Unde cum a sanctissimis et antiquissimis Patribus magno unanimique consensu secreta confessio sacramentalis, qua ab initio Ecclesia sancta usa est et modo etiam utitur, fuerit semper commendata, manifeste refellitur inanis eorum calumnia, qui eam a divino mandato alienam et inventum humanum esse, atque a Patribus in Concilio Lateranensi [IV] congregatis initium habuisse, docere non verentur [can. 8]; neque enim per Lateranense Concilium Ecclesia statuit, ut Christi fideles confiterentur, quod iure divino necessarium et institutum esse intellexerat, sed ut praeceptum confessionis saltem semel in anno ab omnibus et singulis, cum ad annos discretionis pervenissent, impleretur. Unde iam in universa Ecclesia cum ingenti animarum fidelium fructu observatur mos ille salutaris confitendi sacro illo et maxime acceptabili tempore Quadragesimae, quem morem haec sancta Synodus maxime probat et amplectitur tamquam pium et merito retinendum [*can. 8; cf. 812].

Cap. 6. De ministro huius sacramenti et absolutione examined himself diligently and explored all the nooks and crannies of his conscience, he confess those sins by which he recalls that he has mortally offended his Lord and God; but the other sins, which do not come to mind when he is carefully examining himself, are understood to have been included in a general form in the same confession; for those we say confidently with the prophet, “Lord, clear me from hidden faults” [Ps 19:12]. The difficulty of this kind of confession and the shame at uncovering sins could seem to be burdensome were it not lightened by so many advantages and consolations that will most certainly be granted through the absolution to all who approach the sacrament worthily.

1684 Circa ministrum autem huius sacramenti declarat sancta Synodus, falsas esse et a veritate Evangelii penitus alienas doctrinas omnes, quae ad alios quosvis homines praeter episcopos et sacerdotes [can. 10] clavium ministerium perniciose extendunt, putantes verba illa Domini: “Quaecumque alligaveritis super terram, erunt ligata et in caelo, et quaecumque solveritis super terram, erunt soluta et in caelo” [Mt 18:18], et:

For the rest, with regard to the manner of confessing secretly to a priest alone, though Christ has not forbidden anyone to confess his sins publicly—in expiation for his offenses and in self-humiliation, both as an example to others and for the edification of the Church that has been offended—yet this is not commanded by divine precept, nor would it be really well-considered to enjoin by human law that sins, especially secret ones, must be revealed by public confession [can. 6].

The fact that secret sacramental confession, which Holy Church has used from her beginning and still uses, has always been commended by the most venerable and most ancient Fathers with great and unanimous agreement clearly refutes that empty calumny of those who do not fear to teach that it is a human invention foreign to the divine command, originating from the Fathers assembled in the [Fourth] Lateran Council [can. 8]; for the Church did not establish through the Lateran Council that Christ’s faithful should confess, which she had understood to be a necessary institution of divine law, but that the precept of confession should be discharged by one and all at least once a year on their reaching the age of discretion. Hence, throughout the whole Church, at that sacred and most acceptable season of Lent, the salutary custom of confessing is observed with very great fruit for the souls of the faithful; and this custom the present holy council thoroughly approves and cherishes as holy and deserving to be retained [*can. 8; cf. 812].

Chapter 6. The Minister of the Sacrament and Absolution

With regard to the minister of this sacrament, the holy council declares: False and totally foreign to the truth of the Gospel are all doctrines that in a very destructive manner extend the ministry of the keys to any other men besides bishops and priests [can. 10]. They do so in the belief that the words of the Lord: “Whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven” [Mt 18:18], and: “If “Quorum remisieritis peccata, remittuntur eis, et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt” [Io 20:23], ad omnes Christi fideles indifferenter et promiscue contra institutionem huius sacramenti ita fuisse dicta, ut quivis potestatem habeat remittendi peccata, publica quidem per correptionem, si correptus acieverit, secreta vero per spontaneam confessionem cuicumque factam.

Docet quoque, etiam sacerdotes, qui peccato mortali tenentur, per virtutem Spiritus Sancti in ordinatione collatam tamquam Christi ministros functionem remittendi peccata exercere, eosque prave sentire, qui in malis sacerdotibus hanc potestatem non esse contendunt.

Quamvis autem absolutio sacerdotis alieni beneficii sit dispensatio, tamen non est solum nudum ministerium vel annuntiandi Evangelium vel declarandi remissa esse peccata, sed ad instar actus iudicialis, quo ab ipso velut a iudice sententia pronuntiatur [can. 9].

Atque ideo non debet paenitens adeo sibi de sua ipsius fide blandiri, ut, etiamsi nulla illi adsit contritio, aut sacerdoti animus serio agendi et vere absolvendi desit, putet tamen se propter suam solam fidem vere et coram Deo esse absolutum. Nec enim fides sine paenitentia remissionem ullam peccatorum praestaret, nec is esset nisi salutis suae negligentissimus, qui sacerdotem ioco se absolventem cognosceret, et non alium serio agentem sedulo requireret [cf. *1462].

Cap. 7. De casuum reservatione

Quoniam igitur natura et ratio iudicii illud exposcit, ut sententia in subditos dumtaxat feratur, persuasum semper in Ecclesia Dei fuit et verissimum esse Synodus haec confirmat, nullius momenti absolutionem eam esse debere, quam sacerdos in eum profert, in quem ordinariam aut subdelegatam non habet iurisdictionem.

Magnopere vero ad christiani populi disciplinam pertinere sanctissimis Patribus nostris visum est, ut atrociora quaedam et graviora crimina non a quibusvis, sed a summis dumtaxat sacerdotibus absolventur. Unde merito Pontifices Maximi, pro suprema potestate sibi in Ecclesia universa tradita, causas aliquas criminum graviore suo potuerunt peculiari iudicio reservare.

Neque dubitandum est, quando omnia, quae a Deo sunt, ordinata sunt [cf. Rm 13:1], quin hoc idem episcopis omnibus in sua cuique dioecesi, in aedificationem tamen, non in destructionem [cf. 2 Cor 10:8; 13:10] liceat pro illis in subditos tradita supra reliquos inferiores sacerdotes auctoritate, praesertim quoad illa, quibus excommunicationis censura annexa est. Hanc autem delictorum you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained” [Jn 20:23], were, in contradiction with the institution of this sacrament, addressed to all the faithful of Christ without difference or distinction, with the result that everyone has the power to forgive sins, public ones by public correction, if the sinner complies, and secret ones by spontaneous confession to anyone.

The council likewise teaches that even priests who are in mortal sin exercise the office of forgiving sins as ministers of Christ through the power of the Holy Spirit conferred in ordination and that the opinion of those who maintain that bad priests do not possess this power is wrong.

It is true that priestly absolution is the dispensation of another’s bounty; yet, it does not consist in the mere ministry of proclaiming the Gospel or of declaring that the sins have been forgiven, but it has the pattern of a judicial act in which the priest pronounces sentence as judge [can. 9]. 1685

Hence the penitent should not be so complacent about his faith as to consider himself truly absolved before God on account of his faith alone, even if he has no contrition or if the priest has no mind to act seriously and to absolve truly. For faith without penance would effect no remission of sins, and one would be most negligent about his salvation if, knowing that a priest absolved him jokingly, he would not diligently seek another who would act seriously [cf. *1462].

Chapter 7. Jurisdiction and Reservation of Cases

It is in the nature and meaning of a judgment that the sentence be pronounced only over one’s subjects. Hence the Church of God has always been convinced, and this council confirms as fully true, that absolution is of no value if it is pronounced by a priest on one over whom he has neither ordinary nor delegated jurisdiction. 1686

Our most holy Fathers judged that it was very important for the discipline of the Christian people that certain more heinous and more serious offenses should be absolved, not by any priest whatever, but only by those of highest rank; hence popes, in virtue of the supreme power committed to them in the universal Church, could rightly reserve to their own particular decision some more serious classes of offense. 1687

And (since all that is from God is well ordered [cf. Rom 13:1]) there can be no doubt that this same procedure is lawful for all bishops, each in his own diocese, for building up, however, not for destroying [cf. 2 Cor 10:8; 13:10], in virtue of that greater authority committed to them over their subjects than that of other priests of lesser rank, especially with regard to those offenses to reservationem consonum est divinae auctoritati non tantum in externa politia,¹ sed etiam coram Deo vim habere [can. 11].

- 1688 Verumtamen pie admodum, ne hac ipsa occasione aliquis pereat, in eadem Ecclesia Dei custoditum semper fuit, ut nulla sit reservatio in articulo mortis, atque ideo omnes sacerdotes quoslibet paenitentes a quibusvis peccatis et censuris absolvere possunt; extra quem articulum sacerdotes cum nihil possint in casibus reservatis, id unum paenitentibus persuadere nitantur, ut ad superiores et legitimos iudices pro beneficio absolutionis accedant.

Cap. 8. De satisfactionis necessitate et fructu

- 1689 Demum quoad satisfactionem, quae ex omnibus paenitentiae partibus, quemadmodum a Patribus nostris christiano populo fuit perpetuo tempore commendata, ita una maxime nostra aetate summo pietatis praetextu impugnatur ab iis, qui speciem pietatis habent, virtutem autem eius abnegarunt [cf. 2 Tim 3:5], sancta Synodus declarat, falsum omnino esse et a verbo Dei alienum, culpam a Domino numquam remitti, quin universa etiam poena condonetur [cann. 12 et 15]. Perspicua enim et illustrata in sacris Litteris exempla [cf. Gn 3:16–19; Nm 12:14s; 20:11s; 2 Sm 12:13s] reperiuntur, quibus praeter divinam traditionem hic error quam manifestissime revincitur.

- 1690 Sane et divinae iustitiae ratio exigere videtur, ut aliter ab eo in gratiam recipiantur, qui ante baptismum per ignorantiam deliquerint; aliter vero, qui semel a peccati et daemonis servitute liberati, et accepto Spiritus Sancti dono, scientes templum Dei violare [cf. 1 Cor 3:17] et Spiritum Sanctum contristare [cf. Eph 4:30] non formidaverint.

Et divinam clementiam decet, ne ita nobis absque ulla satisfactione peccata dimittantur, ut, occasione accepta, peccata leviora putantes, velut iniurii et contumeliosi Spiritui Sancto [cf. Hbr 10:29], in graviora labamur, thesaurizantes nobis iram in die irae [cf. Rm 2:5; Iac 5:3]. Procul dubio enim magnopere a peccato revocant, et quasi freno quodam coercent hae satisfactoriae poenae, cautioreque et vigilantiores in futurum paenitentes efficiunt; medentur quoque peccatorum reliquiis, et vitiosos habitus male vivendo comparatos contrariis virtutum actionibus tollunt.

which the penalty of excommunication is attached. It is in harmony with divine authority that this reservation of sins has force not only in external administration¹ but also in the sight of God [can. 11].

Nevertheless, lest anyone perish on that account, it has always been most devoutly observed in the same Church of God that there be no reservation in immediate danger of death, and so all priests may then absolve all penitents without distinction from every kind of sin and censure; outside this particular case, since priests have no power in reserved cases, their one endeavor should be to persuade the penitents to approach judges of higher rank who have legal power to grant absolution.

Chapter 8. The Necessity and Fruit of Satisfaction

Finally, as regards satisfaction: it is among the parts of penance the one that, though at all times recommended to the Christian people by our Fathers, yet in our age has become the main target of attack under the pretext of piety by those who hold the form of religion but deny the power of it [cf. 2 Tim 3:5]. The holy council declares: It is utterly false and contrary to the word of God that the guilt is never pardoned by the Lord without the entire punishment also being remitted [cann. 12 and 15]. For, apart from the divine tradition, clear and striking examples are found in Holy Scripture by which this error is refuted in the plainest possible manner [cf. Gen 3:16–19; Num 12:14f.; 20:11f.; 2 Sam 12:13f.].

Indeed, the nature of divine justice seems to demand that those who have sinned through ignorance before baptism be received in grace in one manner, and in another manner those who have already once been liberated from the slavery of sin and the devil, who have received the gift of the Holy Spirit, and yet have not feared knowingly to violate the temple of God [cf. 1 Cor 3:17] and to grieve the Holy Spirit [cf. Eph 4:30].

It is also in keeping with the divine clemency that sins should not be pardoned to us without any satisfaction, with the consequence that we would consider sin as trivial and, when the occasion arises, would fall into more grievous sins, insulting, as it were, and outraging the Holy Spirit [cf. Heb 10:29], storing up wrath for ourselves on the day of wrath [cf. Rom 2:5; Jas 5:3]. For without doubt these satisfactory penances greatly detach penitents from sin; they act as a bridle to keep them in check and make them more cautious and vigilant in the future. They also heal the after-effects of sin and destroy evil habits, acquired through a bad life, by acts of virtues opposed to them.

*1687¹ Cf. P. Melancthon, Apologia Confessionis Augustanae 13 (BekSchELK 291 / CpRef 27:569).

Neque vero securior ulla via in Ecclesia Dei umquam existimata fuit ad amovendam imminentem a Domino poenam, quam ut haec paenitentiae opera [cf. Mt 3:2, 8; 4:17; 11:21] homines cum vero animi dolore frequentent.

Accedit ad haec, quod, dum satisfaciendo patimur pro peccatis, Christo Iesu, qui pro peccatis nostris satisfecit [cf. Rm 5:10; 1 Io 2:1s], ex quo omnis nostra sufficientia est [cf. 2 Cor 3:5], conformes efficitur, certissimam quoque inde arrham habentes, quod, si compatimur, et conglorificabimur [cf. Rm 8:17].

Neque vero ita nostra est satisfactio haec, quam pro peccatis nostris exsolvimus, ut non sit per Christum Iesum; nam qui ex nobis tamquam ex nobis nihil possumus, eo cooperante, qui nos confortat, omnia possumus [cf. Phil 4:13]. Ita non habet homo, unde gloriatur; sed omnis gloriatio [cf. 1 Cor 1:31; 2 Cor 10:17; Gal 6:14] nostra in Christo est, in quo vivimus [cf. Act 17:28], in quo meremur, in quo satisfacimus, facientes “fructus dignos paenitentiae” [Lc 3:8; Mt 3:8], qui ex illo vim habent, ab illo offeruntur Patri, et per illum acceptantur a Patre [can. 13s].

Debent ergo sacerdotes Domini, quantum spiritus et prudentia suggererit, pro qualitate criminum et paenitentium facultate, salutare et convenientes satisfactiones iniungere, ne, si forte peccatis conniveant et indulgentius cum paenitentibus agant, levissima quaedam opera pro gravissimis delictis iniungendo, alienorum peccatorum participes efficiantur [cf. 1 Tim 5:22]. Habeant autem prae oculis, ut satisfactio, quam imponunt, non sit tantum ad novae vitae custodiam et infirmitatis medicamentum, sed etiam ad praeteritorum peccatorum vindictam et castigationem: nam claves sacerdotum non ad solvendum dumtaxat, sed et ad ligandum concessas [cf. Mt 16:19; 18:18; Io 20:23; can. 15] etiam antiqui Patres et credunt et docent.

Nec propterea existimarunt, sacramentum paenitentiae esse forum irae vel poenarum; sicut nemo umquam catholicus sensit, ex huiusmodi nostris satisfactionibus vim meriti et satisfactionis Domini nostri Iesu Christi vel obscurari vel aliqua ex parte imminui; quod dum Novatores intelligere volunt, ita optimam paenitentiam novam vitam esse docent [cf. *1457], ut omnem satisfactionis vim et usum tollant [can. 13].

Cap. 9. De operibus satisfactionis

Docet praeterea, tantam esse divinae munificentiae largitatem, ut non solum poenis sponte a nobis pro vindicando peccato susceptis, aut sacerdotis arbitrio pro

And no way of averting the punishments that threaten us from the Lord was ever held in the Church of God more secure than the practice of the works of penance done with a sorrowful heart [cf. Mt 3:2, 8; 4:17; cf. 11:21].

Besides, when we suffer in satisfaction for our sins, we conform ourselves to Christ Jesus, who made satisfaction for our sins [cf. Rom 5:10; 1 Jn 2:1f.], from whom comes all our sufficiency [cf. 2 Cor 3:5]; this gives us the surest pledge that, while suffering with him, we shall also be glorified with him [cf. Rom 8:17].

However, this satisfaction that we make for our sins 1691 is not ours in such a way that it be not through Christ Jesus. For, while we can do nothing of ourselves as of ourselves, we can do everything with the cooperation of him who strengthens us [cf. Phil 4:13]. Thus man has nothing wherein to glory, but all our glorying is in Christ [cf. 1 Cor 1:31; 2 Cor 10:17; Gal 6:14], in whom we live [cf. Acts 17:28], in whom we merit, in whom we make satisfaction, bringing forth worthy fruits of penance [cf. Lk 3:8; Mt 3:8]; these fruits have their efficacy from him, by him they are offered to the Father, and through him they are accepted by the Father [can. 13f.].

Hence the priests of the Lord have the duty to impose 1692 salutary and proportionate satisfactions as suggested by spiritual prudence, in accordance with the nature of the crime and the ability of the penitents, lest they become partakers of the sins of others [cf. 1 Tim 5:22] if they connive at their sins and deal too leniently with them by imposing only some sort of slight penance for very grave delicts. Let them keep in mind that the satisfaction imposed by them is meant not merely as a safeguard for the new life and as a remedy to weakness, but also for the retribution and chastisement of former sins. For the early Fathers also believe and teach that the keys of the priests are given not only to loose but also to bind [cf. Mt 16:19; 18:18; Jn 20:23; can. 15].

They did not for that reason consider the sacrament of penance as a tribunal of wrath and punishment; similarly, no Catholic ever thought that through these satisfactions of ours the value of the merit and satisfaction of our Lord Jesus Christ is obscured or to some extent diminished. This is the interpretation of the innovators when they teach that a new life is the best penance [cf. *1457], with the result that they do away with all efficacy and practice of satisfaction [can. 13].

Chapter 9. The Works of Satisfaction

Moreover, (this council) teaches that the generosity 1693 of the divine bounty is so great that we are able to make satisfaction before God the Father through Christ Jesus, mensura delicti impositis, sed etiam (quod maximum amoris argumentum est) temporalibus flagellis a Deo inflictis et a nobis patienter toleratis apud Deum Patrem per Christum Iesum satisfacere valeamus [can. 13].

not only by the penances that we voluntarily undertake for the expiation of sin or that are imposed on us by the priest's judgment according to the measure of the sin, but also—and this is the most forceful proof of love—by the temporal afflictions imposed on us by God, if we bear them with patience [can. 13].

b. Doctrine on the Sacrament of Extreme Unction

Foreword

1694 Visum est autem sanctae Synodo, praecedenti doctrinae de poenitentia adiungere ea, quae sequuntur de sacramento extremae unctionis, quod non modo poenitentiae, sed et totius christianae vitae, quae perpetua poenitentia esse debet, consummativum existimatum est a Patribus.¹

Primum itaque circa illius institutionem declarat et docet, quod clementissimus Redemptor noster, qui servis suis quovis tempore voluit de salutaribus remediis adversus omnia omnium hostium tela esse prospectum, quemadmodum auxilia maxima in sacramentis aliis praeparavit, quibus Christiani conservare se integros, dum viverent, ab omni graviore spiritus incommodo possint, ita extremae unctionis sacramento finem vitae tamquam firmissimo quodam praesidio munivit [can. 1]. Nam etsi adversarius noster occasiones per omnem vitam quaerat et captet, ut devorare [cf. 1 Pt 5:8] animas nostras quoquo modo possit, nullum tamen tempus est, quo vehementius ille omnes suae versutiae nervos intendat ad perdendos nos penitus, et a fiducia etiam, si possit, divinae misericordiae deturbandos, quam cum impendere nobis exitum vitae prospicit.

Cap. 1. De institutione sacramenti extremae unctionis

1695 Instituta est autem sacra haec unctio infirmorum tamquam vere et proprie sacramentum Novi Testamenti a Christo Domino nostro, apud Marcum quidem insinuatum [cf. Mc 6:13], per Iacobum autem Apostolum ac Domini fratrem fidelibus commendatum ac promulgatum [can. 1], “Infirmatur”, inquit, “quis in vobis? Inducat presbyteros Ecclesiae, et orent super eum, ungentes eum oleo in nomine Domini; et oratio fidei salvabit infirmum, et alleviabit eum Dominus; et, si in peccatis sit, dimittentur ei” [Iac 5:14s].

Quibus verbis, ut ex apostolica traditione per manus accepta Ecclesia didicit, docet materiam, formam, proprium ministrum et effectum huius salutaris sacramenti. Intellexit enim Ecclesia, materiam esse oleum ab

It seemed good to the holy council to add to the preceding doctrine on penance the following concerning the sacrament of extreme unction, which was considered by the Fathers as the consummation not only of penance but also of the whole Christian life, which ought to be a continual penance.¹

First, therefore, with regard to its institution, it declares and teaches the following: Our most merciful Redeemer wished his servants to be provided at all times with salutary remedies against all weapons of all enemies; as in the other sacraments he prepared the greatest aids for Christians to keep themselves, during their lifetime, free from every grave spiritual evil, so did he protect the end of life with the sacrament of extreme unction as with a very strong safeguard [can. 1]. For, though throughout our whole life, our adversary seeks and seizes upon occasions to devour our souls in any possible way [cf. 1 Pt 5:8], yet there is no time when he strains more vehemently all the powers of his cunning to ruin us utterly and, if possible, to make us lose even faith in the divine mercy than when he perceives that the end of our life is near.

Chapter 1: The Institution of the Sacrament of Extreme Unction

This sacred anointing of the sick was instituted by Christ our Lord as a true and proper sacrament of the New Testament. It is alluded to indeed by Mark [cf. Mk 6:13], but it is recommended to the faithful and promulgated by James the apostle and brother of the Lord [can. 1]: “Is any among you sick?” he says, “let him call for the elders [presbyteros] of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith will save the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up; and if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven” [Jas 5:14f.].

By these words, as the Church has learned from the apostolic tradition handed down and received by her, he teaches the matter, the form, the proper minister, and the effect of this salutary sacrament. For the Church has episcopo benedictum; nam unctio aptissime Spiritus Sancti gratiam, qua invisibiliter anima aegrotantis inungitur, repraesentat; formam deinde esse illa verba: “Per istam unctionem” etc.

¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa contra gentiles IV, 73 (Editio Leonina 15:234a₁₈; Parma ed. 5:365b).

Cap. 2. De effectu huius sacramenti

Res porro et effectus huius sacramenti illis verbis explicatur: “Et oratio fidei salvabit infirmum, et alleviabit eum Dominus; et, si in peccatis sit, dimittentur ei” [Iac 5:15]. Res etenim haec gratia est Spiritus Sancti, cuius unctio delicta, si qua sint adhuc expianda, ac peccati reliquias abstergit, et aegroti animam alleviat et confirmat [can. 2], magnam in eo divinae misericordiae fiduciam excitando, qua infirmus sublevatus et morbi incommoda ac labores levius fert, et tentationibus daemonis calcaneo insidiantis [cf. Gn 3:15] facilius resistit, et sanitatem corporis interdum, ubi saluti animae expedit, consequitur.

Cap. 3. De ministro huius sacramenti et tempore, quo dari debeat

Iam vero, quod attinet ad praescriptionem eorum, qui et suscipere et ministrare hoc sacramentum debent, haud obscure fuit illud etiam in verbis praedictis traditum. Nam et ostenditur illic, proprios huius sacramenti ministros esse Ecclesiae presbyteros [can. 4], quo nomine eo loco non aetate seniores aut primores in populo intelligendi veniunt, sed aut episcopi aut sacerdotes ab ipsis rite ordinati per “impositionem manuum presbyterii” [1 Tim 4:14; can. 4].

Declaratur etiam, esse hanc unctionem infirmis adhibendam, illis vero praesertim, qui tam periculose decumbunt, ut in exitu vitae constituti videantur, unde et sacramentum exeuntium nuncupatur. Quod si infirmi post susceptam hanc unctionem convaluerint, iterum huius sacramenti subsidio iuvare poterunt, cum in aliud simile vitae discrimen inciderint.

Quare nulla ratione audiendi sunt, qui contra tam apertam et dilucidam Apostoli Iacobi sententiam [cf. Iac 5:14s] docent, hanc unctionem vel figmentum esse humanum vel ritum a Patribus acceptum, nec mandatum Dei nec promissionem gratiae habentem [can. 1]; et qui illam iam cessasse asserunt, quasi ad gratiam curationum dumtaxat in primitiva Ecclesia referenda esset; et qui dicunt, ritum et usum, quem sancta Romana Ecclesia in huius sacramenti administratione observat, Iacobi Apostoli sententiae repugnare atque ideo in alium commutandum esse; et denique, qui hanc extremam understood that the matter is oil blessed by the bishop, because the anointing very aptly represents the grace of the Holy Spirit with which the soul of the sick is invisibly anointed. And the form consists of these words: “By this unction”, etc.

Chapter 2. The Effect of This Sacrament

Further, the reality and effect of this sacrament are explained in the words: “and the prayer of faith will save the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up; and if he be in sins, they will be forgiven him” [Jas 5:15]. For the reality is the grace of the Holy Spirit, whose anointing takes away the sins, if there be any still to be expiated, and also the remains of sin; it comforts and strengthens the soul of the sick person [can. 2] by awakening in him great confidence in the divine mercy; supported by this, the sick bears more lightly the inconveniences and trials of his illness and resists more easily the temptations of the devil, who lies in wait for his heel [cf. Gen 3:15]; at times it also restores bodily health when it is expedient for the salvation of the soul. 1696

Chapter 3. The Minister of This Sacrament and the Time of Its Administration

The directives as to who must receive and administer this sacrament are also clearly transmitted in the words already quoted. They indicate that the proper ministers of this sacrament are the presbyters of the Church [can. 4]. In this text this word does not refer to those who are senior in age or more influential among the people, but either to bishops or to priests duly ordained by them through the laying on of hands of the presbyterium [cf. 1 Tim 4:14; can. 4]. 1697

It is also declared that this anointing is to be administered to the sick, especially to those who are so dangerously ill that they seem near to death; hence it is also called the sacrament of the dying. If, however, the sick recover after receiving this anointing, they can again receive the help and assistance of this sacrament if they fall into another similar critical condition. 1698

On no account, then, should any attention be paid to those who, contradicting this plain and lucid doctrine of the apostle James [cf. Jas 5:14f.], teach that this anointing is a human invention or a rite received from the Fathers that has no mandate from God and no promise of grace [can. 1]; or to those who assert that this anointing has already ceased, as if it referred only to the gift of healing in the primitive Church; or to those who maintain that the rite and usage observed in the holy Roman Church in the administration of this sacrament are contrary to the doctrine of the apostle James and, therefore, must be 1699 unctionem a fidelibus sine peccato contemni posse affirmant [can. 3].

Haec enim omnia manifestissime pugnant cum perspicuis tanti Apostoli verbis. Nec profecto Ecclesia Romana, aliarum omnium mater et magistra, aliud in hac administranda unctione, quantum ad ea, quae huius sacramenti substantiam perficiunt, observat, quam quod beatus Iacobus praescripsit. Neque vero tanti sacramenti contemptus absque ingenti scelere et ipsius Spiritus Sancti iniuria esse posset.

- 1700 Haec sunt, quae de paenitentiae et extremae unctionis sacramentis haec sancta oecumenica Synodus profitetur et docet, atque omnibus Christi fidelibus credenda et tenenda proponit. Sequentes autem canones inviolabiliter servandos esse tradit, et asserentes contrarium perpetuo damnat et anathematizat.

c. Canons on Both Doctrines

Canons on the Sacrament of Penance

- 1701 Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, in catholica Ecclesia paenitentiam non esse vere et proprie sacramentum pro fidelibus, quoties post baptismum in peccata labuntur, ipsi Deo reconciliandis, a Christo Domino nostro institutum: anathema sit [*cf. 1668–1670].
- 1702 Can. 2. Si quis sacramenta confundens, ipsum baptismum paenitentiae sacramentum esse dixerit, quasi haec duo sacramenta distincta non sint, atque ideo paenitentiam non recte “secundam post naufragium tabulam” appellari:¹ anathema sit [*cf. 1671s, 1542].
- 1703 Can. 3. Si quis dixerit, verba illa Domini Salvatoris: “Accipite Spiritum Sanctum; quorum remisistis peccata, remittuntur eis; et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt” [Jo 20:22s], non esse intelligenda de potestate remittendi et retinendi peccata in sacramento paenitentiae, sicut Ecclesia catholica ab initio semper intellexit; detorsit autem, contra institutionem huius sacramenti, ad auctoritatem praedicandi Evangelium: anathema sit [*cf. 1670].
- 1704 Can. 4. Si quis negaverit¹, ad integram et perfectam peccatorum remissionem requiri tres actus in paenitente quasi materiam sacramenti paenitentiae, videlicet contritionem, confessionem et satisfactionem, quae tres paenitentiae partes dicuntur; aut dixerit, duas tantum esse changed; or finally to those who say that this extreme unction can, without sin, be held in contempt by the faithful [can. 3].

For all this is very plainly contrary to the clear words of this great apostle. Indeed, in the administration of this anointing, as far as what constitutes the substance of this sacrament is concerned, the Roman Church, the mother and teacher of all others, observes nothing different from what blessed James has prescribed. No contempt of so great a sacrament is then possible without a great sin and without offense to the Holy Spirit himself.

These are the points concerning the sacraments of penance and extreme unction that this holy, ecumenical council professes and teaches and proposes to all the faithful to be believed and held. Besides, it submits the following canons to be observed without violation; those who affirm the contrary it condemns and anathematizes forever.

Can. 1. If anyone says that in the Catholic Church penance is not truly and properly a sacrament, instituted by Christ our Lord to reconcile the faithful with God himself as they fall into sin after baptism, let him be anathema [*cf. 1668–1670].

Can. 2. If anyone confuses the sacraments and says that baptism itself is the sacrament of penance, as though these two sacraments were not distinct, and that, therefore, penance is not correctly called “the second plank after shipwreck”,¹ let him be anathema [*cf. 1671f, 1542].

Can. 3. If anyone says that these words of the Lord Savior: “Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained” [Jn 20:22f.] are not to be understood as referring to the power of forgiving and retaining sins in the sacrament of penance, as the Catholic Church has always understood them from the beginning; but if he distorts them, in contradiction with the institution of this sacrament, to make them refer to the authority of preaching the gospel, let him be anathema [*cf. 1670].

Can. 4. If anyone denies¹ that for the full and perfect remission of sins three acts are required of the penitent, constituting, as it were, the matter of the sacrament of penance, namely, contrition, confession, and satisfaction, which are called the three parts of penance; or says that paenitentiae partes, terrores scilicet incussos conscientiae agnito peccato, et fidem conceptam ex Evangelio vel absolute, qua credit quis sibi per Christum remissa peccata: anathema sit [cf. *1673, 1675].

¹*1702 Against J. Calvin: cf. his Institutio religionis christianae, 2nd ed. (1539), 19, no. 17 (CpRef 29:1078).

¹*1704 Thus according to the Confessio Augustana, art. 12 (BekSchELK 66f. / CpRef 26:279); P. Melancthon, Apologia Confessionis Augustanae, art. 12 (BekSchELK 257f. / CpRef 27:540); Melancthon, Disputatio de partibus paenitentiae, nos. 3–6 (CpRef 12:506), and Loci communes, aetas II^a, chapter on the sin against the Holy Spirit (CpRef 21:489f.).

Can. 5. Si quis dixerit, eam contritionem, quae paratur per discussionem, collectionem et detestationem peccatorum, qua quis recogitat annos suos in amaritudine animae suae [Is 38:15], ponderando peccatorum suorum gravitatem, multitudinem, foeditatem, amissionem aeternae beatitudinis, et aeternae damnationis incursum, cum proposito melioris vitae, non esse verum et utilem dolorem, nec praeparare ad gratiam, sed facere hominem hypocritam et magis peccatorem; demum illam esse dolorem coactum et non liberum ac voluntarium: anathema sit [cf. *1676, 1456].

Can. 6. Si quis negaverit, confessionem sacramentalem vel institutam vel ad salutem necessariam esse iure divino;¹ aut dixerit, modum secrete confitendi soli sacerdoti, quem Ecclesia catholica ab initio semper observavit et observat, alienum esse ab institutione et mandato Christi, et inventum esse humanum: anathema sit [cf. *1679–1684].

Can. 7. Si quis dixerit, in sacramento paenitentiae ad remissionem peccatorum necessarium non esse iure divino confiteri omnia et singula peccata mortalia, quorum memoria cum debita et diligenti praemeditatione habeatur, etiam occulta, et quae sunt contra duo ultima decalogi praecepta, et circumstantias, quae peccati speciem mutant; sed eam confessionem tantum esse utilem ad erudiendum et consolandum paenitentem, et olim observatam fuisse tantum ad satisfactionem canonicam imponendam; aut dixerit, eos, qui omnia peccata confiteri student, nihil relinquere velle divinae misericordiae ignoscendum; aut demum non licere confiteri peccata venialia:¹ anathema sit [cf. ut supra].

Can. 8. Si quis dixerit, confessionem omnium peccatorum, qualem Ecclesia servat, esse impossibilem, et traditionem humanam a piis abolendam; aut ad eam non teneri omnes et singulos utriusque sexus Christi fideles iuxta magni Concilii Lateranensis constitutionem, semel in anno, et ob id suadendum esse Christi fidelibus, ut non confiteantur tempore Quadragesimae: anathema sit [cf. *1682s].

Can. 9. Si quis dixerit, absolutionem sacramentalem sacerdotis non esse actum iudiciale, sed nudum there are only two parts of penance, namely, the terrors of a conscience stricken by the realization of sin and the faith derived from the Gospel or from absolution, by which one believes that his sins are forgiven him through Christ, let him be anathema [cf. *1673, 1675].

Can. 5. If anyone says that the contrition that is evoked by examination, consideration, and hatred of sins, whereby one recounts his years in the bitterness of his soul [cf. Is 38:15], reflecting on the grievousness, the multitude, and baseness of his sins, the loss of eternal happiness and the incurring of eternal damnation, along with the resolve of amendment, is not a true and beneficial sorrow and does not prepare for grace, but makes a man a hypocrite and a greater sinner; or finally that this sorrow is forced and not free and voluntary, let him be anathema [cf. *1676, 1456].

Can. 6. If anyone denies that sacramental confession was instituted and is necessary for salvation¹ by divine law; or says that the manner of confessing secretly to a priest alone, which the Catholic Church has always observed from the beginning and still observes, is at variance with the institution and command of Christ and is a human invention, let him be anathema [cf. *1679–1684].

Can. 7. If anyone says that for the remission of sins in the sacrament of penance it is not necessary by divine law to confess each and all mortal sins that one remembers after a due and diligent examination, also secret ones and those against the last two precepts of the Decalogue, as also the circumstances that change the species of a sin; but says that such a confession is useful only to instruct and console the penitent and that in olden times it was observed only in order to impose a canonical penance; or says that those who endeavor to confess all sins want to leave nothing to the divine mercy to pardon; or finally that it is not allowed to confess venial sins,¹ let him be anathema [cf. as above].

Can. 8. If anyone says that confession of all sins as it is observed in the Church is impossible and is a human tradition that pious people must abolish; or that it is not binding on each and all of the faithful of Christ of either sex once a year in accordance with the constitution of the great Lateran Council and that for this reason the faithful of Christ are to be persuaded not to confess during Lent, let him be anathema [cf. *1682f.].

Can. 9. If anyone says that the sacramental absolution of the priest is not a judicial act but a mere ministry of *1706¹ Cf. M. Luther, Contra malignum Ecce iudicium ... defensio (1519), art 7 (Weimar ed. 2:645); J. Calvin, Institutio religionis Christianae, 2nd ed. (1539), 9, no. 22 (CpRef 29:700).

*1707¹ Cf. M. Luther, Confitendi ratio (1520), 9 (Weimar ed. 6:163f.). Cf. also the Parisian censure of the articles of Luther (1521), tit. III on confession, props. 5–6 (Weimar ed. 8:278f.).

ministerium pronuntiandi et declarandi, remissa esse peccata confitenti, modo tantum credat se esse absolutum, aut¹ sacerdos non serio, sed ioco absolvat; aut dixerit non requiri confessionem paenitentis, ut sacerdos ipsum absolvere possit: anathema sit [cf. *1685, 1462].

1710 Can. 10. Si quis dixerit, sacerdotes, qui in peccato mortali sunt, potestatem ligandi et solvendi non habere; aut non solos sacerdotes esse ministros absolutionis, sed omnibus et singulis Christi fidelibus esse dictum: “Quaecumque ligaveritis super terram, erunt ligata et in caelo, et quaecumque solveritis super terram, erunt soluta et in caelo” [Mt 18:18]; et “Quorum remisistis peccata, remittuntur eis, et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt” [Io 20:23], quorum verborum virtute quilibet¹ absolvere possit peccata, publica quidem per correptionem dumtaxat, si correptus acieverit, secreta vero per spontaneam confessionem: anathema sit [cf. *1684].

1711 Can. 11. Si quis dixerit, episcopus non habere ius reservandi sibi casus, nisi quoad externam politiam, atque ideo casuum reservationem non prohibere, quominus sacerdos a reservatis vere absolvat: anathema sit [cf. *1687].

1712 Can. 12. Si quis dixerit, totam poenam simul cum culpa remitti semper a Deo, satisfactionemque paenitentium non esse aliam quam fidem, qua apprehendunt Christum pro eis satisfacisse: anathema sit [cf. *1689].

1713 Can. 13. Si quis dixerit, pro peccatis, quoad poenam temporalem, minime Deo per Christi merita satisfieri poenis ab eo inflictis et patienter toleratis vel a sacerdote iniunctis, sed neque sponte susceptis, ut ieiuniis, orationibus, eleemosynis vel aliis etiam pietatis operibus, atque ideo optimam paenitentiam esse tantum novam vitam: anathema sit [cf. *1690–1692].

1714 Can. 14. Si quis dixerit, satisfactiones, quibus paenitentes per Christum Iesum peccata redimunt, non esse cultus Dei, sed traditiones hominum, doctrinam de gratia et verum Dei cultum atque ipsum beneficium mortis Christi obscurantes: anathema sit [cf. *1692].

1715 Can. 15. Si quis dixerit, claves Ecclesiae esse datas tantum ad solvendum, non etiam ad ligandum, et propterea sacerdotes, dum imponunt poenas confitentibus, agere pronouncing and declaring to him who confesses that his sins are forgiven, provided only he believes himself absolved,¹ even if the priest does not absolve seriously but in jest; or says that the confession of the penitent is not required in order that the priest be able to absolve him, let him be anathema [cf. *1685, 1462].

Can. 10. If anyone says that priests who are in mortal sin do not have the power of binding and loosing or that priests are not the only ministers of absolution, but that to each and all of the faithful it was said: “Whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven” [Mt 18:18]; and “If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained” [Jn 20:23], so that by virtue of these words everyone could absolve <from> sins,¹ <from> public ones merely by correction, if the sinner complies, and <from> secret ones by voluntary confession, let him be anathema [cf. *1684].

Can. 11. If anyone says that bishops do not have the right to reserve cases to themselves, except such as pertain to external government, and that, therefore, the reservation of cases does not prevent a priest from truly absolving from such reserved sins, let him be anathema [cf. *1687].

Can. 12. If anyone says that the whole punishment is always remitted by God together with the guilt and that the satisfaction of penitents is nothing else but the faith by which they realize that Christ has satisfied for them, let him be anathema [cf. *1689].

Can. 13. If anyone says, concerning temporal punishment, that no satisfaction is made to God through the merits of Christ by means of the punishments inflicted by him and patiently borne, or of those imposed by the priest, or finally of those voluntarily undertaken, as fasts, prayers, almsgiving, or other works of piety; and that, therefore, the best penance is merely a new life, let him be anathema [cf. *1690–1692].

Can. 14. If anyone says that the satisfactions by which penitents atone for their sins through Christ Jesus are not worship of God but traditions of men that obscure the doctrine of grace, the true worship of God, and the benefit of Christ’s death itself, let him be anathema [cf. *1692].

Can. 15. If anyone says that the keys have been given to the Church only to loose and not also to bind and that, therefore, the priests, when imposing penances on those contra finem clavium et contra institutionem Christi; et fictionem esse, quod, virtute clavium sublata poena aeterna, poena temporalis plerumque exsolvenda remaneat: anathema sit [cf. *1692].

*1709¹ Read also etiamsi (even if); cf. E. David, in RömQ 34 (1926): 75–82; SGTr 7:358, n. 3); in the schema (chap. 10, TheiTr 1:592a) it is: “. . . credat, se esse absolutum, etiam si contritus non sit aut sacerdos non serio, sed ioco absolvat” (. . . he believes that he is absolved, even if he is not contrite or the priest does not absolve him seriously but in jest).

*1710¹ Cf. M. Luther, Grund und Ursach aller Artikel D. Martin Luthers (Weimar ed. 7:380–85); De captivitate Babylonica Ecclesiae: De sacramento paenitentiae (Weimar ed. 6:547).

who confess, act contrary to the purpose of the keys and to the institution of Christ; and that it is a fiction that, after the eternal punishment has been removed by virtue of the keys, there often remains a temporal punishment to be expiated, let him be anathema [cf. *1692].

Canons concerning Extreme Unction

Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, extremam unctionem non esse vere et proprie sacramentum a Christo Domino nostro institutum [cf. Mc 6:13] et a beato Iacobo Apostolo promulgatum [cf. Iac 5:14s], sed ritum tantum acceptum a Patribus,¹ aut figmentum humanum: anathema sit [cf. *1695, 1699].

Can. 1. If anyone says that extreme unction is not truly 1716 and properly a sacrament instituted by Christ our Lord [cf. Mk 6:13] and promulgated by the blessed apostle James [cf. Jas 5:14f.] but only a rite received from the Fathers¹ or a human invention, let him be anathema [cf. *1695, 1699].

Can. 2. Si quis dixerit, sacram infirmorum unctionem non conferre gratiam, nec remittere peccata, nec alleviare infirmos, sed iam cessasse, quasi olim tantum fuerit gratia curationum: anathema sit [cf. *1699, 1696].

Can. 2. If anyone says that the sacred anointing of the 1717 sick neither confers grace nor remits sins nor comforts the sick; but that it does no longer exist, as if it consisted only in the grace of healing of olden days, let him be anathema [cf. *1699, 1696].

Can. 3. Si quis dixerit, extremae unctionis ritum et usum, quem observat sancta Romana Ecclesia, repugnare sententiae beati Iacobi Apostoli, ideoque eum mutandum, posseque a Christianis absque peccato contemni: anathema sit [cf. *1697].

Can. 3. If anyone says that the rite and usage of 1718 extreme unction that the holy Roman Church observes is contrary to the doctrine of the blessed apostle James and, therefore, must be changed; and that it can without sin be held in contempt by Christians, let him be anathema [cf. *1699].

Can. 4. Si quis dixerit, presbyteros Ecclesiae, quos beatus Iacobus adducendos esse ad infirmum inungendum hortatur, non esse sacerdotes ab episcopo ordinatos, sed aetate seniores in quavis communitate, ob idque proprium extremae unctionis ministrum non esse solum sacerdotem: anathema sit [cf. *1697].

Can. 4. If anyone says that the presbyters of the 1719 Church who, as blessed James exhorts, should be brought to anoint the sick are not priests ordained by a bishop but the senior members of each community and that, for this reason, the proper minister of extreme unction is not only the priest, let him be anathema [cf. *1697].

MARCELLUS II: April 9–May 1, 1555

PAUL IV: May 23, 1555–August 18, 1559

(In order not to interrupt the series of Tridentine documents, a document external to the council by this pope is reported in *1880.)

Continuation and conclusion of the Council of TRENT under PIUS IV:

PIUS IV: December 25, 1559–December 9, 1565

1725–1734: Session 21, July 16, 1562: Doctrine and Canons on Communion under Both Species and the Communion of Young Children

On June 6, 1562, the discussion began on the articles concerning the reception of communion: that is, communion under only one species and the communion of children (SGTr 8:528ff. / TheiTr 2:7ff.); see a summary of the votes in SGTr 8:614ff. and TheiTr 2:35ff. On June 24 a draft of four canons was presented on the manner of receiving the Eucharist and two articles on the concession of the chalice to the laity (SGTr 8:618 / TheiTr 2:39). A draft on the doctrine was added (SGTr 8:653f. / TheiTr 2:45f.), which was later reworked (SGTr 8:685). The canons also were reformulated. At session 21, a decree was brought forth in which the question of granting the chalice to the laity remained undecided. After the question was once again discussed, the synodal Fathers finally decided to abandon any clarification, and in session 22 (September 17, 1562), they approved the decree on the concession of the chalice (*1760) in which the decision was left up to the pope.

¹ *1716 Cf. P. Melancthon, Apologia Confessionis Augustana 13 (BekSchELK 293 / CpRef 27:570); J. Calvin, Institutio religionis Christianae 19, nos. 18–21 (CpRef 29:1078–81).

Ed.: SGTr 8:698–700 / RiTr 109–11 / MaC 33:121E–123E / COeD, 3rd ed., 726f.

Foreword

1725 Sacrosancta oecumenica et generalis Tridentina Synodus . . . cum de tremendo et sanctissimo Eucharistiae sacramento varia diversis in locis errorum monstra nequissimi daemonis artibus circumferantur, ob quae in nonnullis provinciis multi a catholicae Ecclesiae fide atque obedientia videantur discessisse: censuit, ea, quae ad communionem sub utraque specie et parvulorum pertinent, hoc loco exponenda esse. Quapropter cunctis Christifidelibus interdicit, ne posthac de iis aliter vel credere vel docere vel praedicare audeant, quam est iis decretis explicatum atque definitum.

Cap. 1. Laicos et clericos non conficientes non adstringi iure divino ad communionem sub utraque specie 1726 Itaque sancta ipsa Synodus a Spiritu Sancto, qui Spiritus est sapientiae et intellectus, Spiritus consilii et pietatis [cf. Is 11:2], edocta atque ipsius Ecclesiae iudicium et consuetudinem secuta, declarat ac docet, nullo divino praecepto laicos et clericos non conficientes obligari ad Eucharistiae sacramentum sub utraque specie sumendum, neque ullo pacto salva fide dubitari posse, quin illis alterius speciei communio ad salutem sufficiat.

1727 Nam etsi Christus Dominus in ultima Coena venerabile hoc sacramentum in panis et vini speciebus instituit et Apostolis tradidit [cf. Mt 26:26–29; Mc 14:22–25; Lc 22:19s; 1 Cor 11:24s]: non tamen illa institutio et traditio eo tendunt, ut omnes Christi fideles statuto Domini ad utramque speciem accipiendam adstringantur [cann. 1 et 2].

Sed neque ex sermone illo apud Ioannem sexto recte colligitur, utriusque speciei communionem a Domino praeceptam esse [can. 3], utcumque iuxta varias sanctorum Patrum et Doctorum interpretationes intelligatur. Namque qui dixit: “Nisi manducaveritis carnem Filii hominis, et biberitis eius sanguinem, non habebitis vitam in vobis” [Io 6:54], dixit quoque: “Si quis manducaverit ex hoc pane, vivet in aeternum” [Io 6:52]. Et qui dixit: “Qui manducat meam carnem, et bibit meum sanguinem, habet vitam aeternam” [Io 6:55], dixit etiam: “Panis, quem ego dabo, caro mea est pro mundi vita” [Io 6:52]; et denique qui dixit: “Qui manducat meam carnem, et bibit meum sanguinem, in me manet, et ego in

The holy, ecumenical, and general Council of Trent, . . . seeing that various horrifying errors about the most awesome and holy sacrament of the Eucharist are being spread in different places by the tricks of the most evil spirit, because of which many people in some provinces seem to have fallen away from the faith and obedience of the Catholic Church, has judged that the subjects of communion under both kinds and that of children should be set out here. It therefore forbids all the Christian faithful to presume to believe or teach or preach on these matters otherwise than is explained and defined in these decrees.

Chapter 1. Laity and Nonconsecrating Clergy Are Not Bound by Divine Command to Communion under Both Kinds

Hence this holy council, taught by the Holy Spirit, who is the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and piety [cf. Is 11:2], and following the judgment and custom of the Church herself, declares and teaches that laity and clergy who are not consecrating are under no divine command to receive the sacrament of the Eucharist under both kinds; and that it can in no way be doubted (with integrity in faith) that communion under either kind is sufficient for their salvation.

For, though Christ the Lord instituted this revered sacrament at the Last Supper and gave it to the apostles in the species of bread and wine [cf. Mt 26:26–29; Mk 14:22–25; Lk 22:19f.; 1 Cor 11:24f.], this institution and gift do not mean that all the faithful are bound by a precept of the Lord to receive both species [cann. 1 and 2].

Nor is it correct to deduce from that saying in the sixth chapter of John that communion in both species was commanded by the Lord [can. 3], however it may be understood from different interpretations of the holy Fathers and Doctors. For he who said, “Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, you have no life in you” [Jn 6:53], also said, “if anyone eats of this bread, he will live for ever” [Jn 6:51]. And he who said, “he who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life” [Jn 6:54], also said, “the bread which I shall give for the life of the world is my flesh” [Jn 6:51]. And finally, he who said, “he who eats my flesh and drinks my blood abides in me, and I in him” illo” [I^o 6:57], dixit nihilominus: “Qui manducat hunc panem, vivet in aeternum” [I^o 6:58].

Cap. 2. Ecclesiae potestas circa dispensationem sacramenti Eucharistiae

Praeterea declarat, hanc potestatem perpetuo in Ecclesia fuisse, ut in sacramentorum dispensatione, salva illorum substantia, ea statueret vel mutaret, quae suscipientium utilitati seu ipsorum sacramentorum venerationi, pro rerum, temporum et locorum varietate, magis expedire iudicaret. Id autem Apostolus non obscure visus est innuisse, cum ait: “Sic nos existimet homo ut ministros Christi et dispensatores mysteriorum Dei” [I Cor 4:1]; atque ipsum quidem hac potestate usum esse, satis constat, cum in multis aliis, tum in hoc ipso sacramento, cum ordinatis nonnullis circa eius usum, “Cetera”, inquit, “cum venero, disponam” [I Cor 11:34].

Quare agnoscens sancta mater Ecclesia hanc suam in administratione sacramentorum auctoritatem, licet ab initio christianae religionis non infrequens utriusque speciei usus fuisset, tamen progressu temporis latissime iam mutata illa consuetudine, gravibus et iustis causis adducta, hanc consuetudinem sub altera specie communicandi approbavit et pro lege habendam decrevit, quam reprobare aut sine ipsius Ecclesiae auctoritate pro libito mutare non licet [can. 2].

Cap. 3. Totum et integrum Christum ac verum sacramentum sub qualibet specie sumi Insuper declarat, quamvis Redemptor noster, ut antea dictum est, in suprema illa Coena hoc sacramentum in duabus speciebus instituerit et Apostolis tradiderit: tamen fatendum esse, etiam sub altera tantum specie totum atque integrum Christum verumque sacramentum sumi, ac propterea, quod ad fructum attinet, nulla gratia necessaria ad salutem eos defraudari, qui unam speciem solum accipiunt [can. 3].

Cap. 4. Parvulos non obligari ad communionem sacramentalem

Denique eadem sancta Synodus docet, parvulos usu rationis carentes nulla obligari necessitate ad sacramentalem Eucharistiae communionem [can. 4], siquidem per baptismi lavacrum regenerati [cf. Tit 3:5] et [Jn 6:56], said as well, “he who eats this bread will live for ever” [Jn 6:58].

Chapter 2. The Power of the Church in Administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist

Furthermore, (the holy council) declares that, in 1728 the administration of the sacraments—provided their substance is preserved—there has always been in the Church that power to determine or modify what she judged more expedient for the benefit of those receiving the sacraments or for the reverence due to the sacraments themselves—according to the diversity of circumstances, times, and places. This, moreover, is what the apostle seems to have indicated rather clearly when he said: “This is how one should regard us, as servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God” [I Cor 4:1]. And it is sufficiently evident that he himself used this power, not only in many other matters, but also for this sacrament itself, when, after providing several directives for its use, he said: “About the other things I will give directions when I come” [I Cor 11:34].

This is why, although from the beginning of the Christian religion the use of both species was not infrequent, nevertheless, as that custom very widely changed over the course of time, our holy Mother Church, knowing her authority in the administration of the sacraments and led by just and serious reasons, approved this custom of receiving communion under one of the two species and decreed this to be the rule, which is not to be condemned or changed at will without the authority of the Church herself [can. 2].

Chapter 3. Christ Is Received Whole and Entire under Either Kind, the True Sacrament

Moreover, (the council) declares that, although 1729 our Redeemer at the Last Supper, as was said above, instituted and distributed this sacrament to the apostles under two species: nevertheless, it must be confessed that even under only one of the two species the whole and entire Christ and the true sacrament is received; and, therefore, with respect to the fruit of the sacrament, those who receive under only one species are not deprived of any grace necessary for salvation [can. 3].

Chapter 4. Children Are Not Bound to Sacramental Communion

Finally, the same holy council teaches that children 1730 under the age of discernment are not bound by an obligation to sacramental holy communion [can. 4], seeing that after rebirth by the water of baptism [cf. Tit 3:5] and Christo incorporati adeptam iam filiorum Dei gratiam in illa aetate amittere non possunt.

Neque ideo tamen damnanda est antiquitas, si eum morem in quibusdam locis aliquando servavit. Ut enim sanctissimi illi Patres sui facti probabilem causam pro illius temporis ratione habuerunt, ita certe eos nulla salutis necessitate id fecisse sine controversia credendum est.

incorporation in Christ, they are not at that age able to lose the grace they have received of being children of God.

Nor are times past to be condemned if they sometimes observed that custom in some places. For those holy Fathers had good reason for their practice in the situation of their time, and we must certainly believe without dispute that they did not do this for any necessity of salvation.

Canons on Communion under Both Kinds and of Young Children

1731 Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, ex Dei praecepto vel ex necessitate salutis omnes et singulos Christi fideles utramque speciem sanctissimi Eucharistiae sacramenti sumere debere: anathema sit [cf. *1726s].

Can. 1: If anyone says that, by reason of God's command or out of necessity for salvation, each and every one of Christ's faithful must receive both species of the most holy sacrament of the Eucharist: let him be anathema [cf. 1726f.].

1732 Can. 2. Si quis dixerit, sanctam Ecclesiam catholicam non iustis causis et rationibus adductam fuisse, ut laicos atque etiam clericos non conficientes sub una panis tantummodo specie communicaret, aut in eo errasse: anathema sit [cf. *1728].

Can. 2. If anyone says the holy Catholic Church was not led by proper causes and reasons to communicate laity, and even clergy who are not consecrating, in the one species of bread alone and has erred in the matter, let him be anathema [cf. *1728].

1733 Can. 3. Si quis negaverit, totum et integrum Christum, omnium gratiarum fontem et auctorem, sub una panis specie sumi, quia, ut quidam falso asserunt, non secundum ipsius Christi institutionem sub utraque specie sumatur: anathema sit [cf. *1726s].

Can. 3. If anyone says that Christ, the source and author of all graces, is not received whole and entire under the one species of bread, on the grounds that he is not then received under both species according to Christ's institution, as some would falsely assert, let him be anathema [cf. *1726f.].

1734 Can. 4. Si quis dixerit, parvulis, antequam ad annos discretionis pervenerint, necessariam esse Eucharistiae communionem: anathema sit [cf. *1730].

Can. 4. If anyone says that eucharistic communion is necessary for children before they reach the age of discernment, let him be anathema [cf. *1730].

1738–1760: Session 22, September 17, 1562

a. Doctrine and Canons on the Sacrifice of the Mass

The theologians of the council began to examine heretical assertions about the Mass and about the sacrament of orders in August 1547 at Bologna (SGTr 6:321–91); the principal sources were the works reported in *1600°. At Trent in December 1551, the theologians continued this work (SGTr 7:375ff.). In January 1552, drafts of the canons and the doctrine on the Mass and the sacrament of orders were drawn up (SGTr 7:460f., 483–89); discussions on them, however, could not be brought to conclusion since the council was interrupted. Only on July 19, 1562, was this theme taken up again with the presentation of thirteen articles on the Mass (SGTr 8:719 / TheiTr 2:58). On August 6 and September 5, respectively, new drafts were set forth (SGTr 8:751–55, 909–12 / TheiTr 2:74–76, 116–18).

Ed.: SGTr 8:959–62 / RiTr 124–27 / MaC 33:128C–132B / HaC 10:126A–129E / COeD, 3rd ed., 732–36.

Foreword

1738 Sacrosancta oecumenica et generalis Tridentina Synodus ..., ut vetus, absoluta atque omni ex parte perfecta de magno Eucharistiae mysterio in sancta catholica Ecclesia fides atque doctrina retineatur et in sua puritate, propulsatis erroribus atque haeresibus, conservetur: de ea, quatenus verum et singulare sacrificium est, Spiritus Sancti illustratione edocta, haec, quae sequuntur, docet, declarat et fidelibus populis praedicanda decernit.

In order to retain the holy Catholic Church and to preserve in its purity the ancient, absolute, and completely perfect faith and doctrine about the great mystery of the Eucharist and to avert heresies and errors, the holy, ecumenical, and general Council of Trent ... teaches and lays down, under the guidance and light of the Holy Spirit, the following doctrine about the Eucharist as true and unique sacrifice and declares that this doctrine is to be preached to the faithful.

Chapter 1. The Institution of the Most Holy Sacrifice of the Mass

Quoniam sub priori Testamento (teste Apostolo Paulo) propter Levitici sacerdotii imbecillitatem consummatio non erat, oportuit (Deo Patre misericordiarum ita ordinante) sacerdotem alium “secundum ordinem Melchisedech” [Ps 109:4; Hbr 5:6, 10; 7:11, 17; cf. Gn 14:18] surgere, Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum, qui posset omnes, quotquot sanctificandi essent, consummare [cf. Hbr 10:14] et ad perfectum adducere.

Is igitur Deus et Dominus noster, etsi semel se ipsum in ara crucis, morte intercedente, Deo Patri oblaturus erat [cf. Hbr 7:27], ut aeternam illis [illic] redemptionem operaretur: quia tamen per mortem sacerdotium eius exstinguendum non erat [cf. Hbr 7:24], in Coena novissima, “qua nocte tradebatur” [1 Cor 11:23], ut dilectae sponsae suae Ecclesiae visibile (sicut hominum natura exigit) relinqueret sacrificium, quo cruentum illud semel in cruce peragendum repraesentaretur eiusque memoria in finem usque saeculi permaneret, atque illius salutaris virtus in remissionem eorum, quae a nobis quotidie committuntur, peccatorum applicaretur:

sacerdotem secundum ordinem Melchisedech se in aeternum [cf. Ps 109:4; Hbr 5:6; 7:17] constitutum declarans, corpus et sanguinem suum sub speciebus panis et vini Deo Patri obtulit ac sub earundem rerum symbolis Apostolis (quos tunc Novi Testamenti sacerdotes constituebat), ut sumerent, tradidit, et eisdem eorumque in sacerdotio successoribus, ut offerrent, praecepit per haec verba: “Hoc facite in meam commemorationem” [Lc 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24], etc., uti semper catholica Ecclesia intellexit et docuit [can. 2].

Nam celebrato veteri Pascha, quod in memoriam exitus de Aegypto multitudo filiorum Israel immolabat [cf. Ex 12], novum instituit Pascha, se ipsum ab Ecclesia per sacerdotes sub signis visibilibus immolandum in memoriam transitus sui ex hoc mundo ad Patrem, quando per sui sanguinis effusionem nos redemit “eripuitque de potestate tenebrarum et in regnum suum transtulit” [Col 1:13].

Et haec quidem illa munda oblatio est, quae nulla indignitate aut malitia offerentium inquinari potest, quam Dominus per Malachiam nomini suo, quod magnum futurum esset in gentibus, in omni loco mundam offerendam praedixit [cf. Mal 1:11], et quam non obscure innuit Apostolus Paulus Corinthiis scribens, cum dicit, non posse eos, qui participatione mensae daemoniorum polluti sint, mensae Domini participes fieri [cf. 1 Cor

As the apostle testifies, there was no perfection under the former covenant because of the insufficiency of the levitical priesthood. It was, therefore, necessary (according to the merciful ordination of God the Father) that another priest arise “according to the order of Melchizedek” [Ps 110:4; Heb 5:6, 10; 7:11, 17; cf. Gen 14:18], our Lord Jesus Christ, who could make perfect all who were to be sanctified [cf. Heb 10:14] and bring them to fulfillment. 1739

He, then, our Lord and God, was once and for all to offer himself to God the Father by his death on the altar of the Cross [cf. Heb 7:27] to accomplish for them [there] an everlasting redemption. But, because his priesthood was not to end with his death [cf. Heb 7:24], at the Last Supper, “on the night when he was betrayed” [1 Cor 11:23], 1740 in order to leave to his beloved Spouse the Church a visible sacrifice (as the nature of man demands)—by which the bloody (sacrifice) that he was once for all to accomplish on the Cross would be re-presented, its memory perpetuated until the end of the world, and its salutary power applied for the forgiveness of the sins that we daily commit—declaring himself constituted a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek [cf. Ps 110:4; Heb 5:6; 7:17], he offered his body and blood under the species of bread and wine to God the Father, and, under the same signs, gave them to partake of to the disciples (whom he then established as priests of the New Covenant) and ordered them and their successors in the priesthood to offer, saying: “Do this in remembrance of me”, etc. [Lc 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24], as the Catholic Church has always understood and taught [can. 2].

For, after he celebrated the old Pasch, which the multitude of the children of Israel offered to celebrate the memory of the departure from Egypt [cf. Ex 12], Christ instituted a new Pasch, namely, himself, to be offered by the Church through her priests under visible signs in memory of his passage from this world to the Father when by the shedding of his blood he redeemed us, “delivered us from the dominion of darkness, and transferred us to his kingdom” [Col 1:13]. 1741

This is the clean oblation that cannot be defiled by any unworthiness or malice on the part of those who offer it and that the Lord foretold through Malachi would be offered in all places as a clean oblation to his name [cf. Mal 1:11]. The apostle Paul also refers clearly to it when, writing to the Corinthians, he says that those who have been defiled by partaking of the table of devils cannot be partakers of the table of the Lord. By “table” 1742

10:21], per mensam altare utrobique intelligens. Haec denique illa est, quae per varias sacrificiorum, naturae et Legis tempore [cf. Gn 4:4; 8:20; 12:8; 22:1–19; Ex: passim], similitudines figurabatur, utpote quae bona omnia per illa significata veluti illorum omnium consummatio et perfectio complectitur.

he understands “altar” in both cases [cf. 1 Cor 10:21]. Finally, this is the (oblation) that was prefigured by various types of sacrifices under the regime of nature and of the law [cf. Gen 4:4; 8:20; 12:8; 22:1–19; Ex: passim]. For it includes all the good that was signified by those former sacrifices; it is their fulfillment and perfection.

Chapter 2. The Visible Sacrifice Is Propitiatory for the Living and the Dead

1743 Et quoniam in divino hoc sacrificio, quod in Missa peragitur, idem ille Christus continetur et incruente immolatur, qui in ara crucis semel se ipsum cruenta obtulit [cf. Hbr 9:14, 27]: docet sancta Synodus, sacrificium istud vere propitiatorium esse [can. 3], per ipsumque fieri, ut, si cum vero corde et recta fide, cum metu ac reverentia, contriti ac paenitentes ad Deum accedamus, “misericordiam consequamur et gratiam inveniamus in auxilio opportuno” [Hbr 4:16]. Huius quippe oblatione placatus Dominus, gratiam et donum paenitentiae concedens, crimina et peccata etiam ingentia dimittit. Una enim eademque est hostia, idem nunc offerens sacerdotum ministerio, qui se ipsum tunc in cruce obtulit, sola offerendi ratione diversa.

In this divine sacrifice that is celebrated in the Mass, the same Christ who offered himself once in a bloody manner [cf. Heb 9:14, 27f.] on the altar of the Cross is contained and is offered in an unbloody manner. Therefore, the holy council teaches that this sacrifice is truly propitiatory [can. 3], so that, if we draw near to God with an upright heart and true faith, with fear and reverence, with sorrow and repentance, through it “we may receive mercy and find grace to help in time of need” [Heb 4:16]. For the Lord, appeased by this oblation, grants grace and the gift of repentance, and he pardons wrongdoings and sins, even great ones. For, the victim is one and the same: the same now offers himself through the ministry of priests who then offered himself on the Cross; only the manner of offering is different.

Cuius quidem oblationis (cruentae, inquam) fructus per hanc incruentam uberrime percipiuntur: tantum abest, ut illi per hanc quovis modo derogeretur [can. 4]. Quare non solum pro fidelium vivorum peccatis, poenis, satisfactionibus et aliis necessitatibus, sed et pro defunctis in Christo, nondum ad plenum purgatis, rite iuxta Apostolorum traditionem offertur [can. 3].

The fruits of this oblation (the bloody one, that is) are received in abundance through this unbloody (oblation). By no means, then, does the latter detract from the former [can. 4]. Therefore, it is rightly offered according to apostolic tradition, not only for the sins, punishments, satisfaction, and other necessities of the faithful who are alive, but also for those who have died in Christ but are not wholly purified [can. 3].

Chapter 3. Masses in Honor of the Saints

1744 Et quamvis in honorem et memoriam Sanctorum nonnullas interdum Missas Ecclesia celebrare consueverit, non tamen illis sacrificium offerri docet, sed Deo soli, qui illos coronavit [can. 5]. Unde “nec sacerdos dicere solet: Offero tibi sacrificium, Petre et Paule”,¹ sed, Deo de illorum victoriis gratias agens, eorum patrocinia implorat, “ut ipsi pro nobis intercedere dignentur in caelis, quorum memoriam facimus in terris”.²

And, although it is the custom of the Church occasionally to celebrate some Masses in honor and in remembrance of the saints, the Church teaches that sacrifice is offered, not to the saints, but to God alone, who has given them their crown [can. 5]. Therefore, “the priest does not say: ‘I offer the sacrifice to you, Peter and Paul’”;¹ but, giving thanks to God for the victory of the saints, he implores their protection “in order that those whose remembrance we celebrate on earth may intercede for us in heaven”.²

Chapter 4. The Canon of the Mass

1745 Et cum sancta sancte administrari conveniat, sitque hoc omnium sanctissimum sacrificium: Ecclesia catholica, ut digne reverenterque offerretur ac perciperetur, sacrum canonem multis ante saeculis instituit, ita ab omni

Holy things must be treated in a holy way, and this sacrifice is the most holy of all things. And so, that this sacrifice might be worthily and reverently offered and received, the Catholic Church many centuries ago errore purum [can. 6], ut nihil in eo contineatur, quod non maxime sanctitatem ac pietatem quandam redoleat mentesque offerentium in Deum erigat. Is enim constat cum ex ipsis Domini verbis, tum ex Apostolorum traditionibus ac sanctorum quoque Pontificum piis institutionibus.

*1744 ¹ Cf. Augustine, Contra Faustum Manichaeum XX, 21 (CSEL, 25:562₁₄ / PL 42:384).

² Missale Romanum (1962), Order of the Mass, after the washing of hands.

instituted the sacred canon. It is so free from all error [can. 6] that it contains nothing that does not savor strongly of holiness and piety and nothing that does not raise to God the minds of those who offer. For it is made up of the words of our Lord himself, of apostolic traditions, and of devout instructions of the holy pontiffs.

Chapter 5. The Solemn Ceremonies of the Sacrifice of the Mass

Cumque natura hominum ea sit, ut non facile queat sine adminiculis exterioribus ad rerum divinarum meditationem sustolli, propterea pia mater Ecclesia ritus quosdam, ut scilicet quaedam submissa voce [can. 9], alia vero elatiore in Missa pronuntiarentur, instituit; caeremonias item adhibuit [can. 7], ut mysticas benedictiones, lumina, thymiamata, vestes aliaque id genus multa ex apostolica disciplina et traditione, quo et maiestas tanti sacrificii commendaretur, et mentes fidelium per haec visibilia religionis et pietatis signa ad rerum altissimarum, quae in hoc sacrificio latent, contemplationem excitarentur.

And as human nature is such that it cannot easily raise itself up to the meditation of divine realities without external aids, Holy Mother Church has for that reason duly established certain rites, such as that some parts of the Mass should be said in quieter tones [can. 9] and others in louder; and she has provided ceremonial [can. 7] such as mystical blessings, lights, incense, vestments, and many other rituals of that kind from apostolic order and tradition, by which the majesty of this great sacrifice is enhanced and the minds of the faithful are aroused by those visible signs of religious devotion to contemplation of the high mysteries hidden in this sacrifice.

1746

Chapter 6. The Mass in Which the Priest Alone Communicates

Optaret quidem sacrosancta Synodus, ut in singulis Missis fideles adstantes non solum spirituali affectu, sed sacramentali etiam Eucharistiae perceptione communicarent, quo ad eos sanctissimi huius sacrificii fructus uberius proveniret; nec tamen, si id non semper fiat, propterea Missas illas, in quibus solus sacerdos sacramentaliter communicat, ut privatas et illicitas damnat [can. 8], sed probat atque commendat, si quidem illae quoque Missae vere communes censi debent, partim quod in eis populus spiritualiter communicet, partim vero, quod a publico Ecclesiae ministro non pro se tantum, sed pro omnibus fidelibus qui ad Corpus Christi pertinent, celebrentur.

The holy council would certainly like the faithful present at every Mass to communicate in it not only by spiritual devotion but also by sacramental reception of the Eucharist, so that the fruits of this most holy sacrifice could be theirs more fully. But, if this does not always happen, the council does not for that reason condemn as private and illicit Masses [can. 8] in which only the priest communicates. Rather, it approves and commends them, for they too should be considered truly communal Masses, partly because the people communicate spiritually in them and partly because they are celebrated by a public minister of the Church, not for his own good alone, but for all the faithful who belong to the body of Christ.

1747

Chapter 7. Water Mixed with the Wine to Be Offered in the Chalice

Monet deinde sancta Synodus, praeceptum esse ab Ecclesia sacerdotibus, ut aquam vino in calice offerendo miscerent [can. 9], tum quod Christum Dominum ita fecisse credatur, tum etiam quia e latere eius aqua simul cum sanguine exierit [cf. Io 19:34], quod sacramentum hac mixtione recolitur. Et cum “aquae” in Apocalypsi beati Ioannis populi dicantur [cf. Apc 17:1, 15], ipsius populi fidelis cum capite Christo unio repraesentatur.

The holy council draws the attention of priests to the rule of the Church that they should mix water with the wine to be offered in the chalice [can. 9], both because Christ the Lord is believed to have done so and because water came from his side together with blood [cf. Jn 19:34], and this sacred sign is recalled by this mixing. Further, when in the Revelation of blessed John the peoples are said to be waters [cf. Rev 17:1, 15], the union of Christ the head with his faithful people is signified.

1748

Chapter 8. Mass Should Not Be Celebrated in the Vernacular Indiscriminately; the Mysteries of the Mass Are to Be Explained to the People

Etsi Missa magnam contineat populi fidelis eruditionem, non tamen expedire visum est Patribus, ut vulgari

Although the Mass contains much instruction for the faithful, the Fathers did not think that it should be passim lingua celebraretur [can. 9]. Quamobrem, retento ubique cuiusque ecclesiae antiquo et a sancta Romana Ecclesia, omnium ecclesiarum matre et magistra, probato ritu, ne oves Christi esuriant, neve parvuli panem petant et non sit, qui frangat eis [cf. Lam 4:4]: mandat sancta Synodus pastoribus et singulis curam animarum gerentibus, ut frequenter inter Missarum celebrationem vel per se vel per alios, ex his, quae in Missa leguntur, exponant atque inter cetera sanctissimi huius sacrificii mysterium aliquod declarent, diebus praesertim Dominicis et festis.

1749

celebrated in the vernacular indiscriminately [can. 9]. Therefore, the ancient rite of each Church, approved by the holy Roman Church, the mother and teacher of all the Churches, being everywhere maintained, the holy council, in order that the sheep of Christ may not go unfed, lest the children beg for food but no one gives to them [cf. Lam 4:4], orders that pastors and all who have the care of souls must frequently, either by themselves or through others, explain during the celebration of Masses some of the readings of the Mass and, among other things, give some instruction about the mystery of this most holy sacrifice, especially on Sundays and feast days.

Chapter 9. Prologue to the Canons that Follow

1750 Quia vero adversus veterem hanc in sacrosancto Evangelio, Apostolorum traditionibus sanctorumque Patrum doctrina fundatam fidem hoc tempore multi disseminati sunt errores, multaque a multis docentur et disputantur: sacrosancta Synodus, post multos gravesque his de rebus mature habitos tractatus, unanimi patrum omnium consensu, quae huic purissimae fidei sacraeque doctrinae adversantur, damnare et a sancta Ecclesia eliminare per subiectos hos canones constituit.

But as in these days many errors are being spread abroad, and much is being taught or argued by many people against this ancient faith founded on the holy Gospel, the traditions of the apostles, and the teaching of the holy Fathers; this holy council, after holding many weighty and mature discussions of these matters, has decided by unanimous agreement of the Fathers to condemn and banish from holy Church all that is contrary to this most pure faith and sacred teaching by the canons that follow.

Canons on the Most Holy Sacrifice of the Mass

1751 Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, in Missa non offerri Deo verum et proprium sacrificium, aut quod offerri non sit aliud quam nobis Christum ad manducandum dari: anathema sit.

Can. 1. If anyone says that in the Mass a true and proper sacrifice is not offered to God or that the offering consists merely in the fact that Christ is given to us to eat, let him be anathema.

1752 Can. 2. Si quis dixerit, illis verbis: “Hoc facite in meam commemorationem” [Lc 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24], Christum non instituisse Apostolos sacerdotes, aut non ordinasse, ut ipsi aliique sacerdotes offerrent corpus et sanguinem suum: anathema sit [cf. *1740].

Can. 2. If anyone says that by the words “Do this in remembrance of me” [Lk 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24] Christ did not establish the apostles as priests or that he did not order that they and other priests should offer his body and blood, let him be anathema [cf. *1740].

1753 Can. 3. Si quis dixerit, Missae sacrificium tantum esse laudis et gratiarum actionis, aut nudam commemorationem sacrificii in cruce peracti, non autem propitiatorium; vel soli prodesse sumenti; neque pro vivis et defunctis, pro peccatis, poenis, satisfactionibus et aliis necessitatibus offerri debere: anathema sit [cf. *1743].

Can. 3. If anyone says that the sacrifice of the Mass is merely offering of praise and thanksgiving or that it is a simple commemoration of the sacrifice accomplished on the Cross, but not a propitiatory sacrifice, or that it benefits only those who communicate; and that it should not be offered for the living and the dead, for sins, punishments, satisfaction, and other necessities, let him be anathema [cf. *1743].

1754 Can. 4. Si quis dixerit,¹ blasphemiam irrogari sanctissimo Christi sacrificio in cruce peracto per Missae sacrificium, aut illi per hoc derogari: anathema sit [cf. *1743].

Can. 4. If anyone says¹ that the sacrifice of the Mass constitutes a blasphemy against the most holy sacrifice that Christ accomplished on the Cross or that it detracts from that sacrifice, let him be anathema [cf. *1743].

1755 Can. 5. Si quis dixerit, imposturam esse, Missae celebrari in honorem Sanctorum et pro illorum intercessione apud Deum obtinenda, sicut Ecclesia intendit: anathema sit [cf. *1744].

Can. 5. If anyone says that it is an imposture to celebrate Masses in honor of the saints and in order to obtain their intercession with God as the Church intends, let him be anathema [cf. *1744].

*1754 ¹ Cf. Urban Rieger, Responsio ad duos libros primum et tertium de Missa Iohannis Eccii (Augsburg, 1529), fol. H, 8v.

Can. 6. Si quis dixerit, canonem Missae errores continere ideoque abrogandum esse: anathema sit [cf. *1745].

Can. 7. Si quis dixerit, caeremonias, vestes et externa signa, quibus in Missarum celebratione Ecclesia catholica utitur, irritabula impietatis esse magis quam officia pietatis: anathema sit [cf. *1746].

Can. 8. Si quis dixerit, Missas, in quibus solus sacerdos sacramentaliter communicat, illicitas esse ideoque abrogandas: anathema sit [cf. *1747].

Can. 9. Si quis dixerit, Ecclesiae Romanae ritum, quo submissa voce pars canonis et verba consecrationis proferuntur, damnandum esse; aut lingua tantum vulgari Missam celebrari debere; aut aquam non miscendam esse vino in calice offerendo, eo quod sit contra Christi institutionem: anathema sit [cf. *1746, 1748s].

Can. 6. If anyone says that the canon of the Mass contains errors and therefore should be abolished, let him be anathema [cf. *1745]. 1756

Can. 7. If anyone says that the ceremonies, vestments, and external signs that the Catholic Church uses in the celebration of Masses are incentives to impiety rather than works of piety, let him be anathema [cf. *1746]. 1757

Can. 8. If anyone says that Masses in which the priest alone communicates sacramentally are illicit and therefore should be abolished, let him be anathema [cf. *1747]. 1758

Can. 9. If anyone says that the rite of the Roman Church prescribing that part of the canon and the words of consecration be recited in a low voice must be condemned; or that Mass should be celebrated only in the vernacular; or that water should not be mixed with the wine to be offered in the chalice because this would be contrary to Christ's institution, let him be anathema [cf. *1746, 1748f.]. 1759

b. Decree on the Request for the Granting of the Chalice

Cf. *1725°.

Ed.: SGTTr 8:968 and 925f. / RiTr 172 / MaC 33:137CD / COeD, 3rd ed., 717 / TheiTr 2:128b.

Insuper cum eadem sacrosancta Synodus superiori sessione duos articulos alias propositos et tum nondum discussos, videlicet:

An rationes, quibus sancta catholica Ecclesia adducta fuit, ut communicaret laicos atque etiam non celebrantes sacerdotes sub una panis specie, ita sint retinendae, ut nulla ratione calicis usus cuiquam sit permittendus,—et:

An, si honestis et christianae caritati consentaneis rationibus concedendus alicui vel nationi vel regno calicis usus videatur, sub aliquibus condicionibus concedendus sit, et quanam illae sint, in aliud tempus, oblata sibi occasione, examinandos atque diffiniendos reservaverit: nunc eorum, pro quibus petitur, saluti optimum consultum volens, decrevit, integrum negotium ad Sanctissimum Dominum esse referendum, prout praesenti decreto refert; qui pro sua singulari prudentia id efficiat, quod utile rei publicae christianae et salutare petentibus usum calicis fore iudicaverit.

Furthermore, since the same holy council has in a previous session reserved for its examination and definition, at another time when it should have opportunity, two articles put forward on another occasion and not yet discussed, namely: 1760

Whether the reasons for which the holy Catholic Church has been led to give communion to lay people and also to noncelebrating priests under the species of bread alone are to be adhered to in such wise that the use of the chalice is not to be permitted to anyone for any reason, and:

Whether, if it seems that the use of the chalice should be conceded to any nation or kingdom for worthy reasons compatible with Christian charity, it should be conceded under certain conditions, and what those conditions should be,

it has now decreed, wishing the best counsel to be taken for the salvation of those for whom the request is made, that the whole matter is to be referred to the Most Holy Lord (the pope), and so refers it by the present decree; who, by his own particular prudence, should ensure that there shall be such use of the chalice as he shall judge profitable for the welfare of the Christian republic and beneficial for those making the request.

1763–1778: Session 23, July 15, 1563: Doctrine and Canons on the Sacrament of Orders

The examination of the corresponding heretical propositions (cf. the works cited in *1600°) and the redaction of the first preliminary drafts of the canons had already begun at Bologna on April 26, 1547 (SGTr 6:97, 308) and once again at Trent from December 3, 1551, to January 21, 1552 (SGTr 7:375–489; preliminary drafts, ibid., 460f., 483–89). The synodal Fathers on September 18, 1562, resumed their preliminary work (SGTr 9:5 / TheiTr 2:133) and drew up new drafts for the canons. On October 13 and November 3, 1562, the doctrine of the sacrament of orders was placed before the canons (SGTr 9:38–41, 105–7; additional versions, SGTr 9:226–41 / TheiTr 2:151–53, 155f.).

Ed.: SGTr 9:620–22 / RiTr 172–74 / MaC 33:138B–140D / HaC 10:135D–138A / COeD, 3rd ed., 742–44.

- 1763 Vera et catholica doctrina de sacramento ordinis ad condemnandos errores nostri temporis, a sancta Synodo Tridentina decreta et publicata sessione [sub Pio IV] septima. This is the true and Catholic doctrine on the sacrament of orders. It is decreed and published by the holy Tridentine Council in its seventh session [under Pius IV] to condemn the errors of our time.

Chapter 1: The Institution of the Priesthood of the New Law

- 1764 Sacrificium et sacerdotium ita Dei ordinatione coniuncta sunt, ut utrumque in omni lege exstiterit. Cum igitur in Novo Testamento sanctum Eucharistiae sacrificium visibile ex Domini institutione catholica Ecclesia acceperit: fateri etiam oportet, in ea novum esse visibile et externum sacerdotium [can. 1], in quod vetus translatum est [cf. Hbr 7:12]. Hoc autem ab eodem Domino Salvatore nostro institutum esse [can. 3], atque Apostolis eorumque successoribus in sacerdotio potestatem traditam consecrandi, offerendi et ministrandi corpus et sanguinem eius, nec non et peccata dimittendi et retinendi, sacrae Litterae ostendunt, et catholicae Ecclesiae traditio semper docuit [can. 1]. Sacrifice and priesthood are by the ordinance of God so united that both have existed under every law. Since, therefore, in the New Testament the Catholic Church has received from the institution of Christ the holy, visible sacrifice of the Eucharist, it must also be acknowledged that there exists in the Church a new, visible, and external priesthood [can. 1] into which the old one was changed [cf. Heb 7:12]. Moreover, the Sacred Scriptures make it clear and the tradition of the Catholic Church has always taught that this priesthood was instituted by the same Lord our Savior [can. 3] and that the power of consecrating, offering, and administering his Body and Blood, and likewise of remitting and retaining sins, was given to the apostles and to their successors in the priesthood [can. 1].

Chapter 2. The Seven Orders

- 1765 Cum autem divina res sit tam sancti sacerdotii ministerium, consentaneum fuit, quo dignius et maiore cum veneratione exerceri posset, ut in Ecclesiae ordinatissima dispositione plures et diversi essent ministrorum ordines, qui sacerdotio ex officio deservirent, ita distributi, ut, qui iam clericali tonsura insigniti essent, per minores ad maiores ascenderent [can. 2]. But since the ministry of so holy a priesthood is something divine, in order that it might be exercised in a more worthy manner and with greater veneration, it was fitting that in the perfectly ordered disposition of the Church there should be several distinct orders of ministers serving in the priesthood by virtue of their office and that they be so distributed that those already having the clerical tonsure should ascend through the minor to the major orders [can. 2].

Nam non solum de sacerdotibus, sed et de diaconis sacrae Litterae apertam mentionem faciunt [cf. Act 6:5; 21:8; 1 Tim 3:8–13; Phil 1:1] et, quae maxime in illorum ordinatione attendenda sunt, gravissimis verbis docent; et ab ipso Ecclesiae initio sequentium ordinum nomina atque uniuscuiusque eorum propria ministeria, subdiaconi scilicet, acolythi, exorcistae, lectoris et ostiarii in usu fuisse cognoscuntur, quamvis non pari gradu. Nam subdiaconatus ad maiores ordines a Patribus et sacris Conciliis refertur, in quibus et de aliis inferioribus frequentissime legimus.

For the Sacred Scriptures mention unmistakably not only the priests but also the deacons [cf. Acts 6:5; 21:8; 1 Tim 3:8–13; Phil 1:1] and teach in the most authoritative words what is chiefly to be observed in their ordination. And from the very beginning of the Church, the names of the following orders and the ministries proper to each one, namely, those of subdeacon, acolyte, exorcist, lector, and porter, are known to have been in use, though they were not of equal rank. For the subdiaconate is counted among the major orders by the Fathers and the holy councils, in which very frequently we also read about the other, lower (orders).

Chapter 3: Orders Is Truly a Sacrament

- 1766 Cum Scripturae testimonio, apostolica traditione et Patrum unanimi consensu perspicuum sit, per sacram ordinationem, quae verbis et signis exterioribus perficitur, gratiam conferri: dubitare nemo debet, ordinem esse vere Since from the testimony of Scripture, apostolic tradition, and the unanimous agreement of the Fathers it is clear that grace is conferred by sacred ordination, which is performed by words and outward signs, no one et proprie unum ex septem sanctae Ecclesiae sacramentis [can. 3]. Inquit enim Apostolus: “Admoneo te, ut resuscites gratiam Dei, quae est in te per impositionem manuum mearum. Non enim dedit nobis Deus spiritum timoris, sed virtutis et dilectionis et sobrietatis” [2 Tim 1:6s; cf. 1 Tim 4:14].

ought to doubt that orders is truly and properly one of the seven sacraments of Holy Church [can. 3]. For the apostle says: “I remind you to rekindle the gift of God that is within you through the laying on of my hands: for God did not give us a spirit of timidity but a spirit of power and love and self-control” [2 Tim 1:6f; cf. 1 Tim 4:14].

Chapter 4. The Ecclesiastical Hierarchy and Ordination

Quoniam vero in sacramento ordinis, sicut et in baptismo et confirmatione, character imprimitur [can. 4], qui nec deleri nec auferri potest: merito sancta Synodus damnat eorum sententiam, qui asserunt, Novi Testamenti sacerdotes temporariam tantummodo potestatem habere, et semel rite ordinatos iterum laicos effici posse, si verbi Dei ministerium non exercent [can. 1].

But since in the sacrament of orders, as also in baptism and confirmation, a character is imprinted [can. 4] that can be neither erased nor taken away, the holy council justly condemns the opinion of those who say that priests of the New Testament have only a temporary power and that those who have once been rightly ordained can again become lay persons if they do not exercise the ministry of the word of God [can. 1]. 1767

Quod si quis omnes Christianos promiscue Novi Testamenti sacerdotes esse, aut omnes pari inter se potestate spirituali praeditos affirmet: nihil aliud facere videtur quam ecclesiasticam hierarchiam, quae est “ut castrorum acies ordinata” [cf. Ct 6:3, 9], confundere [can. 6], perinde ac si, contra beati Pauli doctrinam, omnes Apostoli, omnes Prophetae, omnes Evangelistae, omnes Pastores, omnes sint Doctores [cf. 1 Cor 12:29; Eph 4:11].

And if Christians should assert that all Christians are without distinction priests of the New Testament or that all are equally endowed with the same spiritual power, they seem to be doing nothing else than upsetting the Church’s hierarchy [can. 6], which is like “an army set in array” [Song 6:3, 9], as if, contrary to the teaching of St. Paul, all were apostles, all prophets, all evangelists, all pastors, all doctors [cf. 1 Cor 12:29; Eph 4:11].

Proinde sancta Synodus declarat, praeter ceteros ecclesiasticos gradus episcopos, qui in Apostolorum locum successerunt, ad hunc hierarchicum ordinem praecipue pertinere, et positos (sicut idem Apostolus ait) a Spiritu Sancto “regere Ecclesiam Dei” [Act 20:28], eosque presbyteris superiores esse, ac sacramentum confirmationis conferre, ministros Ecclesiae ordinare, atque alia pleraque peragere ipsos posse, quarum functionum potestatem reliqui inferioris ordinis nullam habent [can. 7].

Therefore the holy council declares that, besides the other ecclesiastical grades, the bishops, who have succeeded the apostles, principally belong to this hierarchical order and have been, as the same apostle says, established by the Holy Spirit “to govern the Church of God” [Acts 20:28, Vulg.]; that they are superior to priests, confer the sacrament of confirmation, ordain ministers of the Church, and can perform many other functions over which those of a lower order have no power [can. 7]. 1768

Docet insuper sancta Synodus, in ordinatione episcoporum, sacerdotum et ceterorum ordinum nec populi nec cuiusvis saecularis potestatis et magistratus consensum sive vocationem sive auctoritatem ita requiri, ut sine ea irrita sit ordination; quin potius decernit, eos, qui tantummodo a populo aut saeculari potestate ac magistratu vocati et instituti ad haec ministeria exercenda ascendunt, et qui ea propria temeritate sibi sumunt, omnes non Ecclesiae ministros, sed fures et latrones, per ostium non ingressos [cf. Io 10:1], habendos esse [can. 8].

The holy council teaches, furthermore, that in the ordination of bishops, of priests, and of other grades, neither the consent, call, nor mandate, either of the people or of any civil power or authority, is necessary to the extent that without it the ordination would be invalid. Rather, it decrees that all those who ascend to the exercise of these ministries being called and installed only by the people or by the civil power or authority, and those who in their rashness assume them on their own, are to be regarded, not as ministers of the Church [can. 8], but as thieves and robbers, who have not entered by the door [cf. Jn 10:1]. 1769

Haec sunt, quae generatim sacrae Synodo visum est Christifideles de sacramento ordinis docere. His autem contraria certis et propriis canonibus in hunc, qui sequitur, modum damnare constituit, ut omnes, adiuvante Christo, fidei regula utentes, in tot errorum tenebris catholicam veritatem facilius agnoscere et tenere possint.

