rate). Much of this increase is due to the continuous condom campaigns carried out by the BFLA and other population control groups. I personally witnessed PAHO (Pan-American Health Organization) and UNAIDS representatives doing condom demonstrations on the crowded main street of Belize City, and UNICEF and the Red Cross have set up gigantic condom billboards in strategic locations. Of course, neither the billboards nor the demonstrations mention the fact that condoms fail one time out of twelve uses.

Belize's uniqueness extends even to its abortion law. Nobody in the country (except for the professional pro-abortionists) seems to know that abortion is entirely legal, and the power structures appear to want to keep it that way. Pro-abortionists prefer to do their dirty and murderous work in peace and quiet, of course, with a minimum of fuss and opposition. They managed to sneak abortion into the Belizean Constitution in 1981, when the nation became independent from Britain and changed its name from British Honduras. This makes Belize the only Central American nation with legalized abortion. Of course, the criminal code sports the usual "stringent" exceptions for the physical and mental health of the mother which, as we all know, means abortion-on-demand in practice.

THE CHURCH STANDS-UP FOR LIFE

Despite abortion being legal, the United Nations World Health Organization (WHO) alleges, as always, without evidence, that the number one cause of death among Belizean women is illegal abortion. While the Catholic Church in Belize preaches abstinence, various United Nations agencies have blamed the Church for the high teen pregnancy rate! In fact, a United Nations CEDAW committee member said that it was "alarming" that the Catholic Church runs schools in Belize, and that liberal sex education should be taught and condoms should be distributed in these schools, putting pressure on the Church through the "liberal Catholic groups present in other countries." The former First Lady of Belize also complained that the Catholic Church was "complicating" the fight against AIDS by banning the use of condoms. This is rather like saying that a fire department is "complicating" the business of stopping a fire by refusing to dump gas on it!

Population Controllers Hard at Work

In Belize, the United Nations and other non-governmental organizations offer the same old buzzwords and busily labor on the pseudo-issues of "sex role stereotyping," "gender awareness," "empowerment of women," and "lifting women's self-esteem." Meanwhile, they studiously ignore the root causes that make many women's lives so miserable and difficult in Belize - pushing sex education from a very early age, dumping contraceptives on them, offering abortion when the contraceptives fail, promoting every kind of "family configuration" and telling women that all they need is "self-esteem" - and then everything will be just fine.

As usual, these "air-conditioned warriors" ensconce themselves in the very best of quarters. In a country where one-third of the people live below the poverty line, UNFPA, UNICEF, and the other foreign population controllers work in a brand-new, stylish six-story building (the tallest in Belize) with a high fence all around it. The building is unmarked by any identifying logos, so few people suspect the deadly work that goes on within the comfortable offices.

As they like to say in this small nation - UnBelizeable!

But the situation is not all gloomy.

BRINGING THE SANCTITY OF LIFE BACK TO BELIZE

When Father Tom and I traveled to Belize in February, we found a good-sized hard core of experienced pro-lifers ready to literally breathe life back into Belize. At the top, Bishop Emeritus Osmond Peter Martin of the Belize City-Belmopan Diocese has expressed very strong support for HLI's mission. He has fought the good pro-life fight for many years and is well aware of Planned Parenthood's influence. Backing him up are our chaplain's, Father Papa's, confreres, the priests of the Society of Our Lady of the Most Holy Trinity (SOLT), including our host, Father Jim Blount, SOLT, Pastor of the Divine Mercy Parish, Father Leo Palma, SOLT, of La Inmaculada Parish in Orange Walk Town (the youngest priest in the diocese) and the SOLT priests in Benque Viejo del Carmen in the West of the country.

They are ably assisted in their efforts by veterans Margaret Robinson, founder of Helping Hands Pregnancy Counseling Center, which has sites in Belize City and in Benque Viejo, and Judy Vasquez, who runs the Helping Hands center in Belize City, as well as Lucy Jaramillo, Flavia Burgos, and Rachel de Ocampo, who are all NFP and crisis pregnancy counselors. Maria Zabaneh runs the Voices for Life pro-life group.

Father Tom and I began our tour of Belize by meeting with the Vicar General of the Belize City-Belmopan Diocese, Father Noel Leslie, who expressed his support for our critically important pro-life missionary work. We went on to meet with the main pro-life group in Belize, Voices for Life, then had Holy Mass at the Divine Mercy Parish. Belizeans eat a late supper, so we traveled to the home of Mark and Leticia Lizarraga to share a meal, and Father Tom had the pleasure of meeting their German Shepherds, Shadow and Lady.

We really got to work the next day, speaking for six hours to about sixty religion and science teachers from Catholic high schools in Belize at the St. Vincent Pallotti School auditorium. The teachers really needed to hear what we had to say about effectively tackling the AIDS and teen pregnancy problems in the country. Many of the teachers believed that condoms are the answer to the problem - until Father Tom and I finished showing them how the failure-prone devices actually lead to the spread of AIDS and, more importantly, more and more illicit sexual activity that endangers the soul. We covered a lot of ground, speaking on the various population control groups and their agenda, the beauty and effectiveness of natural family planning, and other topics such as how to overcome Belize's many societal problems by strengthening the family.

We spoke on the same issues later that day after driving to Orange Walk Town and addressing a larger audience of Catholic primary school teachers and lay leaders from the towns of Orange Walk and Corozal. We ate another late supper and arrived back at the Divine Mercy Parish at about eleven in the evening.

A BEACON OF HOPE

Over the next three days, we repeated the same themes in depth and distributed materials to diocesan and SOLT priests at the Santa Familia Monastery in Cayo District and to some 200 members of Catholic groups at the Holy Redeemer Parish Hall in Belize City. We also held an all-day training course for 50 pro-life leaders at Divine Mercy Parish, and Father Tom preached a pro-life homily at the Holy Redeemer Cathedral on Sunday. We also spoke to a tough audience at a Belize Pharmacy Association meeting before catching a small plane to the tourist town of San Pedro on San Pedro Island.

This proved to be the most interesting part of our trip. We walked through the garish tourist town, noticing that, like most such places, the entire economy is geared to helping people enjoy themselves in whatever way they choose. There were plenty of Red Cross condom posters plastered on doors, but we experienced hope when we saw a United Democratic Party (UDP) banner over the main street that proclaimed "VOTE UDP for the Future of Our Children." Father Tom and I hoped that the UDP would begin to turn things around and work for the protection of Belize's most helpless citizens, the unborn.

Father Tom preached a pro-life Mass in Spanish at the local Parish of St. Peter, and we spent a little time working and relaxing before heading back to Belize City and a sendoff by the Voices for Life group at the Global Spice Restaurant at Philip Goldson International Airport.

Some people may wonder why HLI is spending so much time and effort on a tiny country like Belize, which has a population less than one-third the size of Rhode Island. Belize is a strategic beachhead from which the pro-abortionists will attempt to spread their soul- and body-destroying philosophy, pills, and devices all over Central America. Human Life International intends to push the anti-lifers out of this country and deny them the foothold they have worked so hard to establish. Since Belize has a well-established pro-life structure and a supportive hierarchy, HLI has a much better chance of making it a shining beacon of hope to pro-lifers all over Central and Latin America.

You better Belize it!

Mission Report: Haiti: February 2008

Joseph Meaney, February 11-14, 2008

Going to Haiti on the first Human Life International (HLI) mission to this Caribbean nation was exciting. It also turned out to be a singularly opportune time to go. Shortly after the trip, food riots and violence brought down the government, and instability continues to the present. HLI is now reaching some of the more desperate corners of the globe where the purveyors of abortion and anti-life propaganda faced little international opposition in the past.

THE "LAND OF MOUNTAINS"

The history of Haiti is a long series of tragedies. The first colony planted by Christopher Columbus in 1492 disappeared without a trace. Soon thereafter, the Taino Indian inhabitants were decimated by disease. This prompted the importation of slaves from Africa, who were treated with such cruelty that their numbers could only be maintained by constantly bringing more across the sea to work the sugarcane plantations. The land was so productive that at one time it accounted for 40 percent of all the sugar and 60 percent of all the coffee consumed in Europe.

The French established their prosperous colony of Saint Domingue on the western third of the island of Hispaniola in the 17th century. (The Spanish remained on the other two thirds in what became the Dominican Republic.) Soon the 32,000 Europeans were outnumbered by 500,000 slaves. There were also 25,000 or so persons of mixed race who played a decisive role in the revolt of 1791 that continued until independence in 1804. Haitians are very proud that theirs is the second colony to achieve independence in the Western Hemisphere. The name Haiti was taken at that time from the original Taino Indian expression "land of mountains."

THE STRENGTH OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

As Jacqueline Mangones and I flew into Haiti from Miami, we had an excellent view of the area around the capital of Port-au-Prince and the tallest mountains in the Caribbean. Jacqueline was born in Haiti of French ancestry and had to leave for Florida due to the violence and economic hardships there. She is a friend of Mrs. Magaly Llaguno, the director of our HLI Latin American regional office. They are both 3rd order Carmelites. Thanks to Jacqueline's connections from her frequent trips back to Haiti, we were able to start working with the Church to defend the culture of life.

Father Gilbert, the chaplain of the religious house La Villa Manrèse, met us at the airport and drove us to our appointments during the trip. We passed through the crazy traffic in the capital to the hills above and the headquarters of the Saint Viateur fathers. This French congregation came to Haiti in 1965 via Quebec. It was a blessing to stay at a religious house so close to the diocesan major seminary, especially since most hotels in Haiti are expensive and unsafe. We began our days with 6:30 AM Mass at the Villa Manrèse chapel and ate meals with the community.

Archbishop Joseph Serge Miot of Port-au-Prince very kindly met with us at the Villa Manrèse and suggested that we confer with his auxiliary bishop, Pierre-André Dumas, who serves as the rector of the Université Notre Dame d'Haïti. It is remarkable how many educational institutions the Catholic Church maintains in Haiti. We were told that only 15% or so of school children go to public schools. The vast majority are in the private sector. I was impressed by the throngs of children in Catholic school uniforms on the streets.

FIGHTING THE CULTURE OF DEATH

Bishop Dumas thanked us very much for the pro-life educational materials in French we brought for the students. Their "Notre Dame" University has a medical school with 600 students, a nursing school, and many other disciplines. Our scientific information on prenatal development and the failure rates of the condom will now be distributed to the students in the health sciences. At our meeting we learned about the dire situation of respect for human life in the country.

A very heroic priest goes every week to the public morgue to collect the bodies of those who died abandoned by all. The Church provides a simple but dignified burial for these poorest of the poor. What shocked Bishop Dumas was the news from the priest that most of the bodies discarded at the morgue are those of preborn babies-sometimes 30 in a week.

Jacqueline and others told me about the pagan practice of child sacrifice that still continues in Haiti. The African Voodoo religion is unfortunately widespread and feared. When Jean-Claude "Baby-Doc" Duvalier was on the verge of losing power in 1986, he consulted Voodoo priests in an attempt to stay in office. Their price for helping him was the sacrifice of his son. "Baby-Doc" chose exile instead. It is widely reported that young children disappear as a result of pacts with Voodoo priests. President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, a former priest, was notorious for resorting to Voodoo and magic.

The Church has a major task of evangelization to fight Voodoo and a culture of violence in Haiti. Fortunately, they do have many religious vocations. The three major seminaries have a combined total of over 500 young men in formation. Father Guy Boursico, rector of Notre Dame Seminary, told us that HLI's Seminarians for Life program was very welcome, and he thanked us for the books and other materials we brought. Father William Smarth, rector of the CIFOR (Centre Inter-Institut de Formation Religieuse) gave me a tour of the common seminary for religious congregations. A consistent refrain on our visits was an interest in HLI doing some training sessions for the professors and seminarians on the life issues the professors and seminarians on the one hand.

It is hard to move around Haiti without being assaulted by the yellow "Pante" signs for condoms, courtesy of Population Services International and the US taxpayer. They make the false promise of "safety" and "pleasure." AIDS is a severe problem in Haiti with one in 20 people infected. I was told that homosexual sex tourism was to blame for some of the initial outbreak of the disease. It is certainly true that sexual promiscuity is a big problem in Haiti, and the condom campaigns have done nothing to fight this.

On the other hand, the Missionaries of Charity of Mother Teresa of Calcutta, launched a successful campaign for public decency. The most popular brewery had a terrible idea of advertizing their beer with the image of a naked woman. This ad-campaign took the form of billboards and posters throughout the country. The sisters responded with a call to boycott the beer and tear down the posters. It caught on. With sales declining and outrage mounting, the brewery pulled its ads. The government ministry of women eventually got behind the campaign once the Church had done all the work.

FALSE "HEALTH CARE"

Haiti is the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere. The government is really a cruel joke. They do not educate more than a tiny minority of the children or provide police protection. The 8,000 strong MINUSTAH UN peacekeepers are universally recognized as the only thing keeping the gangs and criminal elements from instituting mob rule. (This was one of the few times I saw the UN objectively providing a useful service.) The economy is largely based on foreign aid. In this kind of unregulated environment, the anti-life groups thrive.

Profamil, the Haitian Creole name for their local Planned Parenthood organization, is opening clinics at a rapid pace. Their friendly-sounding name, "Pro Family," and the promise of free "Reproductive Health Services" make them popular. This is mainly because Planned Parenthood's deception is combined with a near total lack of health care facilities. People actually wait in line for hours thinking they will get health care, but Profamil's staff is only there to dispense birth control. It reminded me of the BBC documentary called "The Human Laboratory," which showed Haitian women from the slum of Cité Soleil being used in clinical trials for the Norplant birth control implants. The Population Council owns the patent for this population control method that severely damages women's health, and Haitians and other women were used as guinea pigs.

PRAYERS FOR HAITI

Please pray for Haiti. It is a beautiful country that is beset by many ills. HLI hopes to become part of the solution for many of the problems in their society that stem from a breakdown of the family and morality. It is certainly edifying to see how much the Church does to comfort and help the Haitian people. AIDS and violence against preborn children spread a deep sorrow in Haiti. Hidden human sacrifice and disregard for the dignity of the human person are eating away at the soul of this nation.

One light in the darkness is Venerable Pierre Toussaint (1766-1853), who is likely to become the first Haitian canonized saint. He began life as a slave but turned his back on hatred and violence and instead became a peacemaker and generously gave the wealth he acquired later in life to the poor, the sick, and the homeless. His example and that of the Missionaries of Charity are sorely needed in Haiti today.

Mission Report: India: October 2008

HISTORY OF INDIAN POPULATION CONTROL - reported by Dr. Brian Clowes, October 2008

India was the first developing nation to impose an active population policy on its people. The program began in December 1952, just a few months after the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) was formally established in Bombay. India's first Five Year Plan set out to stabilize the country's population at "a level consistent with the requirements of the national economy," a fuzzy objective tailor-made for manipulation by aggressive population controllers.

India soon became a prime example of how massive human rights violations are always integral parts of any population control program.

Sanjay Gandhi initiated a forced sterilization program in the mid-1970s. Sterilization teams conducted dragnets, rounding up villagers and performing the operations on them against their wills. Many villagers slept in fields at night to avoid being forcibly neutered. They also avoided public markets since those were favorite targets of the roving sterilization teams, which rounded up everyone, regardless of how many children they had. In a single year, the Indian government performed 8.2 million sterilizations, and thousands died because the operations were often done in assembly-line conditions in unsterilized environments, such as tents. Police fired into crowds protesting the mandatory sterilizations and killed dozens of people.

India legalized abortion in 1971, and more than 11 million abortions are committed in the country each year, a rate two and a half times higher than in the United States. Pro-life OB-GYNs who refuse to do abortions are occasionally murdered by boyfriends and families who do not want to support a child. The National Family Health Survey motto is "We Are Two and We Have Two." In certain states, such as Kerala, there is a 10,000 rupee fine ($200) for a third child.

THE WAR ON BABY GIRLS

A practice called "female feticide" kills more than half a million preborn girls a year in India simply because they are female. India is a male-dominated society, and, although it is illegal, parents still pay dowries when they marry off their girl children. This is an especially strong impetus for poor parents to abort their preborn girls, and UNICEF estimates that more than 20 million girls have been aborted or killed shortly after birth in the past 35 years. Money-grubbing doctors and nurses with portable ultrasound machines advertise with the slogan "pay 600 rupees now, save 50,000 rupees later."

The normal sex ratio at birth is 105 girls for every 100 boys in most of the world; in India it is only 93 girls for every 100 boys. As gynecologist Punit Bedi says, "All kinds of famines, epidemics, and wars are nothing compared to this. In some parts of India, one in every five girls is being eliminated at the fetal stage. It is a genocidal situation."

To show how hard the people's hearts have become, newborn baby girls are usually killed by forcing them to inhale coarse rice grains, after which they suffer painful suffocation. In other cases, husbands plant a poisonous madar plant upon learning that their wives are pregnant. By the time the wife delivers, the plant will be ready to kill the baby if it is a girl. One 26--year-old woman told India Today, "If I and my husband have the right to have a child, we also have the right to kill it if it happens to be a daughter and we decide we cannot afford it. Outsiders and the Government have no right to poke their noses into this."

India banned gender-selection abortions in 1994, but abortionists, as they do everywhere, ignore laws they don't like in pursuit of cash and are almost never prosecuted. The only doctor convicted over the past four years of performing sex-selective abortions was fined ten dollars.

Through all of this, as always, there is not a peep from the feminist groups who claim to stand for "women's rights."

TEACHING THE TRUTH

After Dr. Angela Lanfranchi and I had given our talks at the ASPAC (Asia-Pacific Conference) in Goa, we traveled to Bangladesh for a whirlwind speaking tour consisting of a dozen talks in four days. We were met by Sister Mary Annunciata, RGS, who has been Secretary of Respect for Life India for 20 years. She is a great pro-life champion struggling against almost impossible odds. Sister Annunciata has attended five of HLI's ASPACs and is a dynamo of energy at the tender age of 75. She has been the mother superior of three convents, the principal of five different schools, and a youth counselor for more than 20 years. The homosexuals and pro-aborts absolutely despise her with unholy passion for preaching chastity and fidelity.

During our time in the beautiful city of Bangalore, we spoke to a wide variety of over 1,000 people, including seminarians, doctors, law students, nurses, high schoolers, and Catholic social workers.

We primarily talked about the international abortion situation, the abortion-breast cancer link, the failure of condoms to stem the spread of HIV/AIDS, population control, and homosexuality. We had long question and answer sessions at the end of each talk, and we provided information that most people had obviously never heard before. For example, I frequently pointed out that the population density of India is significantly less than the population densities of either New Jersey or Rhode Island -- but when was the last time you ever heard a population controller gripe about there being too many people in New Jersey or Rhode Island? I always went back to NSSM-200, the "Kissinger Report" of 1974, which established official United States population policy and states that the USA has to hold down the populations of developing countries in order to obtain better access to their natural resources.

CONFRONTING ABORTION EXTREMISM

Of all of these talks, one really stood out. I spoke to about 120 law students at Christ Junior College about international abortion law and how more than 100 nations have legalized abortion-none with the consent of the people. Then I opened the discussion up for questions.

Never in more than 20 years of Q&A sessions have I encountered such industrial-strength ignorance and inflexible thinking. As most people tend to do, the law students focused solely on the one-half of one percent of abortions that are true "hard cases"-life of the mother, rape and incest, and birth defects (eugenics). These students were different from any I have ever talked to before. They defended pro-abortionism fanatically-even claiming that they would give their lives for it!

One student asserted that abortion should not be limited because this interferes with a person's "freedom to choose." I asked him to name me one single law that does not limit "freedom of choice" in some way. Laws limit my "freedom of choice" by telling me that I can't drive like a bloody maniac on the roads. They tell me that I cannot sell illegal drugs. There are even signs painted on the walls all over Bangalore that forbid public urination. Do these laws limit my "freedom of choice?" Of course they do, because they support the public good! I told him that he was in the wrong line of work if he wants unlimited "freedom of choice," because without laws, who needs lawyers?

The silliness only got worse after that. One young female student said that there was a "stigma" associated with being the child of rape, so I asked the class if they would rather be born with a stigma or die. Most of them answered that they would rather die! What a cowardly attitude! What about homosexuals, who suffer stigma in India? Should they all just kill themselves? Nobody said a word in reply.

Of course, there was the popular argument that we must always keep the "public sphere" and the "private sphere" strictly separated. I asked why, and the students lapsed into baffled silence. I then explained why this is simply an illogical and impractical notion. The example I gave angered them greatly-that promiscuous homosexuals lose more time off their lifespans than a person who is morbidly obese and abuses alcohol, tobacco, and illegal drugs. Who pays for the expensive treatment these people need over the last several years of their lives? Why, the public, of course. I told the students that unhealthy private behavior always impacts the public sphere, but I could tell from their shaking heads that they refused to even think about what I said.

The pro-abortionists would be delighted with this crop of future lawyers. If this is typical of the quality of "thinking" among students in Indian law colleges today, I cringe when thinking what the state of jurisprudence will be in the nation 30 or 40 years from now.

I didn't expect to get any positive comments after this Q&A session, but one young man wearing a taqiyah smiled and gave me a thumbs-up sign.

COMMITMENT TO LIFE

Sister Annunciata certainly kept Dr. Angela and me busy! Our last talk was just an hour before we left for the airport, and we returned to the United States with heavy hearts, knowing that the population controllers have a very good friend and incomparable "sugar daddy" in President Barack Obama. Once again, the United States will lead the way in funding coercive and destructive population control programs all over the world and, once again, authentic economic development will take a distant back seat to programs that will do little more than make large poor families into small poor families.

But, whatever atrocities the population controllers commit in nations like India, Human Life International will be there to expose them to the world.

You have our word on it.

Mission Report: XVth ASPAC Conference - India: October - November 2008

INDIA AND XVth ASIA-PACIFIC CONFERENCE - Reported by Rev. Thomas J. Euteneuer, October 30-November 4, 2008.