Such are the main points that the council wanted to teach the faithful regarding the sacrament of orders. It was decided to condemn the contrary propositions with definite and special canons in the way that follows, so that all those who with Christ’s help observe the rule of faith may more easily discern and hold the Catholic truth amid the darkness of so many errors. 1770

Canons on the Sacrament of Orders

- 1771 Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, non esse in Novo Testamento sacerdotium visibile et externum, vel non esse potestatem aliquam consecrandi et offerendi verum corpus et sanguinem Domini, et peccata remittendi et retinendi, sed officium tantum et nudum ministerium praedicandi Evangelium, vel eos, qui non praedicant, prorsus non esse sacerdotes: anathema sit [*cf. 1764, 1767].
- Can. 1. If anyone says that there is in the New Testament no visible and external priesthood or that there is no power of consecrating and offering the true Body and Blood of the Lord and of bare ministry of preaching sins, but only the office and bare ministry of preaching the gospel; or that those who do not preach are not priests at all, let him be anathema [*cf. 1764, 1767].
- 1772 Can. 2. Si quis dixerit, praeter sacerdotium non esse in Ecclesia catholica alios ordines, et maiores et minores, per quos velut per gradus quosdam in sacerdotium tendatur: anathema sit [*cf. 1765].
- Can. 2. If anyone says that besides the priesthood there are in the Catholic Church no others orders, major and minor, by which, as by various steps, one advances toward the priesthood, let him be anathema [*cf. 1765].
- 1773 Can. 3. Si quis dixerit, ordinem sive sacram ordinationem non esse vere et proprie sacramentum a Christo Domino institutum, vel esse figmentum quoddam humanum, excogitatum a viris rerum ecclesiasticarum imperitis, aut esse tantum ritum quendam eligendi ministros verbi Dei et sacramentorum: anathema sit [*cf. 1766].
- Can. 3. If anyone says that orders or sacred ordination is not truly and properly a sacrament instituted by Christ the Lord or that it is a kind of human invention devised by men inexperienced in ecclesiastical matters or that it is only a kind of rite by which are chosen the ministers of the word of God and of the sacraments, let him be anathema [*cf. 1766].
- 1774 Can. 4. Si quis dixerit, per sacram ordinationem non dari Spiritum Sanctum, ac proinde frustra episcopos dicere: “Accipe Spiritum Sanctum”; aut per eam non imprimi characterem; vel eum, qui sacerdos semel fuit, laicum rursus fieri posse: anathema sit [*cf. 1767].
- Can. 4. If anyone says that by sacred ordination the Holy Spirit is not given and that, therefore, the bishops say in vain: “Receive the Holy Spirit”; or if he says that no character is imprinted by ordination; or that he who has once been a priest can again become a layman, let him be anathema [*cf. 1767].
- 1775 Can. 5. Si quis dixerit, sacram unctionem, qua Ecclesia in sancta ordinatione utitur, non tantum non requiri, sed contemnendam et perniciosam esse, similiter et alias ceremonias: anathema sit.
- Can. 5. If anyone says that the sacred anointing that the Church uses at holy ordination not only is not required but is despicable and pernicious, and so are also the other ceremonies, let him be anathema.
- 1776 Can. 6. Si quis dixerit, in Ecclesia catholica non esse hierarchiam, divina ordinatione institutam, quae constat ex episcopis, presbyteris et¹ ministris: anathema sit [*cf. 1768].
- Can. 6. If anyone says that in the Catholic Church there is no hierarchy instituted by divine ordinance that consists of bishops, priests, and¹ ministers, let him be anathema [*cf. 1768].
- 1777 Can. 7. Si quis dixerit, episcopos non esse presbyteris superiores; vel non habere potestatem confirmandi et ordinandi, vel eam, quam habent, illis esse cum presbyteris communem; vel ordines ab ipsis collatos sine populi vel potestatis saecularis consensu aut vocatione irritos esse; aut eos, qui nec ab ecclesiastica et canonica potestate rite ordinati nec missi sunt, sed aliunde veniunt, legitimos esse verbi et sacramentorum ministros: anathema sit [*cf. 1768s].
- Can. 7. If anyone says that bishops are not superior to priests; or that they do not have the power to confirm and ordain, or that the power they have is common both to them and to priests; or (if anyone says) that orders conferred by them without the consent or call of the people or of the civil power are invalid; or that those who have neither been rightly ordained by ecclesiastical and canonical authority nor sent by it, but come from some other source, are lawful ministers of the word and of the sacraments, let him be anathema [*cf. 1768f].
- 1778 Can. 8. Si quis dixerit, episcopos, qui auctoritate Romani Pontificis assumuntur, non esse legitimos et veros episcopos, sed figmentum humanum: anathema sit.
- Can. 8. If anyone says that bishops chosen by the authority of the Roman pontiff are not true and legitimate bishops but a human invention, let him be anathema.

*1776 ¹ The day before the session, the word aliis (other) before ministris (ministers) was suppressed; cf. SGTTr 9:622, n. 1; 3:690₂₇, 691₃₃ (Journal of Gabriel Paleotti).

1797–1816: Session 24, November 11, 1563

The preparation for the decrees of this session was begun at Bologna. From April 26, 1547, the synodal Fathers deliberated on the doctrine of matrimony and, from August 29 to September 6, 1547, on clandestine marriages (SGTr 6:98, 407–35). A preliminary draft of the canons (SGTr 6:445–47) was discussed beginning on September 9. Finally, at Trent fourteen years later, on December 6, 1562, propositions suspected of heresy were subjected to examination. For the most part, these were taken from books already cited several times: M. Luther, De captivitate Babylonica ecclesiae praeludium: De matrimonio (Weimar ed., 6:550–60); Confessio Augustana, art. 23 (BekSchELK 86–91 / CpRef 26:294–97); P. Melancthon, Apologia Confessionis Augustanae, art. 13 (BekSchELK 291–96 / CpRef 26:570f.). The drafts for the canons and the decree of reform Tametsi were presented on July 20, August 7, and September 5, 1563 (SGTr 9:639, 682–85, 760–65 / TheiTr 2:313, 335, 387). For the validity of the decree Tametsi in Germany, cf. *3385.

Ed.: SGTr 9:966–68 (the decree Tametsi immediately follows the canons) / RiTr 214–17 / MaC 33:149E–151E / HaC 10:147A–150A / COeD, 3rd ed., 753–56.

a. Doctrine and Canons on the Sacrament of Marriage

Matrimonii perpetuum indissolubilemque nexum primus humani generis parens divini Spiritus instinctu pronuntiavit, cum dixit: “Hoc nunc os ex ossibus meis, et caro de carne mea. Quamobrem relinquet homo patrem suum et matrem, et adhaerebit uxori suae, et erunt duo in carne una” [Gn 2:23s; cf. Mt 19:5; Eph 5:31].

Hoc autem vinculo duos tantummodo copulari et coniungi, Christus Dominus apertius docuit, cum postrema illa verba, tamquam a Deo prolata, referens dixit: “Itaque iam non sunt duo, sed una caro” [Mt 19:6], statimque eiusdem nexus firmitatem, ab Adamo tanto ante pronuntiatam, his verbis confirmavit: “Quod ergo Deus coniunxit, homo non separet” [Mt 19:6; Mc 10:9].

Gratiam vero, quae naturalem illum amorem perficeret, et indissolubilem unitatem confirmaret, coniugesque sanctificaret, ipse Christus, venerabilium sacramentorum institutor atque perfector, sua nobis passione promeruit. Quod Paulus Apostolus innuit, dicens: “Viri, diligite uxores vestras, sicut Christus dilexit Ecclesiam, et se ipsum tradidit pro ea” [Eph 5:25], mox subiungens: “Sacramentum hoc magnum est; ego autem dico, in Christo et in Ecclesia” [Eph 5:32].

Cum igitur matrimonium in lege evangelica veteribus connubiis per Christum gratia praestet: merito inter Novae Legis sacramenta annumerandum sancti Patres nostri, Concilia et universalis Ecclesiae traditio semper docuerunt; adversus quam impii homines huius saeculi insanientes, non solum perperam de hoc venerabili sacramento senserunt, sed de more suo, praetextu Evangelii libertatem carnis introducentes, multa ab Ecclesiae catholicae sensu et ab Apostolorum temporibus probata consuetudine aliena, scripto et verbo asseruerunt, non sine magna Christifidelium iactura.

Quorum temeritati sancta et universalis Synodus cupiens occurrere, insigniores praedictorum schismaticorum

The first father of the human race, inspired by the divine Spirit, proclaimed the perpetual and indissoluble bond of matrimony when he explained: “This at last is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh. Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and clings to his wife, and they become one flesh” [Gen 2:23f.; Mt 19:5; Eph 5:31].

But that only two are united and joined together by this bond, Christ the Lord taught more clearly when, referring to these words as having been uttered by God, he said: “So they are no longer two but one” [Mt 19:6], and immediately confirmed the stability of the bond that was proclaimed long ago by Adam in these words: “What therefore God has joined together, let no man put asunder” [Mt 19:6; Mk 10:9].

Christ himself, who instituted the holy sacraments and brought them to perfection, merited for us by his Passion the grace that perfects that natural love, confirms the indissoluble union, and sanctifies the spouses. St. Paul suggests this when he says: “Husbands, love your wives, as Christ loved the Church and gave himself up for her” [Eph 5:25], adding immediately: “This is a great mystery, and I mean in reference to Christ and the Church” [Eph 5:32].

Since, through Christ, matrimony in the evangelical law surpasses marital unions of the Old Law in grace, our holy Fathers, the councils, and the tradition of the universal Church have with good reason always taught that it is to be numbered among the sacraments of the New Law. Contrary to this teaching, impious men of this age, in their foolishness, not only have entertained false ideas about this venerable sacrament, but, as is their custom, they have given freedom to the flesh under the pretext of the Gospel, and, by writing and word, they have asserted—not without great harm to Christ’s faithful—many things alien to the understanding of the Catholic Church and to customs approved since apostolic times.

Wishing to oppose their temerity, this holy and universal council has decided to remove the more notable haereses et errores, ne plures ad se trahat pernicioſa eorum contagio, exterminandos duxit, hos in ipsos haereticos eorumque errores decernens anathematismos.

heresies and errors of the above-mentioned schismatics by decreeing the following anathemas against the heretics themselves and their errors, so that their pernicious contagion may not attract more to them.

Canons on the Sacrament of Marriage

- 1801 Can. 1. Si quis dixerit, matrimonium non esse vere et proprie unum ex septem Legis evangelicae sacramentis, a Christo Domino institutum, sed ab hominibus in Ecclesia inventum, neque gratiam conferre: anathema sit [cf. *1800].
- Can. 1. If anyone says that matrimony is not truly and properly one of the seven sacraments of the law of the Gospel, instituted by Christ the Lord, but that it was devised in the Church by men and does not confer grace, let him be anathema [cf. *1800].
- 1802 Can. 2. Si quis dixerit, licere Christianis plures simul habere uxores, et hoc nulla lege divina esse prohibitum [cf. Mt 19:9]: anathema sit [cf. *1798].
- Can. 2. If anyone says that it is lawful for Christians to have several wives at the same time and that this is not forbidden by any divine law [cf. Mt 19:9], let him be anathema [cf. *1798].
- 1803 Can. 3. Si quis dixerit, eos tantum consanguinitatis et affinitatis gradus, qui Levitico [18:6–18] exprimuntur, posse impedire matrimonium contrahendum, et dirimere contractum; nec posse Ecclesiam in nonnullis illorum dispensare, aut constituere, ut plures impediunt et dirimant: anathema sit [cf. *2659].
- Can. 3. If anyone says that only those degrees of consanguinity and affinity that are mentioned in Leviticus [18:6–18] can impede contracting marriage and invalidate the contract; and that the Church cannot dispense from some of them or declare other degrees impeding and diriment, let him be anathema [cf. *2659].
- 1804 Can. 4. Si quis dixerit, Ecclesiam non potuisse constituere impedimenta matrimonium dirimentia vel in iis constituendis errasse: anathema sit.
- Can. 4. If anyone says that the Church did not have the power to establish diriment impediments for marriage or that she has erred in establishing them, let him be anathema.
- 1805 Can. 5. Si quis dixerit, propter haeresim, aut molestam cohabitationem, aut affectatam absentiam a coniuge dissolvi posse matrimonii vinculum: anathema sit.
- Can. 5. If anyone says that the marriage bond can be dissolved because of heresy or difficulties in cohabitation or because of the willful absence of one of the spouses, let him be anathema.
- 1806 Can. 6. Si quis dixerit, matrimonium ratum, non consummatum, per solemnem religionis professionem alterius coniugum non dirimi: anathema sit.
- Can. 6. If anyone says that marriage contracted but not consummated is not dissolved by the solemn religious profession of one of the spouses, let him be anathema.
- 1807 Can. 7. Si quis dixerit, Ecclesiam errare,¹ cum docuit et docet, iuxta evangelicam et apostolicam doctrinam [cf. Mt 5:32; 19:9; Mc 10:11s; Lc 16:18; 1 Cor 7:11], propter adulterium alterius coniugum matrimonii vinculum non posse dissolvi, et utrumque, vel etiam innocentem, qui causam adulterio non dedit, non posse, altero coniuge vivente, aliud matrimonium contrahere, moecharique eum, qui dimissa adultera aliam duxerit, et eam, quae dimisso adultero alii nupserit: anathema sit.
- Can. 7. If anyone says that the Church is in error¹ for having taught and for still teaching that in accordance with the evangelical and apostolic doctrine [cf. Mt 5:32; 19:9; Mk 10:11f.; Lk 16:18; 1 Cor 7:11], the marriage bond cannot be dissolved because of adultery on the part of one of the spouses and that neither of the two, not even the innocent one who has given no cause for infidelity, can contract another marriage during the lifetime of the other; and that the husband who dismisses an adulterous wife and marries again and the wife who dismisses an adulterous husband and marries again are both guilty of adultery, let him be anathema.

¹1807 This milder form of condemnation was chosen with respect to the Greeks, who follow an opposite practice but do not reject the teaching of the Latin Church. Pius XI alludes to this canon in the encyclical Casti connubii of December 31, 1930: "But if the Church has not erred and does not err when she has taught and teaches this, and it is therefore completely certain that marriage cannot be dissolved even for the cause of adultery, it is clear that other weaker reasons for divorce that are usually presented count for even less and must be considered as completely baseless" (Quod si non erravit neque errat Ecclesia, cum haec docuit ac docet, ideoque certum omnino est, matrimonium ne ob adulterium quidem dissolvi posse, in comperto est, reliquas tanto debiliores, quae afferri solent, divortiorum causas multo minus valere nihilque prorsus esse faciendas; AAS 22 [1930]: 574).

Can. 8. Si quis dixerit, Ecclesiam errare, cum ob multas causas separationem inter coniuges quoad thorum, seu quoad cohabitationem, ad certum incertumve tempus, fieri posse decernit: anathema sit.

Can. 9. Si quis dixerit, clericos in sacris ordinibus constitutos, vel regulares castitatem solemniter professos, posse matrimonium contrahere, contractumque validum esse, non obstante lege Ecclesiastica vel voto, et oppositum nil aliud esse, quam damnare matrimonium; posseque omnes contrahere matrimonium, qui non sentiunt se castitatis (etiamsi eam voverint) habere donum: anathema sit. Cum Deus id recte petentibus non denegat, nec patiar, nos supra id, quod possumus, tentari [cf. 1 Cor 10:13].

Can. 10. Si quis dixerit, statum coniugalem anteponendum esse statui virginitatis vel caelibatus, et non esse melius ac beatius, manere in virginitate aut caelibatu, quam iungi matrimonio [cf. Mt 19:11s; 1 Cor 7:25s, 38, 40]: anathema sit.

Can. 11. Si quis dixerit, prohibitionem solemnitatis nuptiarum certis anni temporibus superstitionem esse tyrannicam, ab ethnicorum superstitione profectam; aut benedictiones et alias ceremonias, quibus Ecclesia in illis utitur, damnaverit: anathema sit.

Can. 12. Si quis dixerit, causas matrimoniales non spectare ad iudices ecclesiasticos: anathema sit [cf. *2598, 2659].

b. Canons on a Reform of Marriage: The Decree Tametsi

Cap. 1. [Motivum et tenor legis] Tametsi dubitandum non est, clandestina matrimonia, libero contrahentium consensu facta, rata et vera esse matrimonia, quamdiu Ecclesia ea irrita non fecit, et proinde iure damnandi sint illi, ut eos sancta Synodus anathemate damnat, qui ea vera ac rata esse negant, quique falso affirmant, matrimonia a filiis familias sine consensu parentum contracta irrita esse, et parentes ea rata vel irrita facere posse:¹ nihilominus sancta Dei Ecclesia ex iustissimis causis illa semper detestata est atque prohibuit.

Verum, cum sancta Synodus animadvertat, prohibitiones illas propter hominum inoboedientiam iam non prodesse, et gravia peccata perpendat, quae ex eisdem clandestinis coniugiis ortum habent, praesertim vero eorum, qui in statu damnationis permanent, dum priore uxore, cum qua clam contraxerant, relicta, cum alia palam contrahunt, et cum ea in perpetuo adulterio vivunt;

Can. 8. If anyone says that the Church errs when she declares that for many reasons separation with regard to bed and board may take place between the spouses for a determinate or indeterminate time, let him be anathema. 1808

Can. 9. If anyone says that clerics in sacred orders or regulars who have made solemn profession of chastity can contract marriage and that one so contracted is valid despite the ecclesiastical law or the vow; and that the contrary opinion is nothing but a condemnation of marriage; and that all those who feel that they do not have the gift of chastity, even though they have vowed it, can contract marriage, let him be anathema. For God does not refuse that gift to those who ask for it rightly, and he “will not let you be tempted beyond your strength” [1 Cor 10:13]. 1809

Can. 10. If anyone says that the married state surpasses that of virginity or celibacy and that it is not better and happier to remain in virginity or celibacy than to be united in matrimony [cf. Mt 19:11f.; 1 Cor 7:25f., 38, 40], let him be anathema. 1810

Can. 11. If anyone says that the prohibition of the solemnization of marriages at certain times of the year is a tyrannical superstition derived from pagan superstition; or condemns the blessing and other ceremonies that the Church uses in solemn nuptials, let him be anathema. 1811

Can. 12. If anyone says that matrimonial cases do not belong to ecclesiastical judges, let him be anathema [cf. *2598, 2659]. 1812

Chap. 1 [Motive and sense of the law] There is no doubt that secret marriages, entered by free consent of the parties, are true and valid marriages as long as the Church has not made them null. Hence those are worthy of condemnation, and the holy council condemns them under anathema, who deny that they are true and valid and falsely assert that marriages contracted by children still at home without the consent of their parents are null and that the parents can make them either valid or invalid.¹ Nevertheless, the holy Church of God has always detested and prohibited such marriages for the best of reasons. 1813

Now, the holy council recognizes that such prohibitions have been ineffective owing to human disobedience and weighs up the serious sins that arise from these secret marriages, especially on the part of those who persist in a state of damnation in that they have deserted a first wife married in secrecy and have publicly contracted marriage with another woman and live 1814

*1813 ¹ Thus, for example, M. Luther, De abroganda missa privata III (Weimar ed. 8:466₉₋₁₃).

cui malo cum ab Ecclesia, quae de occultis non iudicat, succurri non possit, nisi efficacius aliquod remedium adhibeatur, idcirco sacri Lateranensis Concilii [IV] sub Innocentio III celebrati [cf. *817] vestigiis inhaerendo praecipit, ut in posterum, antequam matrimonium contrahatur, ter a proprio contrahentium parochis tribus continuis diebus festivis in ecclesia inter Missarum solemniam publice denuntietur, inter quos matrimonium sit contrahendum; quibus denuntiationibus factis, si nullum legitimum opponatur impedimentum, ad celebrationem matrimonii in facie Ecclesiae procedatur, ubi parochus, viro et muliere interrogatis, et eorum mutuo consensu intellecto, vel dicat: “Ego vos in matrimonium coniungo, in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti”, vel aliis utatur verbis, iuxta receptum uniuscuiusque provinciae ritum.

with her in a permanent state of adultery. The Church, in that she does not judge about what is not public, is unable to treat this evil unless she uses a more effective remedy. Hence, following in the footsteps of the holy [Fourth] Council of the Lateran held under Innocent III [cf. *817], this council orders that henceforth, before a marriage is contracted, an announcement of those intending to marry shall be made publicly during Mass by the parish priest of the contracting parties on three successive feast days. After these announcements have been made, and if no legitimate impediment is raised in objection, the celebration of the marriage must then take place in open church, during which the parish priest will, by questioning the man and woman, make sure of their consent and then say, I join you together in marriage, in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, or use other words according to the accepted rite of each province.

1815 [Restrictio legis] Quod si aliquando probabilis fuerit suspicio, matrimonium malitiose impediri posse, si tot praecesserint denuntiationes: tunc vel una tantum denuntiatio fiat, vel saltem parochis et duobus vel tribus testibus praesentibus matrimonium celebretur; deinde ante illius consummationem denuntiationes in ecclesia fiant, ut, si aliqua subsunt impedimenta, facilius detegantur, nisi Ordinarius ipse expedire iudicaverit, ut praedictae denuntiationes remittantur, quod illius prudentiae et iudicio sancta Synodus relinquit.

[Restriction of the law] But if in some cases there are grounds for suspecting that the marriage will be maliciously obstructed if that number of announcements are made, then let there be only one announcement, or let the parish priest at least celebrate the marriage in the presence of two or three witnesses; then before its consummation the announcements are to be made in the church, so that any underlying impediments may more easily be detected, unless the Ordinary considers it better for them to be omitted, which the holy council leaves to his wise judgment.

1816 [Sanctio] Qui aliter quam praesente parochis, vel alio sacerdote de ipsius parochi seu Ordinarii licentia, et duobus vel tribus testibus matrimonium contrahere attentabunt: eos sancta Synodus ad sic contrahendum omnino inhabiles reddit, et huiusmodi contractus irritos et nullos esse decernit, prout eos praesenti decreto irritos facit et annullat.

[Sanction] The holy council now renders incapable of marriage any who may attempt to contract marriage otherwise than in the presence of the parish priest or another priest, with the permission of the parish priest or the Ordinary, and two or three witnesses; and it decrees that such contracts are null and invalid and renders them so by this decree.

1820–1835: Session 25, December 3 and 4, 1563

a. Decree on Purgatory, December 3, 1563

The question of purgatory—along with that of indulgences—was treated initially at Bologna from June 19 to July 25, 1547 (SGTr 6:223–99). At the end of November 1563, the council Fathers took it up again and formulated this decree with great speed in order to terminate the council as soon as possible (SGTr 9:1069–76 / TheiTr 2:499–501).

Ed.: SGTr 9:1077 / RiTr 391 / MaC 33:170D–171A / HaC 10:167CD / COeD, 3rd ed., 774.

1820 Cum catholica Ecclesia, Spiritu Sancto edocta, ex sacris Litteris et antiqua Patrum traditione in sacris Conciliis et novissime in hac oecumenica Synodo docuerit, purgatorium esse [cf. *1580], animasque ibi detentas fidelium suffragiis, potissimum vero acceptabili altaris sacrificio iuvari [cf. *1743, 1753]: praecipit sancta Synodus episcopis, ut sanam de purgatorio doctrinam, a sanctis Patribus et sacris Conciliis traditam, a

The Catholic Church, instructed by the Holy Spirit and in accordance with Sacred Scripture and the ancient tradition of the Fathers, has taught in the holy councils and most recently in this ecumenical council that there is a purgatory [cf. *1580] and that the souls detained there are helped by the acts of intercession of the faithful, and especially by the acceptable Sacrifice of the Altar [cf. *1743, 1753]. Therefore, this holy council commands

Christifidelibus credi, teneri, doceri et ubique praedicari diligenter studeant.

Apud rudem vero plebem difficiliores ac subtiliores quaestiones, quaeque ad aedificationem non faciunt, et ex quibus plerumque nulla fit pietatis accessio, a popularibus concionibus secludantur. Incerta item, vel quae specie falsi laborant, evulgari ac tractari non permittant. Ea vero, quae ad curiositatem quandam aut superstitionem spectant, vel turpe lucrum sapiunt, tamquam scandala et fidelium offencicula prohibeant. . . .

the bishops to strive diligently that the sound doctrine of purgatory, handed down by the holy Fathers and the sacred councils, be believed by the faithful and that it be adhered to, taught, and preached everywhere.

But let the more difficult and subtle questions that do not make for edification and, for the most part, are not conducive to an increase of piety be excluded from the popular sermons to uneducated people. Likewise they should not permit opinions that are doubtful and tainted with error to be spread and exposed. As for those things that belong to the realm of curiosity or superstition or smack of dishonorable gain, they should forbid them as scandalous and injurious to the faithful. . . .

b. Decree on the Invocation, Veneration, and Relics of the Saints and on Sacred Images, December 3, 1563

Ed.: SGTr 9:1077–79 / RiTr 392f. / MaC 33:171A–172C / COeD, 3rd ed., 774–76.

Mandat sancta Synodus omnibus episcopis et ceteris docendi munus curamque sustinentibus, ut iuxta catholicae et apostolicae Ecclesiae usum, a primaevis christianae religionis temporibus receptum, sanctorumque Patrum consensionem et sacrorum conciliorum decreta: imprimis de Sanctorum intercessione, invocatione, reliquiarum honore, et legitimo imaginum usu fideles diligenter instruant, docentes eos, Sanctos, una cum Christo regnantes, orationes suas pro hominibus Deo offerre; bonum atque utile esse, suppliciter eos invocare et ob beneficia impetranda a Deo per Filium eius Iesum Christum Dominum nostrum, qui solus noster Redemptor et Salvator est, ad eorum orationes, opem auxiliumque confugere; illos vero, qui negant, Sanctos, aeterna felicitate in caelo fruente, invocandos esse; aut qui asserunt, vel illos pro hominibus non orare, vel eorum, ut pro nobis etiam singulis orent, invocationem esse idololatriam, vel pugnare cum verbo Dei, adversarique honori unius mediatoris Dei et hominum Iesu Christi [cf. 1 Tim 2:5]; vel stultum esse, in caelo regnantibus voce vel mente supplicare: impie sentire.

The holy council, in accordance with the practice of the Catholic and apostolic Church from the early years of the Christian religion, and in accordance with the common teaching of the holy Fathers and the decrees of the sacred councils, orders all bishops and others who have the official charge of teaching to instruct the faithful diligently, in particular as regards the intercession and the invocation of the saints, the honor due to their relics, and the lawful use of images. Let them teach the faithful that the saints, reigning together with Christ, pray to God for men; that it is good and useful to invoke them humbly and to have recourse to their prayers, to their help and assistance, in order to obtain favors from God through his Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who alone is our Redeemer and Savior. Those, however, think in an impious way who deny that the saints enjoying eternal happiness in heaven are to be invoked; or who claim that saints do not pray for men or that calling upon them to pray for each of us is idolatry or is opposed to the word of God and is prejudicial to the honor of Jesus Christ, the one Mediator between God and men [cf. 1 Tim 2:5]; or who say that it is foolish to make supplication orally or mentally to those who are reigning in heaven.

1821

Sanctorum quoque martyrum et aliorum cum Christo viventium sancta corpora, quae viva membra fuerunt Christi et templum Spiritus Sancti [cf. 1 Cor 3:16; 6:15, 19; 2 Cor 6:16], ab ipso ad aeternam vitam suscitanda et glorificanda, a fidelibus veneranda esse, per quae multa beneficia a Deo hominibus praestantur: ita ut affirmantes, Sanctorum reliquiis venerationem atque honorem non deberi, vel eas aliaque sacra monumenta a fidelibus inutiliter honorari, atque eorum opis impetrandae causa Sanctorum memorias frustra frequentari: omnino damnandos esse, prout iam pridem eos damnavit et nunc etiam damnat Ecclesia.

The sacred bodies of the holy martyrs and of the other saints living with Christ, which have been living members of Christ and the temple of the Holy Spirit [cf. 1 Cor 3:16; 6:15, 19; 2 Cor 6:16] and which are destined to be raised and glorified by him unto life eternal, should also be venerated by the faithful. Through them many benefits are granted to men by God. For this reason, those who say that veneration and honor are not due to the relics of the saints or that these relics and other sacred memorials are honored in vain by the faithful and that it is futile to visit the places where the martyrs have died to implore their assistance are to be condemned absolutely, just as the Church has already condemned them and even now condemns them.

1822

1823 Imagines porro Christi, Deiparae Virginis et aliorum Sanctorum, in templis praesertim habendas et retinendas, eisque debitum honorem et venerationem impertiendam, non quod credatur inesse aliqua in iis divinitas vel virtus, propter quam sint colendae, vel quod ab eis sit aliquid petendum, vel quod fiducia in imaginibus sit figenda, veluti olim fiebat a gentibus, quae in idolis spem suam collocabant [cf. Ps 134:15–17]; sed quoniam honos, qui eis exhibetur, refertur ad prototypa, quae illae repraesentant: ita ut per imagines, quas osculamur et coram quibus caput aperimus et procumbimus, Christum adoremus, et Sanctos, quorum illae similitudinem gerunt, veneremur. Id quod Conciliorum, praesertim vero secundae Nicaenae Synodi, decretis contra imaginum oppugnatores est sancitum [*cf. 600–603].

1824 Illud vero diligenter doceant episcopi, per historias mysteriorum nostrae redemptionis, picturis vel aliis similitudinibus expressas, erudiri et confirmari populum in articulis fidei commemorandis et assidue recolendis; tum vero ex omnibus sacris imaginibus magnum fructum percipi, non solum quia admonetur populus beneficiorum et munerum, quae a Christo sibi collata sunt, sed etiam, quia Dei per Sanctos miracula et salutaria exempla oculis fidelium subiciuntur, ut pro iis Deo gratias agant, ad Sanctorumque imitationem vitam moresque suos componant, excitenturque ad adorandum ac diligendum Deum, et ad pietatem colendam. Si quis autem his decretis contraria docuerit aut senserit: anathema sit.

1825 In has autem sanctas et salutas observationes si qui abusus irrepererint: eos prorsus aboleri sancta Synodus vehementer cupit, ita ut nullae falsi dogmatis imagines et rudibus periculosi erroris occasionem praebentes statuuntur.

Quod si aliquando historias et narrationes sacrae Scripturae, cum id indoctae plebi expediet, exprimi et figurari contigerit: doceatur populus, non propterea divinitatem figurari, quasi corporeis oculis conspici, vel coloribus aut figuris exprimi possit. Omnis porro superstitione in Sanctorum invocatione, reliquiarum veneratione et imaginum sacro usu tollatur, omnis turpis quaestus eliminetur, omnis denique lascivia vitetur. . . .

Haec ut fidelius observentur, statuit sancta Synodus, nemini licere, ullo in loco . . . ullam insolitam ponere vel ponendam curare imaginem, nisi ab episcopo approbata fuerit. Nulla etiam admittenda esse nova miracula, nec novas reliquias recipiendas nisi eodem recognoscente et approbante episcopo.

Further, the images of Christ, of the Virgin Mother of God, and of other saints are to be kept and preserved, in places of worship especially; and to them due honor and veneration is to be given, not because it is believed that there is in them anything divine or any power for which they are revered or in the sense that something is sought from them or that a blind trust is put in images as once was done by the Gentiles who placed their hope in idols [cf. Ps 135:15–17], but because the honor that is shown to them is referred to the original subjects they represent. Thus, through these images that we kiss and before which we kneel and uncover our heads, we are adoring Christ and venerating the saints whose likeness these images bear. That is what was defined by the decrees of the councils, especially the Second Council of Nicaea, against the opponents of images [*cf. 600–603].

Bishops should teach with care that the faithful are instructed and strengthened by commemorating and frequently recalling the articles of our faith through the expression in pictures or other likenesses of the stories of the mysteries of our redemption; and that great benefits flow from all sacred images, not only because people are reminded of the gifts and blessings conferred on us by Christ, but because the miracles of God through the saints and their salutary example is put before the eyes of the faithful, who can thank God for them, shape their own lives and conduct in imitation of the saints, and be aroused to adore and love God and to practice devotion. If anyone teaches or holds what is contrary to these decrees: let him be anathema.

The holy council earnestly desires to root out utterly any abuses that may have crept into these holy and saving practices, so that no representations of false doctrine should be set up that give occasion of dangerous error to the unlettered.

So if accounts and stories from Holy Scripture are sometimes etched and pictured, which is a help to uneducated people, they must be taught that the Godhead is not pictured as if it can be seen with human eyes or expressed in figures and colors. All superstition must be removed from invocation of the saints, veneration of relics, and use of sacred images; all aiming at base profit must be eliminated; all sensual appeal must be avoided. . . .

That these points may be carried out more faithfully, the holy council lays down that no one in any place . . . may erect or see to the erection of any unusual image unless it has been approved by the bishop. Nor are any new miracles to be accepted or new relics recognized without the bishop similarly examining and approving them.

c. Decree on a General Reform, December 3, 1563

Ed.: SGTTr 9:1093 / RiTr 467 / MaC 33:192B–D / HaC 10:188E–189A / COeD, 3rd ed., 795.

Duels

Cap. 19. Detestabilis duellorum usus, fabricante diabolo introductus, ut cruenta corporum morte animarum etiam perniciem lucretur, ex christiano orbe penitus exterminetur. Imperator, reges ... et quocumque alio nomine domini temporales, qui locum ad monomachiam in terris suis inter Christianos concesserint, eo ipso sint excommunicati....

Qui vero pugnam commiserint, et qui eorum patrini vocantur, excommunicationis ... ac perpetuae infamiae poenam incurrant et ut homicidae iuxta sacros canones puniri debeant, et, si in ipso conflictu decesserint, perpetuo careant ecclesiastica sepultura.¹

d. Decree on Indulgences, December 4, 1563

Cf. *1820°.

Ed.: SGTTr 9:1105 / RiTr 468 / MaC 33:193E–194A / HaC 10:190C–D / COeD, 3rd ed., 796f.

Cum potestas conferendi indulgentias a Christo Ecclesiae concessa sit, atque huiusmodi potestate divinitus sibi tradita [cf. Mt 16:19; 18:18] antiquissimis etiam temporibus illa usa fuerit: sacrosancta Synodus indulgentiarum usum, christiano populo maxime salutarem et sacrorum conciliorum auctoritate probatum, in Ecclesia retinendum esse docet et praecipit, eosque anathemate damnat, qui aut inutiles esse asserunt, vel eas concedendi in Ecclesia potestatem esse negant.

In his tamen concedendis moderationem ... adhiberi cupit, ne nimia facilitate ecclesiastica disciplina enervetur. Abusus vero, qui in his irreperunt et quorum occasione hoc indulgentiarum nomen ab haereticis blasphematur, emendatos et correctos cupiens: praesenti decreto generaliter statuit, pravos quaestus omnes pro his consequendis ... omnino abolendos esse.

Chap. 19. The detestable practice of dueling, introduced by the doing of the devil so that, by the bloody death of the body, he should also gain damage to souls, is to be wholly driven from the Christian world. The emperor, kings, ... and temporal lords of any other title who shall make allowance for single combat between Christians in their territories should be excommunicated by that very fact....

Those who engage in fighting and those who are called their seconds should incur the penalty of excommunication ... and perpetual infamy and ought to be punished as murderers in accordance with the sacred canons, and, if they die in the conflict, they should be denied Christian burial in perpetuity.¹

Since the power of granting indulgences was conferred on the Church by Christ, and as she made use of this power divinely given to her [cf. Mt 16:19; 18:18] even in the early times, the holy council teaches and commands that the use of indulgences, most salutary to the Christian people and approved by the authority of the holy councils, is to be retained in the Church; and it condemns with anathema those who assert that they are useless or who deny that the Church has the power to grant them.

In granting them, however, it desires that moderation be observed ... lest too much relaxation should weaken the ecclesiastical discipline. Desiring, too, to correct and punish the abuses that have crept in and are the occasion for heretics to blaspheme this distinguished name of indulgences, it enacts in general by this present decree that all base gain for securing indulgences ... should be totally abolished.

1847–1850: Bull of Confirmation of the Council of Trent Benedictus Deus, January 26, 1564 (1563 in the curial style)

In addition to this definitive text of the bull of confirmation, other forms also exist: cf. SGTTr 9:1156–59.

Ed.: SGTTr 9:1152–54 / TheiTr 2:515a–516a / BullTau 7:244b–246a / BullCocq 4/II, 168a–169a / RiTr 481f. / MaC 33:216B–217E / HaC 10:195A–196D.

The Dependence of a General Council upon the Supreme Pontiff

Tandem consecuti sumus, quod nec diurnis nec nocturnis curis elaborare destitimus quodque “a Patre

We have at last attained that for which We have not ceased to labor, by day and night, and for which We have luminum” [Jas 1:17] assidue peccati sumus. Cum enim eam in urbem undique ex christiani nominis nationibus convenisset—Nostris convocata litteris et sua etiam ipsorum pietate excitata—episcoporum et aliorum insignium praelatorum maxima et oecumenico concilio digna frequentia, . . . Nobis adeo concilii libertati faventibus, ut etiam de rebus Sedi Apostolicae proprie reservatis liberum ipsi Concilio arbitrium per litteras ad legatos Nostros scriptas¹ ultro permiserimus, quae de sacramentis et aliis rebus, quae quidem necessariae visae sint, tractanda, diffinienda et statuenda restabant ad confutandas haereses, ad tollendos abusus et emendandos mores, a sacrosancta Synodo summa libertate diligentiaque tractata et accurate ac mature admodum definita, explicata, statuta sunt. . . .

*1830¹ Cf. Gregory IX, Decretales, l. 5, tit. 13, c. 1–2 (Frdb 2:804).

1848 Cum autem ipsa sancta Synodus, pro sua erga Sedem Apostolicam reverentia, antiquorum etiam conciliorum vestigiis inhaerens, decretorum suorum omnium, quae Nostro et praedecessorum Nostrorum tempore facta sunt, confirmationem a Nobis petierit, decreto de ea re in publica sessione facto,¹ Nos

. . . postulatione ipsius Synodi cognita, habita super hac re cum venerabilibus Fratribus Nostris sanctae Romanae ecclesiae cardinalibus deliberatione matura, Sanctique Spiritus in primis auxilio invocato, cum ea decreta omnia catholica et populo christiano utilia ac salutaria esse cognovissemus, ad Dei omnipotentis laudem, de eorundem Fratrum Nostrorum consilio et assensu, in consistorio Nostro secreto illa omnia et singula auctoritate Apostolica hodie confirmavimus et ab omnibus Christifidelibus suscipienda ac servanda esse decrevimus. . . .

1849 Ad vitandum praeterea perversionem et confusionem, quae oriri posset, si unicuique liceret, prout ei liberet, in decreta Concilii commentarios et interpretationes suas edere, Apostolica auctoritate inhibemus omnibus . . . , ne quis sine auctoritate Nostra audeat ullos commentarios, glossas, annotationes, scholia ullumve omnino interpretationis genus super ipsius Concilii decretis quocumque modo edere aut quidquam quocumque nomine, etiam sub praetextu maioris decretorum corroborationis aut executionis aliove quaesito colore statuere.

1850 Si cui vero in eis aliquid obscurius dictum et statutum fuisse eamque ob causam interpretatione aut decisione aliqua egere visum fuerit: ascendat ad locum, quem Dominus elegit, ad Sedem videlicet Apostolicam, assiduously prayed “the Father of lights” [Jas 1:17]. For when a great gathering worthy of an ecumenical council, consisting of bishops and other major prelates, had come together in that city from all regions, from nations bearing the Christian name, drawn by Our letters and aroused by their own piety, . . . We showed ourselves to be so well-disposed toward the freedom of the council that, of Our own free will, We permitted the council itself, by letters written to Our legates,¹ the free determination even over things properly reserved to the Apostolic See; and thus, what still seemed necessary to treat, define, and determine concerning the sacraments and other matters in order to confute heresies, remove abuses, and improve morals, have now been treated and defined and expounded fully, carefully, and considerably by the holy council with the greatest freedom and diligence. . . .

Since the holy council itself, out of its reverence for the Apostolic See and following in the footsteps of the ancient councils, has, by a decree on the matter made in public session, sought confirmation from Us of all its decrees made in Our time and in that of Our predecessors,¹ We have,

. . . being aware of the request of the said council, after mature deliberation on the matter with Our venerable brothers the cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, above all having invoked the help of the Holy Spirit, and after having ascertained that all those decrees are catholic and useful and salutary to the Christian people, for the praise of almighty God, with the advice and assent of Our same brothers, in Our secret consistory, today confirmed by apostolic authority each and all of them and have decreed that they are to be received and observed by all the Christian faithful. . . .

Furthermore, in order to avoid the distortion and confusion that could arise if it were permitted to every individual, as he pleased, to publish his own interpretations and commentaries on the decrees of the council: by apostolic authority We order to all . . . that none, without Our authorization, should dare to publish any commentaries, glosses, notes, explanations, or any kind of interpretation at all concerning the decrees of the said council or to stipulate anything, by any authority whatsoever, even on the pretext of greater confirmation or execution of the decrees, or for any other exalted reason.

If, however, anything in the decrees should seem to anyone to have been expressed or laid down with too much ambiguity and, for that reason, to stand in need of some interpretation or decision: then let him go up to the *1847¹ Pius IV, letters to the legates, June 16, 1563, and August 14, 1563.

*1848¹ Session 25, December 4, 1563 (SGTr 9:1108f.).

omnium fidelium magistram, cuius auctoritatem etiam ipsa sancta Synodus tam reverenter agnovit.¹ Nos enim difficultates et controversias, si quae ex eis decretis ortae fuerint, nobis declarandas et decidendas, quemadmodum ipsa quoque sancta Synodus decrevit, reservamus. . . .

place that the Lord has chosen, namely, to the Apostolic See, the teacher of all the faithful, whose authority the holy council itself has so reverently acknowledged.¹ For We reserve to Ourselves the clarification of and decision about any difficulties and controversies that might arise from the decrees, as the holy council itself has laid down. . . .

1851–1861: The “Tridentine Rules” for the Prohibition of Books, Confirmed in the Constitution Dominici gregis custodiae, March 24, 1564

These rules are the work of twenty-two Fathers of the Council of Trent, delegated to draw up a new index of forbidden books. Pius IV had ordered the compilation of such an index through the brief Cum magnus iam of January 14, 1562 (SGTr 8:306ff.). After a discussion in the general congregation on January 30, 1562, the Fathers decided it would be sufficient to update the Index of Paul IV (decrees of February 17 and 26, 1562). The bishops in charge of revising the Index had not yet been able to complete their work by the time the council ended. That is why neither the Tridentine Index nor the following rules appear in the synodal acts. They were first promulgated by the bull Dominici gregis custodiae (BullTau 7:281f.).

Ed.: RiTr 609–12 / MaC 33:228E–231A / HaC 10:207D–210E / many editions of the Index before the revision of Leo XIII in 1900, of which the first is: Index librorum prohibitorum, cum Regulis confectis per Patres a Tridentina Synodo delectos, auctoritate Sanctissimi Domini Nostri Pii IV Pontificis Maximi comprobatus (Rome, 1564).

Regula I: Libri omnes, quos ante annum MDXV aut Summi Pontifices aut Concilia oecumenica damnarunt, et in hoc Indice non sunt, eodem modo damnati esse censeantur, sicut olim damnati fuerunt.

Rule 1: All books that the supreme pontiffs or ecumenical councils condemned before the year 1515 and that are not in this Index are to be deemed to be condemned as they were condemned in the past. 1851

Regula II: Haeresiarcharum libri, tam eorum, qui post praedictum annum haereses invenerunt vel suscitaverunt, quam qui haeticorum capita aut duces sunt vel fuerunt . . . , omnino prohibentur. Aliorum autem haeticorum libri, qui de religione quidem ex professo tractant, omnino damnantur. Qui vero de religione non tractant, a theologis catholicis iussu episcoporum et inquisitorum examinati et approbati permittuntur. . . .

Rule 2: Books by heresiarchs, both those who devised or stirred up heresies after the aforesaid year (1515) and those who are or were the heads or leaders of heretics . . . are altogether forbidden. Books by other heretics that expressly treat of religion are altogether condemned. Those, however, that do not treat of religion are permitted if examined and approved by Catholic theologians at the request of bishops and inquisitors. . . . 1852

Regula III: Versiones scriptorum etiam ecclesiasticorum, quae hactenus editae sunt a damnatis auctoribus, modo nihil contra sanam doctrinam contineant, permittuntur.

Rule 3: Translations of even ecclesiastical writers that have been published hitherto by condemned authors are permitted provided they contain nothing contrary to sound doctrine. 1853

Librorum autem Veteris Testamenti versiones viris tantum doctis et piis iudicio episcopi concedi poterunt, modo huiusmodi versionibus tamquam elucidationibus vulgatae editionis ad intelligendam sacram Scripturam, non autem tamquam sano textu utantur.

Translations of the books of the Old Testament can be permitted, by the judgment of the bishop, only to learned and pious men, provided these translations are used as elucidations of the Vulgate edition for understanding Sacred Scripture and not as a sound text.

Versiones vero Novi Testamenti ab auctoribus primae classis¹ huius indicis factae nemini concedantur, quia utilitatis parum, periculi vero plurimum lectoribus ex earum lectione manare solet. Si quae vero annotationes cum huiusmodi quae permittuntur versionibus vel cum vulgata editione circumferuntur, expunctis locis suspectis a facultate theologica alicuius Universitatis catholicae aut Inquisitione generali, permitti eisdem poterunt, quibus et versiones. . . .

Translations of the New Testament made by authors in the first class¹ in this Index are not to be permitted to anybody, since from the reading of them little use and much danger usually accrue to the readers. If, however, there are notes in circulation with such translations that are permitted, or with editions of the Vulgate, their use can be permitted to the same persons as are permitted the translations, if suspect passages have been removed by the theological faculty of any Catholic university or by the general Inquisition. . . .

*1850¹ Session 7, Decree on Reform, preface; sess. 25, Decree on Reform, chap. 21 (SGTr 5:997₁₅; 9:1094₃₀).

*1853¹ In the Index of Pius IV, the works and the authors are divided into three classes corresponding to the greater or lesser danger of seduction; in the first class, while only the names of the authors are enumerated, all their works are prohibited as suspect.

- 1854 Regula IV: Cum experimenta manifestum sit, si sacra Biblia vulgari lingua passim sine discrimine permittantur, plus inde ob hominum temeritatem detrimenti quam utilitatis oriri, hac in parte iudicio episcopi aut inquisitoris stetur, ut cum consilio parochi vel confessarii Bibliorum a catholicis auctoribus versorum lectionem in vulgari lingua eis concedere possint, quos intellexerint ex huiusmodi lectione non damnum, sed fidei atque pietatis augmentum capere posse....
- Rule 4: Since experience has shown that if the Holy Bible in the vernacular is permitted generally and indiscriminately, more harm than good arises thanks to the temerity of mankind, in this case the judgment of the bishop or the inquisitor is to determine whether they can, after consultation with the parish priest or confessor, allow the reading of translations of the Bible into the vernacular made by Catholic authors to those whom they know to be able to draw an increase in faith and piety rather than harm from such reading....
- 1855 Regula V: Libri illi, qui haeticorum auctorum opera interdum prodeunt, in quibus nulla vel pauca de suo apponunt, sed aliorum dicta colligunt, cuiusmodi sunt lexica, concordantiae, apophthegmata ..., si quae habeant, quae purgatione indigeant, illis episcopi ... consilio sublatis aut emendatis, permittantur.
- Rule 5: Those books that are published from time to time by heretical authors in which they include little or nothing of their own but rather put together the sayings of others, such as dictionaries, concordances, books of sayings, ... if they contain things that require expurgation ... are permitted, once such things have been removed or amended by the judgment of the bishop.
- 1856 Regula VI: Libri vulgari idiomate de controversiis inter catholicos et haeticos nostri temporis disserentes non passim permittantur, sed idem de iis servetur, quod de bibliis vulgari lingua scriptis statutum est.
- Qui vero de ratione bene vivendi, contemplandi, confitendi ac similibus argumentis vulgari sermone conscripti sunt, si sanam doctrinam contineant, non est, cur prohibeantur....
- Rule 6: Books in the vernacular concerning controversies between Catholics and the heretics of our time should not be permitted generally; rather, the same thing is to be done with them as has been laid down regarding Bibles written in the vernacular.
- There is, however, no reason why those that are written in the vernacular and concern matters of right living, contemplating, confessing, and similar subjects should be prohibited if they contain sound doctrine....
- 1857 Regula VII: Libri, qui res lascivas seu obscenas ex professo tractant, narrant aut docent, cum non solum fidei, sed et morum, qui huiusmodi librorum lectione facile corrumpi solent, ratio habenda sit, omnino prohibentur....
- Antiqui vero ab ethnicis conscripti propter sermonis elegantiam et proprietatem permittuntur: nulla tamen ratione pueris praelegendi erunt.
- Rule 7: Books that expressly treat, narrate, or teach lascivious or obscene things are altogether prohibited, since consideration must be given not only to faith but to morals, which are usually easily corrupted by the reading of books of this kind....
- Ancient works written by pagan authors are, however, permitted for the sake of the elegance and correctness of their diction: but in no case must they be read to youths.
- 1858 Regula VIII: Libri, quorum principale argumentum bonum est, in quibus tamen obiter aliqua inserta sunt, quae ad haeresim seu impietatem, divinationem seu superstitionem spectant, a catholicis theologis expurgati concedi possunt....
- Rule 8: Books whose main subject is good but in which some things are occasionally included that tend toward heresy or impiety, divination or superstition ... can be allowed if they have been expurgated by Catholic theologians....
- 1859 Regula IX: Libri omnes et scripta geomantiae, hydromantiae, aëromantiae, pyromantiae, oneiromantiae, chiromantiae, necromantiae, sive in quibus continentur sortilegia, veneficia, auguria, auspicia, incantationes artis magicae, prorsus reiiciuntur.
- Episcopi vero diligenter provideant, ne astrologiae iudiciariae libri, tractatus, indices legantur vel habeantur, qui de futuris contingentibus successibus, fortuitisve casibus aut iis actionibus, quae ab humana voluntate pendent, certi aliquid eventurum affirmare audent....
- Rule 9: All books and writings concerning geomancy, hydromancy, aeromancy, pyromancy, oneiromancy, chiromancy, necromancy, or which contain sortilegia, potions, auguries, omens, or magic spells are altogether condemned.
- Bishops should also diligently take care that books, treatises, or indexes of astrological forecasts are not read or possessed that dare to affirm that something is certainly going to take place relating to future contingent happenings or to fortuitous events or to actions that depend upon the human will....

Regula X: In librorum aliarumve scripturarum impressione servetur, quod in Concilio Lateranensi [V] sub Leone X, sessione X, statutum est.¹

Rule 10: In the printing of books or other writings, those things are to be observed that have been laid down by the [Fifth] Lateran Council under Leo X, session 10.¹ 1860

[There follow the detailed disciplinary regulations for authors, publishers, and librarians.]

Ad extremum vero omnibus fidelibus praecipitur, ne quis audeat contra harum regularum praescriptum aut huius indicis prohibitionem libros aliquos legere aut habere. Quod si quis libros haereticorum vel cuiusvis auctoris scripta, ob haeresim vel ob falsi dogmatis suspicionem damnata atque prohibita, legerit sive habuerit, statim in excommunicationis sententiam incurrat...

Lastly, all the faithful are commanded that none should dare to read or possess any books contravening what is laid down in these rules or the prohibition of this Index. But if anyone shall read or possess books by heretics or the writings of any author that are condemned or prohibited because of heresy or because of suspicion of false doctrine, let him at once incur the sentence of excommunication... 1861

1862–1870: Bull Iniunctum nobis, November 13, 1564

In compliance with chapter 2 of the decree for the general reform (SGTr 9:1086), Pius IV presented in the constitutions Iniunctum nobis and In sacrosancta beati Petri (both issued on the same day) the text of an extensive profession of faith. By virtue of the decree of the Congregation of the Council of January 20, 1877 (ASS 10 [1877]: 74), there were added some words of the First Vatican Council: cf.*1869 [shown in brackets].

Ed.: RiTr 575f. / MaC 33:220B–222C / HaC 10:199D–201B / BullTau 7:327b–328b / BullCocq 4/II, 204b–205a.

Tridentine Profession of Faith

Ego N. firma fide credo et profiteor omnia et singula, quae continentur in Symbolo fidei [Constantinopolitano: cf. *150], quo sancta Romana Ecclesia utitur, videlicet:

I, N., with firm faith believe and profess each and every article contained in the profession of faith [of Constantinople, cf. *150] that the Holy Roman Church uses: 1862

Credo in unum Deum Patrem omnipotentem, factorem caeli et terrae, visibilium omnium et invisibilium; et in unum Dominum Iesum Christum, Filium Dei unigenitum, et ex Patre natum ante omnia saecula, Deum de Deo, lumen de lumine, Deum verum de Deo vero, genitum non factum, consubstantialem Patri; per quem omnia facta sunt; qui propter nos homines et propter nostram salutem descendit de caelis, et incarnatus est de Spiritu Sancto ex Maria Virgine, et homo factus est; crucifixus etiam pro nobis sub Pontio Pilato, passus et sepultus est; et resurrexit tertia die secundum Scripturas, et ascendit in caelum, sedet ad dexteram Patris, et iterum venturus est cum gloria iudicare vivos et mortuos, cuius regni non erit finis; et in Spiritum Sanctum Dominum et vivificantem, qui ex Patre Filioque procedit; qui cum Patre et Filio simul adoratur et conglorificatur; qui locutus est per Prophetas; et unam sanctam catholicam et apostolicam Ecclesiam. Confiteor unum baptismum in remissionem peccatorum, et exspecto resurrectionem mortuorum, et vitam venturi saeculi. Amen.

I believe in one God, the Father almighty, creator of heaven and earth, of all things visible and invisible. And in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, born of the Father before all ages, God from God, light from light, true God from true God, generated, not made, one in being with the Father, through whom all things were made; who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven and by the power of the Holy Spirit was incarnate from the Virgin Mary and became man; he was also crucified for us under Pontius Pilate, suffered, and was buried; and he rose again on the third day according to the Scriptures and ascended into heaven; he is seated at the right hand of the Father and will come again in glory to judge the living and the dead; to his kingdom there will be no end. And in the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of life, who proceeds from the Father and the Son, who together with the Father and the Son is likewise worshipped and glorified, who has spoken through the prophets. And in one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church. I acknowledge one baptism for the forgiveness of sins. And I await the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come. Amen.

Apostolicas et ecclesiasticas traditiones reliquasque eiusdem Ecclesiae observationes et constitutiones

I most firmly accept and embrace the apostolic and ecclesiastical traditions and all other observances 1863

*1860 ¹ Leo X, Inter sollicitudines, May 4, 1515 (BullTau 5:625–28).

firmissime admitto et amplector. Item sacram Scripturam iuxta eum sensum, quem tenuit et tenet sancta mater Ecclesia, cuius est iudicare de vero sensu et interpretatione sacrarum Scripturarum, admitto, nec eam umquam, nisi iuxta unanimum consensum Patrum accipiam et interpretabor.

1864 Profiteor quoque septem esse vere et proprie sacramenta Novae Legis a Iesu Christo Domino nostro instituta atque ad salutem humani generis, licet non omnia singulis, necessaria, scilicet baptismum, confirmationem, Eucharistiam, paenitentiam, extremam unctionem, ordinem et matrimonium, illaque gratiam conferre, et ex his baptismum, confirmationem et ordinem sine sacrilegio reiterari non posse. Receptos quoque et approbatos Ecclesiae catholicae ritus in supradictorum omnium sacramentorum solemnibus administratione recipio et admitto.

1865 Omnia et singula, quae de peccato originali et de iustificatione in sacrosancta Tridentina Synodo definita et declarata fuerunt, amplector et recipio.

1866 Profiteor pariter in Missa offerri Deo verum, proprium et propitiatorium sacrificium pro vivis et defunctis, atque in sanctissimo Eucharistiae sacramento esse vere, realiter et substantialiter corpus et sanguinem una cum anima et divinitate Domini nostri Iesu Christi, fierique conversionem totius substantiae panis in corpus, et totius substantiae vini in sanguinem, quam conversionem catholica Ecclesia transsubstantiationem appellat. Fateor etiam sub altera tantum specie totum atque integrum Christum verumque sacramentum sumi.

1867 Constante teneo purgatorium esse, animasque ibi detentas fidelium suffragiis iuvari; similiter et Sanctos una cum Christo regnantes venerandos atque invocandos esse, eosque orationes Deo pro nobis offerre, atque eorum reliquias esse venerandas.

Firmiter assero, imagines Christi ac Deiparae semper Virginis, nec non aliorum Sanctorum, habendas et retinendas esse, atque eis debitum honorem ac venerationem impertiendam; indulgentiarum etiam potestatem a Christo in Ecclesia relictam fuisse, illarumque usum christiano populo maxime salutarem esse affirmo.

1868 Sanctam catholicam et apostolicam Romanam Ecclesiam omnium ecclesiarum matrem et magistram agnosco; Romanoque Pontifici, beati Petri Apostolorum principis successori ac Iesu Christi vicario, veram oboedientiam spondeo ac iuro.

and constitutions of the same Church. I likewise accept Holy Scripture according to that sense which Holy Mother Church has held and does hold, to whom it belongs to judge of the true meaning and interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures; I shall never accept or interpret them otherwise than according to the unanimous consent of the Fathers.

I also profess that there are truly and properly speaking seven sacraments of the New Law, instituted by Jesus Christ our Lord and necessary for the salvation of the human race, though not all are necessary for each individual person: (they are) baptism, confirmation, the Eucharist, penance, extreme unction, orders, and matrimony. And (I profess) that they confer grace and that of these, baptism, confirmation, and orders cannot be repeated without sacrilege. I also admit and accept the rites received and approved in the Catholic Church for the solemn administration of all the sacraments mentioned above.

I embrace and accept each and all the articles defined and declared by the most Holy Council of Trent concerning original sin and justification.

I also profess that in the Mass there is offered to God a true, proper, and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead and that in the most Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist the body and blood together with the soul and the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ are truly, really, and substantially present and that there takes place a change of the whole substance of bread into the body and of the whole substance of wine into the blood; and this change the Catholic Church calls transubstantiation. I also confess that under each species alone the whole and entire Christ and the true sacrament is received.

I steadfastly hold that there is a purgatory and that the souls detained there are helped by the acts of intercession of the faithful; likewise, that the saints reigning together with Christ should be venerated and invoked, that they offer prayers to God for us, and that their relics should be venerated.

I firmly declare that the images of Christ and of the Mother of God ever Virgin and of the other saints as well are to be kept and preserved and that due honor and veneration should be given to them. I also affirm that the power of indulgences has been left by Christ to the Church and that their use is very beneficial to the Christian people.

I acknowledge the holy, catholic, and apostolic Roman Church as the mother and the teacher of all the Churches, and I promise and swear true obedience to the Roman pontiff, successor of blessed Peter, chief of the apostles, and vicar of Christ.

Cetera item omnia a sacris canonibus et oecumenicis Concilii, ac praecipue a sacrosancta Tridentina Synodo [et ab oecumenico Concilio Vaticano], tradita, definita ac declarata [praesertim de Romani Pontificis Primatu et infallibili magisterio], indubitanter recipio atque profiteor; simulque contraria omnia, atque haereses quascumque ab Ecclesia damnatas et reiectas et anathematizatas ego pariter damno, reicio et anathematizo.

Hanc veram catholicam fidem, extra quam nemo salvus esse potest, quam in praesenti sponte profiteor et veraciter teneo, eandem integram et immaculatam usque ad extremum vitae spiritum constantissime, Deo adiuvante, retinere et confiteri atque a meis subditis vel illis, quorum cura ad me in munere meo spectabit, teneri, doceri et praedicari, quantum in me erit, curaturum, ego idem N. spondeo, voveo ac iuro: sic me Deus adiuvet, et haec sancta Dei Evangelia.

[Doctrinal text of PAUL IV that was not part of the council and for that reason is first placed here.]

1880: Constitution Cum quorundam hominum, August 7, 1555

The bull is directed against the Unitarian sect that originated in Italy. Pius V (constitution Romanus Pontifex, October 1, 1568: BullTau 7:222f.) and Clement VIII (brief Dominici gregis divina, February 3, 1603: BullTau 11:1a–2b) confirmed this bull.

Ed.: BullTau 6:500b–501a / BullCocq 4/I, 322b.

The Trinity and the Incarnation

[Cupientes] admonere omnes et singulos, qui hactenus asseruerunt, dogmatizarunt vel crediderunt, Deum omnipotentem non esse trinum in personis et incomposita omnino indivisaque unitate substantiae et unum unamet simplici divinitatis essentia; aut Dominum nostrum non esse Deum verum eiusdem substantiae per omnia cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto; aut eundem secundum carnem non esse conceptum in utero beatissimae semperque Virginis Mariae de Spiritu Sancto, sed sicut ceteros homines ex semine Ioseph; aut eundem Dominum ac Deum nostrum Iesum Christum non subiisse acerbissimam crucis mortem, ut nos a peccatis et ab aeterna morte redimeret et Patri ad vitam aeternam reconciliaret; aut eandem beatissimam Virginem Mariam non esse veram Dei matrem, nec perstitisse semper in virginitatis integritate, ante partum scilicet, in partu et perpetuo post partum, ex parte omnipotentis Dei Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti Apostolica auctoritate requirimus et monemus....

I unhesitatingly accept and profess also all other things transmitted, defined, and declared by the sacred canons and the ecumenical councils, especially by the most holy Council of Trent [and by the ecumenical Vatican Council, mostly as regards the primacy of the Roman pontiff and his infallible teaching authority]. At the same time, all contrary propositions and whatever heresies have been condemned, rejected, and anathematized by the Church, I too condemn, reject, and anathematize. 1869

This true Catholic faith, outside of which no one can be saved, which of my own accord I now profess and truly hold, I, N., do promise, vow, and swear that, with the help of God, I shall most faithfully keep and confess entire and inviolate, to my last breath, and that I shall take care, as far as it lies in my power, that it be held, taught, and preached by those under me or those over whom I have charge by virtue of my office. So help me God and these his holy Gospels. 1870

[Desiring] to warn all those and each individually who have up until now asserted, taught, or believed that the almighty God is not three in Persons and entirely simple and undivided in the unity of substance and one in the unique simple essence of divinity; or that our Lord is not true God and of the same substance in every way with the Father and the Holy Spirit; or that the same <Lord> was not, according to the flesh, conceived in the womb of the most blessed and ever Virgin Mary by <the power of> the Holy Spirit but, like other men, from the seed of Joseph; or that our same Lord and God, Jesus Christ, did not submit to the most bitter death of the Cross in order to redeem us from sins and from eternal death and to reconcile us with the Father for eternal life; or that the same most blessed Virgin Mary is not the true Mother of God and did not always persist in the integrity of virginity, namely, before giving birth, in giving birth, and perpetually after giving birth; We demand and warn on behalf of the Almighty God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and by apostolic authority.... 1880

PIUS V: January 7, 1566–May 1, 1572

1901–1980: Bull Ex omnibus afflictionibus, October 1, 1567

Michael Baius (de Bay), along with Jan Hessels and Antoine Sablons, O.F.M., upheld Augustinian theses that displeased other Franciscans and were sent to the Sorbonne for a judgment. On June 27, 1560, the Sorbonne censured the eighteen propositions submitted to them. Baius defended them in his Annotationes (cf. what is indicated below under letter A'). When the dispute expanded, Pius IV tried unsuccessfully to impose silence on both sides. In 1563, Baius published a work that contained, among others, three writings indicated by letters B', C', and D'. In November 1564, there followed another work, which included the writings indicated by letters E', Fa', and Fb'. From these writings and others no longer in existence were taken various propositions that, in 1565, were censured both in Alcalá de Henares and in Salamanca. The University of Louvain thereupon appealed to Rome. In the meantime, Baius had published an expanded edition of his 1563 volume and thus gave occasion for numerous other examinations. The new treatises are indicated in the following by letters G', H', J', and K'. The University of Alcalá, on June 20, 1567, censured forty propositions extracted from this work. The texts of the condemnations of Alcalá and Salamanca of the years 1565 and 1567 are given by É. van Eijl in RHE 48 [1953]: 733–39, 755–63, and 742–49.

Pius V inserted a portion of these propositions into his bull, which he communicated privately to the University of Louvain and to Baius. In December 1567, Baius made a retraction, but soon afterward, he pressed for a revision and sent a defense of his doctrine to the pope. In a brief of May 13, 1569, Pius V repeated the condemnation of the propositions. On June 20, 1569, Baius again renounced his errors. Since the arguments did not abate, in 1579 a process was begun in Rome against the Baianists. On January 29, 1580 (1579, according to the dating of the curia), Gregory XIII issued the bull Provisionis nostrae, in which he cited large portions of the bull Ex omnibus afflictionibus of Pius V. Finally, in 1586, at the instigation of the apostolic nuncio, Giovanni Bonomini, Johannes Lensaeus, professor at Louvain, composed the Doctrina eius quam certorum articulorum damnatio postulare visa est, brevis . . . explicatio (ed. by G. Gerberon, cited below, pars 2, 161–81 / H. Lennerz, in TD ser. theol. 24:42–72), which presented acknowledged positive doctrinal foundations for the subsequent examinations by the faculty of Louvain.

Ed.: É. van Eijl, "Les Censures des Universités d'Alcalá et de Salamanque et la censure du pape Pie V contre Michel Baius (1565–1567)", RHE 48 (1953): 767–75; cf. some emanations communicated by the same editor in RHE 50 (1955): 499, n. 1; this is the only critical edition based on the original bull conserved at Mechelen, Archives de l'archevêché, section Documenta pontificia, for the year 1567 / [G. Gerberon.] Michaelis Baii celeberrimi in Lovaniensi Academiae theologi opera, . . . studio A. P. Theologi [pseudonym] (Cologne [= pseudo-location, in reality Amsterdam], 1696), pars 2: Baiana 49–57 / DuPIA 3/II (1728): 109b–114b.

The propositions in the original bull are not numbered: the theologians have subdivided them into 76 or 79 propositions. The numbering of 76 was adopted by Baius, Lensaeus, and Robert Bellarmine (who refuted Baius). The numbering of 79 is, however, more common and is, therefore, indicated here as the principal one, while that of Baius is added [in brackets].

The indication of the sources in the notes for the individual propositions is based on the research of Édouard van Eijl in which he explains the text of the bull: RHE 48 (1953): 719–76. There are, nevertheless, some propositions whose source Eijl was not able to specify either because it had not yet been published in written form (props. 65–79) or because it was a matter of freely formulated conclusions drawn from the premises of Baius (props. 61–64).

- A' = Baius, Annotationes in Sorbonae censuram (ed. by G. Gerberon, Michaelis Baii . . . opera [as above for the edition of the bull], pars 2: Baiana 8–32 / H. Lennerz, Opuscula duo de doctrina Baiana, in TD ser. theol. 24 [Rome, 1938], 4–41 [for props. 66–67, 72–73; cf. also 18, 25, 27f., 32f., 39].
- B' = De libero hominis arbitrio eiusque potestate liber I (Louvain, 1563) (as with all other works of Baius, ed. by G. Gerberon, as cited above, pars 1), 74–88 [for 39–41; cf. 37, 66].
- Ca', Cb' = De iustitia [Ca'] et justificatione [Cb'] libri 2 (Louvain, 1563), 103–46, 147–52 [for 42f.; 44].
- D' = De sacrificio liber I (Louvain, 1563), 153–67 [for 45].
- E' = De operum meritis libri 2 (Louvain, 1564/1565), 25–44 [for 1–20].
- Fa', Fb' = De prima hominis iustitia [Fa'] et virtutibus impiorum [Fb'] libri 2 (Louvain, 1564/1565), 45–73 [for 21–24, 26; 25, 27–30].
- G' = De charitate (Louvain, 1566), 89–102 [for 31–38].
- H' = De peccato originis (Louvain, 1566), 1–24 [for 46–58].
- J' = De indulgentiis (Louvain, 1566), 196–204 [for 59f.].
- K' = De oratione pro defunctis (Louvain, 1566), 205–11 [for 56–58].

Errors of Michael Baius on the Nature of Man and Grace

- 1901 1. Nec angeli nec primi hominis adhuc integri merita recte vocantur gratia.¹ 1. Neither the merits of an angel nor those of the first man still in the state of integrity are correctly called grace.¹
- 1902 2. Sicut opus malum ex natura sua est mortis aeternae meritorium, sic bonum opus ex natura sua est vitae aeternae meritorium.¹ 2. Just as the evil act by its nature merits eternal death, just so the good act by its nature merits eternal life.¹
- 1903 3. Et bonis angelis et primo homini, si in statu illo perseverasset usque ad ultimum vitae, felicitas esset merces, et non gratia.¹ 3. If the first man had persevered up to the end of his life in a state of innocence, just like the good angels, the felicity would have been a reward and not a grace.¹

*1901¹ E' I, 4.

*1902¹ E' II, 2, title.

*1903¹ E' I, 1, 3, 4.

4. Vita aeterna homini integro et angelo promissa fuit intuitu bonorum operum, et bona opera ex lege naturae ad illam consequendam per se sufficiunt.¹

5. In promissione facta angelo et primo homini continetur naturalis iustitiae constitutio, qua pro bonis operibus, sine alio respectu, vita aeterna iustis promittitur.¹

6. Naturali lege constitutum fuit homini, ut, si in oboedientia perseveraret, ad eam vitam pertransiret, in qua mori non posset.¹

7. Primi hominis integri merita fuerunt primae creationis munera; sed iuxta modum loquendi Scripturae sacrae non recte vocantur gratia; quo fit, ut tantum merita, non etiam gratia, debeant nuncupari.¹

8. In redemptis per gratiam Christi nullum inveniri potest bonum meritum, quod non sit gratis indigno collatum.¹

9. Dona concessa homini integro et angelo, forsitan non improbanda ratione, possunt dici gratia; sed quia, secundum usum Scripturae, nomine gratiae ea tantum munera intelliguntur, quae per Iesum male merentibus et indignis conferuntur, ideo neque merita neque merces, quae illis redditur, gratia dici debet.¹

10. Solutionem poenae temporalis, quae peccato dimisso saepe remanet, et corporis resurrectionem proprie non nisi meritis Christi adscribendam esse.¹

11. Quod pie et iuste in hac vita mortali usque in finem vitae conversati vitam consequimur aeternam, id non proprie gratiae Dei, sed ordinationi naturali statim initio creationis constitutae iusto Dei iudicio deputandum est; neque in hac retributione bonorum ad Christi meritum respicitur, sed tantum ad primam institutionem generis humani, in qua lege naturali constitutum est, ut iusto Dei iudicio oboedientiae mandatorum vita aeterna reddatur.¹

12. Pelagii sententia est: opus bonum, citra gratiam adoptionis factum, non est regni caelestis meritum.¹

4. Eternal life was promised to man in (original) integrity and to the angel in view of their good works, and, by virtue of the natural law, good works are sufficient in themselves for obtaining it.¹ 1904

5. In the promise made to the angel and the first man is contained what constitutes natural justice, according to which eternal life is promised to the just for good works without any other consideration.¹ 1905

6. By the natural law it was established for man that, if he would persevere in obedience, he would pass unto that life in which he could not die.¹ 1906

7. The merits of the first man in the state of integrity were the gifts of the first creation; but, according to the language of Sacred Scripture, they are not properly called grace; therefore, they should only be called merits and not also grace.¹ 1907

8. In those redeemed by the grace of Christ no good merit can be found that would not have been bestowed freely upon one who is unworthy.¹ 1908

9. The gifts bestowed upon man in the state of integrity and the angel could perhaps be called grace for a reason that is not to be rejected; but since, according to the use of Sacred Scripture, the name “grace” is understood only for the gifts bestowed by Jesus on those who do not merit it and are unworthy, it follows that neither the merits nor the recompense given to them should be called grace.¹ 1909

10. The remission of temporal punishment, which often remains after the forgiveness of sins, and the resurrection of the body should be ascribed properly only to the merits of Jesus Christ.¹ 1910

11. If, after having persevered in this mortal life up to the end of life in piety and justice, we obtain eternal life, this is properly attributed, not to the grace of God, but to the natural order established right from the beginning of creation by the just judgment of God; and in this recompense of good, the merit of Christ is not considered but only the first institution of the human race, in which, following the natural law, it was established by the just judgment of God that eternal life should be accorded for the observance of the commandments.¹ 1911

12. The opinion is Pelagian: that a good work done without the grace of adoption does not merit the kingdom of heaven.¹ 1912

*1904¹ E' I, 2.

*1905¹ E' I, 2.

*1906¹ E' I, 3; cf. 2, 9.

*1907¹ E' I, 4.

*1908¹ E' I, 4.

*1909¹ E' I, 4.

*1910¹ E' I, 9.

*1911¹ E' I, 9.

*1912¹ E' II, 4, title.

- 1913 13. Opera bona, a filiis adoptionis facta, non accipiunt rationem meriti ex eo, quod fiunt per spiritum adoptionis inhabitantem corda filiorum Dei, sed tantum ex eo, quod sunt conformia legi, quodque per ea praestatur oboedientia legi.¹
- 1914 14. Opera bona iustorum non accipiunt in die iudicii extremi ampliorem mercedem, quam iusto Dei iudicio mererentur accipere.¹
- 1915 15. Docet rationem meriti non consistere in eo, quod, qui bene operatur, habeat gratiam et inhabitantem Spiritum Sanctum, sed in eo solum, quod oboedit divinae legi, quam sententiam saepius repetit et multis rationibus probat fere toto libro.¹
- 1916 16. In eodem libro saepius repetit quod non est vera legis oboedientia, quae fit sine caritate.¹
- 1917 17. Dicit sentire cum Pelagio, qui dicunt, esse necessarium ad rationem meriti, ut homo per gratiam adoptionis sublimetur ad statum deificum.¹
- 1918 18. Dicit opera catechumenorum, ut fidem et paenitentiam ante remissionem peccatorum factam, esse vitae aeternae merita; quam vitam non consequentur catechumeni, nisi prius praecedentium delictorum impedimenta tollantur.¹
- 1919 19. Videtur insinuare quod opera iustitiae et temperantiae, quae Christus fecit, ex dignitate personae operantis non traxerunt maiorem valorem.¹
- 1920 20. Nullum est peccatum ex natura sua veniale, sed omne peccatum meretur poenam aeternam.¹
- 1921 21. Humanae naturae sublimatio et exaltatio in consortium divinae naturae debita fuit integritati primae conditionis, et proinde naturalis dicenda est, et non supernaturalis.¹
- 1922 22. Cum Pelagio sentiunt, qui textum Apostoli ad Romanos secundo: “Gentes, quae legem non habent, naturaliter ea, quae legis sunt, faciunt” [Rm 2:14] intelligunt de gentibus fidei gratiam non habentibus.¹
13. The good works done by the adopted sons do not receive the nature of merit because they are done by the spirit of adoption that lives in the hearts of the sons of God but only because they are in conformity with the law and through them obedience to the law is achieved.¹
14. The good works of the just do not receive on the day of the Last Judgment a fuller reward than they deserve to receive by the just judgment of God.¹
15. He teaches that the nature of merit does not consist in the fact that whoever acts well has grace and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit but only in that he is obeying the divine law, and this opinion he often repeats, and with many arguments he demonstrates this in almost the entire book.¹
16. In the same book, he often repeats that whatever is done without charity is not true obedience to the law.¹
17. He says they are thinking with Pelagius who say that it necessarily belongs to the nature of merit for man, through the grace of adoption, to be elevated to a divine state.¹
18. He says that the works of the catechumens, like faith and penance performed before the remission of sins, are merits for eternal life; and catechumens will not attain this life unless the obstacles of preceding faults are not first taken away.¹
19. He seems to suggest that the works of justice and temperance that Christ performed did not attain a greater value from the dignity of the person doing them.¹
20. No sin is of its nature venial, but every sin deserves eternal punishment.¹
21. The sublimation of human nature and its elevation to participation in the divine nature were due to the integrity of man in his first state and are therefore to be called natural, not supernatural.¹
22. They think like Pelagius who understand the text of the apostle to the Romans in the second (chapter): “The Gentiles who do not have the law by nature do the things that are of the law” [Rom 2:14] as referring to the Gentiles who do not have the grace of faith.¹

*1913¹ E' II, 1; cf. 7.*1914¹ E' II, 9.*1915¹ E' II, 1.*1916¹ E' II, 1.*1917¹ E' II, 4.*1918¹ E' II, 6; cf. A', prop. 11.*1919¹ E' II, 7.*1920¹ E' II, 8.*1921¹ Fa' 1, 4, 5, 6.*1922¹ Fa' 6.

23. Absurda est sententia eorum, qui dicunt, hominem ab initio, dono quodam supernaturali et gratuito, supra condicionem naturae suae fuisse exaltatum, ut fide, spe et caritate Deum supernaturaliter coleret.¹

24. A vanis et otiosis hominibus, secundum insipientiam philosophorum, excogitata est sententia, hominem ab initio sic constitutum, ut per dona naturae superaddita fuerit largitate conditoris sublimatus et ad Dei filium adoptatus, et ad Pelagianismum reicienda est illa sententia.¹

25. Omnia opera infidelium sunt peccata, [26.] et philosophorum virtutes sunt vitia.¹

26. [27.] Integritas primae creationis non fuit indebita humanae naturae exaltatio, sed naturalis eius condicio, quam sententiam repetit et probat per plura capitula.¹

27. [28.] Liberum arbitrium, sine gratiae Dei adiutorio, non nisi ad peccandum valet.¹

28. [29.] Pelagianus est error, dicere, quod liberum arbitrium valet ad ullum peccatum vitandum.¹

29. [30A.] Non solum “fures” ii sunt et “latrones”, qui Christum viam et “ostium” veritatis et vitae negant, sed etiam quicumque “aliunde” quam per ipsum in viam iustitiae (hoc est ad aliquam iustitiam) “conscendi” [cf. Io 10:1] posse dicunt.¹

30. [30B.] aut tentationi ulli, sine gratiae ipsius adiutorio, resistere hominem posse, sic ut in eam non inducatur aut ab ea non superetur.¹

31. Caritas perfecta et sincera, quae est ex “corde puro et conscientia bona et fide non ficta” [1 Tim 1:5], tam in catechumenis quam in paenitentibus potest esse sine remissione peccatorum.¹

32. Caritas illa, quae est plenitudo legis, non est semper coniuncta cum remissione peccatorum.¹

33. Catechumenus iuste, recte et sancte vivit, et mandata Dei observat, ac legem implet per caritatem, ante obtentam remissionem peccatorum, quae in baptismi lavacro demum percipitur.¹

23. It is absurd to hold that from the beginning man was raised above his own natural condition through a certain supernatural and gratuitous gift so that he might worship God supernaturally with faith, hope, and charity.¹

24. By vain and idle men, in keeping with the folly of philosophers, is the opinion devised which must be referred to Pelagianism, that man was so constituted from the beginning that through gifts added upon nature by the bounty of the Creator he was raised and adopted into the sonship of God.¹

25. All the works of the unbelievers are sins, [26] and the virtues of the philosophers are vices.¹

26. [27.] The integrity of the first creation was not the undeserved exaltation of human nature but its natural condition, and this opinion is repeated and demonstrated in numerous chapters.¹

27. [28.] Without the help of God’s grace, free will can do nothing but sin.¹

28. [29.] It is a Pelagian error to say that free will is capable of avoiding any sin.¹

29. [30A.] Not only are those “thieves” and “robbers” who deny that Christ is the way and “the door” of the truth and the life, but also those who say that one can “ascend” to the way of justice (that is, to any justice) “by another way” than through him [cf. Jn 10:1],¹

30. [30B.] or that man can resist any temptation without the help of his grace, so that he may not be led into it and not be overcome by it.¹

31. Perfect and sincere charity, which is from a “pure heart and a good conscience and sincere faith” [1 Tim 1:5], can be in catechumens as well as in penitents without the remission of sins.¹

32. That charity which is the fullness of the law is not always joined with the remission of sins.¹

33. A catechumen lives in a just, upright, and holy manner, observes the commandments of God, and fulfills the law through charity before having obtained the remission of sins, which is received only in the bath of baptism.¹

*1923 ¹ Fa’ 7.

*1924 ¹ Fa’ c. 8.

*1925 ¹ Fb’ c. 5:6; A’, prop. 7.

*1926 ¹ Fa’ c. 4, title.

*1927 ¹ Fb’ c. 8, title; A’, prop. 4, pt. 1; prop. 7.

*1928 ¹ Fb’ c. 8; A’, prop. 7.

*1929 ¹ Fb’ c. 9.

*1930 ¹ Fb’ c. 9.

*1931 ¹ G’ c. 7.

*1932 ¹ G’ 7; cf. A’, prop. 10.

*1933 ¹ G’ 7; cf. A’, prop. 11.

- 1934 34. *Distinctio illa duplicis amoris, naturalis videlicet, quo Deus amatur ut auctor naturae, et gratuiti, quo Deus amatur ut beatificator, vana est et commentitia et ad illudendum sacris Litteris et plurimis veterum testimoniis excogitata.*¹
34. The distinction of a twofold love of God, namely, a natural love whose object is God as the author of nature and a gratuitous love whose object is God as beatifying, is meaningless and imaginary; it has been devised as a mockery of the Sacred Scriptures and of the numerous testimonies of ancient authors.¹
- 1935 35. *Omne, quod agit peccator vel servus peccati, peccatum est.*¹
35. Every action that a sinner or a slave of sin performs is a sin.¹
- 1936 36. *Amor naturalis, qui ex viribus naturae exoritur, ex sola philosophia per elationem praesumptionis humanae, cum iniuria crucis Christi defenditur a nonnullis doctoribus.*¹
36. Natural love that arises from the force of nature is defended by some Doctors according to philosophy alone through the pride of human presumption with injury to the Cross of Christ.¹
- 1937 37. *Cum Pelagio sentit, qui boni aliquid naturalis, hoc est, quod ex naturae solis viribus ortum ducit, agnoscit.*¹
37. He agrees with Pelagius, who acknowledges anything as a natural good, that is, whatever he thinks has arisen from the forces of nature alone.¹
- 1938 38. *Omnis amor creaturae rationalis aut vitiosa est cupiditas, qua mundus diligitur, quae a Iohanne prohibetur, aut laudabilis illa caritas, qua per Spiritum Sanctum in corde diffusa [cf. Rm 5:5] Deus amatur.*¹
38. All love of a rational creature is either vicious cupidity, by which the world is loved, which is forbidden by John, or that praiseworthy charity which, “poured into the hearts by the Holy Spirit” [cf. Rom 5:5], makes them love God.¹
- 1939 39. *Quod voluntarie fit, etiam si necessario fiat, libere tamen fit.*¹
39. What is done voluntarily, even if done of necessity, is nevertheless done freely.¹
- 1940 40. *In omnibus suis actibus peccator servit dominanti cupiditati.*¹
40. In all his actions a sinner is the slave of a passion that overpowers him.¹
- 1941 41. *Is libertatis modus, qui est a necessitate, sub libertatis nomine non reperitur in Scripturis, sed solum nomen libertatis a peccato.*¹
41. That type of freedom which is (a freedom) from necessity is not found under the name of freedom in the Scriptures, but only freedom from sin.¹
- 1942 42. *Iustitia, qua iustificatur per fidem impius, consistit formaliter in oboedientia mandatorum, quae est operum iustitia, non autem in gratia aliqua animae infusa, qua adoptatur homo in filium Dei et secundum interiorem hominem renovatur ac divinae naturae consors efficitur, ut, sic per Spiritum Sanctum renovatus, deinceps bene vivere et Dei mandatis oboedire possit.*¹
42. The justice by which the sinner is justified through faith consists formally in the observance of the commandments; it is the justice of works. It does not consist in any sort of grace infused in the soul by which man becomes God’s adopted son, is internally renewed, and is made a sharer in the divine nature so that, renewed in this way through the Holy Spirit, he may henceforward lead a good life and obey the commandments of God.¹
- 1943 43. *In hominibus paenitentibus ante sacramentum absolutionis et in catechumenis ante baptismum est vera iustificatio, separata tamen a remissione peccatorum.*¹
43. In persons who are penitent before the sacrament of absolution and in catechumens before baptism, there is true justification, yet separated from the remission of sin.¹

*1934 ¹ G’ 4.*1935 ¹ Following from G’ 5; Bellarmine reports that Baius never recognized this proposition as his.*1936 ¹ G’ 5.*1937 ¹ Only insofar as the sense: G’ 5; cf. B’ 10.*1938 ¹ G’ 6.*1939 ¹ B’ 7; cf. A’ prop. 8.*1940 ¹ B’ 6. According to Bellarmine, Baius likewise denied this as his proposition.*1941 ¹ B’ 7.*1942 ¹ Ca’ 5.*1943 ¹ Ca’ 7; cf. 6.

44. Operibus plerisque, quae a fidelibus fiunt, ut mandatis Dei pareant, cuiusmodi sunt oboedire parentibus, depositum reddere, ab homicidio, a furto, a fornicatione abstinere, iustificantur quidem homines, quia sunt legis oboedientia et vera legis iustitia; non tamen iis obtinent incrementa virtutum.¹ 1944
44. By the majority of the works carried out by the faithful to fulfill the commandments of God, such as obedience to parents, the return of a deposit, abstinence from homicide, theft, and fornication, men are indeed justified, because these are obedience to the law and a true justice of the law; nevertheless, (men) do not obtain by these any increase of the virtues.¹
45. Sacrificium Missae non alia ratione est sacrificium, quam generali illa, qua “omne opus, quod fit, ut sancta societate Deo homo inhaereat.”¹ 1945
45. The sacrifice of the Mass is a sacrifice for no other reason than for that general one by which “every work is performed that man may be closely connected with God in holy association.”¹
46. [46A.] Ad rationem et definitionem peccati non pertinet voluntarium, nec definitionis quaestio est, sed causae et originis, utrum omne peccatum debeat esse voluntarium.¹ 1946
46. [46A.] Willfulness does not pertain to the essence and definition of sin, and it is not a question of definition but of cause and origin whether every sin must be voluntary.¹
47. [46B.] Unde peccatum originis vere habet rationem peccati sine ulla relatione ac respectu ad voluntatem, a qua originem habuit.¹ 1947
47. [46B.] Therefore original sin has truly the nature of sin, irrespective and independently of the will from which it took its origin.¹
48. [47A.] Peccatum originis est habituali parvuli voluntate voluntarium, et habitualiter dominatur parvulo eo quod non gerit contrarium voluntatis arbitrium.¹ 1948
48. [47A.] Original sin is voluntary through the habitual will of the child, and it habitually dominates the child because he does not countenance any opposing choice of his will.¹
49. [47B.] Et ex habituali voluntate dominante fit, ut parvulus decedens sine regenerationis sacramento, quando usum rationis consecutus erit, actualiter Deum odio habeat, Deum blasphemet et legi Dei repugnet.¹ 1949
49. [47B.] And through this habitually dominating will it happens that a child dying without the sacrament of regeneration, when he reaches the use of reason, actually hates God, blasphemes him, and resists the law of God.¹
50. [48.] Prava desideria, quibus ratio non consentit, et quae homo invitus patitur, sunt prohibita praecepto: “Non concupisces” [Ex 20:17].¹ 1950
50. [48.] Evil desires to which reason does not consent and that man experiences against his will are forbidden by the commandment: “You shall not covet” [Ex 20:17].¹
51. [49.] Concupiscentia sive lex membrorum, et prava eius desideria, quae inviti sentiunt homines, sunt vera legis inoboedientia.¹ 1951
51. [49.] Concupiscence, or the law of the members, and its depraved desires that men experience against their will are the true disobediences of the law.¹
52. [50.] Omne scelus eius est condicionis, ut suum auctorem et omnes posteros eo modo inficere possit, quo infecit prima transgressio.¹ 1952
52. [50.] Every crime is of this nature, that it can corrupt its author and all posterity in the way in which the first transgression corrupted.¹
53. [51.] Quantum est ex vi transgressionis, tantum meritorum malorum a generante contrahunt, qui cum minoribus nascuntur vitiis, quam qui cum maioribus.¹ 1953
53. [51.] Those who are born with lesser faults as well as those who are born with greater ones contract as much of the merited evils from the one generating as arises from the fault of the transgression.¹

*1944¹ Cb' 5.*1945¹ D' 5; cf. 2 and 6. Cited in Augustine, De civitate Dei X, 6 (B. Dombart and A. Kalb: CpChL 47 [1955]: 278_{1f.} / CSEL 40:454_{25f.} / PL 41:283).*1946¹ H' 7.*1947¹ H' 7.*1948¹ H' 7; cf. 10.*1949¹ H' 7.*1950¹ H' 11.*1951¹ H' 15; cf. 11, 16.*1952¹ H' 13.*1953¹ H' 6.

- 1954 54. [52.] Definitiva haec sententia, Deum homini nihil impossibile praecepisse, falso tribuitur Augustino, cum Pelagii sit.¹
- 1955 55. [53.] Deus non potuisset ab initio talem creare hominem, qualis nunc nascitur.¹
- 1956 56. [54A.] In peccato duo sunt, actus et reatus; transeunte autem actu, nihil manet, nisi reatus sive obligatio ad poenam.¹
- 1957 57. [54B.] Unde in sacramento baptismi aut sacerdotis absolutione proprie reatus peccati dumtaxat tollitur, et ministerium sacerdotum solum liberat a reatu.¹
- 1958 58. [55.] Peccator paenitens non vivificatur ministerio sacerdotis absolventis, sed a solo Deo, qui, paenitentiam suggerens et inspirans, vivificat eum et resuscitat: ministerio autem sacerdotis solum reatus tollitur.¹
- 1959 59. [56.] Quando per eleemosynas aliaque paenitentiae opera Deo satisfacimus pro poenis temporalibus, non dignum pretium Deo pro peccatis nostris offerimus, sicut quidam errantes autumant (nam alioqui essemus, saltem aliqua ex parte, redemptores); sed aliquid facimus, cuius intuitu Christi satisfactio nobis applicatur et communicatur.¹
- 1960 60. [57.] Per passiones Sanctorum in indulgentiis communicatas non proprie redimuntur nostra delicta; sed per communionem caritatis nobis eorum passiones impertiuntur, ut digni simus, qui pretio sanguinis Christi a poenis pro peccatis debitibus liberemur.¹
- 1961 61. [58.] Celebris illa doctorum distinctio, divinae legis mandata bifariam impleri, altero modo, quantum
54. [52.] The proposition that God has not commanded man to do the impossible is falsely attributed to Augustine, since it belongs to Pelagius.¹
55. [53.] God could not have created man from the beginning in the condition in which now he is born.¹
56. [54A.] There are two things in sin: the act and the culpability; but when the act has passed, nothing remains except the culpability or the obligation of punishment.¹
57. [54 B.] Therefore, in the sacrament of baptism or in the priest's absolution, only the culpability of the sin is taken away, and the ministry of the priest absolves only from the culpability.¹
58. [55.] The penitent sinner is not vivified by the ministry of the priest who absolves, but only by God, who, by suggesting and inspiring penance, vivifies and restores him to life; the ministry of the priest, however, only takes away the culpability.¹
59. [56.] When by almsgiving and other works of penance we make satisfaction to God for temporal punishments, we do not offer a worthy price to God for our sins, as some erring persons affirm (for otherwise, at least in some part, we should be redeemers); but we do something, in view of which the satisfaction of Christ is applied and communicated to us.¹
60. [57.] Through the sufferings of the saints communicated in indulgences, our offenses are not properly redeemed; but their sufferings are applied to us by the communion of charity so that we may be worthy to be liberated by the price of Christ's blood from the punishments due to sins.¹
61. [58.] The well-known distinction of the Doctors of a double manner of fulfilling the commandments of *1954¹ H' 12. This phrase is found in Augustine, De peccatorum meritis et remissione et de baptismo parvulorum II, 6, no. 7: "By reason of these and other innumerable testimonies, I cannot doubt that neither has God commanded the impossible of man nor is there a case when it is impossible for God to aid and contribute to the fulfillment of what he has commanded. And, for this reason, man can, by the assistance of God, be without sin if he so wishes" (His atque huiusmodi aliis innumerabilibus testimoniis dubitare non possum, nec Deum aliquid impossibile homini praecepisse nec Deo ad opitulandum et adiuvandum, quo fiat quod iubet, impossibile aliquid esse. Ac per hoc potest homo, si velit, esse sine peccato adiutus a Deo: CSEL 60:78₁₄₋₁₈ / PL 44:155). A little later, in c. 7, no. 8, Augustine adds: "If one, however, asks whether what I have posed in the second place (actually) exists, I do not believe it to be" (Si autem, quod secundo loco posueram, quaeratur, utrum sit, esse non credo). Baius believed that the entire phrase cited above (and not only the final part) to be a matter of doubt for Augustine, and it was said, therefore, in a Pelagian sense. There exists, however, another passage in Augustine that the Council of Trent itself (sess. 6, chap. 11; cf. *1536) interpreted in a sense opposed to that of Baius, namely, De natura et gratia 43, no. 50: "God, therefore, does not command impossible things, but in commanding he advises to do what you can and to ask for what you cannot" (Non igitur Deus impossibilia iubet, sed iubendo admonet et facere quod possis et petere quod non possis: CSEL 60:270₂₀₋₂₂ / PL 44:271).