India has many positive assets as a nation, but the roads are not one of them. Driving in India is much like going on Mr. Toad's Wild Ride in Disney World-the only difference being that Mr. Toad's Wild Ride doesn't include cows at every turn. There are cows wandering free on all the roads of India! I believe the cow phenomenon is unique to the world. It is a result of the Hindu belief in reincarnation that cows are sacred, and on top of that, they are legally protected in India. I even saw cows resting in the sand on the beaches of Goa!

My motive for traveling to India on my third visit to this country was both to attend HLI's XVth annual Asia-Pacific Conference and to conduct a missionary trip in the region of Goa, one of the first regions of India to be evangelized by Christian missionaries. Although India is only 2% Christian in its population, the south western region of India, primarily the State of Kerala, is traditionally known as the area where St. Thomas the Apostle evangelized after Pentecost, and the Catholics there are proud to be called "Thomas Christians." The region of Goa, about half way up the western side of the subcontinent of India, was settled later, in the 16th century, by Portuguese conquerors and missionaries, who established a colony there which lasted as an independent state until 1961 when it was forcibly absorbed into India by the leader Nehru as a measure of unifying the Indian people. It was to this colony that St. Francis Xavier came in 1542 and used it as a base for his evangelizing mission to the Far East, having returned 13 times to Goa. It was fitting then that his remains should have returned to Goa as their final resting place.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER, THE APOSTLE TO THE EAST

There is hardly a saint that symbolizes HLI's mission as well as St. Francis Xavier. In 1540 when St. Ignatius Loyola sent him to the Far East, he gave Xavier and his companion the command, Ite, Incendite! which means in Latin, "Go forth and set [the world] afire!" And light up the world he did! This extraordinary man, travelling on rickety boats for months, eating atrocious foods, braving pirates, assassins, hostile pagan hordes, misunderstanding, disease and language barriers, took the message of the Gospel where no one else of his day would go. He was rightly proclaimed Patron of the Missions by Pope Pius X in 1904 and is one of the main patrons of HLI's international mission of life.

I had the privilege of celebrating Mass at the tomb of this great saint in Goa on November 4 and offered my prayers for all the staff, board members, benefactors and collaborators of HLI in the US and throughout the world. Needless to say, I also prayed for our country on the day of the presidential election. I asked St. Francis to strengthen our mission of life and help us to bring this most urgent and necessary message to the poorest nations of our world, which are poised on the edge of a precipice now that America has elected another abortion-loving US President who will export the culture of death with a vengeance to the rest of the world.

HLI's MISSIONARIES IN INDIA

A most remarkable man named Milagres (Portuguese for "Miracles") Pereira is HLI's most worthy representative in Goa, India. He works for the Family Service Center of the Archdiocese of Goa and Daman and conducts a program called, "Pro-Life Option." In this capacity he forms lay leaders in his Pro-Life Institute and with them he goes out to parishes constantly giving training in family life education and pro-life messages. He literally speaks to hundreds of people each month in his pro-life apostolate, and that kind of missionary spirit is greatly needed in India.

Milagres and his pro-life team hosted me for a three-day speaking tour after the Asia-Pacific Conference, and I found myself caught up in the great missionary spirit of St. Francis and the new pro-life missionaries of Goa. In just three days, I gave numerous pro-life Masses, spoke to more than 1,000 people in three different parishes of the Archdiocese, had three seminars for priests, doctors, and pro-lifers respectively, and on my last night there, I was privileged to speak to 67 seminarians of the Patriarchal Seminary of Rachol. What a blessing to use every scrap of time that we had available to us for getting the message of the Gospel of Life out to these wonderful people! Credit goes to Milagres and his team for setting the whole schedule up and for making the trip truly fruitful.

In every venue and with every group, I did nothing but witness to them about God's plan for marriage and family life and teach them about the dangers of abortion and contraception. I focused almost exclusively on contraception with the priests and seminarians because the need is greatest in this area due to the lack of understanding of the Church's teaching on this subject. But this teaching is always a sign of contradiction. One of the priests of the seminary faculty walked out of my talk in the middle of it, seemingly as a protest that I would dare to teach these seminarians the truth of the Church's teaching! I have come to expect that, though. It doesn't stop our mission. Thankfully, there are several excellent priests on the faculty there, especially Fr. Donato and Fr. Pauli, who invited me to address the seminarians, and the seminarians were as attentive and open to the message as I have found, literally everywhere in the world. I am sure that St. Francis Xavier would have given the same talk if he were alive.

THE XVth ASIA-PACIFIC CONFERENCE

As our supporters know, each year HLI sponsors a pro-life conference in the Asia-Pacific region for the purpose of spreading the pro-life message, forming leaders, and planting the pro-life movement in new areas. This year the conference was hosted by the Family Service Center of Goa and 11 countries were represented, including Laos and East Timor, which sent representatives for the very first time to an HLI conference. The unfortunate violence against Christians in the eastern state of Orissa that preceded the conference kept a number of potential delegates away, and Crissa that preceded the conference kept a number of potential delegates away, and India refused visas to our delegates from Sri Lanka and Vietnam. Dr. Brian Clowes and I only obtained our visas with great difficulty as apparently our names were put on a list of "suspicious persons," which caused a huge delay in the processing of the visas. The visas were eventually granted, not without many frantic phone calls from a few friends in Washington, and we arrived two days late to our own conference but happy that we were at least able to address the delegates on the last day. At least we ended up on a positive note. Next year's conference will be held in Miri, Malaysia, and we intend to attach a two-day training seminar for HLI leaders to that conference to make sure that the authentic pro-life message is getting through.

PRAY FOR INDIA AND ASIA

The new circumstances with the American presidency mean that we will have much work to do in the future to keep the world from completely succumbing to the abortion steamroller. Our new American President will utterly wipe out any restrictions to abortion and abortion funding to the rest of the world, he will radicalize the UN again and lock down any possibility of changing the Supreme Court. America will begin to export abortion again, as it did in the Clinton Administration, and no abortion-free country will be left untouched. We are bracing ourselves for this reality.

India has its own problems. That country has abortion-on-demand up to 20 weeks of pregnancy and has set up a Policy Review Committee to examine the 1971 Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, which legalized abortion. In February of 2009, it appears that Parliament will vote on the recommendations of the Review Committee, which will undoubtedly recommend liberalizing abortion even more in that country. India already has a two-child policy, which provides sometimes severe penalties for families that seek to be generous with life. I was told that in some regions of India a family with three children will be deprived of the standard government subsidy of rice, and their children may even be prohibited from going to school as a punishment for the crime of having three children. I even heard that birth certificates can be denied to a family that has three or more children.

OUR HOPE

Everywhere HLI goes, we remind Catholics that our Church, the Roman Catholic Church, is the last and greatest hope that we have to stop the coercive spiritual power of the culture of death. We relentlessly speak to seminarians around the world to assure that the next generation of Church leaders will take the mantle of the Gospel of Life upon their shoulders and preach, teach and live this message for a world that is becoming increasingly bloodied by abortion and its attendant evils.

The good people of Goa and the example of St. Francis Xavier reminded me that when the Church's missionary zeal for life is strong and its leaders are vibrant, there is no barrier that cannot be overcome for the saving of babies and the saving of souls!

Mission Report: Philippines: July 2008

Dr. Brian Clowes, July, 2008

My eighth trip to the Philippines was just as enjoyable as the first seven. The Filipinos are such hospitable, friendly and honest people that you cannot help but feel right at home there as soon as you step off the airplane. But, all of this might soon change.

ASSAULTS AGAINST FAITH AND FAMILY

The Philippines has been under heavy anti-life attack for more than 15 years now, because the nation is the bastion of Catholicism in Asia. More than 90 percent of Filipinos are Catholic, and more than two out of three hear Mass at least once a week. Huge churches seating thousands of people frequently have ten or more daily Masses, all very well attended, and priests are kept very busy hearing confessions.

Since Faith and family are anathema to the anti-lifers, they have done their best to destroy both-and they appear to be succeeding. When I first visited the Philippines in 1996, the first thing I saw when walking into Manila International Airport was a four-foot high statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Now, there are no such statues or images anywhere in the airport. It has been efficiently "sanitized" of religious items, perhaps for foreign consumption. In 1996, I heard traditional Filipino songs being sung in the countryside. Now, there is karaoke. In 1996, I saw a lot of fine religious woodwork in many different little stores. This time, in the EDSA Megamall, I saw ghastly "sculptures" that appeared to be large preserved reptile cadavers being pierced by various sharp instruments. In 1996, most Filipinos had charming names like "Policarpio," "Felicisimo," and "Angelito." Now, sadly, names like "Britney," "Hannah," and "Nick" predominate.

The people who claim that "diversity" is their highest good seem to have no trouble with destroying it on a huge scale. They have embarked on a program of worldwide cultural homogenization, which aims to make good and mindless consumers out of everyone on Earth. More and more Filipinos are giving up their music for rap, their traditional colorful clothing for blue jeans and T-shirts, and their wide variety of food for Big Macs and Kentucky Fried Chicken. The Filipino way of life is quickly slipping away, and there seem to be few mourners in the rush to modernization.

DANGEROUS ANTI-LIFE BILLS

More troubling is the fact that the average Filipina had just under seven children in 1965; this has been cut by more than one-half to 3.2 children now, and the United Nations expects that the total fertility rate (TFR) of the Philippines will reach replacement in 2015 and a disastrously low 1.35 by 2040.

The population controllers in the Philippines are lavishly funded by Europe and North America, and they never give up. At least six "family planning" bills have been on the America, and they never give up. At least six family planning bills have been on the Congressional docket this year, including the most dangerous one, House Bill 17, which would set up a "National Policy on Reproductive Health, Responsible Parenthood and Population Development." Note that the "family planners" don't say "population control," they call it "population development."

As usual, the pro-abortionists could not care less about what the people think. A very dangerous combined bill, which contained provisions from four previous "family planning" bills, was passed in less than a minute, and public testimony was prohibited. Then, the session was immediately adjourned and, when our head of HLI-Asia, Dr. Ligaya Acosta, approached the Presiding Officer about the anti-Democratic nature of the procedures, he simply told her that the bill had passed, and there was absolutely nothing she or anyone else could do about it.

Signs of the anti-life rot are everywhere. After a 28-hour journey to Manila, I noticed a brightly-painted clinic named "FriendlyCare" across the street from my hotel, complete with armed guard standing outside. My host, Dr. Acosta, told me that this clinic is part of a chain of abortion mills that does thousands of "menstrual extractions" every year, the best way to get around the laws of a pro-life country.

As always, the Filipinos keep you moving. I suspect that there are no bedrooms in the people's houses, since they never seem to sleep. At least they like to eat!

SPREADING THE GOSPEL OF LIFE THROUGH THE AIRWAVES

Our first event was a press conference on "Reproductive Health, Abortion, and Contraception" at the five-star Dusit Thani Hotel. Every major print and electronic media outlet in the country was represented, and I knew we would have a fair hearing when I saw that the MC of the press conference, Rey Langit, Chairman of the National Media Union, had a "little feet" pin on his tie.

Our lineup of speakers included Dr. Angie Aguirre, a bioethicist from the Department of Medicine at the University of Santo Tomas, Father Melvin Castro, Executive Secretary of the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines (CBCP), Linda Valenzona, an economist and specialist in demographics from SAFE (Subtle Attack Against the Family Explained), Dr. Acosta, and myself. We talked for a total of about 45 minutes, and then had an hour and a half of questions.

This will certainly help our cause, which is really heating up here. Just the previous day, Archbishop Paciano Aniceto, Chairman of the Episcopal Commission on Family & Life of the CBCP, told the Catholics in Congress, "If you are a Catholic, you should behave like a Catholic. Otherwise, you are not what you profess." A monsignor from the Jaro Diocese also said, "We will stand by the principle of Humanae Vitae."

GEARING UP FOR A RALLY ON HUMANAE VITAE

That evening, Dr. Acosta and I spoke to about 225 members of Couples for Christ, who got thousands of their people out to the big Friday rally in Manila, along with El Shaddai.

The next day, we visited Our Lady of Antipolo Cathedral near Manila. This Archdiocese is the second-largest in the Philippines after Cebu, with 3.4 million Catholics and less than 100 priests to serve them. Five hundred people showed up to hear Dr. Acosta and myself describe the terrible threat to Faith and family posed by the international population controllers and their corrupt "reproductive health" bills.

On Thursday, we were up at 4:15 AM to fly to Iloilo, which was hard-hit by a typhoon less than a month before. Mud and wreckage lies everywhere as the people work together to put their lives back on track as best they can. Our morning press conference saw about 20 members of the media show up to hear the presentations of our reconstituted "ABC Team" (Acosta, Dr. Rene Bullecer, and Clowes) and ask questions.

In the sweltering afternoon, we had our first major Humanae Vitae conference in the public grandstands in central Iloilo City. Three separate parades of people started walking from five kilometers away and arrived at the grandstands at almost the same moment. People continued to flow into the area, filled the grandstand, and spilled into the streets. Just as the program began, clouds suddenly filled the sky and the temperature dropped about 15 degrees. The crowd swelled to about 7,500 by the time I gave my talk on the magnitude of the threat of the "reproductive health" movement to the Philippines. Dr. Ligaya gave her moving testimony on her time in the Department of Health, and Dr. Rene Bullecer got the crowd roaring with excitement (although I didn't understand a word he said, since he spoke in Cebuano). It's easy to recognize a great speaker by the reaction of the crowd, even if you don't understand anything that's being said. During the concluding Mass, Jaro Archbishop Paciano Aniceto gave a 30-minute homily on demographics and abortifacients, which informed everyone in the crowd exactly what they were up against.

TENS OF THOUSANDS CELEBRATE HUMANAE VITAE

Friday, the 40th anniversary of Humanae Vitae, was the big day. Dr. Acosta and I arrived early at the University of Santo Tomas football fields, and thousands of people were already there. More people in large groups continued to pour in from all over Manila, walking from distant points. The Cardinal Archbishop of Manila gave permission for the city's 30 Catholic schools to suspend classes for the day so their thousands of students could attend the rally!

There were many prominent people there, including, of course, the great pro-life Lito Aienza, former three-term Mayor of Manila and now Minister of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR).

We had 20,000 people present to hear Dr. Acosta's talk on the threats posed by the "family planners" from an inside perspective. I had the last talk of the day before the family planners from an inside perspective. I had the last talk of the day before the Mass on "U.S. International Policies on Population Control and Intervention in the Republic of the Philippines." I concluded the talk by shouting "Hands Off the Philippines" several times, and the people loved it.

Gaudencio Borbon Cardinal Rosales, Archbishop of Manila, celebrated the concluding Mass, along with 14 other archbishops and bishops and more than 100 priests. During the Mass, all of the nearly 100 churches in Manila rang their bells at exactly 6 PM for the program Campana para sa familia, busina para sa buhari ("Blow horns for family, ring bells for the life").

FILIPINOS FIGHT TO KEEP FAITH AND FAMILY ALIVE

My long trip home began the next morning at 4 AM. I had plenty of time to reflect on the situation in the Philippines during the 13-hour, five-movie flight from Hong Kong to Los Angeles, and during another five-hour flight to Dulles. I wondered why the population controllers can't just leave people in peace. Why are they such fanatical busybodies? These people, who seem to derive such unholy delight by telling us proliferators to "keep our laws off their bodies," are actually trying to impose a two-child policy on the Philippines! Don't they see their hypocrisy, or are they somehow blinded to it?

No matter how altruistic they try to look, their efforts to make their evil acts look benevolent are similar to spray-painting roadkill. They may make the mess look a little less ugly, but it stinks horribly just the same. My message in the Philippines was simple and direct: Money won't make you happy. Nor will sex, drugs, rock n' roll, power, possessions, influence, or popularity.

Only Faith and family do the job. And these are exactly the two things the foreign-funded population controllers are actively destroying in the Philippines. All they are doing is making large poor families into small poor families-and doing irreparable damage to the nation in the process.

For five centuries, the Philippines was colonized by foreign powers-the Spaniards, the Japanese, and the Americans. Now the so-called "developed" world is trying to colonize the minds of Filipinos, a far more deadly type of occupation.

It is far past time to just let the Filipinos make their own way and enjoy the benefits of their Faith, their families, and their own natural resources. Let them alone while North America and Europe disintegrate. If they survive all of this meddling, they will lead the world to a great spiritual revival in a couple of decades.

But perhaps this is exactly what the anti-lifers are terrified of.

It is time for all of us to say to the death peddlers: "Hands off the Philippines!"

Mission Report: Philippines-Nepal: June 2008

 SHARE

Ligaya Acosta, June 2008

The month of June was a very hectic but fruitful one for HLI-Asia, with a frenzy of activities in the Philippines and a ten-day travel to the landlocked country of Nepal, cruising through a total of 5,484 air miles.

On this trip, there was almost no time to sleep, as we conducted talks and congresses to awaken the people and save them from the sharpened claws of the culture of death, and we worked with key church groups to chart further strategies to defeat the forces of evil.

STRENGTHENING THE PRO-LIFE MESSAGE IN THE PHILIPPINES

The month aptly opened with a big Marian Congress in Davao City, Philippines, with the theme, "Mama Mary Guardian and Protector of Life," held on June 1 and attended by about 2,000 people. This was an offshoot of last month's symposium, where attendees clamored to have more people learn and understand the threats and challenges to life and family. I was one of only two speakers, and after my talk, some media people approached me for further interviews. Also, after the talks, there was a long processional prayer rally all around the city in which participants carried placards proclaiming their support for life and "no" to abortion and anti-life laws. The long walk along the rugged roads of the city was exhausting, but the vivid vision of Jesus walking with the heavy cross to Calvary was enough to force my weary legs and bruised feet to carry on. Besides, I thought it was too little a reparation for the sins against life and family, which make Mama Mary shed tears of blood. The event was capped by a Mass presided over by the Auxiliary Bishop and concelebrated by a number of priests.

Aside from Davao City, I gave nine other talks during the month: On June 3, I gave a talk to the Bishops from the Episcopal Commission on Family & Life (ECFL); on June 4, I addressed the Family and Life Priests from Luzon and Metro Manila; on June 13-14, I gave three talks in the Province of Bohol (two with Family and Life workers and one with more than 200 teachers of the Holy Name University); on June 18, I gave a talk to the elite Federation of Broadcasters of the Philippines (KBP); and on June 30, I gave three talks in the city of Legazpi with three different audiences - one to the presbyterium of the Diocese of Legazpi (which was attended by the Bishop and almost 100 priests), another at the Bicol University (attended by seminarians, Family & Life workers, teachers, students, and media), and the third with about 200 parishioners of St. Raphaela Church, which included the attendance of some religious groups. The Legazpi talks were part of a three-day sortie to the Bicol Region, which lasted until July 2, where I had eight very fulfilling speaking engagements in four provinces and cities.

Aside from the talks, there were constant meetings to plan and organize the grand celebration for the 40th anniversary of Humanae vitae. A special TV program was also made for the Family and Life Crusade of the Philippines on Humanae vitae, with me as the lone guest. It was taped on June 11, and the episode was aired on July 6.

On June 12, I also had a chance to meet with a group of priests from the St. John the Baptist Congregation, which included their Superior General, who came all the way from the U.S.A. They were introduced to me by a nun who is Superior at a Convent where I spoke in Korea. The five priests came from three countries-Vietnam, China, and Taipei-and they offered their assistance for me to be able to visit their countries, where they have a house of their congregation. We set a contingent visit to Taipei in December and a possible visit to Vietnam in August.

BREAKING THE SILENCE OF NEPAL

There is a great contrast between Nepal and the Philippines. In the Philippines, there are well-organized groups defending life and family, while in Nepal there are none. The silence in Nepal on life issues is due to their lack of knowledge of the anti-life conspirators' agenda. My visit and talks were thus welcomed and well-received, especially since the parliament was soon to vote on a proposal to increase the age limit for when babies could be legally slaughtered or aborted.

Credit is due to His Excellency Bishop Anthony Sharma, of the Apostolic Vicariate of Nepal, and Rev. Father Pius Perumana, Vicar General, who readily extended their assistance and welcome when I contacted them. The good Bishop also approved, in principle, a national pro-life congress to equip Nepal with the ammunition of facts and figures for pro-life activism.

DIRECTLY CONFRONTING THE CULTURE OF DEATH

I gave five talks during my nearly seven-day stay in Nepal. Two others that had been scheduled-one exclusively for the clergy and the other for college students-but these had to be cancelled because of the constant strikes and demonstrations against the government, which paralyzed public transportation and practically put life on hold in the city of Kathmandu. The clergy however, were able to attend my other talks. On the day that I had been scheduled to talk at the biggest Catholic college in the country, the Parliamentarians themselves declared a ban on all public and private transportation, as they wrestled over the issue of government control, pressuring the Prime Minister-who had been identified with the ousted king-to resign.

It was a great disappointment for me not to be able to address the students and faculty. Students in Nepal are so powerful that when they declare a strike all public transportation can come to a halt (though their means of doing it-by burning tires in the streets, among other things-cannot be condoned). They have been so instrumental in bringing about change for so many causes in the past that I wanted to tell them about the much more important issue that needs their attention: stopping the legalization of the mass slaughter of children in their country. One teacher from that college, however, was able to attend one of my talks, and he expressed to me how moved he was by it.

My most exciting session was with the death peddlers themselves. We came early to the Church of the Assumption-the biggest Catholic Cathedral in the whole of Nepal-for my 10:30 a.m. talk on June 22. My talk was scheduled to take place after Mass, and I was told I would meet many Filipinos and English-speaking parishioners. As I arrived, my heart turned to heaven for reinforcement! Written in bold on the flashy cars parked in the Church compound were UN, UNFPA, and UNICEF, among others.

The first Filipino introduced to me was a woman who was working with UNICEF. I also met a doctor who had been a friend of mine and who is now the Country Director of UNAIDS in Nepal. We had been together in Australia for a training course on HIV/AIDS many years back when we were both still at the Department of Health in the Philippines, which of course included training in the massive promotion of condoms and, now I realize, other shameful and deceptive things.

What I thought would be a confrontation during my talk became a triumph of GOD's glory. Nobody contradicted me, and many spoke to me afterwards to express appreciation for my "courage" in exposing the death peddlers right in their presence. The Country Director of World Vision-an African lady-even stayed after my talk to express a touching thanks and said that my coming was timely because the Parliament would soon be voting on a proposal to increase the age of babies in the womb eligible for legal abortion. She attended my session again the next evening with the Couples for Christ group, who had requested a talk on Natural Family Planning, and she influenced others to attend my subsequent sessions. The other African lady, though, who was Country Director of UNICEF, did not finish the session. Before I ended, she silently left without saying anything.

The touching confessions and sharing of those currently doing anti-life work were enough to make all the sacrifices I had made for this trip vanish away. Their keen interest in listening to and knowing the truth also touched my heart. It made me look back at my own deep conversion, which I also shared with them. Some members of the media also covered my talks, with one attending three of the five sessions and calling me a number of times until I left the country. He told me how grateful he was for my coming, and that he was deeply convinced of my message. Again, the power of the Gospel of Life shone.

Mission Report: Brunei: March 2008

Dr. Ligaya A. Acosta, Director, HLI-ASIA, March 6-15, 2008.

Brunei Darussalam, officially the State of Brunei: Abode of Peace, is a country located on the northern coast of the island of Borneo in Southeast Asia. Apart from its coastline with the South China Sea, it is completely surrounded by the State of Sarawak, Malaysia.

The country is an absolute Islamic sultanate, headed by the sultan, or king, who serves as the supreme ruler. As such, Islam is the official religion, of which the sultan is head. Other faiths practiced are Buddhism (mainly by the Chinese), Christianity, and some indigenous religions in very small communities. Though a minority, the Catholic community here is vibrant and growing fast.

Brunei is relatively small, with a total area of only 2,226 square miles. It has an estimated population of barely 391,450. The official languages are Malay (Bahasa Melayu) and English, although an important minority speak Chinese. The climate is equatorial with high temperatures, high humidity, sunshine, and heavy rainfall throughout the year.

Though it is a very small country, Brunei is amazingly wealthy with a GDP of about $9 billion, and an income of approximately $24,000 per capita, derived mainly from crude oil and natural gas production, as well as from overseas investment supplements. The government provides for all medical services and subsidizes rice production and housing, as well as the schooling of children. Residents don't pay any tax.

A RISKY ENTRANCE

As I arrived in Brunei on a hot sunny morning, my big travel bag was suddenly pointed to by the Muslim Guards at the airport for opening in a routine, random search. I had to make a frantic call to the Lord in my heart to send St. Michael the Archangel to defend me in battle. The same bag contained pro-life books and materials, including a significant number of copies of HLI's Pro-life CD Library, which I intended to give away. Prior to coming, I was sufficiently warned against bringing materials which may be considered "offensive" by authorities, like religious articles and books. However, I still decided I had to bring sufficient materials to leave as weapons in the battle for life and family. The Lord was quick in His reply, as the guard, after touching my bag, decided not to open it, and let me go. I said my quick "Thank you" to God and heaved a sigh of relief as I went out of the immigration area to find Rev. Arin Sugit, a newly ordained deacon in the Diocese of Brunei and my main contact for the mission, already waiting for me with a smile on his face. We proceeded to the diocesan office, where I was received by a most accommodating and fatherly bishop, His Excellency, Cornelius Sim. After the usual introductions, the bishop made a slideshow presentation on his diocese.

The Diocese of Brunei is small, with only three parishes under the Apostolic Vicariate in Brunei Darussalam: Bandar Seri Begawan, Kuala Belait (KB), and Seria. There are only three priests serving the entire diocese, including the bishop himself, thus, they often have to import priests to assist them, mostly from the Philippines and India.

My talks were held only in the evenings, usually extending way past the scheduled ending time. Fasting was part of the routine, thus even the bishop had to postpone dinner until after the talks, which almost always ended at midnight!

The diocese advertised my series of talks through a poster it conspicuously placed at the entrance of the church, and the talks were mentioned in the Masses.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL OF LIFE

My first talk was called "The Myth of Overpopulation and the Fight for Life in Asia." The 200-capacity Diocesan Function Hall was less than filled, but after the talk, it was clear that the Holy Spirit touched the hearts of everyone who heard it. Many of the attendees came to thank me after the talk. The most heartwarming story was of a couple whose wife was soon expecting their fifth baby. Before the talk, the couple-especially the wife-had been apologetic and ashamed of her being pregnant again. After the talk, she was obviously beaming with pride for being a co-creator of life with the Lord!

The second night showed a big improvement in attendance, as many more people came, and the hall was filled to capacity. People who came the first night became instant advertisers of the talks. It was heartwarming. God was definitely working. My second topic was "Pills, Condoms, and Other Stories," which is an exposé on the horrible killer effects of artificial birth control and abortion and the fallacy of reproductive health. Again, people's eyes opened wide. They were hearing the truth for the first time and seeing real pictures of aborted babies for the first time - not just blood or a glob of tissue - but defenseless human beings, killed by their very own mothers! Many more people came to thank me after the talk; the most notable among them was a childless young couple who said they felt guilty during the entire talk - the husband was in the business of selling contraceptives! What would they do, they asked? I shared the story of a friend who was in a similar situation who made the most difficult decision of giving up his executive post in a drug company that manufactured and sold contraceptives, which afforded him a new car each month. God in His mercy gave him another job, not as lucrative in terms of finances, but definitely more fulfilling. I told them it would not be easy, but, as I myself experienced, the Lord would definitely give them the grace and joy to bear even the most difficult of situations.

My last night of talks brought the most people. The attendees from the first two nights were definitely effective advertisers! The hall was filled over capacity. Some people were standing at the back. And, as in the first two nights, people were paying strict attention to the discussion. It was heartwarming that even though most, if not all, of the people came directly from work and hadn't had dinner yet, no one slept or left early. The enterprising youth group saw an opportunity for business and made pasta and pizza to sell to the participants. When asked how much they earned, they proudly announced, "We ate our profits!"

The topic for the last night was "Natural Family Planning." I started with a video entitled "Natural vs. Artificial," which caught the participants' interest. I also had to summarize the past nights' discussions for the benefit of those who missed those talks. Everyone was fascinated with learning the natural cycles and discovering the body clock God had installed in every woman. However, I emphasized the Church's teaching that when NFP is used for selfish reasons or the wrong ends it is still immoral. "Children are a gift from the Lord, the fruit of the womb a reward. Like arrows in the hand of a warrior are the children born in one's youth. Blessed are they whose quivers are full. They will never be shamed contending with foes at the gate." (Psalms 127:3-5)

TEACHING THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH

Sunday afternoon was spent with the youth aged 12-18. It was inspiring to have many parents come with their children, even if it was previously announced that the session was only for the youth. The youth themselves confirmed my talks when they revealed that, yes, they are discussing sex in school and are taught about contraceptives and sterilization. It was a shock to the parents that their children are actually receiving sex education. Before my talks, some were saying that this is not allowed in a Muslim country, but the contrary was proven. A biology teacher who attended the talks also confirmed this fact. Truly, the culture of death is pervading everywhere, and the people are not even conscious about it, as the deception is so subtle. Thus, they need someone like HLI to open their eyes to the sad reality. The session ended with a beautiful "Pledge of Chastity," which all the young participants took to the delight of their parents.

From the capital city, I was brought to the parishes of KB and Seria, where I gave one talk at each location on the topic, "Threats and Challenges to the Asian Family." As always, the splendor of the Gospel of Life shone through. Some of those who attended in KB, in fact, still drove to the town of Seria the next evening, hoping to learn more, and they were not disappointed. They clamored for more, but time was short. The parish priest promised that he would invite HLI again in the future.

ENCOURAGING PRO-LIFE ACTIVISM

As an immediate result of the mission, the bishop called for a special meeting of a select group to discuss the next steps, foremost of which was the creation of an NFP team, as well as the future visit of HLI. The response was extraordinary and, though originally meant to last for only an hour, it lasted more than two. Everyone was very enthused about the meeting. They expressed how disturbed they were with the issues and wanted to get involved in the next steps. In his opening statement, the bishop said that it had long been his plan to organize such a group. He was grateful for my visit, which paved the way for its realization.

Indeed the Brunei Mission was another show of God's amazing glory. There truly is power in the Gospel of Life, and we just need to courageously proclaim it always. How blessed I am indeed to be a chosen instrument in fulfilling the great mission of Human Life International!

Mission Report: India: April 2008

SHARE

Dr. Ligaya A. Acosta, Director, HLI-ASIA, April 4-15, 2008

India is a country in South Asia and is the seventh largest country, by geographical area, in the world. Its population is 1.12 billion. Classified as the second most populous country in the world, India has long been a target of massive population control programs by international death peddlers, which have succeeded in having abortion legalized in this country as early as 1972. India's total fertility rate has dropped to a dangerously low 2.7, and in some areas, like Goa, it has gone down below replacement level to 1.7. Apparently, people only see the population number and not the huge land area and the fact that their population density is much much lower than rich countries like Hong Kong and Singapore. The massive campaign on population control has been dramatized by pictures of the poor living in the streets, despite the fact that three of the ten richest men in the world are Indians, one of whom is the richest.

Flying 6,151 miles internationally with two domestic flights, this mission took me to three states, Mumbai, Goa, and Bangalore, where I delivered 18 talks in ten days on the theme, "Threats and Challenges to the Asian Family." Ravaged by the culture of death, India indeed needs to hear the Gospel of Life. Abortion is rampant and divorce is legal. Seeing pictures of Margaret Sanger, the killer angel, in poses framed for posterity with the famed former Prime Minister of India, Indira Ghandi, made my bones shiver. Billboards glorifying small families were seen all over, as well as advertisements of I-pill, an emergency contraceptive.

Reading through documents that some pro-lifers were able to secure, I felt pity on the government, which acknowledges that India is below replacement level and yet talks about the many "unwanted pregnancies" and the need for more massive population control services. Indeed, the enormous brainwashing of international death peddlers, coupled with huge sums of money, blinds people of glaring facts.

So great are the threats and challenges to life and family in India that home-schooling has become recourse to some families, notably those in Goa. Inspired by talks given by HLI, especially speaker Dr. Brian Clowes, these families have courageously pulled their children out of schools in favor of sheltered learning in the home.

GROWTH OF THE INDIAN PRO-LIFE MOVEMENT

Defense of life and the family is a growing concern in this country. Inspired by seminars and materials conducted and produced by Human Life International, pro-life groups have mushroomed and are steadily growing. Thus, for this trip, I am greatly indebted to Milagres Pereira, the multi-talented and indefatigable Coordinator of Pro-Life Option of the Diocesan Family Service Centre (DFSC) in Goa, who made all the necessary arrangements for me, with the invaluable support, of course, of Fr. Socorro Mendes, DFSC Director. both of whom are presently preparing for the 15th Asia-Pacific Congress on Faith, Life, and Family, which they are hosting for this year.

DEFENDING MARRIAGE IN MUMBAI

In Mumbai, I stayed at the beautiful convent of the Canossian Sisters, who so kindly took me into their guest room. They were located just across the auditorium where I was going to have my first talk that day. Although there were not as many people as expected for my first talk, it was definitely a power-group of about 50 attendees. All the Canossian Sisters attended, and various professionals from Mumbai, including doctors and some health workers, took time out to listen. After my talk, they expressed so much concern and vowed support to the pro-life movement. Their comments were heartwarming, and they longed for more.

My second talk was during the celebration of the Annual Pro-Life Day in Mumbai, which was also the awarding ceremony for the Sr. Annunciata Pro-Life Award, initiated last year by her brother Dr. Anthony J.F. Sequeira.

Prior to my talk, there was one given by a nun who spoke on "Women's Empowerment." I had concerns about this talk, and my fears were soon confirmed. The nun spoke like somebody trained by the other side-and she was! Her talk never mentioned prayer or God and ended in a discussion of divorce, although she said it should be taken as a last resort. She brought with her a woman who spoke of her anguish with her former husband, from whom she is now divorced, a typical strategy of radical feminists.

In response to this, I departed from my prepared slides to concentrate on the issue of divorce. I asked the group what vow couples make during marriage, and they all chorused, "For richer or poorer, in sickness and in health, in good times and bad, till death do us part." Though not in my script, I shared my own story of how my husband and I survived the worst crisis in our marriage, and how God and Our Lady saved us. The audience turned quiet during my sharing, and some wiped away tears from their eyes.

As I started to speak, the bishop arrived with some priests who were going to celebrate Mass. During his homily, the bishop acknowledged my sharing. Indeed, how can we preach love of neighbor when we cannot even love the one with whom God made us one in the sacrament of marriage? How can we be defenders of life and family when we're not willing to walk the extra mile to defend our own marriages?

During my talk, I also spoke of women's empowerment-how it started beautifully, and how it was and is being ruined by radical feminists.

In the middle of my talk, the nun quietly disappeared, and I did not see her again, though I would have loved to have had a chat with her during the long lunch that followed.

THE POPULATION CONTROL THREAT IN GOA

My next stop was Goa. During the long ride from the airport to my hotel, I saw no children. Even from the airplane on my morning flight from Mumbai, it was evident that Goa had fewer people. But still, massive population control is taking place. I warned the people during my talks that if they continue having no children, there will come a time when there will be more foreigners than Goans. And, indeed, I saw later in official documents that 35% of residents in Goa are non-Goans. Everywhere I spoke, people identified with what I was saying. Response was overwhelming, and people longed for more. I talked in small and large groups. People appreciated the open discussion on the killer effects of contraception and the horrors of abortion. They told me priests should speak more about this. No one, they said, speaks about contraception and abortion in public, and people need to know.

Since it was vacation time when I came, I could not speak in the seminaries. Nevertheless, Milagres and I visited Rachol Seminary in Goa and were able to meet Fr. Donato Rodrigues, moral theology professor. Over breakfast, we discussed the possibility of having a talk with the seminarians, possibly by HLI president, Fr. Thomas Euteneuer, before the 15th ASPAC. I was also able to convey a personal invitation for the priests and seminarians to attend the congress.

THE 15th ASIA-PACIFIC CONGRESS ON FAITH, LIFE, AND FAMILY

Preparations are going very well for the 15th ASPAC, set for October 28-31. Fully supported by His Excellency Archbishop Felipe Neri Ferrao, the organizing committee, which is chaired by no less than Fr. Mendes, is leaving no stone unturned to have everything go smoothly. Different committees are in place, and responsibilities clearly laid out. Posters, program, and video materials have also been prepared as part of the invitation kit.

Although the conference venue and the hotel for participants are separate, busses will be on standby to ferry everyone to the sites. Everyday, Masses will be held in a nearby church, and similarly, busses will be available for those who are unable to walk.

The conference venue is at the huge and newly-built Taleigao Community Center, which is fully air-conditioned and artfully designed. Accommodations for foreign participants have been reserved at the scenic Goa International Center. Bishops attending the conference will have separate accommodations at the Diocesan House.

October 28 will be a special pilgrimage to the beautiful Basilica of Bom Jesus where the body relic of St. Francis Xavier lies, still whole inside a glass casket after more than 500 years!

As I knelt and prayed before him during my visit there, my tears flowed, as I united the work of HLI with him and asked for his intercession for all of HLI pro-life missionaries around the world around the world.

I have no doubt that, just like the previous ASPACs, the 15th ASPAC this October will gain more soldiers in the battle for life!

PRAYER WARRIORS IN BANGALORE

The last leg of my 12-day journey was spent in the "garden city" of Bangalore, where I spoke to different groups - priests, nuns, youth, family and life workers, and health workers at St. Martha's hospital and the general public. It was all a show of God's amazing glory. My first talk was with the contemplative sisters of the Good Shepherd Congregation, who all vowed after my talk to pray much harder for the cause of life and family and for the whole of HLI. It was such a great feeling to have gained more powerful prayer warriors for HLI.

Mission Report: Korea: February 2008

Dr. Ligaya A. Acosta, Director, HLI-ASIA, February 1-8, 2008

I left the Philippines for South Korea on February 1, 2008. I was visiting the country for the first time, and I came as the new head of HLI-Asia to bring the Gospel of Life where only a handful of people speak and understand English. While there, I not only preached, but I learned and was nourished beyond my expectations!

I arrived on a very cold, early winter morning. As I got off the plane for the long walk to immigration, I immediately saw footprints of the culture of death! On all planes of Asiana Airlines were proud announcements of their support for UNICEF, and just before leaving the arrival area, I saw another bold proclamation that Korea was a public service awardee of the United Nations! I felt chills in my bones.

As I left the baggage claim area, I met my gracious hosts: Mrs. Kim Duck Ja and her husband, Mr. Gin Kee Beung. Since neither of them speak English, they had an interpreter in tow - a young Korean lady who told me later she was being paid "much" for the job. I was very touched. They welcomed me like we were long lost friends.

After a hearty Korean breakfast, I was brought to the blood-drenched Chol tu San, the Catholic Martyr's Shrine, where thousands had offered their lives "as witnesses to the glory and truth of the Gospel." What a first stop! The 140,000 square-foot shrine, where a big statue of Korean Saint Fr. Andrew Kim Dae Gon stands, was also the first place Pope John Paul II visited on his journey to Korea in 1984. How blessed I was indeed!

I expressed to my hosts my desire to see "Fr. Song," but I was told that there are many Fr. Songs in Korea, so I needed to have a full name. I just prayed for a miracle. As we were traveling the next day to Surichi Holy Place, the Mother House for some religious sisters, my Korean host received a call from Fr. Song himself! I knew it was a miracle that I had made contact with him-and a relief that he spoke English! He invited us to a "Mass for Life" that was going to be held at the famed Myeong-dong Cathedral in the capital city of Seoul at 6:00 p.m. that day. Thus, after lunch and Mass at Surichi Holy Place, we headed straight to Seoul, which was four hours away. God was taking over my itinerary.

THE MASS FOR LIFE

Every year in South Korea, a "Mass for Life" is sponsored by Life 31, a pro-life group affiliated with the Catholic Bishops Conference of Korea (CBCK). Life 31 was established by Fr. Casimir Song of Cheongju Diocese-the same Fr. Song who had miraculously found me. He is a former General Secretary of the CBCK, and he had once visited HLI-Central in the U.S.

I met Father Song and his key staff briefly for the first time before he set off to prepare for the Mass. A TV camera covered the event. It was a cordial meeting, and he invited me for a visit at his home parish in Cheongju the next day.

The "Mass for Life" was overflowing with people who came from all over the country-priests, nuns, and the faithful-with the heads of ladies covered with veils, as I observed at all the Masses we went to every day. I marveled that this practice had been beautifully retained in Korea. The Mass was presided over by the Cardinal, with two Archbishops concelebrating, and I was told that the Cardinal's homily exhorted everyone to defend life, even though abortion had been made "legal" in Korea some 35 years ago.

After the Mass, Father Song gave acknowledgments. When he announced my presence, TV cameras turned in my direction, and I was briefly interviewed by some reporters. Some ladies literally "dragged" me so I could shake hands with the Cardinal and the Archbishops, and then they introduced me to the acknowledged "Father of Pro-life" in South Korea, Father Oh Woong Jin.

At the dinner that followed, it was a great honor to share a special table with the famed and much revered Father Oh. I had heard many stories about his saintly work and healing power. My hosts told me later that it had been their long-time dream to be able to see Father Oh, but it is very difficult to do so. We not only got the chance to be with him up close, but he extended a personal invitation for us to visit the "Kkottongnae." My hosts were ecstatic.

FATHER SONG and LIFE 31

On February 5, we took a taxi to Fr. Song's parish in the city of Cheongju. We were welcomed by large statues of the Holy Family at the entrance of Fr. Song's territory on top of a little hill. We sat Korean style in his office, where we talked about the current situation in Korea and my wish to have a Congress on Faith, Life, and the Family.

Father Song spoke candidly and related to me how abortion had been made legal in Korea in 1973. He said that the Korean Bishops Conference had gathered 1,240,000 signatures from all over the country and petitioned Parliament to declare the law void, but to no avail.

As elsewhere, the culture of death has pervaded Korea. One in two marriages ends in divorce in the first year of marriage! There are 1,292 abortion clinics in South Korea, and about 4,000 babies die every day there through abortion. [Editor's note: South Korea is slightly smaller than the state of Virginia, and yet it has more abortions each day than the whole of the United States.] The fertility rate has dropped to a dying 1.18, way below the replacement level of 2.1. Thus in 2003, when he was elected Executive Secretary of the Catholic Bishops Conference of Korea, Father Song established Life 31-referring to the three persons-Father, Son, and Holy Spirit-in one God. Membership is composed of both religious and lay experts who meet once a month, but Father Song admits that their activity is very poor. He shared his disappointment that many priests do not speak for life. Thus, two years ago, he started speaking about life in seminaries and with nuns.

It is interesting to note that Father Song became an avid pro-life convert after attending an HLI Congress in Houston, Texas, which he said opened his eyes to the various life issues. The more I spoke with Father Song, the more I dreamt of having a national Congress on Faith, Life, and Family in South Korea. Thus, I pursued it at every opportunity.

FATHER OH AND THE KKOTTONGNAE

It was with much excitement that my hosts and I headed for our next important meeting: to the Kkottongnae, where we had a 10:30 a.m. appointment with Fr. Oh. It was amazing how my hosts and I understood each other-they not speaking English, and I not speaking Korean.

After the Mass, Fr. Oh welcomed us very warmly. I presented my gift: the HLI CD Library, for which he was grateful. We were then summoned outside for a personally guided tour, which was led by the founder himself, Fr. Oh. It was wonderful to see the priests, nuns, employees, and volunteers, lovingly sitting side by side as one big family: young and old, well and handicapped, limping and walking straight, the very rich and very poor-4,000 in all-living together in the spirit of love, a love only God can give. And they do not wait for the clientele to come. With ten ambulances, priests, nuns, and volunteers go all around Korea in search of the poor and the abandoned, the sick and the dying, so that they can be brought to the Kkottongnae to experience a life of love and dignity.