*1955¹ H' 5.

*1956¹ H' 14; K' 4.

*1957¹ H' 16; cf. K' 4.

*1958¹ H' 16; cf. K' 4.

*1959¹ J' 8.

*1960¹ J' 8.

ad praeceptorum operum substantiam tantum, altero, quantum ad certum quendam modum, videlicet, secundum quem valeant operantem perducere ad regnum aeternum (hoc est ad modum meritorium), commentitia est et explodenda.

62. [59.] Illa quoque distinctio, qua opus dicitur bifariam bonum, vel quia ex obiecto et omnibus circumstantiis rectum est et bonum (quod moraliter bonum appellari consuevit), vel quia est meritorium regni aeterni, eo quod fit a vivo Christi membro per Spiritum caritatis, reicienda putatur.

63. [60.] Similiter et illa distinctio duplicis iustitiae, alterius, quae fit per Spiritum caritatis inhabitantem, alterius, quae fit ex inspiratione quidem Spiritus Sancti cor ad paenitentiam excitantis, sed nondum cor inhabitantis et in eo caritatem diffundentis, qua divinae legis iustificatio impleatur, odiosissime et pertinacissime reicitur.

64. [61.] Denique et illa distinctio duplicis vivificationis, alterius, qua vivificatur peccator, dum ei paenitentia et vitae novae propositum et inchoatio per Dei gratiam inspiratur, alterius, qua vivificatur, qui vere iustificatur et palme vivus in vite Christo efficitur, pariter commentitia est et Scripturis minime congruens.

65. [62.] Non nisi Pelagiano errore admitti potest usus aliquis liberi arbitrii bonus sive non malus, et gratiae Christi iniuriam facit, qui ita sentit et docet.¹

66. [63.] Sola violentia repugnat libertati hominis naturali.¹

67. [64.] Homo peccat etiam damnabiliter in eo, quod necessario facit.¹

68. [65.] Infidelitas pure negativa in his, in quibus Christus non est praedicatus, peccatum est.

69. [66.] Iustificatio impii fit formaliter per obaedientiam legis, non autem per occultam communicationem et inspirationem gratiae, quae per eam iustificatos faciat implere legem.¹

the divine law, the one pertaining only to the substance of the works commanded and the other pertaining to a certain way that renders the works capable of leading the one who does the works to the eternal kingdom (that is, the way of merit), is false and should be rejected.

62. [59.] Likewise is that distinction to be rejected 1962 whereby a work is said to be good in two ways, either because it is right and good with respect to the object and all the circumstances (which, according to custom, is called morally good) or because it is meritorious of the eternal kingdom inasmuch as it is done by a living member of Christ through the Spirit of charity.

63 [60]. Likewise, that distinction of a twofold justice—the one that takes place by the indwelling of the Spirit of charity and the other, in fact, as a result of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, who excites the heart to repentance but does not yet dwell in the heart and diffuses in it the charity by which the justification of the divine law is fulfilled—must be rejected with the greatest repugnance and firmness. 1963

64. [61.] Finally, false and in no way consonant with the Scriptures is also that distinction of a twofold vivification, the one by which the sinner is vivified when, through the grace of God, penance and the resolution and start of a new life are inspired in him, and the other by which is vivified the one who is truly justified and becomes a living branch of the vine that is Jesus Christ. 1964

65. [62.] Only by means of a Pelagian error is it possible to admit any use of the free will that is good, or not bad, and he who thinks and teaches in this way does injury to the grace of Christ.¹ 1965

66. [63.] Only violence is incompatible with the natural liberty of man.¹ 1966

67. [64.] Man sins and even merits damnation in that which he does of necessity.¹ 1967

68. [65.] Purely negative infidelity in those among whom Christ has been preached is a sin. 1968

69. [66.] The justification of a wicked man takes place formally through obedience to the law, not, however, through the hidden communication and the inspiration of grace, which makes those justified by it fulfill the law.¹ 1969

*1965 ¹ Cf. B' 1, 10, 11; Fb' 8.

*1966 ¹ A', prop. 2, pt. 2; cf. B' 4–7.

*1967 ¹ Cf. A', prop. 5.

*1969 ¹ Cf. Fa' 5.

- 1970 70. [67.] Homo existens in peccato mortali, sive in reatu aeternae damnationis, potest habere veram caritatem; et caritas etiam perfecta potest consistere cum reatu aeternae damnationis.
- 1971 71. [68.] Per contritionem, etiam caritate perfectam et cum voto suscipiendi sacramentum coniunctam, non remittitur crimen, extra casum necessitatis aut martyrii, sine actuali susceptione sacramenti.
- 1972 72. [69.] Omnes omnino iustorum afflictiones sunt ultiones peccatorum ipsorum; unde et Iob et martyres, quae passi sunt, propter peccata sua passi sunt.¹
- 1973 73. [70.] Nemo, praeter Christum, est absque peccato originali; hinc Beata Virgo mortua est propter peccatum ex Adam contractum, omnesque eius afflictiones in hac vita sicut et aliorum iustorum fuerunt ultiones peccati actualis vel originalis.¹
- 1974 74. [71.] Concupiscentia in renatis relapsis in peccatum mortale, in quibus iam dominatur, peccatum est, sicut et alii habitus pravi.¹
- 1975 75. [72.] Motus pravi concupiscentiae sunt, pro statu hominis vitiati, prohibiti praecepto: “Non concupisces” [Ex 20:17]; unde homo eos sentiens, et non consentiens, transgreditur praeceptum: “Non concupisces”, quamvis transgressio in peccatum non deputetur.¹
- 1976 76. [73.] Quamdiu aliquid concupiscentiae carnalis in diligente est, non facit praeceptum: “Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo” [Dt 6:5; Mt 22:37].¹
- 1977 77. [74.] Satisfactiones laboriosae iustificatorum non valent expiare de condigno poenam temporalem restantem post culpam condonatum.¹
- 1978 78. [75.] Immortalitas primi hominis non erat gratiae beneficium, sed naturalis condicio.
- 1979 79. [76.] Falsa est doctorum sententia, primum hominem potuisse a Deo creari et institui sine iustitia naturali.
- 1980 [Censura.:] Quas quidem sententias stricto coram Nobis examine ponderatas, quamquam nonnullae aliquo pacto sustineri possent
70. [67.] Man existing in the state of mortal sin or under the penalty of eternal damnation can have true charity; and even perfect charity can exist along with the guilt of eternal damnation.
71. [68.] Through contrition even when joined with perfect charity and with the desire to receive the sacrament, guilt is not remitted without the actual reception of the sacrament, except in case of necessity or of martyrdom.
72. [69.] All afflictions of the just are punishments for sins themselves; therefore, both Job and the martyrs suffered what they suffered on account of sins.¹
73. [70.] No one except Christ is free from original sin; hence, the Blessed Virgin died because of sin contracted from Adam, and all of her afflictions in this life as well as those of other just persons were the punishments for actual sin or for original sin.¹
74. [71.] In baptized persons who have fallen back into mortal sin and in whom concupiscentia holds sway, concupiscentia, like the other evil habits, is sin.¹
75. [72.] The bad impulses of concupiscentia in the state of depraved man are prohibited by the precept: “You shall not covet” [Ex 20:17]; hence, a man aware of these and not consenting transgresses the precept: “You shall not covet”, although the transgression is not to be imputed as a sin.¹
76. [73.] As long as there is something of carnal concupiscentia in one who loves, he does not fulfill the precept: “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart” [Deut 6:5; Mt 22:37].¹
77. [74.] Laborious satisfactions of those who are justified are of no avail to expiate in a condign manner the temporal punishments remaining after the fault has been remitted.¹
78. [75.] The immortality of the first man was not a gift of grace but a natural condition.
79. [76.] The opinion of those Doctors is wrong who hold that God could have created and constituted man without natural justice.
- [Censure.:] These propositions have been evaluated in Our presence with a rigorous examination; although some of them might be sustained in a certain manner,

*1972¹ A', prop. 16.*1973¹ A', prop. 16.*1974¹ Cf. H' 17; Baiana 122.*1975¹ Cf. H' 2, 12.*1976¹ Cf. Baiana 122, 146.*1977¹ Cf. J' 8; Baiana 123.

in rigore et proprio verborum sensu ab assertoribus intento¹ haereticas, erroneas, suspectas, temerarias, scandalosas et in pias aures offensionem immittentes respective, ac quaecumque super iis verbo scriptoque emissa, praesentium auctoritate damnamus, circumscribimus et abolemus.

according to the proper and rigorous sense of the words intended by those asserting them,¹
 We, by the authority of this present (writing), condemn, reject, and repudiate them as respectively heretical, erroneous, suspicious, bold, scandalous, and as offensive to pious ears in addition to whatever, by word or in writing, is said concerning them.

1981–1982: Constitution In eam pro nostro, January 28, 1571

By the term cambia was understood an exchange with a monetary profit attached to letters of debit. In these exchanges, called “dry” or “fictitious”, a covert form of usury was seen.

Ed.: Clement VIII, Decretales, quae vulgo nuncupantur Liber Septimus Decretalium Clementis VIII [a work completed in 1598 that never attained juridical validity, ed. by F. Sentis (Freiburg im Breisgau, 1870), 170f. (= lib. V, tit. 13) / BullTau 7:884b / BullCocq 4/III, 145b.

Monetary Exchanges

Primum igitur damnamus ea omnia cambia, quae facta [sicca] nominantur et ita confinguntur, ut contrahentes ad certas nundinas seu ad alia loca cambia celebrare simulent, ad quae loca ii, qui pecuniam recipiunt, litteras quidem suas cambii tradunt, sed non mittuntur, vel ita mittuntur, ut transacto tempore, unde processerant, inanes referantur, aut etiam nullis huiusmodi litteris traditis, pecunia ibi denique cum interesse reposcitur, ubi contractus fuerat celebratus: nam inter dantes et recipientes usque a principio ita convenerat, vel certe talis intentio erat, neque quisquam est, qui in nundinis, aut locis supradictis, huiusmodi litteris receptis solutionem faciat.

Cui malo simile etiam illud est, cum pecuniae sive depositi sive alio nomine ficti cambii traduntur, ut postea eodem in loco vel alibi cum lucro restituantur.

First (then) We condemn all those exchanges that are called fictitious [dry] and are so devised that the contracting parties at certain marketplaces or at other localities pretend to solemnize exchanges; at which places those who receive money actually hand over their letters of exchange, but they are not sent, or they are so sent that, when the time has passed, they are brought back void, whence they had set out; or, even when no letters of this kind were handed over, the money is finally demanded with interest, where the contract had been solemnized; for between givers and receivers even from the beginning it had been so decided, or surely such was the intention, and there is no one who in the marketplaces or the above-mentioned places makes payment, when such letters are received. 1981

And similar to this evil is also that when money or deposits or by another name fictitious exchanges are handed over so that afterward in the same place or elsewhere they are paid back with interest.

*1980¹ The original bull indicates neither by punctuation nor by another manner whether the series of words (detached from the rest for greater emphasis) “in rigore ... intento” (according to the ... rigorous sense of the words) should be connected to the preceding phrase “quamquam ... sustineri possent” (while some of them might be sustained) [= first interpretation] or with what follows “haereticas ... damnamus” (We condemn ... as ... heretical) [= second interpretation]; in other words, whether one should place a comma of separation after “intento” [= first interpretation] or after “sustineri possent” [= second interpretation]. Since the sense in which the propositions of Baius have been condemned revolves around this question, there emerged a controversy regarding the so-called comma pianum. If the first interpretation is correct, the propositions are condemned just as they are presented, namely, in themselves: this is the interpretation that the Bainists themselves uphold; if the second interpretation is correct, the propositions are condemned in the sense of the author, as is said, for example, with regard to the explicit sense of Jansen’s propositions (cf. *2012, 2020); this interpretation is clearly the preference of the adversaries of the Bainists, among whom the most renowned is Juan Martínez de Ripalda, who wrote a major work against Baius: in his Adversus articulos olim a Pio V et Gregorio XII et novissime ab Urbano VIII P.P. damnatos libri 2; Ad disputationes de ente supernaturali Appendix et tomus III (Cologne, 1648); ibid., pp. 7f. (sec. II, no. 11). Ripalda maintains that Cardinal de Lugo had found, in an autograph of the cardinal who had drafted the bull requested by Pius V, punctuation corresponding to the second interpretation. At least since the time of Jansen, who repeats the errors of Baius, the second interpretation has become the common one; there are, however, good reasons for thinking that originally the first interpretation was intended; cf. É. van Eijl, in RHE 50 (1955): 499–542. One likewise will compare the censure of the propositions of Eckhart by John XXII (*979): “licet cum multis expositionibus ...” (even if with many explanations ...).

1982 Sed et in ipsis cambiis, quae realia appellantur, interdum, ut ad nos perfertur, campsores praestitutum solutionis terminum, lucro ex tacita vel expressa conventionem recepto seu etiam tantummodo promisso, differunt. Quae omnia nos usuraria esse declaramus et, ne fiant, districtius prohibemus.

But even in the exchanges that are called real, sometimes, as it is reported to Us, bankers put off the prescribed term of payment when a profit has been received according to tacit or expressed agreement or even only a promise. All these things We declare to be usurious and strictly prohibit their being done.

1983: Constitution Romani Pontificis, August 2, 1571

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:493f., n. 1 to no. 848.

Privilegium fidei

1983 Cum ... Indis in sua infidelitate manentibus plures permittantur uxores, quas ipsi etiam levissimis de causis repudiant, hinc factum est quod recipientibus baptismum permissum sit permanere cum ea uxore, quae simul cum marito baptizata existit; et quia saepenumero contingit illam non esse primam coniugem, unde tam ministri [sacramentorum] quam episcopi gravissimis scrupulis torquentur, existimantes illud non esse verum matrimonium; sed quia durissimum est separare eos ab uxoribus, cum quibus ipsi Indi baptismum susceperunt, maxime quia difficillimum foret primam coniugem reperire: ideo Nos, statui dictorum Indorum paterno affectu benigne consulere atque ipsos episcopos et ministros ab huiusmodi scrupulis eximere volentes, motu proprio et ex certa scientia Nostra ac Apostolicae potestatis plenitudine, ut Indi, sicut praemittitur, baptizati et in futurum baptizandi cum uxore, quae cum ipsis fuerit baptizata et baptizabitur, remanere valeant, tamquam cum uxore legitima, aliis dimissis, Apostolica auctoritate, tenore praesentium, declaramus, matrimoniumque huiusmodi inter eos legitime consistere.

Since ... the Indians remaining in their unbelief are permitted several wives, whom they repudiate even for the most trivial reasons, it comes about that those receiving baptism are permitted to stay with the wife who is baptized at the same time as the husband; and since it frequently happens that she is not the first spouse, both ministers [of the sacraments] and bishops are tormented by very serious scruples, thinking that such is not a true marriage: but since it is very harsh to separate them from the wives with whom the said Indians received baptism, and especially since it may be very difficult to find the first spouse: We therefore, wishing graciously and with paternal affection to take care for the state of the said Indians and to relieve the bishops and ministers of this kind of scruple, declare with apostolic authority, by the tenor of these present (writings), of Our own initiative, from Our certain knowledge, and with the fullness of apostolic power, that Indians, as previously stated, who have been baptized or shall in the future be baptized may remain with the wife who was, or shall be, baptized with them as with a legitimate wife, the others being put aside, and that in this way a marriage legitimately exists between them.

GREGORY XIII: May 13, 1572–April 10, 1585

1985–1987: Decree for the Greco-Russian Church, 1575

This was issued on the occasion of the negotiations for union with the Greco-Russian Church.

Ed.: BullTau 8:133a–134a / BullCocq 4/III, 311ab.

Profession of Faith Prescribed for the Greeks

1985 Ego N. firma fide credo et profiteor omnia et singula, quae continentur in Symbolo fidei, quo sancta Romana Ecclesia utitur, videlicet: Credo in unum Deum ... [*ut in Symbolo Constantinopolitano, 150].

I, N., with firm faith believe and profess each and every thing that is contained in the profession of faith that the holy Roman Church uses, namely: I believe in one God ... [*as in the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed 150].

1986 Credo etiam, suscipio atque profiteor ea omnia, quae sacra oecumenica Synodus Florentina super unione occidentalis et orientalis Ecclesiae definivit et declaravit, videlicet quod Spiritus Sanctus a Patre et Filio aeternaliter est; et essentiam suam suumque esse subsistens habet ex

I likewise believe, accept, and profess all that the holy ecumenical Council of Florence defined and declared on the union of the Western and the Eastern Church, namely, that the Holy Spirit is eternally from the Father and the Son, and he has his essence and his subsistent being at once

Patre simul et Filio, et ex utroque aeternaliter, tamquam ab uno principio et unica spiratione procedit; cum id, quod sancti Doctores et Patres dicunt, ex Patre per Filium procedere Spiritum Sanctum, ad hanc intelligentiam tendat, ut per hoc significetur, Filium quoque esse secundum Graecos quidem causam, secundum Latinos vero principium subsistentiae Spiritus Sancti, sicut et Patrem. Cumque omnia quae Patris sunt, ipse Pater unigenito Filio suo gignendo dederit, praeter esse Patrem, hoc ipsum quod Spiritus Sanctus procedit ex Filio, ipse Filius a Patre aeternaliter habet, a quo aeternaliter etiam genitus est.

Illamque verborum illorum “Filioque” explicationem, veritatis declarandae gratia, et imminente tunc necessitate, licite ac rationabiliter Symbolo fuisse appositam...

[There follows the text from the decree of union for the Greeks from the Council of Florence, *1303, 1307.]

Insuper profiteor ac recipio alia omnia, quae ex decretis sacrae oecumenicae generalis Synodi Tridentinae sacrosancta Romana et Apostolica Ecclesia, etiam ultra contenta in supradictis fidei Symbolis, profitenda ac recipienda proposuit atque praescripsit, ut sequitur. Apostolicas ... [et cetera omnia, ut in Professione fidei Tridentina *1863–1870].

1988: Constitution Populis ac nationibus, January 25, 1585

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:256, n. 1 to no. 400.

The Pauline Privilege

Populis ac nationibus nuper ex gentilitatis errore ad fidem catholicam conversis expedit indulgere circa libertatem contrahendi matrimonia, ne homines, continentiae servandae minime assueti, propterea minus libenter in fide persistent, et alios illorum exemplo ab eius perceptione deterreant.

Quoniam igitur saepe contingit multos utriusque sed praecipue virilis sexus infideles, post contracta gentili ritu matrimonia, ... ab hostibus captos, a patriis finibus et propriis coniugibus in remotissimas regiones exterminari, adeo ut tam ipsi, captivique, qui in patria remanent, si postea ad fidem convertantur, coniuges infideles tam longo locorum intervallo disiunctos, an sine contumelia Creatoris secum cohabitare velint, ut par est, monere nequeant, vel quia interdum ad hostiles et barbaras provincias ne nuntiis quidem accessus pateat, vel quia ignorent prorsus in quas regiones fuerint transvecti, vel quia itineris longitudo magnam afferat difficultatem: idcirco Nos, from the Father and the Son, and he proceeds eternally from both as from one principle and one spiration; for when the holy Doctors and Fathers say that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father through the Son, this tends toward that understanding which signifies that the Son, like the Father, is also what the Greeks call “cause” and the Latins “principle” of the subsistence of the Holy Spirit. And since the Father himself has given to his only begotten Son, in generating him, all that the Father has except being the Father; the Son himself eternally has from the Father, from whom he is eternally generated, precisely this: that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son.

And (I believe that) the explanation of these words “and the Son” [Filioque] has been added to the profession of faith legitimately and with good reason for the sake of clarifying the truth and because of urgent necessity at the time....

Moreover, I profess and accept all the other things that the most holy Roman and Apostolic Church has proposed and prescribed to be professed and accepted, according to the decrees of the holy, ecumenical, general Council of Trent as well as what is contained in the above-mentioned professions of faith, as follows: the Apostles’ ... [and all the others, as in the Tridentine Profession of Faith *1863–1870].

In the matter of freedom in contracting marriages, it is appropriate to indulge those peoples and nations recently converted to the Catholic faith from pagan error, lest men who are by no means used to observing continence should persevere in the faith less willingly and lest others should be deterred from embracing it because of their example.

Therefore, since it often happens that many infidels of both sexes, but particularly of the male sex, after having contracted a marriage by a pagan rite, ... are captured by enemies and driven away from their homeland and their own spouses into remote regions, so that both the captives themselves and those who remain in their homeland, if subsequently converted to the faith, are unable to consider, as is right, whether their infidel spouses, who are separated from them by such great distances, are willing to live with them without disrespect to the Creator; either because access to hostile and barbarous provinces is from time to time not available to messengers or because they are completely ignorant of where they have been taken or because the length of the journey involves great difficulties: We therefore, attendentes huiusmodi connubia inter infideles contracta, vera quidem, non tamen adeo rata censerī, ut necessitate suadente dissolvi non possint,

... locorum Ordinariis et parochis ... concedimus facultatem dispensandi [super interpellatione] cum quibuscumque utriusque sexus Christifidelibus incolis dictarum regionum et serius ad fidem conversis, qui ante baptismum susceptum matrimonium contraxerunt, ut eorum quilibet, superstite coniuge infideli, et eius consensu minime requisito, aut responso non expectato, matrimonia cum quovis fideli alterius etiam ritus contrahere et in facie Ecclesiae sollempnizare et in eis postea carnali copula consummatis quoad vixerint remanere licite valeant: dummodo constet etiam summarie et extrajudicialiter, coniugem, ut praefertur, absentem moneri legitime non posse, aut monitum intra tempus in eadem monitione praefixum suam voluntatem non significasse; quae quidem matrimonia, etiamsi postea innotuerit coniuges priores infideles suam voluntatem iuste impeditos declarare non potuisse, et ad fidem etiam tempore transacti secundi matrimonii conversos fuisse, nihilominus rescindi numquam debere, sed valida et firma prolemque inde suscipiendam legitimam fore decernimus.

considering the fact that marriages of this kind contracted among infidels are genuine, but are not to be deemed so settled that they cannot be dissolved when some necessity suggests it,

... concede the faculty ... to local ordinaries and parish priests of dispensing [on interpellation] any of the Christian faithful of either sex who inhabit the said regions and have been lately converted to the faith and who contracted a marriage prior to baptism, so that, even if the infidel spouse is still living, and without his consent being in any way sought or an answer awaited, any of them may be able licitly to contract a marriage with any other member of the faithful, even of another rite, and to solemnize it in the face of the Church and to remain in it as long as they live, having consummated it subsequently by bodily union: provided it is clear, even in a summary and extrajudicial way, that the absent spouse, as mentioned, is legitimately not able to be advised, or that, having been advised, has not signified his will within the time fixed in the advisory message; and even if it later becomes known that the previous infidel spouses were not able to declare their will because they were impeded by some just reason and that they had been converted to the faith by the time of the contracting of the second marriage, such marriages should nonetheless never be rescinded, but We decree that they are to be valid and firm, and the offspring arising from them legitimate.

SIXTUS V: April 24, 1585–August 27, 1590

URBAN VII: September 15–27, 1590

GREGORY XIV: December 5, 1590–October 17, 1591

INNOCENT IX: October 29–December 30, 1591

CLEMENT VIII: January 30, 1592–March 3, 1605

1989: Decree to All Religious Superiors, May 26, 1593

Ed.: Viva 3:174b.

Protection of the Seal of Confession

1989 (c. 4) Tam Superiores pro tempore existentes quam confessarii, qui postea ad superioritatis gradum fuerint promoti, caveant diligentissime, ne ea notitia, quam de aliorum peccatis in confessione habuerunt, ad exteriorem gubernationem utantur. Atque ita per quoscumque Regularium Superiores, quicumque illi sint, observari mandamus.

(Chap. 4) Both superiors acting at the time and confessors who are subsequently promoted to the rank of superior should take the greatest care not to make use in external government of the knowledge of the sins of others that they have gained in confession. And We command that this is to be observed by all religious superiors whatsoever, whoever they may be.

1990–1992: Instruction Presbyteri Graeci, August 30, 1595

In this instruction on the rites of the Italo-Greeks, it is prohibited for priests to administer confirmation in connection with baptism. Benedict XIV, in the constitution Etsi pastorales (*2522), did not recognize confirmation administered in this way immediately after baptism. In his work De synodo dioecessana (VII, 8, no. 7), he explained his decision in the following manner: “However it may be in other respects concerning this difficult and truly complex controversy, it is for all beyond doubt that confirmation administered by a simple Latin priest through the sole mandate from the bishop will henceforth be invalid since the Apostolic See has reserved this by right solely to itself” (Ceterum quidquid sit de hac difficili et valde implexa controversia, omnibus in confesso est, irritam nunc fore confirmationem a simplici presbytero Latino ex sola episcopi delegatione collatam, quia Sedes Apostolica id iuris sibi unice reservavit). Clement XIV, however, granted such an authorization to priests on the condition that they use only chrism blessed by a bishop (cf. *2588).

Ed.: BullTau 10:211b–212a / BullLux 3:52ab.

The Faculty of Blessing Chrism and of Confirming

Presbyteri Graeci baptizatos chrismate in fronte non consignat, et ideo ab ipsis in ordine baptismi apud eorum Euchologium praetermittantur, quae sequuntur post illa verba ... “Et post orationem”, etc., ubi habetur forma huius consignationis....

§ 1. Episcopi Latini infantes seu alios baptizatos a presbyteris Graecis de facto chrismate in fronte consignatos confirmant, et tutius videtur, ut cum cautela et sub condicione id faciant, videlicet: N., si es confirmatus, ego te non confirmo; sed si non es confirmatus, ego consigno te signo crucis et confirmo te chrismate salutis in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti; praesertim vero, cum verisimiliter dubitari potest, quod ab episcopis Graecis fuerint baptizati.

§ 3. ... Non sunt cogendi presbyteri Graeci, olea sancta praeter chrisma ab episcopis Latinis dioecesanis accipere, cum huiusmodi olea ab eis in ipsa oleorum et sacramentorum exhibitione, ex vetere ritu, conficiantur seu benedicantur. Chrisma autem quod non nisi ab episcopo, etiam iuxta eorum ritum, benedici potest, cogantur accipere.

Greek priests should not mark the foreheads of the baptized with chrism, and, therefore, they should omit from the baptismal rite in their Eucholigion what follows these words ... “and after the prayer”, etc., where the form of this marking is found....

§ 1. Latin bishops should anoint with chrism children or other baptized who have in fact been signed on the forehead with chrism by Greek priests, and it seems safer for them to do this with caution and conditionally, as follows: N., if you are confirmed, I do not confirm you, but if you are not confirmed, I mark you with the sign of the cross, and I confirm you with the chrism of salvation in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; this is especially the case when, with some probability, it can be doubted that they were baptized by Greek bishops.

§ 3. ... Greek priests should not be obliged to receive holy oils, with the exception of chrism, from Latin diocesan bishops, since such oils, according to the ancient rite, are prepared and blessed by them during the administration of the oils and the sacraments themselves. But they should be obliged to receive the chrism, which, even according to their rite, can be blessed only by the bishop.

1994: Decree of the Holy Office, June 20, 1602

Before the Council of Trent, the thesis was widespread that sacramental absolution, following a confession of sins transmitted to an absent priest by letter or some other means, was valid. Robert Bellarmine refers to a number of supporters of this opinion: cf. X.-M. Bachelet, Auctarium Bellarminianum (Paris, 1913), 113. Later, this thesis was contested, especially on the basis of Thomas, Summa theologiae III. Until 1586, the Ratio studiorum of the Society of Jesus upheld the liberty of teaching on this point: “Ours are not to be compelled to teach ... that the sacrament of penance conferred on one absent by means of a messenger or by letter is not valid” (Non cogantur Nostri docere ... Paenitentiae sacramentum absenti per nuntium seu per litteras collatum non est validum; Monumenta Germaniae paedagogica 5: Ratio studiorum ..., ed. by G.M. Pachtler, vol. 2 [Berlin, 1887], 205, 210).

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 171b / F. Sentis, Clementis VIII Decretales [see *1981], 184 (= l. V, tit. 18) / BullTau 10:855b.

Confession and Absolution of an Absent Person

Sanctissimus Dominus ... hanc propositionem, scilicet “licere per litteras seu internuntium confessario absenti peccata sacramentaliter confiteri et ab eodem absente absolutionem obtinere”, uti falsam, temerariam et scandalosam damnavit ac prohibuit, praecepitque, ne deinceps ista propositio publicis privatisve lectionibus, concionibus et

The most holy Lord ... has condemned and forbade the following proposition: namely,

“that it is permitted to confess sins sacramentally to an absent confessor by letter or through a messenger and to receive absolution from this same absent confessor”, as false, rash, and scandalous, and he has ordered that from now on this proposition not be taught in public or private lectures, assemblies, and conferences: and that it congressibus doceatur, neve umquam tamquam aliquo casu probabilis defendatur, imprimatur aut ad praxim quovis modo deducatur.

may never in any circumstances be defended as probable, published, or in any way put in practice.

1995: Decree of the Holy Office, June 7, 1603

Cf.*1994^o. Francisco Suárez wanted to preserve the validity of confession ex distanti (from a distance) by interpreting the copula “et” between the part regarding the confession and that regarding absolution in Clement VIII’s decree (shown in *1994) “not as disjunctive, but as conjunctive” (non divisiva, sed complexiva) (De sacramento poenitentiae, disp. XXI, sec. 4, no. 10, ed. by C. Berton, vol. 22 [Paris, 1877], 465; cf. also disp. XIX, sec. 3, no. 10, in the same Berton edition, 418f.). In this case, only the administration of the sacrament in which both the confession of sins and the absolution occurred in absence would be condemned. Suárez appealed in particular to a case treated by Leo the Great in his letter to Bishop Theodore of Fréjus (*310). The Holy Office rejected this argument. The decision was confirmed on January 24, 1622, when the Grand Inquisitor of Portugal directed a question to the Holy Office in favor of the Suárezian distinction (AnIP, series 6 = vol. 3/II [Rome, 1863], 2186).

Ed.: R. de Scoraille. François Suárez de la Compagnie de Jésus 2 (Paris, 1913), 111 (from a manuscript of Suárez conserved at the Bibliotheca Angelica in Rome, manuscript 862, fol. 433); ibid., 110–14, other decrees on the same matter. Cf. also the Defensio of Suárez: I. von Döllinger and F. H. Reusch, Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten . . . 2 (Nördlingen, 1889), 266–74.

On Confession and Absolution of an Absent Person

1995 Qu.: An doctrina Patris Suárez, contenta in tomo IV Commentariorum suorum in 3am Partem D. Thomae disp. 21, sect. 4, ubi post publicationem decreti a Sanctissimo Domino nostro anno elapso de mense Iunii emanati, circa materiam confessionis sacramentalis, de eadem materia ac de sensu dicti decreti disputat, sit aperte contraria dispositioni eiusdem decreti?

Resp.: Cum verba praecitati decreti clare ac ex ipsorum forma ostendant, Sanctissimum damnasse non solum sententiam asserentem licere ab absente sacerdote absolutionem obtinere, sed etiam licere confessario absenti peccata sacramentaliter confiteri, verbumque “licere” ex adiunctis aliis dilucide contrahatur ad significandum illicitum quod est contra institutionem et essentiam sacramenti (ut ipsemet Suárez veritate coactus fatetur), merumque figmentum sit, nullum habens in verbis decreti verisimile fundamentum, dicere quod ibi damnatur tota illa hypothetica solum copulativum, videlicet per modum unius, debueritque eadem hypothetica damnanda concipi cum particula copulativa, et non disiunctiva, ut ex proprietate sermonis utrumque membrum subiiceret censurae ac damnationi, et non tantum unum vel aliud, et inanis sit praetextus arguere ab eo casu, dum super solis signis datis poenitentiae, relatis sacerdoti advenienti, datur iamiam morituro absolutio, ad confessionem peccatorum absenti sacerdoti factam, cum omnino diversam contineat difficultatem:

ideo praefati domini censuerunt praedictam P. Suárez doctrinam aperte pugnare cum definitione Sanctissimi.

Question: Whether the doctrine of Father Suárez, found in volume 4 of his Commentaria in 3am Partem D. Thomae, disp. 21, sec. 4, where, following the publication of the decree of His Holiness our Lord (pope) in the month of June last year on the matter of sacramental confession, he discusses the same matter and the meaning of this decision, is to be considered openly contrary to the disposition of this same decree (of the pope)?

Response: Since from the words of this above-mentioned decree and from their form it is clearly shown that His Holiness has condemned not only the proposition that affirms that it is licit to obtain absolution from an absent priest but also (the proposition that affirms) that it is licit to confess sins sacramentally to an absent confessor,

And (since) the words “it is licit”, as is evident from other related elements, are clearly used to designate as illicit what is contrary to the institution and essence of the sacrament (as Suárez himself is forced by the truth to admit),

And (since) it is a pure invention, without any realistic foundation in the words of the decree, to say that what is condemned there is only this whole, conjunctive hypothesis, that is, as a single (hypothesis), and that this same condemned hypothesis must be conceived as a copulative particle, and not a disjunctive one, so that, from the strict sense of the words, both members fall under the censure and the condemnation, and not one or the other as such,

And (since) it is a vain pretext to argue from this case in which, based solely on the signs of penitence given and reported to a priest who is in the process of coming, absolution is given to one at the point of dying to (the case of) confession of sins made to an absent priest, since this involves a completely different difficulty:

therefore, the aforesaid authorities have judged that the above-mentioned doctrine of Father Suárez openly contradicts the definition of His Holiness.

LEO XI: April 1–27, 1605

PAUL V: May 16, 1605–January 28, 1621

1997: Formula for Ending the Controversies on the Aids of Grace Sent to the General Superiors of the Order of Preachers and the Society of Jesus, September 5, 1607

What is called the “controversy on grace” constitutes the most important internal Catholic discussion concerning grace in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The theologians of the Order of Preachers understood grace not only as a condition but also as the cause of the human assent in the sense of a “physical predetermination” (praedeterminatio physica). The theologians of the Society of Jesus in general taught that grace is always given to man in equal measure, with God, in so doing, knowing by means of a scientia media the free decisions of man. An important role was played in this regard by the work of Luis de Molina, S.J., Liberi arbitrii cum gratiae donis, divina praescientia, providentia, praedestinatione et reprobatione concordia (critical edition by J. Rabeneck [Oña-Madrid, 1953]). It was first published in Lisbon in 1588 and then in Amsterdam in 1595. Molina’s opponents attacked it harshly. In November 1597, Clement VIII established a commission to examine it, and the Concordia came close to being censured, but it was not condemned. Paul V permitted, first of all, disputation on physical predetermination, but he also maintained contact with the Molinists (e.g., Francis de Sales). After more than 120 congregations and sessions held between 1598 and 1607, he finally ended the dispute. He imposed silence regarding the results achieved. He ordered the general superiors of the Order of Preachers and the Society of Jesus to make known within their order the formula given below. In a decree of the Holy Office of December 1, 1611, the pope prohibited the publication of treatises concerned with the aids of grace, even in the form of commentaries on Thomas, without prior examination of the Holy Inquisition. Urban VIII confirmed this decree (Holy Office decrees of May 22, 1625, and August 1, 1641), with a warning of possible removal of teaching and preaching faculties as well as an excommunication reserved to the pope. —Cf. also *1997a.

Ed.: Theodorus Eleutherus (pseudonym = L. Meyer, S.J.), Historia controversiarum de divinae gratiae auxiliis (Antwerp, 1705), 724a / A. Le Blanc (pseudonym = Jacques-Hyacinthe Serry, O.P.), Historia Congregationum de auxiliis divinae gratiae (Louvain, 1700), addenda, pp. 166–706; (Antwerp, 1709), 587f. / G. Schneemann, S.J., Controversiarum de divinae gratiae liberique arbitrii Concordia initia et progressus (Freiburg, 1881), 292f.

On Freedom of Teaching in Questions concerning Grace

In negotio de auxiliis facta est potestas a Summo Pontifice cum disputantibus tum consultoribus redeundi in patrias aut domus suas: additumque est, fore, ut Sua Sanctitas declarationem et determinationem, quae expectabatur, opportune promulgaret. Verum ab eodem Sanctissimo Domino serio admodum vetitum est, in quaestione hac pertractanda ne quis partem suae oppositam aut qualificaret aut censura quapiam notaret... Quin optat etiam, ut verbis asperioribus amaritiam animi significantibus invicem abstineant.

In the affair concerning the aids (of grace), the supreme pontiff has granted to both the disputants and their consultants permission to return to their countries or houses: it is also added that His Holiness will promulgate, at an opportune time, the anticipated declaration and decision. Nevertheless, it is most strictly forbidden by the same Most Holy Lord that, in treating this subject, anyone should judge or censure in any way his opposing party... Rather, he wishes that (both sides) mutually abstain from harsh words expressing bitterness of spirit. 1997

1997a: Address to the Legate of King Philip III of Spain, July 26, 1611

Together with the report on the closure of the congregation occupied with the controversy on grace was also found the manuscript of a discourse of Paul V addressed to the envoy of King Philip III of Spain; in this he treats in detail the freedom of teaching with respect to the question concerning the aids of grace. In the text below, the form of old Italian mixed sometimes with Latin is preserved.

Ed.: G. Schneemann, S.J., Controversiarum de divinae gratiae liberique arbitrii Concordia initia et progressus (Freiburg, 1881), 295f.

Liberty of Teaching in Questions concerning the Aids of Grace

... Che si è sopraseduto in esso per tre ragioni:

La prima per accertare bene et perchè il tempo insegna et mostra la verità delle cose, come quello che è gran giudice et censore delle cose.

La seconda perchè si l’una et l’altra parte conviene nella sostanza con la verità cattolica, cioè che Dio con la

... In this affair [i.e., in making a decision on the question of the aids of grace], the matter was deferred for three reasons: 1997a

The first, in order to gain greater certitude and because time teaches and manifests the truth of things, since it is a great judge and censor of things.

The second, because both parties agree in substance with Catholic truth, namely, that God causes us to act efficacia della sua grazia ci fa fare et facit de nolentibus volentes et flectit et immutat hominum voluntates, del che ci è questione, ma solo sono discrepanti nel modo, perchè i Domenicani dicono che predetermina la nostra volontà fisica, hoc est realiter et efficienter, et i Gesuiti tengono che lo fa congrue et moraliter, opinioni che l'una et l'altra si possono defendere.

La terza perchè in questi tempi in che ci sono tante heresie conviene molto conservare et mantenere la riputazione et credito di queste due religioni, e con discreditare una può seguire gran danno.

Se si dicesse che converrà sapere qual fede si ha da tenere in questa materia, si risponde che sia da seguitare et tenere la dottrina del Concilio Tridentino nella sessione VI de iustificatione che è chiara et dilucida et in che consiste l'errore et heresia dei Pelagiani et Semipelagiani et quello di Calvino et insegna la dottrina cattolica che è necessario che il libero arbitrio sia mosso, eccitato et adjuvato dalla gratia di Iddio et può liberamente assentire et dissentire et non entra in questa questione del modo che opera la gratia, la quale fu toccata dal Concilio et fu lasciata come inutile et non necessaria, imitando in ciò Celestino primo, che avendo difinito alcuni questioni o proposizioni in questa materia disse, che alcune altre difficilioris et subtilioris [naturae] sicuti non audebat condemnare ita et nolebat adstruere [*cf. 249].

with the efficacy of his grace, that he makes those to will who are unwilling, and he bends and changes the wills of men, and about this there is question; but they disagree only as to the manner; because the Dominicans say he predetermines our will physically, that is, really and efficiently, while the Jesuits maintain that he does so congruently and morally: opinions that can both be defended.

The third, because in these times, in which there are so many heresies, it is quite appropriate to preserve and maintain the reputation and credibility of these two religious orders, and by discrediting one, great harm may follow.

If it should be said that it would be good to know what faith is to be held in this matter, the reply is that the teaching of the Council of Trent in session 6 on justification is to be followed; it is clear and lucid on what constitutes the error and heresy of the Pelagians and the Semipelagians as well as that of Calvin, and it teaches the Catholic doctrine according to which it is necessary that the free will be moved, stirred up, and assisted by the grace of God and that it can freely assent and dissent; and it does not enter into this question of the way grace works, which was touched on by the council but put aside as useless and unnecessary, imitating in this Celestine I, who, after having defined some questions and propositions on this subject, said that he dared not condemn certain other matters of a more difficult and more subtle [nature], just as he did not wish to affirm them [*cf. 249].

GREGORY XV: February 9, 1621–July 8, 1623

URBAN VIII: August 6, 1623–July 29, 1644

1998: Decree of the Holy Office, July 23, 1639

Ed.: AnE 2 (1894), 408, no. 120. —Cf. *2552f.

On the Baptism of Children Given against the Wishes of the Parents

1998 Circa baptismum datum Alegretae annorum trium circiter filiae hebraeae ... invitis parentibus, ... [cardinales] censuerunt parvulam puellam esse vere baptizatam, concurrente materia, forma et intentione, baptismum probari unico teste, et quamvis filii Hebraeorum non possint invitis parentibus baptizari, si tamen de facto baptizentur, valet baptismus et character imprimitur; filiam baptizatam penes Christianos alendam; mulierem baptizantem acriter monendam, ut in posterum caveat a similibus; notificandum vero populo, non licere invitis parentibus filios Hebraeorum baptizare, quia, licet finis sit bonus, media autem non licita, potissimum stante Bulla Iulii III imponente poenam 1000 ducatorum

Concerning the baptism conferred upon Alegreta, the Hebrew daughter around three years old, ... against the parents' wishes, ... [the cardinals] have decreed the little girl to be truly baptized if the matter, form, and intention were present together and if the baptism is certified by one witness; and although the children of Hebrews should not be baptized against their parents' wishes, if nevertheless they are in fact baptized, the baptism is valid and the character is imprinted; the baptized daughter (therefore) should be brought up with Christians; (but) the woman who performed the baptism is to be sharply warned that in the future she should take care not to do such things; and certainly the people are to be informed that it is not right to baptize the children of Hebrews against their parents' wishes, since, even if the end is good, the means, however, are not licit, especially since the bull of Julius III remains in force, which imposes a penalty of 1000 ducats and suspension on those who baptize the children of Hebrews against their parents' wishes.

et suspensionis baptizantibus filios Hebraeorum invitis parentibus.

INNOCENT X: September 15, 1644–January 7, 1655

1999: Decree of the Holy Office, January 24, 1647

With this decree an error of the Jansenist Martin de Barcos was condemned that the latter had advanced in the preface to the book De la fréquente communion (French ed., 1644; Latin ed., 1647) by his friend Antoine Arnould. Martin de Barcos wrote two other works also condemned in which he defended his position: Traité de l'autorité de Saint Pierre et S. Paul qui réside dans le pape, successeur de ces deux apôtres (Paris, 1645); La Grandeur de l'Église Romaine établie sur l'autorité de S. Pierre et Paul (1646).
Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 248ab.

Errors on the Dual Head of the Church

Sanctissimus Dominus ... propositionem hanc: "S. Petrus et S. Paulus sunt duo Ecclesiae principes, qui unicum efficiunt", vel: "sunt duo Ecclesiae catholicae coryphaei ac supremi duces summa inter se unitate coniuncti", vel: "sunt geminus universalis Ecclesiae vertex, qui in unum divinissime coaluerunt", vel: "sunt duo Ecclesiae summi pastores ac praesides, qui unicum caput constituunt", ita explicatam, ut ponat omnimodam aequalitatem inter S. Petrum et S. Paulum sine subordinatione et subiectione S. Pauli ad S. Petrum in potestate suprema et regimine universalis Ecclesiae, haeticam censuit et declaravit.

This proposition: "St. Peter and St. Paul are the two princes of the Church who amount to one", or: "they are the two leaders and supreme heads of the Catholic Church united with each other in the greatest unity", or: "they are the twofold summit of the universal Church joined together as one in a most sublime manner", or: "they are two supreme pastors and governors of the Church who constitute a single head", interpreted in such a way as to imply a complete equality between St. Peter and St. Paul without the subordination and subjection of St. Paul to St. Peter in the supreme power and governance of the universal Church, the most holy Lord (pope) has decreed and declared heretical.

1999

2001–2007: Constitution Cum occasione to All the Faithful, May 31, 1653

The errors mentioned in the bull are taken from the principal work of Cornelius Jansen (Bishop of Ypres), Augustinus, seu doctrina sancti Augustini de humanae naturae sanitate, aegritudine, medicina adversus Pelagianos et Massilienses, on which he had worked for twenty-two years and which was published at Louvain in 1640 (two years after his death). It was prohibited by Urban VIII in the bull In eminenti ecclesiae (signed on March 6, 1642, and made public on June 19, 1643) primarily because this work had been published in opposition to the decrees of Paul V and Urban VIII (cf. *1997^o) and, moreover, says the bull, because it was found that "in the same book there are contained many propositions formerly condemned by Our predecessors ... that are defended with great scandal for Catholics and with contempt toward the authority of the aforementioned See in opposition to the previously expressed condemnations and prohibitions" (in eodem libro multas ex propositionibus a praedecessoribus Nostris olim ... damnatas contineri et magno cum catholicorum scandalo et auctoritatis dictae Sedis contemptu contra praefatas damnationes et prohibitiones defendi) (DuPIA 3/II, 245b).

The Jansenists maintained that the bull was obtained by deceit (cf. *2331). In the controversy that ensued, the book of Jansen was examined by a Roman tribunal (April 1651–May 1653). The report of the Holy Office was published by A. Schill in Katholik 63/II [1883, II]: 287–99, 472–94. Five propositions that had already emerged in Paris were condemned. These propositions—with the exception of the first—are not taken literally from the Augustinus but are derived from its principles. For the constitutions against the Jansenists, cf. *2010–2012, 2020, 2390, 2400–2502.

Ed.: BullTau 15:720a–721a / BullCocq 6/III, 248b–249a / DuPIA 3/II, 261b–262a.

Errors of Cornelius Jansen on Grace

1. Aliqua Dei praecepta hominibus iustis volentibus et conantibus, secundum praesentes quas habent vires,

1. Some of God's commandments cannot be observed by just men with the strength they have in the present

2001

sunt impossibilia; deest quoque illis gratia, qua possibilia fiant [cf. *1954].¹

- 2002 2. Interiori gratiae in statu naturae lapsae numquam resistitur.¹
- 2003 3. Ad merendum et demerendum in statu naturae lapsae non requiritur in homine libertas a necessitate, sed sufficit libertas a coactione.¹
- 2004 4. Semipelagiani admittebant praeventis gratiae interioris necessitatem ad singulos actus, etiam ad initium fidei; et in hoc erant haeretici, quod vellent eam gratiam talem esse, cui posset humana voluntas resistere vel obtemperare.¹
- 2005 5. Semipelagianum est dicere, Christum pro omnibus omnino hominibus mortuum esse aut sanguinem fudisse.¹
- 2006 [Censura:] Propos. 1: temerariam, impiam, blasphemam, anathemate damnatam et haeticam declaramus et uti talem damnamus. —2: haeticam ... —3: haeticam ... —4: falsam et haeticam ... —5: falsam, temerariam, scandalosam, et intellectam eo sensu, ut Christus pro salute dumtaxat praedestinatorum mortuus sit, impiam, blasphemam, contumeliosam, divinae pietati derogantem et haeticam...
- 2007 Non intendentes tamen per hanc declarationem et definitionem super praedictis quinque propositionibus factam approbare ullatenus alias opiniones, quae continentur in praedicto libro Cornelii Iansenii.

state, even if they wish and strive to observe them; nor do they have the grace that would make their observance possible [cf. *1954].¹

2. In the state of fallen nature interior grace is never resisted.¹
3. In order to merit or demerit in the state of fallen nature, it is not necessary for man to have freedom from necessity, but freedom from coercion suffices.¹
4. The Semipelagians admitted the necessity of a prevent interior grace for every act, even for the beginning of faith; and their heresy consisted in this, that they held this grace to be such that the human will could either resist it or submit to it.¹
5. It is Semipelagian to say that Christ died or shed his blood for all men without exception.¹
- [Censure] Proposition 1: We declare to be rash, impious, and blasphemous, condemned by anathema and heretical, and We condemn it as such. —2: heretical ... —3: heretical ... —4: false and heretical ... —5: false, rash, scandalous, and, understood in the sense that Christ died only to save the predestined: impious, blasphemous, disgraceful, derogatory to divine piety, and heretical...

By this declaration and definition on the five aforementioned propositions, We do not intend, however, to approve in any manner other opinions contained in the above-mentioned book of Cornelius Jansen.

2008: Decree of the Holy Office, April 23, 1654

Some adversaries of the Molinists, such as Jacques-Hyacinthe Serry, O.P. (Historia Congregationum de auxiliis divinae gratiae [Louvain, 1700], addenda, 159–65; [Antwerp, 1709], addenda, 155–60), alleged that Paul V had prepared a bull (Gregis dominici) against the teaching of Molina but did not publish it. In reality, however, it was simply a draft by Peter Lombard of Waterford, the Archbishop of Armagh (Ireland).

Ed.: Theodorus Eleutherus (pseudonym = L. Meyer, S.J.), Historia controversiarum de divinae gratiae auxiliis (Antwerp, 1705), 707a / A. Le Blanc (pseudonym = Jacques-Hyacinthe Serry, O.P.), Historia Congregationum de auxiliis divinae gratiae (Louvain, 1700), XLIII; (Antwerp, 1709), XXXIV.

Liberty of Teaching in Questions concerning the Aids of Grace

- 2008 ... Cum tam Romae quam alibi circumferantur quaedam asserta, acta, manuscripta et forsitan typis excussa Congregationum habitatum coram felicis recordationis Clemente VIII et Paulo V super quaestione de auxiliis divinae gratiae tam sub nomine Francisci Pegnae, olim Rotae Romanae decani, quam Fratris Thomae de Lemos Ord. Praed. aliorumque praelatorum et theologorum, qui ut asseritur, praedictis interfuerunt Congregationibus, necnon quoddam autographum
- ... Since there are being circulated, both in Rome and elsewhere, certain assertions, acts, manuscripts, and perhaps printed documents of congregations held under Clement VIII and Paul V, of happy memory, on the question of the aids of divine grace, both under the name of Francisco Pegna, formerly dean of the Roman Rota, and under that of Friar Thomas de Lemos, O.P., and of other prelates and theologians (who, it is claimed, were present at the above-mentioned congregations),

*2001¹ Cornelius Jansen, Augustinus, vol. 3: De gratia Christi III, 13.

*2002¹ Cf. ibid., II, 4, 24, 25.

*2003¹ Cf. vol. 2: De statu naturae lapsae IV, 24; vol. 3: De gratia Christi VI, 24; VIII, 19.

*2004¹ Cf. vol. 1: De haeresi Pelagiana VIII, 6; vol. 3: De gratia Christi II, 15.

*2005¹ Cf. vol. 3: De gratia Christi III, 21; cf. also 20.

seu exemplar assertae Constitutionis eiusdem Pauli V super definitione praedictae quaestionis de auxiliis, ac damnationis sententiae seu sententiarum Ludovici Molinae Soc. Iesu: eadem Sanctitas sua praesenti hoc decreto declarat ac decernit, praedictis assertis, actis, tam pro sententia Fratrum Ord. S. Dominici quam Ludovici Molinae aliorumque Soc. Iesu religiosorum, et autographo sive exemplari praedictae assertae Constitutionis Pauli V nullam omnino esse fidem adhibendam; neque ab alterutra parte seu a quocumque alio allegari posse vel debere: sed super quaestione praedicta observanda esse decreta Pauli V et Urbani VIII suorum praedecessorum [cf. *1997°].

as well as a certain autograph or original of the alleged constitution of the same Paul V concerning a definition of the aforesaid question on the aids (of grace) and a condemnation of the opinion or opinions of Luis Molina, S.J.: His Holiness, by the present decree, declares and decrees that no faith at all is to be accorded to the above-mentioned assertions and acts—both in favor of the opinion of the friars of the Order of St. Dominic as well as in favor of Luis Molina and the other religious of the Society of Jesus; and (no faith at all is to be accorded to) the autograph or original of the aforesaid alleged constitution of Paul V; and nothing (else) can or ought to be alleged by either of the two sides or by anyone else: on the contrary, concerning the above-mentioned question, the decrees of his predecessors Paul V and Urban VIII are to be observed [cf. *1997°].

ALEXANDER VII: April 7, 1655–May 22, 1667

2010–2012: Constitution Ad sanctam beati Petri sedem, October 16, 1656

After the five propositions of Jansen were condemned, his followers, under the leadership of Antoine Arnauld, distinguished between the quaestio facti (question of fact) and the quaestio iuris (question of law), maintaining that the condemnation pertained only to some fictitious heresy but not to Jansen's true opinion. The Sorbonne in Paris protested against this supposition and expelled Arnauld from the body of masters. At the request of the bishops of France, Alexander VII rejected the distinction in the bull quoted below.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 281b (445ab) / BullTau 16:247a / BullCocq 6/IV, 151ab.

Judgment of the Church on the Meaning of the Words of Cornelius Jansen

§ 5. Cum ... nonnulli iniquitatis filii praedictas quinque propositiones vel in libro praedicto eiusdem Cornelii Iansenii non reperiri, sed ficte et pro arbitrio compositas esse, vel non in sensu ab eodem intento damnatas fuisse asserere magno cum Christi fidelium scandalo non reformident, et quinque illas propositiones ex libro praememorati Cornelii Iansenii episcopi Ipresis, cui titulus est Augustinus, excerptas ac in sensu ab eodem Cornelio Iansenio intento damnatas fuisse, declaramus et definimus, ac uti tales, inusta scilicet eadem singulis nota, quae in praedicta declaratione et definitione unicuique illarum singillatim inuritur, iterum damnamus.

§ 6. Nos, qui omnia quae hac in re gesta sunt sufficienter et attente perspeximus, utpote qui [qua cardinalis et commissarius] ... omnibus illis congressibus interfuimus, in quibus Apostolica auctoritate eadem causa discussa est, ea profecto diligentia, qua maior desiderari non posset, quamcumque dubitationem super praemissis in posterum auferre volentes, ... praeinsertam Innocentii praedecessoris Nostri constitutionem, declarationem et definitionem harum serie confirmamus, approbamus et innovamus,

§ 5. Since ... some sons of iniquity are not afraid to assert, with great scandal to Christ's faithful, either that the aforesaid five propositions are not to be found in the aforesaid book of the same Cornelius Jansen but have been drawn up fictitiously and arbitrarily or that they have not been condemned in the sense intended by him, 2010

§ 6. We, having adequately and attentively examined everything that has been done in this matter, inasmuch as We were present [as cardinal and commissary] ... at all those assemblies in which this case was discussed by apostolic authority, (and) indeed (discussed) with a care than which no greater could be desired, and wishing to remove any doubt henceforth on the aforementioned matters, ... confirm, approve, and renew in this order the above-cited constitution, declaration, and definition of Our predecessor Innocent, 2011

and We declare and define that those five propositions were drawn from the book of the aforementioned Cornelius Jansen, Bishop of Ypres, of which the title is Augustinus, and that they have been condemned in the sense intended by the same Cornelius Jansen; and as such, We once more condemn them, marking each one with the same (censure) with which each of them was individually branded in the aforesaid declaration and definition. 2012

2013: Reply of the Holy Office, February 11, 1661

In the constitution Sacramentum paenitentiae of June 1, 1741, Benedict XIV refers to this decree.

Ed.: F. M. Cappello, Tractatus canonico-moralis de sacramentis 2: De poenitentia, 6th ed. (Turin and Rome, 1953), 440 (no. 437), n. 39 / NvRTh 8 (1876): 357.

On the Material Graveness of Sexual Matters

2013 Qu.: An confessarius sollicitando propter parvitatem materiae sit denunciandus?

Resp.: Cum in rebus venereis non detur parvitas materiae, et, si daretur, in re praesenti non dari [detur?], censuerunt esse denunciandum, et opinionem contrariam non esse probabilem.

Question: Should a confessor be denounced for soliciting [to a sin against chastity] on account of the lightness of the matter?

Response: Since lightness of matter does not exist in sexual matters, or, if it does, it does not exist in the present case, they have decided that he should be denounced and that the contrary opinion is not tenable.

2015–2017: Brief Sollicitudo omnium ecclesiarum, December 8, 1661

Alexander VII issued this brief at the request of King Philip IV of Spain. Since he wished also to preserve the freedom of the opposite opinion, he confirmed the bull Grave nimis of Sixtus IV (*1425f.), the constitution Regis pacifici of Paul V of July 6, 1616 (BullTau 12:356–59), and the decree of Gregory XV of May 24, 1622 (BullTau 12:688–90).

Ed.: BullTau 16:739b–740b / BullCocq 6/V, 182a–183a.

On the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary

2015 § 1. Vetus est Christi fidelium erga eius beatissimam matrem Virginem Mariam pietas sentientium, eius animam in primo instanti creationis atque infusionis in corpus fuisse speciali Dei gratia et privilegio, intuitu meritorum Iesu Christi eius filii, humani generis Redemptoris, a macula peccati originalis praeservatam immunem, atque in hoc sensu eius conceptionis festivitatem sollemni ritu colentium et celebrantium; crevitque horum numerus post editas a felicis recordationis Sixto papa IV ... constitutiones [*1400, 1425, a Concilio Tridentino innovatas: *1516]... Aucta rursus et propagata fuit pietas haec, ... ita ut, accedentibus quoque plerisque celebratoribus academiis ad hanc sententiam, iam fere omnes catholici eam complectantur.

§ 1. The devotion of the faithful of Christ toward his most blessed mother, the Virgin Mary, is ancient, according to which they believe that her soul, from the first instant of its creation and infusion into the body was, by a special grace and privilege of God, preserved immune from the stain of original sin in view of the merits of her Son Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the human race, and, in this sense, honor and celebrate, in a solemn manner, the feast of her conception; and their number has grown after the constitutions promulgated ... by Pope Sixtus IV, of happy memory [*1400, 1425, renewed by the Council of Trent: *1516]... This devotion has again increased and spread ... to the point that, with most of the more illustrious academies also coming to this view, almost all Catholics already embrace it.

2016 § 2. Et quia ex occasione contrariae assertionis in contionibus, lectionibus, conclusionibus et actibus publicis, quod nempe eadem beatissima Virgo Maria fuerit concepta cum peccato originali, oriebantur in populo christiano cum magna Dei offensa scandala, iurgia et dissensiones, recolendae memoriae Paulus papa V etiam praedecessor Noster vetuit horum opinionem praefatae sententiae contrariam publice doceri aut praedicari. Quam prohibitionem piae memoriae Gregorius papa XV similiter praedecessor Noster ad privata etiam colloquia extendit, mandans insuper in favorem eiusdem sententiae, ut in sacrosanctae Missae sacrificio ac divino Officio celebrandis tam publice quam privatim non alio quam “conceptionis” nomine uti quicumque debeant.

§ 2. And since there arose among the Christian people, with great offense to God, scandals, quarrels, and discords on the occasion—in discourses, lectures, arguments, and public acts—of the contrary assertion: namely, that the same most blessed Virgin Mary was conceived with original sin, Pope Paul V, of venerable memory and Our predecessor, forbade the public teaching or preaching of the opinion of those opposed to the above-mentioned belief. Pope Gregory XV, of pious memory, likewise Our predecessor, extended this prohibition also to private conferences, ruling, moreover, in favor of the same belief, that in the celebration of the most holy sacrifice of the Mass and the Divine Office, whether in public or private, the term “conception” and no other should be used.

§ 4. Nos, considerantes quod sancta Romana Ecclesia de intemeratae semperque Virginis Mariae Conceptione festum sollemniter celebrat et speciale ac proprium super hoc Officium olim ordinavit ...

volentesque laudabili huic pietati et devotioni et festo ac cultui ... favere, ...

[Decreta] edita in favorem sententiae asserentis, animam beatae Mariae Virginis in sui creatione et in corpus infusione Spiritus Sancti gratia donatam et a peccato originali praeservatam fuisse ... innovamus.

§ 4. Considering that the holy Roman Church solemnly celebrates the feast of the conception of the spotless and ever-virgin Mary and for a long while has established for this a special and proper Office ...

and wishing to promote ... this praiseworthy piety and devotion as well as the feast and the cult, ...

We renew [the decrees] promulgated on behalf of the belief that affirms that the soul of the Blessed Virgin Mary in its creation and its infusion into the body was blessed by the grace of the Holy Spirit and preserved from original sin....

2017

2020: Constitution Regiminis apostolici, February 15, 1665 (1664 in the dating of the curia)

In order to break the resistance of the Jansenists, King Louis XIV of France requested a formula from the pope that would have to be signed by all ecclesiastical personnel and teachers, after another declaration of submission, presented by the Assembly of Clergy of 1657, had remained without effect. Alexander VII decreed a formula to be signed within three months.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 315b (446b) / BullTau 17:336b / BullCocq 6/VI, 52b–53a.

Formula of Submission for the Jansenists

“Ego N. Constitutioni Apostolicae Innocentii X, datae die 31. Maii 1653, et Constitutioni Alexandri VII, datae die 16. Octobris 1656, Summorum Pontificum, me subicio, et quinque propositiones ex Cornelii Iansenii libro, cui nomen Augustinus, excerptas, et in sensu ab eodem auctore intento, prout illas per dictas Constitutiones Sedes Apostolica damnavit, sincero animo reicio ac damno, et ita iuro: Sic me Deus adiuvet, et haec sancta Dei evangelia.”

“I, N., submit to the apostolic constitution of the Supreme Pontiff Innocent X dated May 31, 1653, and to the constitution of the Supreme Pontiff Alexander VII dated October 16, 1656, and, with a sincere heart, I reject and condemn the five propositions taken from the book of Cornelius Jansen entitled Augustinus and in the sense understood by that same author, just as the Apostolic See has condemned them by the above-mentioned constitutions, and so I swear: So help me God, and these holy Gospels of God.”

2020

2021–2065: Forty-Five Propositions Condemned in the Decrees of the Holy Office, September 24, 1665, and March 18, 1666

Changes of customs and a more liberal manner of life especially among the nobility led to the formulation of moral doctrines suited to the spirit of the times. Spiritual guides who adopted these doctrines were called “benignists” or “laxists”. Attacks against these doctrines were made most of all by the Jansenists. In this, they also had their dogmatic opponents in view. The new doctrines, therefore, were combated especially in Belgium and France. The University of Louvain pursued a condemnation from Rome, and it twice published a list of censured propositions: on March 30 (at the same time also on April 26), 1653 (DuPIA 3/II, 267a–268a) and on May 4, 1657 (DuPIA 3/II, 285a–288a). These censures were taken up to a large extent word for word in the Roman condemnations of 1665, 1666, and 1679. The University of Paris provided its contribution by assigning censures to the works of prominent “laxists”.

The propositions are condemned as they are worded. Within the decrees no authors are named since the propositions are frequently taken out of context and sometimes expanded by elements that are not found in the original, so that most often one must speak of fictitious authors. Not infrequently the author should be excused, since he was using a mode of argumentation that was quite common in earlier times. Therefore, it suffices to indicate the authors to whom a proposition is attributed. By means of the passages cited, a decision can be made as to how justly this was done.

Ed.: BullTau 17:387b–389a [= propositions 1–28]; 17:427b–428a [= propositions 29–45] / BullCocq 6/VI, 85ab; 110ab / DuPIA 3/II, 321a–324a / BullLux 6, appendix la–2b / Viva 1 at the beginning (without page numbering).

Errors of a Doctrine of Moral Laxity

a. Propositions 1–28 of the decree of September 24, 1665

1. Homo nullo umquam vitae suae tempore tenetur elicere actum fidei, spei et caritatis ex vi praeceptorum divinatorum ad eas virtutes pertinentium.¹

1. A man is not bound at any time at all in his life to utter an act of faith, hope, and charity by the force of the divine precepts pertaining to these virtues.¹

2021

*2021 ¹ Tommaso Tamburini, S.J., Explicatio decalogi (Lyon, 1659, and later eds.), II, 3, § 2, no. 2, and II, 1, § 1, no. 10.

- 2022 2. Vir equestris ad duellum provocatus potest illud acceptare, ne timiditatis notam apud alios incurrat.¹
2. A man belonging to the orders of Knights when challenged to a duel can accept this, lest he incur the mark of cowardice among others.¹
- 2023 3. Sententia asserens, Bullam “Coenae”¹ solum prohibere absolutionem haeresis et aliorum criminum, quando publica sunt, et id non derogare facultati Tridentini,² in qua de occultis criminibus sermo est, anno 1629, 18. Iulii in Consistorio sacrae Congregationis Eminentissimorum Cardinalium visa et tolerata est.
3. The proposition that maintains that the bull *Coenae*¹ prohibits absolution of heresy and other crimes only when they are public and that this does not derogate from the faculty of Trent,² in which secret crimes are discussed, was considered and tolerated in the Consistory of the Sacred Congregation of the Most Eminent Cardinals on July 18, 1629.
- 2024 4. Praelati regulares possunt in foro conscientiae absolvere quoscumque saeculares ab haeresi occulta et ab excommunicatione propter eam incurta.¹
4. Regular prelates can in the court of conscience absolve any seculars at all of hidden heresy and of excommunication incurred by it.¹
- 2025 5. Quamvis evidenter tibi constet, Petrum esse haereticum, non teneris denunciare, si probare non possis.¹
5. Although it is evidently established by you that Peter is a heretic, you are not bound to denounce (him) if you cannot prove it.¹
- 2026 6. Confessarius, qui in sacramentali confessione tribuit paenitenti chartam postea legendam, in qua ad venerem incitat, non censetur sollicitasse in confessione, ac proinde non est denunciandus.¹
6. A confessor who in sacramental confession gives the penitent a paper to be read afterward in which he incites to lust is not considered to have solicited in the confessional and therefore is not to be denounced.¹
- 2027 7. Modus evadendi obligationem denunciandae sollicitationis est, si sollicitatus confiteatur cum sollicitante: hic potest ipsum absolvere absque onere denunciandi.¹
7. A way to avoid the obligation of denouncing solicitation exists if the one solicited confesses with the solicitor; the latter can absolve that one without the burden of denouncing.¹
- 2028 8. Duplicatum stipendium potest sacerdos pro eadem Missa licite accipere, applicando petenti partem etiam specialissimam fructus ipsimet celebranti correspondentem, idque post decretum Urbani VIII.¹
8. A priest can lawfully accept a double stipend for the same Mass by also applying to the petitioner the most special part of the fruit that corresponds to the celebrant himself, and this according to the decree of Urban VIII.¹

*2022 ¹ Cf. Mateo de Moya, S.J., who, under the pseudonym Amadeus Guimenius, wrote a book that was vigorously attacked, placed on the Index in 1666, and condemned again on September 16, 1680, by Innocent XI: Adversus quorundam expostulationes contra nonnullos Iesuitarum opiniones morales (Bamberg, 1657), 57: the Parisian censure of A.D. 1665 (DuPIA 3/I, 108–14) has, as its basis, the Lyon edition of 1664 (there 89, no. 5). Given the extreme rarity of the case, Paul Laymann, S.J., in Theologia moralis (Lyon, 1643), III, tract. 3, c. 3, no. 3, supplies his consent; a thesis to some extent analogous is found in the authors mentioned in connection with *2130.

*2023 ¹ The bull Coena, or In coena Domini, was so called because usually it was read out publicly each year on Holy Thursday in the principal churches. It contained diverse censures reserved to the pope that had already been collected by Alexander VI (BullTau 5:394–97) and had grown in number over the course of the years; cf., for example, Paul III’s constitution Consueverunt Romani Pontifices of April 13, 1536 (BullTau 6:218–24).

² Cf. Council of Trent, sess. 24, Decree on Reform, can. 6 (SGTr 9:981_{36–39}): it explicitly recognizes the power of bishops to absolve from a hidden heresy.

*2024 ¹ Cf. Étienne Bauny, S.J., Theologia moralis I: De sacramentis ac personis sacris (Paris, 1640; placed on the Index), tract. 4: De absolutione, q. 32; cf. Bruno Chassaing, O.F.M.Rec., Privilegia regularium, quibus aperte demonstratur regulares ab omni Ordinariorum potestate exemptos esse . . . , 3rd ed. (Paris, 1654; placed on the Index March 29, 1661), I, tract. 5, c. 3, prop. 3).

*2025 ¹ Cf. Étienne Bauny, S.J., Theologia moralis II: De censuris ecclesiasticis (Paris, 1642), tract. 3, disp. 4, q. 18.

*2026 ¹ The obligation to denounce solicitations made in sacramental confession was issued by Gregory XV, Universi dominici gregis, August 30, 1662 (BullTau 12:729f.); cf. § 7 in particular. The censured proposition is attributed above all to Thomas Hurtado, C.R.M.: cf. his Tractatus varii resolutionum moralium (Lyon, 1651; the work was forbidden “until corrected” on June 10, 1659), I, tract. 4, c. 5, resol. 6; c. 6, resol. 8; also prop. 7 in that place.

*2027 ¹ Cf. Thomas Hurtado, Tractatus varii.

*2028 ¹ Urban VIII, decree Cum saepe contingat, June 21, 1625 (BullTau 13:336–40); cf. §§ 2 and 4. This decree, renewed with the approval of the pope on January 25, 1659, by the Congregation of the Holy Council, is likewise found in an enlarged form in Innocent XII’s constitution Nuper a congregatione of December 23, 1697 (BullTau 20:806–19). Before the decree of Urban VIII, the opinion was sustained (for example, by Cajetan de Vio, Domingo de Soto, and Melchior Cano) according to which a double offering could be accepted from different people each day by the priest for one and the same Mass, provided he had need of this for an honest sustenance of his person. After the decree of Urban VIII, Thomas Hurtado still tried to maintain this thesis; as cited in Tractatus varii I, tract. 2, c. 4, resol. 17, nos. 187f.; cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 86.

9. Post decretum Urbani potest sacerdos, cui Missae celebrandae traduntur, per alium satisfacere, collato illi minori stipendio, alia pane stipendii sibi retenta.¹ 2029
9. After the decree of Urban, a priest to whom Masses are given to be celebrated can give satisfaction through another by paying a smaller stipend to him and retaining the other part of the stipend for himself.¹
10. Non est contra iustitiam, pro pluribus sacrificiis stipendium accipere, et sacrificium unum offerre. Neque etiam est contra fidelitatem, etiamsi promittam promissione, etiam iuramento firmata, danti stipendium, quod pro nullo alio offeram. 2030
10. It is not contrary to justice to accept a stipend for several sacrifices and to offer (only) one sacrifice. Nor is it contrary to fidelity if I should promise to him who gives a stipend, even by a promise confirmed by an oath, what I will offer for no one else.
11. Peccata in confessione omissa seu oblita ob instans periculum vitae aut ob aliam causam, non tenemur in sequenti confessione exprimere.¹ 2031
11. We are not bound to express in a subsequent confession sins omitted in confession or forgotten because of the imminent danger of death or for some other reason.¹
12. Mendicantes possunt absolvere a casibus episcopis reservatis, non obtenta ad id episcoporum facultate.¹ 2032
12. Mendicants can absolve from cases reserved for bishops when the faculty of the bishop was not obtained for this.¹
13. Satisfacit praecepto annuae confessionis, qui confitetur regulari episcopo praesentato, sed ab eo iniuste reprobato.¹ 2033
13. He satisfies the precept of an annual confession who confesses to a priest regular, presented to a bishop, but unjustly reproved by him.¹
14. Qui facit confessionem voluntarie nullam, satisfacit praecepto Ecclesiae [cf. *2155]. 2034
14. He who voluntarily makes an invalid confession satisfies the precept of the Church [cf. *2155].
15. Paenitens propria auctoritate substituere sibi alium potest, qui loco ipsius paenitentiam adimpleat. 2035
15. A penitent by his own authority can substitute another for himself to fulfill the penance in his place.
16. Qui beneficium curatum habent, possunt sibi eligere in confessarium simplicem sacerdotem non approbatum ab Ordinario.¹ 2036
16. Those who have a curial benefice can select for themselves as confessor a simple priest not approved by the Ordinary.¹
17. Est licitum religioso vel clerico, calumniatorem gravia crimina de se vel de sua religione spargere minantem occidere, quando alius modus defendendi non suppetit: uti suppetere non videtur, si calumniator sit paratus vel ipsi religioso, vel eius religioni publice et coram gravissimis viris praedicta impingere, nisi occidatur.¹ 2037
17. It is permitted a religious or a cleric to kill a calumniator who threatens to spread grave crimes about him or his order when no other means of defense is at hand; as it seems not to be, if a calumniator be ready to spread the aforesaid about the religious himself or his order publicly or among people of importance, unless he be killed.¹
18. Licet interficere falsum accusatorem, falsos testes ac etiam iudicem, a quo iniqua certo imminet sententia, si alia via non potest innocens damnum evitare.¹ 2038
18. It is permitted to kill a false accuser, false witnesses, and even a judge from whom an unjust sentence threatens with certainty, if the innocent can avoid harm in no other way.¹

*2029¹ Cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 127, no. 3.

*2031¹ Taken from the 1653 censure of Louvain, prop. 12.

*2032¹ Cf. Chassaing, Privilegia regularium I, tract. 5, c. 3, prop. 6; “probabiliter sustineri posset” (it could probably be sustained).

*2033¹ This proposition can be deduced from the thesis that a priest regular [i.e., of a religious order] who has been deprived permission from the bishop for unfounded reasons can still absolve validly; this thesis was sustained by Martin de Azpilcueta, called “Navarrus”, Enchiridion sive Manuale confessoriorum et paenitentium (Salamanca, 1657, in Spanish; Rome, 1588, and other eds.), 27, nos. 264f., where it refers to Antonio de Escobar y Mendoza, S.J., Theologia moralis (Lyon, 1646, and other eds.), tract. II, lib. 16, sec. 2, c. 17, problema 46.

*2036¹ Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 157.

*2037¹ This proposition is taken chiefly from the censure of Louvain of A.D. 1653, prop. 7; Francesco Amico, S.J., Cursus theologicus iuxta scholasticam huius temporis S. I. methodum, 2nd ed. (Douai, 1640), V, disp. 36, no. 118, presents this as an example for discussion; nevertheless, it was selected for the September 6, 1649, censure of Louvain.

*2038¹ From the 1657 Louvain censure, prop. 5. Cf. Domingo Báñez, O.P., De iustitia et iure, q. 46, art. 7, dub. 4, concl. 2; Cardinal Juan de Lugo, S.J., De iustitia, disp. 10, sec. 7, no. 165; Antonio Diana, C.R.M., Resolutiones morales VIII, tract. 7, resol. 52; Escobar, Theologia moralis IV, lib. 32, sec. 2, c. 5, problema 5, and other authors.

- 2039 19. Non peccat maritus occidens propria auctoritate uxorem in adulterio deprehensam.¹ 19. A husband does not sin by killing on his own authority a wife caught in adultery.¹
- 2040 20. Restitutio a Pio V¹ imposita beneficiatis non recitantibus non debetur in conscientia ante sententiam declaratoriam iudicis, eo quod sit poena. 20. The restitution imposed by Pius V¹ upon those who have received benefices but not reciting (the Divine Office in fulfillment of their obligation) is not due in conscience before the declaratory sentence of the judge, because it is a penalty.
- 2041 21. Habens capellaniam collativam, aut quodvis aliud beneficium ecclesiasticum, si studio litterarum vacet, satisfacit suae obligationi, si officium per alium recitet. 21. He who has a collective chaplaincy, or any other ecclesiastical benefice, if he is busy with the study of letters, satisfies his obligation if he recites the office through another.
- 2042 22. Non est contra iustitiam, beneficia ecclesiastica non conferre gratis: quia collator conferens illa beneficia ecclesiastica pecunia interveniente non exigit illam pro collatione beneficii, sed veluti pro emolumento temporali, quod tibi conferre non tenebatur.¹ 22. It is not contrary to justice not to confer ecclesiastical benefices gratuitously, because the contributor who contributes those ecclesiastical benefices with money intervening does not exact that money for the contribution of the benefice, but for a temporal profit, which he was not bound to contribute to you.¹
- 2043 23. Frangens ieiunium Ecclesiae, ad quod tenetur, non peccat mortaliter, nisi ex contemptu vel inoboedientia hoc faciat, puta quia non vult se subicere praecepto.¹ 23. He who breaks a fast of the Church to which he is bound does not sin mortally, unless he does this out of contempt and disobedience, for example, because he does not wish to subject himself to a precept.¹
- 2044 24. Mollities, sodomia et bestialitas sunt peccata eiusdem speciei infimae; ideoque sufficit dicere in confessione, se procurasse pollutionem.¹ 24. Pederasty, sodomy, and bestiality are sins of the same inferior species; therefore it suffices to say in confession that one has procured a pollution.¹
- 2045 25. Qui habuit copulam cum soluta, satisfacit confessionis praecepto dicens: Commisi cum soluta grave peccatum contra castitatem, non explicando copulam.¹ 25. He who has had intercourse with an unmarried woman satisfies the precept of confession by saying: “I committed a grievous sin against chastity with an unmarried woman”, without mentioning the intercourse.¹
- 2046 26. Quando litigantes habent pro se opiniones aequae probabiles, potest iudex pecuniam accipere pro ferenda sententia in favorem unius prae alio.¹ 26. When litigants have equally probable opinions in their defense, the judge can accept money to bring a sentence in favor of one over the other.¹
- 2047 27. Si liber sit alicuius iunioris et moderni, debet opinio censeri probabilis, dum non constet, reiectam esse a Sede Apostolica tamquam improbabilem.¹ 27. If a book is published by a younger or modern person, its opinion should be considered as probable, since it is not established that it has been rejected by the Holy See as improbable.¹

*2039¹ Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 68.

*2040¹ Pius V, constitution Ex proximo Lateranensi, September 20, 1571 (BullTau 7:942f.), confirmed the law approved by Lateran Council V in sess. 9. This law was understood by Pedro de Soto, O.P., among others, as a purely penal law.

*2042¹ Vincenzo Candido, O.P., Illustriores disquisitiones morales I, disq. 18, art. 39, dub. 3 to the end (Lyon, 1638), 206; Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 79.

*2043¹ The proposition is attributed to Petrus de Palude, O.P. (d. 1342), Commentarius in sententias IV, dist. 15, a. 1, concl. 2, and to Francesco Zabarella (d. 1417), Commentarius in Decretales, t. II, tit. 46, c. 2, on the observance of fasting.

*2044¹ The first part of the proposition was generally accepted by theologians of the time; the foundation was provided by Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae II–II, q. 154, a. 11–12 (Editio Leonina 10:243f., 247f.); cf. Cajetan de Vio, Commentary on q. 154, a. 11, ad dub. 2 (Editio Leonina 10:245). The second part of the proposition is a conclusion taken from Juan Caramuel de Lobkowitz, O.Cist., though he later retracted it; cf. his work Theologia moralis fundamentalis (Frankfurt, 1651, and other eds.), II, fundam. 57, q. 6, and Theologia moralis ad prima eaque clarissima principia reducta (Louvain, 1645), IV, no. 1669.

*2045¹ From the Parisian censure: Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 208, prop. 13; Caramuel, Theologia moralis fundamentalis, fundam. 25, no. 484 (in the ed. before 1656).

*2046¹ From the Parisian censure: Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 113, prop. 11; cf. the Louvain censure, art. 11, and the censure of the Synod of Namur, 1659, art. 13.

*2047¹ Cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 27, no. 1, and 191, no. 4 (Parisian censure); in the same sense: Vincenzo Figliucci, S.J., Morales quaestiones de christianis officiis et casibus conscientiae (Lyon, 1622), II, tract. 21, c. 4, no. 134, restrictio in no. 136.

28. Populus non peccat, etiamsi absque ulla causa non recipiat legem a principe promulgatam.¹

28. The people do not sin, even if without any cause they do not accept a law promulgated by the ruler.¹ 2048

b. Propositions 29–45 of the decree of March 18, 1666

29. In die ieiunii qui saepius modicum quid comedit, etiamsi notabilem quantitatem in fine comederit, non frangit ieiunium.

29. On a day of fasting, he who eats a moderate amount frequently, even if in the end he has eaten a considerable quantity, does not break the fast. 2049

30. Omnes officiales, qui in republica corporaliter laborant, sunt excusati ab obligatione ieiunii, nec debent se certificare, an labor sit compatibilis cum ieiunio.¹

30. All officials who labor physically in the state are excused from the obligation of fasting and need not make certain whether the labor is compatible with fasting.¹ 2050

31. Excusantur absolute a praecepto ieiunii omnes illi, qui iter agunt equitando, utcumque iter agunt, etiamsi iter necessarium non sit, et etiamsi iter unius diei conficiant.¹

31. All those are entirely excused from fasting who make a journey by horse, in whatever way they make it, even if it is not necessary and even if they complete a journey of a single day.¹ 2051

32. Non est evidens, quod consuetudo non comedendi ova et lacticinia in Quadragesima obliget.¹

32. It is not evident that the custom of not eating eggs and dairy products in Lent is binding.¹ 2052

33. Restitutio fructuum ob omissionem Horarum suppleri potest per quascumque elemosynas, quas antea beneficiarius de fructibus sui beneficii fecerit.¹

33. Restitution of benefits (lost) because of the omission of (praying) the Hours can be supplied through any alms that a beneficiary has previously made from the income of his benefice.¹ 2053

34. In die Palmarum recitans officium paschale satisfacit praecepto.¹

34. By reciting the paschal office on the day of Palms one satisfies the precept.¹ 2054

35. Unico officio potest quis satisfacere duplici praecepto pro die praesenti et crastino.¹

35. By a single office anyone can satisfy a twofold precept, for the present day and tomorrow.¹ 2055

36. Regulares possunt in foro conscientiae uti privilegiis suis, quae sunt expresse revocata per Concilium Tridentinum.

36. Regulars can in the forum of conscience use their privileges which were expressly revoked by the Council of Trent. 2056

37. Indulgentiae concessae regularibus et revocatae a Paulo V hodie sunt revalidatae.¹

37. Indulgences conceded to regulars and revoked by Paul V are today revalidated.¹ 2057

38. Mandatum Tridentini, factum sacerdoti sacrificanti ex necessitate cum peccato mortali, confitendi “quamprimum” [cf. *1647], est consilium, non praeceptum.¹

38. The mandate of the Council of Trent, made for the priest who of necessity carries out the Sacrifice while in mortal sin, to confess as soon as possible [cf. *1647] is a recommendation, not a precept.¹ 2058

39. Illa particula “quamprimum” intelligitur, cum sacerdos suo tempore confitebitur.

39. The expression “as soon as possible” is understood to be when the priest will confess in his (usual) time. 2059

*2048¹ Escobar, Theologia moralis I, l. 5, sec. 2, c. 14, problema 13.

*2050¹ Diana, Resolutiones morales VIII, tract. 7, resol. 56, and IV, tract. 4, resol. 130; Juan Machado de Chaves, Perfecto confesor y cura de almas (Barcelona, 1641), II, l. 6, pt. 8, doc. 5.

*2051¹ Diana, Resolutiones morales XI, tract. 2, resol. 57 and 21, § 3.

*2052¹ Cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 105. This usage derives from an inauthentic letter of Gregory I the Great that was included in Gratian, Decretum, pt. I, dist. 4, c. 6, § 2 (Frdb 1:6).

*2053¹ Cf. Diana, Resolutiones morales IX, tract. 9, resol. 23.

*2054¹ Caramuel, Theologia moralis fundamentalis (Frankfurt, 1651), fundam. 53, no. 1100; but he soon retracted the proposition: cf. the Lyon ed. of the same work from A.D. 1657f., fundam. 53, no. 2491.

*2055¹ Brought up for discussion in Caramuel, Theologia moralis, fundam. 31, no. 502; later, though (Lyon ed., no. 764), the correct resolution was added.

*2057¹ In order to eliminate the excessive number of indulgences that had been conceded to religious orders, Paul V, in the constitution Romanus Pontifex of May 23, 1606 (BullTau 11:315–18), annulled all previous indulgences and replaced them with a reduced number of new ones.

*2058¹ Cf. Enrique de Villalobos, O.Min., Summa de la teologia moral y canonica (Salamanca, 1623), I, tract. 7, diffic. 37, no. 7.

- 2060 40. Est probabilis opinio, quae dicit, esse tantum veniale osculum habitum ob delectationem carnalem et sensibilem, quae ex osculo oritur, secluso periculo consensus ulterioris et pollutionis.
- 2061 41. Non est obligandus concubinarius ad eiciendam concubinam, si haec nimis utilis esset ad oblectamentum concubinari, vulgo “regalo”, dum, deficiente illa nimis aegre ageret vitam, et aliae epulae taedio magno concubinarium afficerent, et alia famula nimis difficile inveniretur.¹
- 2062 42. Licitum est mutuanti, aliquid ultra sortem exigere, si se obliget ad non repetendam sortem usque ad certum tempus.¹
- 2063 43. Annum legatum pro anima relictum non durat plus quam per decem annos.
- 2064 44. Quoad forum conscientiae, reo correcto eiusque contumacia cessante, cessant censurae.¹
- 2065 45. Libri prohibiti “donec expurgentur”, possunt retineri usque dum adhibita diligentia corrigantur.¹
- [Censura.:] ut minimum scandalosae.
40. It is a probable opinion that states that a kiss is only venial when performed for the sake of the carnal and sensible delight that arises from the kiss, if danger of further consent and pollution is excluded.
41. A keeper of a concubine is not bound to dismiss the concubine if she is very useful for the pleasure of the keeper (commonly called regalo), provided that if she were missing, he would carry on life with very great difficulty and other feasts would affect the keeper with great disgust, and another maidservant would be found with very great difficulty.¹
42. It is permitted one who borrows money to exact something beyond the principal if he obligates himself not to seek the principal until a certain time.¹
43. An annual legacy left for the soul (of one deceased) does not bind for more than ten years.
44. So far as the forum of conscience is concerned, when the guilty has been corrected and the contumacy ceases, the censures cease.¹
45. Books prohibited “until they are expurgated” can be retained up to the point when, with due diligence, they are corrected.¹
- [Censure.:] at the very least scandalous.

2070: Decree of the Holy Office, May 5, 1667

The archbishop of Mechelen (1637) and the bishop of Namur (1659), by means of pastoral instructions, had exhorted confessors not to be satisfied with the attrition of penitents that is spoken of in chapter 4 of session 14 of the Council of Trent (*1678). When in 1661 there was published in Ghent a catechism by an anonymous Jesuit upholding attritionism, the pastors of Ghent, with the approval of the University of Louvain, requested an intervention by Alexander VII and by Cardinal Pietro Sforza Pallavicini, S.J. (who was known to be a contritionist). The decree asked for moderation in this dispute.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 324b–325a.

On the Liberty of Teaching with Regard to Attrition

- 2070 Cum acceperit non sine gravi animi moerore Scholasticos quosdam acrius nec absque fidelium scandalo inter se contendere, an illa attritio, quae concipitur ex metu gehennae, excludens voluntatem peccandi, cum spe veniae, ad impetrandam gratiam in sacramento paenitentiae requirat insuper aliquem actum dilectionis Dei, asserentibus quibusdam, negantibus aliis, et invicem adversam sententiam censurantibus,
- Sanctitas Sua ... praecipit ... ut, si deinceps de materia attritionis praefatae scribent vel libros aut scripturas edent vel docebunt vel praedicabunt vel alio quovis
- Since it has come to be known, and not without great sadness of soul, that certain scholastics dispute in a violent manner among themselves, and not without scandal to the faithful, whether that attrition which is conceived through the fear of hell, excludes the will to sin, and is accompanied by the hope of pardon requires in addition some act of the love of God in order to obtain the grace of the sacrament of penance; (and since) some affirm this and others deny it, and they censure each other's opposing opinion,
- His Holiness ... orders ... that if in the future they write about the matter of the aforementioned attrition or publish books or writings or teach or preach or, in any

*2061¹ Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes de rebus in administratione sacramentorum praesertim eucharistiae et paenitentiae passim occurrentibus (Madrid, 1624; placed on the Index December 3, 1642), disp. 10, no. 20; likewise the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 2.

*2062¹ Cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 160, no. 7; 158, prop. 1 (Parisian censure).