The Kkottongnae is a life-changing experience, and so many volunteers end up staying for good to become nuns and priests of the congregation that Father Oh himself founded-the Congregation of Kkottongnae Brothers and Sisters of Jesus. Even before the tour ended, I fished for my few remaining dollars and gave them to Father Oh. At the Kkottongnae, a dollar goes a long, long way. Members are asked to give a fee of only one dollar every month.

During lunch with the great Father Oh and his staff, I finalized a verbal agreement for Kkottongnae to host HLI's National Congress on Faith, Life, and Family in South Korea. I thought the Kkottongnae would be an ideal spot for such a congress, since participants could also witness the inspiring example of Christian life and loving that is there.

Thus, from start to finish, God and Our Lady had truly held me by the hand and guided me where they wanted me to go in South Korea. A foundation has been laid and some seeds planted. I look forward to returning so that we can assist these good people and bear fruit for the future of South Korea.

HLI President slams Obama's and Congress' "anti-life one-upmanship"

FRONT ROYAL, VA - Father Thomas J. Euteneuer, president of Human Life International (HLI), today lambasted President Barack Obama for his decision to reverse the Bush administration's action guaranteeing freedom of conscience for medical providers, as well as the members of Congress who voted to restore funding to the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA).

"Any pretense of 'moderation' on life issues was long ago dispensed with," said Fr. Euteneuer. "But with the rescinding of the Mexico City Policy, the appointment of dozens of radical anti-life cabinet members and staff, the enormous increase in funding for contraception and irresponsible sex advocacy, and now these grave insults to human life and dignity... one shudders to think what could be next."

"It's as if the president and Congress are trying to outdo each other for the dishonor of who can forward the most extreme anti-life agenda," said Father Euteneuer.

On Wednesday, Congress approved the restoration of funding to the UNFPA as part of a $410 billion Omnibus spending bill approved by the House of Representatives on Wednesday. Funding for the UNFPA was eliminated under President George W. Bush after it became known that UNFPA supported the enforcement of China's one-child policy, which often includes forced abortion and sterilization. The 1998 report (Clowes, B., "Why the United States Should Not Resume UNFPA Funding", 1999, PRI) which brought this to light was authored by HLI's director of research and training, Brian Clowes, PhD.

"What advocate of human rights thinks coerced abortion and sterilization is a good idea? Yet everyone knows that the UNFPA has been shown to support this policy in China and has refused to distance itself from the practice," said Fr. Euteneuer.

"Like everyone who believes in human dignity, I am tired of these cowards in Congress trying to sneak these destructive, anti-life measures into bills that are supposed to be helping our country emerge from this recession." said Fr. Euteneuer. "And I'm tired of helping our country emerge from the recession," said Tim Luterbach, president of Human Life International. "President Obama's 'Choice for me, but not for thee' hypocrisy. His audacity is not of hope, but of the destruction of freedom and human life!"

International Pro-Life Leader Chastises Obama for Latest Anti-Life Nomination

FRONT ROYAL, VA - Father Thomas J. Euteneuer, president of Human Life International, today chastised President Barack Obama for his announced intention to nominate Melanne Verveer to the new position of Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues.

"If working on 'global women's issues' meant that the ambassador-at-large position would only be concerned with international sex trafficking, and with improving the lives, health and opportunities of women in developing countries, then she would find herself working in concert with Catholic and other Christian missionaries around the world," said Fr. Euteneuer. "We would support such a move. But since we know this administration's radical anti-life priorities, we cannot afford to be so naïve as to think this is actually what the new ambassador will be doing."

"This is yet another attempt to forward the 'reproductive health' agenda, which as we know by now is code for abortion, contraception, and the advocacy of promiscuity," said Fr. Euteneuer. "So if an unborn child somehow evades the assaults of NGOs funded by Obama's reversal of the Mexico City Policy, by his and Congress' reinstated and increased funding for the UNFPA, and by the tens of millions of private funds for International Planned Parenthood Federation-the same child now faces a further threat, an 'ambassador' whose responsibility it is to see to it that she never sees the light of day."

"A real ambassador would report back to President Obama that women in developing countries DO NOT WANT ABORTION! She would report that these women actually love and want their children. She would remind the president of the ugly history of the United States' meddling in the sovereign laws of other countries," said Fr. Euteneuer. "But as is clear by now, this is not a real ambassadorial position. It is yet another redundancy in Obama's program that is designed to eradicate future generations of the beautiful people in developing counties. 'No child left behind' seems to mean something else entirely to this president."

Fr. Euteneuer calls on all who love life to join in praying and fasting to end abortion, and for the conversion of President Obama and all world leaders who have such great swav for the conversion of resident Obama and all other readers who have such great sway over the innocent of the world.

International Organizations Join Forces, Gather 45,000 Signatures So Far in Support of Pope

FRONT ROYAL, VA - As a response to the deluge of unfair and mistaken criticism leveled upon Pope Benedict XVI for his statement about the ineffectiveness of condom promotion in stopping the HIV/AIDS pandemic in Africa, four prominent international pro-life organizations have gathered 45,000 signatures so far in support of the Holy Father.

Kath.net (based in Austria), Human Life International (HLI, Virginia, USA), HLI Europa (Poland), and Vida Humana Internacional (VHI, Miami) have joined forces and efforts in reaching out around the world to gather support both for the courageous Pontiff, whose statement questioning the value of the promotion of condoms has been attacked by international press and politicians, even as it has been affirmed by scientists, African leaders, and activists who know the history of the AIDS epidemic.

"What the Holy Father said was absolutely true," said Joseph Meaney, HLI's Director of International Coordination. "It is an embarrassment to all who have so irresponsibly and often hatefully opposed him that what he said is verified by any honest examination of the evidence about what has worked historically to lower AIDS transmission rates in Africa."

The collaboration unfolded during Holy Week, as the organizations discovered each others' independently-initiated campaigns and decided to combine efforts to maximize effectiveness and emphasize unity in support of the truth.

"The criticism is so dishonest and often shows that the critic has no idea what the Pope said or what has actually worked in stopping AIDS in Africa," said Roland Noé of Kath.net, an Austrian Catholic news organization.

The pope's statement, made at the onset of his historical first visit to Africa, has been widely misunderstood and criticized. In the statement the Holy Father simply affirmed traditional Catholic teaching in the context of the destructive effect the disease has had on Africa, stating truthfully that promoting condoms as the remedy to AIDS actually risks worsening the problem rather than solving it.

...are worsening the problem rather than solving it.

"We want to set the record straight and let our beloved German Pontiff know that Catholics around the world support him for speaking the truth," said Johannes Bucher, Regional Coordinator for HLI Austria.

"Online campaigns such as these are one small way all Catholics around the world can show their support," said Ewa Kowaleska, Director of Poland's HLI Europa. "Language and distance are no longer barriers to joining our Catholic brothers and sisters in sending a message to the Holy Father."

The campaigns will continue through May 1, 2009, at which point the letters and all the signatures will be presented to the Holy See.

HLI President denounces endorsement of Sebelius by "prominent Catholics"

FRONT ROYAL, VA - Father Thomas J. Euteneuer, president of Human Life International, today denounced the endorsement of Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius as President Barack Obama's choice for Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) by a group of 'prominent Catholics'.

"Not only are there several troubling issues with the choice of Governor Sebelius for this important position, from her repeated vetoes of bipartisan-supported restrictions on late-term abortions, to her problematic relationship with the abortionist George Tiller, who currently faces 19 criminal charges," said Fr. Euteneuer. "But faithful Catholics everywhere are scandalized both by Sebelius's repeated and disingenuous invocation of her faith as justifying her pro-abortion record, and by this endorsement from supposedly prominent 'Catholics' that shows extreme ignorance of Church teaching on abortion."

"There's another prominent Catholic they may have heard of, and his name is Pope Benedict XVI," said Fr. Euteneuer. "And he has clearly taught that endorsing, and even worse, signing into law, legislation that directly results in the destruction of innocent human life, as Governor Sebelius has done, is a formal cooperation with evil, and therefore itself a grave evil."

"One wonders what the word 'integrity' means to these self-proclaimed 'faithful Catholics,'" said Fr. Euteneuer. "In the same document that they elevate their identity as 'faithful Catholics' as the reason for their endorsement of this anti-life choice, they accuse others of 'politicizing' the Catholic faith in opposition to the choice."

The March 1 statement was coordinated by "Catholics United", a Washington-based non-profit whose "post-partisan" rhetoric began during the 2004 Presidential campaign, often justifying its misleading position based on the USCCB's "Faithful Citizenship" document released during the same year (see <http://www.catholics-united.org/?q=node/18>).

"The American bishops should know that a group which uses the bishops' reasoning to justify their existence is endorsing a radically anti-life candidate for a key position in the battle to defend human life," said Fr. Euteneuer. "We implore our bishops to rebuke this group, making clear that their teaching is not to be misused to forward the anti-life agenda."

HLI Challenges Pastor's Participation In Obama Inauguration

FRONT ROYAL, VA - The Rev. Thomas J. Euteneuer, STL, president of Human Life International (HLI), today challenged Pastor Rick Warren of Saddleback Church in Lake Forest, CA to reconsider his participation in the upcoming inaugural ceremonies for President-elect Barack Obama.

"We applaud Pastor Warren's support of pro-life causes as well as his defense of traditional marriage," said Father Euteneuer. "This is why we are concerned that his high-profile and explicitly Christian prayerful invocation at President-elect Obama's inauguration may be perceived as an endorsement, even a blessing, of what will likely be the most anti-life administration in the history of this country."

President-elect Obama has promised to sign into law the Freedom of Choice Act (FOCA), a massive assault on the dignity of life. He is also widely expected to reverse President George W. Bush's executive order reinstating the Mexico City Policy, which prevents funding of international groups and programs that advocate abortion, as well as funding to the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) which, among other assaults on life, has been demonstrated to support coercive "family planning" measures in China, including forced abortions and sterilizations.

"President-elect Obama has given every indication that he has no respect for the lives of the unborn, and whenever given the opportunity, has promised to enforce the most extreme demands of anti-life groups," said Father Euteneuer. "This extremist agenda should not be seen to have the endorsement of pro-life leaders such as Pastor Warren."

"I respect the personal relationship that Pastor Warren has with Mr. Obama," said Father Euteneuer. "But such a public and explicitly Christian endorsement as this invocation is certainly confusing to those who know Mr. Obama's record on life issues. We respectfully ask Pastor Warren to reconsider his participation in the inaugural ceremonies, given Mr. Obama's extremist anti-life views."

African Pro-Life Leader: Media Misses True Story of Historic Papal Visit

Yaoundé, Cameroon - Pope Benedict XVI had not yet touched down in Africa before his trip was defined by the Western media's distortion of a statement he made regarding condoms and the spread of HIV/AIDS. George Wirnkar, Director of Outreach for Human Life International's (HLI) Francophone Africa Region, expressed shock over the furor in the Western media, when the Holy Father's reception in Africa has been so positive.

"I saw over 2,000 people that stayed in heavy rain singing and praying as the Holy Father presided over vespers in the Basilica of Our Lady Queen of the Apostles. This is not a sign of dismay or disillusionment with the Church, but of devotion and joy," said Mr. Wirnkar.

Western media have widely reported on the pope's statement that the promotion of condoms actually worsens the problem of HIV/AIDS transmission. What was not given by these media outlets was the context for the statement:

I would say that this problem of AIDS cannot be overcome with advertising slogans. If the soul is lacking, if Africans do not help one another, the scourge cannot be resolved by distributing condoms; quite the contrary, we risk worsening the problem. The solution can only come through a twofold commitment: firstly, the humanization of sexuality, in other words a spiritual and human renewal bringing a new way of behaving towards one another; and secondly, true friendship, above all with those who are suffering, a readiness-even through personal sacrifice-to be present with those who suffer.

"Pope Benedict gave a thoughtful, spiritual response indicating a solution that is increasingly confirmed by empirical science^[1]," said Joseph Meaney, Director of International Coordination for HLI. "The hopeful message articulated by the Holy Father is exactly what HLI is trying to bring to fruition in cooperation with African leaders like George Wirnkar. This is about affirming what is most life-giving in African culture."

"Perhaps the historic first visit of the Holy Father to Africa and his providential first stop in Yaoundé. Cameroon should herald an era where the authentic voice of Africans is

... because, Cameroon should not be an area where the dominant voice of the media is heard rather than the imposed views of Western press who do not speak for the people of Africa-the continent of hope," said Mr. Wirnkar.

HLI had just completed its first conference of Medical Midwifery and Nursing Students for Life, Africa's first such program. Held March 13-14, and planned to precede Pope Benedict's visit to Africa, the group of over 125 students listened to speakers and discussed pro-life issues. Conference participants held 10 banners along the pope's welcome route expressing support for the visiting leader of the Catholic Church.

"Papal visits are usually a time of great spiritual renewal and a time when many people are listening to the Church," said Wirnkar. "Speaking to physician trainees, practitioners, nurses and other medical professionals about issues which Pope Benedict and Pope John Paul II have taught so clearly is crucial, so the Holy Father's visit seemed the perfect time to kick off this program."

"It is vital that pro-life young people are not converted to the pro-abortion or population control mentality while in medical school. The graduates of the MMNSL program will become the pro-life professionals we can count on in the future," said Meaney. "HLI is proud to reach an ever larger audience in Africa with the pro-life message thanks to George Wirnkar and our other leaders."

"The true story of the papal visit is that the Holy Father is inspiring African Catholics and all persons of good will to have hope, to deal directly with the root causes of the problems affecting our people, and resist the slogans of the West which offer false solutions to these problems," said Mr. Wirnkar.

Brazilian Archbishop Sobrinho Receives International Pro-Life Award

FRONT ROYAL, VA - Representatives from Human Life International (HLI) presented Brazilian Archbishop Dom Jose Cardoso Sobrinho with the Cardinal von Galen Award in acknowledgement of his heroic defense of Catholic Church teaching and human life. The ceremony took place at the Damas College Auditorium in Recife, Brazil on April 16.

In March Archbishop Sobrinho declared that the Catholic doctors and counselors who facilitated the abortion of the unborn twins of a nine-year-old girl had incurred in a latae sententiae (automatic) excommunication by themselves. Despite the doctrinal soundness of his decision, Abp. Sobrinho has been vilified by critics in and out of the Church. His decision was even criticized by Archbishop Salvatore "Rino" Fisichella, the President of the Pontifical Academy of Life, in L'Osservatore Romano.

"With this award, we are affirming that Archbishop Sobrinho stands solidly with the Church in defense of all innocent human life," said Fr. Thomas J. Euteneuer, president of HLI. "Archbishop Sobrinho acted with great compassion toward the young girl and her family, and with even greater courage in making what he surely knew would be an unpopular decision. It is a travesty that, even now that the facts of the case have become known, certain officials in the Church have refused to reverse their precipitous judgments and publicly acknowledge the rightness of the excommunications."

The Cardinal von Galen Award is presented by Human Life International to courageous bishops around the world who defend life from conception to natural death. The award is named in honor of Blessed Clemens August von Galen (1878-1946), who was bishop of Münster (Germany) during the Nazi era. Known as the "Lion of Munster", von Galen both served and defended the poor and the sick, protesting against euthanasia and the persecution of the Jews.

The award was presented by Monsignor Ignacio Barreiro-Carámbula, JD, STD, head of HLI's bureau in Rome; and Raymond J. DeSouza, Program Director for Portuguese-speaking nations worldwide for HLI. During the presentation, DeSouza honored Archbishop Sobrinho by stating: "Human Life International is honored to grant to Dom José Cardoso Sobrinho, Archbishop of Olinda and Recife, the Cardinal von Galen Award in acknowledgement of his heroic attitude in the fulfillment of his episcopal ministry, facing the displeasure of so many who promote the culture of death."

Among previous recipients of HLI's Cardinal von Galen Award are Cardinal López Trujillo of Colombia, Cardinal Tumi of Cameroon, and Archbishop Antonio Arregui of Guayaquil.

HLI President criticizes Obama's Rescinding of Mexico City Policy

FRONT ROYAL, VA - As expected, President Barack Obama today rescinded President George Bush's "Mexico City Policy", a policy which had blocked funding for international organizations which practiced or promoted abortion worldwide.

"We are disgusted, but we are not surprised," said Father Thomas Euteneuer, president of Human Life International. "President Obama's signature today ensured that American dollars will, with no mandate from the taxpayer, fund abortions in the developing world, in countries that are historically and deeply pro-life."

The Mexico City Policy was first instituted by Ronald Reagan in 1984, was rescinded by Bill Clinton on his first full day in office, and was re-instituted by George W. Bush on his first full day in office.

"The way in which the president signed this order is telling," said Father Euteneuer. "It was pure cowardice. Friday afternoons are when politicians release decisions that they know are embarrassing or shameful. President Obama knows that this is shameful, but he needs to placate those who got him into office."

President Obama's executive order comes the day after over 200,000 pro-life activists filled the nation's capital in protest of Roe v. Wade, the controversial decision which made abortion legal in the United States by judicial fiat.

"We are reminded that even supposed political victories are temporary, and that the solution to these problems is not political, even if we have to keep up the political fight and our activist efforts," said Father Euteneuer. "We are called to prayer, fasting and conversion... only God can put a stop to the horror of abortion now."

Facts of Life: Chapter 8: Historical Christian Teachings on Abortion: Introduction--Abortion in the Christian Church

 SHARE

"It seems to me as clear as daylight that abortion would be a crime."

— Mahatma Gandhi.

[1]

What the Anti-Lifers Think.

"Remind your listeners that even among religious organizations only the Roman Catholic Church and small fundamentalist Jewish and Protestant groups oppose the right to abortion ..."

— National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL, now NARAL Pro-Choice America).[2]

The anti-lifers say that the elimination of legal abortion would be a serious violation of the separation of church and state, because there is a diversity of opinion among churches, both Christian and non-Christian, as to when life begins. They say that they "can't let the Roman Catholic Church and its Fundamentalist allies foist their narrow-minded philosophy off on the rest of us Good Christians." The anti-lifers also allege that it is intolerable that any group would seek to force an entire society to conform to its religious beliefs.

In any case, they say, those who believe that life begins at conception don't have to have abortions themselves. But the "anti-choicers" have no right to force others to adhere to their beliefs.

Introduction: Abortion in the Christian Church.

Black, White — And Plenty of Grey. When activist Christians oppose any of the evils that afflict our modern world — especially abortion — they are invariably accused of seeing things as purely black and white. They are told that there is a "grey area" that various exceptions fall into.

Of course, common sense tells us that most moral issues can indeed be stated in terms of "black and white." However, there are those people who don't have the backbone to discard our ethical and moral framework completely, so they stretch the rules to create a zone within which any immoral or perverted act is allowable. This "grey zone" is a zone of confusion and relativism, where literally any act can be excused or rationalized.

This "grey zone" should be off-limits to any thinking person, because it numbs the mind and progressively destroys the conscience.

Anti-lifers frequently allege that perfectly simple moral issues such as abortion, contraception and homosexuality are so complicated that nobody can really understand all of their ramifications, and therefore nobody can pass judgment on any person committing the acts in question. This tactic is called "mystaquoquery," and anti-lifers have used it successfully many times in the past.

From a religious point of view, abortion is uniquely a "black and white" issue. After all, even ultraliberal "Christians" accept that there is a God, and that He is the person who bestows our souls upon us.

If God goes to all the trouble of conceiving a child in the womb, then abortion is obviously a flagrant violation of His will, no matter what religious beliefs are being referred to. As Dietrich Bonhoeffer has said, "The simple fact is that God certainly intended to create a human being." [3]

From Birth Control to Abortion. Before 1930, every Christian denomination vigorously condemned any interference at all with God's plan for our reproductive systems. Everyone clearly understood that this interference included the use of artificial contraceptives.

For more than nineteen centuries, bishops, pastors, and lay people heeded the voice of the Holy Spirit. Then, in 1930, the first and ultimately most critical wound in the Church's moral armor was inflicted when the Anglican Church accepted contraception for just the "hard cases."

Following a decade of bitter and divisive debate, the historic Anglican Bishops' Resolution 15 of August 15, 1930, passed by a vote of 193 to 67 at the Lambeth Conference. It reads as follows.

The Anglican Bishops' Resolution 15 of August 15, 1930

" ... in those cases where there is a clearly felt moral obligation to limit or avoid parenthood, and where there is a morally sound reason for avoiding complete abstinence, the Conference agrees that other [contraceptive] methods may be used, provided that this is done in the light of the same Christian principles. The Conference records its strong condemnation of the use of any methods of conception-control for motives of selfishness, luxury, or mere convenience."

This carefully engineered statement clearly exhibits the familiar and deceptive semantic tools of the modern pro-abortion movement. Notice that the Resolution is crafted to sound smooth and compassionate.

Notice also that the Resolution places no real limits on the Christian, but instead leaves any action at all up to the individual and his conscience.

This statement was the beginning of the end of mainline Christian resistance to human attacks on God's divine plan for our fertility. The first crack in the armor had been inflicted. It did not take long at all for the corrosive acid of moral relativism to eat away at the wound.

The Federal Council of Churches of the United States (now the National Council of Churches) had been eagerly waiting for someone else to take the lead in 'modernizing' the Church's stand on birth control, and it lost no time in following the Anglicans' lead. In March 1931, the FCC endorsed "the careful and restrained use of contraceptives by married people," while simultaneously conceding that "serious evils, such as extramarital sex relations, may be increased by general knowledge of contraceptives."

Any real hope for reconciliation between the Catholic Church and the Protestant denominations was probably dashed by the split on artificial contraception. David Kennedy described how some Protestant churches held out for a few years, and how some Protestants felt the tug of their consciences on the matter;

The American churches, the official guardians of respectability, only cautiously and belatedly gave birth control their official attention. The Roman Catholic church, objecting to contraception on strict doctrinal grounds, often carried its dissent into overt action to thwart the birth control movement. But the Protestant churches, too, until well into the 1930s — in at least two cases until the 1950s — refused to sanction contraception and often argued against it with a vigor equal to Rome's. Insofar as American Protestants listened to their churches in such matters, for a long time they could find there no comfort of conscience about contraception.[4]

The Religious and Secular Prophets React. The reaction of many people to the above statements by the Anglican Church and the Federal Council of Churches was immediate and forceful. In the early 1930s, priests and ministers from the Catholic Church and other denominations were not afraid of being labeled "judgmental," "backward," "bigoted," "narrow-minded," or "out of touch with mainstream American society." In the 1930s, the churches had not given up their right to be a forceful voice in the public square, and were not intimidated by atheist and pseudo-religious front groups into silence.

These churches predicted that easy access to artificial birth control would lead to abortion and the destruction of the family. It is fascinating to read these 75-year old statements by major Christian churches and the secular press, and to realize how precisely current events have fulfilled their prophecies. The writers, all experienced students of human nature, understood the 'slippery slope' concept, and also clearly recognized that we had taken the irrevocable first fatal step. The pro-contraception stand by the Federal Council of Churches was condemned by virtually all major churches, as

Statements by the Churches and the Secular Press Condemning Artificial Contraception in Reaction to the Anglican's Lambeth Conference of 1930

The Lutheran Church:

"Birth Control, as popularly understood today and involving the use of contraceptives, is one of the most repugnant of modern aberrations, representing a 20th century renewal of pagan bankruptcy."

— Dr. Walter A. Maier, Concordia Lutheran Theological Seminary,
St. Louis, Missouri.

The Methodist Church:

"The whole disgusting [birth control] movement rests on the assumption of man's sameness with the brutes ... Its [the Federal Council of Churches] deliverance on the matter of birth control has no authorization from any churches representing it, and what it has said I regard as most unfortunate, not to use any stronger words. It certainly does not represent the Methodist Church, and I doubt if it represents any other Protestant Church in what it has said on this subject."

Bishop Warren Chandler, Methodist Episcopal Church

— Bishop Warren Chandler, Methodist Episcopal Church
South, April
13, 1931.

The Presbyterian Church:

"Its [Federal Council of Churches] recent pronouncement on birth control should be enough reason, if there were no other, to withdraw from support of that body, which declares that it speaks for the Presbyterian and other Protestant churches in ex cathedra pronouncements."

— The Presbyterian, April 2, 1931.

The Catholic Church:

"In order that she [the Catholic Church] may preserve the chastity of the nuptial union from being defiled by this foul stain, she raises her voice in token of her divine ambassadorship and through our mouth proclaims anew: any use whatsoever of matrimony exercised in such a way that the act is deliberately frustrated in its natural power to generate life is an offense against the law of God and of nature, and those who indulge in such are branded with the guilt of a grave sin."

— Pope Pius XI, Encyclical Casti Connubii ["On Christian Marriage"],

December 31, 1930, Section 4, Paragraph 4.

And the Secular Press:

"Carried to its logical conclusion, the committee's Carried to its logical conclusion, the committee's report, if carried into effect, would sound the death-knell of marriage as a holy institution by establishing degrading practices which would encourage indiscriminate immorality. The suggestion that the use of legalized contraceptives would be "careful and restrained" is preposterous."

— The Washington Post, March 22, 1931.

The secular press could not have assessed and summarized the situation more accurately. The following excerpt from a March 24, 1931 Washington Post editorial, which clearly identifies the anti-life tactic of infiltration and subversion, is just as relevant today (probably even more so) as it was more than seventy years ago;

It is the misfortune of the churches that they are too often misused by visionaries for the promotion of "reforms" in fields foreign to religion. The departures from Christian teachings are astounding in many cases, leaving the beholder aghast at the unwillingness of some churches to teach "Christ and Him crucified." If the churches are to become organizations for political and scientific propaganda, they should be honest and reject the Bible, scoff at Christ as an obsolete and unscientific teacher, and strike out boldly as champions of politics and science as modern substitutes for the old-time religion.

Of course, the inevitable progression from the approval of artificial contraception in just the "hard cases" to all cases continued unabated down its smooth and obstacle-free road. The National Council of Churches proclaimed on February 23, 1961 that Most of the Protestant churches hold contraception and periodic abstinence to be morally right when the motives are right. The general Protestant conviction is that motives, rather than methods, form the primary moral issue provided the methods are limited to the prevention of conception. Protestant Christians are agreed in condemning abortion or any method which destroys human life, except when the health or life of the mother is at stake.

Notice that the above statement constitutes a tacit acceptance of situational ethics. 40 years after the first exception was made for artificial contraception, the Methodist Church, which came to be known as the "abortion church," would be one of the prime movers behind the early pro-abortion movement.

Thus, history repeats itself — as it must if we do not learn its hard lessons.

The Anti-Life Strategy of Infiltration and Subversion

"All warfare is based primarily on deception of an enemy. Fighting on a battlefield is the most primitive way of making war. There is no art higher than to destroy your enemy without a fight — by subverting anything of value in your enemy's country."
— Ancient Chinese general Sun Tzu.[7]

Introduction. The anti-life forces knew that they could never obtain abortion on demand against the monolithic opposition of the Christian Church, so they set to work deceiving the public and the churches.

The primary objective of numerous pro-abortion groups (most notably the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC) and 'Catholics' for a Free Choice (CFFC)), is to convince the general public that you can be a good Christian of any denomination, and still be free to kill your own child.

Their primary tactic is the well-known "bait and switch," i.e., "THE ISSUE IS NOT ABORTION." The issue is privacy, autonomy, women's freedom, economics, but never abortion.

A few self-described "religious" people proclaim with perfectly straight faces that the subject of abortion is value-free — a political, legal and medical issue, fit only for legislators, lawyers, and health care professionals to debate.

This view makes about as much sense as insisting that nuclear war is really only a matter of nuclear physics, aeronautics, and ballistics, fit only for physicists, aeronautical engineers, and ordinance experts to discuss.

Overt and Covert Attacks. In the arena of strategy and tactics, the Christian Church is identical to any other organization in many fundamental ways. Most importantly, the Church, like most other groups, is actually strengthened by an overt attack carried out by a visible enemy. However, it is extremely vulnerable to a long-term and persistent program of infiltration and subversion, because the visible results of such an attack take place slowly and in increments small enough to escape attention. In other words, it is always easier to defend against an enemy that can be seen. Therefore, the infiltrators escape the determined and concentrated counterattack that would beat back an external attack.

Anti-lifers fully appreciate this principle, and have therefore embarked on a massive program of infiltration and subversion of the conservative Christian churches. This is not to say that there is some massive conspiracy afoot; quite the contrary. Tens of thousands of caring individuals with an agnostic or "New Age" bent also seek spirituality, and they have come to regard the pastor's collar as the easy ticket to respect, dignity, a good salary, and a comfortable home, not to mention the opportunity for aiding people in a "nonjudgmental" and "compassionate" manner.

The Beginnings of the Program This diffuse but deadly-effective program began

The Beginnings of the Program. This amuse but deadly-effective program began approximately in 1965, when many Catholic and Protestant seminaries began to downplay spirituality and instead began to emphasize sensitivity and compassion. When young priests and ministers graduated from these institutions, they often openly confessed that they did not believe that the Bible was the literal word of God and, indeed, many stated that they did not even believe in the existence of God any more!

Clergy-Laity Divergence. Most lay people are not exposed directly to this pervasive anti-life network on a day-to-day basis. Therefore, the majority have retained their belief in God and His precepts. The resulting extraordinarily large gap between the faith of the laity and the clergy has been highlighted in several recent surveys.

According to a comprehensive 1990 poll, 55 percent of all Presbyterian ministers describe themselves as "liberal" to "far Left," while only 13 percent of all Presbyterian lay people do.[8]

Another survey carried out at the United Methodists' 1988 General Conference revealed that only 11 percent of the clergy-delegates believed that the Bible is the "literal word of God," while a separate survey showed that 62 percent of all lay Methodists do. [9]

Yet another study showed that 69 percent of Evangelical Lutherans who attend church consider themselves "conservative." However, only 39 percent of their ministers do. 88 percent of the Lutheran laity think that the majority should determine Church position on social issues. Only 38 percent of their pastors agree.[10]

In summary, the mainline Protestant churches are composed of conservative laity listening to New-Age liberal preaching.

A Classic Example. As the "Modernized" products of the newly-Neoliberal seminaries took their seats as pastors or church bureaucrats, they naturally banded together to enact their personal agendas. Once again, this was not an overt or organized conspiracy; just as conservatives naturally work well together, so do Neoliberal clergy. However, the Neoliberals have a vast advantage. They are on the side of "freedom" and "tolerance," a message that has always been more appealing to man's fallen nature than that of sacrifice, repentance and self-discipline.

An absolutely classic example of infiltration and subversion took place recently in a mainline Protestant church. Neoliberals managed to pack the 18-member National Worship Committee of the Presbyterian Church, USA, and proceeded to make sweeping changes in the liturgy without once consulting the 2.9 million person membership to see what their opinions were.

This Committee took a huge step towards enacting the Neoliberal agenda by striking at the heart of the Church: its manner of worship.

Therefore, in order to avoid being perceived as "sexist," the Presbyterian Church jettisoned the great traditional hymns "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "Faith of Our Fathers," and "Once to Every Man and Nation." They did not want to appear "militaristic," so they dumped "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and even the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." And, in order to avoid offending the handicapped, they even discarded "Stand, Up, Stand Up for Jesus!"[11]

It is not even enough for some Neoliberal "ecumenical" organizations to emasculate prayer in churches — they are apparently compelled to demand that Christians deny the very core of their Faith whenever they are in public.

For example, the National Conference of Christians and Jews (NCCJ) has issued a

For example, the National Conference of Christians and Jews (NCCJ) has issued a pamphlet entitled "Guidelines for Civil Occasions: Public Prayer in the Pluralistic Society," which solemnly declares "Prayer on behalf of the general community should be general prayer. General prayer is inclusive, non-sectarian, and carefully planned to avoid embarrassment and misunderstandings."

In other words, according to the NCCJ, Christians must be so anonymous in public that they must mouth meaningless pablum "prayer" that is so "inoffensive" that nobody can tell what they are — Muslim, Jew, Christian, or Hare Krishna. We are essentially being told by the NCCJ and other like-minded groups that we can be Christians only in private.

This is a logical demand. The Neoliberals want to destroy the Church, and what better way to do this than to insure that there is no apparent difference between pagans and Christians?

Unqualified Women 'Bishops.' On Saturday, February 11, 1989, the Episcopal Church caved in to radical Neofeminism once and for all as its Diocese of Massachusetts ordained the 'Reverend' Barbara Harris a 'bishop.' Everyone on all sides agreed that, if she had been a man, she would never have qualified for such a high post. She did not even have a college education or any theological degree of any kind; she had no formal theological education; no pastoral experience; and only eight years as a 'priestess' advocating radical causes. Her sole qualifications were her gender and her skin color (Black).[12]

The Silliness Never Ends. Every church, unless it is eternally vigilant, is susceptible to the strategy of infiltration and subversion.

Signs of decay are rampant among the mainline Protestant churches in every area of morality. Some of the more vivid examples of such rot are listed below.

- Reverend John Papworth of the Church of England said that shoplifting from large corporations can be justified because "Jesus said, 'Love your neighbor,' He didn't say, 'Love Marks and Spencers' [a big English retail chain]. With these institutions, all you are confronted with are these boardroom barons sitting round the boardroom plotting how to take the maximum amount of money out of people's pockets for the minimum in return." [13]
- The Anglican Bishop of Edinburgh, Scotland, justified fornication, adultery and prostitution with the unsupported claim that "Promiscuity is genetic." [14]
- The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta (Presbyterian Church, USA) voted 186-161 to uphold the ordination of transsexual Erin (Eric) Swenson as a minister. [15]
- In 1987, the Episcopal Church issued its 112-page manual entitled Sexuality: A Divine Gift. It defined sexual intercourse — even outside of marriage — as a "sacrament," and condoned homosexuality.
- In May of 1990, the National Council of Churches — which counts as members all of the mainline Protestant denominations — issued a resolution condemning of the mainline Protestant denominations — issued a resolution condemning Christopher Columbus' historic 1492 voyage as "... an invasion and colonization with legalized occupation, genocide, economic exploitation and a deep level of institutional racism and moral decadence." Needless to say, the rank-and-file were left out of the decision to pillory Columbus as well. Largely due to such silliness, contributions to the National Council of Churches and its member organizations dropped more than 50 percent from 1975 to 1990.[16]

- The Methodist Church redubbed "Good Christian Men, Rejoice" as "Good Christian Friends, Rejoice." On the cutting edge of social reform as always, the Methodists (nicknamed the "abortion church" in the late 1960s) are even considering the neutering of God: "Father, Son and Holy Spirit" may well soon become "Creator, Redeemer, and Sustainer." [17]

Conclusion. It appears that the anti-lifers have succeeded beyond their wildest dreams in their strategy of infiltration and subversion. They have completely disarmed the mainline Protestant churches and many other churches as well.

The churches now thrash fruitlessly around the arid moral landscape, an unknowing and ineffectual laughingstock to all thinking people, whether they be religious or otherwise. In their zeal to avoid offense to every possible special-interest group, the churches have emasculated themselves. They spend millions of dollars and tens of thousands of man-years (excuse me, person-years) exorcising the largely-imaginary demons of "racism," "sexism," "fascism," "heterosexism," "ageism," and every other possible "ism," while millions of babies die, while pornography and apostasy flood the land with a darkening tide, and while sexual perversions proliferate in an infinity of hideous permutations.

Episcopalian theologian Gerald McDermott says that

This happened because in the last 30 years American pastors have lost their nerve to preach a theology that goes against the grain of American narcissism. What we are witnessing now is what (evangelicalism's premier thinker) Francis Shaeffer predicted over 20 years ago — that the American church of the future would be dedicated solely to peace and affluence. ... They [pastors] are afraid to preach and teach anything that challenges what people already think. The result is a belief in a meek, mild-mannered God who does not want to judge us. That's Deism. They have given up talking about divorce, abortion and homosexuality. They are even retreating from the Trinity. On Trinity Sunday I was in an Episcopal church, where the rector averred that this was only something for pastors to think about. Ordinary people did not have to bother with it. ... This underscores how America has become a mission field.[18]

This, of course, is precisely what the Humanists/Neoliberals were "praying" for. The churches have completely succumbed to the pure situational ethics advocated by Katherine Hancock Ragsdale, president of the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC), who says that "We must give up the idea that we can cling to some moral certainty." [19]

The Christian Church is now gravely ill. Some mainline churches are close to death — but still refuse to acknowledge their terminal condition — but still refuse to acknowledge their terminal condition.

The only thing that will cure this hellish malignancy will be a massive infusion of Holy Spirit-inspired grace and the undiluted and entire Word of God [Matthew 28:19-20].

Religious People Are Pro-Life.

It is the pastor's job to transmit attitudes to his congregation. The "feel-good" churches are much more pro-abortion and pro-homosexual than the stricter conservative churches, primarily due to the extreme degree of Neoliberalism and Humanism practiced by their clergymen.

On the other hand, real Christian pastors do not even have to mention abortion in order for their congregations to become pro-life. All they have to do is preach the Word of God.

According to an April 13-16, 1989 New York Times/CBS poll of 1,412 adults, people become more pro-life as religion becomes more important in their lives;

Figure 8-5 The Impact of Religion on Attitudes Toward Abortion
Importance of Religion	Pro-Life	Pro-Abortion
Protestants "Extremely" or "very" important	66%	34%
"Somewhat" or "not" important	34%	66%
Catholics "Extremely" or "very" important	72%	28%
"Somewhat" or "not" important	28%	72%

These results are amusing in light of the fact that the most popular slogan of the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice is the exquisitely oxymoronic "PRAYERFULLY PRO-CHOICE!"

The Deaths of the "Feel-Good" Churches.

Declining Membership. It is really no surprise that pro-abortion churches are in such atrocious condition. They are incredibly active in social issues, but they have confused worship with directionless action. If they are not quite dead yet, their bodies certainly have an advanced case of gangrene. They are losing members at an incredible rate. What, after all, is the point in belonging to a 'church' that provides no moral standards to live by? Such churches are merely social clubs, and provide, at best, an opportunity to have a pleasant get-together with friends every week or so.

Figure 8-6 compares the memberships in 1970, 1980, 1990 and 2000 for the nine largest pro-life churches and the five largest pro-abortion churches. The pro-life Catholic, Evangelical, and Mormon churches have exploding memberships, while the so-called 'mainline' pro-abortion churches are obviously in deep trouble.

In summary, the nine largest pro-life churches in the United States have gained from 30 percent to a whopping 748 percent in membership over the time period 1970 to 2000, while the pro-abortion churches have lost anywhere from 18 percent to 43 percent of their membership during the same time span.

Backing Away From Prenatal Baby-Killing. To their credit, some of the large pro-abortion 'mainline' churches are beginning to awaken from their deep amoral slumber. Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and even Methodists (the latter three churches, of course, being by far the largest members of the 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice) all issued statements in 1988 'clarifying' their stands on abortion or retracting their former pro-abortion positions.

The United Methodist Church, commonly known as the "abortion church" for its vigorous efforts to legalize abortion in the late 1960s, has become disturbed at the tidal wave of abortion washing over our country. It stated its firm opposition to abortion for birth control or for gender selection.

The Presbyterian Church, USA stated that abortion "should not be used for convenience or to ease embarrassment or as a means of birth control" (convenience abortions account for more than 99 percent of all prenatal baby-killing as described in Chapter 19, "United States Abortion Statistics").

The American Baptist Churches, USA denounced "irresponsible sexual behavior," and stated that "As American Baptists, we oppose abortion, as a means of avoiding responsibility for conception, as a primary means of birth control without regard for the far-reaching consequences of the act."

The Episcopal Church (whose parent body is not a member of RCRC) has stiffened its backbone a bit, and now sanctions abortions "... only in extreme situations. We emphatically oppose abortion as a means of birth control, family planning, sex selection, or any reason of mere convenience."

Abortion: Only a Christian Issue?

Pro-aborts, even when they have learned attorneys arguing their case at the District, Circuit, and Supreme Court levels, insist that any attempt to legislate or restrict any aspect of abortion and its aftermath (even when it is as 'trivial' as a dignified burial of the sad little bodies) is an unconstitutional 'establishment' of a particular religion in the sad little bodies), is an unconstitutional establishment of a particular religion — in this case, Christianity (usually, Roman Catholicism).

This is a false and unfounded assumption, and these dishonest pro-aborts know better. Pro-abortionists love to employ their deeply ingrained anti-Catholic bigotry to dismiss the opposition as a bunch of Papist puppets, but Figure 8-6 shows that opposition to abortion is not just a 'Catholic issue:' it is not even just a Christian issue. Buddhists, Hindus, Jainists, Moslems, Jews, Krishnas, and many other non-Christians oppose abortion on both religious and secular grounds.

For example, abortion is considered one of the "Five Great Sins" to Hindus (Pancha Maha Pataka). It is called Bhruna Hatya — the killing of an unwanted child.[30] And Chapter 10 describes how authentic Jewish teaching unequivocally condemns abortion.

On the other hand, we certainly can't accuse the pro-abortion 'churches' of lacking diversity; these organizations include at least eleven Satanist churches, all of the various covens practicing witchcraft (including Wicca), and the Sodomy Church (now anti-progressively relabeled the 'Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches').

Facts of Life: Chapter 8: Historical Christian Teachings on Abortion: The Critical Differences Between the Churches

The Critical Differences Between the Churches.

"We will find our greatest success to the extent that we inculcate Marxism as a kind of religion. Religious men and women are easy to convert and win, and so will easily accept our thinking if we wrap it up in a kind of religious terminology."
— Vladimir Lenin.[20]

What is the Church's Primary Mission? It is an established fact that pro-abortion churches radically depart from Scripture teachings in many areas, and tend to be "feel-good" in their approach to God. They support the "right to choose" abortion, fornication, divorce, adultery, and homosexuality. They insist that God does not really condemn these acts, despite literally hundreds of Scripture passages to the contrary.[21]

In other words, their aim is not to preach the Gospel and uphold moral living (which admittedly can be very difficult at times), but instead to make their congregations feel comfortable and good about themselves. These churches stress tolerance and compassion instead of the principles of true Christianity or Judaism.

Their god is not a God of justice and mercy — he is an indecisive and ineffectual "mush God" who would never condemn anyone to Hell. The Neoliberals have succeeded in making God over into their own image.

Two Different Religions? A major study of 643 Oregon clergy from every major Christian denomination — the results of which confirm various national surveys — showed that there exists such an extraordinary split in philosophies between theological liberals and conservatives that it is almost as if they belong to two entirely different religions.

For example, 91 percent of Oregon's conservative Southern Baptist ministers stated that the primary business of their Church was to save souls. Only 14 percent of the very liberal United Church of Christ ministers agreed. In fact, the United Church of Christ recently informed its ministers that they no longer have to tell their parishioners that Jesus Christ is the only way to salvation![22] This means that the United Church of Christ is, by definition, a pantheistic, non-Christian religion. It is ignoring the single Gospel verse that could be said to summarize Christian thinking: John 14:6 ("I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Nobody comes to the Father except through Me").