*2064¹ Cf. Diana, Resolutiones morales, tract. 10, resol. 25.

*2065¹ Pierre Marchant O.F.M.Rec., Tribunal sacramentale et invisibile animarum in hac vita mortali (Ghent, 1642, and later eds.), II, tract. 2, tit. 2, sec. 4, q. 3, dub. 5.

modo paenitentes aut scholares ceterosve erudient, non audeant alicuius theologiae censurae alteriusve iniuriae aut contumeliae nota taxare alterutram sententiam, sive negantem necessitatem aliqualis dilectionis Dei in praefata attritione ex metu gehennae concepta, quae hodie inter scholasticos communior videtur, sive asserentem dictae dilectionis necessitatem, donec ab hac Sancta Sede fuerit aliquod hac in re definitum.

manner, instruct penitents, students, or others, let them dare not reproach with any theological censure or any other insult or abuse either one of the two opinions: whether that which denies the necessity of any (act of the) love of God, (as) in the aforementioned attrition, conceived through the fear of hell—which seems to be the more common opinion among scholastics today—or that which affirms the necessity of this aforesaid love, until the Holy See has defined something on this subject.

CLEMENT IX: June 20, 1667–December 9, 1669

CLEMENT X: April 29, 1670–July 22, 1676

INNOCENT XI: September 21, 1676–August 12, 1689

2090–2095: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Council Cum ad aures, February 12, 1679

The first part of this decree repeats the response of the Congregation of the Council Etsi frequens to the bishop of Brescia of June 24, 1587. The latter had attempted to limit communion by the laity to two days per week. Some laity asserted, to the contrary, the divine right of being able to receive holy communion daily. Jean Pichon, S.J., upheld a position opposed to the rigorism of the Jansenists whereby the faithful living in the state of grace are obligated to receive holy communion frequently. His book L'Esprit de Jésus-Christ et de l'Église sur la fréquente communion (Paris, 1745) was opposed by the majority of French bishops. He retracted his teaching in January 1748.

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., no. 219 / DuPIA 3/II, 346b–347a.

On Frequent and Daily Communion

Etsi frequens quotidianusque sacrosanctae Eucharistiae usus a sanctissimis Patribus fuerit semper in Ecclesia probatus: numquam tamen aut saepius illam percipiendi aut ab ea abstinendi certos singulis mensibus aut hebdomadis dies statuerunt, quos nec Concilium Tridentinum praescripsit, sed, quasi humanam infirmitatem secum reputaret, nihil praeciens, quid cuperet tantum indicavit, cum inquit: “Optaret quidem sacrosancta Synodus, ut in singulis Missis fideles adstantes sacramentali Eucharistiae perceptione communicarent” [*1747]. Idque non immerito: multiplices enim sunt conscientiarum recessus, variae ob negotia spiritus alienationes; multae contra gratiae et Dei dona parvulis concessa; quae cum humanis oculis scrutari non possimus, nihil certe de cuiusque dignitate atque integritate et consequenter de frequentiore aut quotidiano vitalis panis esu potest constitui.

Et propterea quod ad negotiatores ipsos attinet, frequens ad sacram alimoniam percipiendam accessus confessorum secreta cordis explorantium iudicio est relinquendus, qui ex conscientiarum puritate et frequentiae fructu et ad pietatem processu laicis negotiatoribus et coniugatis, quod prospicient eorum saluti profuturam, id illis praescribere debebunt.

Although the daily and frequent use of the most Holy Eucharist has always been approved by the holy Fathers of the Church, yet never have they appointed certain days either for receiving it more often or certain days of the weeks and months for abstaining from it, which the Council of Trent did not prescribe; but, as if it considered the frailty of human nature, although making no command, it merely indicated what it would prefer when it said: “The holy council would certainly like the faithful present at every Mass to communicate by the sacramental reception of the Eucharist” [*1747]. And this not without cause, for there are very many secret recesses of conscience, various diversions because of the occupations of the spirit, likewise many graces and gifts of God granted to children, and since we cannot scrutinize these with human eyes, nothing can be established concerning the worthiness or integrity of anyone and, consequently, nothing concerning the more frequent or daily partaking of the bread of life.

And thus, as far as merchants themselves are concerned, frequent approach to the receiving of the holy sustenance is to be left to the judgment of the confessors who explore the secrets of the heart, who from the purity of consciences and from the fruit of frequency and from the progress in piety in the case of the laity who are merchants and those who are married will be obliged to provide for them whatever they see will be of benefit to their salvation.

2090

2091

- 2092 In coniugatis autem hoc amplius animadvertant, cum beatus Apostolus nolit eos “invicem fraudari, nisi forte ex consensu ad tempus, ut vacent orationi” [cf. 1 Cor 7:5], eos serio admoneant, tanto magis ob sacratissimae Eucharistiae reverentiam continentiae vacandum purioreque mente ad caelestium epularum communionem esse conveniendum.
- In the case of married persons, however, let them seriously consider this, since the blessed apostle does not wish them to “deprive one another, except perhaps by agreement for a season, that they may devote themselves to prayer” [cf. 1 Cor 7:5], let them advise these seriously that they should give themselves more to continence, because of reverence for the most Holy Eucharist, and that they should come together for communion in the heavenly banquet with a purer mind.
- 2093 In hoc igitur pastorum diligentia potissimum invigilabit, non ut a frequenti aut quotidiana sacrae communionis sumptione unica praecepti formula aliqui deterreantur, aut sumendi dies generaliter constituentur, sed magis quid singulis permittendum, per se aut parochos seu confessarios sibi decernendum putet; illudque omnino prohibeat, ut nemo a sacro convivio, seu frequenter seu quotidie accesserit, repellatur....
- In this, then, will the diligence of pastors be especially alert, not that some may not be deterred from frequent or daily partaking of holy communion by a single formula of precept, or that days for partaking be established generally, but rather let it be decided what should be permitted to each or should be decided for themselves by themselves or (by the) priests or confessors; and let this be prohibited entirely: that no one be repelled from the sacred banquet, whether he approach it frequently or daily....
- 2094 Proderit etiam praeter parochorum et confessorum diligentiam opera quoque concionatorum uti et cum eis constitutum habere, ut cum fideles ad sanctissimi Sacramenti frequentiam (quod facere debent) accesserint, statim de magna ad illud sumendum praeparatione orationem habeant, generatimque ostendant, eos, qui ad frequentiore aut quotidianam salutiferi cibi sumptionem devoto studio excitantur, debere, sive laici negotiatores sint, sive coniugati, sive quicumque alii, suam agnoscere infirmitatem, ut dignitate Sacramenti ac divini iudicii formidine discant caelestem mensam, in qua Christus est, revereri; et si quando se minus paratos senserint, ab ea abstinere seque ad maiorem praeparationem accingere....
- It will be of benefit, too, besides the diligence of priests and confessors, to make use also of the services of preachers and to have an agreement with them that, when the faithful have become used to frequenting the most holy Sacrament (which they should do), they preach a sermon on the great preparation for undertaking that and show in general that those who by devout zeal are stirred to a more frequent or daily partaking of the salutary Food, whether lay merchants or married people or any others, ought to understand their own weakness, so that because of the dignity of the Sacrament and the fear of the divine judgment they may learn to revere the celestial table on which is Christ; and if at any time they should feel themselves not prepared, to abstain from it and to gird themselves for a greater preparation....
- 2095 Porro episcopi et parochi seu confessarii redarguant asserentes, communionem quotidianam esse de iure divino....
- Furthermore, let bishops and priests or confessors refute those who hold that daily communion is of divine right....

2101–2167: Sixty-Five Propositions Condemned in the Decree of the Holy Office, March 2, 1679

In 1677, the faction of the theological faculty at Louvain favorable to Baianism had sent representatives to Rome in order to submit various dogmatic and moral propositions for condemnation. To a large extent, these propositions were taken from the censure of the University of Louvain of March 30 and April 26, 1653 (DuPIA 3/II, 267f.), as well as May 4, 1657 (DuPIA 3/II, 285–88). They had some success with Innocent XI, who tended toward rigorism, with regard to moral teaching but not with regard to the aids of grace. Innocent XI limited himself to condemning the deviations of moral doctrine. Out of 116 propositions, he chose sixty-five. For the interpretation, see *2021°.

Ed.: BullTau 19:145b–149a / DuPIA 3/II, 348a–352a / Viva 2:3–6.

Errors of a Doctrine of Moral Laxity

- 2101 1. Non est illicitum, in sacramentis conferendis sequi opinionem probabilem de valore sacramenti, relicta tutiore, nisi id vetet lex, conventio aut periculum gravis damni incurrendi. Hinc sententia probabilis
1. In conferring the sacraments, it is not illicit to follow the probable opinion with respect to the validity of the sacrament, disregarding what is more certain, unless it is forbidden by law, convention, or the danger of incurring tantum utendum non est in collatione baptismi, ordinis sacerdotalis aut episcopalis.¹

2. Probabiliter existimo, iudicem posse iudicare iuxta opinionem etiam minus probabilem.¹

3. Generatim, dum probabilitate sive intrinseca sive extrinseca quantumvis tenui, modo a probabilitatis finibus non exeatur, confisi aliquid agimus, semper prudenter agimus.¹

4. Ab infidelitate excusabitur infidelis non credens, ductus opinione minus probabili.¹

5. An peccet mortaliter, qui actum dilectionis Dei semel tantum in vita eliceret, condemnare non audemus.¹

6. Probabile est, ne singulis quidem rigorose quin-quenniis per se obligare praeceptum caritatis erga Deum.¹

7. Tunc solum obligat, quando tenemur iustificari, et non habemus aliam viam, qua iustificari possumus.¹

8. Comedere et bibere usque ad satietatem ob solam voluptatem non est peccatum, modo non obsit valetudini; quia licite potest appetitus naturalis suis actibus frui.¹

9. Opus coniugii ob solam voluptatem exercitum omni penitus caret culpa ac defectu veniali.¹

10. Non tenemur proximum diligere actu interno et formali.¹

grave harm. For this reason, it is only in the conferral of baptism (and) priestly or episcopal ordination that the probable opinion is not to be held.¹

2. I think that probably a judge can pass judgment according to opinion, even the less probable.¹ 2102

3. In general, when we do something confidently according to probability, whether intrinsic or extrinsic, however slight, provided there is no departure from the bounds of probability, we always act prudently.¹ 2103

4. An infidel who does not believe will be excused of infidelity, since he is guided by a less probable opinion.¹ 2104

5. We dare not convict of mortal sin one who has produced an act of the love of God only once in his life.¹ 2105

6. It is probable that the precept of love toward God is not in itself absolutely obligatory even every five years.¹ 2106

7. Then only is it obligatory when we are bound to be justified, and we have no other way by which we can be justified.¹ 2107

8. Eating and drinking up to satiety for pleasure alone is not sinful, provided this does not stand in the way of health, since any natural appetite can licitly enjoy its own actions.¹ 2108

9. The act of marriage exercised for pleasure only is entirely free of all fault and venial defect.¹ 2109

10. We are not bound to love our neighbor by an internal and formal act.¹ 2110

*2101¹ Antwerp thesis of June 26, 1673 (Ignace Maillot, S.J.); Hernando de Castropalao, S.J., Opus morale de virtutibus et vitiis contrariis (Lyon, 1631, and other eds.), I, tract. 1, disp. 2, punctum 5, no. 5.

*2102¹ Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes de rebus in administratione sacramentorum praesertim eucharistiae et poenitentiae passim occurrentibus (Madrid, 1624; placed on the Index December 3, 1642), disp. 44, no. 50; Vincenzo Figliucci, S.J., Morales quaestiones de christianis officiis et casibus conscientiae (Lyon, 1622), II, tract. 21, c. 4, no. 130; Thomas Hurtado, C.R.M., Tractatus varii resolutionum moralium (Lyon, 1659; the work was forbidden “until corrected” on June 10, 1659), I, tract. 3, c. 6, no. 314; Antonio de Escobar y Mendoza, S.J., Theologia moralis (Lyon, 1646, and other eds.), I, l. 2, sec. 2, c. 6, problema 14.

*2103¹ Tommaso Tamburini, S.J., Explicatio decalogi (Lyon, 1659, and later eds.), I, 3, § 3, no. 3; the “quantumvis tenui” (however so weak) has the same meaning as “minimo gradui probabilitatis” (the least degree of probability) in Zaccaria Pasqualigo, O.Theat., Decisiones morales (Verona, 1641; placed on the Index in 1683 “until corrected”), decisio 20.

*2104¹ Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 19, no. 7.

*2105¹ Antoine Sirmont, S.J., La Défense de la vertu (Paris, 1641), traité 2, sec. 1, chaps. 2–3; Antwerp thesis of April 16, 1674 (A. Marchant, O.Min.); cf. Gabriel Vásquez, S.J., Commentarius in II partem D. Thomae IV, De poenitentia, q. 86, a. 2, dub. 6, no. 11: the obligation of the precept applies only for the end of life.

*2106¹ Figliucci, Morales quaestiones II, c. 9, nos. 286f.; cf. Escobar y Mendoza, Liber theologiae moralis 24 doctoribus S.I. reseratus (Lyon, 1644, and other eds.), tract. 5, examen 4, c. 1.

*2107¹ Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi II, 3, § 2, no. 2; cf. ibid. I, § 1: Juan Azor, S.J., Institutiones morales (Lyon, 1613, and other eds.), I, l. 9, c. 4.

*2108¹ Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 2, no. 14.

*2109¹ Ibid., disp. 23, no. 25; cf. disp. 6, no. 4.

*2110¹ Francisco Suárez, S.J., De charitate, disp. 5, sec. 4, no. 4 (Opera omnia, ed. C. Berton [Paris, 1866ff.], 12:642); Escobar, Theologia moralis 6I (1663 ed.), l. 49, sec. 2, c. 15, dub. 15; Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 1, no. 21. In the Antwerp thesis as cited in *2105. The authors base themselves on Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae II–II, q. 25, a. 8 (Editio Leonina 8:204), and Duns Scotus, Commentary on the Sentences III, dist. 30, § Quantum ad hoc (Wadding ed., 7/II [Lyon, 1639], 672).

- 2111 11. Praecepto proximum diligendi satisfacere possumus per solos actus externos.¹ 11. We can satisfy the precept of loving neighbor by external acts only.¹
- 2112 12. Vix in saecularibus invenies, etiam in regibus, superfluum statui. Et ita vix aliquis tenetur ad eleemosynam, quando tenetur tantum ex superfluo statui.¹ 12. Among those living in the world, even among kings, it is difficult to find something that is superfluous to their state. And thus hardly anyone is obliged to give alms, since he is obliged (to do so) only from what is superfluous to his state.¹
- 2113 13. Si cum debita moderatione facias, potes absque peccato mortali de vita alicuius tristari, et de illius morte naturali gaudere, illam inefficaci affectu petere et desiderare, non quidem ex displicentia personae, sed ob aliquod temporale emolumentum.¹ 13. If you act with due moderation, you can without mortal sin be sad about the moral life of someone and rejoice about his natural death, seek it with ineffectual desire, and long for it, not indeed from dissatisfaction with the person, but because of some temporal advantage.¹
- 2114 14. Licitum est, absoluto desiderio cupere mortem patris, non quidem ut malum patris, sed ut bonum cupientis; quia nimirum ei obventura est pinguis hereditas.¹ 14. It is licit with an absolute desire to wish for the death of a father, not indeed as an evil to the father, but as a good to him who desires it, for a rich inheritance will surely come his way.¹
- 2115 15. Licitum est filio gaudere de parricidio parentis a se in ebrietate perpetrato, propter ingentes divitias inde ex hereditate consecutas. 15. It is licit for a son to rejoice over the parricide of his parent perpetrated by himself in drunkenness because of the great riches that came from it by inheritance.
- 2116 16. Fides non censetur cadere sub praeceptum speciale et secundum se.¹ 16. Faith is not considered to fall by itself under a special precept.¹
- 2117 17. Satis est actum fidei semel in vita elicere.¹ 17. It is enough to utter an act of faith once during life.¹
- 2118 18. Si a potestate publica quis interrogetur, fidem ingenuae confiteri ut Deo et fidei gloriosum consulo: tacere ut peccaminosum per se non damno.¹ 18. If public authority questions anyone, I consider it glorious for God and for the faith to confess the faith openly: (but) I do not condemn silence in itself as sinful.¹
- 2119 19. Voluntas non potest efficere, ut assensus fidei in se ipso sit magis firmus, quam mereatur pondus rationum ad assensum impellentium.¹ 19. The will cannot effect that assent to faith in itself be stronger than the weight of reasons impelling toward assent.¹
- 2120 20. Hinc potest quis prudenter repudiare assensum, quem habebat, supernaturalem.¹ 20. Hence, anyone can prudently repudiate the supernatural assent that he had.¹

*2111¹ This can be deduced from the passages referred to in *2110.

*2112¹ Gabriel Vásquez, S.J., Opusculum de eleemosyna (among the Opuscula moralia [Alcalá de Henares, 1617, and other eds.], c. 4, no. 14 (= first part of the proposition), and c. 1, dub. 3, no. 27 (= second part of the proposition); Antonio Diana, O.Theat., Resolutiones morales (Lyon, 1629ff.; Venice, 1652f.; Rome, 1656), IV, tract. 4, resol. 215; Emmanuel Sa. S.J., Aphorismi confessoriorum ex variis doctorum sententis collecti (Venice, 1592, and later eds.; prohibited “until corrected” on August 7, 1603) under the term “Eleemosyna”, no. 2; Louvain thesis of June 30, 1670 (Aegidius Estrix, S.J.).

*2113¹ Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi V, 1, § 3, no. 32; Hernando de Castropalao, Opus morale de virtutibus I, tract. 6, disp. 4, punctum 1, nos. 10f.; Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 2, no. 9; Mateo de Moya, Selectae quaestiones ex praecipuis theologiae tractatibus (Madrid, 1670; 3rd ed., 1678), tract. 6, disp. 6, q. 5, no. 8 (verbatim); many others of similar nature.

*2114¹ Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi V, 1, § 3, no. 31, probabiliter (more probably).

*2116¹ Antwerp thesis of April 16, 1674 (A. Marchant, O.Min.); cf. Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi II, 1, § 1, no. 9; Louvain thesis of June 30, 1670 (Aegidius Estrix); Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1657 ed.), 157.

*2117¹ Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi II, 1, no. 8; Louvain thesis of June 30, 1670 (Estrix); cf. Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 41, no. 32, but even more clearly in the Index under the term “Scrupulosus”.

*2118¹ Antwerp thesis of April 16, 1674 (A. Marchant, O.Min.).

*2119¹ Aegidius Estrix, S.J., Diatriba theologica de sapientia Dei beneficia mundi architecta et gubernatrice optima ... sive Manuductio ad fidem divinam ... (Antwerp, 1672); placed on the Index April 5, 1674, nos. 130, 132 = ass. 28 and coroll. (pp. 68, 70); Antwerp thesis of April 16, 1674 (A. Marchant, O.Min.).

*2120¹ Estrix, Diatriba theologica, no. 159 = ass. 33, coroll. (p. 83); Antwerp thesis of April 16, 1674 (A. Marchant, O.Min.).

21. Assensus fidei supernaturalis et utilis ad salutem stat cum notitia solum probabili revelationis, immo cum formidine, qua quis formidet, ne non sit locutus Deus.¹ 2121
21. The assent to the faith, supernatural and useful to salvation, is based on only a probable knowledge of revelation and even on the fear with which one fears that God has not spoken.¹
22. Nonnisi fides unius Dei necessaria videtur necessitate medii, non autem explicita Remuneratoris.¹ 2122
22. Only faith in one God seems necessary by a necessity of means, not, however, the explicit (faith) in a Rewarder.¹
23. Fides late dicta ex testimonio creaturarum similive motivo ad iustificationem sufficit.¹ 2123
23. Faith in the broad sense, which is based on the testimony of creatures or on a similar reason, is sufficient for justification.¹
24. Vocare Deum in testem mendacii levis non est tanta irreverentia, propter quam velit aut possit damnare hominem.¹ 2124
24. To call upon God as a witness to a slight lie is not so great an irreverence that, because of it, God wishes or can condemn a man.¹
25. Cum causa licitum est iurare sine animo iurandi, sive res sit levis sive gravis.¹ 2125
25. With cause it is licit to swear without the intention of swearing, whether the matter be light or serious.¹
26. Si quis vel solus vel coram aliis, sive interrogatus sive propria sponte, sive recreationis causa, sive quocumque alio fine iuret, se non fecisse aliquid, quod revera fecit, intelligendo intra se aliquid aliud, quod non fecit, vel aliam viam ab ea, in qua fecit, vel quodvis aliud additum verum, revera non mentitur nec est periurus.¹ 2126
26. If anyone swears, either alone or in the presence of others, whether questioned or of his own will, whether for sake of recreation or for some other purpose, that he did not do something that in fact he did, understanding within himself something else that he did not do or another way than that by which he did it or some other added truth, he in fact does not lie and is no perjurer.¹
27. Causa iusta utendi his amphibologiis est, quoties id necessarium aut utile est ad salutem corporis, honorem, res familiares tuendas, vel ad quemlibet alium virtutis actum, ita ut veritatis occultatio censeatur tunc expediens et studiosa.¹ 2127
27. A just reason for using these ambiguous words exists, as often as it is necessary or useful to guard the well-being of the body, honor, property, or for any other act of virtue, so that the concealing of the truth is then regarded as expedient and zealous.¹
28. Qui mediante commendatione vel munere ad magistratum vel officium publicum promotus est, poterit cum restrictione mentali praestare iuramentum, quod de mandato regis a similibus solet exigi, non habito respectu ad intentionem exigentis; quia non tenetur fateri crimen occultum.¹ 2128
28. He who has been promoted to a magistracy or a public office by means of a recommendation or a gift can utter with mental reservation the oath that is customarily exacted of similar persons by order of the king, without regard for the intent of the one exacting it, because he is not bound to confess a concealed crime.¹
29. Urgens metus gravis est causa iusta sacramentorum administrationem simulandi.¹ 2129
29. A grave, pressing fear is a just cause for simulating the administration of sacraments.¹
30. Fas est viro honorato occidere invasorem, qui nititur calumniam inferre, si aliter haec ignominia vitari nequit: idem quoque dicendum, si quis impingat alapam 2130
30. It is right for an honorable man to kill an attacker who tries to inflict calumny (upon him) if this ignominy cannot be avoided otherwise; the same also must be said

*2121¹ Cf. ibid., no. 163 = ass. 34 (p. 85).

*2122¹ This proposition seems to have been added by Estrix, Diatriba theologica, nos. 163–67 = ass. 34 (pp. 85–88).

*2123¹ Louvain thesis of June 30, 1670 (Estrix).

*2124¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 14.

*2125¹ Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi III, 3, § 2, no. 1; cf. c. 1, §§ 2–3.

*2126¹ Thomas Sánchez, S.J., Opus morale in praecepta decalogi (Venice, 1614; 1625), III, 6, no. 15; instead of “aliam viam” (another way), the author writes “aliam diem” (another day). This proposition was condemned at the synod of Namur of 1659, art. 10.

*2127¹ Ibid., no. 19.

*2128¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 19; some also interpret in this sense the passage of Leonardus Lessius, S.J., De iustitia et iure (Louvain, 1605), II, 42, dub. 9, no. 48.

*2129¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 18; Escobar, Theologia moralis I, l. 1, sec. 2, c. 7, problema 26; cf. Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 35, no. 6.

- vel fuste percutiat et post impactam alapam vel ictum fustis fugiat.¹
- 2131 31. Regulariter occidere possum furem pro conservatione unius aurei.¹
- 2132 32. Non solum licitum est defendere defensione occisiva, quae actu possidemus, sed etiam, ad quae ius inchoatum habemus et quae nos possessuros speramus.¹
- 2133 33. Licitum est tam heredi quam legatario, contra iniuste impediendum, ne vel hereditas adeatur vel legata solvantur, se taliter defendere sicut et ius habenti in cathedram vel praebendam, contra earum possessionem iniuste impediendum.¹
- 2134 34. Licet procurare abortum ante animationem foetus, ne puella deprehensa gravida occidatur aut infametur.¹
- 2135 35. Videtur probabile, omnem foetum (quamdiu in utero est) carere anima rationali et tunc primum incipere eandem habere, cum paritur: ac consequenter dicendum erit, in nullo abortu homicidium committi.¹
- 2136 36. Permissum est furari, non solum in extrema necessitate, sed etiam in gravi.¹
- 2137 37. Famuli et famulae domesticae possunt occulte heris suis surripere ad compensandam operam suam, quam maiorem iudicant salario, quod recipiunt.¹
- if anyone slaps (him) with his hand or strikes (him) with a club and runs away after the slap of the hand or the blow of the club.¹
31. I can, as a rule, kill a thief to save a single gold piece.¹
32. It is not only permitted to defend, with a fatal defense, those things we possess actually, but also those things to which we have an incipient right and which we hope to possess.¹
33. It is permitted an heir as well as one who receives a legacy to defend himself against one who unjustly prevents either an inheritance being assumed or legacies being paid, just as it is permitted him who has a right to an (episcopal) chair or a benefice (to defend himself) against one who unjustly impedes (their) possession.¹
34. It is permitted to bring about an abortion before the animation of the fetus, lest the girl found pregnant be killed or defamed.¹
35. It seems probable that every fetus (while it is in the womb) lacks a rational soul and (only) first begins to have (a rational soul) at the time it is born: as a consequence, it must be said that homicide is never committed in any abortion.¹
36. It is permitted to steal not only in extreme but also in grave necessity.¹
37. Male and female domestic servants can secretly steal from their masters to gain compensation for their work which they judge of greater worth than the salary they receive.¹

*2130¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 4; verbatim in Martin Becanus, S.J., Theologia scholastica II, 2, Tract. [III] de iure et iustitia, in q. 64 D. Thomae, q. 8, concl. 2 (Opera omnia in 2 vols. [Mainz, 1649], 471); cf. Gabriel Vásquez, S.J., Opusculum de restitutione (in the Opuscula moralia), c. 2, § 1, dub. 9, no. 34; Figliucci, Morales quaestiones II, tract. 29, c. 3, no. 50; Diana, Resolutiones morales II, tract. 15, resol. 15, and V, tract. 4, resol. 4; Escobar, Theologia moralis IV, l. 32, sec. 2, c. 15, problema 2; likewise many others, among whom are the “Doctor Navarrus” (= Martín de Azpilcueta), Báñez, Azor, and Villalobos.

*2131¹ Cf. Luis de Molina, S.J., De iustitia et iure (Antwerp, 1609), IV, tract. 3, disp. 16, no. 7; cf. ibid., no. 1.

*2132¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 13/I; Francesco Amico, S.J., Cursus theologicus iuxta scholasticam huius temporis S.I. methodum, 2nd ed. (Douai, 1640; vol. V placed on the Index “until corrected”), V, disp. 36, sec. 8, no. 131 (expunged in the 1650 ed.).

*2133¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 13/II; Amico, Cursus theologicus V, disp. 36, sec. 8, no. 131.

*2134¹ Cf. Francisco Torreblanca y Villalpando, Epitome delictorum sive de magia (Seville, 1618), II, 43, no. 10; Torreblanca y Villalpando, Juris spiritualis practicabilium libri XV (Cordoba, 1635), l. XII, c. 16, no. 44; Juan Trullench, Opus morale (Valencia, 1640), II, l. 5, c. 1, dub. 4, no. 1 at the end; he grants that this thesis is “not improbable” (non improbabilem). Cf. also the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 9, and the Namur censure of 1659, art. 7.

*2135¹ Juan Caramuel had judged this conclusion as probable; in this regard, he appealed to the authority of the chief physician of Prague, Johannes Marchus, who (in the book Idearum operatricium idea, published in 1635) is presented as the leading proponent of the view that an animated fetus in the womb does not have a rational soul different from that of the mother but only receives a rational soul of its own at the time of birth. Caramuel, however, had disavowed this position even before its condemnation; cf. his Theologia moralis fundamentalis II, fundam. 55, q. 6 (in the Lyon ed. of 1676: no. 2623; in the Frankfurt ed. of 1651: no. 1163).

*2136¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 8. It is found in Leonardus Lessius, S.J., De iustitia et iure II, 12, dub. 12; Diana, Resolutiones morales V, tract. 8, resol. 23, and XI, tract. 1, resol. 13; Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 282, no. 4.

*2137¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 9, cf. Lessius, De iustitia et iure II, 12, dub. 10; Étienne Bauny, S.J., La Somme des péchés qui se commettent en tous états ... (Paris, 1630; 5th ed., 1639; placed on the Index in 1640), 213.

38. Non tenetur quis sub poena peccati mortalis restituere, quod ablatum est per pauca furta, quantumcumque sit magna summa totalis.¹ 2138
 38. No one is bound under the pain of mortal sin to restore what has been taken away by small thefts, however great the sum total may be.¹
39. Qui alium movet aut inducit ad inferendum grave damnum tertio, non tenetur ad restitutionem istius damni illati.¹ 2139
 39. Whoever moves or induces another to bring a serious loss upon a third party is not bound to a restitution of that loss incurred.¹
40. Contractus mohatra¹ licitus est, etiam respectu eiusdem personae et cum contractu retrovenditionis praevis inito cum intentione lucri.² 2140
 40. The Mohatra contract¹ is licit even with respect to the same person and with a prior contract entered into from the beginning to sell back and with the intention of gain.²
41. Cum numerata pecunia pretiosior sit numeranda, et nullus sit, qui non maioris faciat pecuniam praesentem quam futuram, potest creditor aliquid ultra sortem a mutuataro exigere et eo titulo ab usura excusari.¹ 2141
 41. Since ready cash is more valuable than that to be paid, and since there is no one who does not consider ready cash of greater worth than future cash, a creditor can demand something beyond the principal from the borrower and for this reason be excused from usury.¹
42. Usura non est, dum ultra sortem aliquid exigitur tamquam ex benevolentia et gratitudine debitum, sed solum si exigitur tamquam ex iustitia debitum.¹ 2142
 42. There is no usury when something is exacted beyond the principal as due because of a kindness and by way of gratitude, but only if it is exacted as due according to justice.¹
43. Quidni nonnisi veniale sit, detrahentis auctoritatem magnam sibi noxiam falso crimine elidere?¹ 2143
 43. What else but a venial (sin) should it be to shatter with a false accusation the great reputation of a calumniator who is harmful to oneself?¹
44. Probabile est, non peccare mortaliter, qui imponit falsum crimen alicui, ut suam iustitiam et honorem defendat. Et si hoc non sit probabile, vix ulla erit opinio probabilis in theologia.¹ 2144
 44. It is probable that he does not sin mortally who imposes a false charge on someone, that he may defend his own justice and honor. And if this is not probable, there is scarcely any probable opinion in theology.¹
45. Dare temporale pro spirituali non est simonia, quando temporale non datur tamquam pretium, sed dumtaxat tamquam motivum conferendi vel efficiendi spirituale, vel etiam quando temporale sit solum gratuita compensatio pro spirituali, aut e contra.¹ 2145
 45. To give the temporal for the spiritual is not simony when the temporal is not given for a price but only as a motive for conferring and effecting the spiritual or even because the temporal is only a gratuitous compensation for the spiritual, or vice versa.¹

*2138¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 16. Cf. Lessius, De iustitia et iure II, 12, dub. 9; Étienne Bauny, Somme des péchés, 220. Bauny also is listed in the Louvain censure as having “parva furta” (small thefts) instead of “pauca furta” (a few thefts).

*2139¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 12. Cf. Lessius, De iustitia et iure II, 13, dub. 2 and 10; Bauny, Somme des péchés, 6th ed. (1643), 307f.

*2140¹ This is a term used in Spain for a particular type of contract of recovery, which can be illustrated by the following example: Lazarus has immediate need of money, e.g., of 100 pounds. But since he cannot find anyone who can lend him the money without interest, he purchases from Grassus, by means of credit to be repaid at a later date, some merchandise for a maximum price of 110, and Lazarus soon returns this merchandise (of which he has no need) to Grassus for a minimal price of 100 pounds, on the condition that Grassus will immediately give him this amount. In the opinion of the majority of moralists, such a contract was nothing but a covert form of usury.

² From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 14. Cf. Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 163, prop. 2; cf. Lessius, De iustitia et iure II, 21, dub. 16.

*2141¹ Cf. Caramuel, Theologia intentionalis II, disp. 14, nos. 799f. (Lyon, 1644), p. 183.

*2142¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 13. Cf. Escobar y Mendoza, Liber theologiae moralis 24 S.I. doctoribus reseratus, tract. 3, examen 5, c. 1, no. 44 (in the 1660 Venice ed.: p. 324).

*2143¹ Louvain thesis of 1645; cf. also the following proposition.

*2144¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 3; also similar is the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 6. Cf. Caramuel, Theologia moralis, ed. before 1664, fundam. 55, § 6, no. 2580 (later Caramuel specified: only according to natural law): in the same sense is Moya, Adversus quorundam expostulationes (1664 ed.), 87, no. 3, who refers to Domingo Báñez, O.P.: Decisiones de iure et iustitia [commentary on] q. 70, a. 3, dub. 2.

*2145¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 15/1. Gregory of Valencia, S.J., Commentarii theologici (Ingolstadt, 1595), III, disp. 6, q. 16, punctum 3; Escobar, Theologia moralis VII, 56, sec. 2, c. 8, dub. 3–5.

- 2146 46. Et id quoque locum habet, etiamsi temporale sit principale motivum dandi spirituale; immo etiamsi sit finis ipsius rei spiritualis, sic ut illud pluris aestimetur quam res spiritualis.¹
46. And this still applies even if the temporal good is the principal motive for giving the spiritual good: indeed, even if ⟨the temporal good⟩ is the end of the spiritual good itself, so that it is considered of greater value than the spiritual good.¹
- 2147 47. Cum dicit Concilium Tridentinum,¹ eos alienis peccatis communicantes mortaliter peccare, qui, nisi quos digniores et Ecclesiae magis utiles ipsi iudicaverint, ad ecclesias promovent: Concilium vel primo videtur per hoc “digniores” non aliud significare velle, nisi dignitatem eligendorum, sumpto comparativo pro positivo; vel secundo locutione minus propria ponit “digniores”, ut excludat indignos, non vero dignos; vel tandem loquitur tertio, quando fit concursus.
47. When the Council of Trent says¹ that those have a part in the sins of others and sin mortally who promote any to ecclesiastical offices without considering them more worthy and useful to the Church (than others): it seems that, first, the council either wished to note by the term “more worthy” nothing else than the worthiness of those being selected, using the comparative rather than the positive; or secondly, it used a less appropriate expression, “more worthy”, in order to exclude the unworthy but not those who are worthy; or finally, it is speaking, thirdly, of when a competing claim exists.
- 2148 48. Tam clarum videtur, fornicationem secundum se nullam involvere malitiam, et solum esse malam, quia interdicta, ut contrarium omnino rationi dissonum videatur.¹
48. Thus it seems clear that fornication in itself involves no malice and that it is evil only because it is forbidden, so that the contrary seems entirely in disagreement with reason.¹
- 2149 49. Mollities iure naturae prohibita non est. Unde, si Deus eam non interdixisset, saepe esset bona et aliquando obligatoria sub mortali.¹
49. Pederasty is not prohibited by natural law. Therefore, if God had not forbidden it, it would often be good and sometimes obligatory under pain of mortal sin.¹
- 2150 50. Copula cum coniugata, consentiente marito, non est adulterium; adeoque sufficit in confessione dicere, se esse fornicatum.¹
50. Intercourse with a married woman, with the consent of her husband, is not adultery, and so it is enough to say in confession that one has committed fornication.¹
- 2151 51. Famulus, qui submissis humeris scienter adiuvat herum suum ascendere per fenestras ad stuprandam virginem, et multoties eidem subservit deferendo scalam, aperiendo ianuam, aut quid simile cooperando, non peccat mortaliter, si id faciat metu notabilis detrimenti, puta ne a domino male tractetur, ne torvis oculis aspiciatur, ne domo expellatur.¹
51. A male servant who knowingly by offering his shoulders assists his master to ascend through windows to ravage a virgin, and many times serves the same by carrying a ladder, by opening a door, or by cooperating in something similar, does not commit a mortal sin if he does this through fear of considerable damage, for example, lest he be treated wickedly by his master, lest he be looked upon with savage eyes, or lest he be expelled from the house.¹
- 2152 52. Praeceptum servandi festa non obligat sub mortali, seposito scandalo, si absit contemptus.¹
52. The precept of keeping feast days is not obligatory under pain of mortal sin, aside from scandal, if contempt be absent.¹

*2146¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 15/II. Cf. Escobar, Theologia moralis VII, 56, sec. 2, c. 8, dub. 3–5.

*2147¹ Council of Trent, sess. 24, Decree on the General Reform, can. 1 (SGTr 9:978₁₇).

*2148¹ Caramuel, Theologia intentionalis IV, no. 1904 (verbatim): Theologia moralis ad prima eaque clarissima principia reducta (Louvain, 1645), IV, no. 1598; props. 48 and 49 derive from the principle that God could also have established commandments that contradict the second tablet of the Decalogue and, indeed, are even opposite to it: cf. Theologia intentionalis IV, nos. 1960, 1963, 1965; Theologia moralis II, no. 1184.

*2149¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 3/II. Caramuel, Theologia moralis IV, no. 1603; Theologia intentionalis IV, no. 1965 (verbatim).

*2150¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 3/I; likewise Caramuel.

*2151¹ Cf. Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi V, 1, § 4, no. 19.

*2152¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 8.

53. Satisfacit praecepto Ecclesiae de audiendo Sacro, qui duas eius partes, immo quattuor simul a diversis celebrantibus audit.¹ 2153
 53. He satisfies the precept of the Church of hearing the Holy Sacrifice who hears two of its parts, even four simultaneously by different celebrants.¹
54. Qui non potest recitare Matutinum et Laudes, potest autem reliquas Horas, ad nihil tenetur; quia maior pars trahit ad se minorem.¹ 2154
 54. He who cannot recite Matins and Lauds but can the remaining hours is held to nothing, since the great part brings the lesser to it.¹
55. Praecepto communionis annuae satisfit per sacrilegam Domini manducationem [cf. *2034].¹ 2155
 55. He satisfies the precept of annual communion by the sacrilegious eating of the Lord [cf. *2304].¹
56. Frequens confessio et communio, etiam in his, qui gentiliter vivunt, est nota praedestinationis.¹ 2156
 56. Frequent confession and communion, even in those who live like pagans, is a mark of predestination.¹
57. Probabile est, sufficere attritionem naturalem, modo honestam.¹ 2157
 57. It is probable that natural attrition, if it is honest, suffices.¹
58. Non tenemur confessario interroganti fateri peccati alicuius consuetudinem.¹ 2158
 58. We are not bound to confess to a confessor who asks us about the habit of some sin.¹
59. Licet sacramentaliter absolvere dimidiate tantum confessos, ratione magni concursus paenitentium, qualis verbi gratia potest contingere in die magnae alicuius festivitatis aut indulgentiae.¹ 2159
 59. It is permitted to absolve sacramentally those who confess only half, by reason of a great crowd of penitents, such as for example can happen on a day of great festivity or indulgence.¹
60. Paenitenti habenti consuetudinem peccandi contra legem Dei, naturae aut Ecclesiae, etsi emendationis spes nulla appareat, nec est neganda nec differenda absolutio, dummodo ore proferat, se dolere et proponere emendationem.¹ 2160
 60. The penitent who has the habit of sinning against the law of God, of nature, or of the Church, even if there appears no hope of amendment, is not to be denied absolution or to be put off, provided he professes orally that he is sorry and proposes amendment.¹
61. Potest aliquando absolvi, qui in proxima occasione peccandi versatur, quam potest et non vult omittere, quin immo directe et ex proposito quaerit aut ei se ingerit.¹ 2161
 61. He can sometimes be absolved who remains in a proximate occasion of sinning that he can and does not wish to omit but rather directly and professedly seeks or enters into.¹
62. Proxima occasio peccandi non est fugienda, quando causa aliqua utilis aut honesta non fugiendi occurrit.¹ 2162
 62. The proximate occasion for sinning is not to be shunned when some useful and honorable cause for not shunning it occurs.¹

*2153¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 17. Cf. especially Escobar, Liber theologiae moralis 24 S.I. doctoribus reseratus, tract. 1, examen 11, c. 4 (in the Venice ed. of 1660: p. 138): the same but more cautiously in Theologia moralis VII, l. 42, sec. 1, c. 2; cf. Juan Azor, S.J., Institutiones morales (Lyon, 1613), I, l. 7, c. 3, q. 3; Diana, Resolutiones morales II, tract. 17, resol. 18, and VIII, tract. 7, resol. 89.

*2154¹ Castropalao, Opus morale de virtutibus II, tract. 7, disp. 2, punctum 6, no. 9; Trullench, Opus morale I, l. 1, c. 7, dub. 27, no. 5; Diana, Resolutiones morales IV, tract. 4, resol. 225, and X, tract. 16, resol. 48 (47 in others).

*2155¹ Azor, Institutiones morales I, l. 7, c. 30, q. 12; Francisco Suárez, S.J., De eucharistia, disp. 70, sec. 3, no. 2 (Opera omnia, ed. C. Berton, vol. 21 [Paris, 1866ff.], 550f.); Cardinal de Lugo, S.J., De eucharistia, disp. 16, sec. 4, no. 83 (Opera omnia, ed. J.B. Fourmials, vol. 4 [Paris, 1892], 188); Louvain thesis of June 21, 1676 (S.J.), thesis 23.

*2156¹ Liège O.F.M. thesis of 1676; likewise the Namur O.F.M. thesis.

*2157¹ Parisian S.J. thesis (Collège Clermont-Ferrand), August 1643, likewise May 23 and June 6, 1644.

*2158¹ Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 9, no. 6.

*2159¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 4.

*2160¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 1. Cf. Juan Sánchez, Selectae et practicae disputationes, disp. 9, no. 6; cf. Étienne Bauny, S.J., Theologia moralis I, tract. 4; De poenitentia, q. 22.

*2161¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 2; Bauny, Theologia moralis I, tract. 4, q. 15; cf. ibid., q. 14; Bauny, La Somme des péchés, 6th ed. (Paris, 1643), chap. 46.

*2162¹ This and the following proposition were taught especially by Leandro de Murcia, O.F.M.Cap.; cf. his Disquisitiones morales in I^{am} I^{ae} S. Thomae (Madrid, 1653, 1660), II, disp. 1, resol. 16 (but he speaks of the probable danger of sinning).

- 2163 63. Licitum est quaerere directe occasionem proximam peccandi pro bono spirituali vel temporali nostro vel proximi.¹
- 2164 64. Absolutionis capax est homo, quantumvis labore ignorantia mysteriorum fidei, et etiamsi per negligentiam, etiam culpabilem, nesciat mysterium sanctissimae Trinitatis et Incarnationis Domini nostri Iesu Christi.¹
- 2165 65. Sufficit illa mysteria semel credidisse.¹
- 2166 [Censura:] Omnes propositiones damnatae et prohibita, sicut iacent, ut minimum tamquam scandalosae et in praxi perniciosae.
- 2167 [Conclusio Decreti:] Tandem, ut ab iniuriis contentionibus doctores seu scholastici aut alii quicumque in posterum se absterneant, et ut paci et caritati consulari, idem Sanctissimus in virtute sanctae oboedientiae eis praecipit, ut tam in libris imprimendis ac manuscriptis, quam in thesibus, disputationibus ac praedicationibus caveant ab omni censura et nota, necnon a quibuscumque conviciis contra eas propositiones, quae adhuc inter catholicos hinc inde controvertuntur, donec a Sancta Sede, re cognita, super iisdem propositionibus iudicium proferatur.¹
63. It is permitted to seek directly the proximate occasion for sinning for a spiritual or temporal good of our own or of a neighbor.¹
64. A person is fit for absolution however much he labors under an ignorance of the mysteries of the faith and even if through negligence, even culpable, he does not know the mystery of the most blessed Trinity and of the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.¹
65. It is enough to have believed these mysteries once.¹
- [Censure:] All the propositions are condemned and prohibited, as they are found here, as at least scandalous and pernicious in practice.
- [Conclusion of the decree:] Finally, in order that the doctors or scholastics and all others may refrain from injurious disputes in the future and that peace and charity may be served, the same most holy pontiff orders them, in virtue of holy obedience, that both in books to be printed and in manuscripts and also in theses, disputations, and sermons, to guard against any censure and any reproach, as well as all invectives against those propositions which up till now still continue to be debated among Catholics, until the Holy See, after examining the matter, renders a judgment on these same propositions.¹

*2163¹ From the Louvain censure of 1657, prop. 1; cf. in addition Leandro Murcia mentioned above: Castropalao, Opus morale de virtutibus I, tract. 2, disp. 2, punctum 9, nos. 8–9. An analogous concept was upheld by Basilius Ponce de León, O.E.S.A., Juan de Salas, S.J., Thomas Hurtado, and Domingo Soto, O.P.

*2164¹ From the Louvain censure of 1653, prop. 17. Cf. Bauny, Theologia moralis I, tract. 4: De ministro poenitentiae, q. 12.

*2165¹ Cf. Tamburini, Explicatio decalogi II, 1, § 1, nos. 3 and 8.

*2167¹ Benedict XIV underscores this same point in the July 9, 1753, constitution Sollicita ac provida, directed chiefly to the censors of the Holy Office, when, after having cited these same words noted above, he continues: “This is why one must restrain the license of authors who, as Augustine said in book 12 of the Confessiones, chap. 25, no. 34, ‘love their own view, not because it is true, but because it is theirs’; and who not only reject the opinions of others, but also criticize and treat them in an insulting manner. Therefore, it cannot be permitted in any way [by the book censors of the Holy Office and the Sacred Congregation of the Index, toward whom the bull is immediately directed] that private opinions from anyone be set forth in books as if they were certain and defined dogmas of the Church, while anything contrary is accused of error....”

“(§ 24) St. Thomas Aquinas, the Angelic Prince of the Schools and Doctor of the Church, ... out of necessity attacked the opinions of philosophers and theologians that he, impelled by the truth, needed to refute. What marvelously augmented the praise of others for such a great Doctor, however, is the fact that he never disparaged, offended, or denigrated any of his adversaries; instead, he earned the respect of all by his kind and very courteous manner....”

“Those who are wont to cite and glorify such an exceptional teacher ... should themselves resolve to emulate the great Doctor in his moderate tone of writing and his most noble method of engaging opponents in disputation. Even those who depart from his school and his doctrine should strive to conduct themselves according to this manner. For the Church proposes the virtues of the saints as an example for all: and, since the Angelic Doctor is inscribed in the list of the saints, although it may be permitted to think differently from him, nevertheless, it is not at all permitted to adopt a manner of acting and disputing different from his” (Cohibeatur itaque ea scriptorum licentia, qui, aut aiebat Augustinus lib. 12 Confessionum cap. 25 no. 34 ‘sententiam suam amantes, non quia vera est, sed quia sua est’, aliorum opiniones non modo improbant, sed illiberaliter etiam notant atque traducunt. Non feratur omnino [a librorum censoribus S. Officii et S. Cgr. Indicis, ad quos proxime hae bulla destinata est], privatas sententias, veluti certa ac definita Ecclesiae dogmata, a quopiam in libris obrudi, opposita vero erroris insimulari....”

(§ 24) Angelicus scholarum princeps Ecclesiaeque Doctor, S. Thomas Aquinas ... necessario offendit philosophorum theologorumque opiniones, quas veritate impellente refellere debuit. Ceteras vero tanti Doctoris laudes id mirabiliter cumulat, quod adversariorum neminem parvipendere, vellicare aut traducere visus est, sed omnes officiose ac perhumaniter demereri....”

Qui tam eximio uti solent ac gloriari magistro ..., ii sibi ad aemulandum proponant tanti Doctoris in scribendo moderationem, honestissimamque cum adversariis agendi disputandique rationem. Ad hanc ceteri quoque sese componere studeant, qui ab eius schola doctrinaque recedunt. Sanctorum enim virtutes omnibus in exemplum ab Ecclesia propositae sunt; cumque Angelicus Doctor Sanctorum albo adscriptus sit, quamquam diversa ab eo sentire liceat, ei tamen in contrariam in agendo ac disputando rationem inire omnino non licet”: Benedict XIV, Bullarium, Mechelen ed., 10:252f. / BullLux 19 [1758]: 63a).

2170–2171: Decree of the Holy Office, November 23, 1679

This is concerned with conclusions drawn from the assertions of the Molinists on how to reconcile the decree of the omnipotent God with human freedom and probably derived from adversaries of the Molinists. It is in this way that Jacques-Hyacinthe Serry, O.P. (Historia congregationum de auxiliis divinae gratiae [Louvain, 1700], addenda 21f.), interprets certain passages by Cristobal de Ortega, S.J., De Deo uno I: Controversiarum dogmaticarum scholasticarum de essentia, attributis . . . (Lyon, 1671), controv. III de decretis, disp. 2, q. 4, ctm. 3; ctm. 4, nos. 6f.; disp. 3, q. 2; ctm. 1, no. 5; ctm. 2, no. 1; ctm. 3, no. 4. Ortega's volume was indeed placed on the Index, but not until January 29, 1716. There seems to be no connection with the following decree.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 352b / Viva 3:181a.

Errors on Donated Omnipotence

- | | | |
|---|--|-------------|
| 1. Deus donat nobis omnipotentiam suam, ut ea utamur, sicut aliquis donat alteri villam vel librum. | 1. God gives us his omnipotence that we may use it, just as someone gives another a villa or a book. | 2170 |
| 2. Deus subicit nobis suam omnipotentiam. [Censura: Prohibentur uti] novae et temerariae. | 2. God submits his omnipotence to us. [Censure: They are prohibited] as rash and novel. | 2171 |

2175–2177: Decree of the Holy Office, June 26, 1680

In his work Fundamentum theologiae moralis (1673), Tirso González de Santalla, S.J., professor at Salamanca and missionary, in contrast to the majority of theologians of the Society of Jesus, advanced probabiliorism. In spite of the dedication to the general of the order, Gian Paolo Oliva, González was denied authorization to print it. In 1676, he was called to the first chair of theology at Salamanca. He tried to obtain from Innocent XI, who was inclined toward probabiliorism, that within the Society of Jesus theologians should also have the freedom to advance probabiliorism alongside probabilism, which was acknowledged up until then as the common doctrine. Innocent XI granted the liberty of teaching and published the following decree, which, according to the testimony of April 21, 1902, of the notary of the Sacred Congregation of the Inquisition, is the only authentic one. Versions of a supposed second part of this decree were circulated that tried to allege that the pope had prohibited probabilism or had imposed silence on the Jesuits. Even later, when González, with the support of Innocent XI, was elected General of the Society of Jesus (July 6, 1687), he could not achieve anything more in favor of probabiliorism. His Tractatus succinctus de recto usu opinionum probabilium (given to the press around 1691 at Dillingen/Bavaria without the knowledge of the order's officials) was suppressed.

Ed.: ASS 35 (1902/1903): 252f.

Probabilism and Probabiliorism

Facta relatione per Patrem Lauream contentorum in litteris Patris Thirsi González Societatis Iesu, Sanctissimo Domino nostro directis, Eminentissimi Domini dixerunt, quod scribatur per Secretarium Status Nuntio Apostolico Hispaniarum, ut significet dicto Patri Thirso, quod Sanctitas Sua benigne accepit ac, non sine laude perlectis eius litteris, mandavit ut ipse libere et intrepide praedicet, doceat et calamo defendat opinionem magis probabilem, nec non viriliter impugnet sententiam eorum qui asserunt, quod in concursu minus probabilis opinionis cum probabiliori sic cognita et iudicata, licitum sit sequi minus probabilem eumque certum faciat, quod quidquid favore opinionis magis probabilis egerit et scripserit, gratum erit Sanctitati Suae.

After the report by Father Laurea on the content of the letter sent by Father Tirso González, S.J., to our most holy Lord (pope), the most eminent Lords (cardinals) said that the secretary of state should write to the apostolic nuncio in Spain making known to the aforesaid Father Tirso that His Holiness graciously accepted (his request) and, after his letter had been read, not without praise, ordered that he should freely and boldly preach, teach, and defend with his pen the more probable opinion as well as vigorously combat the opinion of those who, when there is a conflict of a less probable opinion with a more probable opinion, recognized and judged as such, affirm that it is licit to follow the less probable; and he should be informed that whatever he will do or write in favor of the more probable opinion will be pleasing to His Holiness.

Iniungatur Patri Generali Societatis Iesu de ordine Sanctitatis Suae, ut non modo permittat eiusdem Patribus Societatis scribere pro opinione magis probabili et impugnare sententiam asserentium, quod in concursu minus probabilis opinionis cum probabiliori sic cognita et iudicata, licitum sit sequi minus probabilem; verum etiam scribat omnibus Universitatibus Societatis, mentem Sanctitatis Suae esse, ut quilibet, prout sibi libuerit, libere scribat pro opinione magis probabili

Let it be enjoined on the Father General of the Society of Jesus by order of His Holiness that he not only permit the Fathers of this Society to write in favor of the more probable opinion and to oppose the opinion of those who affirm that in a conflict of the less probable opinion with a more probable opinion, recognized and judged as such, it is licit to follow the less probable; but that he should also write to all the universities of the Society that it is the mind of His Holiness that anyone, as it will please him, et impugnet contrariam praedictam; eisque iubeat ut mandato Sanctitatis Suae omnino se submittant.

may write freely in favor of the more probable opinion and oppose the above-mentioned contrary (opinion); and he should order them to submit themselves entirely to the command of His Holiness.

2177 [Additum in autographo S. Officii:] Die 8 Iulii 1680. Renunciato praedicto Ordine Sanctitatis Suae Patri Generali Societatis Iesu per Assessorem, respondit, se in omnibus quanto citius pariturum, licet nec per ipsum, nec per suos Praedecessores fuerit umquam interdictum scribere pro opinione magis probabili, eamque docere.

[Added in the autograph of the Holy Office:] July 8, 1680. After the above-mentioned order of His Holiness was reported to the Father General of the Society of Jesus through the assessor, he replied that he would obey most promptly in every way, although it had never been forbidden either by himself or his predecessors to write in favor of the more probable opinion and to teach this.

2181–2192: Draft for an Instruction of the Holy Office Drawn up by Cardinal Girolamo Casanate, ca. October 1682

In view of quietism, an instruction for confessors and spiritual directors was worked on within the Roman curia. A draft drawn up by Cardinal Girolamo Casanate has been preserved. It is not certain whether the instruction was issued. (The text was included in Denzinger-Schönmetzer in order better to understand the condemned propositions of Miguel de Molinos; cf. *2201–2269.)

Ed.: P. Dudon, in RechScRel 4 (1913): 172–74, n. 1 / Dudon, Le Quiétiste espagnol Michel Molinos (Paris, 1921), 271–73 / recorded in Guibert 266–68, nos. 450–52.

Contemplation and Meditation—Errors of Quietism

2181 1. Nemini igitur orationi meditativae sive contemplativae addicto liceat vocalem orationem a Christo Domino institutam, ab Apostolis servatam et ab Ecclesia catholica perenni successione in omnibus divinis ministeriis semper adhibitam, vel despiciere vel tamquam inutilem et in comparatione meditativae aut contemplativae inanem deprimere; sed docente propheta in hymnis et canticis Dominum esse laudandum, eam omnes cum mentali pariter et contemplativa laudent atque commendent.

1. Therefore, it should not be permitted for anyone devoted to meditative or contemplative prayer to disdain or disparage as useless or worthless, in comparison to meditative or contemplative prayer, the vocal prayer instituted by Christ the Lord, observed by the apostles, and always used in a continuous succession by the Catholic Church in all divine services; on the contrary, since the prophet teaches that the Lord should be praised by hymns and songs, all should praise and recommend (vocal prayer) in the same way as mental and contemplative (prayer).

2182 2. Cum vero in domo Patris caelestis mansiones multae sint [cf. Io 14:2], meditationi vacantes eorumque directores nullo modo contemplationi studentes despiciant aut otiosos vocent aut, quod peius est, aliqua haeresis labe notent; sed donis cuique eorum a Deo per meditationem collatis sancte et pie utantur et fruuntur; praecipue cum contemplationis gratiam saepe summi, saepe minimi, saepius remoti, aliquando etiam coniugati percipiant.

2. But since there are many mansions in the house of the Father [cf. Jn 14:2], those devoted to meditation and their directors should not in any manner scorn or call lazy or, even worse, censure as marked by some taint of heresy those intent on contemplation; on the contrary, let each of them make use of and enjoy in a holy and pious manner the gifts given to them by God through meditation; especially since often the highest, often the lowest, more often those far removed and sometimes even the married attain the grace of contemplation.

2183 3. Contemplativi pariter meditativos non contemnant, cum regulariter per meditationis gradus ad contemplationis apicem perveniatur; sed omnes glorificent cum caritate Deum, Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum, scientes quod non habet aliquid viriditatis ramus boni operis, si non manet in radice caritatis.

3. In the same way contemplatives should not scorn those devoted to meditation, since normally it is through the stages of meditation that the height of contemplation is reached; but all should glorify God, our Lord Jesus Christ, in charity, knowing that the branch of good work has no verdure unless it remains rooted in charity.

2184 4. Licet autem nemo a contemplationis gratia, auxiliante Deo, repellatur, animadvertendum tamen magnopere est per directores animarum, ne omnis aetas, gradus, sexus aut condicio ad huius doctrinae

4. Although no one should be driven far from the grace of contemplation for which God gives his aid, directors of souls, nevertheless, must be very mindful that not every age, position, sex, or condition should be admitted et exercitii praxim indistincte admittatur, sed prius mensuram spiritus, quid ferre quidve agere valeat, assidua observatione pensent, ut alios ad meditationem, alios ad contemplationem, iuxta uniuscuiusque spiritum, perducant.

5. Ut autem doctrina de oratione contemplativa, qua fidelium animae ad summam cum Deo unionem elevantur, purgatis erroribus, integra et illibata permaneat, caveant inprimis contemplativi asserere aut tenere, solius Dei praesentiam in omni loco esse obiectum contemplationis seu orationis quam quietis vocant: cum omnia meditationis obiecta possint, licet diverso modo, esse obiecta contemplationis; neque pariter audeant asserere, eos numquam qui meditatione se exercent, ad aliquem perfectionis gradum ascendere posse, nisi ad contemplationis orationem transierint.

6. Et quia per incarnationem et passionem Domini nostri Iesu Christi salvati et liberati sumus, caveant contemplativi, ne, voluntarie atque ex industria, eiusdem Domini nostri vitae, gestorum, passionis et redemptionis mysteriorum obliviscantur aut eorumdem considerationem inutilem et contemplationis statui contrariam esse asseverent; immo eorum considerationi, ad exemplum omnium Sanctorum, pro loci et temporis opportunitate sedulo incumbant.

7. Neque Christi Domini Beatissimaeque eius Matris Mariae Virginis ceterorumque Sanctorum, qui cum Deo regnant in caelis et pro nobis in hac lacrymarum valle constituti orant, imagines et simulacra, tam externa quam interna, velut contemplationi inutilia a mente et oculis removeant; licet aliquando, in actu contemplationis tantum, et quando mens nostra caelestibus donis perfusa ad divinarum rerum contemplationem attrahitur, ne anima distrahatur, liceat a figuris pro tunc recedere.

8. Et quia perfectae contemplationis exercitium in eo praecipue versatur, ut anima in contemplationis actu nihil aliud agat, immo cum pro tunc omnium creaturarum oblivione ad Deum aut divina in sublimium virtutum fidei, spei et caritatis, quibus Deus praecipue colitur, consideratione elevetur, nullo modo meditativi audeant aut praesumant contemplativos tamquam otiosos et desides in vulgus sugillare.

9. Meminerint praeterea tam contemplativi quam meditativi, minime se exemptos esse ab observatione praeceptorum Dei et Ecclesiae; immo omnes, velut servi erga dominos et uxores erga viros suos, stricte indiscriminately to the practice of this doctrine and discipline, but they should consider first, with assiduous observation, the capacity of the spirit, what it may be able to endure and accomplish, in order to lead some to meditation and others to contemplation, according to the spirit of each one.

5. But in order that the doctrine of contemplative prayer, by which the souls of the faithful are elevated to the highest union with God, may remain purified of all error, integral, and intact, contemplatives should beware, first of all, of asserting or holding that the presence of God alone is in every place the object of contemplation or of what is called the prayer of quiet: since every object of meditation can be, although in a different way, the object of contemplation; similarly, no one should dare to assert that those who practice meditation can never ascend to any degree of perfection without passing over to contemplative prayer. 2185

6. And since we are saved and liberated through the Incarnation and Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, contemplatives should be careful not to forget, voluntarily and on purpose, the mysteries of the life, deeds, Passion, and redemption of our same Lord or assert that the consideration of them is useless and contrary to the state of contemplation; on the contrary, following the example of all the saints, they should zealously apply themselves to their consideration according to the opportunity of time and place. 2186

7. No one should remove from the mind and the eyes, as useless for contemplation, images and representations, whether exterior or interior, of Christ, the Lord, and of his most blessed Mother, the Virgin Mary, and of the other saints who reign with God in heaven and who pray for us dwelling in this valley of tears; although sometimes, in the act of contemplation itself, and when our mind is flooded with celestial gifts and is drawn into the contemplation of divine things, it may be allowed to withdraw from these representations during that time so as not to distract the soul. 2187

8. And since the exercise of perfect contemplation consists above all in the fact that the soul, in the act of contemplation, does nothing else, and since, indeed, in the consideration of the most sublime virtues of faith, hope, and charity, by which one principally gives honor to God, for the moment forgetting all creatures, it is elevated to God and to things divine, in no way may those who practice meditation dare or presume to revile contemplatives as slothful or lazy in front of people. 2188

9. Moreover, let contemplatives as well as those who meditate remember that they are in no way exempt from observing the commandments of God and of the Church; on the contrary, all, just as servants with respect to their 2189

teneri ad observantiam mandatorum, quae secundum cuiusque statum servari debent, cum virtus orationis ad humilitatem et oboedientiam, non vero ad superbiam et elationem, perducatur.

2190 10. Idem pariter docendum et tenendum est de clericis tam saecularibus quam regularibus, pariterque de monialibus: ne praetextu meditationis sive contemplationis praesumant se ab ecclesiasticis obligationibus, regularibus votis, institutis aut regulis eximi aut liberari, cum ab eorum observantia, quamvis ad aliquem perfectum orandi gradum pervenerint, nullo modo probentur exempti.

2191 11. Ab externis autem religionis et pietatis officiis, quae a fidelibus in Ecclesia catholica exerceri solent, quemadmodum sunt sacramentorum et sacramentalium usus, ecclesiarum visitatio et ieiuniorum observantia, contionum auditio et reliqua spiritualis sive corporalis misericordiae opera, sciant cuncti, contemplativi aequae ac meditativi, minime esse exemptos, immo magno fore fidelibus scandalo, si praedictorum mandatorum aliqua ab eis, praetextu contemplationis seu meditationis, negligentur.

2192 12. Impium prorsus et christiana puritate indignum est asserere, non esse resistendum tentationibus, neque imputari contemplativis ipsa peccata, quae ab eis, dum contemplant, committuntur, sub falsa opinione, quod tunc non ipsi contemplativi, sed diabolus per eorum membra talia operetur. Impium pariter est asserere, huiusmodi peccata non esse per contemplativos in sacramento poenitentiae aperienda et Ecclesiae clavibus subiicienda. Impium denique, quod simpliciter necessaria sit ad salutem oratio mentalis sive meditativa sive contemplativa.

lords and wives with respect to their husbands, are strictly bound to the observance of the commandments, which must be observed according to each one's state, since the virtue of prayer leads to humility and obedience and not, indeed, to pride and self-exaltation.

10. Likewise, it is to be taught and held with regard to secular as well as religious clergy and also monks: they should not presume, under the pretext of meditation or contemplation, to be exempt or free from ecclesiastical obligations or of the vows, institutions, or rules of their religious orders, since even if they may have reached some perfect level of prayer, they are not in any way to be considered exempt from their observance.

11. But all, contemplatives as well those practicing meditation, should know that they are in no way exempt from the external duties of religion and piety that are wont to be practiced by the faithful in the Catholic Church, such as the use of sacraments and sacramentals, the visitation of churches and the observance of fasts, the listening to sermons, and the other works of spiritual or corporal mercy; on the contrary, it would be a great scandal to the faithful if, under the pretext of contemplation or meditation, any of the aforesaid precepts were neglected by them.

12. It is absolutely impious and unworthy of Christian purity to affirm that it is not necessary to resist temptations and that those sins committed by contemplatives while they are contemplating should not be imputed to them, on the basis of the false belief that then it is not the contemplatives themselves but the devil who causes these things through their members. Likewise, it is impious to assert that sins of this kind should not be manifested by contemplatives in the sacrament of confession and subjected to the keys of the Church. And finally (it is) impious (to affirm) that mental prayer, in itself, whether meditative or contemplative, is necessary for salvation.

2195: Decree of the Holy Office, November 18, 1682

The following decree and that cited in *1989 are concerned particularly with spiritual directors and the administration of religious communities. Cf., moreover, the instruction of the Holy Office of June 9, 1915 (Razón y Fe 48 [1917, II]: 89 / Monitore Ecclesiastico 29 [1917]: 199–201/ not found in AAS).

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 354ab / Viva 3:182.

Error concerning the Seal of Confession

2195 [Propositio.:] “Scientia ex confessione acquisita uti licet, modo fiat sine directa aut indirecta revelatione et gravamine poenitentis, nisi aliud multo gravius ex non usu sequatur, in cuius comparatione prius merito contemnatur”, addita deinde explicatione sive limitatione, quod sit intelligenda de usu scientiae ex confessione acquisitae cum gravamine poenitentis, seclusa quacumque revelatione, atque in casu, quo

[Propositio.:] “It is permitted to make use of knowledge obtained in confession, provided it is done without direct or indirect revelation and injury to the penitent, unless something much more serious would result from its not being used, in comparison with which the prior (restriction) is justly disregarded”, after which is added an explanation or limitation concerning what is to be understood by the use of knowledge obtained from multo gravius gravamen eiusdem paenitentis ex non usu sequeretur.

[Censura:] Dictam propositionem, quatenus admittit usum dictae scientiae cum gravamine paenitentis, omnino prohibendam esse, etiam cum dicta explicatione sive limitatione.

confession injurious to the penitent, excluding any form of revelation, even in the case when its not being used would result in a much greater harm to the same penitent.

[Censure:] The stated proposition, insofar as it allows the use of the aforesaid knowledge with injury to the penitent, is to be entirely prohibited, even with the above-mentioned explanation or limitation.

2201–2269: Sixty-Eight Propositions Condemned in the Decree of the Holy Office of August 28 and in the Constitution Caelestis Pastor of November 20, 1687

Miguel de Molinos had acquired renown as a confessor and a spiritual director especially through many letters and his principal work, Guía espiritual (The spiritual guide [Rome, 1675]). In July 1685, Molinos was accused of quietism before the tribunal of the Inquisition. On September 3, 1687, he was obliged to retract publicly his errors under oath and was condemned to imprisonment for the duration of his life. The condemned propositions were taken, for the most part, from his correspondence and from his Memorandum presented to the Inquisition. The Inquisition brought forward around 12,000 of his letters. Propositions 41–53 are from the Memorandum; only these constitute the authentic text of the author.

In the September 4, 1687, decree of the Holy Office, the quietists Simone and Antonio M. Leoni were condemned (French ed: AnIP, series 10 = vol. 5/1 [Rome, 1867], 594–602; compiled in a compendium by P. Dudon cited below, 227–30; another compendium was edited by P. Guerrini: ScuolaCatt 23 [1922], ser. 5, 374–79; in part in Guibert 288–93, nos. 470–75) and also [condemned was] Cardinal Pier Matteo Petrucci, who, on December 17, 1687, retracted fifty-four propositions extracted from his books by order of the Holy Office. The retraction was inserted into the brief of Innocent XI Cum sicut accepimus issued on May 26, 1689 (ed. by J. Hilgers, Der Index der verbotenen Bücher [Freiburg, 1904], 566–70 / P. Dudon, cited below, 299–306 / from which comes the text in Guibert 293–310, nos. 477–89: the propositions are given in Italian and in Latin translation along with the sources and censures). The very numerous documents have not been given here because of their lesser importance.

Ed.: P. Dudon, Le Quietiste espagnol Michel Molinos (1628–1696) (Paris, 1921), 292–99 / from which, in Guibert 270–88, the Latin and Italian text of the decree of the Holy Office is reproduced / DuPIA 3/II, 357b–362a / BullTau 19:775b–781a / BullLux 10:212b–215a.

Quietistic Errors of Miguel de Molinos

1. Oportet hominem suas potentias annihilare, et haec est via interna.

2. Velle operari active, est Deum offendere, qui vult esse ipse solus agens: et ideo opus est, seipsum in Deo totum et totaliter derelinquere et postea permanere velut corpus exanime.

3. Vota de aliquo faciendo sunt perfectionis impeditiva.¹

4. Activitas naturalis est gratiae inimica, impeditque Dei operationes et veram perfectionem; quia Deus operari vult in nobis sine nobis.

5. Nihil operando anima se annihilat et ad suum principium redit et ad suam originem, quae est essentia Dei, in qua transformata remanet ac divinizzata, et Deus tunc in se ipso remanet; quia tunc non sunt amplius duae res unitae, sed una tantum, et hac ratione Deus vivit et regnat in nobis, et anima seipsam annihilat in esse operativo.

1. It is necessary that man reduce his own powers to nothingness, and this is the interior way. 2201

2. To wish to operate actively is to offend God, who himself wishes to be the sole agent; and therefore it is necessary to abandon oneself wholly and completely in God and to remain afterward like an inanimate body. 2202

3. Vows to do something are impediments to perfection.¹ 2203

4. Natural activity is the enemy of grace and impedes the operations of God and true perfection, because God wishes to operate in us without us. 2204

5. By doing nothing, the soul annihilates itself and returns to its beginning and to its origin, which is the essence of God, in which it remains transformed and divinized, and God then remains in himself; for there are then no longer two things united but only one, and in this way God lives and reigns in us, and the soul annihilates itself in operative being. 2205

*2203 ¹ In the censure, there is added: “Condemned among the errors of Gerardo Segarelli as a heretical [proposition] of the pseudo-apostles, and it is his error 17 that says: It is a more perfect life to live without a vow than with a vow” (Damanata inter errores Gerardi Segarelli, haeretica Pseudo-Apostolorum, et est eius error XVII, qui sic habet: Perfectior vita est, vivere sine voto quam cum voto). The details of the censures can be seen in the Codex Casanata 310.

- 2206 6. Via interna est ilia, in qua non cognoscitur nec lumen, nec amor, nec resignatio; et non oportet Deum cognoscere, et hoc modo recte proceditur.
6. The interior way is that in which neither light nor love nor resignation is recognized, and it is not necessary to understand God, and in this way one makes progress correctly.
- 2207 7. Non debet anima cogitare nec de praemio, nec de punitione, nec de paradiso, nec de inferno, nec de morte, nec de aeternitate.
7. A soul ought to consider neither reward nor punishment nor paradise nor hell nor death nor eternity.
- 2208 8. Non debet velle scire, an gradiatur cum voluntate Dei, an cum eadem voluntate resignata maneat necne; nec opus est, ut velit cognoscere suum statum nec proprium nihil; sed debet ut corpus exanime manere.
8. (The soul) should not wish to know whether it is advancing in accord with the will of God or whether or not it remains resigned to this same will; and there is no need for it to wish to know its (own) state or its own nothingness, but it should remain like a lifeless body.
- 2209 9. Non debet anima reminisci nec sui, nec Dei, nec cuiuscumque rei, et in via interna omnis reflexio est nociva, etiam reflexio ad suas actiones humanas et ad proprios defectus.
9. The soul ought not to remember either itself or God or anything whatsoever, and in the interior life all reflection is harmful, even reflection upon its human actions and upon its own defects.
- 2210 10. Si propriis defectibus alios scandalizet, non est necessarium reflectere, dummodo non adsit voluntas scandalizandi: et ad proprios defectus non posse reflectere, gratia Dei est.
10. If one scandalizes others by one's own defects, it is not necessary to reflect, as long as the will to scandalize is not present, and not to be able to reflect upon one's own defects is a grace of God.
- 2211 11. Ad dubia quae occurrunt, an recte procedatur necne, non opus est reflectere.
11. When doubts arise as to whether or not one is proceeding correctly, there is no need for reflection.
- 2212 12. Qui suum liberum arbitrium Deo donavit, de nulla re debet curam habere, nec de inferno, nec de paradiso; nec debet desiderium habere propriae perfectionis, nec virtutum, nec propriae sanctitatis, nec propriae salutis, cuius spem expurgare debet.
12. He who gives his own free will to God should care about nothing, neither about hell nor about heaven; neither ought he to have a desire for his own perfection or for virtues or his own sanctity or his own salvation, the hope of which he ought to remove.
- 2213 13. Resignato Deo libero arbitrio, eidem Deo relinquenda est cogitatio et cura de omni re nostra, et relinquere, ut faciat in nobis, sine nobis, suam divinam voluntatem.
13. After (our) free will has been resigned to God, we should abandon (every) thought and care about all that is ours to the same God and allow him to accomplish his divine will in us without us.
- 2214 14. Qui divinae voluntati resignatus est, non convenit, ut a Deo rem aliquam petat; quia petere est imperfectio, cum sit actus propriae voluntatis et electionis, et est velle, quod divina voluntas nostrae conformetur, et non quod nostra divinae: et illud Evangelii: "Petite et accipietis" [Jn 16:24], non est dictum a Christo pro animabus internis, quae nolunt habere voluntatem; immo huiusmodi animae eo perveniunt, ut non possint a Deo rem aliquam petere.
14. For one who is resigned to the divine will it is not proper to ask anything from God; because asking is an imperfection, since it is an act of one's own will and choice, and it is to wish that the divine will be conformed to our own, and not our own to the divine will; and the passage of the Gospel saying: "Ask, and you will receive" [Jn 16:24] was not said by Christ for interior souls who refuse to have a will; moreover, these kinds of souls reach the point where they cannot ask anything from God.
- 2215 15. Sicut non debent a Deo rem aliquam petere, ita nec illi ob rem aliquam gratias agere debent; quia utrumque est actus propriae voluntatis.
15. Just as they ought not ask anything from God, so should they not give thanks to him for anything, since either one is an act of their own will.
- 2216 16. Non convenit indulgentias quaerere pro poena propriis peccatis debita; quia melius est divinae iustitiae satisfacere, quam divinam misericordiam quaerere: quoniam illud ex puro Dei amore procedit, et istud ab amore nostri interessato, nec est res Deo grata nec meritoria, quia est velle crucem fugere.
16. It is not fitting to seek indulgences for the punishment due to one's own sins, because it is better to satisfy divine justice than to seek divine mercy: for the former proceeds from the pure love of God, and the latter from the interested love of ourselves, and such a thing is neither pleasing to God nor meritorious, since it wishes to flee from the cross.

17. Tradito Deo libero arbitrio, et eidem relicta cura et cogitatione animae nostrae, non est amplius habenda ratio tentationum; nec eis alia resistentia fieri debet nisi negativa, nulla adhibita industria; et si natura commovetur, oportet sinere ut commoveatur, quia est natura.

18. Qui in oratione utitur imaginibus, figuris, speciebus et propriis conceptibus, non adora Deum in spiritu et veritate [cf. Io 4:23].

19. Qui amat Deum eo modo, quo ratio argumentatur aut intellectus comprehendit, non amat verum Deum.

20. Asserere, quod in oratione opus est sibi per discursum auxilium ferre et per cogitationes, quando Deus animam non alloquitur, ignorantia est. Deus numquam loquitur, eius locutio est operatio, et semper in anima operatur, quando haec suis discursibus, cogitationibus et operationibus eum non impedit.

21. In oratione opus est manere in fide obscura et universali, cum quiete et oblivione cuiuscumque cogitationis particularis ac distinctae attributorum Dei ac Trinitatis, et sic in Dei praesentia manere ad illum adorandum et amandum eique inserviendum; sed absque productione actuum, quia Deus in his sibi non complacet.

22. Cognitio haec per fidem non est actus a creatura productus, sed est cognitio a Deo creaturae tradita, quam creatura se habere non cognoscit, nec postea cognoscit illam se habuisse; et idem dicitur de amore.

23. Mystici cum S. Bernardo in *Scala Claustralium*¹ distinguunt quattuor gradus: lectionem, meditationem, orationem, et contemplationem infusam. Qui semper in primo sistit, numquam ad secundum pertransit. Qui semper in secundo persistit, numquam ad tertium pervenit, qui est nostra contemplatio acquisita, in qua per totam vitam persistendum est, dummodo Deus animam non trahat (absque eo, quod ipsa id exspectet) ad contemplationem infusam; et hac cessante, anima regredi debet ad tertium gradum et in ipso permanere, absque eo, quod amplius redeat ad secundum aut primum.

24. Qualescumque cogitationes in oratione occurrant, etiam impurae, etiam contra Deum, Sanctos, fidem et sacramenta, si voluntarie non nutriantur nec voluntarie expellantur, sed cum indifferentia et resignatione tolerantur; non impediunt orationem fidei, immo eam perfectiorem efficiunt, quia anima tunc magis divinae voluntati resignata remanet.

17. When free will has been surrendered to God, and the care and thought of our soul left to the same God, no consideration of temptations need any longer be of concern; neither should any but a negative resistance be made to them, with the application of no energy, and if nature is aroused, one must let it be aroused, because it is nature. 2217

18. He who in his prayer uses images, figures, <outward> appearances, and his own conceptions does not adore God “in spirit and truth” [Jn 4:23]. 2218

19. He who loves God in the way that reason points out or the intellect comprehends does not love the true God. 2219

20. To assert that in prayer it is necessary to help oneself by discourse and by reflections, when God does not speak to the soul, is ignorance. God never speaks; his way of speaking is operation, and he always operates in the soul, when this soul does not impede him by its discourses, reflections, and operations. 2220

21. In prayer it is necessary to remain in obscure and universal faith, with quiet and forgetfulness of any particular and distinct thought of the attributes of God and the Trinity, and thus to remain in the presence of God for adoring and loving him and serving him, but without producing acts, because God has no pleasure in these. 2221

22. This knowledge through faith is not an act produced by a creature, but it is a knowledge given by God to the creature, which the creature neither recognizes that he has nor later knows that he had it; and the same is said of love. 2222

23. The mystics with St. Bernard in the Scala Claustralium (The Ladder of the Recluses)¹ distinguished four steps: reading, meditation, prayer, and infused contemplation. He who always remains in the first never passes over to the second. He who always persists in the second never arrives at the third, which is our acquired contemplation, in which one must persist throughout all life, provided that God does not draw the soul (without the soul expecting it) to infused contemplation; and if this ceases, the soul should turn back to the third step and remain in that, without returning again to the second or first. 2223

24. Whatever thoughts occur in prayer, even impure or against God, the saints, faith, and the sacraments, if they are not voluntarily nourished or voluntarily expelled, but tolerated with indifference and resignation, do not impede the prayer of faith, indeed, make it more perfect, because the soul then remains more resigned to the divine will. 2224

*2223 ¹ A work attributed to Guigo II, the Carthusian (d. 1188); it is cited in chap. 1 (PL 184:475C).

- 2225 25. Etiam si superveniat somnus et dormiatur, nihilominus fit oratio et contemplatio actualis; quia oratio et resignatio, resignatio et oratio idem sunt, et dum resignatio perdurat, perdurat et oratio.
25. Even if one becomes sleepy and falls asleep, nevertheless there is prayer and actual contemplation, because prayer and resignation, resignation and prayer are the same, and while resignation endures, prayer also endures.
- 2226 26. Tres illae viae: purgativa, illuminativa et unitiva, sunt absurdum maximum, quod dictum fuerit in mystica, cum non sit nisi unica via, scilicet via interna.
26. The three ways: the purgative, illuminative, and unitive, are the greatest absurdity ever spoken about in mystical (theology), since there is only one way, namely, the interior way.
- 2227 27. Qui desiderat et amplectitur devotionem sensibilem, non desiderat nec quaerit Deum, sed seipsum; et male agit, cum eam desiderat et eam habere conatur, qui per viam internam incedit, tam in locis sacris quam in diebus solemnibus.
27. He who desires and embraces sensible devotion desires and seeks, not God, but himself; and he who walks in the interior way acts badly when he desires and strives to possess (sensible devotion), whether in holy places or on solemn feast days.
- 2228 28. Taedium rerum spiritualium bonum est, siquidem per illud purgatur amor proprius.
28. Weariness for spiritual matters is good, if indeed by it one's own love is purified.
- 2229 29. Dum anima interna fastidit discursus de Deo et virtutes et frigida remanet, nullum in se ipsa sentiens fervorem, bonum signum est.
29. When the interior soul disdains discourses about God and the virtues and remains cold, feeling no fervor in itself, it is a good sign.
- 2230 30. Totum sensibile, quod experimur in vita spirituali, est abominabile, spurcum et immundum.
30. Everything sensible that we experience in the spiritual life is abominable, base, and unclean.
- 2231 31. Nullus meditativus veras virtutes exercet internas; quae non debent a sensibus cognosci. Opus est amittere virtutes.
31. No meditative person exercises true interior virtues; these should not be recognized by the senses. It is necessary to abandon the virtues.
- 2232 32. Nec ante nec post communionem alia requiritur praeparatio aut gratiarum actio (pro istis animabus internis), quam permanentia in solita resignatione passiva, quia supplet modo perfectiore omnes actus virtutum, qui fieri possunt et fiunt in via ordinaria. Et si hac occasione communionis insurgunt motus humiliationis, petitionis aut gratiarum actionis, reprimendi sunt, quoties non dignoscatur, eos esse ex impulsu speciali Dei: alias sunt impulsus naturae nondum mortuae.
32. Neither before nor after communion is any other preparation or act of thanksgiving required (for these interior souls) than continuance in a customary passive resignation, because in a more perfect way it supplies all acts of virtues, which can be practiced and are practiced in the ordinary way. And, if on this occasion of communion there arise emotions of humility, of petition, or of thanksgiving, they are to be repressed as often as it is not discerned that they are from a special impulse of God; otherwise they are impulses of nature not yet dead.
- 2233 33. Male agit anima, quae procedit per hanc viam internam, si in diebus solemnibus vult aliquo conatu particulari excitare in se devotum aliquem sensum, quoniam animae internae omnes dies sunt aequales, omnes festivi. Et idem dicitur de locis sacris, quia huiusmodi animabus omnia loca sunt aequalia.
33. That soul acts badly that proceeds by this interior way if it wishes on feast days by any particular effort to excite some sensible devotion in itself, since for an interior soul all days are equal, all festal. And the same is said of holy places, because to souls of this kind all places are equal.
- 2234 34. Verbis et lingua gratias agere Deo, non est pro animabus internis, quae in silentio manere debent, nullum Deo impedimentum opponendo, quod operetur in illis; et quo magis Deo se resignant, experiuntur, se non posse orationem dominicam seu Pater noster recitare.
34. To give thanks to God by words and by speech is not for interior souls, which ought to remain in silence, placing no obstacle before God, because he operates in them; and the more they resign themselves to God, they discover that they cannot recite the Lord's Prayer, that is, the Our Father.
- 2235 35. Non convenit animabus huius viae internae, quod faciant operationes, etiam virtuosas, ex propria electione et activitate: alias non essent mortuae. Nec debent elicere actus amoris erga beatam Virginem, Sanctos aut
35. It is not fitting for souls of this interior life to perform works, even virtuous ones, by their own choice and activity; otherwise they would not be dead. Neither should they elicit acts of love for the Blessed Virgin, humanitatem Christi: quia, cum ista obiecta sensibilia sint, talis est amor erga illa.

36. Nulla creatura, nec beata Virgo, nec Sancti sedere debent in nostro corde: quia solus Deus vult illud occupare et possidere.

37. In occasione tentationum, etiam furiosarum, non debet anima elicere actus explicitos virtutum oppositarum, sed debet in supradicto amore et resignatione permanere.

38. Crux voluntaria mortificationum pondus grave est et infructuosum, ideoque dimittenda.

39. Sanctiora opera et paenitentiae, quas peregerunt Sancti, non sufficiunt ad removendam ab anima vel unicam adhaesionem.

40. Beata Virgo nullum umquam opus exterius peregit, et tamen fuit Sanctis omnibus sanctior. Igitur ad sanctitatem perveniri potest absque opere exteriori.

41. Deus permittit et vult ad nos humiliandos et ad veram transformationem perducendos, quod in aliquibus animabus perfectis, etiam non arreptitiis, daemon violentiam inferat earum corporibus, easque actus carnales committere faciat, etiam in vigilia et sine mentis offuscatione, movendo physice illorum manus et alia membra contra earum voluntatem. Et idem dicitur quoad alios actus per se peccaminosos: in quo casu non sunt peccata, quia in his non adest consensus.

42. Potest dari casus, quod huiusmodi violentiae ad actus carnales contingant eodem tempore ex parte duarum personarum, scilicet maris et feminae, et ex parte utriusque sequatur actus.

43. Deus praeteritis saeculis sanctos efficiebat tyrannorum ministerio; nunc vero eos efficit sanctos ministerio daemonum, qui causando in eis praedietas violentias facit, ut illi seipsos magis despiciant atque annihilent et se Deo resignent.

44. Iob blasphemavit, et tamen non peccavit labiis suis; quia fuit ex daemonis violentia.

45. Sanctus Paulus huiusmodi daemonis violentias in suo corpore passus est; unde scripsit: “Non quod volo bonum, hoc ago; sed, quod nolo malum, hoc facio” [Rm 7:19].

46. Huiusmodi violentiae sunt medium magis proportionatum ad annihilandam animam, et ad eam ad veram transformationem et unionem perducendam, nec alia superest via: et haec est via faciliior et tutior.

saints, or the humanity of Christ, because since they are sensible objects, so, too, is their love toward them.

36. No creature, neither the Blessed Virgin nor the saints, ought to abide in our heart, because God alone wishes to occupy and possess it. 2236

37. On occasion of temptations, even violent ones, the soul ought not to elicit explicit acts of opposite virtues but should remain in the above-mentioned love and resignation. 2237

38. The voluntary cross of mortifications is a heavy weight and fruitless and therefore to be dismissed. 2238

39. The more holy works and penances that the saints performed are not enough to remove from the soul even a single attachment. 2239

40. The Blessed Virgin never performed any exterior work and nevertheless was holier than all the saints. Therefore, one can arrive at sanctity without exterior work. 2240

41. God permits and wishes to humiliate us and to conduct us to a true transformation, because in some perfect souls, even though not enraptured, the demon inflicts violence on their bodies and makes them commit carnal acts, even in wakefulness and without the bewilderment of the mind, by physically moving their hands and other members against their wills. And the same is said with respect to other acts that are sinful in themselves: in this case they are not sins because there is no consent in them. 2241

42. A case may be given that things of this kind contrary to the will result in carnal acts at the same time on the part of two persons, for example man and woman, and on the part of both an act follows. 2242

43. God in past ages has created saints through the ministry of tyrants; now in truth he produces saints through the ministry of demons, who, by causing in them the above-mentioned use of force, brings it about that they despise themselves the more and annihilate and resign themselves to God. 2243

44. Job blasphemed, and yet he did not sin with his lips, because it was the result of the violence of the devil. 2244

45. St. Paul suffered such violences of the devil in his body; thus he has written: “For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I do” [Rom 7:19]. 2245

46. Such uses of force are the most suitable means for annihilating the soul and leading it to true transformation and union, and there is no other way: and this is the easiest and most secure way. 2246

- 2247 47. Cum huiusmodi violentiae occurrunt, sinere oportet, ut satanas operetur, nullam adhibendo industriam nullumque proprium conatum, sed permanere debet homo in suo nihilo; et etiamsi sequantur pollutiones et actus obsceni propriis manibus, et etiam peiora, non opus est seipsum inquietare, sed foras emittendi sunt scrupuli, dubia et timores; quia anima fit magis illuminata, magis roborata magisque candida, et acquiritur sancta libertas; et prae omnibus non opus est haec confiteri, et sanctissime fit non confitendo, quia hoc pacto superatur daemon, et acquiritur thesaurus pacis.
47. When such uses of force occur, it is proper to allow Satan to operate without applying any resistance or particular effort; on the contrary, man should remain in his nothingness; and even if pollutions and obscene acts with his own hands follow, and things even worse, there is no need to disturb himself, but scruples, doubts, and fears are to be cast away; for the soul becomes more illuminated, more strengthened, and more pure and acquires holy liberty; and most of all there is no need to confess these things, and one acts in a most holy way by not confessing (them), because by this means the demon is overcome and the treasure of peace is acquired.
- 2248 48. Satanas, qui huiusmodi violentias infert, suadet deinde, gravia esse delicta, ut anima se inquietet, ne in via interna ulterius progrediatur: unde ad eius vires enervandas melius est ea non confiteri, quia non sunt peccata, nec etiam venialia.
48. Satan, who produces such uses of forces, afterward persuades that they are grave sins, so that the mind disturbs itself, lest it progress farther in the interior way; hence for weakening his (Satan's) powers it is better not to confess them, because they are not sins, not even venial.
- 2249 49. Iob ex violentia daemonis se propriis manibus polluebat eodem tempore, quo mundas habebat ad Deum preces, sic interpretando locum ex capite XVI Iob [cf. Iob 16:18].
49. Job from the violence of the devil polluted himself with his own hands at the same time as “he offered pure prayer to God”, thus interpreting the passage from chapter 16, Job [cf. Job 16:18].
- 2250 50. David, Ieremias et multi ex sanctis Prophetis huiusmodi violentias patiebantur harum impurarum operationum externarum.
50. David, Jeremiah, and many of the holy prophets suffered such uses of force, of these impure external operations contrary to the will.
- 2251 51. In sacra Scriptura multa sunt exempla violentiarum ad actus externos peccaminosos; uti illud de Samsone, qui per violentiam seipsum occidit cum Philistaeis [cf. Idc 16:29s], coniugium iniit cum alienigena [cf. Idc 14:1–20], et cum Dalila meretrice fornicatus est [cf. Idc 16:4–22], quae alias erant prohibita et peccata fuissent; de Iuditha, quae Holoferni mentita fuit [cf. Idt 11:5–19]; de Elisaeo, qui pueris maledixit [cf. 4 Rg 2:24]; de Elia, qui combussit duos duces cum turmis regis Achab [cf. 4 Rg 1:10–12]. An vero fuerit violentia immediate a Deo peracta vel daemonum ministerio, ut in aliis animabus contingit, in dubio relinquatur.
51. In Sacred Scripture there are many examples of uses of force toward external sinful acts, such as that of Samson, who by violence killed himself with the Philistines [cf. Judg 16:29f.], entered a marriage with a foreigner [cf. Judg 14:1–20], and committed fornication with the harlot Delilah [cf. Judg 16:4–22], which in other times were prohibited and would have been sins; that of Judith, who had lied to Holofernes [cf. Jud 11:5–19]; that of Elisha, who cursed children [cf. 2 Kings 2:24]; that of Elijah, who burned the leaders with the troops of King Ahab [cf. 2 Kings 1:10–12]. But whether violence was immediately executed by God or by the ministry of the demons, as it happens in some souls, is left in doubt.
- 2252 52. Cum huiusmodi violentiae, etiam impurae, absque mentis offuscatione accidunt, tunc anima Deo potest uniri, et de facto semper magis unitur.
52. When such uses of force, even impure ones, occur without confusion of the mind, then the soul can be united to God and, in fact, is always the more united.
- 2253 53. Ad cognoscendum in praxi, an aliqua operatio in aliis personis fuerit violentia regula, quam de hoc habeo, nedum sunt protestationes animarum illarum, quae protestantur, se dictis violentiis non consensisse aut iurare non posse, quod in iis consenserint, et videre quod sint animae, quae proficiunt in via interna; sed regulam sumerem a lumine quodam actuali, cognitione humana ac theologica superiori, quod me certo cognoscere facit cum interna certitudine, quod talis operatio est violenta: et certus sum, quod hoc lumen a Deo procedit, quia
53. To recognize in practice whether an operation has been the use of force in some persons, the rule I have for this is not the protestations of those souls who protest they have not consented to the said uses of force or cannot swear they have consented and cannot see that they are the souls who make progress in the interior life, but I would adopt a rule from a certain light that is superior to actual human and theological cognition, which makes me recognize for certain, with internal certitude, that such operation is the use of force; and I am certain that this ad me pervenit coniunctum cum certitudine, quod a Deo proveniat, et mihi nec umbram dubii relinquit in contrarium: eo modo, quo interdum contingit, quod Deus aliquid revelando eodem tempore animam certam reddit, quod ipse sit, qui revelat, et anima in contrarium non potest dubitare.