Think about this for just a moment. The primary goal of all Christian churches a handful of decades ago was evangelization and saving souls. After all, if a particular church doesn't think that this is important, what is a church for? It becomes merely a social club or a social action committee. Yet, incredibly, only one in seven United Church of Christ ministers thinks that saving souls is "important!"[23]

This Oregon study and other surveys revealed other fascinating contrasts between the liberal and conservative clergy. For example, when asked to comment upon the acceptability of behaviors that have traditionally been deemed sinful, the conservative and liberal ministers responded as follows;

Approval by Conservative and Liberal Ministers of Various Sexual Practices

Scenario	Approval by Conservative Ministers	Approval by Liberal Ministers
Homosexual 'marriages'	0%	94%
Cohabitation/fornication	0%	91%

Reference: Sura Rubenstein. "Survey Finds Wide Gap in Liberal, Conservative Clergy." The Oregonian, January 21, 1989, page C12. Also see The Oregonian, December 25, 1988, page D1.

The conservative Baptist ministers in Oregon, as all over the United States, said that the most important guidelines were Biblical principles. Predictably, the liberal ministers said that the most important thing of all was to be "compassionate and nonjudgmental." [24]

Not surprisingly, this Neoliberal call to be "compassionate and nonjudgmental" only applies to Neoliberal 'clergypersons.' When a Catholic priest is found guilty of child molestation or some other form of sexual misconduct, the Neoliberals attack the Catholic Church in general and use the incident to further their agendas by alleging that such events "show" that Catholic priests should be allowed to marry.

But when ministers from Neoliberal denominations go on literal sexual rampages, other Neoliberal clergy support or excuse him. For example, Oregon United Methodist minister William O. Walker propositioned young boys, tried to seduce dozens of men (including fellow pastors), contracted AIDS and transmitted it to his wife (who subsequently died), asked his friends to lie for him about his AIDS infection, and then finally died of the disease.

His fellow ministers were entirely supportive of Walker and all of his activities. Incredibly, Pastor Jim Hulett said that Walker "wasn't distracted by his sexuality ... He was able to put it together. His sexuality was under control." [25] a threatening force to be "controlled," not a part of us that should contribute to the harmonious whole as God intended.

The Widening Gap. Sadly, many good Evangelical, Jewish, and Catholic clergy and lay people have sunk into a psychological morass of indifference and hopelessness. These people have essentially given up; they accept the Humanist dictum that one may believe in God, so long as such belief does not affect one's conduct in any form. Among these people there is a numbing ignorance of what goes on around them. They are passive and timid, and merely wait for a savior to mend the world (not necessarily Christ, perhaps the State), preferably at minimum cost and discomfort to them.

They remain ignorant of Scripture, the teachings of their churches, and especially of the evil that surrounds them. In such a state, they are easily manipulated by those who have an organized and prepackaged agenda. They are no match for their many highly-motivated iconoclastic and atheistic enemies; they cannot even offer a verbal resistance. Some are even unsure as to whether or not to be offended by the anti-Christian rantings of the media and professional anti-religious 'artists.'

They have learned a passive Humanism from their churches; they are easily suckered by any movement that claims to advance human rights (i.e., abortion and "gay rights") or alleviate suffering (i.e., euthanasia and "animal rights"). They are swept along by their ignorance and desire to please everyone. Eventually, they become socially neutered. They have seen so much and have accepted so much that any type of behavior is allowable and appears normal. They are completely inactivated. They finally retreat into themselves and offer no resistance to the tide of evil sweeping over the world. They cannot even maintain values in their own families. Eventually, they lose control over their very souls.

And so, the Episcopalians now have a woman Bishop whose qualifications, if she were a man, would render her totally unacceptable for such a high position.

And, in the country where it all began, the English Anglican Church in 1983 blessed "contraceptive intercourse for unmarried couples for the purpose of proving their love." The Anglicans, with the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury, recently devised a prayer in support of women who have aborted: "Into Thy hands we commit in trust the developing life we have cut short."

Not surprisingly, only two percent of England's population still attends church with any regularity. Why bother, if you can get a rubber stamp to do anything you want to? Why attend church, when there is absolutely no moral instruction whatever?

Pagan Nation. Many polls show that a large segment of the American public (anywhere from 25 percent to 40 percent, depending upon the survey) believe that abortion is murder and that it is immoral, but they still believe that it should be available to women. This is analogous to a person putting "KEEP ABORTION SAFE AND LEGAL" and "ABORTION KILLS CHILDREN" bumperstickers side-by-side on his car. But nobody in their right mind would do such a thing, because they realize how schizoid such an action would make them look to other people.

This strange public schizophrenia extends to other moral issues as well. A study of a half-century of opinion polling in America entitled "The Rational Public" shows that 58 percent of all Americans believed that homosexual acts should be legal but that 80 percent feel homosexuality is wrong.[26]

God Reflecting Society? In the United States, decades of anti-life theological posturing have led to results as predictable and strange as they are disastrous. According to James Patterson and Peter Kim, authors of the book The Day America Told the Truth, over 90 percent of all Americans believe in God. This huge percentage leads the media to declare that "America is one of the most religious nations on Earth."

If this is true, why is our country in such deplorable condition morally and ethically?

Because, although people believe in God, they simply ignore Him when making moral decisions. Religion plays almost no role whatever in the formulating of personal views and morality.

While it is true that the vast majority of Americans believe in God, the God they believe in is a nonjudgmental, relativist, wimpy God who would never consign anyone to Hell. This is why a recent major Gallup Poll found that only 10 percent of all Americans said that their faith made a "discernable difference in their lives." [27]

In other words, people believe in God but have no use for His rules. Only ten percent of Americans believe in the Ten Commandments, and even less live by them. And more than eighty percent of all Americans believe that it is all right not to believe in God. [28]

We have truly become a pagan nation.

And so, Satan continues to deceive millions through the brilliantly successful ploy of making people believe that they are "good Christians" when, in fact, they are cruising down the smooth, wide, flat highway to eternal damnation.

But why should Christians worry about Hell when they believe it does not exist?

According to a recent comprehensive survey, only 17 percent of Catholics, 18 percent of Methodists, 20 percent of Episcopalians, 21 percent of Lutherans, and 22 percent of Presbyterians believe that Satan is real. [29]

Truly, Satan's greatest triumph is to convince us that he does not exist.

Report on Grants for Anti-Catholic, Anti-Life Activities by American Foundations
By Magaly Llaguno
2003

American Foundations are exerting a powerful and evil influence throughout the U.S. and much of the world. A great number of them donate funds for anti-life, anti-Catholic activities in Latin America and The Caribbean, because they give grants to Catholics for a Free Choice (CFFC). The ones listed below are categorized as "Grantmakers who address reproductive rights/access to abortion", as well as "Grantmakers who fund in Latin America and the Caribbean". The amounts given by them to CFFC appear next to their name in the list and do not include their very large donations to other anti-life organizations throughout the region. Also not included are the donations given to CFFC and an additional number of anti-life organizations, by other antilife foundations in the U.S. The list below was compiled from the website of the The Funders Network on Population, Reproductive Health and Rights, which offers information on funding given by foundations in the U.S. and foreign countries.

Foundations:

Brush Foundation : $164,853 (between 1980 and 1999)
Buffet Foundation : 75,000 (between 1994 and 2000)
Clark Foundation, Robert Sterling : $457,000 (between 1985 and 1999)
Compton Foundation, Inc : $310,000 (between 1992 and 2000)
Ford Foundation : $6,380,760 (between 1982 and 1999)
General Service Foundation : $692,635 (between 1986 and 2000)
Goldman Fund, Richard and Rhoda : $350,000 (between 1994 and 1998)
Hewlett Foundation, William and Flora : $1,050,000 (between 1995 and 1998)
MacArthur Foundation, John D. and Catherine T. : $2,199,500 (between 1991 and 1999)
Moriah Fund : $190,000 (between 1992 and 1999)
Open Society Institute : $250,000 (between 1998 and 1999)
Packard Foundation, David and Lucile : $5,095,800 (between 1982 and 2000)
Summit Foundation : $50,000 in 1999
Turner Foundation : $110,000 (between 1996 and 1998)
Weeden Foundation : $140,000 (between 1991 and 2000)
Prospect Hill Foundation : $94,500 (between 1987 and 1994)
Buffet Foundation : $675,000 (between 1994 and 2000)

Total donations by the above foundations up to and including the year 2000:
$18,285.048. Other important facts about the foundations that are members of The Funders Network on Population, Reproductive Health and Rights where it concerns funding in the U.S. and foreign countries:

In the year 1999:

- "The foundation topping the list in dollars granted" was the Gates Foundation, which "gave 39% of all grant dollars in the field - almost as much as the next six foundations combined." 1
- "Reproductive health commanded nearly three-fourths of funding in the field." 1
- "Most grant dollars supported programs intended to affect people outside the United States." 1
- "Women and adolescents were the population subgroups that foundations emphasized most strongly." 1
- The issue of "reproductive rights" received $35,609,192 that year, out of which "access to abortion" received $10,282,200. 1
- "Reproductive rights" in general received 52.3% of the funding and $25,211,042 were disbursed for "advocacy". 1
- "Smaller funders concentrated on work in the United States, while the top 10 funders concentrated on international work." 1
- Mexico ranks 4th where it concerns the largest grants for 1999: $17,321,762. 1

In the year 2000 :

- "The funders participating in the survey (conducted by the Funders Network), all US based, gave more than $700 million for work on population, reproductive health, and reproductive rights..." 2 The Gates Foundation "awarded the eight largest grants, each of which was at least $15 million", for a total of $297,343,841. 2
- "The issue commanding the most funding by far was reproductive health" 2, a term which interpreted by the anti-life movement, includes not only contraception but also abortifacients and abortion. It received "three-fourths of all funding";
- "79% of funders (45 of 57) awarded grants for reproductive rights work" and "51% awarded grants for work in women's rights or gender equality." 2
- According to radical feminists, "women's rights" and "gender equality", involve the promotion of contraception, abortifacients, sterilization and abortion legalization.
- Funds specifically earmarked for "sexual rights work" (special "rights" for gays, transsexuals, bisexuals and lesbians), constituted 23% of all donations that year. 2
- Only 12.5% of all the funds donated that year were specifically allocated to "Maternal & Child Health", while 0.4% were specifically earmarked for "sexual rights." 2
- The funding for "Reproductive Health: Emergency contraception" amounted to $1,156,881 among the top ten funders alone and to $1,821,468 among the "smaller funders" the same year. 2

In the year 2001:

- Private foundations outspent USAID by about $200 million. 3
- "From 1999-2001, US foundations spent close to $2 billion on population, reproductive health and reproductive rights work." 3
- The ten foundations contributing the largest amounts between 1999 and 2001 were:
 1. Gates, Bill and Melinda Foundation ($867,298,531 - 44.1%)
 2. Packard, David and Lucile Foundation ($315,673,645 (16.1%)
 3. Ford Foundation ($137,335,510, 7.0%)
 4. Hewlett William and Flora Foundation ($106,634,000 - 5.4%)

4. Hewlett, William and Flora Foundation ($100,004,000, 5.4%)
5. United Nations Foundation ($86,937,066, 4.4%)
6. Mellon, Andrew W. Foundation ($61,384,500, 3.1%)
7. Rockefeller Foundation ($50,641,248, 2.6%)
8. MacArthur, John D and Catherine T. Foundation ($39,064,577, 2.0%)
9. Turner Foundation ($ 30,155,057, 1.5%)
10. Kaiser, Henry J. Family Foundation ($27,062,747, 1.4%) 3

In view of all these facts, can anyone doubt that U.S. foundations are using their vast resources in order to change the moral and religious values and practices of a huge part of the world?

Facts of Life: Chapter 8: Historical Christian Teachings on Abortion: Church-Related Pro-Life Groups

Church-Related Pro-Life Groups.

"There is nothing that the world would like so much as a silent Church."

— William Barclay [31]

Many pro-life churches have well-organized and highly visible pro-life organizations that actually get out into the street and DO something. Additionally, many pro-life members of pro-abortion churches feel isolated in their own congregations and have banded together to form pro-life groups for mutual support and pro-life action. Some of these church pro-life organizations are listed below.

Many of these organizations have chapters all over the country. For information, call the national headquarters of the appropriate organization. If no such group exists in your area, please consider starting one. It is not difficult, especially with help and advice from the national headquarters, and it is a sorely needed ministry. There are many other isolated pro-lifers out there!

Lutherans For Life believes that the Church is compelled by God's Word to speak and act on behalf of those who are vulnerable and defenseless. The crisis of our times is the repudiation of Biblical truth manifested in the wanton destruction of innocent human life through legalized abortion-on-demand and the growing threat to the lives of others through legalized assisted suicide and euthanasia. Therefore, as Lutherans For Life, we will strive to give witness, from a Biblical perspective, to the Church and society on these and other related issues such as chastity, post abortion healing, and family living.

The Catholic League is the nation's largest Catholic civil rights organization. Founded in 1973 by the late Father Virgil C. Blum, S.J., the Catholic League defends the right of Catholics — lay and clergy alike — to participate in American public life without defamation or discrimination. Motivated by the letter and the spirit of the First Amendment, the Catholic League works to safeguard both the religious freedom rights and the free speech rights of Catholics whenever and wherever they are threatened.

Presbyterians Pro-Life seeks to be a prophetic witness to the Presbyterian Church (USA) by upholding the sacred value of human life and the family. We believe the Scriptures teach that God, who made us in His own image, has forbidden us to shed innocent blood. I heretofore, Presbyterians Pro-Life is committed to protecting the right to life of every human being from the moment of conception to the moment of natural death. In decisions about life and death, the sanctity of life of both mother and child must be respected, and every effort to preserve their lives should be made. This leads us to stand against abortion, infanticide, euthanasia, and any other practice which would devalue human life. Presbyterians Pro-Life is convinced that a return to the Biblical teaching concerning the sacred value of the family is essential to recovering respect for the sacred value of individual human lives. God has ordained the family, the basic social unit of all human institutions, to propagate, protect and nurture human life. Presbyterians Pro-Life is committed to strengthening the bonds of family love and nurture, and to protecting innocent life.

Out of obedience to Jesus Christ, the Taskforce of United Methodists on Abortion and Sexuality (TUMAS) will work to create in church and society esteem for human life at its most vulnerable, specifically for the unborn child and for the Woman who contemplates abortion. Therefore, TUMAS's first goal is to win the hearts and minds of United Methodists, to engage in abortion-prevention through theological, pastoral and social emphases that support human life.

Pastor John O. Anderson with Doug Brendel. Cry of the Innocents: Abortion and the Race Towards Judgment [South Plainfield, New Jersey: Bridge Publishing, 1984]. Scriptural background on sin in America and the parallels between our society and the Israel of Hosea's time make this book frightening and motivating reading. The killing of God's most innocent creations is a heinous sin that cries out to God for vengeance. Using the story of the prophet Hosea as a model, the author warns that God will withhold his vengeance upon this nation if we, as individuals and a people, stop our twin sins of sexual immorality and the shedding of innocent blood; but, if we persist, the wrath of God is inevitable — and it will also be directed towards those who stood by and did nothing. If your pastor is sitting on the fence or thinking of getting involved, this is the book that he should read. Pastor Anderson also has a "Cry of the Innocents" videotape, and he is available for presentations. Write to John O. Anderson, Post Office Box 152, Klamath Falls, Oregon 97601.

John Ankerberg and John Weldon. When Does Life Begin?: And 39 Other Tough Questions About Abortion [Brentwood, Tennessee: Wolgemuth & Hyatt Publishers, 1989], 252 pages. This book is one of the best primers the pro-life movement has, because it contains everything that a new activist needs to know. It has four logically laid-out sections: (1) the basic question on when human life begins; (2) answering pro-abortion slogans; (3) a Biblical and theological analysis of abortion, and (4) what Christians and churches can do to stop the American Holocaust.

Roy Howard Beck. On Thin Ice [Wilmore, Kentucky: Bristol Books]. This book uncovers the means and tactics that the liberals have used to undermine and paralyze the mainline churches — and, even worse, perverted them so completely that some of them embrace the entire left-wing agenda. Particular attention is lavished upon the National Council of Churches (NCC).

T.J. Bosgra. Abortion, the Bible and the Church [Hawaii Right to Life Educational Foundation]. Although somewhat out of date by this time, this book is still timely in that it discusses what the Bible says about abortion and lists the actual quotes from statements made by 150 major churches on the subject of abortion.

Paul B. Fowler. Abortion: Toward an Evangelical Consensus [Portland: Multnomah Press, 1987]. 222 pages, $11.95. Reviewed by John Jefferson Davis on page 5 of the May 14, 1987 National Right to Life News. The author traces the roots and social forces that devastated the Christian consensus against abortion before Roe v. Wade, and that decimated the Christian consensus against abortion before Roe v. Wade, and argues against the statement that the unborn are only 'potential persons.' The best part of the book is a comprehensive examination of what Scripture says about life, death, and the unborn. Mr. Fowler also challenges all Christians to do what they can to end the abortion holocaust.

Weldon M. Hardenbrook. Missing In Action: Vanishing Manhood in America [Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1987]. 192 pages, $14.95. Reviewed by James Bruen in the December 1987 Fidelity Magazine. Any Neofeminist who reads this book will die of apoplexy. The book surveys the feminization of American culture and the extreme confusion and the resulting lack of direction in our society. It is now men, not women, who are alienated from many aspects of the Catholic Church and the mainline Protestant Churches that have allowed themselves to be deceived and seduced by the Neofeminists. The author presents an array of solutions to the phenomenon of women's leadership by default: Avoid government programs that are biased towards women; adjust social programs to reflect the differences between boys and girls; and get men to accept their responsibilities as spiritual and moral heads of their families.

Beverly Wildung Harrison. Our Right to Choose: Toward a New Ethic of Abortion [Beacon Press, 1983]. Reviewed by Mary Meehan on pages 5 and 9 of the November 24, 1983 issue of National Right to Life News. The author, a self-styled "Christian woman," shows us just how far self-deception can be carried as she advocates third-trimester abortions and other atrocities. There is nothing "new" about this 'ethic;' pro-life activists recognize it as the eternal black cloud of death and self-centeredness that has surrounded the anti-life philosophy and those enslaved by it since the beginning of time. This book is good for reading if one is interested in how anti-life rationalization works.

Father Robert J. Henle, S.J. "A Historical View of the Right to Life." The Catholic League Newsletter, July 1981. This four-page reprint rebuts the lie-packed 1981 National Organization for Women publication entitled "An Abbreviated Chronology of Reproductive Rights, 2600 B.C. to the Present." In addition to correcting all of NOW's deliberate falsehoods and anti-Catholic slander, Father Henle shows that those ancient societies that practiced cannibalism, slavery, oppression of women, perpetual warfare, and had a great number of superstitions generally had very permissive abortion and infanticide laws. Those societies that had what anthropologists call the "high religions" and a high degree of civilization had a general consensus against abortion. For example, the ancient Vedic writings of India condemned abortion from 1500 to 500 B.C. Buddhism as far back as 600 B.C. totally condemned abortion. And, since 622 A.D., Islam has condemned abortion.

Dave Hunt and T.A. McMahon. The Seduction of Christianity: Spiritual Discernment in the Last Days [Eugene, Oregon: Harvest House]. Reviewed on page 5 of the May/June 1986 issue of the National Federation for Decency Journal. The New Age is just the old paganism repackaged, and now it is invading the churches! It has gotten so bad that some people don't know what Christianity even is anymore. Read about the subtle compromises made by Church leaders and their practice of New Age beliefs in the place of real Christianity. The book describes some of these practices, including holistic healing, inner healing, positive thinking exercises, and many others. A very controversial book, but highly recommended by many true Christian leaders.

Since these activities are relatively non-controversial, pastors have less of an excuse not to get involved. Topics include supporting crisis pregnancy centers, Masses for expectant families, phone trees, letters, fair booths, identifying support in the parish, and spiritual adoption of the unborn. Randy Terry describes the mission of the pro-life movement and condemns complicity by the churches. The book describes the role of Planned Parenthood, NOW, NARAL, the ACLU, NAF, the AMA, and other organizations in the abortion holocaust. Then it details the roles that the media, the courts, and the 'justice' system play. Finally, it covers the ways in which the church is an accomplice in the killing and details how Christians can get involved in an effective manner.

Dietrich von Hildebrand. The Devastated Vineyard [North Haledon, New Jersey: Keep the Faith]. What the Anti-Lifers Think.

"A large number of Catholic theologians hold that even direct abortion, though tragic, can sometimes be a moral choice."
— 'Catholics' for a Free Choice.[1]

Introduction.

The Two Questions. At this time in our world's history, vastly improved communications and fetal science are working together to tear the shroud of mystery and secrecy away from the unborn child — and from abortion. Therefore, the abortion battle is becoming intensely feverish as more and more people are being forced to confront the issue.

At the heart of the abortion debate are twin questions. The first of these is purely scientific: Are the unborn living persons, or are they not? Science has definitively settled this question, and even pro-abortionists have been forced to admit that the preborn are living beings, as described in Chapter 21, "Fetal Development."

The second question is philosophical and moral: May these living beings be killed, and, if so, under what circumstances?

The very nature of this second critical question makes it an appropriate problem for all churches to discuss. And, since churches are made up of people, these individuals must have the right to act on their consciences, either singly or in groups.

The Unfulfilled Potential. However, there are many people in this country who, while loudly proclaiming their right to follow their consciences, are actively campaigning to deprive those who oppose them of the same right.

Pro-abortionists correctly recognize that the Roman Catholic Church has the potential to be their most dangerous enemy. However, the Church certainly has not lived up to its potential in this area, in large part because the vast majority of its hierarchy and its rank-and-file lay people have been intimidated into silence and inactivity. As every military strategist from the dawn of time has correctly recognized, properly planned bluff and bluster is worth a dozen divisions. Dr. Bernard Nathanson, who was one of the founders of the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (NARAL), gambled that the Catholic clergy would remain silent as he and his cohorts mounted a focused attack on New York State's abortion laws: "We could never have gotten away with what we did if you [clergy] had been united, purposeful, and strong." [2]

Outline of this Chapter. This Chapter is divided into two sections. The first addresses the historical and current teachings of the Catholic Church regarding abortion, and also discusses the role of conscience, the "double effect," the issue of ensoulment, and the disposition of the souls of aborted and miscarried preborn babies.