54. Spirituales viae ordinariae in hora mortis se delusos inveniunt et confusos cum omnibus passionibus in alio mundo purgandis.

55. Per hanc viam internam pervenitur, etsi multa cum sufferentia, ad purgandas et exstinguendas omnes passiones, ita quod nihil amplius sentitur, nihil, nihil: nec ulla sentitur inquietudo, sicut corpus mortuum, nec anima se amplius commoveri sinit.

56. Duae leges et duae cupiditates animae una, et amoris proprii altera tamdiu perdurant, quamdiu perdurat amor proprius: unde quando hic purgatus est et mortuus, uti fit per viam internam, non adsunt amplius illae duae leges et duae cupiditates, nec ulterius lapsus aliquis incurritur, nec aliquid sentitur amplius, ne quidem veniale peccatum.

57. Per contemplationem acquisitam pervenitur ad statum non faciendi amplius peccata, nec mortalia nec venialia.

58. Ad huiusmodi statum pervenitur non reflectendo amplius ad proprias operationes; quia defectus ex reflexione oriuntur.

59. Via interna seiuncta est a confessione, a confessariis et a casibus conscientiae, a theologia et philosophia.

60. Animabus provecis, quae reflexionibus mori incipiunt, et eo etiam perveniunt, ut sint mortuae, Deus confessionem aliquando efficit impossibilem et supplet ipse tanta gratia praeservante, quantam in sacramento recipient: et ideo huiusmodi animabus non est bonum in tali casu ad sacramentum paenitentiae accedere, quia id est illis impossibile.

61. Anima, cum ad mortem mysticam pervenit, non potest amplius aliud velle, quam quod Deus vult, quia non habet amplius voluntatem, et Deus illi eam abstulit.

62. Per viam internam pervenitur ad continuum statum immobilem in pace imperturbabili.

63. Per viam internam pervenitur etiam ad mortem sensuum: quin immo signum, quod quis in statu nihilitatis maneat, id est mortis mysticae, est, si sensus exteriores non representent amplius res sensibiles, unde sint ac light proceeds from God, because it comes to me joined with certitude that it comes forth from God, and it leaves in me no shadow of doubt to the contrary, in that way by which it sometimes happens that God in revealing something reassures the soul at the same time that it is he who reveals it, and the soul cannot doubt to the contrary.

54. Spiritual persons of the ordinary way will, in the hour of death, find themselves deluded and confused with all the passions that need to be purified in the other world. 2254

55. Through this interior life one reaches the point, although with much suffering, of purging and extinguishing all passions, so that he feels nothing more, nothing, nothing; nor is any disquietude felt, just as if the body were dead, nor does the soul permit itself to be moved anymore. 2255

56. Two laws and two desires (the one of the soul, the other of self-love) endure as long as self-love endures; wherefore, when this is purged and dead, as happens through the interior way, those two laws and two desires are no longer present; nor is any lapse incurred further, nor is anything felt more, not even venial sin. 2256

57. Through acquired contemplation one comes to the state of not committing any more sins, either mortal or venial. 2257

58. One arrives at such a state by no longer reflecting on his own actions, because defects arise from reflection. 2258

59. The interior way is separated from confession, from those who confess, and from cases of conscience, from theology, and from philosophy. 2259

60. For advanced souls, who begin to die from reflections and who even arrive at the point that they are dead, God sometimes makes confession impossible, and he himself supplies them with a preserving grace as great as they would have received in the sacrament; and therefore for such souls it is not good in such a case to approach the sacrament of penance, because it is impossible for them. 2260

61. When the soul arrives at mystical death, it cannot wish for anything more than what God desires, because it no longer has a will, since God has taken it away from it. 2261

62. By the interior way it arrives at a continuous, immobile state in an imperturbable peace. 2262

63. By the internal way one even arrives at the death of the senses; moreover, it is a sign that one remains in a state of nothingness, that is, of mystical death, when the exterior senses no longer represent sensible things, 2263

si non essent, quia non perveniunt ad faciendum, quod intellectus ad eas se applicet.

2264 64. Theologus minorem dispositionem habet quam homo rudis ad statum contemplativi: primo, quia non habet fidem adeo puram; secundo, quia non est adeo humilis; tertio, quia non adeo curat propriam salutem; quarto, quia caput refertum habet phantasmatis, speciebus, opinionibus et speculationibus, et non potest in illum ingredi verum lumen.

2265 65. Praepositis oboediendum est in exteriori, et latitudo voti oboedientiae religiosorum tantummodo ad exterius pertingit. In interiori vero aliter res se habet, quo solus Deus et director intrant.

2266 66. Risu digna est nova quaedam doctrina in Ecclesia Dei, quod anima quoad internum gubernari debeat ab episcopo: quod si episcopus non sit capax, anima ipsum cum suo direttore adeat. Novam dico doctrinam; quia nec sacra Scriptura, nec concilia, nec canones, nec bullae, nec Sancti, nec auctores eam umquam tradiderunt nec tradere possunt: quia Ecclesia non iudicat de occultis, et anima ius habet et facultatem eligendi quemcumque sibi visum fuerit.

2267 67. Dicere, quod internum manifestandum est exteriori tribunali praepositorum, et quod peccatum sit id non facere, est manifesta deceptio: quia Ecclesia non iudicat de occultis, et propriis animabus praeiudicat his deceptionibus et simulationibus.

2268 68. In mundo non est facultas nec iurisdictio ad praecipendum, ut manifestentur epistolae directoris quoad internum animae: et ideo opus est animadvertere, quod hoc est insultus satanae.

2269 [Censura:] Quas quidem propositiones tamquam haereticas [3, 13–15, 41–53], suspectas [haeresi proximas: 21, 23, 57, 60s; haeresim sapientes: 2, 4–10, 12, 16–19, 31s, 35s, 55s, 58] et erroneas [4–6, 8–10, 13–19, 21s, 24, 32, 35, 41–53, 58], scandalosas [6s, 9–11, 14–20, 24s, 30–52, 54, 58–60, 63s, 66], blasphemias [10, 14s, 41–53, 60], piarum aurium offensivas [6, 30, 58], temerarias [11, 14s, 17–20, 23s, 26s, 30–35, 38s, 41–68], christianae disciplinae relaxativas [10, 16, 21s, 24s, 31, 35, 38s, 41–52, 59, 65s] et eversivas [68] et seditiosas [65] respective ... damnavimus... Praeterea ... damnavimus omnes libros omniaque opera quocumque loco et idiome impressa necnon omnia manuscripta eiusdem Michaelis de Molinos.

wherefore they are as if they were not, because they no <longer> succeed in having the intellect apply itself to them.

64. A theologian is less disposed than an ignorant man for the contemplative state; in the first place, because he does not have such pure faith; secondly, because he is not so humble; thirdly, because he does not care so much for his own salvation; fourthly, because he has a head full of phantasms, images, opinions, and speculations and cannot enter into that true light.

65. It is necessary to obey superiors in external matters, and the scope of the vow of religious obedience extends only to the external. For the interior life, however, it is something different; there only God and the director enter.

66. A certain new doctrine in the Church of God is worthy of ridicule, that the soul should be governed as far as its interior is concerned by a bishop; but that if the bishop is not capable, the soul should go to him with his director. A new doctrine, I say, because neither Sacred Scripture nor councils nor bulls nor saints nor authors have ever transmitted it, or can transmit it, because the Church does not judge about hidden matters, and the soul has its faculty of choosing whatsoever shall seem good to it.

67. To say that the interior must be manifested to the exterior tribunal of directors and that it is a sin not to do so is a manifest deception, because the Church does not pass judgment on hidden matters, and they prejudge their own souls by these deceptions and hypocrisies.

68. In the world there is neither faculty nor jurisdiction for commanding that the letters of a director, as far as the interior direction of a soul is concerned, should be made manifest; therefore, it is necessary to assert that it is an insult of Satan.

[Censure:] These propositions, therefore, we have condemned, as the case may be, as heretical [3, 13–15, 41–53], suspect [proximate to heresy: 21, 23, 57, 60f.; having the flavor of heresy: 2, 4–10, 12, 16–19, 31f., 35f., 55f., 58], and erroneous [4–6, 8–10, 13–19, 21f., 24, 32, 35, 41–53, 58], scandalous [6f., 9–11, 14–20, 24f., 30–52, 54, 58–60, 63f., 66], blasphemous [10, 14f., 41–53, 60], offensive to pious ears [6, 30, 58], rash [11, 14f., 17–20, 23f., 26f., 30–35, 38f., 41–68], disruptive of Christian discipline [10, 16, 21f., 24f., 31, 35, 38f., 41–52, 59, 65f.], subversive [68], and seditious [65]... Moreover, ... we have condemned all the books and all works printed in whatever place or language as well as all the manuscripts of the same Miguel de Molinos.

ALEXANDER VIII: October 6, 1689–February 1, 1691

2281–2285: Articles of the Gallican Clergy (March 19, 1682) Declared Invalid in the Constitution Inter multiplices, August 4, 1690

Primarily because of the extension of the king's juridical competence, a conflict arose between Louis XIV, king of France, and the pope. In order to counter the pope with greater authority, Louis XIV convoked a general assembly of the clergy (October 1, 1681–June 29, 1682). By will of the king, all teachers were held bound by the four articles adopted there (articles 2–4 also touched on dogmatic matters). The Sorbonne, however, resisted. Innocent XI (brief of April 11, 1682) and Alexander VIII (in the above-mentioned constitution, which was published only on January 31, 1691) protested against the articles. Later, the king agreed to rescind the articles, and he wrote a letter of retraction (September 14, 1693). (Cf. CollLac 1:811–46, particularly nos. XI, XIVf.) The constitution of Alexander VIII did not impose a theological censure on the articles. However, when the Synod of Pistoia accepted the Gallican articles, Pius VI, in the constitution Auctorem fidei, judged them to be rash, scandalous, and offensive to the Apostolic See (*2700).

Ed.: CollLac 1:831d–832b; in the bull itself (BullTau 20:67b–70b) the text of the articles is missing.

Gallican Articles on the Rights of the Popes

1. Beato Petro eiusque successoribus Christi vicariis ipsique Ecclesiae rerum spiritualium et ad aeternam salutem pertinentium, non autem civilium ac temporalium a Deo traditam potestatem, dicente Domino: “Regnum meum non est de hoc mundo” [Io 18:36], et iterum: “Reddite ergo, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, et quae sunt Dei, Deo” [Lc 20:25], ac proinde stare Apostolicum illud: “Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit; non est enim potestas nisi a Deo; quae autem sunt, a Deo ordinatae sunt; itaque qui potestati resistit, Dei ordinationi resistit” [Rm 13:1s].

Reges ergo et principes in temporalibus nulli ecclesiasticae potestati Dei ordinatione subici, neque auctoritate clavium Ecclesiae directe vel indirecte deponi, aut illorum subditos eximi a fide atque oboedientia, ac praestitum fidelitatis sacramento solvi posse: eamque sententiam publicae tranquillitati necessariam, nec minus Ecclesiae quam Imperio utilem, ut verbo Dei, Patrum traditioni et Sanctorum exemplis consonam, omnino retinendam.

2. Sic inesse Apostolicae Sedi ac Petri successoribus, Christi vicariis, rerum spiritualium plenam potestatem, ut simul valeant atque immota consistant sanctae oecumenicae Synodi Constantiensis a Sede Apostolica comprobata ipsorumque Romanorum Pontificum ac totius Ecclesiae usu confirmata atque ab ecclesia Gallicana perpetua religione custodita decreta de auctoritate Conciliorum generalium, quae sessione quarta et quinta continentur, nec probari a Gallicana ecclesia, qui eorum decretorum, quasi dubiae sint auctoritatis ac minus approbata, robur infringant aut ad solum schismatis tempus Concilii dicta detorqueant.

1. To blessed Peter and his successors, the vicars of Christ, and to the Church herself power over spiritual things and over those pertaining to eternal salvation has been given by God, but not power over civil and temporal affairs, since the Lord said: “My kingship is not of this world” [Jn 18:36], and again: “Then render to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s, and to God the things that are God’s” [Lk 20:25]; and hence the statement of the apostle: “Let every soul be subject to the higher authorities. For there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been established by God. Therefore, he who resists the authorities resists the order established by God” [Rom 13:1f].

Therefore, by the command of God, kings and princes cannot be subject to ecclesiastical power in temporal affairs, nor can they be deposed by the authority of the keys of the Church, either directly or indirectly; nor can their subjects be released from loyalty and obedience and be freed from fulfilling their oath of allegiance; and this opinion, which is necessary for public tranquility and which is no less useful to the Church than to the empire, must by every means be retained as being in harmony with the Word of God, the tradition of the Fathers, and the examples of the saints.

2. The plenitude of power over spiritual things so belongs to the Apostolic See and the successors of Peter, the vicars of Christ, that at the same time there remain in force and continue unchanged the decrees of the holy ecumenical Council of Constance on the authority of general councils, contained in the fourth and fifth session, approved by the Apostolic See and confirmed by the practice of the Roman pontiffs themselves and by the whole Church, and always observed religiously by the Gallican Church; and not approved by the Gallican Church are those who call into question the validity of these decrees as if they were of doubtful authority and lacking approval; or who restrict (these) affirmations of the council only to the time of the schism.

- 2283 3. Hinc Apostolicae potestatis usum moderandum per canones Spiritu Dei conditos et totius mundi reverentia consecratos; valere etiam regulas, mores et instituta a regno et ecclesia Gallicana recepta, patrumque terminos manere inconcussos, atque id pertinere ad amplitudinem Apostolicae Sedis, ut statuta et consuetudines tantae Sedis et ecclesiarum consensione firmatae propriam stabilitatem obtineant.
- 2284 4. In fidei quoque quaestionibus praecipuas Summi Pontificis esse partes, eiusque decreta ad omnes et singulas ecclesias pertinere, nec tamen irreformabile esse iudicium nisi Ecclesiae consensus accesserit.
- 2285 [Sententia iudicialis Bullae:] Omnia et singula, quae tam quoad extensionem iuris regaliae, quam quoad declarationem de potestate ecclesiastica ac quattuor in ea contentas propositiones in supradictis Comitibus Cleri Gallicani anno 1682 habitis acta et gesta fuerunt, cum omnibus et singulis mandatis, arrestis, confirmationibus, declarationibus, epistolis, edictis et decretis a quibusvis personis sive ecclesiasticis sive laicis, quomodolibet qualificatis, quavis auctoritate et potestate, etiam individuum expressionem requirente, fungentibus, editis seu publicatis ... ipso iure nulla, irrita, invalida, inania, viribusque et effectu penitus et omnino vacua ab ipso initio fuisse et esse ac perpetuo fore, neminemque ad illorum seu cuiuslibet eorum, etiamsi iuramento vallata sint, observantiam teneri ... tenore praesentium declaramus.”
3. Hence the use of the apostolic power must be moderated by the canons that have been established by the Spirit of God and consecrated by the reverence of the whole world; likewise, the rules, customs, and institutes accepted by the kingdom and the Gallican Church are valid, and the limitations of the Fathers remain unshaken; and this pertains to the fullness of the Apostolic See, namely, that these statutes and customs, confirmed by the consent of both so great a See and of the Churches, retain their proper stability.
4. And in questions of faith, the part of the Roman pontiff is preeminent, and his decrees pertain to each and all of the Churches; nevertheless his judgment is not unalterable unless the consent of the Church is added.
- [Juridical decision of the bull:] Each and everything that was considered and decreed in the above-mentioned assemblies of the Gallican clergy held in the year 1682, both in regard to the extension of the right of royal power and the declaration concerning the ecclesiastical power and the four propositions contained in that declaration, with each and all of the mandates, judgments, and confirmations, declarations, epistles, edicts, and decrees edited and published by any persons whatsoever, whether ecclesiastical or lay, in whatever way qualified, and no matter what authority and power they enjoy, even the power that requires individual mention—all these acts, We declare, by the tenor of these present (writings)... by the force of the law itself, to have been from the very beginning, to be now, and always to be: null and void, invalid, useless, wholly and completely without validity and effect; and that no one is bound to observe them or any one of them, even if they were reinforced by an oath....

2290–2292: Decree of the Holy Office, August 24, 1690

The first proposition was composed from the theses of the Jesuit College of Pont-à-Mousson (in Champagne) that were publicly defended on January 14, 1689. Immediately, the Jesuit university of the same city prohibited the proposition. The condemnation of the second proposition was occasioned by a thesis presented by F. Musnier, S.J., at the College of Dijon in June 1686. It was not intended in the sense in which it was understood by its Jansenist denouncers. In regard to the significance and the historical conditions of the decree, cf. H. Beylard, “Le Pêché philosophique: Quelques précisions historiques et doctrinales”, NvRTh 62 (1935): 591–616, 673–98.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 365ab / Viva 3:3 / BullTau 20:77ab.

Errors with Regard to Moral Goodness and with Regard to Philosophical Sin

- 2290 1. Bonitas obiectiva consistit in convenientia obiecti cum natura rationali: formalis vero in conformitate actus cum regula morum. Ad hoc sufficit, ut actus moralis tendat in finem ultimum interpretative. Hunc homo non tenetur amare neque in principio neque in decursu vitae suae moralis.
1. Objective goodness consists in the correspondence of the object with natural reason: the formal, however, (consists) in the conformity of the act with the moral norm. For this reason, it is sufficient that a moral act tends in meaning toward the ultimate end. Man is not bound to love this (end) either in the beginning or in the course of his moral life.

2. Peccatum philosophicum seu morale est actus humanus disconveniēns naturae rationali et rectae rationi; theologicum vero et mortale est transgressio libera divinae legis. Philosophicum, quantumvis grave, in illo, qui Deum vel ignorat vel de Deo actu non cogitat, est grave peccatum, sed non est offensa Dei, neque peccatum mortale dissolvens amicitiam Dei, neque aeterna poena dignum.

[Censura.] Propos. 1: haeretica.—2: scandalosa, temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva et erronea.

2. A philosophical or moral sin is a human act that does not agree with rational nature and right reason; a theological and mortal sin is the free transgression of the divine law. A philosophical sin, however grievous it may be, if committed by one who either does not know God or does not actually think of God, is a grievous sin but not an offense against God; nor is it a mortal sin that breaks off the friendship with God and deserves eternal punishment.

[Censure.] Proposition 1: heretical.—2: scandalous, rash, an offense to pious ears, and erroneous. 2292

2301–2332: Decree of the Holy Office, December 7, 1690

After the condemnation of “laxism” (*2021–2065, 2101–2167), the adversaries of the Jansenists gathered more than two hundred propositions worthy of condemnation, especially from the theses and works of theologians teaching in Belgium, and urged King Charles II of Spain to submit them to the Holy Office. The examination, begun in Rome in 1682, ended in July 1686. The issuance of the decree was delayed for four years, probably to facilitate a reconciliation of the conflict that arose in 1682 pertaining to the Gallican articles (cf. *2281°).

Ed.: BullTau 20:159a–160a / DuPIA 3/II, 371b–373a / Viva 3:4–6.

Errors of the Jansenists

1. In statu naturae lapsae ad peccatum mortale [formale] et demeritum sufficit illa libertas, qua voluntarium ac liberum fuit in causa sua, peccato originali et voluntate Adami peccantis.¹

2. Tametsi detur ignorantia invincibilis iuris naturae, haec in statu naturae lapsae operantem ex ipsa non excusat a peccato formali [materiali].¹

3. Non licet sequi opinionem [probabilem] vel inter probabiles probabilissimam.¹

4. Christus dedit semetipsum pro nobis oblationem Deo, non pro solis electis, sed pro omnibus et solis fidelibus.¹

5. Pagani, Iudaei, haeretici aliique huius generis nullum omnino accipiunt a Iesu Christo influxum: adeoque hinc recte inferes, in illis esse voluntatem nudam et inermem sine omni gratia sufficienti.¹

1. In the state of fallen nature, for mortal [formal] sin and guilt that liberty suffices by which (the sin) was voluntary and free in its cause, (namely,) the original sin and will of sinful Adam.¹ 2301

2. Even if there is (such a thing as) invincible ignorance of the natural law, this, in the state of fallen nature, does not excuse from formal [material] sin the one who acts in virtue (of it).¹ 2302

3. It is not licit to follow a [probable] opinion, even the most probable among the probable ones.¹ 2303

4. Christ gave himself for us as an oblation to God, not only for the elect, but for all the faithful and only for them.¹ 2304

5. Pagans, Jews, heretics, and others of this kind do not receive in any way any influence from Jesus Christ, and so you will rightly infer from this that in them there is a bare and weak will without any sufficient grace.¹ 2305

*2301¹ Louvain thesis, June 26, 1676 (Franciscus van Vianen); July 7 and 8, 1680 (Johannes Lacman); October 13, 1665, and June 4, 1680 (Gerardus van Werm); Gommarus Huygens, Compendium theologiae, i.e., theses ex Summa D. Thomae hebdomadatim defensae ab a. 1672–1684 (Louvain, 1684?); it is a principle already found in Jansen, Augustinus 2: De statu naturae lapsae II, 2–6.

*2302¹ Louvain thesis, February 4, 1641, and January 28, 1649 (John Sinnich or Sinnigh, considered by many to be the “Father of Tutorism”); November 22, 1651 (Libertus Fromont or Froimont, editor of the works of Jansen); October 23, 1665 (van Vianen); July 12 and 13, 1672 (Macarius Havermans, O.Praem., Tyrocinium christianae moralis (Antwerp, 1674; 2nd ed., 1675), tract. 1, c. 8, § 13, no. 112, in the 1674 ed., p. 262; Antwerp thesis, July 13 and 14, 1671 (Johannes Witte). Cf. Sinnich, Saul Exrex (Louvain, 1662; 2nd ed., 1665), I, 96, §§ 359–61; 97, § 362 at the beginning; 101, § 380; anonymous, Vindiciae decalogicae desumptae ex Saule Ex-Rege Joh. Sinnichii ... (Louvain, 1672), 9, and the appendix to the work; Matthaeus van Vianen, Iuris naturalis ignorantiae notitia 2.

*2303¹ Cf. Sinnich, Saul Exrex I, 95, § 357 (in the 1665 ed: 1:363b). In this proposition, the slightly modified words of the author express the principle of absolute tutorism.

*2304¹ Louvain thesis, August 14, 1651 (Chrétien Lupus or De Wulf, O.E.S.A.).

*2305¹ Ibid. (Lupus).

- 2306 6. Gratia sufficiens statui nostro non tam utilis, quam perniciosa est, sic, ut proinde merito possimus petere: A gratia sufficienti libera nos, Domine.¹
- 2307 7. Omnis humana actio deliberata est Dei dilectio vel mundi: si Dei, caritas Patris est; si mundi, concupiscentia carnis, hoc est, mala est.¹
- 2308 8. Necessè est, infidelem in omni opere peccare.¹
- 2309 9. Revera peccat, qui odio habet peccatum mere ob eius turpitudinem et disconvenientiam cum natura, sine ullo ad Deum offensum respectu.¹
- 2310 10. Intentio, qua quis detestatur malum et prosequitur bonum mere, ut caelestem obtineat gloriam, non est recta nec Deo placens.¹
- 2311 11. Omne, quod non est ex fide christiana supernaturali, quae per dilectionem operatur, peccatum est.¹
- 2312 12. Quando in magnis peccatoribus deficit omnis amor, deficit etiam fides: et etiamsi videantur credere, non est fides divina, sed humana.¹
- 2313 13. Quisquis etiam aeternae mercedis intuitu Deo famulatur, caritate si caruerit, vitio non caret, quoties intuitu licet beatitudinis operatur.¹
- 2314 14. Timor gehennae non est supernaturalis.¹
- 2315 15. Attritio, quae gehennae et poenarum, metu concipitur, sine dilectione benevolentiae Dei propter se, non est bonus motus ac supernaturalis.¹
- 2316 16. Ordinem praemittendi satisfactionem absolutioni induxit non politia aut institutio Ecclesiae, sed ipsa Christi lex et praescriptio, natura rei id ipsum quodammodo dictante.¹
6. Grace sufficient for our state is not so much useful as pernicious, so that we can justly pray: From sufficient grace deliver us, O Lord.¹
7. Every deliberate human action is love of God or of the world; if of God, it is love of the Father; if of the world, it is the concupiscence of the flesh, that is, it is evil.¹
8. The infidel sins necessarily in every action.¹
9. In truth he sins who hates sin merely because of its vileness and its inconsistency with nature, without any reference to the offense to God.¹
10. The intention with which anyone detests evil and follows after good merely that he may obtain heavenly glory is not right or pleasing to God.¹
11. Everything that is not in accordance with supernatural Christian faith, which works through charity, is a sin.¹
12. When in great sinners all love is lacking, faith also is lacking; and even if they seem to believe, their faith is not divine but human.¹
13. Whoever serves God even in view of an eternal reward, if he lacks charity, is not free from fault, as often as he acts even in view of his eternal reward.¹
14. Fear of hell is not supernatural.¹
15. Attrition, which is conceived from the fear of hell and punishments, without the love of benevolence for God in himself, is not a good and supernatural impulse.¹
16. Neither the policy nor the institution of the Church has introduced the order of placing satisfaction before absolution, but the law and prescription of Christ, since the nature of the thing in a way demands that very order.¹

*2306¹ Louvain thesis, August 14, 1651 (Lupus; only according to the sense); August 19, 1652 (Sinnich); July 3, 1676 (Huygens); thesis of the Mechelen Seminary, April 4, 1675 (Laurentius Neesen).

*2307¹ Louvain thesis, April 4, 1661 (Sinnich); July 9, 1668 (Andreas Laurent); September 14, 1669 (Franciscus van Vianen); Antwerp thesis, May 10, 1675 (Havermans). A basis for this proposition is given by Jansen, Augustinus 2: De statu naturae lapsae III, 19.

*2308¹ Louvain thesis, April 4, 1661 (Froidmont, Sinnich, Laurent, Vianen). Cf. Sinnich, Saul Exres I, 96, § 358; 100, § 374.

*2309¹ Louvain thesis, May 23, 1653 (Froidmont); Louvain thesis, April 4, 1661 (Sinnich, Laurent, Vianen); Havermans, Tyrocinium, tract. 2, c. 4, § 2, no. 41: second intention.

*2310¹ Louvain thesis, April 4, 1661 (Sinnich, Laurent, Vianen); Havermans, Tyrocinium, tract. 2, c. 4, § 2, nos. 44f.: fifth intention.

*2311¹ Louvain thesis, December 4, 1652 (Froidmont); Louvain thesis, April 4, 1661 (Sinnich, Laurent, Vianen).

*2312¹ Antwerp thesis, May 9, 1675 (Havermans); Louvain thesis, June 25, 1676 (Vianen).

*2313¹ Louvain thesis, June 12, 1676 (Vianen).

*2314¹ Lupus, Dissertatio dogmatica de germano ac avito sensu sanctorum Patrum, universae semper Ecclesiae ac sacrosanctae praesertim Tridentinae Synodi circa christianam contritionem et attritionem 15 (Opera omnia 11; in the Venetian ed. of 1729: p. 236b); Louvain thesis, September 26, 1670 (Vianen).

*2315¹ Cf. Havermans, Defensio brevis Tyrocinii moralis theologiae (Cologne, 1676), 4, § 1 (pp. 296ff.); Louvain thesis of 1653 (van Werm); September 26, 1670 (Vianen); suggested in Lupus, Dissertatio dogmatica 17 (p. 241a).

*2316¹ Cf. Antoine Arnauld, De la fréquente communion, 2nd ed. (Paris, 1643), p. 2, c. 8; but only according to the sense, which holds true for other passages of Arnauld; the tendency in any case is manifest; Arnauld, La Tradition de l'Église sur la sujet de la pénitence et de la communion, 4th ed. (Paris, 1653), a defense of the work mentioned above: cf. preface, pp. 90ff.; Huygens, Methodus remittendi et retinendi peccata (Louvain, 1674), q. 3, dub. 3 (implicit only); Canones paenitentiales a S. Carolo Borromaeo ex antiquis Paenitentia libus collecti (Ghent, 1672), 173f.; Aegidius de Gabrielis, T.O.F., Specimina moralis christianae et moralis diabolicae (Brussels, 1675; a work that combats attritionism and that was placed on the Index on September 27, 1679, because of its strict Baianism and Jansenism; its revised edition under the title Essais de la théologie morale [Rome, 1680] likewise was forbidden on September 2, 1683; in the same work, p. 129. Aegidius denies having taught props. 16–18 in the absolute sense).

17. Per illam praxim mox absolvendi ordo paenitentiae est inversus.¹ 2317
18. Consuetudo moderna quoad administrationem sacramenti paenitentiae, etiamsi eam plurimorum hominum sustentet auctoritas et multi temporis diuturnitas confirmet, nihilominus ab Ecclesia non habetur pro usu sed abusu.¹ 2318
19. Homo debet agere tota vita paenitentiam pro peccato originali.¹ 2319
20. Confessiones apud religiosos factae pleraeque vel sacrilegae sunt vel invalidae. 2320
21. Parochianus potest suspicari de mendicantibus, qui elemosynis communibus vivunt, de imponenda nimis levi et incongrua paenitentia seu satisfactione ob quaestum seu lucrum subsidii temporalis.¹ 2321
22. Sacrilegi sunt iudicandi, qui ius ad communionem percipiendam praetendunt, antequam condignam de delictis suis paenitentiam egerint.¹ 2322
23. Similiter arcendi sunt a sacra communione, quibus nondum inest amor Dei purissimus et omnis mixtionis expers.¹ 2323
24. Oblatio in templo, quae fiebat a beata Virgine Maria in die purificationis suae per duos pullos columbarum, unum in holocaustum et alterum pro peccatis, sufficienter testatur, quod indiguerit purificatione, et quod filius, qui offerebatur, etiam macula matris maculatus esset, secundum verba legis.¹ 2324
25. Dei Patris [sedentis] simulacrum nefas est christiano in templo collocare.¹ 2325
26. Laus, quae defertur Mariae ut Mariae, vana est.¹ 2326
27. Valuit aliquando baptismus sub hac forma collatus: “In nomine Patris, etc.”, praetermissis illis: “Ego te baptizo”.¹ 2327

*2317¹ Cf. Arnauld, De la fréquente communion, p. 2, c. 11; Gabrielis, Specimina moralis, p. 2, § 42 (pp. 154f.).

*2318¹ Cf. Arnauld, De la fréquente communion, preface; p. 2, c. 18 and 19; Gabrielis, Specimina moralis, p. 2, § 42 (pp. 154f.).

*2319¹ From the Catechism of Ghent that was later forbidden.

*2321¹ Bonaventure de la Bassée O.F.M.Cap. (who had previously been named Louis le Pippre), Theophilus parochialis (published anonymously, Antwerp, 1635), p. 3, a. 26, and elsewhere.

*2322¹ Cf. Arnauld, De la fréquente communion, preface; p. 1, c. 4; p. 2, c. 13; the whole book follows the sense of this proposition and the next one; Gabrielis, Specimina moralis, p. 2, § 20.

*2323¹ Cf. Arnauld, De la fréquente communion, p. 1, c. 40; p. 3, c. 6 and 9; Gabrielis, Specimina moralis, p. 2, § 20.

*2324¹ Cf. Inwendighe oeffeningen, om in den gheest te sterven, by a priest of the Oratory published anonymously (Brussels, 1657); this work is simply the translation of the work Pratique intérieure pour mourir en esprit (Paris, 1654); exercise of the fifth day; in the original text in Flemish, Mary is not mentioned (this was added by the redactor of the proposition), and this is why the words of the author apply for Hebrew mothers in general; nevertheless, there is reason to suspect that the author wished to suggest implicitly prop. 73 of Baius (*1973).

*2325¹ Cf. Jan Hessels (the companion of Michael Baius), Brevi et catholica decalogi explicatio (Louvain, 1567), c. 64f.; he refers to the Synod of Elvira (= Granada) ca. A.D. 300, can. 36, and to Augustine, De fide et symbolo 7.

*2326¹ Adam Widenfeld, Monita salutaria Beatae Mariae Virginis ad cultores suos indiscretos (Ghent, 1673; trans. G. Gerberon, the notable Baianist: Lille, 1674; placed on the Index “until corrected”); Inwendighe oeffeningen (cf. *2324).

*2327¹ Louvain thesis, April 21, 1677 (François Farvaques, O.E.S.A.).

- 2328 28. Valet baptismus collatus a ministro, qui omnem ritum externum formamque baptizandi observat, intus vero in corde suo apud se resolvit: Non intendo, quod facit Ecclesia.¹
28. Baptism is valid when conferred by a minister who observes all the external rite and form of baptizing but within his heart resolves, I do not intend what the Church does.¹
- 2329 29. Futilis et toties convulsa est assertio de Pontificis Romani supra Concilium oecumenicum auctoritate atque in fidei quaestionibus decernendis infallibilitate.¹
29. The assertion of the authority of the Roman pontiff over an ecumenical council and infallibility in deciding questions of faith is futile and often contradicted.¹
- 2330 30. Ubi quis invenerit doctrinam in Augustino clare fundatam, illam absolute potest tenere et docere, non respiciendo ad ullam Pontificis Bullam.¹
30. When anyone finds a doctrine clearly established in Augustine, he can absolutely hold and teach it, disregarding any bull of the pope.¹
- 2331 31. Bulla Urbani VIII “In eminenti” est subreptitia.¹
31. The bull of Urban VIII In eminenti was obtained by deceit.¹
- 2332 [Censura: Damnatae et prohibitae tamquam] temerariae, scandalosae, male sonantes, iniuriosae, haeresi proximae, haeresim sapientes, erroneae, schismaticae, et haereticae respective.
- [Censure: Condemned and prohibited as being], according to the case, rash, scandalous, evil-sounding, unjust, proximate to heresy, having the flavor of heresy, erroneous, schismatic, and heretical.

INNOCENT XII: July 12, 1691–September 27, 1700

2340: Response of the Holy Office to Capuchin Missionaries, July 23, 1698

Ed.: CdICF 4:40 (no. 761) / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:84f. (no. 243).

Marriage as Contract and Sacrament

- 2340 Qu.: An matrimonium inter apostatas a fide, et antea rite baptizatos, post apostasiam, publice more gentilium vel Mahumetanorum initum, sit vere matrimonium et sacramentum.
- Question*: Is a marriage publicly entered into according to the customs of pagans or Muhammadans by apostates from the faith, after their apostasy, who previously had been duly baptized, a true marriage and a sacrament?
- Resp.*: Si adsit pactum dissolubilitatis, non esse matrimonium neque sacramentum; si vero non adsit, esse matrimonium et sacramentum.
- Response*: If there is an agreement of dissolubility, then it is neither a marriage nor a sacrament; but if there is no such agreement, it is a marriage and a sacrament.

2351–2374: Brief Cum alias ad apostolatus, March 12, 1699

Because of the spread of quietism by Jeanne Marie Bouvier de la Motte-Guyon (“Madame Guyon”, 1648–1717), certain prelates met at the seminary of St. Sulpice at Issy. At conferences between July 1694 and March 1695, thirty-four articles were compiled about the Catholic teaching on contemplation and pure love. One of the participants, Jacques-Bénigne Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, published and explained these articles in his Instruction sur les états d’oraison (1697). François de Salignac Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai, who was a friend of Madame Guyon, took up the defense of a moderate quietism. The publication of his Explication des Maximes des Saints sur la vie intérieure (Paris, February 1697) preempted the book by the bishop of Meaux. The declaration issued by certain bishops on August 6, 1697, reinforced the position to the disadvantage of Fénelon. The controversy was finally resolved by this brief of Innocent XII. In his own edict, the Mandement of April 9, 1699, Fénelon informed the people of his diocese that he had submitted to the pope’s decision.

*2328¹ Louvain thesis of 1678 (Farvacques); cf. Farvacques, Opusculum, in quo de sacramentis Novae Legis generatim agitur (Liège, 1680), in which he develops a system called “external juridicism” or “juridical extrinsicism”. An analogous conception was upheld by Johannes M. Scribonius, O.Min., Panthaltia, seu Summa totius veritatis theologicae (Paris, 1620), disp. 1 de sacramentis, q. 6 and 7.

*2329¹ Allusion is made to a Louvain thesis of November 3, 1685 (Johannes Opstraet?).

*2330¹ Antwerp thesis, March 8, 1677 (Havermans); thereupon Havermans responded in his Defensio brevis 1, § 5 (pp. 112ff.).

*2331¹ Louvain thesis, October 19, 1678. In the bull In eminenti ecclesiae, issued on March 6, 1642 (1641 according to the curial dating) and made public on June 19, 1643 (BullTau 15:92b–102b / BullCocq 6/II:270b–276b), the constitutions against Baius of Pius V, Ex omnibus afflictionibus (*1901–1980), and Gregory XIII, Provisionis nostrae (January 29, 1580), are confirmed and extensively repeated; reference is likewise made to the decrees of the Holy Office of December 1, 1611, and May 22, 1625, which subjected all works on the aids of grace to Roman censorship and forbade some works published against this command.

The censure of the propositions is given only generally in the brief. The classification of the Roman consultors is indicated in *2374 [in brackets] according to N. Terzago, cited below, 166ff.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 402–6 / N. Terzago, Theologia historico-mystica (Venice, 1764), 26b–27a / BullTau 20:870b–872b / BullLux 10:219b–220a / Viva 1:562f. / Guibert, nos. 499–504. The text of the French original of the passages is included in DuPIA and Guibert.

Errors of François de Fénelon on the Love toward God

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. Datur habitualis status amoris Dei, qui est caritas pura et sine ulla admixtione motivi proprii interesse. Neque timor poenarum, neque desiderium remunerationum habent amplius in eo partem. Non amatur amplius Deus propter meritum, neque propter perfectionem, neque propter felicitatem in eo amando inveniendam.¹ | 1. There is a habitual state of the love of God, which is pure charity and without any admixture of the motive of one's personal interest. Neither fear of punishment nor desire of reward any longer has a share in it. God is no longer loved for the sake of merit or because of perfection or because of the happiness to be found in loving him.¹ 2351 |
| 2. In statu vitae contemplativae sive unitivae amittitur omne motivum interessatum timoris et spei.¹ | 2. In the state of the contemplative or unitive life, every interested motive of fear and hope is lost.¹ 2352 |
| 3. Id, quod est essentialia in directione animae, est non aliud facere, quam sequi pedetentim gratiam cum infinita patientia, praecautione et subtilitate. Oportet se intra hos limites continere, ut sinatur Deus agere, et numquam ad purum amorem ducere, nisi quando Deus per unctionem interiorum incipit aperire cor huic verbo, quod adeo durum est animabus adhuc sibimet affixis, et adeo potest illas scandalizare aut in perturbationem conicere.¹ | 3. That which is essential in the direction of a soul is to do nothing else than to follow grace, step by step with infinite patience, precaution, and subtlety. One should restrain himself within these limits so that God may be permitted to act, and he should never aspire to pure love, except when God by an interior unction begins to open the heart to this word, which is so hard for souls heretofore attached to self and can therefore scandalize them or cause them confusion.¹ 2353 |
| 4. In statu sanctae indifferentiae anima non habet amplius desideria voluntaria et deliberata propter suum interesse, exceptis iis occasionibus, in quibus totae suae gratiae fideliter non cooperatur.¹ | 4. In the state of holy indifference, a soul no longer has voluntary and deliberate desires for its own interest, with the exception of those occasions on which it does not faithfully cooperate with the whole of its grace.¹ 2354 |
| 5. In eodem statu sanctae indifferentiae nihil nobis, omnia Deo volumus. Nihil volumus, ut simus perfecti et beati propter interesse proprium; sed omnem perfectionem ac beatitudinem volumus, in quantum Deo placet efficere, ut velimus res istas impressione suae gratiae.¹ | 5. In the same state of holy indifference we wish nothing for ourselves, (but) all for God. We do not wish that we be perfect and happy for self-interest, but we wish all perfection and happiness only insofar as it pleases God to bring it about that we wish for these states by the impression of his grace.¹ 2355 |
| 6. In hoc sanctae indifferentiae statu nolumus amplius salutem ut salutem propriam, ut liberationem aeternam, ut mercedem nostrorum meritorum, ut nostrum interesse omnium maximum; sed eam volumus voluntate plena, ut gloriam et beneplacitum Dei, ut rem, quam ipse vult, et quam nos vult velle propter ipsum.¹ | 6. In this state of holy indifference we no longer seek salvation as our own salvation, as our eternal liberation, as a reward of our merits, or as the greatest of all our interests, but we wish it with our whole will as the glory and good pleasure of God, as the thing that he wishes and that he wishes us to wish for his sake.¹ 2356 |
| 7. Derelictio non est nisi abnegatio seu sui ipsius renuntiatio, quam Iesus Christus a nobis in Evangelio requirit, postquam externa omnia reliquerimus. Ista | 7. Abandonment is nothing else than the abnegation or renunciation of oneself, which Jesus Christ requires of us in the Gospel, after we have left all external things. 2357 |

*2351¹ Cf. the [preceding] Explication des Maximes des Saints sur la vie intérieure, no. 5; original ed. of 1697; pp. 10f. (= pp. 125f. of the critical ed. of Albert Cherel [Paris, 1911]; pp. 118–30.

*2352¹ Art. 2, p. 24; cf. p. 23 (Cherel 135).

*2353¹ Art. 3, pp. 53f. (Cherel 142).

*2354¹ Art. 5, p. 50 (Cherel 154).

*2355¹ Ibid., p. 52 (Cherel 156).

*2356¹ Cf. ibid. (Cherel 157).

nostri ipsorum abnegatio non est nisi quoad interesse proprium... Extremæ probationes, in quibus haec abnegatio seu sui ipsius derelictio exerceri debet, sunt tentationes, quibus Deus aemulator vult purgare amorem, nullum ei ostendendo perfugium neque ullam spem quoad suum interesse proprium, etiam aeternum.¹

2358 8. Omnia sacrificia, quae fieri solent ab animabus quam maxime disinteressatis circa earum aeternam beatitudinem, sunt condicionalia... Sed hoc sacrificium non potest esse absolutum in statu ordinario. In uno extremarum probationum casu hoc sacrificium fit aliquo modo absolutum.¹

2359 9. In extremis probationibus potest animae invincibiliter persuasum esse persuasione reflexa, et quae non est intimus conscientiae fundus, se iuste reprobam esse a Deo.¹

2360 10. Tunc anima divisa a semetipsa expirat cum Christo in cruce, dicens: “Deus, Deus meus, ut quid dereliquisti me?” [Mt 27:46]. In hac involuntaria impressione desperationis conficit sacrificium absolutum sui interesse proprii quoad aeternitatem.¹

2361 11. In hoc statu anima amittit omnem spem sui proprii interesse; sed numquam amittit in parte superiore, id est in suis actibus directis et intimis, spem perfectam, quae est desiderium disinteressatum promissionum.¹

2362 12. Director tunc potest huic animae permittere, ut simpliciter acquiescat iacturae sui proprii interesse et iustae condemnationi, quam sibi a Deo indictam credit.¹

2363 13. Inferior Christi pars in cruce non communicavit superiori suas involuntarias perturbationes.¹

2364 14. In extremis probationibus pro purificatione amoris fit quaedam separatio partis superioris animae ab inferiore... In ista separatione actus partis inferioris manant ex omnino caeca et involuntaria perturbatione: nam totum, quod est voluntarium et intellectuale, est partis superioris.¹

2365 15. Meditatio constat discursivis actibus, qui a se invicem facile distinguuntur... Ista compositio actuum discursivorum et reflexorum est propria exercitatio amoris interessati.¹

This denial of ourselves is only with regard to our own interest... The extreme trials in which this abnegation or abandonment of self must be exercised are the temptations by means of which a jealous God seeks to purify love, by holding out to it no refuge or any hope for its welfare, even eternal.¹

8. All sacrifices that are wont to be made by souls who are as disinterested as possible about their eternal happiness are conditional... But this sacrifice cannot be absolute in the ordinary state. Only in the case of extreme trials does this sacrifice become in some manner absolute.¹

9. In extreme trials a soul can be invincibly persuaded by a reflex persuasion (and this is not the deep foundation of conscience) that it has been justly rejected by God.¹

10. Then a soul separated from itself expires with Christ on the Cross, saying: “My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?” [Mt 27:46]. In this involuntary expression of despair there is completed the absolute sacrifice of one’s own interest insofar as eternity is concerned.¹

11. In this state a soul loses all hope of its own interest; but never does it lose in its higher part, that is in its direct and inner acts, a perfect hope, which is a disinterested longing for the promises.¹

12. Then a director can permit this soul to acquiesce simply in the loss of its own interest and in the just condemnation it believes has been enjoined on it by God.¹

13. The inferior part of Christ on the Cross did not communicate his involuntary disturbances to his superior part.¹

14. In the extreme trials for the purification of love there takes place a certain separation of the upper part of the soul from the lower... In that separation the acts of the lower part flow from a completely blind and involuntary disturbance, for, whatever is voluntary and intellectual is of the higher part.¹

15. Meditation consists of discursive acts that are easily distinguished from one another... The putting together of the discursive and reflex acts is the proper exercise of an interested love.¹

*2357¹ Art. 8., p. 72 (Cherel 176).

*2358¹ Art. 10, p. 87 (Cherel 187).

*2359¹ Cf. ibid. (Cherel 188).

*2360¹ Ibid., p. 90 (Cherel 191).

*2361¹ Ibid., p. 91 (Cherel 193).

*2362¹ Ibid., pp. 91f. (Cherel 193).

*2363¹ Art. 14, p. 122 (Cherel 214).

*2364¹ Cf. ibid. (Cherel 215).

*2365¹ Art. 21, pp. 164f. (Cherel 243f.).

16. Datur status contemplationis adeo sublimis adeoque perfectae, ut fiat habitualis: ita ut, quoties anima actu orat, sua oratio sit contemplativa non discursiva. Tunc non amplius indiget redire ad meditationem eiusque actus methodicos.¹

17. Animae contemplativae privantur intuitu distincto, sensibili et reflexo Iesu Christi duobus temporibus diversis: primo in fervore nascente earum contemplationis; secundo anima amittit intuitum Iesu Christi in extremis probationibus.¹

18. In statu passivo exercentur omnes virtutes distinctae, non cogitando, quod sint virtutes. In quolibet momento aliud non cogitatur, quam facere id, quod Deus vult, et amor zelotypus simul efficit, ne quis amplius sibi virtutem velit nec umquam sit adeo virtute praeditus, quam cum virtuti amplius affixus non est.¹

19. Potest dici in hoc sensu, quod anima passiva et disinteressata nec ipsum amorem vult amplius, quatenus est sua perfectio et sua felicitas, sed solum quatenus est id, quod Deus a nobis vult.¹

20. In confitendo debent animae transformatae sua peccata detestari et condemnare se et desiderare remissionem suorum peccatorum non ut propriam purificationem et liberationem, sed ut rem, quam Deus vult et vult nos velle propter suam gloriam.¹

21. Sancti mystici excluserunt a statu animarum transformatarum exercitationes virtutum.¹

22. Quamvis haec doctrina (de puro amore) esset pura et simplex perfectio evangelica in universa traditione designata, antiqui pastores non proponebant passim multitudini iustorum, nisi exercitia amoris interessati eorum gratiae proportionata.¹

23. Purus amor ipse solus constituit totam vitam interiorem; et tunc evadit unicum principium et unicum motivum omnium actuum, qui deliberati et meritorii sunt.¹

[Censura:] ... Librum praedictum ..., quippe ex cuius lectione et usu fideles sensim in errores ab Ecclesia catholica iam damnatos induci possent,

ac insuper tamquam continentem propositiones, sive in obvio earum verborum sensu sive attentata

16. There is a state of contemplation so sublime and so perfect that it becomes habitual; so that, as often as a soul actually prays, its prayer is contemplative, not discursive. Then it no longer needs to return to meditation and to its methodical acts.¹ 2366

17. Contemplative souls are deprived of a distinct, sensible, and reflex vision of Jesus Christ at two different times: first, in the newborn fervor of their contemplation; secondly, when the soul loses the vision of Jesus Christ in extreme trials.¹ 2367

18. In the passive state all the distinct virtues are exercised without any thought that they are virtues. At every moment no other thought is in the mind than to do that which God wishes, and a zealous love likewise brings it about that no one any longer desires virtue for himself nor is he ever so endowed with virtue as when he is no longer attached to virtue.¹ 2368

19. In this sense it can be said that a soul in a passive and disinterested state no longer wishes even love itself, insofar as it is its perfection and its happiness, but only insofar as it is that which God wishes of us.¹ 2369

20. In confession transformed souls must detest their sins and condemn themselves and desire the remission of their sins, not as a personal purification and liberation, but as the thing that God wills and that he wills us to will because of his glory.¹ 2370

21. Holy mystics have excluded from the state of transformed souls the practices of virtues.¹ 2371

22. Although this doctrine (of pure love) was noted in the universal tradition as pure and simple evangelical perfection, the ancient pastors proposed to the multitude of the just everywhere only the practices of interested love proportionate to their grace.¹ 2372

23. Pure love itself alone constitutes the whole interior life; and thence arises the only principle and the only motive of all acts that are deliberate and meritorious.¹ 2373

[Censure:] ... Because by the reading and use of the aforesaid book ..., the faithful could be gradually led into errors already condemned by the Catholic Church, and also because it contains propositions that, either in the obvious sense of their words or in the

*2366¹ Art. 24, p. 176 (Cherel 249).

*2367¹ Art. 28, pp. 194f. (Cherel 259).

*2368¹ Art. 33, p. 225 (Cherel 275f.).

*2369¹ Ibid., p. 226 (Cherel 276).

*2370¹ Art. 38, p. 241 (Cherel 285).

*2371¹ Art. 40, p. 253 (Cherel 291).

*2372¹ Art. 44, p. 261 (Cherel 296).

*2373¹ Conclusion, p. 272 (Cherel 302).

sententiarum connexione, temerarias [Is, 8, 10, 15–20, 22], scandalosas [7, 10, 12, 19–21], male sonantes [4–6, 23], piarum aurium offensivas [8, 18], in praxi perniciosas [2, 14, 17] ac etiam erroneas [1–7, 10s, 13, 17–19, 22s] respective, tenore praesentium damnamus et reprobamus ipsiusque libri impressionem ... prohibemus.

context of the ideas expressed, are respectively: rash [If, 8, 10, 15–20, 22], scandalous [7, 10, 12, 19–21], evil-sounding [4–6, 23], offensive to pious ears [8, 18], pernicious in practice [2, 14, 17], and also erroneous [1–7, lof, 13, 17–19, 22f.], by the tenor of these present writings, We condemn and reject ... and prohibit the printing of this book.

CLEMENT XI: November 23, 1700–March 19, 1721

2380: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Quebec, January 25, 1703

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., no. 254, § 2 / ASS 30 (1897/1898): 700 n.

The Truths to Be Believed Because Necessary for Salvation

2380 Qu.: Utrum, antequam adulto conferatur baptisma, minister ei teneatur explicare omnia fidei nostrae mysteria, praesertim si est moribundus, quia hoc perturbaret mentem illius? An non sufficeret, si moribundus promitteret fore ut, ubi e morbo conualescet, instruendum se curet, ut in praxim redigat, quod ei praescriptum fuerit?

Resp.: Non sufficere promissionem, sed missionarium teneri adulto, etiam moribundo, qui incapax omnino non sit, explicare mysteria fidei, quae sunt necessaria necessitate medii, ut sunt praecipue mysteria Trinitatis et Incarnationis.

Question: Is a minister bound, before baptism is conferred on an adult, to explain to him all the mysteries of our faith, especially if he is at the point of death, because this might disturb his mind. Or, is it sufficient, if the one at the point of death will promise that when he recovers from the illness he will take care to be instructed, so that he may put into practice what has been commanded him.

Response: A promise is not sufficient, but a missionary is bound to explain to an adult, even a dying one who is not entirely incapacitated, the mysteries of faith that are necessary (for salvation) by a necessity of means, as are especially the mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation.

2381–2382: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Quebec, May 10, 1703

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., no. 256, §§ 2 and 8.—[only *2381:] ASS 30 (1897/1898): 700f., note.

The Faith and Intention of the Recipient of the Sacraments

2381 Qu. 2: An possit baptizari adultus rudis et stupidus, ut contigit in barbaro, si ei detur sola Dei cognitio et aliquorum eius attributorum, praesertim iustitiae remunerativae et vindicativae, iuxta hunc Apostoli locum: Accedentem ad Deum oportet credere, quia est et remunerator est [cf. Hbr 11:6], ex quo infertur, adultum barbarum in certo casu urgentis necessitatis posse baptizari, quamvis non credat explicite in Iesum Christum.

Resp.: Missionarium non posse baptizare non credentem explicite in Dominum Iesum Christum, sed teneri illum instruere de omnibus iis, quae sunt necessaria necessitate medii iuxta captum baptizandi.

Question 2: Is it possible for a crude and uneducated adult, as it might be with a barbarian, to be baptized, if there were given to him only an understanding of God and some of his attributes, especially his justice in rewarding and in punishing, according to this remark of the apostle: “Whoever would draw near to God must believe that he exists and that he is a rewarder” [cf. Heb 11:6], from which it is inferred that a barbarian adult, in a certain case of urgent necessity, can be baptized although he does not believe explicitly in Jesus Christ?

Response: A missionary should not baptize one who does not believe explicitly in the Lord Jesus Christ, but is bound to instruct him about all those matters that are necessary (for salvation), by a necessity of means, in accordance with the capacity of the one to be baptized.

2382 Qu. 8: Utrum conferendum sit viaticum aut extrema unctio moribundis adultis, quos aliquando baptismi capaces credimus, non autem Communionis aliorumque sacramentorum?

Question 8: Should the viaticum or extreme unction be conferred on dying adults whom we believe to have the capacity at the time to receive baptism but not, however, communion or the other sacraments?

Resp.: Non esse administrandum viaticum neophyto moribundo, nisi saltem discernat cibum spiritualem a corporali, cognoscendo et credendo in sacra hostia praesentiam Christi Domini. Non esse pariter conferendum sacramentum extremae unctionis neophyto moribundo quem missionarius capacem baptismi credit, nisi saltem idem habeat aliquam intentionem recipiendi sacram unctionem in beneficium animae pro mortis tempore ordinatam.

Response: The viaticum should not be administered to a dying neophyte, except when he may at least distinguish the spiritual food from the corporeal, knowing and believing the presence of Christ, the Lord, in the sacred host. Likewise, the sacrament of extreme unction should not be conferred upon a dying neophyte whom the missionary believed capable of receiving baptism unless he has at least some intention of receiving the holy unction for the benefit of the soul at the time of death.

2390: Constitution Vineam Domini Sabaoth, July 16, 1705

The Jansenists who subscribed to the formula of Alexander VII (*2020) declared that there was imposed on them only an exterior submission, not an interior assent. The problem, discussed publicly in 1702, of whether it was permitted to absolve someone who did not acknowledge the obligation of obediencial silence regarding the condemnation of Jansenism (cf. BullTau 21:80b–81b) moved Louis XIV to request this constitution from Clement XI.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 448 / BullTau 21:235b/ BullLux 8:36a.

Obediencial Silence in Regard to Dogmatic Facts

(§ 6 vel 25). Ut quaevis imposterum erroris occasio penitus praecidatur, atque omnes catholicae Ecclesiae filii Ecclesiam ipsam audire, non tacendo solum (nam et impii in tenebris conticescunt [cf. 1 Sm 2:9]), sed et interius obsequendo, quae vera est orthodoxi hominis oboedientia, condiscant: hac Nostra perpetuo valitura constitutione, oboedientiae, quae praeinsertis Apostolicis constitutionibus debetur, obsequioso illo silentio nequaquam satisfieri; sed damnatum in quinque praefatis propositionibus Ianseniani libri sensum, quem illarum verba prae se ferunt, ut praefertur, ab omnibus Christi fidelibus ut haereticum, non ore solum, sed et corde reici ac damnari debere; nec alia mente, animo aut credulitate supradictae formulae subscribi licite posse, ita ut, qui secus aut contra quoad haec omnia et singula senserint, tenerint, praedicaverint, verbo vel scripto docuerint aut asseruerint, tamquam praefatarum Apostolicarum constitutionum transgressores omnibus et singulis illarum censuris et poenis omnino subiaceant, eadem auctoritate Apostolica decernimus, declaramus, statuimus et ordinamus.

(§ 6 or 25). In order that every occasion of error may be totally avoided in the future and that all the sons of the Catholic Church may learn to listen to the Church herself, not in silence only (for even the wicked are silent in darkness [cf. 1 Sam 2:9]), but also with interior obedience, which is the true obedience of the orthodox man: We, in virtue of the same apostolic authority, by this constitution of Ours, which is to be perpetually valid, decree, declare, determine, and ordain that the obedience that is due to the aforementioned apostolic constitutions is not at all satisfied by such obediencial silence; but the meaning condemned in the above-mentioned five propositions of Jansen's book, whose (meaning) the words express as they are expressed, must be rejected and condemned as heretical by all the faithful of Christ, not only by the mouth but also in the heart; and the above-mentioned formula cannot be licitly subscribed to with any other intention, mind, or conviction, so that (all those) who, on all these points and on each in particular, should think, hold, preach, teach, or assert, by word or in writing, something else or in opposition are transgressors of the above-mentioned apostolic constitutions, and they are entirely subject to each and every censure and penalty they contain. 2390

2400–2502: Constitution Unigenitus Dei Filius, September 8, 1713

Pasquier Quesnel, the leader of the Jansenist party after Antoine Arnould, published in Paris in 1671 the work Abrégé de la morale de l'Évangile, ou Pensées chrétiennes sur le texte des 4 Évangelistes. In 1687, he published a complementary text: Abrégé de la morale des Actes, des Épîtres canoniques, de l'Apocalypse. This work, reprinted and enlarged several times, received in 1693 a new title: Le Nouveau Testament en français avec des réflexions morales sur chaque verset. In this work there were errors so evident that Noailles, the archbishop of Paris, requested corrections. But fault was also found with the edition of 1699. In his brief Universi dominici gregis of July 13, 1708 (BullTau 21:327b–329a), Clement XI prohibited the work of Quesnel. Since the prohibition did not make any impression on the Jansenists, the pope in the constitution Unigenitus Dei Filius, at the insistent request of King Louis XIV of France, formally condemned Quesnel's book and 101 propositions taken from it. The condemnation—carefully prepared in seventeen sessions of theologians and twenty-three of cardinals—refers both to the 1693 edition of the work (presented in Latin) as well as the edition of 1699. In the case of statements that occur in only one of the two editions, the constitution, which indicates the sources of the propositions, notes the year.

Some French bishops who were friends of Quesnel appealed to the pope for a general council and were consequently excommunicated by Clement XI in the bull Pastoralis officii of August 28, 1718 (published September 8). This bull confirmed the previous decrees against the Jansenists. Later, Innocent XIII (decree of January 8, 1722), Benedict XII (Synod of Rome of 1725), and Benedict XIV (encyclical Ex omnibus christiani orbis of October 16, 1756) upheld the validity of the constitution Unigenitus Dei Filius, since its authority was always being contested. Cf. the work by Jacques-Hyacinthe Serry, O.P., Theologia supplex coram Clemente XII Pontifice Maximo Clementinae Constitutionis “Unigenitus Dei Filius” explicationem atque intelligentiam rogans (Cologne, 1736), published anonymously and placed on the Index on January 14, 1737, which, among others, defends propositions 27, 66, 69, 76, 82, 84f., 98, and 101.

Without doubt, there are similarities between assertions of Augustine and some propositions of Quesnel: In evangelium Iohannis tractatus III, 8 (PL 35:1399 / CpChL 36 [1954]: 24) [for propositions 27f.]; Enchiridion 117 (PL 40:287 / CpChL 46 [1969]: 112) [for proposition 45]; De praedestinatione Sanctorum 8, no. 13 (PL 44:970) [for proposition 17]; De correptione et gratia 14, no. 43 (PL 44:942) [for proposition 13]; however, there cannot be accorded to the doctrine of Augustine an unlimited authority as Calvin, Baius, and Jansen affirm.

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II, 462–74 (with the French text) / BullTau 21:568a–574a / BullLux 8:119a–121b / Viva 2:1ff. / Clement XI, Bullarium complectens Bullas ... annorum 1701–1721 [anonymously published as Opera omnia] (Frankfurt am Main, 1729), 325–32.

Jansenistic Errors of Pasquier Quesnel

- | | | |
|-------------|--|---|
| 2400 | (§ 2) ... Perspicue novimus summam huiusmodi libri perniciem ideo potissimum progredi et invalescere, quod eadem intus lateat et velut improba sanies non nisi secto ulcere foras erumpat, cum ipse liber primo aspectu legentes specie quadam pietatis illiciat.... | (§ 2) ... We are aware that the great harm done by this book increases and flourishes chiefly because it lies concealed within it and only comes forth like a diseased humor from a cut ulcer; for at first sight the book attracts readers by a certain appearance of piety.... |
| 2401 | (§3) 1. Quid aliud remanet animae, quae Deum atque ipsius gratiam amisit, nisi peccatum et peccati consecutiones, superba paupertas et segnis indigentia, hoc est generalis impotentia ad laborem, ad orationem et ad omne opus bonum? —Exstat haec propositio in Observationibus moralibus Quesnelli ad Lc 16:3. | (§ 3) 1. What else is left in the soul that has lost God and his grace except sin and its effects, proud poverty and sluggish indigence, that is, a general inability to work, to pray, and to do any good work? —This proposition is found in the Observations morales of Quesnel in regard to Lk 16:3. |
| 2402 | 2. Iesu Christi gratia, principium efficax boni cuiuscumque generis, necessaria est ad omne opus bonum; absque illa non solum nihil fit, sed nec fieri potest. —Io 15:5: ed. 1693. | 2. The grace of Jesus Christ, which is the efficacious principle of every kind of good, is necessary for every good work; without it, not only is nothing done, but nothing can be done. —Jn 15:5: 1693 ed. |
| 2403 | 3. In vanum, Domine, praecipis, si tu ipse non das, quod praecipis. —Act 16:10. | 3. In vain, O Lord, do you command, if you do not give what you command. —Acts 16:10. |
| 2404 | 4. Ita, Domine, omnia possibilea sunt ei, cui omnia possibilea facis, eadem operando in illo. —Mc 9:22. | 4. Thus, O Lord, all things are possible to him for whom you make all things possible by effecting those same things in him. —Mk 9:2. |
| 2405 | 5. Quando Deus non emollit cor per interiorem unctionem gratiae suae, exhortationes et gratiae exteriores non inserviunt, nisi ad illud magis obdurandum. —Rm 9:18: ed. 1693. | 5. When God does not soften a heart by the interior unction of his grace, exterior exhortations and graces are of no service except to harden it the more. —Rom 9:18: 1693 ed. |
| 2406 | 6. Discrimen inter foedus iudaicum et christianum est, quod in illo Deus exigit fugam peccati et implementum legis a peccatore, relinquendo illum in sua impotentia: in isto vero Deus peccatori dat, quod iubet, illum sua gratia purificando. —Rm 11:27. | 6. The difference between the Judaic covenant and the Christian is this, that in the former God demanded flight from sin and a fulfillment of the law by the sinner, leaving him in his own weakness; but in the latter, God gives the sinner what he commands, by purifying him with his grace. —Rom 11:27. |
| 2407 | 7. Quae utilitas pro homine in vetere foedere, in quo Deus illum reliquit eius propriae infirmitati, imponendo ipsi suam legem? Quae vero felicitas non est admitti ad foedus, in quo Deus nobis donat, quod petit a nobis? —Hbr 8:7. | 7. What advantage (was) there for man in the Old Covenant, in which God left him to his own weakness, while imposing on him his law? But what happiness is there not in being admitted to a covenant in which God gives to us what he asks of us? —Heb 8:7. |
| 2408 | 8. Nos non pertinemus ad novum foedus, nisi in quantum participes sumus ipsius novae gratiae, quae operatur in nobis id, quod Deus nobis praecipit. —Hbr 8:10. | 8. But we do not belong to the New Covenant except insofar as we are participators in that new grace which works in us that which God commands us. —Heb 8:10. |

9. Gratia Christi est gratia suprema, sine qua confiteri Christum numquam possumus, et cum qua numquam illum abnegamus. —1 Cor 12:3: ed. 1693. 2409
 9. The grace of Christ is a supreme grace, without which we can never confess Christ and with which we never deny him. —1 Cor 12:3: 1693 ed.
10. Gratia est operatio manus omnipotentis Dei, quam nihil impedire potest aut retardare. —Mt 20:34. 2410
 10. Grace is the working of the omnipotent hand of God, which nothing can hinder or retard. —Mt 20:34.
11. Gratia non est aliud quam voluntas omnipotens Dei iubentis et facientis, quod iubet. —Mc 2:11. 2411
 11. Grace is nothing else than the omnipotent will of God, ordering and doing what he orders. —Mk 2:11.
12. Quando Deus vult salvare animam, quocumque tempore, quocumque loco, effectus indubitabilis sequitur voluntatem Dei. —Mc 2:12. 2412
 12. When God wishes to save a soul, at whatever time and at whatever place, the undoubted effect follows the will of God. —Mk 2:12.
13. Quando Deus vult animam salvam facere et eam tangit interiore gratiae suae manu, nulla voluntas humana ei resistit. —Lc 5:13: ed. 1693. 2413
 13. When God wishes to save a soul and touches it with the interior hand of his grace, no human will resists him. —Lk 5:13: 1693 ed.
14. Quantumcumque remotus a salute sit peccator obstinatus, quando Iesus se ei videndum exhibet lumine salutari suae gratiae, oportet ut se dedat, accurrat, sese humiliet et adoret Salvatorem suum. —Mc 5:67: ed. 1693. 2414
 14. Howsoever remote from salvation an obstinate sinner is, when Jesus presents himself to be seen by him in the salutary light of his grace, it is necessary that <the sinner> surrender himself, move with haste, humble himself, and adore his Savior. —Mk 5:67: 1693 ed.
15. Quando Deus mandatum suum et suam externam locutionem comitatur unctione sui Spiritus et interiore vi gratiae suae, operatur illam in corde oboedientiam, quam petit. —Lc 9:60. 2415
 15. When God accompanies his commandment and his eternal exhortation by the unction of his Spirit and by the interior force of his grace, he produces in the heart that obedience he is asking. —Lk 9:60.
16. Nullae sunt illecebrae, quae non cedant illecebris gratiae; quia nihil resistit Omnipotenti. —Act 8:12. 2416
 16. There are no attractions that do not yield to the attractions of grace, because nothing resists the Almighty. —Acts 8:12.
17. Gratia est vox illa Patris, quae homines interius docet ac eos venire facit ad Iesum Christum: quicumque ad eum non venit, postquam audivit vocem exteriorem Filii, nullatenus est doctus a Patre. —Io 6:45. 2417
 17. Grace is that voice of the Father which teaches men interiorly and makes them come to Jesus Christ; whoever does not come to him after he has heard the exterior voice of the Son is in no wise taught by the Father. —Jn 6:45.
18. Semen verbi, quod manus Dei irrigat, semper affert fructum suum. —Act 11:21. 2418
 18. The seed of the word, which the hand of God nourishes, always brings forth its fruit. —Acts 11:21.
19. Dei gratia nihil aliud est quam eius omnipotens voluntas: haec est idea, quam Deus ipse nobis tradit in omnibus suis Scripturis. —Rm 14:4: ed. 1693. 2419
 19. The grace of God is nothing else than his omnipotent will; this is the idea that God himself gives us in all his Scriptures. —Rom 14:4: 1693 ed.
20. Vera gratiae idea est, quod Deus vult sibi a nobis oboediri, et oboeditur; imperat, et omnia fiunt; loquitur tamquam Dominus, et omnia sibi submissa sunt. —Mc 4:39. 2420
 20. The true idea of grace is that God wishes himself to be obeyed by us, and he is obeyed; he commands, and all things are done; he speaks as the Lord, and all things are submissive to him. —Mk 4:39.
21. Gratia Iesu Christi est gratia fortis, potens, suprema, invincibilis, utpote quae est operatio voluntatis omnipotentis, sequela et imitatio operationis Dei incarnantis et resuscitantis Filium suum. —2 Cor 5:21: ed. 1693. 2421
 21. The grace of Jesus Christ is a strong, powerful, supreme, invincible grace, inasmuch as it is the operation of the omnipotent will, the consequence and imitation of the operation of God causing the Incarnation and the Resurrection of his Son. —2 Cor 5:21: 1693 ed.
22. Concordia omnipotentis operationis Dei in corde hominis cum libero ipsius voluntatis consensu demonstratur illico nobis in incarnatione, veluti in fonte atque architypo omnium aliarum operationum misericordiae et gratiae, quae omnes ita gratuitae atque ita dependentes a Deo sunt, sicut ipsa originalis operatio. —Lc 1:48. 2422
 22. The harmony of the all-powerful operation of God in the heart of man with the free consent of man's will is immediately shown to us in the Incarnation, as in the fount and archetype of all other operations of mercy and grace, all of which are as gratuitous and as dependent on God as the original operation itself. —Lk 1:48.

- 2423 23. Deus ipse nobis ideam tradidit omnipotentis operationis suae gratiae, eam significans per illam, quae creaturas e nihilo producit et mortuis reddit vitam. —Rm 4:17.
- 2424 24. Iusta idea, quam centurio habet de omnipotentia Dei et Iesu Christi in sanandis corporibus solo motu suae voluntatis, est imago ideae, quae haberi debet de omnipotentia suae gratiae in sanandis animabus a cupiditate. —Lc 7:7.
- 2425 25. Deus illuminat animam et eam sanat aequae ac corpus sola sua voluntate: iubet, et ipsi obtemperatur. —Lc 18:42.
- 2426 26. Nullae dantur gratiae nisi per fidem. —Lc 8:48.
- 2427 27. Fides est prima gratia et fons omnium aliarum. —2 Pt 1:3.
- 2428 28. Prima gratia, quam Deus concedit peccatori, est peccatorum remissio. —Mk 11:25.
- 2429 29. Extra Ecclesiam nulla conceditur gratia. —Lc 10:35, 36.
- 2430 30. Omnes, quos Deus vult salvare per Christum, salvantur infallibiliter. —Io 6:40.
- 2431 31. Desideria Christi semper habent suum effectum: pacem intimo cordium infert, quando eis illam optat. —Io 20:19.
- 2432 32. Iesus Christus se morti tradidit ad liberandum pro semper suo sanguine primogenitos, id est electos, de manu angeli exterminatoris. —Gal 4:4–7.
- 2433 33. Proh, quantum oportet bonis terrenis et sibimetipsi renuntiasset, ad hoc, ut quis fiduciam habeat sibi, ut ita dicam, appropriandi Christum Iesum, eius amorem, mortem et mysteria; ut facit sanctus Paulus dicens: “Qui dilexit me, et tradidit semetipsum pro me”. —Gal 2:20.
- 2434 34. Gratia Adami non producebat nisi merita humana. —2 Cor 5:21: ed. 1693.
- 2435 35. Gratia Adami est sequela creationis et erat debita naturae sanae et integrae. —2 Cor 5:21.
- 2436 36. Differentia essentialis inter gratiam Adami et status innocentiae ac gratiam christianam est, quod primam unusquisque in propria persona recepisset, ista vero non recipitur, nisi in persona Iesu Christi resuscitati, cui nos uniti sumus. —Rm 7:4.
- 2437 37. Gratia Adami, sanctificando illum in semetipso, erat illi proportionata: gratia christiana, nos sanctificando in Iesu Christo, est omnipotens et digna Filio Dei. —Eph 1:6.
23. God himself has taught us the idea of the omnipotent working of his grace, signifying it by that (operation) which produces creatures from nothing and which restores life to the dead. —Rom 4:17.
24. The right idea that the centurion had about the omnipotence of God and of Jesus Christ in healing bodies by a single act of his will is an image of the idea we should have about the omnipotence of his grace in healing souls from cupidity. —Lk 7:7.
25. God illumines the soul and heals it as well as the body by his will only; he gives orders, and he is obeyed. —Lk 18:42.
26. No graces are granted except through faith. —Lk 8:48.
27. Faith is the first grace and the source of all others. —2 Pet 1:3.
28. The first grace that God grants to the sinner is the remission of sins. —Mk 11:25.
29. Outside of the Church, no grace is granted. —Lk 10:35–36.
30. All whom God wishes to save through Christ are infallibly saved. —Jn 6:40.
31. The desires of Christ always have their effect; he brings peace to the depth of hearts when he desires it for them. —Jn 20:19.
32. Jesus Christ handed himself over to death to liberate by his blood for all time the firstborn, that is, the elect, from the hand of the exterminating angel. —Gal 4:4–7.
33. Ah, how much one ought to renounce earthly goods and himself for this, that he may have the confidence of appropriating, so to speak, Christ Jesus to himself, his love, death, and mysteries, as St. Paul does, when he says: He “who loved me and gave himself for me”. —Gal 2:20.
34. The grace of Adam produced nothing except human merit. —2 Cor 5:21: 1693 ed.
35. The grace of Adam is a consequence of creation and was due to his whole and sound nature. —2 Cor 5:21.
36. The essential difference between the grace of Adam and of his state of innocence and Christian grace is that each one would have received the first in his own person, but the second is not received except in the person of the risen Jesus Christ to whom we are united. —Rom 7:4.
37. The grace of Adam by sanctifying him in himself was proportionate to him; Christian grace, by sanctifying us in Jesus Christ, is omnipotent and worthy of the Son of God. —Eph 1:6.

38. Peccator non est liber nisi ad malum sine gratia Liberatoris. —Lc 8:9.
39. Voluntas, quam gratia non praevenit, nihil habet luminis nisi ad aberrandum, ardoris nisi ad se praecipitandum, virium nisi ad se vulnerandum, est capax omnis mali et incapax ad omne bonum. —Mt 20:34.
40. Sine gratia nihil amare possumus nisi ad nostram condemnationem. —2 Th 3:18: ed. 1693.
41. Omnis cognitio Dei, etiam naturalis, etiam in philosophis ethnicis, non potest venire nisi a Deo; et sine gratia non producit nisi praesumptionem, vanitatem et oppositionem ad ipsum Deum loco affectuum adorationis, gratitudinis et amoris. —Rm 1:19.
42. Sola gratia Christi reddit hominem aptum ad sacrificium fidei; sine hoc nihil nisi impuritas, nihil nisi indignitas. —Act 11:9.
43. Primus effectus gratiae baptismalis est facere, ut moriamur peccato, adeo ut spiritus, cor, sensus non habeant plus vitae pro peccato, quam homo mortuus habeat pro rebus mundi. —Rm 6:2: ed. 1693.
44. Non sunt nisi duo amores, unde volitiones et actiones omnes nostrae nascuntur: amor Dei, qui omnia agit propter Deum, quemque Deus remuneratur, et amor, quo nos ipsos ac mundum diligimus, qui, quod ad Deum referendum est, non refert et propter hoc ipsum fit malus. —Io 5:29.
45. Amore Dei in corde peccatorum non amplius regnante necesse est, ut in eo carnalis regnet cupiditas omnesque actiones eius corrumpat. —Lc 15:13: ed. 1693.
46. Cupiditas aut caritas usum sensuum bonum vel malum faciunt. —Mt 5:28.
47. Oboedientia legis profluere debet ex fonte, et hic fons est caritas. Quando Dei amor est illius principium interius, et Dei gloria eius finis, tunc purum est, quod apparet exterius; alioquin non est nisi hypocrisis aut falsa iustitia. —Mt 25:26: ed. 1693.
48. Quid aliud esse possumus, nisi tenebrae, nisi aberratio et nisi peccatum, sine fidei lumine, sine Christo et sine caritate? —Eph 5:8.
49. Ut nullum peccatum est sine amore nostri, ita nullum est opus bonum sine amore Dei. —Mc 7:22, 23.
50. Frustra clamamus ad Deum: “Pater mi”, si spiritus caritatis non est ille, qui clamat. —Rm 8:15.
51. Fides iustificat, quando operatur, sed ipsa non operatur nisi per caritatem. —Act 13:39.
38. Without the grace of the Liberator the sinner is not free except for evil. —Lk 8:9.
39. The will that is not preceded by grace has no light except to go astray, no eagerness except for self-destruction, no strength except to wound itself; it is capable of all evil and incapable of any good. —Mt 20:34.
40. Without grace we cannot love anything except to our own condemnation. —2 Thess 3:18: 1693 ed.
41. Any knowledge of God, even natural, even among heathen philosophers, can only come from God; and without grace it produces nothing but presumption, vanity, and opposition to God himself instead of a sense of adoration, gratitude, and love. —Rom 1:19.
42. The grace of Christ alone renders a man fit for the sacrifice of faith; without this there is nothing but impurity, nothing but unworthiness. —Acts 11:9.
43. The first effect of baptismal grace is to make us die to sin so that our spirit, heart, and senses have no more life for sin than a dead man has for the things of the world. —Rom 6:2: 1693 ed.
44. There are only two loves that are the sources of all our volitions and actions: the love of God that does everything for the sake of God and that God rewards; and the love by which we love ourselves and the world and which, because it does not refer to God what ought to be referred to him, becomes evil. —Jn 5:29.
45. When the love of God no longer reigns in the heart of sinners, it is inevitable that carnal desires reign in it and corrupt all its actions. —Lk 15:13: 1693 ed.
46. Covetousness or charity makes the use of senses good or evil. —Mt 5:38.
47. Obedience to the law ought to flow from a source, and this source is charity. When the love of God is the interior principle of this obedience and the glory of God its end, then its exterior manifestation is pure; otherwise, it is nothing but hypocrisy or false righteousness. —Mt 25:26: 1693 ed.
48. What else can we be except darkness, except aberration, and except sin, without the light of faith, without Christ, and without charity? —Eph 5:8.
49. As there is no sin without love of ourselves, so there is no good work without love of God. —Mk 7:22–23.
50. In vain we cry out to God: “My Father” if it is not the spirit of charity that cries out. —Rom 8:15.
51. Faith justifies when it operates, but it does not operate except through charity. —Acts 13:39.

- 2452 52. Omnia alia salutis media continentur in fide tamquam in suo germine et semine; sed haec fides non est absque amore et fiducia. —Act 10:43.
- 2453 53. Sola caritas christiano modo facit (actiones christianas) per relationem ad Deum et Iesum Christum. —Col 3:14.
- 2454 54. Sola caritas est, quae Deo loquitur; eam solam Deus audit. —1 Cor 13:1.
- 2455 55. Deus non coronat nisi caritatem: qui currit ex alio impulsu et ex alio motivo, in vanum currit. —Cor 9:24.
- 2456 56. Deus non remunerat nisi caritatem: quoniam caritas sola Deum honorat: —Mt 25:36.
- 2457 57. Totum deest peccatori, quando ei deest spes; et non est spes in Deo, ubi non est amor Dei. —Mt 27:5.
- 2458 58. Nec Deus est nec religio, ubi non est caritas. —1 Io 4:8.
- 2459 59. Oratio impiorum est novum peccatum; et quod Deus illis concedit, est novum in eos iudicium. —Io 10:25: ed. 1693.
- 2460 60. Si solus supplicii timor animat paenitentiam, quo haec est magis violenta, eo magis ducit ad desperationem. —Mt 27:5.
- 2461 61. Timor non nisi manum cohibet, cor autem tamdiu peccato addicitur, quamdiu ab amore iustitiae non ducitur. —Lc 20:19.
- 2462 62. Qui a malo non abstinet nisi timore poenae, illud committit in corde suo et iam est reus coram Deo. —Mt 21:46.
- 2463 63. Baptizatus adhuc est sub lege sicut Iudaeus, si legem non adimpleat, aut adimpleat ex solo timore —Rm 6:14.
- 2464 64. Sub maledicto legis numquam fit bonum; quia peccatur sive faciendo malum sive illud non nisi ob timorem evitando. —Gal 5:18.
- 2465 65. Moyses, Prophetae, sacerdotes et doctores Legis mortui sunt absque eo, quod ullum Deo dederint filium, cum non effecerint nisi mancipia per timorem. —Mc 12:19.
- 2466 66. Qui vult Deo appropinquare, nec debet ad ipsum venire cum brutalibus passionibus neque adduci per instinctum naturalem aut per timorem sicuti bestiae, sed per fidem et per amorem sicuti filii. —Hbr 12:20: ed. 1693.
- 2467 67. Timor servilis non sibi repraesentat Deum nisi ut dominum durum, imperiosum, iniustum, intractabilem. —Lc 19:21: ed. 1693.
52. All other means of salvation are contained in faith as in their own germ and seed; but this faith does not exist apart from love and confidence. —Acts 10:43.
53. It is only charity that accomplishes in a Christian way (Christian actions) through relation to God and Jesus Christ. —Col 3:14.
54. It is charity alone that speaks to God; it alone that God hears. —1 Cor 13:1.
55. God crowns nothing except charity; he who runs through any other incentive or any other motive runs in vain. —1 Cor 9:24.
56. God rewards nothing but charity; for charity alone honors God.—Mt 25:36.
57. All fails a sinner when hope fails him; and there is no hope in God when there is no love of God. —Mt 27:5.
58. Neither God nor religion exists where there is no charity. —1 Jn 4:8.
59. The prayer of sinners is a new sin, and what God grants them is a new judgment against them. —Jn 10:25: 1693 ed.
60. If fear of punishment alone animates penance, the more intense this is, the more it leads to despair. —Mt 27:5.
61. Fear restrains nothing but the hand, but the heart is given over to the sin as long as it is not guided by a love of justice. —Lk 20:19.
62. He who does not refrain from evil except through fear of punishment commits that evil in his heart and is already guilty before God. —Mt 21:46.
63. A baptized person is still under the law as a Jew if he does not fulfill the law or if he fulfills it from fear alone. —Rom 6:14.
64. Good is never done under the condemnation of the law, because one sins either by doing evil or by avoiding it only through fear. —Gal 5:18.
65. Moses, the prophets, priests, and doctors of the law died without having given any son to God, since they produced only slaves through fear. —Mk 12:19.
66. He who wishes to approach God should not come to him with brutal passions or be led to him by natural instinct or through fear like animals, but through faith and love, like sons. —Heb 12:20: 1693 ed.
67. Servile fear does not represent God to itself except as a stern, imperious, unjust, unyielding master. —Lk 19:21: 1693 ed.

68. Dei bonitas abbreviavit viam salutis, claudendo totum in fide et precibus. —Act 2:21. 2468
68. The goodness of God has shortened the road to salvation by enclosing all in faith and in prayers. —Acts 2:21.
69. Fides, usus, augmentum et praemium fidei, totum est donum purae liberalitatis Dei. —Mc 9:22. 2469
69. Faith, the practice, increase, and reward of faith, all are a gift of the pure liberality of God. —Mk 9:22.
70. Numquam Deus affligit innocentes; et afflictiones semper serviunt vel ad puniendum peccatum vel ad purificandum peccatorem. —Io 9:3. 2470
70. Never does God afflict the innocent; and afflictions always serve either to punish the sin or to purify the sinner. —Jn 9:3.
71. Homo ob sui conservationem potest sese dispensare ab ea lege, quam Deus condidit propter eius utilitatem. —Mc 2:28. 2471
71. For the preservation of himself man can dispense himself from that law which God established for his use. —Mk 2:28.
72. Nota Ecclesiae christianae est, quod sit catholica, comprehendens et omnes angelos caeli et omnes electos et iustos terrae et omnium saeculorum. —Hbr 12:22–24. 2472
72. A mark of the Christian Church is that she is catholic, embracing all the angels of heaven, all the elect and the just on earth and of all times. —Heb 12:22–24.
73. Quid est Ecclesia, nisi coetus filiorum Dei manentium in eius sinu, adoptatorum in Christo, subsistentium in eius persona, redemptorum eius sanguine, viventium eius spiritu, agentium per eius gratiam, et exspectantium gratiam futuri saeculi? —2 Th 1:1s: ed. 1693. 2473
73. What is the Church except an assembly of the sons of God abiding in his bosom, adopted in Christ, subsisting in his person, redeemed by his blood, living in his spirit, acting through his grace, and awaiting the grace of the future life? —2 Thess 1:1f: 1693 ed.
74. Ecclesia sive integer Christus incarnatum Verbum habet ut caput, omnes vero Sanctos ut membra. —1 Tim 3:16. 2474
74. The Church or the whole Christ has the incarnate Word as head but all the saints as members. —1 Tim 3:16.
75. Ecclesia est unus solus homo compositus ex pluribus membris, quorum Christus est caput, vita, subsistentia et persona; unus solus Christus compositus ex pluribus Sanctis, quorum est sanctificator. —Eph 2:14–16. 2475
75. The Church is one single man composed of many members, of which Christ is the head, the life, the subsistence, and the person; one single Christ composed of many saints, of whom he is the sanctifier. —Eph 2:14–16.
76. Nihil spatiosius Ecclesia Dei: quia omnes electi et iusti omnium saeculorum illam componunt. —Eph 2:22. 2476
76. There is nothing more spacious than the Church of God; because all the elect and the just of all ages comprise her. —Eph 2:22.
77. Qui non ducit vitam dignam filio Dei et membro Christi, cessat interius habere Deum pro Patre et Christum pro capite. —1 Io 2:24: ed. 1693. 2477
77. He who does not lead a life worthy of a son of God and a member of Christ ceases interiorly to have God as a Father and Christ as a head. —1 Jn 2:24: 1693 ed.
78. Separatur quis a populo electo, cuius figura fuit populus Iudaicus et caput est Iesus Christus, tam non vivendo secundum Evangelium quam non credendo Evangelio. —Act 3:23. 2478
78. One is separated from the chosen people, whose figure was the Jewish people and whose head is Jesus Christ, as much by not living according to the Gospel as by not believing in the Gospel. —Acts 3:23.
79. Utile et necessarium est omni tempore, omni loco et omni personarum generi, studere et cognoscere spiritum, pietatem et mysteria sacrae Scripturae. —1 Cor 14:5. 2479
79. It is useful and necessary at all times, in all places, and for every kind of person to study and to know the spirit, the piety, and the mysteries of Sacred Scripture. —1 Cor 14:5.
80. Lectio sacrae Scripturae est pro omnibus. —Act 8:28. 2480
80. The reading of Sacred Scripture is for all. —Acts 8:28.
81. Obscuritas sancta verbi Dei non est laicis ratio dispensandi se ipsos ab eius lectione. —Act 8:31. 2481
81. The sacred obscurity of the Word of God is no reason for the laity to dispense themselves from reading it. —Acts 8:31.