The second half of the Chapter addresses the various tactics used by pro-abortionists to confuse and deactivate the leadership and laity of the Catholic Church in America, and describes their inbred hatred of the Church and everything that it stands for.

Monsignor Ignacio Barreiro was born on Oct. 22, 1947 in Montevideo, Uruguay, to a family of Spanish and French descent. In 1973, he graduated from Law School in Montevideo and then entered the Uruguayan

Foreign Service.

The then Mr. Barreiro entered St. Joseph's Seminary at Dunwoodie and was ordained a priest for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York on Nov. 14, 1987. From the beginning of his priestly ministry, Monsignor Barreiro was involved in the Pro-Life and Traditional Latin Mass apostolates. He did his licentiate and doctorate degree in Systematic Theology at the University of the Holy Cross, in Rome, Italy. For a period of time in the 1990s, Fr. Barreiro served in the Priestly Fraternity of St. Peter. Since September 1998, Msgr. Barreiro has been the Director of the Rome office of Human Life International. There, he started an apostolate with priests and seminarians from all over the world who are studying in the Eternal City. He has published articles on theological and life issues, and historical subjects. He was appointed a Chaplain of His Holiness on March 26, 2004.

All persons of good will need to understand the clear and present danger with which the US is being menaced by the health reform proposed by the Obama Administration. Abortion will be multiplied, the U.S. will move ahead on the road towards euthanasia, conscience rights will be in jeopardy: but what is worse, the United States would start moving towards a tyrannical, socialist government that would be the source of all sort of moral evils. A Fundamental Liturgical Law

First Appeared in Inside the Vatican August/September 2007

The Apostolic Letter Summorum Pontificum, given as a mutuo proprio by Benedict XVI and promulgated on July 7, is a fundamental liturgical law that provides for the active preservation of the liturgical treasure of the Church. It confirms the historical fact that the Roman Missal promulgated by St. Pius V and reissued in 1962 by Bl. John XXIII has never been abrogated. As a consequence it recognizes that the use of this Missal is perfectly licit and establishes the juridical conditions for its use and the ritual for the sacraments that was contemporary to this Missal.

He is a man that has a profound prayer life. I was deeply moved as I contemplated him kneeling in prayer on Monday April 25th in front of the tomb of St. Paul at the Basilica of St. Paul outside the Walls in Rome. Already in his youth in 1953 when he obtained a doctorate in theology with a thesis entitled: "The People and House of God in St. Augustine's doctrine of the Church", we can see his concern with the family because seeing the Church as the House of God, leads to the very ancient view of the Church as the Family of God. April 2005

Christ has granted us a new vicar on Earth, a pastor who would lead His Church with a firm commitment to preach the only truth that saves and defend life and family in accordance with the loving plan of the Creator. He is a man that has a profound prayer life. I was deeply moved as I contemplated him kneeling in prayer on Monday April 25th in front of the tomb of St. Paul at the Basilica of St. Paul outside the Walls in Rome. Already in his youth in 1953 when he obtained a doctorate in theology with a thesis entitled: "The People and House of God in St. Augustine's doctrine of the Church", we can see his concern with the family because seeing the Church as the House of God, leads to the very ancient view of the Church as the Family of God.

The concern of Cardinal Ratzinger to defend life and family was clearly manifested in all the years that he was Prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. Perhaps one of the most serious moral problems within the Church is the disobedience to the teachings on contraception. For that reason on February 16th, 1989 he published the Doctrinal Note "The moral rule of Humanae Vitae and the pastoral duty." The brevity of this article does not permit an in depth analysis, but it should be pointed out the very important clarifications that this document makes showing the serious moral obligation that all Catholic couples have of following the teachings of the Church in this matter. The Instruction Donum Vitae, on respect for human life in its origin and on the dignity of procreation, of February 22, 1987, constitutes a milestone in the defense on the holiness and sacredness of life and gives a response to the challenge of the new biomedical technologies. To these impressive documents other fundamental pronouncements can be added like, the Declaration on Euthanasia and the Declaration Concerning Sexual Ethics.

With clarity and courage Cardinal Ratzinger made important interventions on the duties of Catholic political leaders on the Doctrinal Note on some questions regarding the participation of Catholics in political life. In this document of January 16th, 2003, Cardinal Ratzinger reiterates the traditional teaching of the Church that a political leader has to be always coherent with his faith in the political decisions he takes. Some months afterwards, on July 31st, 2003 another important directive was issued against different initiatives that seek to legalize unions between homosexuals. The legalization of this type of unnatural union is one of the new battle fronts of the culture of death and both Catholic leaders and all men of good will should take this menace seriously.

The Holy Father in his best seller of 1985, The Ratzinger Report, written with the leading Italian journalist Vittorio Messori, denounced with prophetic tones the evils of our times and many of the problems that have invaded the Church. He showed how the separation of sexuality from procreation leads to all forms of moral corruption. In this work he also had some pointed comments to make about the problems of feminism. In a 1996 interview that Cardinal Ratzinger did with Peter Seewald, entitled The Salt of the Earth, he notes with concern the mounting problems that affect the Church and the world at large. In his work he underlines how the tragic separation of sexuality from procreation large. In his work he underlines how the tragic separation of sexuality from procreation leads to see the child as product that lies completely under the control of reason. As consequence he prophesies that this approach leads to "the self-destruction of man." And with regards to abortion he states with pointed words that:

"In the death penalty, when it is legitimately applied, someone is punished who has been proved guilty of the most serious crimes and who also represents a threat to the peace of society. In other words, a guilty person is punished. In the case of abortion, on the other hand the death penalty is inflicted on someone who is absolutely innocent."

In his last day as Cardinal Ratzinger, in the morning of April 18th, I had the privilege to be present at the Mass for the election of the Pope, which he celebrated. In his homily he expressed some fundamental concepts that I cannot refrain from including in this brief article:

"How many winds of doctrine have we known in recent decades, how many ideological currents, how many ways of thinking? The small boat of the thought of many Christians has often been tossed about by these waves -flung from one extreme to another: from Marxism to liberalism, even to libertinism; from collectivism to radical individualism; from atheism to a vague religious mysticism; from agnosticism to syncretism and so forth. Every day new sects spring up, and what St Paul says about human deception and the trickery that strives to entice people into error (cf. Eph 4: 14) comes true.

Today, having a clear faith based on the Creed of the Church is often labeled as fundamentalism. Whereas relativism, that is, letting oneself be "tossed here and there, carried about by every wind of doctrine", seems the only attitude that can cope with modern times. We are building a dictatorship of relativism that does not recognize anything as definitive and whose ultimate goal consists solely of one's own ego and desires.

We, however, have a different goal: the Son of God, the true man. He is the measure of true humanism. An "adult" faith is not a faith that follows the trends of fashion and the latest novelty; a mature adult faith is deeply rooted in friendship with Christ. It is this friendship that opens us up to all that is good and gives us a criterion by which to distinguish the true from the false, and deceit from truth.

We must develop this adult faith; we must guide the flock of Christ to this faith. And it is this faith - only faith - that creates unity and is fulfilled in love."

If we read both the documents that Benedict XVI has prepared as Prefect of the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith, or his works as a theologian or his interviews, we can see that he has a profound knowledge of the faith united with a keen intellectual perception of the problems of our times that goes together with the prophetic approach of a man of deep prayer life. So that gives us a reasonable hope that he will be one of the great popes of the history Church, starting a process of recovery that will reverse more than forty years of crisis and decadence.

Commentary: Barreiro: Blessed Karl of Austria

 SHARE

Mons. Ignacio Barreiro
October 2004

In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit:

In this solemn Mass we raise our gratitude to Christ the King and to the Holy Father for the beatification of the Emperor Karl of Austria. His name is joined to the long column of Holy Kings and Queens, Saints as Louis King of France, Saint Ferdinand of Castile and Saint Henry the Emperor that have led Christianity.

The Blessed Karl of Austria had great natural and supernatural qualities, first and foremost an enormous sense of responsibility; he made any possible effort for the common good of his reign. He prohibited dueling even among officers and limited the bad popular press. He knew the enormous value of personal witness and the importance of the good example that rulers should give. Once he said to the head of his Chancery: "As an Emperor I have to set the good example. If everyone simply did their Christian duties, we would not have so much hate and misery in the world". He had a great personal bravery, a great austerity of life, a supernatural charity already manifested when he was a child; all of these was grounded in a constant prayer life and was based on an unshakeable confidence in the Divine Providence. In different occasions, during the war, it was noticed how he felt upon himself the heavy responsibility of ordering so many soldiers to enter into combat. In many cases during the war or during subsequent events after the fall of the Empire, he demonstrated a great physical bravery supported by his constant union with God, because the only way to be indifferent to danger is either madness or a total confidence in God's protection. He demonstrated great skills as a general in many occasions; among these we can mention the containment of the terrible offensive of the Russian General Brusilov in Eastern Galizia in 1916.

His spirituality was dominated by a great confidence in Divine Providence. In a letter to the Holy Father in 1919 he said: "In all my troubles, I have never lost my faith, I have never despaired". In another letter to Cardinal Bisleti he underlined: "I base myself, with patience and with a confidence that no one can destroy, in the help and assistance of the Almighty, to see one day the triumph of my rights, rights that I want to preserve only for the glory of God and for the good of peoples that the Divine Providence has entrusted to me." He always had a fervent devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. In the difficult situation in which he found himself on April 1919, he writes to the Holy Father underlining his confidence that the Sacred Heart will not abandon the country that has been consecrated to Him.

As a child, his prayer life has always been remarkable; as he grew up, whenever it was possible to him, he attended Mass and received communion every day. He had a particular devotion for the adoration of the Holy Sacrament. He used to set up a chapel in which to expose the Sacrament in every place he dwelt, even temporarily in the field or during the war, at the front. Before making important decisions, he used to go to the chapel to ask Lord's assistance.

He had a deeply Christian attitude, regarding marriage and family. Immediately after his ceremony of engagement, he said to his fiancée: "Now we have to help each other in reaching Paradise". In spite all his military and political commitments, he always kept a personal interest in the education of his children, an in particularly in their religious formation.

He deeply respected the limits that the Catholic morals impose in the conduction of military operations. He was completely against submarine war, as practiced at large scale by Germans, because this form of struggle did not make enough distinction between military and civil victims. He opposed resolutely to the bombing of cities and did everything possible to prevent the use of chemical weapons. He was always concerned about the soldiers' material and spiritual welfare, and did he sincerely strived to avoid unnecessary casualties.

As it emerges from the documents of the beatification process, the Blessed Karl I of Austria had a high conception regarding his imperial and regal prerogatives. He was conscious to have received his power directly from God, and for that reason was firmly convinced that he had to exercise it as scrupulously as possible with a great dedication. As he was conscious to rule for God's grace and not for the will of the people, he totally refused the idea that his authority could be based on a plebiscite or on any other form of democratic consultation and then as a consequence he never abdicated. In a letter written to Pope Benedict XV, when he was trying to reestablish his authority in Hungary, he reaffirms how his cause was the cause of religion and underlines that both altar and throne are powers of divine institution, that are called to work together in order to reestablish order, and above all to keep it.

The cause of beatification of Karl I of Austria, is based also on the firmness with which he always rejected any proposal to regain his throne, that would have lead him to enter into compromises with those forces of evil that today prevail everywhere and that are transforming the world into a universal chaos. The answer of Karl I of Austria to whom dared to present him these type of conditions was simple and firm: "About this, as a Catholic Prince, I have nothing to say... now any attempt of mine will fail ... Nevertheless it will never happen that I will accept from Satan what has been given to me by God".

In the Emperor Karl of Austria we can see a clear case of monarch that unities in his person the legitimacy of blood and the legitimacy of exercise for his unconditioned adhesion to the Catholic Faith and to the organic and traditional forms of monarchy.

Since the beginning of his reign, he did all possible efforts to achieve a peaceful conclusion of the hostilities. Really he was the only ruler to welcome the different warnings and initiatives of Pope Benedict XV in favor of peace. From his first proclamation published the day after he ascended to the throne, he announced his will to be a father for his subjects and declares openly to be animated by a sincere desire for peace. The Blessed Karl I of Austria sought peace first and foremost for Christian principles, and not for pacifism, tries to stop the "useless carnage" as Benedict XV, defined the terrible human sufferings of this tragic war. Second, for a deep political realism, he realized that the continuation of hostilities would have been fatal for the survival of Austria-Hungary Empire. He saw that the resources of the allies were stronger than the means that central empires had at their disposal. He was also completely conscious that both socialism and communism would have found a propitious climate in countries worn by war. The Emperor observed also how the different nationalist tendencies threatened empire's unity.

It is wrong to think that before war the destiny of Empire was already marked by centrifugal forces operating within Austria-Hungary. Among 1867 and 1914, the Empire enjoyed a climate of prosperity, in spite of the short periods of crisis, that it was manifested in a greater and generally more diffused affluence. The disappearance of Austria-Hungary has to be searched instead in the republican and anticlerical forces connected to masonry that totally refused the peace proposals of the Emperor, because the real aim of these forces was the destruction of this monarchy, because it represented the last Catholic power of importance in the world. Striking Austria-Hungary that was considered by these revolutionary forces the living symbol of the old European civil order, they were trying to destroy both the monarchical principle and Catholicism. They were trying in more than one way to continue the destructive action of French Revolution. This ideological way acting that caused thousands of casualties, can be seen both in French, English, Italian politicians as in the behavior of American politicians. The destruction of the Empire opens a political gap, whose consequences we continue to suffer. We cannot be mono-casuistic, but is evident that one of the main causes of all the tragedies we have suffered during the twentieth century can be traced back to the dissolution of dual monarchy and to the humiliation of Germany. As a consequence of this conflict rise both Nazi dictatorship and Bolshevik Empire, and today we are going toward a democratic dictatorship of a Europe that repudiates its Christian roots and runs the risk of being dominated by Islamic tide.

We rejoice at this beatification for many reasons, but first and foremost because it has been declared by the Church the blessedness of an exemplary man that certainly will intercede for us in Heaven, second because it keeps alive our hope that the Lord will send us Emperors and Kings like him, that will restore the organic and traditional society according to God's will.

This assertion will appear to many persons as anachronistic, nevertheless we have to consider that the Lord is not a distant God who does not intervene directly in men's history for our salvation. This intervention obviously is not limited to help single persons, but it is also manifested for the benefit of human societies, because man is a social being and needs society's assistance to reach his destiny of eternal glory. Normally the Lord does not intervene directly in the history of peoples, but does it through human instruments, men that he chooses to lead His people. So it is not absurd to expect that the Lord will raise up, men full of natural and supernatural talents to lead His people, men with a faith as strong as a rock and a clear and precise vision of how a nation has to be ruled, based on the laws of the Gospel and on the particular traditions of every nation. Is not absurd even to consider that these men should be part of families that for centuries have served the Nation, who have learned by their ancestors that the exercise of authority is first and foremost a service. I do not think either that it would be absurd to pray for the appearance of men of this height, because many graces that God grant us are bound by the fact that we ask them with the most humble of our prayers. We have to ask also to the Lord the grace to be able to discern if a possible leader has been really sent by God, and in that case to follow him with all our strength.

This beatification has been opposed by the same forces that have obstructed the beatification of other great men emblematic of the struggle against the revolution, such as the Blessed Marco D'Aviano, toward which the Emperor had a deep devotion, Saint Pio of Pietrelcina and the Blessed Pious IX. We hope that Holy Father who had the bravery to challenge those forces when he proclaimed those beatifications, would one day, or one of His successors with the same bravery, may rise to the glory of altars the most noble of all the Queens of the world, Isabel of Castile.

Today we ask to the Virgin Mary, Queen of Heaven to plead for us, so that we can see one day the restoration of Christian Society.

May the Lord be praised!

Mons. Ignacio Barreiro, STD
March 2003

The Pontifical Academy for Life held its Ninth General Assembly at the Vatican from the 24th to the 26th of February. The topic addressed in this session by the Academy was biomedical research from the perspective of reason illuminated by Faith. Man by his God-given nature is a searcher of the truth. In this search he can achieve increased knowledge and put it to the service of society. As Pope John Paul II stated, "It is a recognized fact that the improvements in the medical treatment of disease primarily depend on progress in research." At the same time we are living in a world, where as one of the speakers pointed out: "The culture of death has for the last thirty years clearly controlled the press and the media now shows a sinister proclivity toward controlling scientific literature and thereby the political process." Seeing how many forms of scientific research put in serious danger human life and constitute an affront to human dignity, the Church has to raise her voice to protect human life and man's dignity and to orient science for the true benefit of mankind. Some of the speakers insisted that we also have to be capable of influencing the political process through which national and international scientific policies and programs are formed and conducted. As John Paul II said with prophetic tones in his memorable speech of October 7th 1979, on the Mall in Washington, D.C. "When innocent life is threatened - WE WILL STAND UP! WE WILL STAND UP!"

The initial premise, of the address of the Holy Father to the members of the Academy was that reason illuminated by the faith does not restrict the field of observation but rather extends it, since the light of revelation comes to the aid of reason to offer a fuller understanding of what is intrinsic to human dignity. Recalling the invitation made by Paul VI to researchers to make a contribution to the welfare of marriage and the family, he made it his own, stressing the need to find natural solutions for the problem of conjugal infertility. The Holy Father renewed his appeal that "scientific and biomedical research, resist every temptation to human manipulation," and instead it should "dedicate itself firmly to explore ways and means to sustain human life". He underlined how the "Church respects and supports scientific research when it has a genuinely humanistic orientation, avoiding any form of instrumentalization or destruction of the human being and keeping itself free from the slavery of political and economic interests." He pointed out how in presenting the moral orientations dictated by natural reason the Church offers a precious service to scientific research, doing her utmost for the true good of the human person. As a consequence, not only the aims, but also the methods and means of research must always respect the dignity of every human being at every stage of his development. The Holy Father underlined that scientists must be aware of the insuperable limits that the protection of the life, the integrity and dignity of every human being impose upon their research. He appealed to Catholic Institutes and Universities to measure up to the high standard of the spiritual values that presided over their beginning. The Holy Father as a last observation underlined the urgent need to fill the very serious and unacceptable gap that separates the developing world from the developed in terms of the capacity to progress in biomedical research. He then specifically pointed to the need to conquer the AIDS epidemic in Africa.

Archbishop Javier Lozano Barragán, President of the Pontifical Council for Pastoral Health Care, delivered the initial address. He denounced and gave a warning on how a new paradigm has been developed in international organizations that totally denies Christianity and transcendental objective values. The Archbishop underlined how, the values of "national sovereignty, religions, dogmas, natural and traditional values," are rejected. The main concern of this new vision is to protect the ecosystem that takes a quasi-divine nature. The bioethics that are a consequence of this new paradigm are closed to the Transcendent and can be considered "subjective" or "autonomous".

The meeting was well briefed on the current trends and directions of Biomedical research and its most important areas; like Neurology, Genetics, Molecular Biology, and transplant studies. Many important and qualified speakers intervened in the debate. Between them we can mention: Prof. Juan de Dios Vial Correa, the President of the Academy, who delivered a very significant analysis of the ethics of animal experimentation. In this study he demonstrated that animals can be used for experimentation if certain criteria are respected, like the avoidance of unnecessary suffering and if there is a true need to use animals for serious scientific research. Prof. Gonazalo Herranz offered an important commentary on the History of the Christian contribution to the Ethics of Biomedical research. Prof. William E. May, spoke on Human dignity and Biomedical research. He clarified the conditions under which research can be done on human persons always respecting their dignity. For that reason he underlined the need to always respect the principle of free and informed consent of the persons that volunteer as subjects for a scientific experiment. Prof. Eugene Diamond spoke on the Conflict of Interests in Biomedical Research: Economics and Ideology. In his presentation Dr. Diamond gave ample evidence of situations in which vested economic interests of authors or institutions have led them to present dubious scientific data or to ignore scientific information that was contrary to their interests. He also made a strong case against "advocate science" that consists in the propounding of so called "scientific" claims or rejecting counterclaims based not on the quality of objective data involved but rather on a hidden political agenda. Prof. Roberto Colombo made a valuable plea on behalf of the "Vulnerable" Subjects of Biomedical Research, marking the special case of the Human Embryo. Prof. Robert Spaeman, presented an insightful philosophical contribution to the nature of scientific research and the human quest for knowledge that is part and parcel of human nature.

At the end of the debate Bishop Elio Sgreccia, vice president of the Pontifical Academy of Life, made a very serious presentation on "Policy in Biomedical Research Values and Priorities". Within his indications on research policy he underlined the current awareness of research as a tool for development at the same time the need to avoid a monopoly of the state on research. He showed how the Church is directly committed to the promotion of scientific research and ready to provide it with an ethical guidance. He underlined how the Church is capable of enriching scientific research itself by presenting an overall vision of man that leads to the pursuit of his good. To evaluate the ethical value of biomedical research he proposed a triangular method. It has three stages, the presentation of biomedical data, the in-depth study of the anthropological values involved, and the elaboration as a consequence, of the ethical norms that should guide the action of the researchers taking into account the biomedical facts and the values affected. He expressed the very valid concern that Catholic Universities should be provided with sufficient resources to do research that is dedicated to the overall good of man and free from any compromises that obfuscate its commitment to the truth man and free from any compromises that obfuscate its commitment to the truth.

The meeting concluded its work approving a final communiqué which reflected and summarized the main themes discussed and made a proposal for an ethical commitment for researchers at the biomedical level. In its initial premise this document underlined how the development of science in the last decades has produced cultural and social transformations that created hopes of concrete improvements for the life and future of man. At the same time some areas of research have created problems and doubts of an ethical and religious nature showing how necessary it is that science should receive an ethical guidance that directs it towards the common good. Without an ethical reference science can be ambivalent. It may either be used for the good or for the destruction of men. The document asks researchers to pledge a commitment to: A rigorous scientific methodology. The avoidance of conflicts of interest. That science and technology should be used at the service of the human person respecting his dignity and rights. All research and its applications should be based upon a criterion of moral goodness. To all human beings from the first moment of their existence up to their natural death should be guaranteed the full respect which is due to a human person. The utility and obligation of a serious and responsible experimentation on animals is recognized before applying any new technologies to man. Clinical experimentation on men should be done only after a clear knowledge is reached as to the goals and possible applications of the research. Every person that participates as a research subject should do it only on the basis of a free and informed consent.