- 2482 82. Dies Dominicus a Christianis debet sanctificari lectionibus pietatis et super omnia sanctarum Scripturarum. Damnosum est, velle Christianum ab hac lectione retrahere. —Act 15:21.
- 2483 83. Est illusio sibi persuadere, quod notitia mysteriorum religionis non debeat communicari feminis lectione sacrorum librorum: Non ex feminarum simplicitate, sed ex superba virorum scientia ortus est Scripturarum abusus, et natae sunt haereses. —Io 4:26.
- 2484 84. Abripere e Christianorum manibus Novum Testamentum seu eis illud clausum tenere auferendo eis modum illud intelligendi, est illis Christi os obturare. —Mt 5:2.
- 2485 85. Interdicere Christianis lectionem sacrae Scripturae, praesertim Evangelii, est interdicere usum luminis filiis lucis et facere, ut patiantur speciem quandam excommunicationis. —Lc 11:33: ed. 1693.
- 2486 86. Eripere simplici populo hoc solatium iungendi vocem suam voci totius Ecclesiae [*cf. 2666], est usus contrarius praxi apostolicae et intentioni Dei. —1 Cor 14:16.
- 2487 87. Modus plenus sapientia, lumine et caritate est dare animabus tempus portandi cum humilitate et sentiendi statum peccati, petendi spiritum paenitentiae et contritionis, et incipiendi ad minus satisfacere iustitiae Dei, antequam reconcilientur. —Act 8:9.
- 2488 88. Ignoramus, quid sit peccatum et vera paenitentia, quando volumus statim restitui possessioni bonorum illorum, quibus nos peccatum spoliavit, et detrectamus separationis istius ferre confusionem. —Lc 17:11, 12.
- 2489 89. Quartus decimus gradus conversionis peccatoris est, quod, cum sit iam reconciliatus, habet ius assistendi sacrificio Ecclesiae. —Lc 15:23.
- 2490 90. Ecclesia auctoritatem excommunicandi habet, ut eam exercent per primos pastores de consensu saltem praesumpto totius corporis. —Mt 18:17.
- 2491 91. Excommunicationis iniustae metus numquam debet nos impedire ab implendo debito nostro; numquam eximus ab Ecclesia, etiam quando hominum nequitia videmur ab ea expulsi, quando Deo, Iesu Christo, atque ipsi Ecclesiae per caritatem affixi sumus. —Io 9:22, 23.
- 2492 92. Pati potius in pace excommunicationem et anathema iniustum, quam prodere veritatem, est imitari sanctum Paulum; tantum abest, ut sit erigere se contra auctoritatem aut scindere unitatem. —Rm 9:3.
82. The Lord's Day ought to be sanctified by Christians with readings of pious works and above all of the Holy Scriptures. It is harmful to wish to restrain a Christian from this reading. —Acts 15:21.
83. It is an illusion to persuade oneself that knowledge of the mysteries of religion should not be communicated to women by the reading of sacred books. Not from the simplicity of women, but from the proud knowledge of men has arisen the abuse of the Scriptures and have heresies been born. —Jn 4:26.
84. To snatch away from the hands of Christians the New Testament or to hold it closed against them by taking away from them the means of understanding it is to close for them the mouth of Christ. —Mt 5:2.
85. To forbid Christians to read Sacred Scripture, especially the Gospels, is to forbid the use of light to the sons of light and to cause them to suffer a kind of excommunication. —Lk 11:33: 1693 ed.
86. To snatch from the simple people this consolation of joining their voice to the voice of the whole Church [*cf. 2666] is a custom contrary to the apostolic practice and to the intention of God. —1 Cor 14:16.
87. A method full of wisdom, light, and charity is to give souls time for bearing with humility and for experiencing their state of sin, for seeking the spirit of penance and contrition, and for beginning at least to satisfy the justice of God before they are reconciled. —Acts 8:9.
88. We are ignorant of what sin is and of what true penance is when we wish to be restored at once to the possession of the goods of which sin has despoiled us and when we refuse to endure the confusion of that separation. —Lk 17:11–12.
89. The fourteenth step in the conversion of a sinner is that, after he has already been reconciled, he has the right of assisting at the Sacrifice of the Church. —Lk 15:23.
90. The Church has the authority to excommunicate, so that she may exercise it through the first pastors with the consent, at least presumed, of the whole body. —Mt 18:17.
91. The fear of an unjust excommunication should never hinder us from fulfilling our duty; never are we separated from the Church, even when by the wickedness of men we seem to be expelled from her, as long we are attached to God, to Jesus Christ, and to the Church herself by charity. —Jn 9:22–23.
92. To suffer in peace an excommunication and an unjust anathema rather than betray truth is to imitate St. Paul; it is far from rebelling against authority or destroying unity. —Rom 9:3.

93. Iesus quandoque sanat vulnera, quae praeceps primorum pastorum festinatio infligit sine ipsius mandato. Iesus restituit, quod ipsi inconsiderato zelo rescindunt. —Io 18:11.

94. Nihil peiorem de Ecclesia opinionem ingerit eius inimicis, quam videre illic dominatum exerceri supra fidem fidelium, et foveri divisiones propter res, quae nec fidem laedunt nec mores. —Rm 14:16.

95. Veritates eo devenerunt, ut sint lingua quasi peregrina plerisque Christianis, et modus eas praedicandi est veluti idioma incognitum; adeo remotus est a simplicitate Apostolorum, et supra communem captum fidelium; neque satis advertitur, quod hic defectus sit unum ex signis maxime sensibilibus senectutis Ecclesiae et irae Dei in filios suos. —I Cor 14:21.

96. Deus permittit, ut omnes potestates sint contrariae praedicatoribus veritatis, ut eius victoria attribui non possit nisi divinae gratiae. —Act 17:8.

97. Nimis saepe contingit, membra illa, quae magis sancte ac magis stricte unita Ecclesiae sunt, respici atque tractari tamquam indigna, ut sint in Ecclesia, vel tamquam ab ea separata; sed “iustus vivit ex fide” [Rm 1:17], et non ex opinione hominum. —Act 4:11.

98. Status persecutionis et poenarum, quas quis tolerat tamquam haereticus, flagitiosus et impius, ultima plerumque probatio est et maxime meritoria, utpote quae facit hominem magis conformem Iesu Christo. —Lc 22:37.

99. Pervicacia, praeventio, obstinatio in nolendo aut aliquid examinare aut agnoscere, se fuisse deceptum, mutant quotidie quoad multos in odorem mortis id, quod Deus in sua Ecclesia posuit, ut in ea esset odor vitae, verbi gratia bonos libros, instructiones, sancta exempla, etc. —2 Cor 2:16.

100. Tempus deplorabile, quo creditur honorari Deus persequendo veritatem eiusque discipulos! Tempus hoc advenit... Haberi et tractari a religionis ministris tamquam impium et indignum omni commercio cum Deo, tamquam membrum putridum, capax corrumpendi omnia in societate Sanctorum, est hominibus piis morte corporis mors terribilior. Frustra quis sibi blanditur de suarum intentionum puritate et zelo quodam religionis, persequendo flamma ferroque viros probos, si propria passione est excaecatus aut abreptus aliena, propterea quod nihil vult examinare. Frequenter credimus

93. Jesus sometimes heals the wounds that the precipitous haste of the first pastors inflicted without his command. Jesus restored what they, with inconsidered zeal, cut off. —Jn 18:11. 2493

94. Nothing engenders a worse opinion of the Church among her enemies than to see exercised there an absolute rule over the faith of the faithful and to see divisions fostered because of matters that do not violate faith or morals. —Rom 14:16. 2494

95. Truths have descended to this, that they are, as it were, a foreign tongue to most Christians, and the manner of preaching them is, as it were, an unknown idiom, so remote is the manner of preaching from the simplicity of the apostles and so much above the common grasp of the faithful; nor is there sufficient advertence to the fact that this defect is one of the greatest visible signs of the senility of the Church and of the wrath of God on his sons. —I Cor 14:21. 2495

96. God permits that all powers be opposed to the preachers of truth, so that its victory cannot be attributed to anyone except to divine grace. —Acts 17:8. 2496

97. Too often it happens that those members who are united to the Church in a more holy and strict manner are looked down upon and treated as if they were unworthy of being in the Church or as if they were separated from her; but, “the just man lives by faith” [Rom 1:17], and not by the opinion of men. —Acts 4:11. 2497

98. The state of persecution and of punishment that anyone endures as a disgraceful and impious heretic is generally the final trial and is especially meritorious, inasmuch as it makes a man more conformable to Jesus Christ. —Lk 22:37. 2498

99. Stubbornness, prejudice, and obstinacy in being unwilling either to examine something or to acknowledge that one has been deceived changes each day, for many, into an odor of death, which God has placed in his Church so that in her there may be an odor of life: for example, good books, instructions, holy examples, etc. —2 Cor 2:16. 2499

100. Deplorable is the time in which God is believed to be honored by persecution of the truth and its disciples! This time has come... To be considered and treated by the ministers of religion as impious and unworthy of all commerce with God, as a putrid member capable of corrupting everything in the society of saints, is to pious men a more terrible death than the death of the body. In vain does anyone flatter himself on the purity of his intentions and on a certain zeal for religion when he persecutes honest men with fire and sword if he is blinded by his own passion or carried away by that of 2500

sacrificare Deo impium, et sacrificamus diabolo Dei servum. —Io 16:2.

2501 101. Nihil spiritui Dei et doctrinae Iesu Christi magis opponitur, quam communia facere iuramenta in Ecclesia; quia hoc est multiplicare occasiones peierandi, laqueos tendere infirmis et idiotis, et efficere, ut nomen et veritas Dei aliquando deserviant consilio impiorum. —Mt 5:37.

2502 [Censura:] ... Propositiones praesertim tamquam falsas, captiosas, male sonantes, piarum aurium offensivas, scandalosas, perniciosas, temerarias, Ecclesiae et eius praxi iniurias, neque in Ecclesiam solum, sed etiam in potestates saeculi contumeliosas, seditiosas, impias, blasphemias, suspectas de haeresi ac haeresim ipsam sapientes, necnon haereticis et haeresibus ac etiam schismati faventes, erroneas, haeresi proximas, pluries damnatas, ac demum haereticas, variasque haereses et potissimum illas, quae in famosis Iansenii propositionibus, et quidem in eo sensu, in quo hae damnatae fuerunt, acceptis continentur, manifeste innovantes respective ... declaramus, damnamus et reprobamus.

another because he does not want to examine anything. We frequently believe that we are sacrificing an impious man to God when we are sacrificing a servant of God to the devil. —Jn 16:2.

101. Nothing is more opposed to the spirit of God and to the doctrine of Jesus Christ than to make oaths common in Church, because this multiplies the occasions of perjury, create snares for the weak and ignorant, and causes the name and truth of God to serve sometimes the plan of the wicked. —Mt 5:37.

[Censure:] ... We declare, condemn, and reject ... the preceding propositions, as the case may be, as false, fraudulent, evil-sounding, offensive to pious ears, scandalous, pernicious, rash, injurious to the Church and her practice, insulting not only to the Church but also the secular powers, seditious, impious, blasphemous, suspect of heresy, and having the flavor of heresy itself, and, besides, favoring heretics and heresies and also schisms, erroneous, close to heresy, many times condemned, and finally heretical, clearly renewing many heresies respectively and most especially those that are contained in the infamous propositions of Jansen and, indeed, accepted in that sense in which these have been condemned.

INNOCENT XIII: May 8, 1721–March 7, 1724
BENEDICT XIII: May 29, 1724–February 21, 1730

CLEMENT XII: July 12, 1730–February 6, 1740

2509–2510: Bull Apostolicae providentiae officio, October 2, 1733

The Jansenists maintained that the censures of the constitution Unigenitus (*2400–2502) attacked the teaching of St. Augustine and St. Thomas Aquinas on divine grace. The pope rejected that contention and at the same time wished to promote peace between the different theological schools, “so that through the joint efforts of the different schools there might be a firmer defense against the snares of error” (ut coniunctis diversarum licet scholarum studiis firmiter sit adversus erroris insidias praesidium) [cf. *2509^o] (ibid., § 2 at the end).

Ed.: DuPIA 3/II (1736): 589a–590a / BullTau 23:542ab / BullLux 14:297ab.

Liberty of Teaching with Regard to the Efficacy of Grace

2509 § 1. ... Mentem tamen [Clementis XI et Benedicti XIII] praedecessorum Nostrorum compertam habentes, nolumus aut per Nostras aut per ipsorum laudes Thomisticae scholae delatas, quas iterato Nostro iudicio comprobamus et confirmamus, quicquam esse detractum ceteris catholicis scholis diversa ab eadem in explicanda divinae gratiae efficacia sentientibus, quarum etiam erga hanc Sanctam Sedem praeclara sunt merita, quominus sententias ea de re tueri pergant, quas hactenus palam et libere ubique etiam in huius almae Urbis luce docuerunt et propugnarunt.

§ 1. ... Having exact knowledge of the mind of Our predecessors [Clement XI and Benedict XIII], We do not want the praise that We, or they, have given to the Thomist school, which praise We now reapprove and confirm by Our repeated judgment, to be taken as detracting in any way from the other Catholic schools that think differently from it in explaining the working of divine grace and whose merits in the eyes of the Holy See are also outstanding; as if the other schools should not continue to defend the opinions on the matter that they have hitherto taught and propounded everywhere, openly and freely, even in public sight of this gracious City.

§ 2. Quamobrem . . . prohibemus sub iisdem poenis, ne vel scribendo vel docendo vel disputando vel alia qualibet occasione notam aut censuram ullam theologiam iisdem scholis diversa sententibus inurere aut earum sententias conviciis et contumeliis incessere audeant, donec de iisdem controversiis haec Sancta Sedes aliquid definiendum ac pronuntiandum censuerit.

§ 2. Wherefore . . . We prohibit (them) under the same penalties, whether in writing or teaching or disputing, or on any other occasion, from daring to attach any theological qualification or censure to those schools thinking differently and from assailing their opinions with loud reproaches and invective until this Holy See decides that some definition or pronouncement is to be made on these controversies. 2510

2511–2513: Apostolic Letter In eminenti apostolatus specula, April 28, 1738

This decree, addressed to all the faithful, seems to be the oldest edict concerning the sect of the “Freemasons”. Benedict XIV took up the subject again in the bull Providas Romanorum Pontificum of May 18, 1751 (Benedict XIV, Bullarium [Rome, 1754], 3:214f. / [Prati, 1846] 3/1 (= Opera omnia 17), 283b–284a / [Mechelen] 8:416f.).

Ed.: BullTau 24:366a–367b / BullCocq 14:236ab / CdICF 1:656f., no. 299.

Freemasonry

(§ 1) . . . Nobis innotuit longe lateque progredi atque in dies invalescere nonnullas societates, coetus, conventus, collectiones, aggregationes seu conventicula vulgo de “liberi Muratori” seu “Francs Massons”, aut alia quavis nomenclatura pro idiomatum varietate nuncupata, in quibus cuiuscumque religionis et sectae homines, affectata quadam contenti honestatis naturalis specie, arcto aequae ac impervio foedere secundum leges et statuta sibi condita invicem consociantur, quaeque simul clam operantur tum districto iureiurando ad sacra Biblia interposito tum gravium poenarum exaggeratione inviolabili silentio obtegere adstringuntur.

Verum cum ea sit sceleris natura, ut se ipsum prodat et clamorem edat sui indicem, hinc societates seu conventicula praedicta vehementem adeo fidelium mentibus suspicionem ingesserunt, ut iisdem aggregationibus nomen dare apud prudentes et probos idem omnino sit ac pravitatis et perversionis notam incurere; nisi enim male agerent, tanto nequaquam odio lucem haberent. Qui quidem rumor eo usque percrebuit, ut in plurimis regionibus memoratae societates per saeculi potestates tamquam regnorum securitati adversantes proscriptae ac provide eliminatae iam pridem exstiterint.

(§ 1) . . . It has come to Our knowledge that certain societies, clubs, circles, assemblies, gatherings, or conventicles commonly called “Free Masons” or “Francs Massons”, or known by some other designation in the different languages, are spreading far and wide and continually growing; in these, men of every religion and sect, content with some pretended form of natural virtue, are associated with one another in a union as strict as it is impenetrable, according to laws and statutes that they have laid down for themselves; and they are bound to conceal in inviolable silence whatever they secretly do together, whether by swearing a strict oath on the Holy Bible or by the imposition of an accumulation of grave penalties. 2511

Since, however, it is the nature of iniquity to reveal itself and to produce a disturbance that betrays it, the aforesaid societies or conventicles have aroused in the minds of the faithful such strong suspicions that, among prudent and upright men, to join these associations is precisely synonymous with incurring the taint of evil and infamy; for if they were not involved in evil doing, they would never be so very averse to the light (of publicity). The rumor (of these doings) has so grown that in many places the aforesaid societies have long been proscribed and prudently suppressed by the secular power as being opposed to the welfare of the kingdom.

(§ 2) Nos itaque animo volentes gravissima damna, quae ut plurimum ex huiusmodi societatis seu conventiculis nedum temporalis rei publicae tranquillitati verum etiam spirituali animarum salutem inferuntur atque idcirco tum civilibus tum canonicis minime cohaerere sanctionibus, cum divino eloquio doceamur, . . . vigilandum esse, ne huiusmodi hominum genus veluti fures domum perfodiant, . . . ne videlicet simplicium corda pervertant. . . .

(§ 2) We have therefore decreed, considering in Our heart the very grave harm that is usually done by societies and conventicles of this sort, not only to the peace of the civil state, but also to the spiritual salvation of souls, and that for this reason they are in no way consistent with the provisions of either civil or canon law, and being taught by the divine command . . . to be vigilant lest men of this sort should break into the house like thieves . . . and pervert the hearts of the simple . . . , 2512

ad latissimam quae iniquitatibus impune patrandis inde aperiri posset viam obstruendam aliisque de iustis ac rationabilibus causis Nobis notis

easdem societates ... seu conventicula “de’ liberi Muratori” seu “Francs Massons” aut alio quocumque nomine appellata de nonnullorum ... cardinalium consilio ac etiam motu proprio ... deque Apostolicae potestatis plenitudine damnanda et prohibenda esse statuimus....

- 2513 (§ 4) [Mandantur locorum ordinarii et inquisitores, ut transgressores] tamquam de haeresi vehementer suspectos condignis poenis puniant.

in order to bar the broad way that could thereby be opened to performing evil deeds with impunity, and for other just and reasonable causes known to Us, on the advice of ... certain cardinals, and by Our own initiative ... and with the fullness of the apostolic authority, that the said societies ... called “Free Masons” or “Francs Massons” or any other name ... are to be condemned and prohibited....

- (§ 4) [Local ordinaries and inquisitors are told that] they should punish [transgressors] with suitable penalties as being gravely suspect of heresy.

BENEDICT XIV: August 17, 1740–May 3, 1758

2515–2520: Declaration Matrimonia quae in locis, November 4, 1741

This famous “Benedictine declaration” was at first only directed to the united provinces of Belgium and Holland subject to the Spanish king. Later, it was extended to other territories. See on this point, A. Lehmkuhl, Theologia moralis, 12th ed., vol. 2 (Freiburg, 1914), no. 905; ASS 6 (1870): 456; B. Melata, in AnE 5 (1897): 263–76; 6 (1898): 421–28.

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen, 1826), 1:178–82 (old ed., vol. 1, no. 34) / BullLux 16:52a–53a.

Clandestine Marriages

- 2515 *Matrimonia, quae in locis Foederatorum Ordinum dominio in Belgio subiectis iniri solent sive inter haereticos ex utraque parte, sive inter haereticum ex una parte virum et catholicam feminam ex alia, aut viceversa, non servata forma a sacro Tridentino Concilio praescripta [Decretum “Tametsi”, 1813–1816], utrum valida habenda sint necne, diu multumque disceptatum est animis hominum ac sententiis in diversa distractis; id quod satis uberem anxietatis ac periculorum sementem per multos annos subministravit....

Whether or not marriages are to be considered valid that by custom take place in the regions subject to the authority of the Federated States in Belgium, either between heretics on both sides or between a heretical man on one side and a Catholic woman on the other, or vice versa, without having observed the form prescribed by the sacred Council of Trent [*Decree Tametsi, 1813–1816], has for a long time and on many occasions been debated, where the opinions of men and judgments have completely diverged: this has, for many years, supplied quite a plentiful sowing of anxiety and dangers....

- 2516 (1) ... Sanctissimus Dominus noster ... hanc nuper declarationem et instructionem exarari praecipit, qua veluti certa regula ac norma omnes Belgii antistites, parochi earumque regionum missionarii, et vicarii apostolici deinceps in huiusmodi negotiis uti debeant.

(1) ... Our Most Holy Father ... recently enjoined that this declaration and instruction be set down, which should be employed hereafter as a definite rule and norm by all Belgian bishops, priests, and missionaries of these regions and vicars apostolic in matters of this kind.

- 2517 (2) Primo scilicet, quod attinet ad matrimonia ab haereticis inter se in locis Foederatorum Ordinum dominio subiectis celebrata, non servata forma per Tridentinum praescripta, licet Sanctitas Sua non ignoret, alias in casibus quibusdam particularibus et attentis tunc expositis circumstantiis Sacram Congregationem Concilii pro eorum invaliditate respondisse, aequae tamen compertum habens, nihil adhuc generatim et universe super eiusmodi matrimoniis fuisse ab Apostolica Sede definitum, et alioquin oportere omnino, ad consulendum universis fidelibus in iis locis degentibus et plura avertenda gravissima incommoda, quid generaliter de hisce matrimoniis sentiendum sit declarare:

(2) Namely, first, in regard to marriages celebrated between heretics in places subject to the authority of the Federated States that did not observe the form prescribed by Trent, although His Holiness knows that at other times, in certain particular cases and in circumstances attendant and explained at the time, the Sacred Congregation of the Council has said that they are invalid; nevertheless, His Holiness, being equally certain that nothing has been generally or universally defined by the Apostolic See regarding marriages of this kind and, on the other hand, that, in order to furnish advice to all the faithful residing in those places and to avert more grave disorders, he ought to declare what must be generally held regarding such marriages:

... declaravit statuitque, matrimonia in dictis Foederatis Belgii provinciis inter haereticos usque modo contracta, quaeque imposterum contrahentur, etiamsi forma a Tridentino praescripta non fuerit in iis celebrandis servata, dummodo aliud non obstiterit canonicum impedimentum, pro validis habenda esse; adeoque si contingat, utrumque coniugem ad catholicae Ecclesiae sinum se recipere, eodem quo antea coniugali vinculo ipsos omnino teneri, etiamsi mutuus consensus coram parochio catholico ab eis non renovetur; sin autem unus tantum ex coniugibus, sive masculus sive femina, convertatur, neutrum posse, quamdiu alter superstes erit, ad alias nuptias transire.

(3) Quod vero spectat ad ea coniugia, quae pariter in iisdem Foederatis Belgii provinciis absque forma a tridentino statuta contrahuntur a catholicis cum haereticis, sive catholicus vir haereticam feminam in matrimonium ducat, sive catholica femina haeretico viro nubat: dolens imprimis quam maxime Sanctitas Sua, eos esse inter catholicos, qui insano amore turpiter demerati ab hisce detestabilibus conubiis, quae sancta mater Ecclesia perpetuo damnavit atque interdixit, ex animo non abhorrent et prorsus sibi abstinendum non ducunt, ... [animarum pastores] serio graviterque hortatur et monet, ut catholicos utriusque sexus ab huiusmodi nuptiis in propriarum animarum perniciem ineundis quantum possint absterreant, easdemque nuptias omni meliore modo intervertere atque efficaciter impedire satagant.

At si forte aliquod huius generis matrimonium, Tridentini forma non servata, ibidem contractum iam sit, aut in posterum (quod Deus avertat) contrahi contingat, declarat Sanctitas Sua, matrimonium huiusmodi, alio non occurrente canonico impedimento, validum habendum esse, et neutrum ex coniugibus, donec alter eorum supervixerit, ullatenus posse sub obtentu dictae formae non servatae novum matrimonium inire; id vero debere sibi potissime in animum inducere coniugem catholicum, sive virum sive feminam, ut pro gravissimo scelere quod admisit, paenitentiam agat ac veniam a Deo precetur, coneturque pro viribus alterum coniugem a vera fide deerrantem ad gremium catholicae Ecclesiae pertrahere eiusque animam lucrari, quod porro ad veniam de patrato crimine impetrandam opportunissimum foret, sciens de cetero, ut mox dictum est, se istius matrimonii vinculo perpetuo ligatum iri.

(4) [Idem valet] ... etiam de similibus matrimoniis extra fines domini eorundem Foederatorum Ordinum contractis ab iis, qui addicti sunt legionibus seu militaribus copiis, quae ab iisdem Foederatis Ordinibus transmitti

... (His Holiness) has declared and decreed that marriages that have been contracted up to now and that will be contracted hereafter in the said federated provinces of Belgium between heretics, even if the form prescribed by Trent has not been observed in their celebration, provided no other canonical impediment interferes, are to be considered as valid; and furthermore, if it should happen that both spouses be received into the bosom of the Catholic Church, they are held bound by the same conjugal tie as before, even if their mutual consent is not renewed before the Catholic priest; but, if only one of the spouses, either man or woman, should be converted, neither can, as long as the other is living, enter into another marriage.

(3) Now as regards those marriages that likewise in the same federated provinces of Belgium are contracted by Catholics with heretics without the form established by Trent, whether a Catholic man takes a heretical woman in marriage or a Catholic woman marries a heretical man; grieving very much that there are among Catholics those who, becoming shamefully deranged by a mad love, do not wholeheartedly abhor and think that they should refrain from these detestable marriages that Holy Mother Church has continually condemned and interdicted, ... (His Holiness) seriously and gravely exhorts [pastors of souls] and admonishes them to deter, insofar as they can, Catholics of both sexes from entering into marriages of this kind to the destruction of their own souls and to make it their business to avert in every good way and efficaciously to hinder these same marriages. 2518

But if by chance some marriage of this sort, without observing the Tridentine form, has already been contracted there or may be contracted in the future (which God forbid!), His Holiness declares that such a marriage, provided that no other canonical impediment exists, must be considered valid and that neither of the spouses, as long as the other one lives, can in any way enter into a new marriage under the pretext that the prescribed form was not observed; that the Catholic spouse, whether man or woman, should especially bear this in mind, that in proportion to the very grave fault he has committed he should do penance and ask pardon from God and should try, in proportion to his strength, to draw the other spouse, who is straying from the true faith, back to the bosom of the Catholic Church and to win his soul, which indeed would be a very excellent means of obtaining pardon for the crime committed, knowing besides, as has just been said, that he will be perpetually bound by the bond of that marriage.

(4) [The same rule prevails] ... for similar marriages contracted outside the limits of the dominion of these same Federated States by those who have been assigned to the legions or military forces that are customarily sent 2519

solent ad custodiendas muniendasque arces conterminas vulgo dictas di Barriera: ita quidem, ut matrimonia ibi praeter Tridentini formam sive inter haereticos utrimque sive inter catholicos et haereticos inita valorem suum obtineant, dummodo uterque coniux ad easdem copias sive legiones pertineat. . . .

- 2520 (5) Tandem circa coniugia, quae contrahuntur vel in regionibus principum catholicorum ab iis, qui in provinciis Foederatis domicilium habent, vel in Foederatis provinciis ab habentibus domicilium in regionibus catholicorum principum, nihil Sanctitas Sua de novo decernendum aut declarandum esse duxit, volens, ut de iis iuxta canonica iuris communis principia probatasque in similibus casibus alias editas a Sacra Congregatione Concilii resolutiones, ubi disputatio contingat, decidatur, et ita declaravit statuitque ac ab omnibus in posterum servari praecepit.

by these same States to guard and to defend the frontier parts commonly called di Barriera; so that, indeed, marriages entered into there without the Tridentine form between heretics on both sides, or between Catholics and heretics, retain their validity, provided the spouse in each case belongs to these same military forces or legions. . . .

(5) Finally, in regard to marriages that are contracted either in the regions of Catholic princes by those who have a domicile in the federated provinces or in the federated provinces by those who have a domicile in the regions of Catholic princes, His Holiness has thought that nothing new should be decreed and declared, wishing that whenever a dispute arises concerning them, they be decided according to the canonical principles of the common law and by the resolution approved in similar cases at other times and published by the Sacred Congregation of the Council, and so he has declared and decreed and commanded that it be observed by all for the future.

2522–2524: Constitution Etsi pastoralis for the Italo-Greeks, May 26, 1742

This constitution repeats some passages of the instruction Presbyteri Graeci of August 30, 1595 (cf. *1990–1992), and the letter Sub catholicae of March 6, 1254, in which Innocent IV insisted that confirmation only be administered by Greek bishops (cf. *381).

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen) 1:354, 352f. (old ed., vol. 1, no. 57) / CollLac 2:510d–511c / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:121f., no. 338.

The Sacrament of Confirmation

- 2522 § 3 (n. 1). Episcopi Latini infantes seu alios in suis dioecibus baptizatos a presbyteris Graecis chrismate in fronte consignatos absolute confirmant, cum neque per praedecessores Nostros neque per Nos Graecis presbyteris in Italia et insulis adiacentibus, ut infantibus baptizatis sacramentum confirmationis conferant, facultas concessa sit aut concedatur; quin immo usque ab anno 1595 a felicis recordationis Clemente VIII, praedecessore Nostro, fuit presbyteris Italo-Graecis expresse interdictum, ne baptizatos chrismate consignent [*1990].

§ 3 (no. 1). Latin bishops should unconditionally confirm infants or others baptized in their dioceses and signed on the forehead by Greek priests, since permission has not been granted and is not granted either by Our predecessors or by Us for Greek priests in Italy and the surrounding islands to confer the sacrament of confirmation on baptized infants; on the contrary, from the year 1595 on, it has actually been expressly prohibited by Clement VII of happy memory and Our predecessor for Italo-Greek presbyters to sign the baptized with chrism [*1990].

- 2523 (n. 4) Quamvis confirmati a simplici sacerdote cogendi non sunt eiusmodi confirmationis sacramentum ab episcopo suscipere, si ex tali coactione scandala oriri possent: cum sacramentum confirmationis eiusmodi necessitatem non habeat, ut sine eo salvus quis esse non possit, monendi tamen sunt ab Ordinariis locorum, eos gravis peccati reatu teneri, si cum possunt ad confirmationem accedere, illam renuunt ac negligunt.

(no. 4) Although those who were confirmed by a simple priest should not be constrained to receive the sacrament of such confirmation from a bishop, if such a constraint could give rise to scandals (for the sacrament of confirmation is not such a necessity that without it one could not be saved); nevertheless, there should be warnings from the Ordinaries of (these) places that they are bound by the guilt of grave sin if, being able to agree to confirmation, they refuse or neglect it.

Extreme Unction

- 2524 § 5 (n. 2). Infirmis . . . unctio exhibeatur extrema. (n. 3) Nec refert, utrum eadem extrema unctio per unum vel plures presbyteros fiat, ubi huiusmodi viget consuetudo; dummodo credant et asserant, illud sacramentum, servata

§ 5 (no. 2). Extreme unction should be given . . . to the sick. (no. 3) And it does not matter whether extreme unction takes place through one or through several priests, where such a custom is common: as long as they believe debita materia et forma, ab uno presbytero valide et licite confici. (n. 4) Idem sacerdos materiam adhibere formamque pronuntiare respective debet; ac propterea qui ungit, idem dicat formam respondentem, nec alius unget et alius formam pronuntiet.

and affirm that this sacrament, observing the required matter and form, is validly and licitly accomplished by one priest. (no. 4) The same priest should in each case apply the matter and pronounce the form; and for that reason the one who anoints must be the same as the one who pronounces the corresponding form, and it must not be that one anoints and the other pronounces the form.

2525–2540: Constitution Nuper ad Nos, March 16, 1743

In this bull, Simon Evodius, Archbishop of Damascus, who had been elevated to the patriarchal see of the Maronites of Antioch, is asked to make the profession of faith according to the formula of Urban VIII of 1642.

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen), 2:82–87 (old ed., vol. 1, no. 78) / BullLux 16:148b–149b / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:124–26, no. 1496n.

Profession of Faith Prescribed for the Orientals

§ 5. ... Ego N. firma fide credo et profiteor omnia et singula quae continentur in Symbolo fidei, quo sancta Romana Ecclesia utitur, videlicet: Credo in unum Deum ... [Symbolum Constantinopolitanum, *150 vel *1862].

§ 5. ... I, N.N., with firm faith believe and confess each and every thing that is contained in the creed that the holy Roman Church uses, namely: I believe in one God ... [Creed of Constantinople, *150 or *1862]. 2525

Veneror etiam et suscipio universales Synodos, prout sequitur, videlicet: Nicaenam primam [*125–129], et profiteor, quod in ea contra Arium damnatae memoriae definitum est, Dominum Iesum Christum esse Filium Dei ex Patre natum unigenitum, id est ex substantia Patris natum, non factum, consubstantialem Patri, atque impias illas voces recte in eadem Synodo damnatas esse, ‘quod aliquando non fuerit’, aut ‘quod factus sit ex iis, quae non sunt, aut ex alia substantia vel essentia’, aut ‘quod sit mutabilis vel convertibilis Filius Dei’.

I revere also and accept the universal councils as follows, namely; The first (Council) of Nicaea [*125–129], and I profess what has been defined in it against Arius of pernicious memory, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Son of God, born only-begotten from the Father, that is, born, not made, from the substance of the Father, consubstantial to the Father, that those impious statements have been rightly condemned in the same council, such as: “There was a time when he was not”, or, “that he was made of those things which are not, or of some other substance or essence”, or “that the Son of God is mutable or changeable”. 2526

Constantinopolitanam primam [*150s], secundam in ordine, et profiteor, quod in ea contra Macedonium damnatae memoriae definitum est, Spiritum Sanctum non esse servum, sed Dominum, non creaturam, sed Deum, ac unam habentem cum Patre et Filio deitatem.

The first (Council) of Constantinople, second in order [*150–151], and I profess that which was defined in it against Macedonius of pernicious memory, that the Holy Spirit is not a servant but Lord, not a creature but God, and possessing the one divinity with the Father and the Son. 2527

Ephesinam primam [*250–268], tertiam in ordine, et profiteor, quod in ea contra Nestorium damnatae memoriae definitum est, divinitatem et humanitatem ineffabili et incomprehensibili unione in una persona Filii Dei unum nobis Iesum Christum constituisse, eaque de causa beatissimam Virginem vere esse Dei genitricem.

The first (Council) of Ephesus [*250–268], third in order, and I profess that which was defined against Nestorius of pernicious memory, that divinity and humanity by an ineffable and incomprehensible union in the one Person of the Son of God have formed for us one Jesus Christ and that for this reason the most Blessed Virgin is truly the Mother of God. 2528

Chalcedonensem [*300–305], quartam in ordine, et profiteor, quod in ea contra Eutychen et Dioscorum, ambos damnatae memoriae, definitum est, unum eundemque Filium Dei Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum perfectum esse in deitate, et perfectum in humanitate, Deum verum, et hominem verum ex anima rationali et corpore, consubstantialem Patri secundum deitatem, eundem consubstantialem nobis secundum

The (Council) of Chalcedon [*300–305], fourth in order, and I profess that which was defined against Eutyches and Dioscorus, both of pernicious memory, that the one and same Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, was perfect in divinity and perfect in humanity, true God and true man, consisting of rational soul and body, consubstantial with the Father in regard to his divinity and consubstantial with us in regard to his humanity, 2529

humanitatem, per omnia nobis similem absque peccato; ante saecula quidem de Patre genitum secundum deitatem, in novissimis autem diebus eundem propter nos et propter nostram salutem ex Maria Virgine Dei genitrice secundum humanitatem; unum eundemque Christum Filium Dominum unigenitum in duabus naturis inconfuse, immutabiliter, indivise, inseparabiliter agnoscendum, nusquam sublata differentia naturarum propter unionem, magisque salva proprietate utriusque naturae in unam personam atque substantiam concurrente, non in duas personas partitum aut divisum, sed unum eundemque Filium et Unigenitum Deum Verbum Dominum Iesum Christum; item eiusdem Domini nostri Iesu Christi divinitatem, secundum quam consubstantialis est Patri et Spiritu Sancto, impassibilem esse et immortalem, eundem autem crucifixum et mortuum tantummodo secundum carnem, ut pariter definitum est in dicta Synodo et in epistola sancti Leonis Romani Pontificis [cf. *290–295], cuius ore beatum Petrum Apostolum locutum esse Patres in eadem Synodo acclamaverunt, per quam definitionem damnatur impia haeresis illorum, qui Trisagio ab angelis tradito et in praefata Chalcedonensi Synodo decantato: ‘Sanctus Deus, sanctus fortis, sanctus immortalis, miserere nobis’ [cf. Is 6:3] addebant: ‘qui crucifixus es pro nobis’ atque adeo divinam naturam trium personarum passibilem asserebant et mortalem.

- 2530 Constantinopolitanam secundam [*421–438], quintam in ordine in qua praefatae Chalcedonensis Synodi definitio renovata est.
- 2531 Constantinopolitanam tertiam [*550–559], sextam in ordine, et profiteor, quod in ea contra Monothelitas definitum est, in uno eodemque Domino nostro Iesu Christo duas esse naturales voluntates et duas naturales operationes indivise, inconvertibiliter, inseparabiliter, inconfuse, et humanam eius voluntatem non contrariam, sed subiectam divinae eius atque omnipotenti voluntati.
- 2532 Nicaenam secundam [*600–609], septimam in ordine, et profiteor, quod in ea contra Iconoclastas definitum est, imagines Christi ac Deiparae Virginis, necnon aliorum Sanctorum habendas et retinendas esse, atque eis debitum honorem et venerationem impertiendam.
- 2533 Constantinopolitanam quartam [*650–664], octavam in ordine, et profiteor, in ea Photium merito fuisse damnatum et sanctum Ignatium Patriarcham restitutum.
- 2534 Veneror etiam et suscipio omnes alias universales Synodos auctoritate Romani Pontificis legitime celebratas et confirmatas, et praesertim Florentinam in all things similar to us, without sin; that before time he was generated from the Father according to divinity, but that in these latter days the same One, for us and for our salvation, was begotten of the Virgin Mary, Mother of God, according to humanity, and that the one same Christ, Son, Lord, Only-Begotten must be recognized in the two natures without confusion, without change, without division, without separation, never removing the difference of the natures because of their union and preserving the characteristic property of each nature joined in one Person and substance; that this same Lord is not separated and divided into two persons, but is one and the same Son and only begotten God, the Word, the Lord Jesus Christ;

likewise that the divinity of our same Lord Jesus Christ, according to which he is consubstantial with the Father and the Holy Spirit, is impassible and immortal; moreover, the same Lord was crucified and died only in the flesh, as was also defined in the said council and in the letter of St. Leo, the Roman pontiff [cf. *290–295] by whose mouth the Fathers in the same council declared that Blessed Peter the apostle spoke, and by this definition there is condemned also that impious heresy of those who, when the Trisagion transmitted by the angels was being sung in the aforementioned Council of Chalcedon: “Holy God, Holy Strong One, Holy Immortal One, have mercy on us” [cf. Is 6:3], added these words: “Who was crucified for us”, and thereby asserted that the divine nature of the three Persons was passible and mortal.

The second (Council) of Constantinople [*421–438], fifth in order, in which the definition of the aforementioned Council of Chalcedon was renewed.

The third (Council) of Constantinople [*550–559], sixth in order, and I profess what was defined in it against the Monothelites, that in our one same Lord, Jesus Christ, there are two natural wills and two natural operations without division, change, separation, or confusion, and that his human will is not contrary to, but subject to his divine and omnipotent will.

The second (Council) of Nicaea [*600–609], seventh in order, and I profess what was defined in it against the Iconoclasts, that images of Christ and of the Virgin Mother of God, as well as of other saints, should be kept and retained and that due honor and veneration should be given to them.

The fourth (Council) of Constantinople [*650–664], eighth in order, and I profess that in it Photius was rightly condemned and that St. Ignatius, the Patriarch, was rightly reinstated.

I venerate also and accept all the other universal councils that have been lawfully held and confirmed by the authority of the Roman pontiff, and especially the Synodum [*1300–1353]; et profiteor, quae in ea definita sunt....

[Citations follow, some verbatim, others in summary form, from the Council of Florence's Decree of Union for the Greeks and Decree for the Armenians]

Pariter veneror et suscipio Tridentinam Synodum [*1500–1835], et profiteor, quae in ea definita et declarata sunt, et praesertim offerri Deo in Missa verum, proprium et propitiatorium sacrificium, pro vivis et defunctis, atque in sanctissimo Eucharistiae sacramento, iuxta fidem, quae semper in Ecclesia Dei fuit, contineri vere, realiter et substantialiter corpus et sanguinem una cum anima et divinitate Domini nostri Iesu Christi ac proinde totum Christum, fierique conversionem totius substantiae panis in corpus et totius substantiae vini in sanguinem, quam conversionem catholica Ecclesia aptissime transsubstantiationem appellat, et sub unaquaque specie, et singulis cuiusque speciei partibus, separatione facta, totum Christum contineri.

Item septem esse Novae Legis sacramenta a Christo Domino nostro instituta ad salutem humani generis, quamvis non omnia singulis necessaria, videlicet baptismum, confirmationem, Eucharistiam, poenitentiam, extremam unctionem, ordinem et matrimonium: illaque gratiam conferre, et ex his baptismum, confirmationem et ordinem (sine sacrilegio) iterari non posse.

Item baptismum esse necessarium ad salutem, ac proinde, si mortis periculum immineat, mox sine ulla dilatione conferendum esse, et a quocumque et quandocumque sub debita materia et forma et intentione collatum esse validum.

Item sacramenti matrimonii vinculum indissolubile esse, et quamvis propter adulterium, haeresim aut alias causas possit inter coniuges thori et cohabitationis separatio fieri, non tamen illis aliud matrimonium contrahere fas esse.

Item apostolicas et ecclesiasticas traditiones suscipiendas esse et venerandas. Indulgentiarum etiam potestatem a Christo Ecclesiae relictam fuisse, illarumque usum christiano populo maxime salutarem esse.

Pariter, quae de peccato originali, de iustificatione, de sacrorum librorum tam Veteris quam Novi Testamenti indice et interpretatione in praefata Tridentina Synodo definita sunt, suscipio et profiteor.

[Iussu Leonis XIII, Decreto S. Congregationis de Propaganda Fide, 16. Iui. 1878, hic additur: Item veneror et suscipio oecumenicam Synodum Vaticanam atque omnia ab eadem tradita, definita et declarata, Council of Florence [*1300–1353], and I confess those things that were defined in it....

Likewise, I revere and accept the Council of Trent 2535 [*1500–1835], and I profess what was defined and declared in it, and especially that there is offered to God in the Mass a true, proper, and propitiatory sacrifice, for the living and the dead, and that in the Most Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist, in accordance with the faith that had always been in the Church of God, there is contained truly, really, and substantially the body and blood together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and hence the whole Christ, and that there is made a change of the whole substance of the bread into the body, and of the whole substance of the wine into the blood, which change the Catholic Church most fittingly calls transubstantiation, and that under each species and in each single part of each species, when a division is made, the whole Christ is contained.

Likewise, I profess that there are seven sacraments 2536 of the New Law instituted by Christ, our Lord, for the salvation of the human race, although not all of them are necessary for each individual: namely, baptism, confirmation, Eucharist, penance, extreme unction, orders, and matrimony; and (I profess) that these confer grace and that of these, baptism, confirmation, and orders cannot be repeated (without sacrilege).

Likewise, (I profess) that baptism is necessary for salvation, and hence, if there is imminent danger of death, it should be conferred at once and without delay and that it is valid if conferred with the right matter and form and intention by anyone and at any time.

Likewise, (I profess) that the bond of the sacrament of matrimony is indissoluble and that, although a separation of bed and board may be possible between the spouses because of adultery, heresy, and some other causes, nevertheless it is not lawful for them to contract another marriage.

Likewise, (I profess) that the apostolic and 2537 ecclesiastical traditions must be accepted and revered; also, that power of granting indulgences has been left to the Church by Christ and that their use is highly salutary for Christian people.

Likewise, I accept and profess what was defined in 2538 the aforesaid Council of Trent about original sin, about justification, about the list and interpretation of the sacred books of both the New Testament and the Old.

[By order of Leo XIII with the Sacred Congregation 2539 for the Propagation of the Faith, there was here added on July 16, 1878: Likewise, I venerate and accept the Vatican Ecumenical Council, and I most firmly embrace

praesertim de Romani Pontificis primatu ac de eius infallibili magisterio, firmissime amplector et profiteor.]

2540 Cetera item omnia suscipio et profiteor, quae recipit et profitetur sancta Romana Ecclesia, simulque contraria omnia, et schismata et haereses ab eadem Ecclesia damnatas, reiectas et anathematizatas ego pariter damno, reicio et anathematizo. Insuper Romano Pontifici, beati Petri principis Apostolorum successori ac Iesu Christi vicario, veram oboedientiam spondeo ac iuro.

Hanc fidem catholicae Ecclesiae, extra quam nemo salvus esse potest, ... [ut in professione fidei Tridentina, *1870].

and profess each and every thing it handed down, defined, and declared, especially on the primacy of the Roman pontiff and his infallible Magisterium.]

Likewise, all other things I accept and profess that the Holy Roman Church accepts and professes, and I likewise condemn, reject, and anathematize at the same time all contrary things, both schisms and heresies, which have been condemned, rejected, and anathematized by the same Church. In addition, I promise and swear true obedience to the Roman pontiff, the successor of Blessed Peter, the prince of the apostles and the vicar of Jesus Christ.

⟨And I profess⟩ this faith of the Catholic Church, outside of which no one can be saved, ... [as in the Tridentine profession of faith, *1870].

2543–2544: Brief Suprema omnium Ecclesiarum, July 7, 1745

This brief is directed against abuses in confession, especially in Portugal, which were also condemned in the constitution Ubi primum of July 2, 1746 (Benedict XIV, Bullarium [Mechelen], 4:117–27). Benedict XIV declared his decision to be a general definition valid “in every place and time” (ubique locorum ac temporum) (constitution Ad eradicandam pravum of September 28, 1746; Benedict XIV, Bullarium [Mechelen], 4:303–7).

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen), 3:178f. (old ed., vol. 1, no. 134) / BullLux 16:305ab.

About Not Demanding the Name of an Accomplice

2543 (1) Pervenit ... haud ita pridem ad aures Nostras, nonnullos istarum partium confessarios falsa zeli imagine seduci se passos, sed a zelo secundum scientiam [cf. Rm 10:2] longe aberrantes, perversam quandam et perniciosam praxim in audiendis Christi fidelium confessionibus et in saluberrimo paenitentiae sacramento administrando invehere atque introducere coepisse: ut videlicet, si forte in paenitentibus incidissent socium criminis habentes, ab iisdem paenitentibus socii huiusmodi seu complicitis nomen passim exquirerent, atque ad illud sibi revelandum non inducere modo suadendo conarentur, sed quod detestabilius est, denuntiata quoque, nisi revelarent, absolutionis sacramentalis negatione prorsus adigerent atque compellerent; immo etiam complicitis eiusdem nedum nomen, sed habitationis insuper locum sibi exigerent designari;

quam illi quidem intolerandam imprudentiam tum procurandae complicitis correctionis aliorumque bonorum colligendorum specioso praetextu colorare, tum emendicatis quibusdam doctorum opinionibus defendere non dubitarent; cum vera opiniones huiusmodi vel falsas et erroneas sequendo, vel veras et sanas male applicando, perniciem tam suis quam paenitentium animabus consciscerent, ac sese praeterea plurium gravium damnorum, quae inde facile consecutura fore praevidere debuerant, reos coram Deo aeterno iudice constituerent....

(1) For it came to Our attention ... not so long ago that some confessors of those parts, allowing themselves to be seduced by a false idea of zeal but straying far from the zeal according to knowledge [cf. Rom 10:2], have begun to bring in and to introduce a certain evil and pernicious practice in hearing the confessions of the faithful of Christ and in administering the very saving sacrament of penance: namely, that if by chance they should happen upon penitents who have an associate in their sin, they commonly demand from these penitents the name of such an accomplice or companion, and ⟨they⟩ attempt to induce them to reveal this to them not only by persuasion, but what is more detestable, ⟨they⟩ directly force and compel them to reveal it, under a threat of denying them sacramental absolution; nay more, they demand that not only the name of the accomplice be made known but also the place of residence; and this intolerable imprudence they do not hesitate to disguise by the specious pretext of procuring the correction of the accomplice and of accomplishing other good effects and likewise to defend it with some questionable opinions of doctors, when, in truth, by following false and erroneous opinions of this sort or by making a bad application of true and sound principles, they bring destruction not only to their own souls but also to those of their penitents, and, besides, they render themselves guilty before God, the eternal judge, of many serious evils that they ought to have foreseen would easily follow from their action....

(3) [Censura.:] Nos autem, ne in tam gravi animarum discrimine ulla ex parte Apostolico Nostro ministerio deesse videamur, neve mentem hac super re Nostram apud vos obscuram aut ambiguam esse sinamus: notum vobis esse volumus, memoratam superius praxim penitus reprobendam esse, eandemque a Nobis per praesentes Nostras in forma Brevis litteras reprobari atque damnari tamquam scandalosam et perniciosam, ac tam famae proximorum quam ipsi etiam sacramento iniuriosam, tendentemque ad sacrosancti sigilli sacramentalis violationem atque ab eiusdem paenitentiae sacramenti tantopere proficuo et necessario usu fideles abalienantem.

(3) [Censure.:] Moreover, in order that We may not seem to be lacking in Our apostolic ministry to any degree in so great a danger to souls and so that We may not permit Our mind on this matter to be obscure or ambiguous to you, We wish you to know that the practice mentioned above must be entirely repudiated, and this same practice is reprovved and condemned by Us through Our present writings, in the form of a brief, as scandalous and dangerous and as harmful to the reputation of one's neighbor as it is to the sacrament itself and tending to the violation of the most sacred sacramental seal and alienating the faithful from so advantageous and necessary a use of this same sacrament of penance.

2544

2546–2550: Encyclical Vix pervenit to the Italian Bishops, November 1, 1745

This encyclical arises from a commission of theologians convoked on July 4, 1745, which presented its findings to the pope in sessions of July 18 and August 1.

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen), 3:269–72 (old ed., vol. 1, no. 143) / BullLux 16:328ab / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:61f., no. 1393n. (inside an instruction of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith in the year 1873).

Usury

(§ 3) 1. [Conceptus usurae.:] Peccati genus illud, quod usura vocatur, quodque in contractu mutui propriam suam sedem et locum habet, in eo est repositum, quod quis ex ipsomet mutuo, quod suapte natura tantundem dumtaxat reddi postulat, quantum receptum est, plus sibi reddi velit, quam est receptum, ideoque ultra sortem lucrum aliquod, ipsius ratione mutui, sibi deberi contendat. Omne propterea huiusmodi lucrum, quod sortem superet, illicitum et usurarium est.

(§ 3) 1. [The concept of usury.:] That species of sin which is called usury and which has its proper basis and place in a contract of lending consists in this: that someone, from the loan itself, which of its very nature demands that only as much be returned as was received, wishes more to be returned to him than was received and therefore contends that some profit beyond the principal, by reason of the lending, is due to him. Therefore, all profit of this sort that surpasses the principal is unlawful and is usurious.

2546

2. Neque vero ad istam labem purgandam ullum accessiri subsidium poterit vel ex eo, quod id lucrum non excedens et nimium sed moderatum, non magnum sed exiguum sit; vel ex eo, quod is, a quo id lucrum solius causa mutui deposcitur, non pauper sed dives existat, nec datum sibi mutuo summam relicturus otiosam, sed ad fortunas suas amplificandas vel novis coëmendis praediis vel quaestuosis agitandis negotiis utilissime sit impensurus.

2. Nor may any defense be summoned to justify that guilt, either from this fact, that the gain is not excessive and exorbitant, but moderate, is not great but meager; or from this, that he from whom that profit is asked, because of the loan itself, is not a poor man but rich, who is not going to leave the sum given to him as a loan idle but is going to spend it advantageously to increase his fortune either by buying new estates or by transacting profitable business.

2547

Contra mutui siquidem legem, quae necessario in dati atque redditi aequalitate versatur, agere ille convincitur, quisquis, eadem aequalitate semel posita, plus aliquid a quolibet vi mutui ipsius, cui per aequale iam satis est factum, exigere adhuc non veretur: proindeque, si acceperit, restituendo erit obnoxius ex eius obligatione iustitiae, quam commutativam appellant, et cuius est in humanis contractibus aequalitatem cuiusque propriam et sancte servare et non servatam exacte reparare.

Indeed, that person is convicted of acting contrary to the law of lending, which necessarily is concerned with the equality of what is given and returned, who, although that same equality has already once been rendered, does not fear to demand something more from someone, by reason of the lending itself, for which satisfaction has already been made on equal terms; and hence, if he should receive it, he will be obligated to restitution by reason of his obligation in justice, which they call commutative justice, and whose purpose it is both to preserve inviolably in human contracts the equality proper to each one and to repair it exactly when it is not observed.

2548 3. Per haec autem nequaquam negatur, posse quandoque una cum mutui contractu quosdam alios, ut aiunt, titulos, eisdemque ipsimet universim naturae mutui minime innatos et intrinsecos forte concurrere, ex quibus iusta omnino legitimaque causa consurgat quiddam amplius supra sortem ex mutuo debitam rite exigendi.

Neque item negatur, posse multoties pecuniam ab unoquoque suam per alios diversae prorsus naturae a mutui natura contractus recte collocari et impendi, sive ad proventus sibi annuos conquirendos, sive etiam ad licitam mercaturam et negotiationem exercendam honestaque indidem luca percipienda.

2549 4. Quemadmodum vero, in tot eiusmodi diversis contractuum generibus, si sua cuiusque non servatur aequalitas, quidquid plus iusto recipitur, si minus ad usuram (eo quod omne mutuum, tam apertum quam palliatum, absit), at certe ad aliam veram iniustitiam restituendi onus pariter afferentem spectare compertum est: ita, si rite omnia peragantur et ad iustitiae libram exigantur, dubitandum non est, quin multiplex in iisdem contractibus licitus modus et ratio suppetat humana commercia et fructuosam ipsam negotiationem ad publicum commodum conservandi ac frequentandi. Absit enim a Christianorum animis, ut per usuras aut similes alienas iniurias florere posse lucrosa commercia existiment; cum contra ex ipso oraculo divino discamus, quod “iustitia elevat gentem, miseros autem facit populos peccatum” [Prv 14:34].

2550 5. Sed illud diligenter animadvertendum est, falso sibi quemquam et non nisi temere persuasurum, reperiri semper ac praesto ubique esse vel una cum mutuo titulos alios legitimos, vel, secluso etiam mutuo, contractus alios iustos, quorum vel titulorum vel contractuum praesidio, quotiescumque pecunia, frumentum aliudve id generis alteri cuicumque creditur, toties semper liceat auctarium moderatum ultra sortem integram salvamque recipere.

Ita si quis senserit, non modo divinis documentis et catholicae Ecclesiae de usura iudicio, sed ipsi etiam humano communi sensui ac naturali rationi procul dubio adversabitur. Neminem enim id saltem latere potest, quod multis in casibus tenetur homo simplici ac nudo mutuo alteri succurrere, ipso praesertim Christo Domino edocente: “Volenti mutuari a te, ne avertaris” [Mt 5:42]; et quod similiter multis in circumstantiis, praeter unum mutuum, alteri nulli vero iustoque contractui locus esse possit.

Quisquis igitur suae conscientiae consultum velit, inquiret prius diligenter oportet, verene cum mutuo iustus alius titulus, verene iustus alter a mutuo contractus occurrat, quorum beneficio, quod quaerit lucrum, omnibus labis expers et immune reddatur.

3. But by this it is not at all denied that sometimes there can perhaps occur certain other titles, as they say, together with the contract of lending, and these not at all innate or intrinsic in general to the nature of a loan, from which titles there arises a just and entirely legitimate cause of rightly demanding something more above the principal than is due from the loan.

Likewise, it is not denied that many times one’s own money can be rightly invested and expended in other contracts of a different nature from the nature of lending, either to secure an annual income for oneself or also to practice legitimate commerce and business and thus procure an honest profit.

4. But just as it is certain that in so many different kinds of contracts of this nature, if the equality of each one is not assured, whatever is received beyond what is just certainly pertains, if not to usury (because every loan, whether open or secret, is defective), then to some other real injustice, which likewise implies the obligation of restitution, so, if all things are rightly transacted and carried out according to the scale of justice, there is no doubt that the various lawful ways and means of proceeding in these contracts are enough to maintain and carry on human commerce and profitable business itself for the common good. For far be it from Christian minds to think that, by making use of usury or other similar injustices, profitable commerce could flourish; since, on the contrary, we learn from the divine saying itself that “justice exalts a nation, but sin makes the people miserable” [Prov 14:34].

5. But this must be diligently borne in mind, that one would falsely and certainly rashly persuade himself that there is always found and is everywhere present either some legitimate titles together with a loan or, even excluding a loan, other just contracts by the aid of which titles or contracts it is permitted, as often as money, grain, or something of that kind is lent to another, just so often to receive a moderate increase beyond the whole and sound principal.

And so, if anyone thinks in this manner, he will without any doubt be in opposition, not only to the divine Scriptures and to the judgment of the Catholic Church about usury, but even to human common sense itself and to natural reason. For, this at least cannot escape anyone, that in many cases a man is bound to succor another with a pure and simple act of lending, especially when Christ the Lord teaches: “Do not turn away from him who would borrow from you” [Mt 5:42]; and that, similarly, in many circumstances, besides the loan itself, there can be place for no other just and true contract.

Whoever, therefore, is willing to consult his conscience ought first to inquire whether with a loan there is truly any other just title or, apart from a loan, there is a just contract by reason of which the profit he seeks may be rendered immune and free of all guilt.

2552–2562: Instruction Postremo mense, February 28, 1747

This letter, sent to his vicar in Rome to deal with a case that had arisen in the city, was later published by Benedict XIV.
Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen), 5:8–48 (old ed., vol. 2, no. 28) / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:197f., no. 360).

The Baptism of Infants against the Will of the Parents

4. De primo primae partis capite si sermo sit, utrum nempe dissentientibus parentibus Hebraei infantes baptizari possint, aperte asserimus, hoc iam a sancto Thoma tribus in locis definitum fuisse, nempe in Quodlibet 2, a. 7; in [Summa theologiae] IIa IIae, q. 10, a. 12, ubi ad examen revocans quaestionem in Quodlibetis propositam: “Utrum pueri Iudaeorum et aliorum infidelium sint invitis parentibus baptizandi”, ita respondet: “Respondeo dicendum, quod maximam habet auctoritatem Ecclesiae consuetudo, quae semper est in omnibus aemulanda, etc. Hoc autem Ecclesiae usus nunquam habuit, quod Iudaeorum filii invitis parentibus baptizarentur...”; atque ita ait in IIIa, q. 68, a. 10: “Respondeo dicendum, quod pueri infidelium filii ... si nondum habent usum liberi arbitrii, secundum ius naturale sunt sub cura parentum, quamdiu ipsi sibi providere non possunt ...; et ideo contra iustitiam naturalem esset, si tales pueri invitis parentibus baptizarentur; sicut etiam si aliquis habens usum rationis baptizaretur invitus. Esset etiam periculosum...”

5. Scotus in IV Sententia dist. 4, q. 9, n. 2 et in quaestionibus relatis ad n. 2 censuit laudabiliter posse principem imperare, ut invitis etiam parentibus Hebraeorum atque infidelium infantuli baptizentur, dummodo id potissimum prudenter caveatur, ne iidem infantes a parentibus occidantur... Praevaluit tamen in tribunalibus sancti Thomae sententia ... atque inter theologos canonumque peritos vulgatio est...

7. Hoc igitur posito, quod nefas sit Hebraeorum infantes reluctante parentum arbitrio baptizare, nunc iuxta ordinem initio propositum descendere iam oportet ad alteram partem: an videlicet contingere umquam possit occasio aliqua, in qua id liceat et conveniat.

8. ... Cum id eveniat, ut ab aliquo Christiano Hebraeorum puer morti proximus reperitur, rem opinor laudabilem Deoque gratam is certe efficiet, qui salutem puero aqua lustrali praebeat immortalem...

9. Si item eveniret, ut puer aliquis Hebraeus proiectus esset atque a parentibus derelictus, communis omnium sententia est pluribus quoque confirmata iudiciis, eum

4. If there is any discussion of the first chapter of the first part, whether Hebrew children can be baptized if the parents object, we openly assert that this has already been defined in three places by St. Thomas, namely, in Quodlibeta 2, a. 7; in [Summa theologiae] II–II, q. 10, a. 12, where, recalling for examination the question proposed in the Quodlibeta: “Whether the children of Jews and of other unbelievers should be baptized against the will of the parents”, he answered thus: “I reply that it must be said that the custom of the Church has great authority, which should always be followed in all things... Moreover, the usage of the Church never held that the children of Jews should be baptized against their parents’ wishes ...”, and in addition he says this in III, q. 68, a. 10: “I reply that it must be said that children, sons of unbelievers ..., if they do not yet have the use of free will, are, according to the natural law, under the care of their parents, as long as they cannot provide for themselves ..., and, therefore, it would be against natural justice if such children were baptized without the parents’ consent; just as if someone having the use of reason should be baptized against his will. It would even be dangerous...”

5. Scotus in book 4 [of his Commentary on the Sentences of Peter Lombard], dist. 4, q. 9, no. 2, and in questions related to no. 2, thought that a prince could laudably command that small children of Hebrews and unbelievers be baptized, even against the will of the parents, provided one could prudently see to it that these same children were not killed by the parents... Nevertheless, the opinion of St. Thomas prevailed in courts ... and is more widespread among theologians and those skilled in canon law...

7. Therefore, this having been established, that it is unlawful to baptize Hebrew children against the will of their parents, now, following the order proposed in the beginning, we must take up the second part: namely, whether any occasion could ever occur in which that would be lawful and fitting.

8. ... Since this may happen, that a child of Hebrew parentage be found by some Christian to be close to death, he will certainly perform a deed that I think is praiseworthy and pleasing to God if he furnishes the child with eternal salvation by the purifying water...

9. If, likewise, it should happen that any Hebrew child had been cast out and abandoned by its parents, it is the common opinion of all and has also been confirmed by baptizari oportere, reclamantibus etiam repetentibusque parentibus....

2557 14. Postquam casus magis obvios exposuimus, in quibus nostra haec regula prohibet, Hebraeorum infantes invitis parentibus baptizari, aliquas insuper declarationes addimus ad hanc regulam pertinentes, quarum haec prima est: si parentes desint, infantes vero alicuius Hebraei tutelae commissi fuerint, eos sine tutoris assensu licite baptizari nullo modo posse, cum omnis parentum potestas ad tutores pervenerit....

15. Secunda est, si pater christianae militiae nomen daret iuberetque infantem filium baptizari; eum quidem vel matre Hebraea dissentiente baptizandum esse, cum filius non sub matris, sed sub patris potestate sit habendus....

16. Tertia est: quamvis mater filios sui iuris non habeat, tamen ad Christi fidem si accedat et infantem offerat baptizandum, tametsi pater Hebraeus reclamet, eum nihilominus aqua baptismatis abluendum esse....

17. Quarta est, quod si pro certo habeatur, parentum voluntatem esse infantium baptismati necessariam, quoniam sub appellatione parentum locum quoque habet paternus avus: ... hinc necessario sequitur, ut, si avus paternus catholicam fidem amplexus sit ac nepotem ferat ad sacri lavacri fontem, quamvis mortuo iam patre mater Hebraea repugnet, tamen infans sit absque dubio baptizandus....

2558 18. Fictitia res non est, quod aliquando pater Hebraeus se velle catholicam religionem amplecti praedicet ac se ipsum filiosque infantes baptizandos offerat, postmodum vero sui se consilii paeniteat abnuatque filium baptizari. Id Mantuae evenit.... Res ad examen deducta est in Congregatione S. Officii, ac Pontifex die 24. Sept. anno 1699 ... decrevit, quod “duo filii infantes, alter scilicet triennis, alter quinquennis baptizentur. Alii, nempe filius octo annorum et filia duodecim, collocentur in domo Catechumenorum, si ea Mantuae adsit, sin minus apud piam honestamque personam ad effectum explorandi ipsorum voluntatem eosque instruendi.”...

many decisions that the child ought to be baptized, even if the parents protest against this and demand the child back....

14. After we have explained the most obvious cases in which this rule of ours prohibits the baptizing of Hebrew children against the wishes of their parents, we add some other clarifications pertaining to this rule, the first of which is this: If parents are lacking, but the infants have been entrusted to the guardianship of a Hebrew, they can in no way be lawfully baptized without the assent of the guardian, since all the authority of the parents has passed to the guardians....

15. The second is this, if the father should join the Christian religion and order his infant son to be baptized, he should be baptized, even though the Hebrew mother protests, since the child must be considered to be, not under the power of the mother, but under that of the father....

16. The third is this, that although the mother does not have her children under her own legal right, nevertheless, if she belongs to the Christian faith and offers her child for baptism, although the Hebrew father protests, nevertheless, the child should be cleansed by the water of baptism....

17. The fourth is that, if it is a certainty that the will of parents is necessary for the baptism of children, since under the name of parent a paternal grandfather also is included ..., then it necessarily follows that, if the paternal grandfather has embraced the Catholic faith and brings his grandchild to the font of saving water, even if the Hebrew mother objects, when the father is already dead, the child should, without any doubt, still be baptized....

18. It is not an imaginary case that sometimes a Hebrew father says that he wants to embrace the Catholic religion and presents himself and his infant sons to be baptized, but afterward regrets his intention and refuses to have his son baptized. This happened at Mantua.... The case was brought for examination in the Congregation of the Holy Office, and the pope on September 24 in the year 1699 ... decreed that “two infant sons, one three years old, the other five, be baptized. The other children, namely, a son of eight years and a daughter twelve, should be placed in the house of catechumens, if there is one at Mantua, but if not, at the home of a pious and honorable person for the purpose of finding out their will and of instructing them.”...

On the Baptism of Infants Presented with Improper Intent

2559 19. Sunt quoque aliqui infideles suos infantes Christianis offerre soliti, ut aquis salubribus abluantur, non tamen Christi ut stipendia mereantur, neque ut originalis culpa eorum ex anima deleatur: sed id faciunt

19. Also some unbelievers are accustomed to bring their children to Christians to be washed with the saving waters, not, however, that they may merit the satisfactions of Christ or that the guilt of original sin may indigna quadam superstitione ducti, quod nempe baptismi beneficio existimant eosdem a malignis spiritibus, a foetore aut morbo aliquo liberandos. . . .

21. Cum ad theologos canonumque peritos huius quaestionis examen transisset, varii casus propositi ac discussi fuerunt. Infideles aliqui, cum hoc sibi in animum induxissent, baptismi gratia infantes suos a morbis daemonumque vexationibus liberatum iri, eo dementiae adducti sunt, ut mortem quoque minitati sint catholicis sacerdotibus, qui, utpote eorum pravae mentis conscii, baptismum eorumdem liberis constantissime denegabant. . . .

[Quidam] sentiunt omnibus conferri baptismum posse, mors ut evitetur, dum materia solum, non autem forma, adhibeatur. At huic sententiae refragatur congregatio S. Officii coram Pontifice habita die 5. Sept. 1625:

“Sacra Congregatio universalis Inquisitionis habita coram Sanctissimo, relatis Litteris episcopi Antibarensis, in quibus supplicabat pro resolutione infrascripti dubii:

An, cum sacerdotes coguntur a Turcis, ut baptizent eorum filios, non ut christianos efficiant, sed pro corporali salute, ut liberentur a foetore, comitali morbo, maleficiorum periculo et lupis, an in tali casu possint saltem fecte eos baptizare, adhibita baptismi materia sine debita forma?

Respondit negative, quia baptismus est ianua sacramentorum ac protestatio fidei, nec ullo modo fingi potest.”. . .

The Baptism of Infants Illegitimately Presented

29. . . . Ad eos itaque spectat hic sermo noster, qui baptismi, neque a parentibus neque ab aliis, qui ius in eos habeant, offeruntur, sed ab aliquo nullam habente auctoritatem. De iis praeterea agitur, quorum casus non comprehenduntur sub ea dispositione, quae sinit baptismum conferri, etiamsi maiorum consensus desit: hoc quidem in casu baptizari non debent, sed ad illos remitti, quorum in potestate ac fide sunt legitime constituti.

Quod si iam sacramento initiati essent, aut detinendi sunt aut ab Hebraeis parentibus recuperandi tradendique Christi fidelibus, ut ab illis pie sancteque informentur; hic enim baptismi licet illiciti, tamen veri validique, effectus est. . . .

be washed from their soul, but they do this, motivated by some base superstition, namely, because they think that by the benefit of baptism, these same children may be freed from malignant spirits, from infection, or some illness. . . .

21. After the examination of this question was brought before theologians and canonists, various cases were proposed and discussed. Some unbelievers, when they have represented this idea to themselves, that by the grace of baptism their children will be freed from illnesses and the persecution of the demons, are brought to such a state of madness that they have also threatened Catholic priests with death, who, knowing of their improper intention, denied the baptism of their children with great resolve. . . . 2560

[Some] thought that, in order to avoid death, baptism could be conferred upon all, using only the matter and not also the formula. But, in opposition to this belief, the Congregation of the Holy Office in the presence of the pope on September 5, 1625, contested:

“The Sacred Congregation of the general Inquisition held in the presence of His Holiness, having read the letters of the bishop of Antivari in which he made supplication for a solution of the doubt written below: 2561

Could priests, when they are compelled by Turks to baptize their children, not that they may make them Christians, but for their bodily health, so that they may be freed from bad odor, epilepsy, the danger of bewitchment, and wolves, in such a case pretend to baptize them, making use of the matter of baptism without the prescribed form?

He replied in the negative, because baptism is the door of the sacraments and a profession of faith, and that in no way can it be simulated.”. . .

29. . . . And so our discourse comes now to those who are presented for baptism neither by their parents nor by others who have any right over them but by someone who has no authority. In addition, there is a question about those whose cases are not comprehended under the disposition that permits baptism to be conferred even if the consent of their elders is withheld. In this case, indeed, they ought not to be baptized but should be sent back to those in whose power and trust they are lawfully placed. 2562

But if they have been already admitted to the sacrament, they must either be detained or be recovered from their Hebrew parents and handed over to the faithful of Christ, so that they may be piously and religiously trained by them; for this is the effect of baptism, which, though it be unlawful, nevertheless is true and valid. . . .

2564–2565: Letter Dum praeterito to the Grand Inquisitor of Spain, July 31, 1748

At the request of Father General Gioja, O.E.S.A., Benedict XIV by this letter restrained the Grand Inquisitor of Spain from listing in the Spanish Index works of Enrico Cardinal Noris that were suspected of Baianism and Jansenism. The pope emphasized the freedom of theological schools.

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium 13, supplement (Mechelen), 110 / R. de Martinis, Benedicti XIV Acta sive nondum sive sparsim edita 1 (Naples, 1894), 556b–557a / AnIP 17 (1878): 31.

Liberty of Teaching in Questions concerning the Aids of Grace

2564 Tu scis in celeberrimis quaestionibus de praedestinatione et gratia et de modo conciliandi humanam libertatem cum omnipotentia Dei multiplices esse in scholis opiniones. Thomistae traducuntur uti destructores humanae libertatis et uti sectatores nedum Iansenii, sed etiam Calvinii; sed cum ipsi obiectis apprime satisfaciant, nec eorum sententia fuerit umquam a Sede Apostolica reprobata, in ea Thomistae impune versantur, nec fas est ulli Superiori ecclesiastico in praesenti rerum statu eos a sua sententia removere.

Augustiniani traducuntur tamquam sectatores Baii et Iansenii. Reponunt ipsi, se humanae libertatis fautores esse, et oppositiones pro viribus eliminant, cumque eorum sententia usque adhuc a Sede Apostolica damnata non sit, nemo est qui non videat, a nullo praetendi posse, ut a sua sententia discedant:

Sectatores Molinae et Suaresii a suis adversariis proscribuntur, perinde ac si essent Semipelagiani; Romani Pontifices de hoc Moliniano systemate usque adhuc iudicium non tulerunt, et idcirco in eius tuitione prosequuntur et prosequi possunt.

2565 Uno verbo, episcopi et inquisitores non notas, quas doctores inter se digladiantes sibi invicem opponunt, attendere debent, sed an notae invicem oppositae sint a Sede Apostolica reprobatae. Haec libertati scholarum favet, haec nullum ex propositis modis conciliandi humanam libertatem cum divina omnipotentia usque adhuc reprobavit. Episcopi et inquisitores, cum se dat occasio, eodem modo se gerant, etiam si uti privatae personae unius potius quam alterius sententiae sint sectatores. Nos ipsi etsi uti privati doctores in theologis rebus uni faveamus opinioni, ut Summi Pontifices tamen oppositum non reprobamus nec sinimus ab aliis reprobari.

You know that there are numerous opinions in the schools on the very famous questions concerning predestination and grace and the manner of reconciling human liberty with the omnipotence of God. The Thomists are defamed as destroyers of human liberty and as followers not only of Jansen but also of Calvin; but since they answer the objections in a most excellent manner, and their opinion has never been condemned by the Apostolic See, the Thomists remain unscathed in this, and in the present state of things, it is not permitted for any ecclesiastical superior to deprive them of their opinion.

The Augustinians are defamed as followers of Baius and Jansen. They reply that they are advocates of human liberty, and they resist such objections with all their strength; and since, up until now, the Holy See has not condemned their opinion, there is no one who does not see that it cannot be demanded by anyone that they swerve from their opinion.

The followers of Molina and Suarez are denounced by their adversaries as being Semipelagians; the Roman pontiffs up till now have not pronounced a judgment on this Molinist system, and, for this reason, they continue and can continue to defend it.

In a word, bishops and inquisitors should pay attention, not to the reproaches that the doctors, disputing among themselves, impose against each other, but to whether the reproaches imposed on each other are condemned by the Apostolic See. This (See) favors the liberty of the schools, (and,) up until now, it has not condemned any of the ways proposed for reconciling human liberty with divine omnipotence. Bishops and inquisitors, when the occasion arises, should conduct themselves in the same manner, even if, as private persons, they are followers of one of the opinions more than another. Even if we ourselves, as private doctors in theological matters, may favor one opinion, nevertheless, as supreme pontiffs, we do not condemn the opposite, and we do not permit others to condemn it.

2566–2570: Brief Singulari nobis to Cardinal Henry, Duke of York, February 9, 1749

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelen), 7:24–26 (old ed., vol. 3, no. 2).

Incorporation into the Church by Means of Baptism

2566 § 12. ... Haereticus aliquem baptizando, si formam adhibeat, et materiam legitimam, ... is sacramenti caractere insignitur. ...

§ 12. ... When a heretic baptizes someone, provided he uses the legitimate form and matter, ... the latter is marked with the baptismal character. ...

§ 13. Deinde id etiam compertum est, eum qui baptisma ab haeretico rite suscepit, illius vi Ecclesiae catholicae membrum effici; privatus siquidem baptizantis error hac eum felicitate privare nequit, si sacramentum conferat in fide verae Ecclesiae, atque eius instituta servet in his quae pertinent ad validitatem baptismi. Egregie hoc confirmat Suárez in sua Fidei catholicae defensione contra errores sectae Anglicanae lib. I c. 24, ubi probat baptizatum Ecclesiae membrum fieri, hoc etiam addens, quod si haereticus, quod saepius accidit, infantem lustret impotem ad fidei actum eliciendum, hoc impedimento non est, quominus ille habitum fidei cum baptismo accipiat.¹

§ 14. Postremo exploratum habemus, ab haereticis baptizatos, si ad eam aetatem venerint, in qua bona a malis dispicere per se possint atque erroribus baptizantis adhaereant, illos quidem ab Ecclesiae unitate repelli, iisque bonis orbari omnibus, quibus fruuntur in Ecclesia versantes, non tamen ab eius auctoritate et legibus liberari, ut sapienter Gonzalez disserit in Cap. “Sicut” n. 12 de haereticis.¹

§ 15. Hoc quidem in transfugis ac perduellibus observatum videmus, quos leges civiles a fidelium subditorum privilegiis omnino excludunt. Leges quoque ecclesiasticae privilegia clericalia iis clericis non concedunt, qui sacrorum canonum iussa negligunt. Nemo autem sentit, ut perduelles aut clericos canonum violatores suorum principum aut praelatorum auctoritati non subiacere.

§ 16. Haec exempla, ni fallimur, pertinent ad quaestionem; ut enim illi, sic haeretici Ecclesiae subditi sunt et legibus ecclesiasticis tenentur.

§ 13. Next, it was also found that someone who has received valid baptism from a heretic is made a member of the Catholic Church by virtue of that (baptism); for the personal error of the one baptizing cannot deprive him of this happiness, provided the baptizer confers the sacrament in the faith of the true Church and observes her provisions in what relates to the validity of baptism. Suárez affirms this admirably in his Fidei catholicae defensio contra errores sectae Anglicanae [Defense of the Catholic faith against the errors of the Anglican sect], book 1, chapter 24, where he proves that the person baptized becomes a member of the Catholic Church, also adding this, that if the heretic, as often happens, christens an infant unable to make an act of faith, this is no obstacle to his receiving the habit of faith at baptism.¹

§ 14. Lastly, We have established that, if they reach the age at which they can distinguish right from wrong for themselves and then adhere to the errors of the one who baptized them, persons who were baptized by heretics are rejected from the unity of the Church and are deprived of all those benefits that those remaining in the Church enjoy, but they are not freed from her authority and laws, as González wisely explains in the section “Sicut”, no. 12, concerning heretics.¹

§ 15. We see this in the case of fugitives and traitors, whom the civil laws completely exclude from the privileges of faithful subjects. Similarly, the laws of the Church do not grant clerical privileges to those clerics who disobey the commandments of the sacred canons. But nobody thinks that traitors or clerics who violate the canons are not subject to the authority of their princes or prelates.

§ 16. These examples, unless We are mistaken, are relevant to the question; for just like them, so too heretics are subject to the Church and are bound by ecclesiastical laws.

2571–2575: Constitution Detestabilem, November 10, 1752

The authors of the condemned propositions are named by Benedict XIV in his letter Religiosae ac filialis of March 3, 1753 (ed. by R. de Martinis, Benedicti XIV Acta sive nondum sive sparsim edita 2 [Naples, 1894], 127b–128a = no. 282), to Father Daniel Stadler, S.J., who taught propositions 4 and 5 in his tract De duello honoris vindice ad theologiae et iuris principia examinatio (Ingolstadt and Augsburg, 1751). The pope praises Stadler, since he immediately retracted his propositions because of the bull, and he goes on to say: “Therefore, it was not so much the assertions of your work as the opinions transmitted by others that We have examined and, in virtue of Our authority, proscribed. In fact, the first of the condemned propositions is that of Father [Anacletus] Reiffenstuel, O.Min.; the second is that of Father [Patricius] Sporer, O.F.M.Rec.; and the third of Father [Pius Thomas] Milante, O.P. We have made this choice with the intention that the censure not be seen as directed only against you and that all should easily understand that, in affirming the truth, there is no regard for persons or institutions on Our part” (Quare non tam operis tui sententias quam ab aliis traditas opiniones in examen adductas auctoritate Nostra proscrispimus. Prima enim ex damnatis propositionibus est patris [Anacleti] Reiffenstuel O.Min., secunda patris [Patricii] Sporer Minoris Recollectae, et tertia patris [Pii Thomae] Milante O. Praedic. Quem quidem delectum eo etiam consilio habuimus, ne in te unum districta videretur censura et facile omnes intelligerent, nullam esse apud Nos in veritate asserenda personarum institutorumque acceptionem).

*2567¹ Francisco Suárez, Opera Omnia, ed. C. Berton, vol. 24 (Paris, 1859), 117.

*2568¹ Emanuel González Téllez, Commentaria perpetua in singulos textus 5 librorum Decretalium Gregorii IX (Lyon, 1673, and later eds.), in l. V, tit. 7, c. 8.

Ed.: Benedict XIV, Bullarium (Mechelon), 10:77f. (old ed., vol. 4, no. 6) / Bullarium (Rome), 4:16bf. / BullLux 19:19b.

Errors concerning Dueling

- 2571 1. Vir militaris, qui, nisi offerat vel acceptet duellum, tamquam formidolosus, timidus, abiectus et ad officia militaria ineptus haberetur, indeque officio, quo se suosque sustentat, privaretur, vel promotionis alias sibi debita ac promerita spe perpetuo carere deberet, culpa et poena vacaret, sive offerat sive acceptet duellum.¹
1. A military man who would be considered fearful, timid, abject, and unfit for military offices unless he offers or accepts a duel, and hence would be deprived of an office by which he supports himself and his family, or who would be perpetually deprived of the hope of promotion otherwise due him and merited by him, is free from guilt and penalty whether he offers a duel or accepts one.¹
- 2572 2. Excusari possunt etiam honoris tuendi vel humanae vilipensionis vitandae gratia duellum acceptantes, vel ad illud provocantes, quando certo sciunt, pugnam non esse secururam utpote ab aliis impediendam.¹
2. Those who accept a duel or even provoke a duel for the sake of protecting their honor or of avoiding the disrepute of men can be excused when they know for certain that the combat will not take place, inasmuch as it will be prevented by others.¹
- 2573 3. Non incurrit ecclesiasticas poenas ab Ecclesia contra duellantes latas dux vel officialis militiae, acceptans duellum ex gravi metu amissionis famae et officii.¹
3. A leader or military officer who accepts a duel through grave fear of losing his reputation or his office does not incur the ecclesiastical penalties brought by the Church against duelists.¹
- 2574 4. Licitum est, in statu hominis naturali, acceptare et offerre duellum ad servandas cum honore fortunas, quando alio remedio earum iactura propulsari nequit.
4. It is permitted in the natural state of man to accept and to offer a duel to preserve one's fortunes with honor when their loss cannot be prevented by any other means.
- 2575 5. Asserta licentia pro statu naturali applicari etiam potest statui civitatis male ordinatae, in qua nimirum vel negligentia vel malitia magistratus iustitia aperte denegatur.
5. This permission claimed for the natural state can also be applied to the condition of a badly regulated commonwealth, in which justice is indisputedly denied openly, either by the negligence or the malice of the magistracy.
- [Censura: Damnatae ac prohibita tamquam] falsae, scandalosae ac perniciosae. [Censure: Condemned and prohibited as] false, scandalous, and pernicious.

CLEMENT XIII: July 6, 1758–February 2, 1769

2580–2585: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Cochin (India), August 1, 1759

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:266, no. 421 / CdICF 4:90f., no. 810.

The Pauline Privilege

- 2580 Expos.: Saepe contingit, ut ex duobus infidelibus alter convertatur ad fidem, alter converti quidem tunc nolit, consentiat tamen cohabitare cum fidei sine contumelia Creatoris et quin eum pertrahat ad mortale peccatum, immo promittat se quoque fidem postea amplexaturum, quod ob aliquam specialem rationem aliquamdiu differre necessarium ducit. Quare
- Exposition:* It often happens that of two unbelievers one is converted to the faith, while the other does not want to be converted at the same time but consents nevertheless to cohabit with the believer without offense to the Creator and without drawing the believer to mortal sin and, indeed, promises that he is also going to embrace the faith later on but thinks it necessary to defer doing

*2571¹ Cf. A. Reiffenstuel, Theologia moralis, [vol. 2:] Supplementum, tract. IX, dist. 3, q. 3, additio II (Venice, 1728), 65.

*2572¹ P. Sporer, Theologiae moralis super decalogum II, tract. V, c. 2:204 (Salzburg, 1722), 174.

*2573¹ P. T. Milante, Exercitationes dogmatico-morales in propositiones proscriptas a S.P. Alexandro VII, exercitatio II [on prop. 2 = *2022] (Naples, 1738), 15f.

fidelis infidelem non dimittit, sed cohabitare pergunt ut coniuges, idque ad longum tempus et aliquos etiam annos: at postea infidelis, mutata voluntate, non solum converti non vult, sed tentat fidelem pertrahere ad idolorum cultum, vel discedit, nec iam consentit habitare cum illo, immo ad alias nuptias ipse transit.

Qu.: 1. An in hoc casu possit etiam fidelis derelictus discedere et ad alias nuptias transire, habeatque hic locum privilegium ab Apostolo promulgatum: “Si infidelis discedit, discedat” [1 Cor 7:15]?

2. An id solum habeat locum, quando infidelis discedit odio fidei, an etiam quando discedit propter discordias vel aliam causam a fide diversam?

3. An etiam possit fidelis transire ad alias nuptias, quando infidelis quacumque de causa ab eo discessit nec sciri potest, vivat adhuc necne.

4. An fidelis, qui ex dispensatione valide contraxit matrimonium cum infideli, transire possit ad alias nuptias, si infidelis discedat vel cohabitare nolit vel eum pertrahat ad mortale peccatum?

5. An aliquo, et quanto tempore possit fidelis post conversionem cohabitare cum infideli, quin privetur potestate transeundi ad alias nuptias?

Resp.: Ad 1. In casu de quo agitur: affirmative.

Ad 2. Cum militet ex parte coniugis conversi favor fidei, eo potest uti quacumque ex causa, dummodo iusta sit, nimirum si non dederit iustum ac rationabile motivum alteri coniugi discedendi, ita tamen, ut tunc solum intelligatur solutum iugum vinculi matrimonialis cum infideli, quando coniux conversus (renuente altero post interpellationem converti) transit ad alia vota cum fideli.

Ad 3. Praemittendam esse interpellationem, qua intimetur coniugi infideli, an velit converti, a qua interpellatione Apostolica Sedes iustis de causis dispensat.

Ad 4. Si fidelis, praevia dispensatione, contraxit matrimonium cum infideli, censetur illud contraxisse cum explicita condicionem, dummodo nimirum infidelis secum cohabitare velit absque contumelia Creatoris: quare, si infidelis non servat supradictam condicionem, adhibenda sunt iuris remedia ad hoc, ut eam servet; alias separari debent quoad torum et cohabitationem, non tamen quoad vinculum; quocirca in casu de quo agitur, coniuge infideli superstite, non potest fidelis ad alia vota transire.

so for a time for some particular reason. Therefore, the believer does not send away the unbeliever, but they continue to cohabit as spouses and do so for a long time, even for some years: but subsequently the unbeliever, having changed his intention, not only does not want to be converted, but tries to draw the believer to the worship of idols or goes off and no longer consents to live with (the believer) and even contracts another marriage.

Questions: 1. Can the abandoned believer in this case also go off and contract another marriage, and is there here an instance of the privilege promulgated by the apostle: “If the unbelieving partner desires to separate, let it be so” [1 Cor 7:15]? 2581

2. Is this only the case when the unbeliever goes off through hatred of the faith or also when he goes off because of arguments or some other cause distinct from the faith? 2582

3. Can the believer also contract another marriage when the unbeliever goes off for any cause and it cannot be known whether he is still alive or not? 2583

4. Can a believer who, by dispensation, has validly contracted a marriage with an unbeliever contract another marriage if the unbeliever goes off or does not wish to cohabit or draws (the believer) to mortal sin? 2584

5. Can a believer, after conversion, live together with an unbeliever for any period, and, if so, for how long, without losing the right of contracting another marriage? 2585

Response: To 1. In the case in question: Yes.

To 2. Since the favor of the faith operates on the side of the converted spouse, he can make use of it for any reason, provided it is just, that is, if he has not given the other spouse just and reasonable grounds for going off; but in such a way that the yoke of the matrimonial bond with the unbeliever is understood to be dissolved only when the converted spouse (the other refusing to be converted upon inquiry) contracts another marriage with a believer.

To 3. There must first be an inquiry by which the unbelieving spouse is asked whether he wants to be converted; from which inquiry the Apostolic See dispenses for just reasons.

To 4. If a believer, with prior dispensation, has contracted a marriage with an unbeliever, he is deemed to have contracted it with an explicit condition, that is, provided the unbeliever wishes to cohabit with him without offense to the Creator: and therefore, if the unbeliever does not observe the aforesaid condition, the remedies of the law are to be applied so that he does observe it; otherwise, they ought to be separated as to bed and cohabitation, but not as to the bond (of matrimony); wherefore, in the case in question, so long as the unbelieving spouse is still living, the believer cannot contract another marriage.

Ad 5. Conversus ad fidem in ipso conversionis momento non intelligitur solutus a vinculo matrimonii cum infideli adhuc superstite contracti, sed tunc acquirit tantummodo ius transeundi ad alias nuptias, cum coniuge tamen fideli, idque si coniux infidelis renuat post interpellationem converti. Ceterum tunc solum coniugii vinculum dissolvitur, quando coniux conversus transit cum effectu ad alias nuptias. Si autem coniux conversus ante susceptionem baptismi habeat plures uxores, et prima recusat amplecti fidem: tunc legitime potest quamlibet ex illis retinere, dummodo fidelis fiat; sed in hoc casu contrahentes mutuum consensum coram parochio et testibus renovare debent.

To 5. A convert to the faith is not deemed, at the moment of conversion, to be released from the bond of a marriage contracted with an unbeliever who is still living, but only thereby to acquire the right of contracting another marriage, but with a believing spouse, and that only if the unbelieving spouse, upon inquiry, refuses to be converted. Furthermore, the bond of matrimony is dissolved only when the converted spouse actually contracts another marriage. If the converted spouse had several wives before receiving baptism, and the first of them refuses to embrace the faith: he may then legitimately retain any one of them, provided she becomes a believer; but in this case the contracting parties must renew their mutual consent before the parish priest and witnesses.

CLEMENT XIV: May 19, 1769–September 22, 1774

2588: Instruction for a Priest Administering the Sacrament of Confirmation by Delegation from the Apostolic See, May 4, 1774

The Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith decided on March 21, 1774, to issue this instruction, which the pope approved on May 1.

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:309, no. 503 / ASS 7 (1872/1874): 306; new ed. (1915), 331.

The Priest as Minister of Confirmation

2588 Etsi iuxta sacrosancti Tridentini Concilii definitionem [*sessio VII, De confirmatione, can. 3: 1630] solus episcopus est ordinarius huius sacramenti minister, solet tamen quandoque iustus de causis Sedes Apostolica simplici sacerdoti tamquam extraordinario ministro facultatem tribuere illud conferendi.

Sacerdos igitur, cui facultas haec fuerit concessa, in primis curet apud se habere Chrisma per catholicum antistitem cum eadem S. Sede communionem habentem confectum, ac sciat, sibi numquam licere, sine eo confirmationem administrare vel illud ab episcopis haereticis aut schismaticis recipere [*cf. 215].

Even though, according to the definition of the Council of Trent [*sess. 7, confirmation, can. 3: 1630], the bishop alone is the ordinary minister of this sacrament, nevertheless, for just reasons the Apostolic See sometimes has the custom of granting a simple priest the faculty of conferring it as an extraordinary minister.

A priest to whom this faculty has been granted should therefore above all take care to carry with him chrism blessed by a Catholic bishop in communion with the same Holy See and should be aware that he is never allowed to administer confirmation without it or to receive it from heretical or schismatic bishops [*cf. 215].

PIUS VI: February 15, 1775–August 29, 1799

2590: Letter Exsequendo nunc to the Bishops of Belgium, July 13, 1782

On October 13, 1781, Emperor Joseph II issued an edict of toleration that permitted mixed marriages. Because of the difficulties associated with this, the bishops of Belgium, under the leadership of Cardinal von Frankenberg, Archbishop of Mechelen, requested a response from the pope.

Ed.: MigThC 25:692f. / A. de Roskovány, De matrimoniis mixtis (Nitra, 1842), 2:61.

The Assistance of Parish Priests in Mixed Marriages

2590 ... Si praemissa ... admonitione ad avocandam partem catholicam ab illicito matrimonio, ipsa nihilominus in voluntate illud contrahendi persistat, et matrimonium infallibiliter secuturum praevideatur, poterit tunc

... If after ... a warning has been sent calling a Catholic party away from an illicit marriage, this (Catholic) still persists in wishing to contract it and it is foreseen that the marriage will inevitably follow, then parochus catholicus materialem suam exhibere praesentiam, sic tamen, ut sequentes observare teneatur cautelas:

Primo, ut non assistat tali matrimonio in loco sacro, nec aliqua veste ritum sacrum praeferebat indutus, neque recitabit super contrahentes preces aliquas ecclesiasticas, et nullo modo ipsis benedicet.

Secundo, ut exigit et recipiat a contrahente haeretico declarationem in scriptis, qua cum iuramento, praesentibus duobus testibus, qui debent et ipsi subscribere, obliget se ad permittendum comparti usum liberum religionis catholicae et ad educandum in eadem omnes liberos nascituros sine ulla sexus distinctione. . . .

Tertio, ut et ipse contrahens catholicus declarationem edat a se et duobus testibus subscriptam, in qua cum iuramento promittat, non tantum se numquam apostaturum a religione sua catholica, sed educaturum in ipsa omnem prolem nascituram, et procuraturum se efficaciter conversionem alterius contrahentis acatholici.

the Catholic priest can lend his material presence, but in such a way that he is bound to observe the following precautions:

First, that he does not assist at such a marriage in a sacred place or clothed in any vestment betokening a sacred function, nor will he recite over the contracting parties any prayers of the Church, and in no way shall he bless them.

Secondly, that he will require and receive from the contracting heretic a declaration in writing, under oath, in the presence of two witnesses, who must themselves also sign, that he obligates himself to allow to the partner the free exercise of the Catholic religion and to educate in the same (religion) all the children to be born without any distinction of sex. . . .

Thirdly, that the contracting Catholic will also make a declaration signed by himself and two witnesses in which he promises with an oath not only never to apostatize from his Catholic religion, but to educate in it all the children to be born and to strive zealously for the conversion of the other non-Catholic party.

2592–2597: Brief Super soliditate petrae, November 28, 1786

By means of this brief, the book by the Viennese canonist Joseph Valentin Eybel, Was ist der Papst? (1782), which was spreading the principles of Febronianism, was condemned in official form. Cf. Febronius (pseudonym of Johann Nikolaus von Hontheim, Auxiliary Bishop of Trier), De statu Ecclesiae et legitima potestate Romani Pontificis (1763), which was placed on the Index on February 27, 1764.

Ed.: BullRct 7:672b–673a / A. de Roskovány, Romanus Pontifex, tamquam Primas ecclesiae et princeps civilis (Nitra and Komárno, 1867), 3:319f.

Errors of Febronianism concerning the Power of the Supreme Pontiff

Non ille [Eybel] veritus est “fanaticam” turbam appellare, quam prospiciebat ad aspectum Pontificis¹ in has voces erupturam: hominem eum esse, qui claves regni caelorum cum ligandi solvendique potestate a Deo acceperit, cui non alius episcopus exaequari valeat, a quo ipsi episcopi auctoritatem suam recipiant, quemadmodum ipse a Deo supremam suam potestatem accepit; eundem porro vicarium esse Christi, caput Ecclesiae visibile, iudicem supremum fidelium.

An ergo, quod horribile dictu, fanatica fuerit vox ipsa Christi claves regni caelorum cum ligandi solvendique potestate Petro pollicentis [Mt 16:19] . . . ? An fanatica dicenda tot sollemnia totiesque repetita Pontificum Conciliorumve decreta, quibus illi damnati sunt, qui negarent, in beato Petro Apostolorum principe successorem eius Romanum Pontificem constitutum a Deo caput Ecclesiae visibile ac vicarium Iesu Christi, ei regendae Ecclesiae plenam potestatem traditam, veramque ab omnibus qui christiani nomine censentur

This [Joseph Valentin Eybel] was not afraid to call the crowd “fanatical” that he witnessed erupting into these shouts at the sight of the pope:¹ He is the man who has received from God the keys of the kingdom of heaven with the power of binding and loosing, to whom no other bishop can be made equal, from whom these very bishops receive their authority as he himself received his supreme power from God; moreover, he is the vicar of Christ, the visible head of the Church, the supreme judge of the faithful.

Could, therefore (a thing horrible to say), that voice of Christ have been fanatical that promised [Mt 16:19] Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven with the power of binding and loosing . . . ? Or (are) so many solemn decrees of the popes and councils repeated so many times to be called fanatical by which those have been condemned who denied that in blessed Peter, the prince of the apostles, his successor, the Roman pontiff, was established by God as the visible head of the Church and the vicar of Jesus Christ, that to him has been transmitted oboedientiam deberi; atque vim eam esse primatus, quem divino iure obtinet, ut ceteris episcopis non honoris tantum gradu, sed et supremæ potestatis amplitudine antecellat? Quo magis deploranda est præceps ac caeca hominis temeritas, qui ... [sequentes errores] instaurare studuerit ... ac per multas ambages insinuarit:

*2592 ¹ Eybel is referring to the voyage of Pius VI to Vienna in the spring of 1782 to meet with Emperor Joseph II.

2594 quemlibet episcopum vocatum a Deo ad gubernationem Ecclesiae non minus quam papam, nec minore præditum esse potestate: Christum eandem per sese Apostolis omnibus potestatem dedisse; quidquid aliqui credant obtineri et concedi solum a Pontifice, posse id ipsum, sive a consecratione sive ab ecclesiastica iurisdictione pendeat, perinde obtineri a quolibet episcopo;

2595 voluisse Christum Ecclesiam reipublicæ more administrari; ei quidem regimini opus esse præside pro bono unitatis, verum qui non audeat se aliorum qui simul regunt negotiis implicare; privilegium tamen habeat negligentes cohortandi ad sua implenda munia; vim primatus hac una prærogativa contineri supplendæ aliorum negligentiae, prospiciendi conservationi unitatis hortationibus et exemplo; Pontifices nil posse in aliena dioecesi præterquam extraordinario casu;

2596 Pontificem caput esse, quod vim suam ac firmitatem teneat ab Ecclesia;

2597 licitum sibi fecisse Pontifices, violandi iura episcoporum, reservandique sibi absolutiones, dispensationes, decisiones, appellationes, collationes beneficiorum, alia uno verbo munia omnia, quæ singulatim recenset atque velut indebitas ac episcopis iniurias reservationes traducit.

2598: Letter Deessemus nobis to the Bishop of Mottola, September 16, 1788

The bishop of Mottola (in the Kingdom of Naples), who, by the delegation of the king, was functioning as a civil judge, had restricted the juridical competence of the Church in a process on the nullity of a marriage. In this letter, Pius VI explains the content and the significance of canon 12, session 24, of Trent.

Ed.: A. de Roskovány, Matrimonium in Ecclesia catholica 1 (Pestini, 1870), 421f.

The Competence of the Church in the Area of Marriage

2598 Ignotum Nobis non est quosdam adesse, qui saecularium principum auctoritati plus nimio tribuentes et verba huius canonis [*Concilium Tridentinum, sessio XXIV, De matrimonio, can. 12: 1812] captiose interpretantes illud defendendum susceperunt, ut, quoniam Tridentini patres hac dicendi formula usi non fuerint: ad solos iudices ecclesiasticos aut omnes causas matrimoniales—potestatem reliquerint iudicibus laicis

full power of ruling the Church, and that true obedience is due him from all who are considered Christians; and that such is the power of the primacy, which he holds by divine right, that he is superior to other bishops not only by his rank of honor but by the plenitude of his supreme power? All the more must that blind and rash temerity be deplored of the man who ... was eager to renew [the following errors] ... and who insinuated by many equivocations:

that every bishop, no less than the pope, was called by God to govern the Church and was endowed with no less power; that Christ gave the same power himself to all the apostles; and that whatever some people believe is obtained and granted only by the pope, that very thing, whether it depends on consecration or ecclesiastical jurisdiction, can be obtained just as well from any bishop;

that Christ wished his Church to be governed in the manner of a republic; and that, indeed, for that government there is need of a head for the good of unity, but one who does not dare to interfere in the affairs of others (bishops) who rule at the same time; nevertheless, he has the privilege of exhorting those who are negligent to the fulfillment of their duties; that the power of the primacy is contained in this one prerogative, of making up for the negligence of others, of looking after the preservation of unity by encouragement and example; that the popes have no power in another diocese except in an extraordinary case; that the pope is the head because he holds his power and strength from the Church;

that the pontiffs have made it lawful for themselves to violate the rights of bishops, to reserve to themselves absolutions, dispensations, decisions, appeals, bestowal of benefices, in a word, all other duties that he enumerates one by one and derides as unjust reservations and injurious to bishops.

It is not unknown to Us that there are some who, attributing too much to the authority of the secular princes and captiously interpreting the words of this canon [*Council of Trent, sess. 24, Matrimony, can. 12: 1812], have undertaken to defend this: That, since the Tridentine Fathers did not make use of the expression: “to ecclesiastical judges alone” or “all matrimonial cases”, they (the Tridentine Fathers) have left to lay judges the power of at least investigating matrimonial cases that are of pure fact.

cognoscendi saltem causas matrimoniales, quae sunt meri facti.

Sed scimus, etiam hanc captiuunculam et fallax hoc cavillandi genus omni fundamento destitui. Verba enim canonis ita generalia sunt, omnes ut causas comprehendant et complectantur. Spiritus vero sive ratio legis adeo late patet, ut nullum exceptioni aut limitationi locum relinquat. Si enim hae causae non alia ratione pertinent ad unum Ecclesiae iudicium, nisi quia contractus matrimonialis est vere et proprie unum ex septem Legis evangelicae sacramentis, sicut haec sacramenti ratio communis est omnibus causis matrimonialibus, ita omnes hae causae spectare unice debent ad iudices ecclesiasticos.

But We know that this captious reasoning and this false kind of quibbling are also devoid of all foundation. For the words of the canon are so general that they embrace and comprise all cases. Moreover, the spirit or purpose of the law extends so widely that it leaves no place for exception or limitation. For if these cases pertain to the tribunal of the Church alone for no other reason than because the marriage contract is truly and properly one of the seven sacraments of the evangelical law, then, just as this notion of the sacrament is common to all matrimonial cases, so all these cases ought to pertain to the ecclesiastical judges alone.

2600–2700: Constitution Auctorem fidei to All the Faithful, August 28, 1794

In 1786, Leopold I, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, had sent to the bishops of his territory a Memorandum of fifty-seven articles on the reform of ecclesiastical discipline (MaC 38:999a–1012b). The decisions of the Synod of Pistoia (Tuscany), September 18–28, 1786, convoked by Bishop Scipione de' Ricci are based on this: Atti e decreti del Concilio diocesano di Pistoia dell' anno 1786 (printed without indication of a date; 1788?). (For the acts of the synod, see MaC 38:1011a–1086b). Pius VI condemned eighty-five of the propositions selected. The text of the bull was drawn up predominantly by Cardinal Hyacinth-Sigismond Gerdil. His draft was published by Fernand Litt in an appendix to his investigation, La Question des rapports entre la nature et la grâce de Baius au Synode de Pistoie (Fontaine-L'Évêque, 1934), 165–209, with notations. AnIP 1 (1885): 480–511, in the edition of Adnotationes Gerdillianae, substitutes the definitive text of the doctrinal propositions of the bull in place of Gerdil's draft.

The headings of the sections are from the bull itself. The wording of the synodal decisions is almost always slightly modified. For greater clarity, the propositions are divided into six sections, which in subject matter admittedly sometimes overlap. Propositions 1–15: errors on the constitution and the authority of the Church; 16–26: errors on the natural and supernatural condition of man; 27–60: errors on the sacraments; 61–79: errors on religious worship; 80–84: errors on the reform of religious orders; 85: errors on the convocation of a national synod.

Ed.: MaC 38:1262–80 / BullRct 9:396a–417b.

Errors of the Synod of Pistoia

Preface

... Postquam Synodus haec Pistoriensis e latebris erupit, in quibus aliquamdiu abdita delituit, nemo fuit de summa religione pie sapienterque sentiens, qui non continuo adverterit, hoc fuisse auctorum consilium, ut quae antea per multiplices libellos pravaram doctrinarum semina sparserant, ea in unum velut corpus compingerent, proscriptos dudum errores suscitarent, Apostolicis quibus proscripti sunt decretis fidem auctoritatemque derogarent.

[Surgenti malo comprimendo studentes] ... Synodum ab episcopo [Scipione Ricci] editam primum quatuor episcopis aliisque adiunctis e clero saeculari theologis examinandam commisimus; tum etiam plurium S. R. E. cardinalium aliorumque episcoporum congregationem deputavimus, qui totam actorum seriem diligenter perpenderent, loca inter se dissita conferrent, excerptas sententias discuterent. Quorum suffragia coram Nobis voce et scripto edita excepimus; qui et Synodum universe reprobendam et plurimas inde collectas propositiones, alias quidem per sese, alias attentam

... After the Synod of Pistoia erupted from the hiding places in which it had remained concealed for a certain time, there was no one with a pious and wise regard for the supreme religion who did not immediately perceive that the intention of the authors was to join together, as it were, into one body the seeds of perverse doctrine that had previously been scattered through many writings and thus to give new life to errors that have formerly been proscribed and to detract from the credibility and authority of the apostolic decrees by which these (errors) were proscribed. 2600

[Striving to suppress this growing evil.] ... We first submitted the (acts of the) synod published by the bishop [Scipione de' Ricci] to four bishops assisted by other theologians of the secular clergy for examination; then We also authorized a commission of several cardinals of the Holy Roman Church and other bishops, who diligently examined the entire series of acts, brought together various passages scattered among them, and discussed the selected propositions. We received their judgments brought before Us either orally or in writing; and they were of the opinion that the synod must be sententiarum connexione plus minus acribus censuris perstringendas censuerunt; quorum auditis perpensisque animadversionibus illud quoque Nobis curae fuit, ut selecta ex tota Synodo praecipua quaedam pravaram doctrinarum capita, ad quae potissimum fusae per Synodum reprobandae sententiae directe vel indirecte referuntur, in certum deinceps ordinem redigerentur, eisdemque sua cuique peculiaris censura subiiceretur.

[Ad depellendam subdolan excusationem,] ... quod quae alicubi durius dicta exciderint, ea locis aliis planius explicata aut etiam correctae reperiantur, ... non alia potior via inita est, quam ut iis exponendis sentiis, quae sub latibulo ambiguitatis periculosam suspiciosamque involvunt discrepantiam sensuum, perversa significato notaretur, cui subesset error, quem catholica sententia reprobaret. ...

De obscuracione veritatum in Ecclesia

- 2601 1. Propositio, quae asserit, “postremis hisce saeculis sparsam esse generalem obscuracionem super veritates gravioris momenti, spectantes ad religionem, et quae sunt basis fidei et moralis doctrinae Iesu Christi”:¹

haeretica.

De potestate communitati Ecclesiae attributa, ut per hanc pastoribus communicetur

- 2602 2. Propositio, quae statuit, “potestatem a Deo datam Ecclesiae, ut communicaretur pastoribus, qui sunt eius ministri pro salute animarum”:¹

sic intellecta, ut a communitate fidelium in pastores derivetur ecclesiastici ministerii ac regiminis potestas:

haeretica.

De capitis ministerialis denominatione Romano Pontifici attributa

- 2603 3. Insuper, quae statuit, “Romanum Pontificem esse caput ministeriale”:¹
sic explicata, ut Romanus Pontifex non a Christo in persona beati Petri, sed ab Ecclesia potestatem ministerii entirely rejected and that many propositions collected from it, some in themselves and others because of the relationship between the propositions, should be placed under more or less stringent censures. Having listened to and considered their observations, We also are concerned to have certain main subjects of the perverse doctrines selected from the whole of the synod, subjects to which the condemned propositions spread by the synod are principally related either directly or indirectly, arranged in a certain order and to have each placed under its own particular censure.

[In order to remove the deceptive excuse] ... that what has been said in too rough a way in one place may be explained more fully or corrected elsewhere, ... the best way has been followed, which consists in exposing the propositions that, under the cover of ambiguity, conceal dangerous and suspect differences in meaning, so as to bring out the perverse meaning at the base of which We find an error that the Catholic view condemns. ...

The Obscuring of Truths within the Church

1. The proposition that asserts “that in these later times there has been spread a general obscuring of the more important truths pertaining to religion, which are the basis of faith and of the moral teachings of Jesus Christ”:¹

(is) heretical.

The Power Attributed to the Community of the Church, in Order that by This the Power May Be Communicated to the Pastors

2. The proposition that states “that power has been given by God to the Church that it might be communicated to the pastors who are her ministers for the salvation of souls”:¹

if understood in the sense that from the community of the faithful the pastors derive the power of ecclesiastical ministry and of governing,

(is) heretical.

The Name Ministerial Head Attributed to the Roman Pontiff

3. In addition, the proposition that states “that the Roman pontiff is the ministerial head”:¹

if it is so explained that the Roman pontiff does not receive from Christ in the person of blessed Peter,

*2601 ¹ Decree on Grace, Predestination, and the Foundations of Morality (of sess. 3), § 1.

*2602 ¹ Letter of convocation. Propositions 2 and 3 go back to the doctrinal system developed by Edmund Richer in his work De ecclesiastica et politica potestate libellus (Paris, 1611, published again later), whose Gallican principles were revived by Febronius. The work was condemned on numerous occasions: first in 1612 by the Synod of Sens under Cardinal Perron; then by the Synod of Aix in 1612; by the Holy Office on May 10, 1613; by the Congregation of the Index on December 2, 1622, and then again on March 4, 1709.

*2603 ¹ Decree on Faith and the Church (from sess. 3), § 8.

accipiat, qua velut Petri successor, verus Christi vicarius ac totius Ecclesiae caput pollet in universa Ecclesia:

haeretica.

De potestate Ecclesiae quoad constituendam et sancientiam exteriorem disciplinam

4. Propositio¹ affirmans, “abusum fore auctoritatis Ecclesiae, transferendo illam ultra limites doctrinae ac morum, et eam extendendo ad res exteriores, et per vim exigendo id, quod pendet a persuasione et corde”, tum etiam, “multo minus ad eam pertinere, exigere per vim exteriorem subiectionem suis decretis”;

quatenus indeterminatis illis verbis “extendendo ad res exteriores” notet velut abusum auctoritatis Ecclesiae usum eius potestatis acceptae a Deo, qua usi sunt et ipsimet Apostoli in disciplina exteriore constituenda et sancienda:

haeretica.

5. Qua parte insinuat, Ecclesiam non habere auctoritatem subiectionis suis decretis exigendae aliter quam per media, quae pendent a persuasione;

quatenus intendat, Ecclesiam “non habere collatam sibi a Deo potestatem, non solum dirigendi per consilia et suasiones, sed etiam iubendi per leges, ac devios contumacesque exteriore iudicio ac salubribus poenis coercendi atque cogendi”:¹

inducens in systema alias damnatum ut haereticum.

Iura episcopis praeter fas attributa

6. Doctrina synodi, qua profitetur, “persuasum sibi esse, episcopum accepisse a Christo omnia iura necessaria pro bono regimine suae dioecesis”;¹

perinde ac si ad bonum regimen cuiusque dioecesis necessariae non sint superiores ordinationes spectantes sive ad fidem et mores sive ad generalem disciplinam, quarum ius est penes Summos Pontifices et Concilia generalia pro universa Ecclesia:

schismatica, ad minus erronea.

7. Item, in eo quod hortatur episcopum “ad prosequendam naviter perfectiorem ecclesiasticae disciplinae constitutionem”; idque, “contra omnes contrarias consuetudines, exemptiones, reservationes, but from the Church, the power of ministry, which as successor of Peter, true vicar of Christ and head of the whole Church, he possesses in the universal Church, (is) heretical.

The Power of the Church for the Establishing and the Sanctioning of Exterior Discipline

4. The proposition¹ affirming, “that it would be a misuse of the authority of the Church, when she transfers that authority beyond the limits of doctrine and of morals and extends it to exterior matters and demands by force that which depends on persuasion and the heart”; and then also, “that it pertains to her much less to demand by force exterior obedience to her decrees”;

insofar as by those undefined words, “extends to exterior matters”, the proposition censures as an abuse of the authority of the Church the use of her power received from God, which the apostles themselves used in establishing and sanctioning exterior discipline, (is) heretical.

5. In that part in which the proposition insinuates that the Church does not have authority to demand obedience to her decrees otherwise than by means that depend on persuasion;

insofar as it intends that the Church “has not conferred on her by God the power, not only of directing by counsel and persuasion, but also of ordering by laws and of constraining and forcing the inconstant and stubborn by exterior judgment and salutary punishments”,¹ leads toward a system condemned elsewhere as heretical.

Rights Attributed to Bishops beyond What Is Lawful

6. The doctrine of the synod by which it professes that “it is convinced that a bishop has received from Christ all necessary rights for the good government of his diocese”,¹ as if for the good government of each diocese higher ordinances dealing either with faith and morals or with general discipline are not necessary, the right of which belongs to the supreme pontiffs and the general councils for the universal Church,

(is) schismatic (or) at least erroneous.

7. Likewise, when it encourages a bishop “to pursue zealously a more perfect constitution of ecclesiastical discipline”; and this “against all contrary customs, exemptions, reservations that are opposed to the good

*2604¹ Ibid., §§ 13–14.

*2605¹ Ibid.; the words cited are those of Benedict XIV: brief Ad assiduas, to the hierarchy of Poland, March 4, 1755, § 1 (Mechelen ed., 11 [1827]: 87).

*2606¹ Decree on Ordination (from sess. 5), § 25.

quae adversantur bono ordini dioecesis, maiori gloriae Dei et maiori aedificationi fidelium”;¹

per id quod supponit, episcopo fas esse proprio suo iudicio et arbitrato statuere et decernere contra consuetudines, exemptiones, reservationes, sive quae in universa Ecclesia, sive etiam in unaquaque provincia locum habent, sine venia et interventu superioris hierarchicae potestatis, a qua inductae sunt aut probatae et vim legis obtinent:

inducens in schisma et subversionem hierarchici regiminis, erronea.

2608 8. Item, quod et sibi persuasum esse ait, “iura episcopi a Iesu Christo accepta pro gubernanda Ecclesia nec alterari nec impediri posse, et ubi contigerit, horum iurium exercitium quavis de causa fuisse interruptum, posse semper episcopum ac debere in originalia sua iura regredi, quotiescumque id exigit maius bonum suae ecclesiae”;¹

in eo, quod innuit, iurium episcopalium exercitium nulla superiore potestate praepediri aut coerceri posse, quandocumque episcopus proprio iudicio censuerit, minus id expedire maiori bono suae ecclesiae:

inducens in schisma et subversionem hierarchici regiminis, erronea.

Ius perperam tributum inferioris ordinis sacerdotibus in decretis fidei et disciplinae

2609 9. Doctrina, quae statuit, “reformationem abusuum circa ecclesiasticam disciplinam in synodis dioecesanis ab episcopo et parochis aequaliter pendere ac stabiliri debere, ac sine libertate decisionis indebitam fore subiectionem, suggestionibus et iussionibus episcoporum”;¹

falsa, temeraria, episcopalis auctoritatis laesiva, regiminis hierarchici subversiva, favens haeresi Aeriana² a Calvino innovatae.³

2610 10. Item doctrina, qua parochi alii sacerdotes in synodo congregati pronuntiantur una cum episcopo iudices fidei, et simul innuitur, iudicium in causis fidei ipsis competere iure proprio, et quidem etiam per ordinationem accepto:¹

falsa, temeraria, ordinis hierarchici subversiva, detrahens firmitati definitionum iudiciorumve dogmaticorum Ecclesiae, ad minus erronea.

order of the diocese, for the greater glory of God and for the greater edification of the faithful”;¹

in that it supposes that a bishop has the right by his own judgment and will to decree and decide contrary to customs, exemptions, reservations, whether they prevail in the universal Church or even in each province, without the consent or the intervention of a higher hierarchic power, by which these customs, etc., have been introduced or approved and have the force of law, as leading to schism and subversion of hierarchic government (is) erroneous.

8. Likewise, when it says it is convinced that “the rights of a bishop received from Jesus Christ for the government of the Church cannot be altered or hindered, and, when it has happened that the exercise of these rights has been interrupted for any reason whatsoever, a bishop can always and should return to his original rights, as often as the greater good of his church demands it”;¹

in the fact that it intimates that the exercise of episcopal rights can be hindered and coerced by no higher power, whenever a bishop shall judge that it does not further the greater good of his church, as leading to schism and to subversion of hierarchic government (is) erroneous.

The Right Incorrectly Attributed to Priests of Inferior Rank in Decrees of Faith and Discipline

9. The doctrine that states that “the reformation of abuses in regard to ecclesiastical discipline ought equally to depend upon and be established by the bishop and the parish priests in diocesan synods and that without the freedom of decision, obedience would not be due to the suggestions and orders of the bishops”;¹

(is) false, rash, harmful to episcopal authority, and subversive of hierarchic government, favoring the heresy of Aeri²,² which was renewed by Calvin.³

10. Likewise, the doctrine by which parish priests and other priests gathered in a synod are declared judges of faith together with the bishop, and at the same time it is intimated that they are qualified for judgment in matters of faith by their own right and have indeed received it by ordination,¹

(is) false, rash, subversive of hierarchic order, detracting from the strength of dogmatic definitions or judgments of the Church, (or) at least erroneous.

*2607 ¹ Ibid.

*2608 ¹ Ibid.

*2609 ¹ Letter of convocation; the proposition largely corresponds to the doctrinal system of Richer (cf. *2602¹).

² Aeri^{us} of Sebaste (Armenian) taught, in the middle of the fourth century, the perfect equality of the power of the bishops and the presbyters.

³ Cf. Benedict XIV, De synodo dioecesana XIII, 1.

*2610 ¹ Letter of convocation; letter to the diocesan vicars; discourse to the synod (sess. 1); acts of the third session.

11. Sententia enuntians, vetere maiorum instituto, ab apostolicis usque temporibus ducto, per meliora Ecclesiae saecula servato, receptum fuisse, “ut decreta, aut definitiones, aut sententiae etiam maiorum sedium non acceptarentur, nisi recognitae fuissent et approbatae a synodo dioecessana”:¹

falsa, temeraria, derogans pro sua generalitate oboedientiae debitae constitutionibus Apostolicis, tum et sententiis ab hierarchica superiore legitima potestate manantibus, schisma fovens et haeresim.

Calumniae adversus aliquas decisiones in materia fidei ab aliquot saeculis emanatas

12. Assertiones Synodi complexive acceptae circa decisiones in materia fidei ab aliquot saeculis emanatas, quas perhibet velut decreta ab una particulari ecclesia vel paucis pastoribus profecta, nulla sufficienti auctoritate suffulta, nata corrumpendae puritati fidei ac turbis excitandis, intrusa per vim, e quibus inflicta sunt vulnera nimium adhuc recentia:¹

falsae, captiosae, temerariae, scandalosae, in Romanos Pontifices et Ecclesiam iniuriosae, debitae Apostolicis constitutionibus oboedientiae derogantes, schismaticae, perniciosae, ad minus erroneae.

De pace dicta Clementis IX

13. Propositio relata inter acta Synodi, quae innuit, Clementem IX pacem Ecclesiae reddidisse per approbationem distinctionis iuris et facti in subscriptione formularii ab Alexandro VII praescripti:¹

falsa, temeraria, Clementi IX iniuriosa.

14. Quatenus vero ei distinctioni suffragatur, eiusdem fautores laudibus extollendo et eorum adversarios vituperando:

temeraria, perniciose, Summis Pontificibus iniuriosa, schisma fovens et haeresim.

11. The opinion asserting that, according to an ancient disposition of our ancestors going back to the time of the apostles and preserved through the better ages of the Church, it was admitted that “the decrees, definitions, or decisions, even of the greater sees, were not accepted unless they had been recognized and approved by the diocesan synod”,¹

(is) false, rash, detracting, by its generality, from the obedience owed to the apostolic constitutions, as well as to the decisions emanating from legitimate superior hierarchic authority, fostering schism and heresy.

Calumnies against Some Decisions in the Matter of Faith That Have Come Down from Several Centuries

12. The assertions of the synod, accepted as a whole concerning decisions in the matter of faith that have come down from several centuries, which it represents as decrees originating from one particular church or from a few pastors, unsupported by sufficient authority, formulated for the corruption of the purity of faith and for causing disturbance, introduced by force, from which wounds, still too recent, have been inflicted,¹

(are) false, deceitful, rash, scandalous, injurious to the Roman pontiff and the Church, detracting from the obedience due to the Apostolic Constitutions, schismatic, dangerous, (or) at least erroneous.

The So-Called Peace of Clement IX

13. The proposition reported among the acts of the synod that intimates that Clement IX restored peace to the Church by the approval of the distinction of right and fact in the subscription to the formulary written by Alexander VII,¹

(is) false, rash, injurious to Clement IX.

14. Insofar as it approves that distinction by extolling its supporters with praise and by berating their opponents,

(it is) rash, pernicious, and injurious to the supreme pontiffs, fostering schism and heresy.

*2611 ¹ Discourse to the synod, § 8.

*2612 ¹ Decree on Faith, § 12.

*2613 ¹ Discourse to the synod, § 2 in the note. The bishops of Aleth, Pamiers, Beauvais, and Angers had attempted to relativize the content of the formula published in 1665 by Alexander VII against the Jansenists (*2020) by declaring in their Mandements that it was necessary to subscribe “with submission of faith toward the right and [submission] of respect and discipline toward the facts contained in constitutions or bulls of the popes” (avec soumission de foi vers le droit et de respect and de discipline vers les faits contenus dans les constitutions ou bulles des papes). Since, however, this implied the distinction between right and fact (quaestio iuris and quaestio facti; cf. *2010⁹) regarding the condemnation of the propositions of Jansen, the Congregation of the Index prohibited their Mandements on January 18, 1667. After the death of Alexander VII, nineteen French bishops intervened before Clement IX in favor of the four bishops. The pope, because he was concerned with peace and feared a schism, was willing to have the four bishops in question explain to him in more detail their endorsement of the formula in a September 1, 1668, letter (carefully edited by Antoine Arnauld). After their explanation was discussed in thirty meetings of cardinals, Clement IX finally relented, and in the brief Notre vénérable frère, of January 19, 1669 (RechScRel 8 [1918]: 392f.), he informed the bishops that their letter was satisfactory. The Jansenists called this reconciliation “the Clementine Peace” (Pax Clementina).

De coagmentatione corporis Ecclesiae

2615 15. Doctrina, quae proponit Ecclesiam “considerandam velut unum corpus mysticum coagmentatum ex Christo capite et fidelibus, qui sunt eius membra per unionem ineffabilem, qua mirabiliter evadimus cum ipso unus solus sacerdos, una sola victima, unus solus adorator perfectus Dei Patris in spiritu et veritate”;¹

intellecta hoc sensu, ut ad corpus Ecclesiae non pertineant nisi fideles, qui sunt perfecti adoratores in spiritu et veritate:

haeretica.

De statu innocentiae

2616 16. Doctrina Synodi de statu felicis innocentiae, qualem eum repraesentat in Adamo ante peccatum, complectentem non modo integritatem, sed et iustitiam interiorem cum impulsu in Deum per amorem caritatis, atque primaevam sanctitatem aliqua ratione post lapsum restitutam;

quatenus complexive accepta innuit, statum illum sequelam fuisse creationis, debitum ex naturali exigentia et condicione humanae naturae, non gratuitum Dei beneficium;¹

falsa, alias damnata in Baio [*1901–1980], et Quesnellio [*2434–2437], erronea, favens haeresi Pelagianae.

De immortalitate spectata ut naturali condicione hominis

2617 17. Propositio his verbis enuntiata: “Edocti ab Apostolo, spectamus mortem non iam ut naturalem condicionem hominis, sed revera ut iustam poenam culpae originalis”;¹

quatenus sub nomine Apostoli subdole allegato insinuat, mortem, quae in praesenti statu inflictata est velut iusta poena peccati per iustam subtractionem immortalitatis, non fuisse naturalem condicionem hominis, quasi immortalitas non fuisset gratuitum beneficium, sed naturalis condicio:

captiosa, temeraria, Apostolo iniuriosa, alias damnata [*1978].

De condicione hominis in statu naturae

2618 18. Doctrina Synodi enuntians, “post lapsum Adami Deum annuntiasse promissionem futuri liberatoris, et voluisse consolari genus humanum per spem salutis, quam Iesus Christus allaturus erat”; tamen “Deum voluisse, ut genus humanum transiret per varios status, antequam veniret plenitudo temporum”; ac primum, ut in

The Composition of the Body of the Church

15. The doctrine that proposes that the Church “must be considered as one mystical body composed of Christ, the head, and the faithful, who are its members through an ineffable union, by which in a marvelous way we become with him one sole priest, one sole victim, one sole perfect adorer of God the Father, in spirit and in truth”;¹

understood in this sense, that no one belongs to the body of the Church except the faithful, who are perfect adorers in spirit and in truth,

(is) heretical.

The State of Innocence

16. The doctrine of the synod about the state of happy innocence, such as it represents it in Adam before his sin, comprising not only integrity but also interior justice with an inclination toward God through love of charity, and primeval sanctity restored in some way after the fall, insofar as, understood comprehensively, it intimates that that state was a consequence of creation, due to man from the natural exigency and condition of human nature, not a gratuitous gift of God;¹

(is) false, elsewhere condemned in Baius [*1901–1980] and in Quesnel [*2434–2437], erroneous, and favorable to the Pelagian heresy.

Immortality Viewed as a Natural Condition of Man

17. The proposition stated in these words: “Taught by the apostle, we regard death no longer as a natural condition of man, but truly as a just penalty for original guilt”;¹

insofar as, under the deceitful mention of the name of the apostle, it insinuates that death, which in the present state has been inflicted as a just punishment for sin by the just withdrawal of immortality, was not a natural condition of man, as if immortality had not been a gratuitous gift, but a natural condition,

(is) deceitful, rash, injurious to the apostle, and elsewhere condemned [*1978].

The Condition of Man in the State of Nature

18. The doctrine of the synod stating that “after the fall of Adam, God announced the promise of a future Redeemer and wished to console the human race through hope of salvation, which Jesus was to bring”; nevertheless, “that God willed that the human race should pass through various states before the fullness of

*2615 ¹ Pastoral instruction on the necessity and manner of studying religion (May 1, 1782), no. 28 in the appendix.

*2616 ¹ Decree on Grace, §§ 4 and 7; Decree on the Sacraments in General (from sess. 4), § 1; Decree on Penance (from sess. 5), § 4.

*2617 ¹ Decree on Baptism (from sess. 4), § 2.

statu naturae “homo relictus propriis luminibus disceret de sua caeca ratione diffidere, et ex suis aberrationibus moveret se ad desiderandum auxilium superioris luminis”;¹

doctrina, ut iacet, captiosa, atque intellecta de desiderio adiutorii superioris luminis in ordine ad salutem promissam per Christum, ad quod concipiendum homo relictis suis propriis luminibus supponatur sese potuisse movere:

suspecta, favens haeresi Semipelagianae.

De condicione hominis sub Lege

19. Item, quae subiungit, hominem sub Lege, “cum esset impotens ad eam observandam, praevaricatorem evasisse, non quidem culpa Legis, quae sanctissima erat, sed culpa hominis, qui sub Lege sine gratia magis magisque praevaricator evasit”, superadditque, “legem, si non sanavit cor hominis, effecisse, ut sua mala cognosceret, et de sua infirmitate convictus desideraret gratiam mediatoris”;¹

qua parte generaliter innuit, hominem praevaricatorem evasisse per inobservantiam Legis, quam impotens esset observare, quasi “impossibile aliquid potuerit imperare, qui iustus est, aut damnaturus sit hominem pro eo, quod non potuit evitare, qui pius est”;²

falsa, scandalosa, impia, in Baio damnata [*1954].

20. Qua parte datur intelligi, hominem sub lege sine gratia potuisse concipere desiderium gratiae mediatoris ordinatum ad salutem promissam per Christum;¹ quasi “non ipsa gratia faciat, ut invocetur a nobis” [*Concilium Arausiacum II, can. 3: 373]:

propositio, ut iacet, captiosa, suspecta, favens haeresi Semipelagianae.

De gratia illuminante et excitante

21. Propositio, quae asserit, “lumen gratiae, quando sit solum, non praestare, nisi ut cognoscamus infelicitatem nostri status et gravitatem nostri mali; gratiam in tali casu producere eundem effectum, quem Lex producebat: ideo necesse esse, ut Deus creet in corde nostro sanctum time should come”; and first, that in the state of nature “man, left to his own lights, would learn to distrust his own blind reason and would move himself from his own aberrations to desire the aid of a superior light”;¹

the doctrine, as it stands, is deceitful, and if understood concerning the desire of the aid of a superior light in relation to the salvation promised through Christ, that man is supposed to have been able to move himself to conceive this desire by his own proper lights remaining after the fall,

(is) suspect and favorable to the Semipelagian heresy.

The Condition of Man under the Law

19. Likewise, the doctrine that adds that under the law 2619 man “became a transgressor, since he was powerless to observe it, not indeed by the fault of the law, which was most sacred, but by the guilt of man, who, under the law, without grace, became more and more a transgressor”; and it further adds, “that the law, if it did not heal the heart of man, brought it about that he would recognize his evil and, being convinced of his weakness, would desire the grace of a mediator”;¹

insofar as in this part it generally intimates that man became a transgressor through the nonobservance of the law that he was powerless to observe, as if “he who is just could command something impossible, or he who is pious would be likely to condemn man for that which he could not avoid”;²

(is) false, scandalous, impious, and condemned in Baius [*1954].

20. Insofar as it is given to understand that man, under the law (and) without grace, was able to conceive the desire of the grace of a mediator ordered to the salvation promised through Christ;¹ as if “grace itself does not cause (this) to be invoked by us” [*Second Synod of Orange, can. 3: 373], the proposition as it stands (is) deceitful, suspect, and favorable to the Semipelagian heresy.

Illuminating and Inspirational Grace

21. The proposition that asserts “that the light of grace, when it is alone, effects nothing but to make us aware of the unhappiness of our state and the gravity of our evil; that grace, in such a case, produces the same effect as the law produced: therefore, it is necessary that 2621

*2618 ¹ Decree on Grace, § 10.

*2619 ¹ Ibid.

² Caesarius of Arles, homily 37:2 (G. Morin, Caesarii Arelatensis Opera omnia 1 [Maretlioli/Maredsous, 1937], 155²⁷⁻²⁹ / CpChL 103 [1953]: 163 / = Pseudo-Augustine, homily 273 of the appendix, formerly in Sermo de tempore 61: PL 39:2257). —Augustine, De natura et gratia 43, no. 50 (CSEL 60:270 / PL 44:271). —Augustine, De gratia et libero arbitrio 16, no. 32 (PL 44:900). —Augustine, Enarrationes in Psalmos 56, no. 1 (E. Dekkers and J. Fraipont: CpChL 39 [1956]: 694^{20f} / PL 36:661).

*2620 ¹ Ibid.

amorem, et inspiret sanctam delectationem contrariam amori in nobis dominanti; hunc amorem sanctum, hanc sanctam delectationem esse proprie gratiam Iesu Christi, inspirationem caritatis, qua cognita sancto amore faciamus; hanc esse illam radicem, e qua germinantur bona opera; hanc esse gratiam Novi Testamenti, quae nos liberat a servitute peccati, constituit filios Dei";¹

quatenus intendat, eam solam esse proprie gratiam Iesu Christi, quae creet in corde sanctum amorem, et quae facit, ut faciamus, sive etiam, qua homo liberatus a servitute peccati constituitur filius Dei; et non sit etiam proprie gratia Christi ea gratia, qua cor hominis tangitur per illuminationem Spiritus Sancti (Trid. sess. VI c. 5 [*1525]) nec vera detur interior gratia Christi, cui resistitur:

falsa, captiosa, inducens in errorem in secunda propositione Iansenii damnatum ut haereticum, eumque renovans [*2002].

De fide velut prima gratia

2622 22. Propositio, quae innuit fidem, "a qua incipit series gratiarum, et per quam velut primam vocem vocamur ad salutem et Ecclesiam";¹ esse ipsamet excellentem virtutem fidei, qua homines fideles nominantur et sunt;

perinde ac prior non esset gratia illa, quae, "ut praevenit voluntatem, sic praevenit et fidem";²

suspecta de haeresi, eamque sapiens, alias in Quesnellio damnata [*2427], erronea.

De duplici amore

2623 23. Doctrina Synodi de duplici amore dominantis cupiditatis et caritatis dominantis enuntians, hominem sine gratia esse sub virtute peccati ipsumque in eo statu per generalem cupiditatis dominantis influxum omnes suas actiones inficere et corrumpere;¹

quatenus insinuat, in homine, dum est sub servitute sive in statu peccati, destitutus gratia illa, qua liberatur a servitute peccati et constituitur filius Dei, sic dominari cupiditatem, ut per generalem huius influxum omnes illius actiones in se inficiantur et corrumpantur, aut

God create in our heart a sacred love and infuse a sacred delight contrary to the love dominating in us; that this sacred love, this sacred delight is properly the grace of Jesus Christ, the inspiration of charity by which, when it is perceived, we act by a sacred love; that this is that root from which grow good works; that this is the grace of the New Testament, which frees us from the servitude of sin and makes us sons of God";¹

insofar as it intimates that the grace of Jesus Christ, in the proper sense, is only (that grace) which creates a sacred love in the heart and which enables us to act, or also (that grace) by which man, liberated from the slavery to sin, is constituted a son of God; and likewise, in the proper sense, that grace is not the grace of Christ by which the heart of man is touched by the illumination of the Holy Spirit (Trent, sess. 6, chap. 5 [*1525]), and that no true interior grace of Christ is given, which is resisted,

(is) false, deceitful, (and) leading to and renewing the error condemned as heretical in the second proposition of Jansen [*2002].

Faith as the First Grace

22. The proposition that declares that faith, "from which begins the series of graces and through which, as the first voice, we are called to salvation and to the Church";¹ is the very excellent virtue itself of faith by which men are called and are the faithful; just as if that grace were not prior, which "as it precedes the will, so it precedes faith also";²

(is) suspect of heresy and has the flavor of it, was elsewhere condemned in Quesnel [*2427], and (is) erroneous.

The Twofold Love

23. The doctrine of the synod on the twofold love, of dominating cupidity and of dominating charity, which states that man without grace is under the power of sin and that in this state, through the general influence of the dominating cupidity, he contaminates and corrupts all his actions;¹

to the extent that this insinuates that in man, while he is under the servitude or in the state of sin, destitute of that grace by which he is freed from the servitude of sin and is constituted a son of God, cupidity is so dominant that by its general influence all his actions are contaminated

*2621 ¹ Decree on Grace, § 11.

*2622 ¹ Decree on Faith, § 1.

² Augustine, De dono perseverantiae 16, no. 41 (PL 45:1018).

*2623 ¹ Decree on Grace, § 8.

opera omnia, quae ante iustificationem fiunt, quacumque ratione fiant, sint peccata;

quasi in omnibus suis actibus peccator serviat dominantī cupiditati:

falsa, perniciosa, inducens in errorem a Tridentino damnatum ut haereticum, iterum in Baio damnatum art. 40 [*1557 1940].

24. Qua vero parte inter dominantem cupiditatem et caritatem dominantem nulli ponuntur affectus medii, a natura ipsa insiti suapteque natura laudabiles¹ qui una cum amore beatitudinis naturalique propensione ad bonum “remanserunt velut extrema lineamenta et reliquiae imaginis Dei”;²

perinde ac si “inter dilectionem divinam, quae nos perducit ad regnum, et dilectionem humanam illicitam, quae damnatur”, non daretur “dilectio humana licita, quae non reprehenditur”;³

falsa, alias damnata [*1938, 2307].

De timore servili

25. Doctrina, quae timorem poenarum generatim perhibet “dumtaxat non posse dici malum, si saltem pertingit ad cohibendam manum”;¹

quasi timor ipse gehennae, quam fides docet peccato infligendam, non sit in se bonus et utilis, velut donum supernaturale ac motus a Deo inspiratus praeparans ad amorem iustitiae:

falsa, temeraria, perniciosa, divinis donis iniuriosa, alias damnata [cf. *1456], contraria doctrinae Concilii Tridentini [cf. *1526, 1678], tum et communi Patrum sententiae, “opus esse”, iuxta consuetum ordinem praeparationis ad iustitiam, “ut intret timor primo, per quem veniat caritas: timor medicamentum, caritas sanitas”;²

De poena decedentium cum solo originali

26. Doctrina, quae velut fabulam Pelagianam explodit locum illum inferorum (quem limbi puerorum nomine fideles passim designant), in quo animae in themselves and corrupted; or that all his works that are done before justification, for whatsoever reason they may be done, are sins;

as if in all his acts the sinner is a slave to the dominating cupidity,

(is) false, dangerous, and leads into the error condemned by the Tridentine Council as heretical, again condemned in Baius, art. 40 [*1557, 1940].

24. But since between dominating cupidity and dominating charity there are no intermediate affections implanted by nature itself and laudable in their very nature¹ and which, together with the love of beatitude and the natural tendency toward the good, “remain as the last outlines and remnants of the image of God”;²

as if “between the divine love that leads us to the kingdom and illicit human love that is condemned there were not “a licit human love that is not rebuked”;³

(this doctrine is) false and elsewhere condemned [*1938, 2307].

Servile Fear

25. The doctrine that asserts that the fear of punishment in general “cannot be called evil if it, at least, prevails to restrain the hand”;¹

as if the fear itself of hell, which faith teaches must be imposed on sin, is not in itself good and useful as a supernatural gift and a motion inspired by God preparing for the love of justice,

(is) false, rash, dangerous, injurious to the divine gifts, elsewhere condemned [*1456], contrary to the doctrine of the Council of Trent [cf. *1526, 1678] and to the common opinion of the Fathers, namely, “that there is need”, according to the customary order of preparation for justice, “that fear should first enter, through which charity will come; fear is a medicine, charity is health.”²

The Punishment of Those Who Die with Original Sin Only

26. The doctrine that rejects as a Pelagian fable that place in the netherworld (which the faithful commonly designate by the name of the limbo of children) in

*2624¹ Ibid., § 12.

² Augustine, De spiritu et littera 28, no. 48 (CSEL 60:202_{13f} / PL 44:230).

³ Augustine, Sermo (349 in Editio Maurina) de caritate, no. 1 (PL 39:1530).

*2625¹ Decree on Penance, § 3.

² Augustine, In epistolam Iohannis ad Parthos [= 1 Jn 4], tract. 9, no. 4 (PL 35:2048 [C]). —Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 41, no. 10 (on Jn 8:35f.; ed. R. Willems: CpChL 36 [1954]: 363_{31f} / PL 35:1968). —Augustine, Enarrationes in Psalmos 127, no. 7 (E. Dekkers and J. Fraipont: CpChL 40 [1956]: 1871f. / PL 37:1680f.). —Augustine, Sermones de verbis Apostolorum 156, c. 13, no. 14, and 161, c. 8; Sermo de caritate 349, no. 7 (PL 38:857, 882; 39:1532f.).

decedentium cum sola originali culpa poena damni citra poenam ignis puniantur;¹

perinde ac si hoc ipso, quod, qui poenam ignis remouent, inducerent locum illum et statum medium expertem culpae et poenae inter regnum Dei et damnationem aeternam, qualem fabulabantur Pelagiani:

falsa, temeraria, in scholas catholicas iniuriosa.

De forma sacramentali cum adiuncta condicione

2627 27. Deliberatio Synodi, quae praetextu adhaesionis ad antiquos canones in casu dubii baptismatis propositum suum declarat de omittenda formae condicionalis mentione:¹

temeraria, praxi, legi, auctoritati Ecclesiae contraria.

De participatione victimae in sacrificio Missae

2628 28. Propositio Synodi, qua, postquam statuit, “victimae participationem esse partem sacrificio essentialem”, subiungit “non tamen se damnare ut illicitas Missas illas, in quibus adstantes sacramentaliter non communicant; ideo quia isti participant, licet minus perfecte, de ipsa victima, spiritu illam recipiendo”;¹

quatenus insinuat, ad sacrificii essentiam deesse aliquid in eo sacrificio, quod peragatur sive nullo adstante, sive adstantibus, qui nec sacramentaliter nec spiritualiter de victima participant; et quasi damnandae essent ut illicitae Missae illae, in quibus, solo sacerdote communicante, nemo adsit, qui sive sacramentaliter sive spiritualiter communicet:

falsa, erronea, de haeresi suspecta eamque sapiens.

De ritus consecrationis efficacia

2629 29. Doctrina Synodi, qua parte tradere instituens fidei doctrinam de ritu consecrationis remotis quaestionibus scholasticis circa modum, quo Christus est in Eucharistia, a quibus parochos docendi munere fungentes abstinere hortatur, duobus his tantum propositis:

- (1) Christum post consecrationem vere, realiter, substantialiter esse sub speciebus;
- (2) tunc omnem panis et vini substantiam cessare, solis remanentibus speciebus, which the souls of the dead with only original sin are punished with the punishment of damnation without the punishment of fire,¹ as if those who remove the punishment of fire were thereby introducing some intermediate place and state exempt from guilt and punishment between the kingdom of God and eternal damnation, as the Pelagians have imagined,

(is) false, rash and injurious to Catholic schools.

Sacramental Form with a Condition Attached

27. The decision of the synod that, under the pretext of clinging to ancient canons, declares its intention to omit mention of the conditional form in the case of doubtful baptism,¹

(is) rash (and) contrary to the practice, law, and authority of the Church.

The Partaking of the Victim in the Sacrifice of the Mass

28. The proposition of the synod in which, after having decided that “a partaking of the victim is an essential part in the sacrifice”, it adds, “nevertheless, it does not condemn as illicit those Masses in which those present do not communicate sacramentally, for the reason that they do partake of the victim, although less perfectly, by receiving it spiritually”;¹

inasmuch as it insinuates that there is something lacking to the essence of the sacrifice in that sacrifice which is performed either with no one present or with those present who partake of the victim neither sacramentally nor spiritually and as if those Masses should be condemned as illicit in which, with the priest alone communicating, no one is present who communicates either sacramentally or spiritually,

(is) false, erroneous, suspect of heresy, and having the flavor of it.

The Efficacy of the Rite of Consecration

29. The doctrine of the synod, when it undertakes to explain the doctrine of faith in the rite of consecration, setting aside the scholastic questions concerning the manner in which Christ is in the Eucharist—from which it exhorts pastors, who exercise the duty of teaching, to abstain—(presents) only these two propositions:

- (1) after the consecration, Christ is truly, really, substantially under the species;
- (2) then the whole substance of the bread and wine ceases, with the species only remaining,

*2626 ¹ Decree on Baptism, § 3.

*2627 ¹ Ibid., § 12.

*2628 ¹ Decree on the Eucharist (from sess. 4), § 6.

prorsus omittit ullam mentionem facere transsubstantiationis seu conversionis totius substantiae panis in corpus, et totius substantiae vini in sanguinem,¹ quam velut articulum fidei Tridentinum Concilium definivit [*1642, 1652], et quae in solemnī fidei professione continetur [*1866];

quatenus per inconsultam istiusmodi suspiciosamque omissionem notitia subtrahitur tum articuli ad fidem pertinentis, tum etiam vocis ab Ecclesia consecratae ad illius tuendam professionem adversus haereses, tenditque adeo ad eius oblivionem inducendam, quasi ageretur de quaestione mere scholastica:

perniciosa, derogans expositioni veritatis catholicae circa dogma transsubstantiationis, favens haereticis.

De applicatione fructus sacrificii

30. Doctrina Synodi, qua, dum profitetur “credere, sacrificii oblationem extendere se ad omnes, ita tamen, ut in liturgia fieri possit specialis commemoratio aliquorum tam vivorum quam defunctorum, precando Deum peculiariter pro ipsis”, dein continuo subicit: “non tamen, quod credamus, in arbitrio esse sacerdotis applicare fructus sacrificii cui vult, immo damnamus hunc errorem velut magnopere offendentem iura Dei, qui solus distribuit fructus sacrificii cui vult, et secundum mensuram, quae ipsi placet”: unde et consequenter traducit velut “falsam opinionem invectam in populum, quod illi, qui eleemosynam subministrant sacerdoti sub conditione, quod celebret unam Missam, specialem fructum ex ea percipiant”;¹

sic intellecta, ut, praeter peculiarem commemorationem et orationem, specialis ipsa oblatio seu applicatio sacrificii, quae fit a sacerdote, non magis prosit ceteris paribus illis, pro quibus applicatur, quam aliis quibusque; quasi nullus specialis fructus proveniret ex speciali applicatione, quam pro determinatis personis aut personarum ordinibus faciendam commendat ac praecipit Ecclesia, speciatim a pastoribus pro suis ovibus, quod velut ex divino praecepto descendens a sacra Tridentina Synodo [sessio XXIII, De reformatione, c. 1] diserte est expressum:²

falsa, temeraria, perniciosa, Ecclesiae iniuriosa, inducens in errorem alias damnatum in Wicleffo [*1169].

⟨and⟩ entirely omits any mention of transubstantiation, or conversion of the whole substance of the bread into the body and of the whole substance of the wine into the blood,¹ which the Council of Trent defined as an article of faith [*1642, 1652] and which is contained in the solemn profession of faith [*1866];

inasmuch as, by this imprudent and suspicious omission, the knowledge of an article pertaining to the faith is removed as well as an expression consecrated by the Church to safeguard her profession of faith against heresies; and insofar as it is intended to lead to its oblivion as if it were a matter of a merely scholastic question:

⟨is⟩ pernicious, derogatory to the exposition of Catholic truth regarding the dogma of transubstantiation, ⟨and⟩ favorable to heretics.

The Application of the Fruit of the Sacrifice

30. The doctrine of the synod by which, while it professes “to believe that the oblation of the sacrifice extends itself to all, in such a way, however, that in the liturgy there can be made a special commemoration of certain individuals, both living and dead, by entreating God specially for them”, then it immediately adds: “Not, however, that we should believe that it is in the will of the priest to apply the fruit of the sacrifice to whom he wishes; rather, we condemn this error as greatly offending the rights of God, who alone distributes the fruit of the sacrifice to whom he wishes and according to the measure that pleases him”; and consequently, from this it derides “as false the opinion foisted on the people that they who give alms to the priest on the condition that he celebrate a Mass will receive from it special fruit”;¹

if understood in such a way that, besides the particular commemoration and prayer, a special offering or application of the sacrifice itself made by the priest does not benefit, other things being equal, those for whom it is applied more than all others, as if no special fruit would come from a special application, which the Church recommends and commands should be made for definite persons or classes of persons, especially by pastors for their flock, and which, as if coming down from a divine precept, has been clearly expressed by the sacred Council of Trent (sess. 23, chap. 1, On Reform),²

⟨is⟩ false, rash, dangerous, injurious to the Church, leading into the error elsewhere condemned in Wycliffe [*1169].

*2629 ¹ Ibid., § 2.

*2630 ¹ Ibid., § 8.

² Cf. also Benedict XIV, Cum semper oblatas, August 19, 1744, § 2 (Mechelen ed., 2:306f.).

De convenienti ordine in cultu servando

- 2631 31. Propositio Synodi enuntians, conveniens esse, pro divinatorum officiorum ordine et antiqua consuetudine, ut in unoquoque templo unum tantum sit altare, sibi que adeo placere morem illum restituere:¹

temeraria, perantiquo, pio, multis abhinc saeculis in Ecclesia, praesertim Latina, vigenti et probato mori iniuriosa.

- 2632 32. Item, praescriptio vetans, ne super altaria sacrarum reliquiarum thecae floresve apponantur:¹

temeraria, pio ac probato Ecclesiae mori iniuriosa.

- 2633 33. Propositio Synodi, qua cupere se ostendit, ut causae tollerentur, per quas ex parte inducta est oblivio principiorum ad liturgiae ordinem spectantium, “revocando illam ad maiorem rituum simplicitatem, eam vulgari lingua exponendo et elata voce proferendo”;

quasi vicens ordo liturgiae ab Ecclesia receptus et probatus aliqua ex parte manasset ex oblivione principiorum, quibus illa regi debet:¹

temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva, in Ecclesiam contumeliosa, favens haeticorum in eam conviciis.

De ordine paenitentiae

- 2634 34. Declaratio Synodi, qua, postquam praemisit, ordinem paenitentiae canonicae sic ad Apostolorum exemplum ab Ecclesia statutum fuisse, ut esset communis omnibus, nec tantum pro punitione culpae, sed praecipue pro dispositione ad gratiam, subdit, se “in ordine illo mirabili et augusto totam agnoscere dignitatem sacramenti adeo necessarii, liberam a subtilitatibus, quae ipsi decursu temporis adiunctae sunt”;¹

quasi per ordinem, quo sine peracto canonicae paenitentiae cursu hoc sacramentum per totam Ecclesiam administrari consuevit, illius fuisset dignitas imminuta:

temeraria, scandalosa, inducens in contemptum dignitatis sacramenti, prout per Ecclesiam totam consuevit administrari, Ecclesiae ipsi iniuriosa.

- 2635 35. Propositio his verbis concepta: “Si caritas in principio semper debilis est, de via ordinaria ad

The Suitable Order to Be Observed in Worship

31. The proposition of the synod enunciating that it is fitting, in accordance with the order of divine services and ancient custom, that there be only one altar in each church and, therefore, that it is pleased to restore that custom¹

(is) rash, injurious to the very ancient pious custom flourishing and approved for these many centuries in the Church, especially in the Latin Church.

32. Likewise, the prescription forbidding cases of sacred relics or flowers being placed on the altar,¹

(is) rash, injurious to the pious and approved custom of the Church.

33. The proposition of the synod by which it shows itself eager to remove the cause through which, in part, there has been induced a forgetfulness of the principles relating to the order of the liturgy, “by recalling it (the liturgy) to a greater simplicity of rites, by expressing it in the vernacular language, by uttering it in a loud voice”, as if the present order of the liturgy, received and approved by the Church, had emanated in some part from the forgetfulness of the principles by which it should be regulated,¹

(is) rash, offensive to pious ears, insulting to the Church, and favorable to the charges of heretics against her.

The Order of Penance

34. The declaration of the synod by which, after it previously stated that the order of canonical penance had been so established by the Church, in accord with the example of the apostles, that it was common to all, and not merely for the punishment of guilt, but especially for the disposition to grace, it adds that “it (the synod) recognizes in that marvelous and venerable order the whole dignity of so necessary a sacrament, free from the subtleties that have been added to it in the course of time”,¹ as if, by the order (according to) which this sacrament is customarily administered in the whole Church—without the time of canonical penance being accomplished—its dignity had been lessened,

(is) rash, scandalous, inducing to a contempt of the dignity of the sacrament as it has been accustomed to be administered throughout the whole Church, and injurious to the Church herself.

35. The proposition summarized in these words: “If charity in the beginning is always weak, in order to obtain

*2631¹ Decree on the Eucharist, § 5.

*2632¹ Ibid.

*2633¹ Ibid., § 6.

*2634¹ Decree on Penance, § 7.

obtinendum augmentum huius caritatis oportet, ut sacerdos praecedere faciat eos actus humiliationis et paenitentiae, qui fuerunt omni aetate ab Ecclesia commendati: redigere hos actus ad paucas orationes aut ad aliquod ieiunium post iam collatam absolutionem, videtur potius materiale desiderium conservandi huic sacramento nudum nomen paenitentiae, quam medium illuminatum et aptum ad augendum illum fervorem caritatis, qui debet praecedere absolutionem; longe quidem absumus ab improbanda praxi imponendi paenitentias etiam post absolutionem adimplendas: si omnia nostra bona opera semper adiunctos habent nostros defectus, quanto magis vereri debemus, ne plurimas imperfectiones admiserimus in difficillimo et magni momenti opere nostrae reconciliationis”;¹

quatenus innuit, paenitentias, quae imponuntur adimplendae post absolutionem, spectandas potius esse velut supplementum pro defectibus admissis in opere nostrae reconciliationis, quam ut paenitentias vere sacramentales et satisfactorias pro peccatis confessis; quasi, ut vera ratio sacramenti, non nudum nomen servetur, oporteat de via ordinaria, ut actus humiliationis et paenitentiae, qui imponuntur per modum satisfactionis sacramentalis, praecedere debeant absolutionem:

falsa, temeraria, communi praxi Ecclesiae iniuriosa, inducens in errorem haereticali nota in Petro de Osma confixum [*1415; cf. *2316].

*De praevia necessaria dispositione pro admittendis
paenitentibus ad reconciliationem*

36. Doctrina Synodi, qua, postquam praemisit, “quando habebuntur signa non aequivoca amoris Dei dominantis in corde hominis, posse illum merito iudicari dignum, qui admittatur ad participationem sanguinis Iesu Christi, quae fit in sacramentis”, subdit, “supposititias conversiones, quae fiunt per attritionem, nec efficaces esse solere nec durabiles”, consequenter “pastorem animarum debere insistere signis non aequivocis caritatis dominantis, antequam admittat suos paenitentes ad sacramenta”; quae signa, ut deinde tradit (§ 17), “pastor deducere poterit ex stabili cessatione a peccato et fervore in operibus bonis”; quem insuper “fervorem caritatis” perhibet (De paenit., § 10) velut dispositionem, quae “debet praecedere absolutionem”;¹

sic intellecta, ut non solum contritio imperfecta, quae passim attritionis nomine donatur, etiam quae iuncta sit cum dilectione, qua homo incipit diligere Deum tamquam

an increase of this charity, the priest should ordinarily first make those acts of humiliation and penance which have been recommended by the Church in every age; to reduce those acts to a few prayers or to some fasting after absolution has already been conferred seems to be a material desire of keeping for this sacrament the mere name of penance rather than an illuminating and suitable means to increase that fervor of charity which ought to precede absolution; indeed, we are far from disapproving of the practice of imposing penances to be fulfilled after absolution; if all our good works have our defects always joined to them, how much more ought we to fear lest we admit very many imperfections into the very difficult and very important work of our reconciliation”;¹

since it implies that the penances that are imposed, to be fulfilled after absolution, are to be considered as a supplement for the defects admitted in the work of our reconciliation rather than as truly sacramental penances and satisfactions for the sins confessed, as if, in order that the true reason for the sacrament, not the mere name, be preserved, it would ordinarily be necessary that the acts of humiliation and penance, which are imposed as a means of sacramental satisfaction, should precede absolution,

(is) false, rash, injurious to the common practice of the Church, and leading to the error stamped with the mark of heresy in Peter of Osma [*1415; cf. *2316].

The Previous Disposition Necessary for Admitting Penitents to Reconciliation

36. The doctrine of the synod in which, after it stated that “when there are unmistakable signs of the love of God dominating in the heart of a man, he can deservedly be considered worthy of being admitted to participation in the blood of Jesus Christ, which takes place in the sacraments”, it further adds “that false conversions, which take place through attrition (incomplete sorrow for sins), are not usually efficacious or durable”, consequently, “the shepherd of souls must insist on unmistakable signs of the dominating charity before he admits his penitents to the sacraments”; which signs, as it (the decree) then teaches (§ 17), “a pastor can deduce from a stable abstention from sin and from fervor in good works”; and this “fervor of charity”, moreover, it prescribes (De poenit., § 10) as the disposition that “should precede absolution”;¹

if understood in the sense that for a man to be admitted to the sacraments and, in particular, for penitents to be admitted to the benefit of absolution, there is generally omnis iustitiae fontem [cf. *1526], nec modo contritio caritate formata, sed et fervor caritatis dominantis, et ille quidem diuturno experimento per fervorem in operibus bonis probatus, generaliter et absolute requiratur, ut homo ad sacramenta et speciatim paenitentes ad absolutionis beneficium admittantur:

2636

*2635¹ Ibid., § 10, no. 4.

*2636¹ Decree on Grace, § 15.

falsa, temeraria, quietis animarum perturbativa, tutae ac probatae in Ecclesia praxi contraria, sacramenti efficaciae detrahens et iniuriosa.

De auctoritate absolvendi

2637 37. Doctrina Synodi, quae de auctoritate absolvendi accepta per ordinationem enuntiat, “post institutionem dioecesium et parochiarum conveniens esse, ut quisque iudicium hoc exerceat super personas sibi subditas sive ratione territorii sive iure quodam personali, propterea quod aliter confusio induceretur et perturbatio”;

quatenus post institutas dioeceses et parochias enuntiat tantummodo, “conveniens esse ad praecavendam confusionem, ut absolvendi potestas exerceatur super subditos”;¹

sic intellecta, tamquam ad validum usum huius potestatis non sit necessaria ordinaria vel subdelegata illa iurisdictio, sine qua Tridentinum [*1686s] declarat, nullius momenti esse absolutionem a sacerdote prolatam:

falsa, temeraria, perniciosa, Tridentino contraria et iniuriosa, erronea.

2638 38. Item, doctrina, qua, postquam Synodus professam est, “se non posse non admirari illam adeo venerabilem disciplinam antiquitatis, quae (ut ait) ad paenitentiam non ita facile et forte numquam eum admittebat, qui post primum peccatum et primam reconciliationem relapsus esset in culpam”, subiungit, “per timorem perpetuae exclusionis a communione et pace, etiam in articulo mortis, magnum frenum illis iniectum iri, qui parum considerant malum peccati et minus illud timent”:¹

contraria can. 13 Concilii Nicaeni I [*129], Decretali Innocentii I ad Exsuperium Tolosanum [*212], tum et Decretali Caelestini I ad episcopos Viennensis et Narbonensis provinciae [*236], redolens pravitatem, quam in ea Decretali sanctus Pontifex exhorret.

and absolutely required not only imperfect contrition, which is sometimes called “attrition”, even when it is united to the love by which man begins to love God as the source of all justice [cf. *1526], and not only contrition formed by charity, but also the fervor of dominating charity that has proved itself through long experience by fervor in good works,

⟨is⟩ false, rash, disturbing to the peace of souls, contrary to the secure and approved practice of the Church, detracting from the efficacy of the sacrament, and injurious to it.

The Authority for Absolving

37. The teaching of the synod that declares concerning the authority for absolving received through ordination that “after the institution of dioceses and parishes, it is fitting that each one exercise this judgment over those persons subject to him either by reason of territory or some personal right”, because “otherwise confusion and disturbance would be introduced”;

since it declares that, in order to prevent confusion, after dioceses and parishes have been instituted, it is merely fitting that the power of absolving be exercised upon subjects;¹

so understood, as if for the valid use of this power there is no need of ordinary or delegated jurisdiction, without which the Council of Trent [*1686f.] declares that absolution conferred by a priest is of no value,

⟨is⟩ false, rash, pernicious, contrary and injurious to the Council of Trent, ⟨and⟩ erroneous.

38. Likewise, that teaching in which, after the synod professed that “it could not but admire that very venerable discipline of antiquity which (as it says) did not admit to penance so easily, and perhaps never, that one who, after a first sin and a first reconciliation, had relapsed into guilt”, it adds that, “through fear of perpetual exclusion from communion and from peace, even in the hour of death, a great restraint will be put on those who consider too little the evil of sin and fear it less”;¹

⟨is⟩ contrary to canon 13 of the First Council of Nicaea [*129], to the decretal of Innocent I to Exsuperius of Toulouse [*212], and also to the decretal of Celestine I to the bishops of the provinces of Vienne and Narbonne [*236]; it is redolent of the perversity that, in that decretal, horrified the holy pontiff.

*2637¹ Decree on Penance, § 10, no. 6.

*2638¹ Ibid., § 11.

De peccatorum venialium confessione

39. Declaratio Synodi de peccatorum venialium confessione, quam optare se ait non tantopere frequentari, ne nimium contemptibiles reddantur huiusmodi confessiones:¹

temeraria, pernicioza, Sanctorum ac piorum praxi a sacro Concilio Tridentino probatae [*1680] contraria.

De indulgentiis

40. Propositio asserens, “indulgentiam secundum suam praecisam notionem aliud non esse quam remissionem partis eius paenitentiae, quae per canones statuta erat peccanti”:¹

quasi indulgentia praeter nudam remissionem poenae canonicae non etiam valeat ad remissionem poenae temporalis pro peccatis actualibus debitae apud divinam iustitiam:

falsa, temeraria, Christi meritis iniuriosa, dudum in art. 19 Lutheri damnata [*1469].

41. Item in eo, quod subditur, “scholasticos suis subtilitatibus inflatos invexisse thesaurum male intellectum meritorum Christi et Sanctorum, et clarae notioni absolutionis a poena canonica substituisse confusam et falsam applicationis meritorum”:¹

quasi thesauri Ecclesiae, unde Papa dat indulgentias, non sint merita Christi et Sanctorum:

falsa, temeraria, Christi et Sanctorum meritis iniuriosa, dudum in art. 17 Lutheri [*1467] damnata.

42. Item in eo, quod superaddit, “luctuosius adhuc esse, quod chimaerea isthaec applicatio transferri volita sit in defunctos”:¹

falsa, temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva, in Romanos Pontifices et in praxim et sensum universalis Ecclesiae iniuriosa, inducens in errorem haereticali nota in Petro de Osma confixum [*1416], iterum damnatum in art. 22 Lutheri [*1472].

43. In eo demum, quod impudentissime invehitur in tabellas indulgentiarum, altaria privilegiata, etc.:¹

temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva, scandalosa, in Summos Pontifices atque in praxim tota Ecclesia frequentatam contumeliosa.

The Confession of Venial Sins

39. The declaration of the synod on the confession of venial sins, which, according to its wishes, should not be made so frequently, lest such confessions become too contemptible,¹ 2639

(is) rash, dangerous, contrary to the practice of the saints and the pious that was approved [*1680] by the sacred Council of Trent.

Indulgences

40. The proposition asserting “that an indulgence, according to its precise notion, is nothing else than the remission of that part of the penance which had been established by the canons for the sinner”:¹ 2640 as if an indulgence, in addition to the mere remission of the canonical penance, does not also have value for the remission of the temporal punishment due to the divine justice for actual sins,

(is) false, rash, injurious to the merits of Christ, and already condemned in article 19 of Luther [*1469].

41. Likewise, in this which is added, i.e., that “the scholastics, puffed up by their subtleties, introduced the poorly understood treasury of the merits of Christ and of the saints, and, for the clear notion of absolution from canonical penance, they substituted a confused and false notion of the application of merits”:¹ 2641

as if the treasures of the Church, whence the pope grants indulgences, are not the merits of Christ and of the saints,

(is) false, rash, injurious to the merits of Christ and of the saints, and previously condemned in art. 17 of Luther [*1467].

42. Likewise, in this which it adds, that “it is still more lamentable that this chimerical application is meant to be transferred to the dead”:¹ 2642

(is) false, rash, offensive to pious ears, injurious to the Roman pontiffs and to the practice and sense of the universal Church, leading to the error stamped with the mark of heresy in Peter of Osma [*1416], and again condemned in article 22 of Luther [*1472].

43. In this, finally, that it most shamelessly inveighs against lists of indulgences, privileged altars, etc.:¹ 2643

(it is) rash, offensive to pious ears, scandalous, and abusive to the supreme pontiffs and to the practice common in the whole Church.

*2639 ¹ Ibid., § 12.

*2640 ¹ Ibid., § 16.

*2641 ¹ Ibid.

*2642 ¹ Ibid.

*2643 ¹ Ibid.

De reservatione casuum

2644 44. Propositio Synodi asserens, “reservationem casuum nunc temporis aliud non esse quam improvidum ligamen pro inferioribus sacerdotibus, et sonum sensu vacuum pro paenitentibus assuetis non admodum curare hanc reservationem”:¹

falsa, temeraria, male sonans, perniciosa, Concilio Tridentino contraria [*1687], superioris hierarchicae potestatis laesiva.

2645 45. Item, de spe, quam ostendit, fore, “ut reformato Rituali et ordine paenitentiae nullum amplius locum habiturae sint huiusmodi reservationes”:¹

prout attenda generalitate verborum innuit, per reformationem Ritualis et ordinis paenitentiae factam ab episcopo vel synodo aboleri posse casus, quos Tridentina Synodus (sess. XIV, c. 7 [*1687]) declarat Pontifices maximos potuisse pro suprema potestate sibi in universa Ecclesia tradita peculiari suo iudicio reservare:

propositio falsa, temeraria, Concilio Tridentino et summorum Pontificum auctoritati derogans et iniuriosa.

De censuris

2646 46. Propositio asserens, “effectum excommunicationis exteriorem dumtaxat esse, quia tantummodo natura sua excludit ab exteriori communicatione Ecclesiae”:¹

quasi excommunicatio non sit poena spiritualis, ligans in caelo, animas obligans:²

falsa, perniciosa, in art. 23 Lutheri damnata [*1473], ad minus erronea.

2647 47. Item, quae tradit, necessarium esse iuxta leges naturales et divinas, ut sive ad excommunicationem sive ad suspensionem praecedere debeat examen personale; atque adeo sententias dictas ipso facto non aliam vim habere, nisi seriae comminationis sine ullo actuali effectu:¹

falsa, temeraria, perniciosa, Ecclesiae potestati iniuriosa, erronea.

2648 48. Item, quae pronuntiat, “inutilem ac vanam esse formulam nonnullis abhinc saeculis inductam absolventi generaliter ab excommunicationibus, in quas fidelis incidere potuisset”:¹

falsa, temeraria, praxi Ecclesiae iniuriosa.

The Reservation of Cases

44. The proposition of the synod asserting that the “reservation of cases at the present time is nothing else than an ill-considered constraint for priests of lower rank and a statement devoid of sense for penitents who are accustomed to pay no heed to this reservation”,¹

(is) false, rash, evil-sounding, dangerous, contrary to the Council of Trent [*1687], and injurious to the hierarchic power.

45. Likewise, concerning the hope that it expressed that “when the Ritual and the order of penance have been reformed, there will be no place any longer for reservations of this sort”,¹ insofar as, considering the careful generality of the words, it intimates that, by a reformation of the Ritual and of the order of penance made by a bishop or a synod, cases can be abolished that the Council of Trent (sess. 14, chap. 7 [*1687]) declares the supreme pontiffs could reserve to their own special judgment, because of the supreme power given to them in the universal Church,

(is) a proposition (that is) false, rash, derogatory, and injurious to the Council of Trent and to the authority of the supreme pontiffs.

Censures

46. The proposition asserting that “the effect of excommunication is merely exterior, because by its nature it merely excludes from exterior communion with the Church”,¹ as if excommunication were not a spiritual punishment, binding in heaven, obligating souls,²

(is) false, pernicious, condemned in art. 23 of Luther [*1473], and at least erroneous.

47. Likewise, the proposition that teaches that it is necessary, according to the natural and divine laws, for either excommunication or for suspension, that a personal examination should precede and that, therefore, sentences called “ipso facto” have no other force than that of a serious threat without any actual effect”,¹

(is) false, rash, pernicious, injurious to the power of the Church, and erroneous.

48. Likewise, (the proposition) that declares: “The formula introduced some centuries ago is vain and useless that in a general way absolves from excommunications into which the faithful might have fallen”,¹

(is) false, rash, and injurious to the practice of the Church.

*2644 ¹ Ibid., § 19.

*2645 ¹ Ibid.

*2646 ¹ Ibid., §§ 20 and 22.

² Augustine, letter (250) to Bishop Auxilius, chap. 1 (CSEL 57:594₂₁–595₂ / PL 33:1066 [CD]). — Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 50, no. 12 (on Jn 12:7f.; R. Willems: CpChL 36 [1954]: 438_{15–19} / Pl 35:1762f.).

*2647 ¹ Decree on Penance, §§ 21 and 23.

*2648 ¹ Ibid., § 22.

49. Item, quae damnat ut nullas et invalidas “suspensiones ex informata conscientia”:¹
falsa, perniciosa, in Tridentinum iniuriosa.

50. Item, in eo, quod insinuat, soli episcopo fas non esse uti potestate, quam tamen ei defert Tridentinum (sess. XIV, c. 1 de ref.), suspensionis “ex informata conscientia” legitime infligendae:¹

iurisdictionis praelatorum Ecclesiae laesiva.

De ordine

51. Doctrina Synodi, quae perhibet, in promovendis ad ordines hanc de more et instituto veteris disciplinae rationem servari consuevisse, “ut si quis clericorum distinguebatur sanctitate vitae, et dignus aestimabatur, qui ad ordines sacros ascenderet, ille solitus erat promoveri ad diaconatum vel sacerdotium, etiamsi inferiores ordines non suscepisset: neque tum talis ordinatio dicebatur per saltum, ut postea dictum est”:¹

52. Item, quae innuit, non alium titulum ordinationum fuisse, quam deputationem ad aliquod speciale ministerium, qualis praescripta est in Concilio Chalcedonensi [can. 6]; subiungens (§ 6), quamdiu Ecclesia sese his principiis in delectu sacrorum ministrorum conformavit, ecclesiasticum ordinem floruisse; verum beatos illos dies transiisse, novaque principia subinde introducta, quibus corrupta fuit disciplina in delectu ministrorum sanctuarii.¹

53. Item, quod inter haec ipsa corruptionis principia refert, quod recessum sit a vetere instituto, quo, ut ait (§ 5), Ecclesia insistens Apostoli vestigiis neminem ad sacerdotium admittendum statuerat, nisi qui conservasset innocentiam baptismalem:

quatenus innuit, corruptam fuisse disciplinam per decreta et instituta:

(1) Sive quibus ordinationes per saltum vetitae sunt;

(2) Sive quibus pro ecclesiarum necessitate et commoditate probatae sunt ordinationes sine titulo specialis officii, velut speciatim a Tridentino ordinatio ad titulum patrimonii, salva oboedientia, qua sic ordinati

49. Likewise, (the proposition) that condemns as null and invalid “suspensions from an informed conscience”,¹
(is) false, pernicious, and injurious to the Council of Trent. 2649

50. Likewise, in that decree which insinuates that a bishop alone does not have the right to make use of the power that, nevertheless, the Council of Trent confers on him (sess. 14, chap. 1 on reform) of legitimately imposing suspensions “from an informed conscience”,¹
(is) harmful to the jurisdiction of the prelates of the Church. 2650

Orders

51. The doctrine of the synod that says that, in promoting to orders, this method, from the custom and rule of the ancient discipline, was accustomed to be observed, “that if any cleric was distinguished for holiness of life and was considered worthy to ascend to sacred orders, it was the custom to promote him to the diaconate or to the priesthood, even if he had not received minor orders and that at that time such an ordination was not called ‘per saltum’ (through a leap) as afterward it was called”:¹ 2651

52. Likewise, (the doctrine) that intimates that there was no other title for ordinations than appointment to some special ministry, such as was prescribed in the Council of Chalcedon [can. 6], adding (§ 6) that as long as the Church conformed herself to these principles in the selection of sacred ministers, the ecclesiastical order flourished; but that those happy days have passed, and new principles have been introduced later, by which the discipline in the choice of ministers for the sanctuary was corrupted.¹ 2652

53. Likewise, that among these very principles of corruption it mentions the fact that there has been a departure from the old rule by which, as it says (§ 5), the Church, treading in the footsteps of the apostle, had prescribed that no one should be admitted to the priesthood unless he had preserved his baptismal innocence;

since it implies that discipline has been corrupted by decrees and rules,

(1) either by those that have forbidden ordinations “per saltum”;

(2) or by those that have approved, for the need and advantage of churches, ordinations without the title of a particular office, just as, in a special way, by the Council of Trent the ordination to the title of a patrimony

*2649 ¹ Ibid., § 24.

*2650 ¹ Ibid.

*2651 ¹ Decree on Ordination, § 4.

*2652 ¹ Ibid., § 5.

ecclesiarum necessitatibus deservire debent iis obeundis officii, quibus pro loco ac tempore ab episcopo admoti fuerint, quemadmodum ab apostolicis temporibus in primitiva Ecclesia fieri consuevit;

(3) Sive quibus iure canonico facta est criminum distinctio, quae delinquentes reddunt irregulares; quasi per hanc distinctionem Ecclesia recesserit a spiritu Apostoli, non excludendo generaliter et indistincte ab ecclesiastico ministerio omnes quoscumque, qui baptismalem innocentiam non conservassent:¹

doctrina singulis suis partibus falsa, temeraria, ordinis pro ecclesiarum necessitate et commoditate inducti perturbativa, in disciplinam per canones et speciatim per Tridentini decreta probatam iniuriosa.

2654 54. Item, quae velut turpem abusum notat umquam praetendere eleemosynam pro celebrandis Missis et sacramentis administrandis, sicuti et accipere quemlibet proventum dictum “stolae” et generatim quodcumque stipendium et honorarium, quod suffragiorum aut cuiuslibet parochialis functionis occasione offerretur;

quasi turpis abusus crimine notandi essent ministri Ecclesiae, dum secundum receptum et probatum Ecclesiae morem et institutum utuntur iure promulgato ab Apostolo accipiendi temporalia ab his, quibus spiritualia ministrantur [Gal 6:6]:¹

falsa, temeraria, ecclesiastici ac pastoralis iuris laesiva, in Ecclesiam eiusque ministros iniuriosa.

2655 55. Item, qua vehementer optare se profitetur,¹ ut aliqua ratio inveniretur minutuli cleri (quo nomine inferiorum ordinum clericos designat) a cathedralibus et collegiatis submovendi, providendo aliter, nempe per probos et provectoris aetatis laicos, congruo assignato stipendio, ministerio inserviendi Missis et aliis officiiis velut acolythi, etc., ut olim, inquit, fieri solebat, quando eius generis officia non ad meram speciem pro maioribus ordinibus suscipiendis redacta erant;

quatenus reprehendit institutum, quo cavetur, ut minorum ordinum functiones per eos tantum praestentur exercenturque, qui in illis constituti adscriptive sunt,² idque ad mentem Tridentini (sess. XXIII, c. 17), “ut sanctorum ordinum a diaconatu ad ostiariatum functiones ab apostolicis temporibus in Ecclesia laudabiliter receptae et in pluribus locis aliquamdiu intermissae iuxta preserved the obedience by which those who are so ordained should serve the necessities of the churches in fulfilling those duties for which, considering the time and the place, they were ordained by the bishop, just as it was accustomed to be done from apostolic times in the primitive Church;

(3) or by those that made a distinction in canon law of crimes that render the delinquents irregular; as if, by this distinction, the Church departed from the spirit of the apostle by not excluding in general and without distinction from the ecclesiastical ministry all, whosoever they be, who have not preserved their baptismal innocence;¹

this doctrine, in each of its several individual parts, (is false,) rash, disturbing to the order introduced for the need and advantage of the churches, and injurious to the discipline approved by the canons and especially by the decrees of the Council of Trent.

54. Likewise, (the doctrine) that notes as a shameful abuse ever to offer alms for the celebration of Masses and for administering the sacraments, as well as to accept any so-called offering “of the stole”, and, in general, any stipend and honorarium that may be offered on the occasion of prayers or of some parochial function; as if the ministers of the Church should be charged with a shameful abuse because they use the right promulgated by the apostle of accepting temporal aids from those to whom they furnish spiritual ministrations [Gal 6:6],¹

(is) false, rash, harmful to ecclesiastical and pastoral right, and injurious to the Church and her ministers.

55. Likewise, the doctrine by which it professes¹ to desire very much that some way be found of removing the lesser clergy (under which name it designates the clerics of minor orders) from cathedrals and collegiate churches by providing otherwise, namely, through approved lay people of mature age, a suitable assigned stipend for the ministry of serving at Masses and for other offices such as that of acolyte, etc., as formerly, it says, was usually done when duties of that sort had not been reduced to mere form for the receiving of major orders;

inasmuch as it censures the rule by which care is taken that “the functions of minor orders are to be performed or exercised only by those who have been established in them according to rank”,² and this also according to the intention of the Tridentine Council (sess. 23, chap. 17) “that the duties of sacred orders, from the diaconate to the porter, laudably received in the Church from apostolic

*2653 ¹ Ibid., § 7.

*2654 ¹ Ibid., § 13.

*2655 ¹ Ibid., § 14.

² Fourth Provincial Synod of Milan, May 10, 1576, held under Charles Borromeo, constitution, part 2, chap. 8 (MaC 34:237E / HaC 10:858C).

sacros canones revocentur, nec ab haereticis tamquam otiosae traducantur”:

suggestio temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva, ecclesiastici ministerii perturbativa, servandae quoad fieri potest in celebrandis mysteriis decentiae imminutiva, in minorum ordinum munera et functiones, tum in disciplinam per canones et speciatim per Tridentinum probatam iniuriosa, favens haereticorum in eam conviciis et calumniis.

56. Doctrina, quae statuit, conveniens videri in impedimentis canonicis, quae proveniunt ex delictis in iure expressis, ullam umquam nec concedendam nec admittendam esse dispensationem:¹

aequitatis et moderationis canonicae a sacro Concilio Tridentino probatae laesiva, auctoritati et iuribus Ecclesiae derogans.

57. Praescriptio Synodi, quae generaliter et indiscriminatim velut abusum reicit quamcumque dispensationem, ut plus quam unum residentiale beneficium uni eidemque conferatur; item, in eo quod subiungit, certum sibi esse iuxta Ecclesiae spiritum plus quam uno beneficio tametsi simplici neminem frui posse:¹

pro sua generalitate, derogans moderationi Tridentini (sess. VII, c. 5 et sess. XXIV, c. 17).

De sponsalibus et matrimonio

58. Propositio, quae statuit, sponsalia proprie dicta actum mere civilem continere, qui ad matrimonium celebrandum disponit, eademque civilium legum praescripto omnino subiacere:¹

quasi actus disponens ad sacramentum non subiaceat sub hac ratione iuri Ecclesiae:

falsa, iuris Ecclesiae quoad effectus etiam e sponsalibus vi canonicarum sanctionum profluentes laesiva, disciplinae ab Ecclesia constitutae derogans.

59. Doctrina Synodi asserens, “ad supremam civilem potestatem dumtaxat originarie spectare, contractui matrimonii apponere impedimenta eius generis, quae ipsum nullum reddunt dicunturque dirimentia”: quod “ius originarium” praeterea dicitur cum “iure dispensandi essentialiter conexum”; subiungens, “supposito assensu vel coniventia principum, potuisse Ecclesiam iuste constituere impedimenta dirimentia ipsum contractum matrimonii”;¹

times and neglected for a while in many places, should be renewed according to the sacred canons and should not be considered useless as they are by heretics”.

⟨is⟩ a rash suggestion, offensive to pious ears, disturbing to the ecclesiastical ministry, lessening of the decency that should be observed as far as possible in celebrating the mysteries, injurious to the duties and functions of minor orders, as well as to the discipline approved by the canons and especially by the Tridentine Council, and favorable to the charges and calumnies of heretics against it.

56. The doctrine that states that it seems fitting that, in the case of canonical impediments that arise from crimes expressed in the law, no dispensation should ever be granted or allowed,¹

⟨is⟩ harmful to the canonical equity and moderation that has been approved by the sacred Council of Trent and derogatory to the authority and laws of the Church.

57. The prescription of the synod that generally and indiscriminately rejects as an abuse any dispensation that more than one residential benefice be bestowed on one and the same person: likewise, in this that it adds that the synod is certain that, according to the spirit of the Church, no one could enjoy more than one benefice, even if it is a simple one,¹ by its generality, ⟨is⟩ derogatory to the moderation of the Council of Trent (sess. 7, chap. 5, and sess. 24, chap. 17).

Betrothals and Matrimony

58. The proposition that states that betrothals properly so-called contain a mere civil act that disposes for the celebrating of marriage and that these same betrothals are altogether subject to the prescription of the civil laws,¹

as if the act disposing for the sacrament is not, under this aspect, subject to the law of the Church,

⟨is⟩ false, harmful to the right of the Church in respect to the effects flowing even from betrothals by reason of the canonical sanctions, and derogatory to the discipline established by the Church.

59. The doctrine of the synod asserting that “to the supreme civil power alone originally belongs the right to apply to the contract of marriage impediments of that sort which render it null and are called nullifying”: which “original right”, besides, is said to be “essentially connected with the right of dispensing”: adding that, “with the secret consent or connivance of the sovereign rulers, the Church could justly establish impediments that nullify the very contract of marriage”;¹

*2656 ¹ Decree on Ordination, § 18.

*2657 ¹ Ibid., § 22.

*2658 ¹ Memorandum concerning engagements, impediments to marriage, etc. (from sess. 6), § 8.

*2659 ¹ Decree on Marriage (from sess. 5), §§ 7, 11, 12.

quasi Ecclesia non semper potuerit ac possit in Christianorum matrimoniis iure proprio impedimenta constituere, quae matrimonium non solum impediant, sed et nullum reddant quoad vinculum, quibus Christiani obstricti teneantur etiam in terris infidelium, in eisdemque dispensare:

canonum 3, 4, 9, 12 sessionis XXIV Concilii Tridentini eversiva, haeretica [*1803s, 1809, 1812].

- 2660 60. Item rogatio Synodi ad potestatem civilem, ut “e numero impedimentorum tollat cognitionem spiritualem atque illud, quod dicitur publicae honestatis, quorum origo reperitur in collectione Iustiniani”; tum ut “restringat impedimentum affinitatis et cognitionis, ex quacunque licita aut illicita coniunctione provenientis, ad quartum gradum iuxta civilem computationem per lineam lateralem et obliquam; ita tamen, ut spes nulla relinquatur dispensationis obtinendae”;¹

quatenus civili potestati ius attribuit sive abolendi sive restringendi impedimenta Ecclesiae auctoritate constituta vel comprobata; item qua parte supponit, Ecclesiam per potestatem civilem spoliari posse iure dispensandi super impedimentis ab ipsa constitutis vel comprobatis:

libertatis ac potestatis Ecclesiae subversiva, Tridentino contraria, ex haereticali supra damnato principio profecta [*1803–1812].