This 9th General Assembly of the Pontifical Academy of Life concluded its work providing the Church and the world with an important advance in the understanding of the problems of biomedical research and with significant guidelines on how to confront contemporary problems and abuses that are a threat to life and human dignity.

Facts of Life: Chapter 9: Catholic Church Teachings on Abortion: On the Historical Opposition of the Catholic Church to Abortion

SHARE

On the Historical Opposition of the Catholic Church to Abortion.

"I think it undeniable that some of the liberal's bungling can be dismissed as the unseemly sputterings and stutterings of a transparently camouflaged anti-Catholic bias ..."

— Roger Wertheimer.[3]

Lies to Confuse. The most common pro-abortion lie about Catholic Church teaching claims that the Church has not always condemned abortion. This particular lie has been effectively used by unscrupulous pro-abortion activists all over the world to confuse and neutralize their Catholic opposition.

Just a few of the various forms this pro-abortion lie assumes are shown in Figure 9-1. The first quote, by the propaganda front group 'Religious' Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC), summarizes many of the most common outright pro-abortion lies about the early history of Church teachings regarding abortion.

Typical Pro-Abortion Deceptions Regarding Catholic Church Teachings on Abortion

"Catholic theology, which now regards the early fetus as a person, did not always do so. The Church first adopted the belief of Aristotle, St. Jerome, St. Augustine, and St. Thomas Aquinas that ensoulment occurs several weeks after conception. Pope Innocent III, who ruled at the turn of the 13th Century, made that belief part of Church doctrine, allowing abortion until fetal animation. It was not until 1869 that the Church prohibited abortion at any time and for any reason."

— 'Religious' Coalition for Abortion Rights (now RCRC). June 1978

propaganda pamphlet entitled "ABORTION: Why Religious Organizations in the United States Want to Keep it Legal."

"I go to church on Sunday but do not subscribe to many of the basic tenets of the Church. That does not mean I am any less a Catholic."

— Pamela Maraldo, former president of the Planned Parenthood

Federation of America (PPFA), quoted in "More on Maraldo."

National STOPP News, January 20, 1993, page 1 [now try this,

Pammy: Say one of your board members claimed that "I come to all the Planned Parenthood meetings but do not subscribe to many of its basic beliefs. I believe that the unborn are persons, I do not believe in convenience abortions, I do not believe that we have any business handing out contraceptives in school. That does not mean

I am any less 'pro-choice' than anyone else." Wouldn't you

"excommunicate" him from Planned

Parenthood?]

"The Catholic Church is not consistent in its teaching. From 1211 to 1869, it recognised two types of foetus. It taught that the male foetus became animated at 40 days, and the female at 80 days. Furthermore, until 1869 the Church allowed abortion until quickening."

— Diane Munday of the British pro-abortion group Association for the Reform of the Abortion Law (ARAL). Quoted in Colin Francome's

Abortion Freedom: A Worldwide Movement. London: George Allen

& Unwin Publishers, 1984, pages 89 and 90.

"[Prior to 1869], the Church had officially accepted the theory of delayed animation for 500 years ... Abortion before ensoulment was tolerated by the Catholic Church."

— Canadian psychiatrist Wendell W. Watters. Compulsory Pregnancy:

The Truth About Abortion. Toronto: McLelland & Steward, 1976, page 90.

"Abortion was only declared illegal and condemned by the Roman Catholic Church in the 1800's. The Catholic Church condoned abortion until the fetus "quickenened," meaning the time when a pregnant woman first feels the unborn child moving."

— Ann Lukits. "The Agony of Abortion." The Kingston, Ontario Whig Standard, September 24, 1983, page 1.

"Until just over 100 years ago, the Vatican's attitude towards abortion was relatively tolerant."

— Penney Kome. "Woman's Place." Homemaker's Magazine, April 1976, page 21.

"Until the end of the 16th Century with the reign of Pope Sixtus V, the Church did, indeed, permit the termination of pregnancies within 40 days of conception for a male and 80 days for a female — the old Aristotelian concept ... But I believe that a case can be made — and many intelligent Catholics have agreed with me — that the church's attitudes towards abortion have varied in past history, are not always consistent and can, like other elements of Catholic dogma, be changed to meet man's increased enlightenment and changing social conditions."

— Illegal abortionist Ruth Barnett. They Weep On My Doorstep.

Beaverton, Oregon: Halo Publishers, 1969, pages 106 and 107.

In a single pamphlet, 'Catholics' for a free Choice makes more than 50 deliberate misstatements of Catholic teaching. These are deliberately chosen in order to cause the most confusion possible. Some of these are listed below, and have comments following them in [brackets].

"We believe that women should not be the victims of random fertility" [This sounds as if pregnancy bears no relation whatever to sexual activity]. ... "The Catholic hierarchy is trapped in an outdated authoritarianism which denies full equality to women and regards sex as evil" [Who regards sex as evil? those who do everything they can to suppress natural fertility!] ... "The church never formulated an infallible, or consistent, teaching against abortion ... Though the church preaches aggressively against birth control and abortion, there is no infallible dogma to substantiate its position" [The purpose of an infallible statement is not to "substantiate." See the Canon of St. Vincent of Lorenz]. ... "The law in a pluralistic society should not be written to enforce the teachings of one church against the moral principles of other churches and individuals" [Well, this is what is happening now. The Unitarian principle that life begins at birth is in force]. ... "The Catholic Church opposes every reliable method of birth control" [What about NFP at 98 percent? See Chapter 21,

"Contraception"] ... "Before 1869, the Catholic Church held that the early fetus did not have a soul, and therefore was not fully human. Consequently, it could be permissible to abort in early pregnancy" [As proven in this Chapter, abortion was never permissible. It was punishable at all stages]. ... "Catholics are disturbed by the excursions of the Catholic hierarchy into anti-abortion politics, which constitute a threat to the separation of church and state. ... According to Vatican II, "Declaration on Religious Liberty:" "The Christian faithful have the civil right of freedom from interference in leading their lives according to their conscience"" [see Father John Courtney Murray's refutation of these statements later in this Chapter]. ... "Catholic women have abortions; Catholic doctors perform abortions; Catholic communicants work as counselors in abortion and family planning clinics; Catholics are actively engaged in the pro-choice movement" [this is true, but so what? Catholic men rape women and murder others, but this does not justify their actions].

— 'Catholics' for a Free Choice undated pamphlet entitled "Did You Know that Most Catholics Believe in Reproductive Freedom?"

"Although Catholic teaching on abortion has shifted through the centuries, the current position is clear: abortion is murder. This position has been fixed since 1869, when Pope Pius IX reinstated the doctrine that the soul enters the body at the moment of conception; from that moment on, the fetus is therefore a person. Furthermore, because the fetus has a soul, it must be baptized in order to remove original sin. Catholics therefore believe that not only is abortion murder, but it also condemns the unborn person to Hell."

— Michael Carrera. Sex: The Facts, The Acts, and Your Feelings. New York: Crown Books, 1981, page 290.

Michael Carrera's quote in Figure 9-1 is particularly significant. He calls himself 'Catholic,' yet makes at least nine major doctrinal errors in his short one-paragraph quote. In fact, this self-proclaimed "expert" does not make a single correct statement in this widely-circulated passage.

It is frightening to realize that uninformed people look to trash like this for clarification of the official teachings of the Catholic Church!

Summary of the Rebuttal. The falsehoods shown in Figure 9-1 have been bandied about by devious pro-abortionists for the last century, and the time has come to lay them to rest once and for all.

Most importantly, the Catholic Church has never "approved of" or "condoned" abortion in any part of its history. It has never taught that the time of 'ensoulment' of the unborn child depended on its sex, as stated above; this was merely the speculation of two theologians (who, by the way, both condemned abortion at all times).

And the Catholic Church has never accepted the theory of delayed animation. The only time that the Church has ever addressed this question is when Pope Innocent XI officially condemned the theory that animation took place at birth.

The teachings of the Catholic Church have been uniformly against abortion in any form, and have been stated and restated consistently through the centuries.

Those who believe otherwise are hereby challenged to produce a statement by any Pope, cardinal or bishop supporting abortion from any period in history (declarations by Modernist priests with suspended teaching authority don't count).

Facts of Life: Chapter 9: Catholic Church Teachings on Abortion: Early Teachings of the Church

Early Teachings of the Church. Figure 9-2 lists some quotes from the early history of the Church delineating its true teachings regarding abortion. This figure depicts passages from only a few of the many early Church documents that explicitly condemned abortion.

Other early Church theologians examined the methods, motives, morality and metaphysics of abortion. They all described abortion as a heinous sin, and their writings are listed in the second half of Figure 9-2.

Early Pronouncements of the Catholic Church Against Abortion

"The second commandment of the teaching: You shall not murder. You shall not commit adultery. You shall not seduce boys. You shall not commit fornication. You shall not steal. You shall not practice magic. You shall not use potions. You shall not procure [an] abortion, nor destroy a newborn child."

— The Didache ("The Lord's Instruction to the Gentiles through the Twelve Apostles"). II, 2, translated by J.A. Kleist, S.J., Ancient Christian Writers, Volume 6. Westminster, 1948, page 16.

"And near that place I saw another strait place ... and there sat women ... And over against them many children who were born to them out of due time sat crying. And there came forth from them rays of fire and smote the women in the eyes. And these were the accursed who conceived and caused abortion."

— The Apocalypse of Peter, 25 (A.D. 137).

"The way of light, then, is as follows. If any one desires to travel to the appointed place, he must be zealous in his works. The knowledge, therefore, which is given to us for the purpose of walking in this way, is the following ... Thou shalt not slay the child by procuring abortion; nor, again, shalt thou destroy it after it is born."
— Barnabas (c. 70-138), Epistle, Volume II, page 19.

"For us [Christians], murder is once and for all forbidden; so even the child in the womb, while yet the mother's blood is still being drawn on to form the human being, it is not lawful for us to destroy. To forbid birth is only quicker murder. It makes no difference whether one takes away the life once born or destroys it as it comes to birth. He is a man, who is to be a man; the fruit is always present in the seed."

— Tertullian, 197, Apologeticus, page 9.

"What man of sound mind, therefore, will affirm, while such is our character, that we are murderers? ... [W]hen we say that those women who use drugs to bring on abortion commit murder, and will have to give an account to God for the abortion, on what principle should we commit murder? For it does not belong to the same person to regard the very fetus in the womb as a created being, and therefore an object of God's care, and when it has passed into life, to kill it; and not to expose an infant, because those who expose them are chargeable with child-murder, and on the other hand, when it has been reared to destroy it."

— Athenagoras of Athens, letter to Marcus Aurelius in 177, Legatio pro Christianis ("Supplication for the Christians"), page 35.

"It is among you that I see newly-begotten sons at times exposed to wild beasts and birds, or dispatched by the violent death of strangulation; and there are women who, by the use of medicinal potions, destroy the unborn life in their wombs, and murder the child before they bring it forth. These practices undoubtedly are derived from a custom established by your gods; Saturn, though he did not expose his sons, certainly devoured them."

— Minucius Felix, theologian (c. 200-225), Octavius, p. 30.

"... if we would not kill off the human race born and developing according to God's plan, then our whole lives would be lived according to nature. Women who make use of some sort of deadly abortion drug kill not only the embryo but, together with it, all human kindness."

— Clement of Alexandria, priest and the "Father of Theologians"

(c. 150-220), Christ the Educator, Volume II, page 10. Also see

Octavius, c.30, nn. 2-3.

"Sometimes this lustful cruelty or cruel lust goes so far as to seek to procure a baneful sterility, and if this fails the fetus conceived in the womb is in one way or another smothered or evacuated, in the desire to destroy the offspring before it has life, or if it already lives in the womb, to kill it before it is born. If both man and woman are party to such practices they are not spouses at all; and if from the first they have carried on thus they have come together not for honest wedlock, but for impure gratification; if both are not party to these deeds, I make bold to say that either the one makes herself a mistress of the husband, or the other simply the paramour of his wife."

— St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo (354-430), De Nuptius et Concupiscus

("On Marriage and Concupiscence"), 1.17.

"I cannot bring myself to speak of the many virgins who daily fall and are lost to the bosom of the Church, their mother ... Some go so far as to take potions, that they may insure barrenness, and thus murder human beings almost before their conception. Some, when they find themselves with child through their sin, use drugs to procure abortion, and when, as often happens, they die with their offspring, they enter the lower world laden with the guilt not only of adultery against Christ but also of suicide and child murder."

— St. Jerome, Bible Scholar and translator (c. 340-420), Letter to Eustochium, 22.13.

"Women who were reputed to be believers began to take drugs to render themselves sterile, and to bind themselves tightly so as to expel what was being conceived, since they would not, on account of relatives and excess wealth, want to have a child by a slave or by any insignificant person. See, then, into what great impiety that lawless one has proceeded, by teaching adultery and murder at the same time!"

— Hippolytus, Refutation of All Heresies (A.D. 228).

"When God forbids us to kill, he not only prohibits us from open violence, which is not even allowed by the public laws, but he warns us against the commission of those things which are esteemed lawful among men ... Therefore, let no one imagine that even this is allowed, to strangle newly-born children, which is the greatest impiety; for God breathes into their souls for life, and not for death. But men, that there may be no crime with which they may not pollute their hands, deprive [unborn] souls as yet innocent and simple of the light which they themselves have not given.

"Can anyone, indeed, expect that they would abstain from the blood of others who do not abstain even from their own? But these are, without any controversy, wicked and unjust."

— Lactantius, Divine Institutes 6:20 (A.D. 307).

"He that kills another with a sword, or hurls an axe at his own wife and kills her, is guilty of willful murder; not he who throws a stone at a dog, and unintentionally kills a man, or who corrects one with a rod, or scourge, in order to reform him, or who kills a man in his own defense, when he only designed to hurt him. But the man, or woman, is a murderer that gives a philtum, if the man that takes it die upon it; so are they who take medicines to procure abortion; and so are they who kill on the highway, and rapparees."

"The hairsplitting difference between formed and unformed makes no difference to us. Whoever deliberately commits abortion is subject to the penalty for homicide. ... Let her that procures abortion undergo ten years' penance, whether the embryo were perfectly formed, or not."

— St. Basil the Great, priest (c. 329-379), First Canonical Letter, from the work Three Canonical Letters. Canons 2 and 8. Loeb Classical Library, Volume III, pages 20 to 23.

"Wherefore I beseech you, flee fornication ... Why sow where the ground makes its care to destroy the fruit? — where there are many efforts at abortion? — where there is murder before the birth? For even the harlot you do not let continue a mere harlot, but make her a murderess also. You see how drunkenness leads to prostitution, prostitution to adultery, adultery to murder; or rather to a something even worse than murder. For I have no name to give it, since it does not take off the thing born, but prevents its being born. Why then do thou abuse the gift of God, and fight with His laws, and follow after what is a curse as if a blessing, and make the chamber of procreation a chamber for murder, and arm the woman that was given for childbearing unto slaughter? For with a view to drawing more money by being agreeable and an object of longing to her lovers, even this she is not backward to do, so heaping upon thy head a great pile of fire. For even if the daring deed be hers, yet the causing of it is thine."

— St. John Chrysostom, Homilies on Romans 24 (A.D. 391).

"Among surgeons' tools there is a certain instrument, which is formed with a nicely-adjusted flexible frame for opening the uterus first of all and keeping it open; it is further furnished with an annular blade, by means of which the limbs [of the child] within the womb are dissected with anxious but unfaltering care; its last appendage being a blunted or covered hook, wherewith the entire fetus is extracted by a violent delivery.

"There is also [another instrument in the shape of] a copper needle or spike, by which the actual death is managed in this furtive robbery of life: They give it, from its infanticide function, the name of embruosphaktes, [meaning] "the slayer of the infant," which of course was alive ...

"[The doctors who performed abortions] all knew well enough that a living being had been conceived, and [they] pitied this most luckless infant state, which had first to be put to death, to escape being tortured alive. ..."

"Now we allow that life begins with conception because we contend that the soul also begins from conception; life taking its commencement at the same moment and place that the soul does."

— Tertullian, theologian (150-225), Treatise on the Soul, pages 25 and 27.

"Concerning women who commit fornication, and destroy that which they have conceived, or who are employed in making drugs for abortion, a former decree excluded them until the hour of death, and to this some have assented. Nevertheless, being desirous to use somewhat greater lenity, we have ordained that they fulfill ten years [of penance], according to the prescribed degrees."

— Council of Ancyra canon 21, (A.D. 314).

"Thou shalt not use magic. Thou shalt not use witchcraft; for He says, 'You shall not suffer a witch to live' [Ex. 22:18]. Thou shalt not slay thy child by causing abortion, nor kill that which is begotten; for "everything that is shaped, and has received a soul from God, if it be slain, shall be avenged, as being unjustly destroyed."
— The Apostolic Constitutions 7:3 (A.D. 400).

"Those who give drugs for procuring abortion, and those who receive poisons to kill the foetus, are subjected to the penalty for murder."
— Trullian (Quinisext) Council (692), Canons, 91.

More Recent Teachings of the Church. The Catholic Church has always taught that abortion is murder. However, some confusion exists because the penalties for the murder of a preborn child have been changed several times in the history of the Church.

In 1588, Pope Sixtus V tried to discourage abortion by reserving absolution to the Holy See alone. Because of the numbers of abortions taking place, it soon became evident that such an arrangement was impractical, and so in 1591, just three years later, Pope Gregory XIV returned absolution for abortion to the local ordinary (the local bishop). [4]

Paolo Zacchia, Physician-General of the Vatican, published a book in 1620 entitled Quaestiones Medico-Legales in which he argued that ensoulment takes place at conception and that development is a continuum.[5]

In 1679, Pope Innocent XI condemned the writings and teachings of two theologians, Thomas Sanchez and Joannis Marcus, who believed that abortion was lawful if the fetus was not yet animated or ensouled and the purpose of the abortion was to prevent shame to the woman.[6] This act showed decisively that the Church did not tolerate abortion, and was willing to prosecute those who spread error regarding child-killing.

The French Jesuit Theophile Raynaud (1582-1663) believed that indirect abortion of a viable baby to save the mother's life was allowable. This was notable because he was the first theologian to hold this view and his teachings were unique in the Church until about 1850. This is an early statement of the "double effect," described later in this Chapter.

In 1869, Pope Pius IX took the action that 'Catholic' pro-abortionists deliberately misrepresent in order to buttress their heretical views. The abortophiles allege that, in this year, the Pope condemned abortion for the very first time.

In reality, the Pope officially removed the distinction between the animated and unanimated fetus from the Code of Canon Law.[7] This action dealt not with theology, but with discipline, and merely made the punishment for abortion at any stage uniform. The Pope removed the distinction in order to support the Church's stance that life and ensoulment both begin at conception.

— Hippolytus, Refutation of All Heresies (A.D. 228).

"When God forbids us to kill, he not only prohibits us from open violence, which is not even allowed by the public laws, but he warns us against the commission of those things which are esteemed lawful among men ... Therefore, let no one imagine that even this is allowed, to strangle newly-born children, which is the greatest impiety; for God breathes into their souls for life, and not for death. But men, that there may be no crime with which they may not pollute their hands, deprive [unborn] souls as yet innocent and simple of the light which they themselves have not given.

"Can anyone, indeed, expect that they would abstain from the blood of others who do not abstain even from their own? But these are, without any controversy, wicked and unjust."

— Lactantius, Divine Institutes 6:20 (A.D. 307).

"He that kills another with a sword, or hurls an axe at his own wife and kills her, is guilty of willful murder; not he who throws a stone at a dog, and unintentionally kills a man, or who corrects one with a rod, or scourge, in order to reform him, or who kills a man in his own defense, when he only designed to hurt him. But the man, or woman, is a murderer that gives a philtum, if the man that takes it die upon it; so are they who take medicines to procure abortion; and so are they who kill on the highway, and rapparees."

"The hairsplitting difference between formed and unformed makes no difference to us. Whoever deliberately commits abortion is subject to the penalty for homicide. ... Let her that procures abortion undergo ten years' penance, whether the embryo were perfectly formed, or not."

— St. Basil the Great, priest (c. 329-379), First Canonical Letter, from the work Three Canonical Letters. Canons 2 and 8. Loeb Classical Library, Volume III, pages 20 to 23.

"Wherefore I beseech you, flee fornication ... Why sow where the ground makes its care to destroy the fruit? — where there are many efforts at abortion? — where there is murder before the birth? For even the harlot you do not let continue a mere harlot, but make her a murderess also. You see how drunkenness leads to prostitution, prostitution to adultery, adultery to murder; or rather to a something even worse than murder. For I have no name to give it, since it does not take off the thing born, but prevents its being born. Why then do thou abuse the gift of God, and fight with His laws, and follow after what is a curse as if a blessing, and make the chamber of procreation a chamber for murder, and arm the woman that was given for childbearing unto slaughter? For with a view to drawing more money by being agreeable and an object of longing to her lovers, even this she is not backward to do, so heaping upon thy head a great pile of fire. For even if the daring deed be hers, yet the causing of it is thine."

— St. John Chrysostom, Homilies on Romans 24 (A.D. 391).

"Among surgeons' tools there is a certain instrument, which is formed with a nicely-adjusted flexible frame for opening the uterus first of all and keeping it open; it is further furnished with an annular blade, by means of which the limbs [of the child] within the womb are dissected with anxious but unfaltering care; its last appendage being a blunted or covered hook, wherewith the entire fetus is extracted by a violent delivery.