De adoranda humanitate Christi

- 2661 61. Propositio, quae assertit, “adorare directe humanitatem Christi, magis vero aliquam eius partem, fore semper honorem divinum datum creaturae”;¹

quatenus per hoc verbum directe intendat reprobare adorationis cultum, quem fideles dirigunt ad humanitatem Christi, perinde ac si talis adoratio, qua humanitas ipsaque caro vivifica Christi adoratur, non quidem propter se et tamquam nuda caro, sed prout unita divinitati, foret honor divinus impertitus creaturae, et non potius una eademque adoratio, qua Verbum incarnatum cum propria ipsius carne adoratur (Concilium Constantinopolitanum II, can. 9 [*431; cf. *259]):

falsa, captiosa, pio ac debito cultui humanitati Christi a fidelibus praestito ac praestando detrahens et iniuriosa.

as if the Church could not and cannot always in Christian marriages establish by her own rights impediments that not only hinder marriage, but also render it null as regards the bond and also dispense from those impediments by which Christians are held bound even in the countries of infidels,

(is) destructive of canons 3, 4, 9, and 12 of session 24 of the Council of Trent [*1803f., 1809, 1812] and heretical.

60. Likewise, the proposal of the synod to the civil power that “it remove from the number of impediments the spiritual relationship and also that one which is called of public honor, whose origin is found in the Collection of Justinian”; then, that “it should tighten the impediment of affinity and relationship from any licit or illicit connection of birth to the fourth degree, according to the civil computation through the lateral and oblique lines, in such a way, nevertheless, that there be left no hope of obtaining a dispensation”;¹

insofar as it attributes to the civil power the right either of abolishing or of tightening impediments that have been established and approved by the authority of the Church; likewise, where it proposes that the Church can be despoiled by the civil power of the right of dispensing from impediments established or approved by the Church,

(is) subversive of the liberty and power of the Church, contrary to the Council of Trent, issuing from the heretical principle condemned above [*1803–1812].

Adoration of the Humanity of Christ

61. The proposition that affirms that “to adore directly the humanity of Christ and all the more any part of his humanity is always to render divine honor to a creature”;¹

insofar as the use of the term “directly” is intended to bring condemnation on the cult of adoration that the faithful direct to the humanity of Christ, as if such an adoration—by which the humanity and the living flesh of Christ is adored, not indeed for its own sake and merely as flesh, but as united to the divinity—were a divine honor paid to a creature and not rather one and the same adoration by which the Word incarnate together with his own flesh is adored (Second Council of Constantinople, can. 9 [*431; cf. *259]),

(is) false, deceitful, and detracting from and injurious to the pious and fitting cult rendered and rightly rendered by the faithful to the humanity of Christ.

*2660 ¹ Appeal to the Prince (from sess. 6) and memorandum regarding engagements . . . § 10.

*2661 ¹ Decree on Faith, § 3.

62. Doctrina, quae devotionem erga sacratissimum Cor Iesu reicit inter devotiones, quas notat velut novas, erroneas aut saltem periculosas;¹

intellecta de hac devotione, qualis est ab Apostolica Sede probata:

falsa, temeraria, perniciosa, piarum aurium offensiva, in Apostolicam Sedem iniuriosa.

63. Item, in eo, quod cultores Cordis Iesu hoc etiam nomine arguit, quod non advertant, sanctissimam carnem Christi, aut eius partem aliquam, aut etiam humanitatem totam cum separatione aut praecisione a divinitate adorari non posse cultu latriae;¹

quasi fideles Cor Iesu adorarent cum separatione vel praecisione a divinitate, dum illud adorant ut est cor Iesu, cor nempe personae Verbi, cui inseparabiliter unitum est, ad eum modum, quo exsanguie corpus Christi in triduo mortis sine separatione aut praecisione a divinitate adorabile fuit in sepulcro:

captiosa, in fideles Cordis Christi cultores iniuriosa.

De ordine praescripto in piis exercitationibus obeundis

64. Doctrina, quae velut superstitiosam universe notat “quamcumque efficaciam, quae ponatur in determinato numero precum et piarum salutationum”;¹

tamquam superstitiosa censenda esset efficacia, quae sumitur non ex numero in se spectato, sed ex praescripto Ecclesiae certum numerum precum vel externarum actionum praefinientis pro indulgentiis consequendis, pro adimplendis paenitentibus, et generatim pro sacro et religioso cultu rite et ex ordine peragendo:

falsa, temeraria, scandalosa, perniciosa, pietati fidelium iniuriosa, Ecclesiae auctoritati derogans, erronea.

65. Propositio enuntians, “irregularem strepitum novarum institutionum, quae dictae sunt exercitia vel missiones, ... forte numquam aut saltem perraro eo pertingere, ut absolutam conversionem operentur; et exteriores illos commotionis actus, qui apparere, nil aliud fuisse quam transeuntia naturalis concussionis fulgura”;¹

62. The doctrine that rejects devotion to the most Sacred Heart of Jesus among the devotions that it notes as new, erroneous, or at least, dangerous,¹ if the understanding of this devotion is of such a sort as has been approved by the Apostolic See,

(is) false, rash, dangerous, offensive to pious ears, and injurious to the Apostolic See.

63. Likewise, inasmuch as (the synod) also denounces those who adore the Heart of Jesus because they do not recognize that the most sacred flesh of Jesus or any of his parts or even the whole humanity cannot be adored with the cult of latria when there is a separation or breaking away from the divinity,¹ as if the faithful would adore the Heart of Jesus separating or dividing it from the divinity, when what they adore is the Heart of Jesus, namely, the Heart of the Person of the Word to whom it is inseparably united, in the very manner in which the bloodless body of Christ, during the three days of death, without separation or division from the divinity was worthy of adoration in the tomb,

(it is) deceitful and offensive to the faithful who adore the Heart of Christ.

The Order Prescribed in the Undertaking of Pious Exercises

64. The doctrine that notes as universally superstitious “any efficacy that is placed in a fixed number of prayers and of pious salutations”;¹

as if one should consider as superstitious the efficacy that is derived, not from the number viewed in itself, but from the prescript of the Church appointing a certain number of prayers or of external acts for obtaining indulgences, for fulfilling penances, and, in general, for the performance of sacred and religious worship in the correct order and due form,

(is) false, rash, scandalous, dangerous, injurious to the piety of the faithful, derogatory to the authority of the Church, and erroneous.

65. The proposition stating that “the unregulated clamor of the new institutions that have been called exercises or missions, ... perhaps never, or at least very rarely, succeed in effecting an absolute conversion; and those exterior acts of encouragement that have appeared were nothing else than the transient brilliance of a natural emotion”;¹

*2662¹ Decree on Prayer (from sess. 6), § 17.

*2663¹ Decree on Prayer, § 10; Pastoral Instruction on the New Devotion to the Heart of Jesus (June 3, 1781), no. 32 in the appendix.

*2664¹ Decree on Prayer, § 14; Letter to the Diocesan Vicars (December 6, 1784), no. 34 in the appendix.

*2665¹ Decree on Penance, § 10.

temeraria, male sonans, pernicioſa, mori pie ac ſalutariter per Eccleſiam frequentato et in verbo Dei fundato iniurioſa.

De modo iungendae vocis populi cum voce Eccleſiae in precibus publicis

- 2666 66. Propoſitio aſſerens, “fore contra apoſtolicam praxim et Dei conſilia, niſi populo faciliores viae pararentur vocem ſuam iungendi cum voce totius Eccleſiae”;¹

intellecta de uſu vulgaris linguae in liturgicas preces inducendae:

faſa, temeraria, ordinis pro myſteriorum celebratione praecſcripti perturbativa, plurium malorum facile productrix.

De lectione ſacrae Scripturae

- 2667 67. Doctrina perhibens, a lectione ſacrarum Scripturarum nonniſi veram impotentiam excuſare; ſubiungens, ulro ſe prodere obſcurationem, quae ex huiuſce praecſcepti neglectu orta eſt ſuper primarias veritates religionis:¹

faſa, temeraria, quietis animarum perturbativa, alias in Quesnellio damnata [*2479–2485].

De proſcriptis libris in Eccleſia publice legendis

- 2668 68. Laudatio, qua ſummopere Synodus commendat Quesnelli commentationes in Novum Teſtamentum aliaque aliorum Quesnellianis erroribus faventium opera, licet proſcripta, eademque parochis proponit, ut ea tamquam ſolidis religionis principiis referta in ſuis quiſque paroeciis populo poſt reliquas functiones perlegant:¹

faſa, ſcandalosa, temeraria, ſeditioſa, Eccleſiae iniurioſa, ſchiſma fovens et haereſim.

De ſacris imaginibus

- 2669 69. Praecſcriptio, quae generaliter et indincte inter imagines ab Eccleſia auferendas, velut rudibus erroris occaſionem praebentes, notat imagines Trinitatis incomprehenſibilis:¹

propter ſui generalitatem, temeraria, ac pio per Eccleſiam frequentato mori contraria, quasi nullae exſtent imagines ſanctiſſimae Trinitatis communiter approbatae ac tuto permittendae.²

[iſ] raſh, evil-ſounding, dangerous, and injurioſ to the cuſtoms piously and ſalutarly practiced throughout the Church and founded on the Word of God.

The Manner of Uniting the Voice of the People with the Voice of the Church in Public Prayers

66. The propoſition that aſſerts that “it is contrary to apoſtolic practice and the counſels of God not to prepare eaſier ways of uniting the voice of the people with that of the whole Church”;¹

if underſtood (to mean) that the uſe of the common language ſhould be introduced into the liturgical prayers,

(iſ) faſe, raſh, deſtructive of the order preſcribed for the celebration of the myſteries, and eaſily productive of numerous evils.

The Reading of Sacred Scripture

67. The doctrine that aſſerts that only a true incapacity can diſpenſe from the reading of Sacred Scripture and that adds that the obſcuration of the firſt truths of religion that has developed becauſe of the negligence of this precept continues to ſpread,¹

(iſ) faſe, raſh, diſturbing to the peace of ſouls, and condemned on another occaſion in Quesnel [*2479–2485].

The Reading of Proſcribed Books Publicly in Church

68. The praiſe with which the ſynod very highly commends the commentaries of Quesnel on the New Teſtament, and ſome works of other writers who favor the errors of Quesnel, even though they have been proſcribed, and that propoſes to pariſh prieſts that they ſhould read theſe ſame works, as if they were full of the ſolid principles of religion, each one in his own pariſh to hiſ people after other functions,¹

(iſ) faſe, ſcandalous, raſh, ſeditioſ, and injurioſ to the Church, foſtering ſchiſm and hereſy.

Sacred Images

69. The preſcription that in general and without diſcrimination includes the images of the incomprehenſible Trinity among the images to be removed from the Church, on the ground that they furniſh an occaſion of error to the untutored,¹ becauſe of its generality, (iſ) raſh and contrary to the pious cuſtom common throughout the Church, as if no images of the Moſt Holy Trinity exiſt that are commonly approved and ſafely permitted.²

*2666 ¹ Decree on Prayer, § 24. —Cf. *2486.

*2667 ¹ Appendix to the Decree on Grace: twelve articles addreſſed to Benedict XIII from Cardinal Noailles, note to art. 11.

*2668 ¹ Decree on Prayer, § 29.

*2669 ¹ Ibid., § 17.

² Cf. Benedict XIV, brief Sollicitudini noſtrae 25–36, October 1, 1745 (Mechelen ed., 3:241–49).

70. Item, doctrina et praescriptio generatim reprobans omnem specialem cultum, quem alicui speciatim imagini solent fideles impendere, et ad ipsam potius quam ad aliam confugere:¹

temeraria, perniciose, pio per Ecclesiam frequentato mori, tum et illi providentiae ordini iniuriosa, quo “ita Deus nec in omnibus memoriis Sanctorum ista fieri voluit, qui dividit propria unicuique prout vult”.²

71. Item, quae vetat, ne imagines, praesertim beatæ Virginis, ullis titulis distinguantur, praeterquam denominationibus, quae sint analogae mysteriis, de quibus in sacra Scriptura expressa fit mentio:¹

quasi nec adscribi possent imaginibus piae aliae denominationes, quas vel in ipsismet publicis precibus Ecclesia probat et commendat:

temeraria, piarum aurium offensiva, venerationi beatæ praesertim Virgini debitæ iniuriosa.

72. Item, quae velut abusum extirpari vult morem, quo velatae asservantur certae imagines:¹

temeraria, frequentato in Ecclesia et ad fidelium pietatem fovendam inducto mori contraria.

De festis

73. Propositio enuntians, novorum festorum institutionem ex neglectu in veteribus observandis et ex falsis notionibus naturae et finis earundem solemnitatum originem duxisse:¹

falsa, temeraria, scandalosa, Ecclesiae iniuriosa, favens haereticorum in dies festos per Ecclesiam celebratos conviciis.

74. Deliberatio Synodi de transferendis in diem dominicum festis per annum institutis, idque pro iure, quod persuasum sibi esse ait episcopo competere super disciplinam ecclesiasticam in ordine ad res mere spirituales: ideoque et praeceptum Missae audiendae abrogandi diebus, in quibus ex pristina Ecclesiae lege viget etiamnum id praeceptum; tum etiam in eo, quod superaddit de transferendis in Adventum episcopali auctoritate ieiuniis per annum ex Ecclesiae praecepto servandis;¹

70. Likewise, the doctrine and the prescription that, in a general manner, rejects any special devotion that the faithful are accustomed to render to some image in particular and to which they have more recourse than to another,¹

(is) rash, dangerous, and offensive to the pious custom prevalent throughout the Church and also to that disposition of providence by which “God, who distributes things proper to each as he wills, did not wish these things to happen in all the memorials of the saints.”²

71. Likewise, the teaching that forbids that images, especially of the Blessed Virgin, be distinguished by any title other than the denominations that are related to the mysteries about which express mention is made in Holy Scripture,¹ as if other pious titles could not be given to images that the Church indeed approves and commends in her public prayers,

(is) rash, offensive to pious ears, and especially injurious to the due veneration of the Blessed Virgin.

72. Likewise, the one that would eradicate as an abuse the custom by which certain images are kept veiled,¹

(is) rash and contrary to the custom prevalent in the Church and (which was) introduced to foster the piety of the faithful.

Feasts

73. The proposition stating that the institution of new feasts derived its origin from neglect in the observance of the ancient (ones) and from false notions of the nature and end of these solemnities,¹

(is) false, rash, scandalous, injurious to the Church, and favorable to the charges of heretics against the feast days celebrated by the Church.

74. The decision of the synod to transfer to Sunday feasts arranged throughout the year, and this by virtue of the law that, according to (the synod’s) conviction, belongs to the bishop’s competence in matters of ecclesiastical discipline in the ordering of purely spiritual things: and therefore also (the competence) to abrogate the precept of hearing Mass on those days where, on the basis of the ancient law of the Church, this precept still remains in force; and then also in what (the synod) adds concerning the transfer into Advent, by episcopal authority, of the fasts to be observed throughout the year according to Church precept,¹

*2670 ¹ Decree on Prayer, § 17.

² Augustine, letter (78) to the inhabitants of Hippo, chap. 3 (CSEL 34:336₁₋₁₃ / PL 33:269).

*2671 ¹ Decree on Prayer, § 17.

*2672 ¹ Ibid.

*2673 ¹ Memorandum on the reform of feasts (from sess. 6), § 3.

*2674 ¹ Ibid., § 8.

quatenus adstruit, episcopo fas esse iure proprio transferre dies ab Ecclesia praescriptos pro festis ieiuniisve celebrandis, aut indictum Missae audiendae praeceptum abrogare:

propositio falsa, iuris Conciliorum generalium et Summorum Pontificum laesiva, scandalosa, schismati favens.

De iuramentis

- 2675 75. Doctrina, quae perhibet, beatis temporibus nascentis Ecclesiae iuramenta visa esse a documentis divini praeceptoris atque ab aurea evangelica simplicitate adeo aliena, ut “ipsummet iurare sine extrema et ineluctabili necessitate reputatus fuisset actus irreligiōsus, homine christiano indignus”; insuper “continuatam Patrum seriem demonstrare iuramenta communi sensu pro vetitis habita fuisse”; indeque progreditur ad improbanda iuramenta, quae curia ecclesiastica, iurisprudentiae feudalis, ut ait, normam secuta, in investituris et in sacris ipsis episcoporum ordinationibus adoptavit; statuitque, adeo implorandam a saeculari potestate legem pro abolendis iuramentis, quae in curiis etiam ecclesiasticis exiguntur pro suscipiendis muniis et officiis et generatim pro omni actu curiali:¹

falsa, Ecclesiae iniuriosa, iuris ecclesiastici laesiva, disciplinae per canones inductae et probatae subversiva.

De collationibus ecclesiasticis

- 2676 76. Insectatio, qua Synodus scholasticam exagitat velut eam, quae “viam aperuit inveniendis novis et inter se discordantibus systematibus quoad veritates maioris pretii, ac demum adduxit ad probabilismum et laxismum”;¹

quatenus in scholasticam reicit privatorum vitia, qui abuti ea potuerunt aut abusi sunt:

falsa, temeraria, in sanctissimos viros et doctores, qui magno catholicae religionis bono scholasticam excoluere, iniuriosa, favens infestis in eam haereticorum conviciis.

- 2677 77. Item, in eo, quod subdit, “mutationem formae regiminis ecclesiastici, qua factum est, ut ministri Ecclesiae in oblivionem venirent suorum iurium, quae simul sunt eorum obligationes, eo demum rem adduxisse, ut obliterari faceret primitivas notiones ministerii ecclesiastici et sollicitudinis pastoralis”;¹

insomuch as it asserts that it is lawful for a bishop in his own right to transfer the days prescribed by the Church for celebrating feasts or fasts or to abrogate the imposed precept of hearing Mass,

(is) a false proposition, harmful to the law of the general councils and of the supreme pontiffs, scandalous, and favorable to schism.

Oaths

75. The teaching that says that in the blessed days of the early Church oaths seemed so foreign to the model of the divine Master and to the golden simplicity of the Gospel that “to take an oath without extreme and unavoidable need had been reputed to be an irreligious act, unworthy of a Christian person” and, further, that “the uninterrupted line of the Fathers shows that oaths by common consent have been considered as forbidden”, and from this doctrine proceeds to condemn the oaths that the ecclesiastical curia, having followed, as it says, the norm of feudal jurisprudence, adopted for the investitures and the sacred ordinations of the bishops themselves, and decrees, therefore, that the law should be invoked by the secular power to abolish the oaths that are demanded in ecclesiastical curias when entering upon duties and offices and, in general, for any curial functions,¹

(is) false, injurious to the Church, harmful to ecclesiastical law, and subversive of discipline imposed and approved by the canons.

Ecclesiastical Conferences

76. The charge that the synod brings against the Scholastic method as that “which opened the way for inventing new systems discordant with one another with respect to truths of a greater value and that led finally to probabilism and laxism”,¹ insofar as it charges against the Scholastic method the faults of individuals who could misuse and have misused it,

(is) false, rash, against very holy and learned men who, to the great good of the Catholic religion, have developed the Scholastic method, injurious, and favorable to the hostile reproaches of the heretics against it.

77. Likewise in this that adds that “a change in the form of ecclesiastical government, by which it was brought about that ministers of the Church became forgetful of their rights, which at the same time are their obligations, has finally led to such a state of affairs as to cause the primitive notions of ecclesiastical ministry and pastoral solicitude to be forgotten”,¹ quasi per mutationem regiminis congruentem disciplinae in Ecclesia constitutae et probatae obliterari umquam potuerit et amitti primitiva notio ecclesiastici ministerii pastoralisve sollicitudinis:

*2675 ¹ Memorandum on the reform of oaths (from sess. 6), § 4.

*2676 ¹ Decree on Ecclesiastical Conferences (from sess. 6), § 1.

*2677 ¹ Ibid.

propositio falsa, temeraria, erronea.

78. Praescriptio Synodi de ordine rerum tractandarum in collationibus, qua, posteaquam praemisit, “in quolibet articulo distinguendum id, quod pertinet ad fidem et ad essentiam religionis, ab eo, quod est proprium disciplinae”, subiungit, “in hac ipsa (disciplina) distinguendum, quod est necessarium aut utile ad retinendos in spiritu fideles, ab eo, quod est inutile aut onerosius quam libertas filiorum novi foederis patiatur, magis vero ab eo, quod est periculosum aut noxium, utpote inducens ad superstitionem et materialismum”;¹

quatenus pro generalitate verborum comprehendat et praescripto examini subiciat etiam disciplinam ab Ecclesia constitutam et probatam, quasi Ecclesia, quae Spiritu Dei regitur, disciplinam constituere posset non solum inutilem et onerosiorem quam libertas christiana patiatur, sed et periculosam, noxiam, inducentem in superstitionem et materialismum:

falsa, temeraria, scandalosa, pernicioosa, piarum aurium offensiva, Ecclesiae ac Spiritui Dei, quo ipsa regitur, iniuriosa, ad minus erronea.

Convicia adversus aliquas sententias in scholis catholicis usque adhuc agitatae

79. Assertio,¹ quae conviciis et contumeliis insectatur sententias in scholis catholicis agitatae, et de quibus Apostolica Sedes nihil adhuc definiendum aut pronuntiandum censuit:

falsa, temeraria, in scholas catholicas iniuriosa, debita Apostolicis Constitutionibus oboedientiae derogans.

De tribus regulis, fundamenti loco a Synodo positae pro reformatione regularium

80. Regula I, quae statuit universe et indiscriminatim: “statum regularem aut monasticum natura sua componi non posse cum animarum cura cumque vitae pastoralis muneribus, nec adeo in partem venire posse ecclesiasticae hierarchiae, quin ex adverso pugnet cum ipsiusmet vitae monasticae principiis”;¹

falsa, pernicioosa, in sanctissimos Ecclesiae Patres et Praesules, qui regularis vitae instituta cum clericalis ordinis muneribus consociarunt, iniuriosa, pio, vetusto, as if, by a change of government consonant to the discipline established and approved in the Church, there ever could be forgotten and lost the primitive notion of ecclesiastical ministry or pastoral solicitude,

(is) a false, rash, erroneous, proposition.

78. The prescription of the synod about the order of transacting business in the conferences, in which, after it prefaced “in every article that which pertains to faith and to the essence of religion must be distinguished from that which is proper to discipline”, it adds, “in this (discipline) itself there is to be distinguished what is necessary or useful to retain the faithful in spirit from that which is useless or too burdensome for the liberty of the sons of the New Covenant to endure, but more so, from that which is dangerous or harmful, namely, leading to superstition and materialism”,¹ insofar as by the generality of the words it includes and submits to a prescribed examination even the discipline established and approved by the Church, as if the Church that is ruled by the Spirit of God could have established discipline that is not only useless and burdensome for Christian liberty to endure, but that is even dangerous and harmful and leading to superstition and materialism,

(is) false, rash, scandalous, dangerous, offensive to pious ears, injurious to the Church and to the Spirit of God by whom she is guided, and at least erroneous.

Complaints against Some Opinions that Are Still Discussed in “Catholic Schools”

79. The assertion¹ that attacks with slanderous charges the opinions discussed in Catholic schools about which the Apostolic See has thought that nothing yet needs to be defined or pronounced,

(is) false, rash, injurious to Catholic schools, and detracting from the obedience to the Apostolic Constitutions.

The “Three Rules” Set Down as Fundamental by the Synod “for the Reformation of Regulars”

80. Rule 1, which states universally and without distinction that “the regular or monastic state by its very nature cannot be joined with the care of souls and with the duties of parochial life and, therefore, cannot share in the ecclesiastical hierarchy without adversely opposing the principles of monastic life itself”,¹

(is) false, dangerous to the most holy Fathers and heads of the Church, who harmonized the practices of the regular life with the duties of the clerical order,

*2678 ¹ Ibid., § 4.

*2679 ¹ Discourse to the synod, § 2. It alludes to the controversies regarding the aids of grace and systematic morality.

*2680 ¹ Memorandum regarding the reform of religious orders (from sess. 6), § 9.

probato Ecclesiae mori Summorumque Pontificum sanctionibus contraria:

quasi “monachi, quos morum gravitas et vitae ac fidei institutio sancta commendat”, non rite, nec modo sine religionis offensione, sed et cum multa utilitate Ecclesiae “clericorum officiis aggregentur”.²

2681 81. Item, in eo, quod subiungit, sanctos Thomam et Bonaventuram sic in tuendis adversus summos homines mendicantium institutis versatos esse, ut in eorum defensionibus minor aestus, accuratio maior desideranda fuisset:¹

scandalosa, in sanctissimos doctores iniuriosa, impiis damnatorum auctorum contumeliis favens.

2682 82. Regula II, “multiplicationem ordinum ac diversitatem naturaliter inferre perturbationem et confusionem”; item, in eo quod praemittit § 4, regularium “fundatores”, qui post monastica instituta prodierunt, “ordines superaddentes ordinibus, reformationes reformationibus, nihil aliud effecisse, quam primariam mali causam magis magisque dilatare”;¹

intellecta de ordinibus et institutis a Sancta Sede probatis, quasi distincta piorum munerum varietas, quibus distincti ordines addicti sunt, natura sua perturbationem et confusionem parere debeat:

falsa, calumniosa, in sanctos fundatores eorumque fideles alumnos, tum et in ipsos Summos Pontifices iniuriosa.

2683 83. Regula III, qua, postquam praemisit, “parvum corpus degens intra civilem societatem, quin vere sit pars eiusdem parvamque monarchiam figit in statu, semper esse periculosum”,¹ subinde hoc nomine criminatur privata monasteria, communis instituti vinculo sub uno praesertim capite consociata, velut speciales totidem monarchias, civili reipublicae periculosas et noxias:

falsa, temeraria, regularibus institutis a Sancta Sede ad religionis profectum approbatis iniuriosa, favens haeticorum in eadem instituta insectationibus et calumniis.

De systemate seu ordinationum complexione ducta ex allatis regulis et octo sequentibus articulis comprehensa pro reformatione regularium

2684 84. Art. I. De uno dumtaxat ordine in Ecclesia retinendo, ac de seligenda prae ceteris regula sancti injurious, contrary to the old, pious, approved custom of the Church and to the sanctions of the supreme pontiff:

as if “monks, whom the gravity of their manners and of their life and whom the holy institution of faith approves”, could not be duly “entrusted with the duties of the clergy”,² not only without harm to religion, but even with great advantage to the Church.

81. Likewise, in that which adds that St. Thomas and St. Bonaventure were so occupied in protecting orders of mendicants against illustrious men that in their defenses less heat and greater accuracy were to be desired,¹

(is) scandalous, injurious to the very holy Doctors, and favorable to the impious slanders of condemned authors.

82. Rule 2, that “the multiplicity and diversity of orders naturally produce confusion and disturbance”; likewise, in what precedes § 4: “that the founders” of the regulars who, after the monastic institutions came into being, “by adding orders to orders, reforms to reforms, have accomplished nothing else than to increase more and more the primary cause of evil”,¹

if understood with regard to the orders and institutes approved by the Holy See, as if the distinct variety of pious works to which the distinct orders are devoted should, by its nature, beget disturbance and confusion,

(is) false, calumnious, and injurious not only to the holy founders and their faithful disciples, but also to the supreme pontiffs themselves.

83. Rule 3, in which, after it states that “a small body living within a civil society without being truly a part of the same and which forms a small monarchy in the State, is always a dangerous thing”,¹ it then charges with this accusation private monasteries that are associated by the bond of a common rule under one special head, as if they were so many special monarchies harmful and dangerous to the civic commonwealth,

[is] false, rash, injurious to the regular institutes approved by the Holy See for the advancement of religion, and favorable to the slanders and calumnies of heretics against the same institutes.

Concerning the “System” or List of Ordinances Drawn from Rules Laid Down and Contained in the Eight Following Articles “for the Reformation of Regulars”

84. Art 1. Only one order should be retained in the Church, and the rule of St. Benedict should be chosen

*2680 ² Pope Siricius, decretal letter Directa ad decessorem to Bishop Himerius of Tarragona, February 10, 385, chap. 17 (CouE 635 / PL 13:1144B). Urban II to the Synod of Nîmes, July 1096, cann. 2 and 3 (MaC 20:934A–935B) can also be added.

*2681 ¹ Memorandum regarding the reform of religious orders, § 9.

*2682 ¹ Ibid.

*2683 ¹ Ibid.

Benedicti, cum ob sui praestantiam tum ob praeclara illius ordinis merita, sic tamen, ut in his, quae forte occurrent temporum condicioni minus congrua, instituta vitae ratio apud Portum-Regium¹ lucem praeferat ad explorandum, quid addere, quid detrahere conveniat;²

Art. II. Ne compotes fiant ecclesiasticae hierarchiae, qui se huic ordini adiunxerint; nec ad sacros ordines promoveantur, praeterquam ad summum unus vel duo, initiandi tamquam curati vel capellani monasterii, reliquis in simplici laicorum ordine remanentibus;

Art. III. Unum in unaquaque civitate admittendum monasterium, idque extra moenia civitatis in locis abditioribus et remotioribus collocandum;

Art. IV. Inter occupationes vitae monasticae pars sua labori manuum inviolate servanda, relicto tamen congruo tempore psalmodiae impendendo, aut etiam si cui liberit litterarum studio; psalmodia deberet esse moderata, quia nimia eius prolixitas parit praecipitantiam, molestiam, evagationem; quo plus aetate sunt psalmodiae, orationes, preces, tantumdem peraequa proportione omni tempore imminutus fervor est sanctitatisque regularium;

Art. V. Nulla foret admittenda distinctio monachos inter sive choro, sive ministeriis addictos; inaequalitas isthaec gravissimas omni tempore lites excitavit ac discordias, et a communitatibus regularium spiritum caritatis expulit;

Art. VI. Votum perpetuae stabilitatis numquam tolerandum; non illud norant veteres monachi, qui tamen Ecclesiae consolatio et christianismi ornamentum exstiterunt: vota castitatis, paupertatis et oboedientiae non admittentur instar communis et stabilis regulae. Si quis ea vota, aut omnia, aut aliqua facere voluerit, consilium et veniam ab episcopo postulabit, qui tamen numquam permittet, ut perpetua sint, nec anni fines excedent; tantummodo facultas dabitur ea renovandi sub iisdem condicionibus;

Art. VII. Omnem episcopus habebit inspectionem in eorum vitam, studia, progressum in pietate; ad ipsum pertinebit monachosmittere et expellere, semper tamen accepto contubernialium consilio;

Art. VIII. Regulares ordinum, qui adhuc remanent, licet sacerdotes, in hoc monasterium admitti etiam possent, modo in silentio et solitudine propriae among all the others, not only because of its excellence but also on account of the well-known merits of this order; in such a way, however, that in what might seem less suited to current circumstances, the way of life instituted at Port-Royal¹ provides light for examining what should be added and what taken away;²

Art. 2. Those who have joined this order should not be a part of the ecclesiastical hierarchy; nor should they be promoted to holy orders, except one or two at the most, to be initiated as superiors or as chaplains of the monastery, the rest remaining in the simple order of the laity; 2685

Art. 3. One monastery only should be allowed in any one city, and this should be located outside the walls of the city in the more retired and remote places; 2686

Art. 4. Among the occupations of the monastic life, a proper proportion should be inviolably reserved for manual labor, with suitable time, nevertheless, left for devotion to the psalmody, or also, if someone wishes, for the study of letters; the psalmody should be moderate, because too much of it produces haste, weariness, and distraction; the more psalmody, prayers, and supplications are increased beyond a just proportion of the whole time, so much are the fervor and holiness of the regulars diminished; 2687

Art. 5. No distinction among the monks should be allowed, whether they are devoted to choir or to services; such inequality has stirred up very grave quarrels and discords at every opportunity and has driven out the spirit of charity from communities of regulars; 2688

Art. 6. The vow of perpetual stability should never be allowed; the older monks did not know it, who, nevertheless, were a consolation of the Church and an ornament to Christianity; the vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience should not be admitted as the common and stable rule. If anyone shall wish to make these vows, all or anyone, he will ask advice and permission from the bishop, who, nevertheless, will never permit them to be perpetual or to exceed the limits of a year; the opportunity merely will be given of renewing them under the same conditions; 2689

Art. 7. The bishop will conduct every investigation into their lives, studies, and advancement in piety; it will be his duty to admit and to dismiss the monks, always, however, after taking counsel with their fellow monks; 2690

Art. 8. Regulars of orders that still survive, although they are priests, may also be received into this monastery, provided they desire to be free in silence and solitude for 2691

*2684 ¹ The Cistercian monastery of Port-Royal des Champs near Versailles, the most famous focal point of Jansenism, was suppressed and destroyed by Louis XIV in 1710 in punishment for its resistance to the constitution Vineam Domini Sabaoth (*2390).

² For all of this part (*2684–2691), cf. the memorandum concerning the reform of religious orders, § 10.

sanctificationi vacare cuperent; quo casu dispensationi locus fieret in generali regula n. II statuta, sic tamen, ne vitae institutionem sequantur ab aliis discrepantem, adeo ut non plus quam una aut ad summum duae in diem Missae celebrentur, satisque ceteris sacerdotibus esse debeat una cum communitate concelebrare;

Item pro reformatione monialium

2692 “Vota perpetua usque ad annum 40 aut 45 non admittenda”; moniales solidis exercitationibus, speciatim labori, addicendae, a carnali spiritualitate, qua pleraeque distinentur, avocandae; expendendum, utrum, quod ad ipsas attinet, satius foret monasterium in civitate relinqui;¹

Systema vigentis atque iam antiquitus probatae ac receptae disciplinae subversivum, perniciosum, Constitutionibus Apostolicis et plurium Conciliorum, etiam generalium, tum speciatim Tridentini sanctionibus oppositum et iniuriosum, favens haeticorum in monastica vota et regularia instituta, stabiliori consiliorum evangelicorum professioni addicta, conviciis et calumniis.

De nationali concilio convocando

2693 85. Propositio enuntians, qualemcumque cognitionem ecclesiasticae historiae sufficere, ut fateri quisque debeat, convocationem concilii nationalis unam esse ex viis canonicis, qua finiatur in Ecclesia respectivarum nationum controversiae spectantes ad religionem;¹

sic intellecta, ut controversiae ad fidem et mores spectantes in Ecclesia quacumque subortae per nationale concilium irrefragabili iudicio finiri valeant; quasi inerrantia in fidei et morum quaestionibus nationali concilio competeret:
schismatica, haeretica.

Provisions and Sanctions of the Bull

2694 Mandamus igitur omnibus utriusque sexus Christi fidelibus, ne de dictis propositionibus et doctrinis sentire, docere, praedicare praesumant, contra quam in hac Nostra Constitutione declaratur: ita ut, quicumque illas vel earum aliquam coniunctim vel divisim docuerit, defenderit, ediderit aut de eis, etiam disputando, publice vel privatim tractaverit, nisi forsitan impugnando, ecclesiasticis censuris aliisque contra similia perpetrantes a iure statutis poenis ipso facto absque alia declaratione subiaceat.

their own sanctification only; in which case, there might be provision for the dispensation stated in the general rule, no. 2, in such a way, however, that they do not follow a rule of life different from the others and that not more than one or at most two Masses be celebrated each day and that it should be satisfactory to the other priests to celebrate in common together with the community;

Likewise for the Reformation of Nuns

“Perpetual vows should not be permitted before the age of forty or forty-five”; nuns should be devoted to solid exercises, especially to labor, turned aside from carnal spirituality by which many are distracted; consideration must also be given as to whether, so far as they are concerned, it would be more satisfactory to leave the monastery in the city;¹

the system is subversive to the discipline now flourishing and already approved and accepted in ancient times, dangerous, opposed, and injurious to the Apostolic Constitutions and to the sanctions of many councils, even general ones, and especially of the Council of Trent; favorable to the vicious calumnies of heretics against monastic vows and the regular institutes devoted to the more stable profession of the evangelical counsels.

About Convoking a National Council

85. The proposition stating that any knowledge whatsoever of ecclesiastical history is sufficient to allow anyone to assert that the convocation of a national council is one of the canonical ways by which controversies in regard to religion may be ended in the Church of the respective nations,¹ if understood to mean that controversies in regard to faith or morals that have arisen in a Church can be ended by an irrefutable decision made in a national council; as if freedom from error in questions of faith and morals belonged to a national council,

(is) schismatic and heretical.

Therefore, We command all the faithful of Christ of either sex not to presume to believe, to teach, or to preach anything about the said propositions and doctrines contrary to what is declared in this constitution of Ours; so that whoever teaches, defends, or publishes them, or any one of them, all together or separately, even in a debate, whether publicly or privately, except perhaps to oppose them, will be subject, ipso facto and without any other declaration, to ecclesiastical censures and to the other penalties stated by law against those committing similar acts.

*2692 ¹ Ibid., § 11.

*2693 ¹ Memorandum regarding the convocation of a national synod (from sess. 6), § 1.

Ceterum, per hanc expressam praefatarum propositionum et doctrinarum reprobationem alia in eodem libro contenta nullatenus approbare intendimus: cum praesertim in eo complures deprehensae fuerint propositiones et doctrinae, sive illis, quae supra damnatae sunt, affines, sive quae communis ac probatae cum doctrinae et disciplinae temerarium contemptum tum maxime infensum in Romanos Pontifices et Apostolicam Sedem animum prae se ferunt.

Duo vero speciatim notanda censemus, quae de augustissimo sanctissimae Trinitatis mysterio, § 2 Decreti de fide, si non pravo animo, imprudentius certe Synodo exciderunt, quae facile rudes praesertim et incautos in fraudem impellere valeant:

Primum, dum posteaquam rite praemisit, Deum in suo Esse unum et simplicissimum permanere, continuo subiungens, ipsum Deum in tribus personis distingui, perperam discedit a communi et probata in christianae doctrinae institutionibus formula, qua Deus unus quidem in tribus personis distinctis dicitur, non in tribus personis distinctus: cuius formulae commutatione hoc vi verborum subrepat erroris periculum, ut essentia divina distincta in personis putetur, quam fides catholica sic unam in personis distinctis confitetur, ut eam simul profiteatur in se prorsus indistinctam.

Alterum quod de ipsismet tribus divinis personis tradit, eas secundum earum proprietates personales et incommunicabiles exactius loquendo exprimi seu appellari Patrem, Verbum et Spiritum Sanctum: quasi minus propria et exacta foret appellatio Filii, tot Scripturae locis consecrata, voce ipsa Patris e caelis et e nube delapsa, tum formula baptismi a Christo praescripta, tum et praeclara illa confessione, qua beatus ab ipsomet Christo Petrus est pronuntiatus; ac non potius retinendum esset, quod, edoctus ab Augustino, angelicus praeceptor¹ vicissim ipse docuit “in nomine Verbi eandem proprietatem importari, quae in nomine Filii”, dicente nimirum Augustino:² “Eo dicitur Verbum, quo Filius.”

Neque silentio praetereunda insignis et fraudis plena Synodi temeritas, quae pridem improbatam ab Apostolica Sede Conventus Gallicani declarationem [*2281–2285] anni 1682 ausa sit non amplissimis modo laudibus exornare, sed, quo maiorem illi auctoritatem conciliaret, eam in decretum de fide inscriptum insidiosae includere,

But, by this expressed condemnation of the aforesaid propositions and doctrines, We by no means intend to approve other things contained in the same book, especially since in it a good number of propositions and doctrines have been discovered that either are close to those condemned above or manifest rash contempt for the commonly approved doctrine and discipline and also a most hostile attitude toward the Roman pontiffs and the Apostolic See.

Indeed, We think two (propositions) must be noted especially, concerning the most august mystery of the Most Holy Trinity, § 2 of the decree about faith, which have issued from the synod, if not with evil intent, surely rather imprudently, which could easily drive into error especially the untutored and the incautious:

The first, after it is rightly prefaced that God in his being remains one and most simple, while immediately adding that God is distinct in three Persons, has erroneously departed from the common formula approved in institutions of Christian doctrine, in which God is said to be one indeed “in three distinct Persons”, not “distinct in three Persons”; and by the change in this formula, this risk of error crept into the meaning of the words, namely, that the divine essence is distinct in the Persons, [the essence] that the Catholic faith confesses to be one in the distinct Persons and declares at the same time to be absolutely undivided in itself.

The second, which concerns the three Divine Persons themselves, that they, according to their personal and incommunicable properties, are to be described and named in a more exact manner of speaking, Father, Word, and Holy Spirit; as if less proper and exact would be the name “Son”, consecrated by so many passages of Scripture, by the very voice of the Father coming from the heavens and from the cloud, and by the formula of baptism prescribed by Christ, and by that famous confession in which Peter was pronounced “blessed” by Christ himself; and as if that statement should not rather be retained which the Angelic Doctor,¹ having learned from Augustine, in his turn taught that “in the name of the Word the same property is meant as in the name of the Son”, Augustine² truly saying: “He is called the Word for the same reason he is called the Son.”

Nor should we pass over in silence the conspicuous and deceitful rashness of the synod that had the audacity not only to bestow the greatest praise on the declaration of the Gallican assembly of the year 1682 [*2281–2285], which had already been condemned earlier by the Apostolic See, but also, in order to give it greater

*2698¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 34, a. 2 ad 3 (Editio Leonina 4:369a).

² Augustine, De trinitate VII, 2, no. 3 (W.J. Mountain and F. Glorie: CpChL 50 [1968]: 249f. / PL 42:936).

2695

2696

2697

2698

2699

articulos in illa contentos palam adoptare, et quae sparsim per hoc ipsum decretum tradita sunt, horum articulorum publica et solemni professione obsignare. Quo sane non solum gravior longe se Nobis offert de Synodo, quam praedecessoribus Nostris fuerit de comitiis illis expostulandi ratio, sed et ipsimet Gallicanae ecclesiae non levis iniuria irrogatur, quam dignam Synodus existimaverit, cuius auctoritas in patrocinium vocaretur errorum, quibus illud est contaminatum decretum.

2700 Quamobrem, quae acta Conventus Gallicani, mox ut prodierunt, praedecessor Noster venerabilis Innocentius XI per Litteras in forma Brevis [“Paternae caritati”] die 11. Aprilis anni 1682, post autem expressius Alexander VIII Constitutione “Inter multiplices” die 4. Aug. 1690 [*2281–2285] pro apostolici sui muneris ratione improbarunt, resciderunt, nulla et irrita declararunt; multo fortius exigit a Nobis pastoralis sollicitudo, recentem horum factam in Synodo tot vitiis affectam adoptionem velut temerariam, scandalosam ac praesertim post edita praedecessorum Nostrorum decreta huic Apostolicae Sedi summopere iniuriosam reprobare ac damnare, prout eam praesenti hac Nostra Constitutione reprobamus et damnamus ac pro reprobata et damnata haberi volumus.

authority, to include it insidiously in the decree entitled On the faith, to adopt openly the articles contained within it, and to seal, by the public and solemn profession of these articles, what was handed down by this decree in a dispersed manner. And so not only are We given a far more serious reason to complain about this synod than Our predecessors (were given) by such assemblies; but also the Gallican Church herself is afflicted by an offense that is not insignificant, since the synod judged it fitting that her authority be invoked in support of the errors that contaminated that decree.

Therefore, as soon as the acts of the Gallican convention appeared, Our venerable predecessor Innocent XI, by letters in the form of a brief [Paternae caritati] on the eleventh (day) of April, in the year 1682, and afterward, more expressly, Alexander VIII in the constitution Inter multiplices of the fourth (day) of August, in the year 1690 [*2281–2285], by reason of their apostolic duty, “condemned, rescinded, and declared them null and void”; pastoral solicitude demands much more strongly of Us that We reject and condemn as rash and scandalous the recent adoption of these acts tainted with so many faults, made by the synod, and, especially after the publication of the decrees of Our predecessors, as exceedingly injurious to this Apostolic See, and We, accordingly, reject and condemn it by this present constitution of Ours, and We wish it to be held as rejected and condemned.

PIUS VII: March 14, 1800–August 20, 1823

2705–2706: Brief Etsi fraternitatis to the Archbishop of Mainz, October 8, 1803

The civil legislation of the Electorate of the Palatinate (Kurpfalz) declared that marriages between Catholics and divorced Protestants were valid. This law was also accepted in other regions. The archbishop of Mainz, Karl Theodor von Dalberg, asked the pope as well as the majority of German bishops, in a circular letter of May 20, 1803, whether a Catholic priest could assist in such a marriage and whether the sacraments could be given to Catholic spouses who had contracted such a marriage before a non-Catholic official. Pius VII answered him with this brief.

Ed.: A. de Roskovány, De matrimoniis mixtis (Nitra, 1842), 2:88f.

Attempted Dissolution of a Marriage

2705 Resp. Summi Pontificis ad quaedam dubia: Sententiam laicorum tribunalium et catholicorum conventuum, a quibus praesertim matrimoniorum nullitas declaratur eorumque vinculi attentatur dissolutio, nullum robor vimque prorsus nullam penes Ecclesiam consequi posse....

Response of the supreme pontiff to certain questions: The decision of lay tribunals and of Catholic assemblies by which the nullity of marriages is chiefly declared and the dissolution of their bond attempted can have no strength and absolutely no force in the sight of the Church....

2706 Gravissimum commissuros scelus suumque sacrum ministerium prodituros esse eos parochos, qui has nuptias sua praesentia probarent suaque benedictione firmarent. Neque enim illae nuptiae dicendae sunt, sed potius adulterina conubia....

Those pastors who would approve these nuptials by their presence and confirm them with their blessing would commit a very grave fault and would betray their sacred ministry. For they should not be called nuptials, but rather adulterous unions....

2710–2712: Letter Magno et acerbo to the Archbishop of Moghila, September 3, 1816

In 1813, a society for the distribution of the Bible had been established in St. Petersburg (Russia) to supply numerous Christian confessions. The Catholic Church was represented by the archbishop of Moghila, who recommended this society to the faithful. He was denounced in Rome and received this letter of disapproval.

Ed.: ASS 9 (1876/1877; 2nd ed., 1885): 583f.

Translations of Sacred Scripture

Obversari ... tibi debuisset ante oculos, ... “si sacra Biblia vulgari lingua passim sine discrimine permittantur, plus inde detrimenti quam utilitatis oriri” [*1854]. Porro Romana Ecclesia solam Vulgatam editionem ex notissimo Tridentini Concilii praescripto [*1506] suscipiens, aliarum linguarum versiones respuit, easque tantum permittit, quae cum adnotationibus ex Patrum et catholicorum doctorum scriptis opportune depromptis eduntur, ne tantus thesaurus pateat novitatum corruptelis, atque ut Ecclesia toto orbe diffusa sit labii unius et sermonum eorundem [Gn 11:1].

Sane cum in vernaculo sermone creberrimas animadvertamus vicissitudines, varietates, commutationesque, profecto ex immoderata biblicarum versionum licentia immutabilitas illa convelleretur, quae divina decet testimonia, et fides ipsa nutaret, cum praesertim ex unius syllabae ratione quandoque de dogmatis veritate dignoscatur.

In id proinde pravas teterrimasque machinationes suas conferre in more habuerunt haeretici, ut editis vernaculis Bibliis (de quorum tamen mira varietate ac discrepantia ipsi se invicem accusant et carpunt) suos quisque errores sanctiore divini eloquii apparatu obvolutos per insidias obruderent. “Non enim natae sunt haereses”, inquiebat S. Augustinus, “nisi dum Scripturae bonae intelliguntur non bene, et quod in eis non bene intelligitur, etiam temere et audacter asseritur”.¹

Quod si viros pietate et sapientia spectatissimos in Scripturarum interpretatione haud raro defecisse dolemus, quid non timendum, si imperito vulgo, qui ut plurimum non delectu aliquo, sed temeritate quadam iudicat, translatae in vulgarem quamcumque linguam Scripturae libere pervolvendae traderentur? ...

[Provocatur dein ad celebrem Innocentii III epistolam ad fideles Ecclesiae Metensis: “Arcana vero fidei sacramenta ... sapere ad sobrietatem”: *771] At notissimae

For you should ... have kept before your eyes ... “that if the Holy Bible in the vernacular is permitted generally and indiscriminately, more harm than good arises” [*1854]. Furthermore, the Roman Church, accepting only the Vulgate edition according to the well-known prescription [*1506] of the Council of Trent, disapproves the versions in other tongues and permits only those that are edited with the explanations carefully chosen from writings of the Fathers and Catholic Doctors, so that so great a treasure may not be exposed to the corruptions of novelties and so that the Church, spread throughout the world, may be of one language and the same words [Gen 11:1].

Since in vernacular speech we notice very frequent interchanges, varieties, and changes, surely by an unrestrained license of biblical versions that changelessness which is proper to the divine testimony would be utterly destroyed, and faith itself would waver, when, especially, from the meaning of one syllable sometimes an understanding about the truth of a dogma is formed.

For this purpose, then, the heretics have been accustomed to make their low and base machinations, in order that by the publication of their vernacular Bibles (of whose strange variety and discrepancy they, nevertheless, accuse one another and wrangle) they may, each one, treacherously insert their own errors wrapped in the more holy apparatus of divine speech. “For heresies are not born”, St. Augustine used to say, “except when the good Scriptures are not well understood and when what is not well understood in them is rashly and boldly asserted.”¹

But, if we grieve that men renowned for piety and wisdom have, by no means rarely, failed in interpreting the Scriptures, what should we not fear if the Scriptures, translated into every common tongue whatsoever, are freely handed on to be read by an inexperienced people who, for the most part, judge not with any skill but with a kind of rashness? ...

[Reference is then made to the famous letter of Innocent III to the faithful of the Church of Metz: “Indeed, the hidden mysteries of the faith ... are to be sunt non mox laudati Innocentii III solum, sed et Pii IV, Clementis VIII et Benedicti XIV Constitutiones. . . .¹ Sed quae sit Ecclesiae mens de Scripturae lectione atque interpretatione, noscat luculentissime fraternitas tua ex praeclara alterius praedecessoris Nostri Clementis XI Constitutione “Unigenitus”, qua illae doctrinae diserte improbantur, quibus utile ac necessarium asserebatur omni tempori, omni loco et omni personarum generi cognoscere mysteria sacrae Scripturae, cuius lectio esse pro omnibus adstruebatur, damnosumque esse christianum populum ab eadem retrahere, immo Christi os fidelibus obturari, cum ex ipsorum manibus Novum Testamentum abripiatur [cf. *2479–2485].

*2711¹ Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 18, no. 1 (R. Willems: CpChL 36 [1954]: 180_{25–29} / PL 35:1536).

discerned with sobriety”: *771]. But, noteworthy are the constitutions, not only of Innocent III, just mentioned, but also of Pius IV, Clement VIII, and Benedict XIV. . . .¹ But, what the mind of the Church is in regard to the reading and interpretation of Scripture, Your Fraternity may know very clearly from the excellent constitution of another of Our predecessors, Clement XI, Unigenitus, in which those doctrines were thoroughly condemned in which it was asserted that it is useful and necessary to every age, to every place, to every type of person to know the mysteries of Sacred Scripture, the reading of which was to be open to all, and that it was harmful to withdraw Christian people from it, nay more, that the mouth of Christ was closed for the faithful when the New Testament was snatched from their hands [cf. *2479–2485].

2715: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, April 23, 1822

A similar response of the Sacred Penitentiary followed on February 1, 1823.

Ed.: T. Gousset (the one who had requested this response), Justification de la théologie morale du B. Alphonse de Liguori, 2nd ed. (Louvain, 1834), 215f.; ibid., 215, the other response mentioned above.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

2715 Qu.: Potestne pia uxor permittere, ut maritus suus ad eam accedat, postquam experientia ipsi constiterit eum more nefando Onan se gerere . . . , praesertim si uxor denegando se exponat periculo saevitiarum aut timeat, ne maritus ad meretrices accedat?

Question: Is it possible for a pious wife to permit her husband to approach her when she knows from experience that he conducts himself in the abominable manner of Onan . . . , especially if, by refusing, the wife exposes herself to the danger of violence or she fears the husband might have recourse to prostitutes?

Resp.: Cum in proposito casu mulier e sua quidem parte nihil contra naturam agat detque operam rei licitae, tota autem actus inordinatio ex viri malitia procedat, qui loco consummandi retrahit se et extra vas effundit, ideo si mulier post debitas admonitiones nihil proficiat, vir autem instet, minando verbera aut mortem aut alias graves saevitias, poterit ipsa (ut probati theologi docent) citra peccatum passive se praebere, cum in his rerum adiunctis ipsa viri sui peccatum simpliciter permittat idque ex gravi causa quae eam excuset; quoniam caritas, qua illud impedire teneretur, cum tanto incommodo non obligat.

Response: Since in the present case, the woman, for her part, indeed does nothing against nature and practices what is licit, the entire disorder of the act comes from the malice of the man, who, instead of consummating (the act), withdraws himself and ejaculates outside the vagina: if, therefore, after due admonitions, the wife achieves nothing, and the husband still insists, threatening beatings or death or other serious violence, the wife (as approved theologians teach) will be able to offer herself passively without sin since in these circumstances she is simply permitting the sin of her husband and for a grave reason, which excuses her; for charity, which would require her to prevent (the act), does not oblige her (if connected) with such harm.

2718: Brief Adorabile Eucharistiae to the Patriarch of Antioch and the Greek-Melkite Bishops, May 8, 1822

Ed.: CollLac 2:550d–551c.

The Inefficacy of the Epiclesis for Consecration

2718 [Non levis doloris et metus causa exstiterunt disseminantes] novam illam opinionem a schismaticis [A cause for no small pain and fear has been given by those spreading] that novel opinion propagated by hominibus propugnata qua docetur formam, qua vivificum hoc ... sacramentum perficitur, non in solis Iesu Christi verbis consistere, quibus sacerdotes tam Latini quam Graeci in consecratione utuntur, sed ad perfectam consummatamque consecrationem addi oportere eam precum formulam, quae memorata verba apud Nos praecurrit, in vestra autem liturgia subsequitur. ...

*2712¹ Pius IV, Dominici gregis custodiam, March 24, 1564 (cf. *1851–1861). Clement VIII, Sacrosanctum catholicae fidei, October 17, 1595 (BullLux 3:56b–57b): by which the rules of the Index of Pius IV were confirmed. —Benedict XIV, constitution Sollicita ac provida, July 9, 1753 (published in the Index librorum prohibitorum, 3rd ed. [Rome, 1911], 19–34 / BullLux 19:59a–63b / Benedict XIV, Bullarium, Mechelen ed., 10:237–54).

In virtute sanctae oboedientiae ... praecipimus ... ut non audeant deinceps ... tueri eam opinionem, quae tradit ad admirabilem illam conversionem totius substantiae panis in substantiam Corporis Christi, et totius substantiae vini in substantiam Sanguinis eius necesse esse, praeter Christi verba, eam etiam ecclesiasticam precum formulam recitare, quam saepe iam memoravimus. ...

schismatic men which teaches that the form in which this ... life-giving sacrament is accomplished does not consist in the sole words of Jesus Christ that the priests, whether Latin or Greek, use in the consecration, but that, for the consecration's perfection and completion, it is necessary to add that prayer formula which for Us precedes the above-mentioned words but in your liturgy follows them. ...

In virtue of holy obedience ... We order ... that henceforth they do not dare ... uphold that opinion which teaches that, for the marvelous conversion of the entire substance of bread into the substance of Christ's body and the entire substance of wine into the substance of his blood, it is necessary to recite, beyond the words of Christ, also that ecclesiastical prayer formula which we have already frequently mentioned. ...

LEO XII: September 28, 1823–February 10, 1829

2720: Encyclical Ubi primum, May 5, 1824

Ed.: BullRCt 16:47a.

Indifferentism

[Secta quaedam] blandam pietatis et liberalitatis speciem prae se ferens tolerantismum (sic enim aiunt) seu indifferentismum profitetur atque extollit non modo in rebus civilibus, de quo non est Nobis sermo, verum etiam in religionis negotio, docens amplam unicuique libertatem a Deo factam esse, ut quae cuique secta iuxta suum privatum iudicium vel opinio ariserit, eam quisque sine salutis periculo amplecti vel adoptare valeat. [Contra hoc affertur Rm 16:17s.]

[A certain sect,] putting on airs of piety and liberality, 2720 professes (what they call) "tolerantism" or indifferentism and extols it not only in matters of politics, about which We are not speaking, but also in matters of religion. It teaches that God has given to every man a great freedom, so that man can embrace or adopt any sect or opinion that attracts him according to his own private judgment without any danger to his salvation. [Against this, Rom 16:17f. is quoted.]

PIUS VIII: March 31, 1829–November 30, 1830

2722–2724: Response of the Pope to the Bishop of Rennes, August 18, 1830

This deals with a response given to the Bishop of Rennes (France) in an audience.

Ed.: CollLac 6:681d–682b / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:62–63, no. 1393, III.

Usury

Expos.: [Dissentiunt confessarii] de lucro percepto ex pecunia negotiatoribus mutuo data, ut ea ditescant. De sensu Epistolae encyclicae "Vix pervenit" [cf. *2546–2550] acriter disputatur. Ex utraque parte momenta afferuntur ad tuendam eam, quam quisque amplexus est, sententiam, tali lucro faventem aut contrariam. Inde querelae, dissensiones, denegatio sacramentorum plerisque negotiatoribus isti ditescendi modo inhaerentibus, et innumera damna animarum.

Exposition: [The confessors have diverse opinions] 2722 concerning the profit received from money given as a loan to businessmen in order that they may be enriched thereby. There is bitter dispute over the meaning of the encyclical letter Vix pervenit [cf. *2546–2550]. On both sides arguments are produced to defend the opinion each one has embraced, either favorable to such profit or against it. Thence come quarrels, dissensions, denial of the sacraments to many businessmen engaging in that method of making money, and countless damage to souls.

2723 Ut animarum damnis occurrant, nonnulli confessarii mediam inter utramque sententiam viam se posse tenere arbitrantur. Si quis ipsos consulat de istiusmodi lucro, illum ab eo detertere conantur. Si paenitens perseveret in consilio pecuniam mutuo dandi negotiatoribus, et obiciat, sententiam tali mutuo faventem multos habere patronos et insuper non fuisse damnatam a Sancta Sede non semel ea de re consultata: tunc isti confessarii exigunt, ut paenitens promittat se filiali oboedientia obtemperaturum iudicio Summi Pontificis, si intercedat, qualecumque sit; nec, hac promissione obtenta, absolutionem denegant, quamvis probabiliorem credant opinionem contrariam tali mutuo.

Si paenitens non confiteatur de lucro ex pecunia sic mutuo data, et videatur in bona fide: isti confessarii, etiamsi aliunde noverint ab eo perceptum esse aut etiam nunc percipi istiusmodi lucrum, eum absolvunt, nulla ea de re interrogatione facta, quando timent, ne paenitens admonitus restituere aut a tali lucro abstinere recuset.

2724 Qu.: 1. Utrum possit horum posteriorum confessoriorum agendi rationem probare?

2. Utrum alios confessarios rigidiores ipsum adeuntes consulendi causa possit hortari, ut istorum agendi rationem sequantur, donec Sancta Sedes expressum ea de quaestione iudicium ferat?

Resp. Summi Pontificis: Ad 1. Non esse inquietandos.—Ad 2. Provisum in primo.

To meet this harm to souls, some confessors think they can hold a middle course between both opinions. If anyone consults them about gain of this sort, they try to dissuade him from it. If the penitent perseveres in his plan of giving money as a loan to businessmen and objects that an opinion favorable to such a loan has many patrons and, moreover, has not been condemned by the Holy See, although consulted on this more than once, then these confessors demand that the penitent promise to conform in filial obedience to the judgment of the holy pontiff whatever it may be, if he should intervene; and having obtained this promise, they do not deny them absolution, although they believe an opinion contrary to such a loan is more probable.

If a penitent does not confess the gain from money given as a loan and appears to be in good faith, these confessors, even if they know from other sources that gain of this sort has been taken by him and is even now being taken, they absolve him, making no interrogation about the matter, because they fear that the penitent, being advised to make restitution or to refrain from such profit, will refuse.

Questions: 1. May (the bishop) approve the manner of acting of these latter confessors?

2. When other more rigorous confessors come to him seeking counsel, may he exhort them to follow the manner of acting of these latter (confessors) until the Holy See expresses an explicit judgment on this matter?

Response of the supreme pontiff: To 1: They are not to be disturbed. — To 2: This is provided in the first.

GREGORY XVI: February 2, 1831–June 1, 1846

2725–2727: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary to the Archbishop of Besançon, July 5, 1831

This document affirms the theological legitimacy of probabilism as represented by Alphonsus Liguori in confrontation with more rigorous moral systems. In the second response, it should be noted that the judgment of the Holy See regarding the doctrine of one to be beatified is brought in view of the beatification. For that purpose, it is sufficient that the doctrine be “free of any theological censure” (sit immunis a quacumque theologica censura) (Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei beatificatione II, 28, § 2). This is the case with Alphonsus Liguori; cf. the decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites of May 18, 1803, in regard to the examination of his works as well as the bull of canonization, Sanctitas et doctrina, of May 26, 1839 (Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A. M. Bernasconi, 2:305a–309b), and the decree Inter eos qui of March 23, 1871, which bestows on him the title “Doctor of the Church”. Pius IX, Acta 1/V, 296–98; ibid., 296: “Moreover, he clarified obscure matters and resolved those that were uncertain, while he provided, between the entangled opinions of theologians, whether more lax or more rigorous, a sure path upon which directors of the Christian faithful could proceed unharmed” (Obscura insuper dilucidavit dubiaque declaravit, cum inter implexas theologorum sive laxiores sive rigidiores sententias tutam staverit viam, per quam Christifidelium moderatores inoffenso pede incedere possent).

Ed.: ASS 1 (1865/1866; 5th ed., 1872): 497f. / T. Gousset, Justification de la théologie morale du B. Alphonse de Liguori, 2nd ed. (Louvain, 1834), 196f.

The Authority of Alphonsus Liguori in Moral Matters

2725 Qu.: Ludovicus Franciscus Augustus card. de Rohan-Chabot, archiep. Vesuntionensis, doctrinae sapientiam et unitatem fovere nititur apud omnes dioecesis suae qui curam gerunt animarum; quorum nonnullis impugnan-

Question: Louis François Auguste Cardinal de Rohan-Chabot, Archbishop of Besançon, is seeking to foster wisdom and unity of doctrine among all within his diocese who have the care of souls; as some of these tibus tibus ac prohibentibus theologiam moralem B. Alphonsi M. a Ligorio tamquam laxam nimis, periculosam saluti et sanae morali contrariam, S. Paenitentiariae oraculum requirit suppliciter, ac ipsi unius theologiae professoris [scilicet Th. Gousset] sequentia dubia Proponit solvenda:

1. Utrum sacrae theologiae professor opiniones, quas in sua theologia morali profitetur B. Alphonsus a Ligorio, tuto sequi ac profiteri possit?

2. An sit inquietandus confessarius, qui omnes B. Alphonsi a Ligorio sequitur opiniones in praxi s. paenitentiae tribunalis, hac sola ratione, quod a Sede Apostolica nihil in operibus illius censura dignum repertum fuerit?

Confessarius, de quo in dubio, non legit opera B. Doctoris nisi ad cognoscendam accurate eius doctrinam, non perpendens momenta rationesve, quibus variae nituntur opiniones; sed existimat se tuto agere eo ipso quod doctrinam, quae nihil censura dignum continet, prudenter iudicare queat sanam esse, tutam nec ullatenus sanctitati evangelicae contrariam.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice 22. Iul. 1831):

Ad 1. Affirmative, quin tamen inde reprehendendi censeantur, qui opiniones ab aliis probatis auctoribus traditas sequuntur.

Ad 2. Negative, habita ratione mentis S. Sedis circa approbationem scriptorum Servorum Dei ad effectum canonizationis.

impugn and prohibit the moral theology of Blessed Alphonsus Liguori as too lax, dangerous to salvation, and contrary to right morality, he devoutly requests a judgment of the Sacred Penitentiary and submits to it the following questions of one professor of theology [namely, T. Gousset] for resolution:

1. May a professor of sacred theology safely hold and teach the opinions that Blessed Alphonsus Liguori teaches in his moral theology? 2726

2. Or should a confessor who follows all the opinions of Blessed Alphonsus Liguori in the practice of the tribunal of holy penance be disturbed for the sole reason that the Apostolic See has found nothing deserving of censure in his works? 2727

The confessor, in regard to what is in doubt, reads the works of the Blessed Doctor only to know his doctrine accurately, without weighing the sources or reasons that support these various opinions; but he judges that he conducts himself in a safe manner because he can reasonably judge that a doctrine that contains nothing worthy of censure would be safe and sound and in no way contrary to the holiness of the Gospel.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 22, 1831): To 1: Yes, yet those who follow the opinions handed down by other approved authors should not be considered blameworthy.

To 2: No, taking note of the reasoning of the Holy See regarding the writings of the servants of God in the process of canonization.

2730–2732: Encyclical Mirari vos arbitramur, August 15, 1832

This encyclical was brought about by Felicité de Lamennais, who, in the journal L'Avenir, which he founded in 1830, was spreading liberal ideas that Gregory XVI condemned as “indifferentism”. Lamennais and his journal, which he was thereupon forced to suspend, were not named. Lamennais at first submitted, but he later left the Church and defended his decision in the book Paroles d'un croyant (1834), in which he repeated his previous doctrines. Gregory XVI thereupon responded with another encyclical, Singulari nos, of June 25, 1834 (BullRCt 19:379a–381b / Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A.M. Bernasconi, 1:434), in which he also condemned the above-mentioned book.

Ed.: BullRCt 19:129a–131b / ASS 4 (1868; 5th ed., 1875): 341, 344f. / Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A.M. Bernasconi, 1 (Rome, 1901), 171b–173b.

Indifferentism and Rationalism

Alteram nunc persequimur causam malorum uberrimam, quibus affligari in praesens comploramus Ecclesiam, indifferentismum scilicet, seu pravam illam opinionem, ... qualibet fidei professione aeternam posse animae salutem comparari, si mores ad recti honestique normam exigantur... Atque ex hoc putidissimo indifferentismi fonte absurda illa fluit ac erronea sententia seu potius deliramentum, asserendam esse ac vindicandam cuilibet libertatem conscientiae.

Cui quidem pestilentissimo errori viam sternit plena illa atque immoderata libertas opinionum, quae in sacrae et civilis rei labem late grassatur, dictitantibus per

We now come to another important cause of the evils with which we regret to see the Church afflicted, namely, indifferentism, or that wrong opinion according to which ... man can attain the eternal salvation of his soul by any profession of faith, provided his moral conduct conforms to the norms of right and good... From this foulest source of indifferentism there flows the absurd and wrong view, or rather insanity, according to which freedom of conscience must be asserted and vindicated for everybody. 2730

Indeed, this absolutely pestilential error paves the way of that complete and unrestrained liberty of opinion which rages far and wide to the ruin of sacred and civil 2731

summam impudentiam nonnullis, aliquid ex ea commodi in religionem promanare. At “quae peior mors animae, quam libertas erroris?” inquebat Augustinus.¹...

2732 Eos imprimis affectu paterno complexi, qui ad sacras praesertim disciplinas et ad philosophicas quaestiones animum appulere, hortatores auctoresque iisdem sitis, ne solius ingenii sui viribus freti imprudenter a veritatis semita in viam abeant impiorum. Meminerint Deum esse sapientiae ducem emendatoremque sapientium [cf. Sap 7:15], ac fieri non posse, ut sine Deo Deum discamus, qui per Verbum docet homines scire Deum.¹

communities, whereas some still claim with the greatest impudence that some advantage to religion is gained from it. But “what worse death is there for the soul than the liberty of error?” (as) Augustine said.¹...

The first to be embraced with paternal affection are those who apply themselves to the sacred sciences and to philosophical studies. Exhort and encourage them so that they may not imprudently stray from the path of truth onto the way of the impious by trusting only in their own intellectual powers. Let them remember that God is the guide to wisdom and the director of the wise [cf. Wis 7:15] and that it is impossible to know God without God, who through the Word teaches men to know God.¹

2738–2740: Brief Dum acerbissimas, September 26, 1835

Georg Hermes, theology professor at Münster in Westfalen and at Bonn, who had attempted a theological adoption of Kant, was accused in Rome of “rationalism”. After his death (May 26, 1831), this brief condemned the following works: Philosophische Einleitung in die christkatholische Theologie (Münster, 1819) and Positive Einleitung in die christkatholische Theologie (Münster, 1829), as well as Christkatholische Dogmatik, ed. by J. H. Achterfeldt, 1 (Münster, 1834). These same works, along with parts 2 and 3 of Christkatholische Dogmatik (Münster, 1835), were once again prohibited by a decree of the Congregation of the Index on January 7, 1836 (AnP 2:1442f.). Cf. H. H. Schwedt, “Das römische Urteil über Georg Hermes (1775–1831): Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Inquisition im 19. Jahrhundert” (RömQ 37, supplemental issue, 1980), p. XVII, n. 2.

Ed.: Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A. M. Bernasconi, 2:85b–86b / ACColon 228–30.

The Errors of Georg Hermes

2738 [Theologi quidam] peregrinis ... improbandisque doctrinis sacra ipsi inficiunt studia et publicum etiam, si quod tenent in scholis et academiis, docendi magisterium profanare non dubitant, ipsumque, quod tueri se iactant, sacratissimum adulterare dignoscuntur fidei depositum.

Atque inter huiusmodi erroris magistros ex constanti et fere communi per Germaniam fama adnumeratur Georgius Hermes, utpote qui audacter a regio, quem universa traditio et sancti Patres in exponendis ac vindicandis fidei veritatibus tramitem stravere, deflectens, quin et superbe contemnens et damnans, tenebrosam ad errorem omnigenum viam molitur in dubio positivo tamquam basi omnis theologicae inquisitionis et in principio, quod statuit, rationem principem normam ac unicum medium esse, quo homo assequi possit supernaturalium veritatum cognitionem....

[Certain theologians] infect sacred studies with strange ... and condemnable doctrines, and they do not hesitate to profane even the public office of teaching that they hold, for example, in schools and academies and adulterate the most sacred deposit of faith itself, which they boast of defending.

Among the teachers of this sort of error, because of his constant and almost universal reputation throughout Germany, Georg Hermes is numbered as one who boldly left the royal path that universal tradition and the most holy Fathers have marked out in explaining and vindicating the truths of faith; nay, even haughtily despising and condemning it, he is now building a darksome way to error of all kinds on positive doubt as a basis for all theological inquiry and on the principle that states that reason is the chief norm and only medium whereby man can acquire knowledge of supernatural truths....

2739 [Iudicatum est, auctorem in suis] operibus contexere absurda et a doctrina catholicae Ecclesiae aliena; praesertim vero circa naturam fidei et credendorum regulam, circa sacram Scripturam, traditionem, revelationem et Ecclesiae magisterium, circa motiva credibilitatis, circa argumenta, queis existentia Dei

[It was decided that the author in his] works has included things absurd and foreign to the doctrine of the Catholic Church, but especially on the nature of faith and the rule of what is to be believed; on Sacred Scripture, tradition, revelation, and the Magisterium of the Church; on the motives of credibility; on the arguments by which

*2731 ¹ Augustine, letter 105 (formerly 166) to the Donatists, chap. 2, no. 10 (CSEL 34/II:602_{25f} / PL 33:400).

*2732 ¹ Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses IV, 11, no. 3 (ed. W. W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1857], 2:160 / = IV, 6, no. 3: PG 7:987Cf. / SC 100/II:442–44).

adstrui confirmarique consuevit, circa ipsius Dei essentiam, sanctitatem, iustitiam, libertatem, eiusdemque finem in operibus, quae a theologis vocantur ad extra, necnon circa gratiae necessitatem, eiusdemque ac donorum distributionem, retributionem praemiorum, et poenarum inflictionem, circa protoparentum statum, peccatum originale, ac hominis lapsi vires; eosdemque libros tamquam continentes doctrinas et propositiones respectue falsas, temerarias, captiosas, in scepticismum et indifferentismum inducentes, erroneas, scandalosas, in catholicas scholas iniurias, fidei divinae eversivas, haeresim sapientes ac alias ab Ecclesia damnatas, prohibendos et damnandos esse censuerunt.

the existence of God ordinarily is proved and confirmed; about the essence of God himself, of his sanctity, justice, and liberty, and his purpose in works that the theologians call “external”; and also about the necessity of grace and the distribution of it and of gifts; the recompense of rewards and the infliction of punishments; about the state of our first parents, original sin, and the powers of fallen man; and it was decreed that these same books must be prohibited and condemned because they contain 2740 doctrines and propositions that, according to the case, are false, rash, deceitful, leading toward indifferentism and skepticism; erroneous, scandalous, injurious to Catholic schools, subversive of divine faith, having the flavor of heresy and having been censured, condemned, and prohibited by the Church on other occasions.

2743: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Nice, January 17, 1838

Cf. the responses of the Sacred Penitentiary of September 16, 1830, August 14, 1831, November 11, 1831, February 11, 1832, and November 23, 1832; the response of the Holy Office was approved by the pope on August 31, 1831 (CollLac 6:677–86 / MigThC 16:1067–80).

Ed.: CollLac 6:689cd / MigThC 16:1083.

Usury

Qu. (9. Sept. 1837): An paenitentes, qui moderatum lucrum solo legis titulo ex mutuo dubia vel mala fide perceperunt, absolvi sacramentaliter possint, nullo imposito restitutionis onere, dummodo de patrato ob dubiam vel malam fidem peccato sincere doleant et filiali oboedientia parati sint stare mandatis S. Sedis?

Resp.: Affirmative, dummodo parati sint stare mandatis S. Sedis.

Question (September 9, 1837): Can penitents who 2743 have acquired a modest gain from a loan solely on the basis of legal title but in dubious or bad faith be sacramentally absolved without having the burden of restitution imposed, provided they are sincerely sorry for the sin committed in dubious or bad faith and are prepared with filial obedience to adhere to the commands of the Holy See?

Response: Yes, provided they are prepared to adhere to the commands of the Holy See.

2745–2746: Constitution In supremo apostolatus fastigio, December 3, 1839

From the time of Paul III (*1495), the popes pleaded for the universal human rights of the Indians and the Africans enslaved in Latin America. In this bull, in addition to Paul III, others are named: Urban VIII, letter Commissum nobis to the juridical delegate of the Apostolic Camera in Portugal, April 22, 1639 (BullCocq 6/II, 183f.); Benedict XIV, apostolic letter Immensa pastorum to the bishops of Brazil, December 20, 1741 (Benedict XIV, Bullarium [Mechelen], 1:1204–9; old ed., vol. 1, no. 38); Pius II, letter to the Bishop of Ruvo, October 7, 1462 (BarAE, at year 1462, no. 42).

Ed.: Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A. M. Bernasconi, 2:387a–388a / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:503–5, no. 891 / J. Margraf, Kirche und Sklaverei seit der Entdeckung Amerikas (Tübingen, 1865), 227–29.

Demand for the Abolition of Slavery

... Ad Nostram pastoralem sollicitudinem pertinere animadvertimus, ut fideles ab inhumano Nigritarum seu aliorum quorumcumque hominum mercatu avertere penitus studeamus.

... Fuerunt subinde ex ipso fidelium numero, qui sordidioris lucri cupidine turpiter obcaecati in dissitis remotisque terris Indos, Nigritas miserose alios in servitute redigere seu instituto ampliatoque commercio

... We consider it part of our pastoral solicitude to 2745
strive to avert the faithful completely from the inhuman trade in Blacks and all other groups of humans.

... At times, even among the faithful, there were some who, shamefully blinded by the desire of sordid gain, in remote and distant countries, did not hesitate to reduce to slavery Indians, Blacks, and other unfortunate peoples;

eorum qui captivi facti ab aliis fuerant, indignum horum facinus iuvare non dubitent.

Haud sane praetermiserunt plures gloriosae memoriae Romani Pontifices praecessores Nostri reprehendere graviter pro suo munere illorum rationem utpote spirituali ipsorum saluti noxiam et christiano nomini probrosam; ex qua etiam illud consequi pervidebant, ut infidelium gentes ad veram nostram religionem odio habendam magis magisque obfirmarentur. [Recoluntur documenta supra indicata.]

2746 Hae quidem praedecessorum Nostrorum sanctiones et curae profuerunt, Deo bene iuvante, non parum Indis aliisque praedictis a crudelitate invadentium seu mercatorum christianorum cupiditate tutandis, non ita tamen, ut Sancta haec Sedes de pleno suorum in id studiorum exitu laetari posset, cum immo commercium Nigritarum, etsi nonnulla ex parte imminutum, adhuc tamen a christianis pluribus exerceatur.

Quare Nos tantum huiusmodi probrum a cunctis christianorum finibus avertere cupientes ... auctoritate Apostolica omnes cuiuscumque condicionis christifideles admonemus et obtestamur in Domino vehementer, ne quis audeat in posterum Indos, Negritas, seu alios huiusmodi homines iniuste vexare aut spoliare suis bonis aut in servitutem redigere vel aliis talia in eos patrantibus auxilium aut favorem praestare seu exercere inhumanum illud commercium, quo Nigritae, tamquam si non homines sed pura putaque animantia forent, in servitutem utcumque redacti, sine ullo discrimine contra iustitiae et humanitatis iura emuntur, venduntur ac durissimis interdum laboribus exantlandis devoventur....

or else, by instituting or expanding the trading of those who had been captured by others, assisted others in their loathsome crime.

Certainly numerous Roman pontiffs of glorious memory, Our predecessors, did not fail, according to the duties of their office, to rebuke severely this way of acting as harmful to the spiritual salvation of those involved and a shame to the Christian name. They indeed foresaw that, as a consequence of such activity, unbelieving people would be more and more confirmed in their hatred of our true religion. [The above-mentioned documents are mentioned.]

Certainly these sanctions and provisions of Our predecessors availed in no small measure, with the help of God, to protect the Indians and the other peoples mentioned from the cruelties of the invaders and from the greed of Christian traders; but not so much that the Holy See could rejoice over the complete success of its efforts in this regard, since, on the contrary, the trading of Blacks, even if it has to some degree diminished, is still carried on by numerous Christians.

Therefore, desiring to remove such a great shame from all Christian regions... We, by apostolic authority, warn all faithful Christians of whatever condition and vigorously implore them in the Lord that henceforth no one shall dare to abuse unjustly Indians, Blacks, or other such peoples or despoil [them] of their possessions or reduce [them] to slavery. Nor are they to provide assistance and favor to others who commit such [acts] against them or engage in that inhuman traffic by which Blacks who, as if they were not humans but pure and simple animals, have been reduced to slavery by whatever means, without any distinction, and, contrary to the rights of justice and humanity, are bought, sold, and forced at times to endure the hardest labor....

2750: Response of the Sacred Congregation of Indulgences, July 28, 1840

Ed.: Decreta authentica S. Cgr. Indulgentiis sacrisque Reliquiis praepositae, ab a. 1668 ad a. 1882 (Regensburg, 1883), 250 (no. 283) / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:507, no. 904.

The Efficacy of the Indulgence for a Privileged Altar

2750 Qu.: Utrum per indulgentiam altari privilegiato adnexam intelligenda sit indulgentia plenaria animam statim liberans ab omnibus purgatorii poenis, an vero tantum indulgentia quaedam secundum divinae misericordiae beneplacitum applicanda?

Resp.: Per indulgentiam altari privilegiato adnexam, si spectetur mens concedentis et usus clavium potestatis, intelligendam esse indulgentiam plenariam, quae animam statim liberet ab omnibus purgatorii poenis; si vero spectetur applicationis effectus, intelligendam

Question: Should the indulgence attached to a privileged altar be understood as a plenary indulgence that immediately frees the soul from all the punishments of purgatory or rather only as an indulgence that is applied according to the good will of divine mercy?

Response: For the indulgence connected to a privileged altar, if one considers the intention of the one who grants (the indulgence) and the use of the power of the keys, it is to be understood as a plenary indulgence that will immediately free the soul from all esse indulgentiam, cuius mensura divinae misericordiae beneplacito et acceptioni respondet.

the punishments of purgatory; if, however, one considers the effect of the application, it is to be understood as an indulgence whose measure corresponds to the good will of and the acceptance by the divine mercy.

2751–2756: Theses Subscribed to by Louis-Eugène Bautain by Order of His Bishop, November 18, 1835, and September 8, 1840

Louis-Eugène-Marie Bautain, professor in Strasbourg and director of the episcopal seminary, was removed from his office by Le Pape de Trévern, Bishop of Strasbourg, because of fideism and traditionalism. On September 15, 1834, the bishop of Strasbourg issued a pastoral instruction (Avertissement) to his clergy. He replaced the six questions posed in a letter of April 30, 1834, to which Bautain was supposed to reply, with six theses of Catholic doctrine, which were signed on November 18, 1835, by Bautain and his circle at Strasbourg (e.g., H. de Bonnechose, A. Gratry). A letter to his bishop of September 21, 1837, in which Bautain explained his views, gave rise to new suspicions. He was threatened first of all with the condemnation of his work La Philosophie du christianisme (Strasbourg, 1835). In order to avoid this, on September 8, 1840, Bautain subscribed once again, in the presence of the coadjutor bishop, A. Räß, to six theses whose text differs only slightly from the theses of November 18, 1835. In order to obtain recognition of a religious community he had founded, Bautain eventually subscribed to a third formula on April 26, 1844 (text *2765–69), ordered by the Sacred Congregation of Bishops and Regulars. Theses 1 and 5 of the formulas of 1835 and 1840 were adopted by the Sacred Congregation of the Index in its process concerning Bonnetty.

Ed.: [Theses of 1835]: Katholik 59 (1836), supplement 1, p. XXV / E. de Régny, L'Abbé Bautain: Sa vie et ses oeuvres (Paris, 1884), 240f. / B. Gaudeau, Libellus fidei exhibens decreta dogmatica ... ad "Tractatum de fide" pertinentia (Paris, 1898), 127f. (nos. 525–30). —[Theses of 1840]: Katholik 79 (1841), supplement 1, pp. LVif. / I. Perrone, Praelectiones theologicae 9 (Louvain, 1843), 357f. n. (= Tractatus de locis theologicis, pt. III, sec. 1, c. 1, no. 39) / E. de Régny, cited above, 288f. / B. Gaudeau, cited above, 128f. (nos. 531–36; French); 121f. (nos. 512–17; Latin translation).

Theses on Faith and Reason against Fideism

[Thèses de 1835]

1. Le raisonnement peut prouver avec certitude l'existence de Dieu.—La foi, don du ciel, est postérieure à la révélation; elle ne peut donc pas convenablement être alléguée vis-à-vis d'un athée en preuve de l'existence de Dieu [cf. *2812].

2. La révélation mosaïque se prouve avec certitude par la tradition orale et écrite de la synagogue et du christianisme.

3. La preuve de la révélation chrétienne tirée des miracles de Jésus-Christ, sensible et frappante pour les témoins oculaires, n'a point perdu sa force avec son éclat vis-à-vis des générations subséquentes. Nous trouvons cette preuve dans la tradition orale et écrite

[Thèses de 1840]

1. Le raisonnement peut prouver avec certitude l'existence de Dieu et l'infinité de ses perfections.—La foi, don du ciel, suppose la révélation; elle ne peut donc pas convenablement être alléguée vis-à-vis d'un athée en preuve de l'existence de Dieu [cf. *2812].

2. La divinité de la révélation mosaïque se prouve avec certitude par la tradition orale et écrite de la synagogue et du christianisme.

3. La preuve tirée des miracles de Jésus-Christ, sensible et frappante pour les témoins oculaires, n'a point perdu sa force avec son éclat vis-à-vis des générations subséquentes. Nous trouvons cette preuve en toute certitude dans l'authenticité du Nouveau Testament, dans la

[Theses of 1835]

1. Reason can prove with certitude the existence of God.—Faith, a gift from heaven, is posterior to revelation: it cannot, therefore, appropriately be brought forward against an atheist as proof for the existence of God [cf. *2812].

2. The Mosaic revelation is proved with certitude by the oral and written tradition of the synagogue and of Christianity.

3. The proof of the Christian revelation drawn from the miracles of Jesus Christ, sensible and striking for the eyewitnesses, has lost none of its force with its brilliance with regard to subsequent generations. We find this proof in the oral and written tradition of all

[Theses of 1840]

1. Reason can prove with certitude the existence of God and the infinity of his perfections.—Faith, a gift from heaven, presupposes revelation; it cannot, therefore, appropriately be brought forward against an atheist as proof for the existence of God [cf. *2812].

2. The divinity of the Mosaic revelation is proved with certitude by the oral and written tradition of the synagogue and of Christianity.

3. Proof drawn from the miracles of Jesus Christ, sensible and striking for the eyewitnesses, has lost none of its force with its brilliance with regard to subsequent generations. We find this proof with all certitude in the authenticity of the New Testament, in the de tous les chrétiens. C'est par cette double tradition que nous devons la démontrer à ceux qui la rejettent ou qui, sans l'admettre encore, la désirent.

2751

2752

2753

tradition orale et écrite de tous les chrétiens. C'est par cette double tradition que nous devons la démontrer à l'incrédule qui la rejette ou à ceux qui, sans l'admettre encore, la désirent.

Christians. It is by this double tradition that we must demonstrate it to those who reject it or who, without yet admitting it, desire it.

oral and written tradition of all Christians. It is by this double tradition that we must demonstrate it to the unbeliever who rejects it or to those who, without yet admitting it, desire it.

2754 4. On n'a pas le droit d'attendre d'un incrédule qu'il admette la résurrection de notre divin Sauveur, avant de lui en avoir administré des preuves certaines; et ces preuves sont déduites de la même tradition par le raisonnement.

4. On n'a point le droit d'attendre d'un incrédule qu'il admette la résurrection de notre divin Sauveur, avant de lui en avoir administré des preuves certaines; et ces preuves sont déduites par le raisonnement.

4. One does not have the right to expect of an unbeliever that he admit the Resurrection of our divine Savior before having supplied him with certain proofs; and these proofs are deduced from the same tradition by reason.

4. One does not have the right to expect of an unbeliever that he admit the Resurrection of our divine Savior before having supplied him with certain proofs; and these proofs are deduced by reason.

2755 5. L'usage de la raison précède la foi, et y conduit l'homme par la révélation et la grâce [cf. *2813].

5. Sur ces questions diverses, la raison précède la foi et doit nous y conduire [cf. *2813].

5. The use of reason precedes faith and leads man to it by revelation and grace [cf. *2813].

5. In regard to these various questions, reason precedes faith and is to lead us to it [cf. *2813].

2756 6. La raison peut prouver avec certitude l'authenticité de la révélation faite aux Juifs par Moïse et aux chrétiens par Jésus-Christ.

6. Quelque faible et obscure que soit devenue la raison par le péché originel, il lui reste assez de clarté et de force pour nous guider avec certitude à l'existence de Dieu, à la révélation faite aux Juifs par Moïse, et aux chrétiens par notre adorable Homme-Dieu.

6. Reason can prove with certitude the authenticity of the revelation made to the Jews by Moses and to the Christians by Jesus Christ.

6. However weak and obscure reason became through original sin, there remained in it sufficient clarity and power to guide us with certitude to the existence of God, to the revelation made to the Jews by Moses and to Christians by our adorable Man-God.

2758–2760: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, June 8, 1842

This is directed to the bishop of Le Mans.

Ed.: J. B. Ferreres and A. Mondia, Compendium theologiae moralis, 17th ed., 2 (Barcelona, 1950), 710f. (nos. 1092f.) / F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (Rome, 1953), 86f. / J. P. Gury and R. Tummolo, Compendium theologiae moralis, 3rd ed., 2 (Naples, 1925), 529 (no. 895). —Cf. *2715.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

2758 Qu.: 1) An coniuges, qui matrimonio eo utuntur modo, ut conceptionem praecaveant, actum per se moraliter malum exercent?

Questions: 1. Are spouses who engage in the marital act in a manner to prevent conception doing something intrinsically evil?

2759 2) Si actus habendus sit ut moraliter malus, an coniuges de illo se non accusantes considerari possint tamquam in ea constituti bona fide, quae eos a gravi culpa excuset?

2. If the act must be thought of as morally evil, can spouses who do not accuse themselves in this regard be considered as remaining in the good faith that excuses them from serious fault?

2760 3) An probanda sit agendi ratio confessoriorum, qui, ne coniugatos offendant, illos circa modum, quo iuribus matrimonii utuntur, non interrogant?

3. Should the conduct of confessors be approved who, in order not to offend the spouses, do not interrogate them in regard to the manner in which they exercise their marital rights?

Resp.: Ad 1) Cum tota actus deordinatio ex viri malitia procedat, qui, loco consummandi, retrahit se et extra vas effundit: ideo si mulier post debitas admonitiones nihil proficiat, vir autem instet minando verbera aut mortem, poterit ipsa, ut probati theologi docent, citra peccatum simpliciter permittere, idque ex gravi causa, quae eam excusat; quoniam caritas, qua illud impedire tenetur, cum tanto incommodo non obligat.

Ad 2 et 3) . . . confessarius revocet in mentem adagium illud: sancta sancte esse tractanda; atque etiam verba perpendat S. Alphonsi de Liguorio, viri docti et harum rerum peritissimi, qui in Praxi confessariorum, [cap. I] § IV n. 41, inquit: “Circa autem peccata coniugum respectu ad debitum coniugale, ordinarie loquendo, confessarius non tenetur nec decet interrogare nisi uxores, an illud reddiderint, modestiori modo quo possit. . . . De aliis taceat, nisi interrogatus fuerit”. Necnon alios probatos auctores consulere non omittat.

Response: To 1. Since the entire disorder comes from the malice of the man who, at the time of consummation, withdraws himself and ejaculates outside of the vagina, it follows that, if the woman, after due admonitions, is able to accomplish nothing and the man insists, threatening beatings or death, she can, as approved theologians teach, simply permit the act with no sin, since, in this case, a serious reason excuses her; because charity, through which she is bound to impede such an act, does not oblige her (when she is faced) with such great peril.

To: 2. and 3. . . . A confessor should keep this adage in mind: Holy things must be treated in a holy way; and, likewise, he should weigh carefully the words of St. Alphonsus Liguori, a learned man and most expert in such matters, who says in his Praxi confessariorum [chap. I], § IV, no. 41: “Concerning the sins of spouses in regard to the conjugal duty, ordinarily speaking, the confessor is not bound nor is it proper for him to interrogate, unless the wives themselves bring it up, and then he may treat it in the most modest way possible. . . . Regarding other matters, let him keep silent unless he has been asked.” Also, the confessor should not fail to consult other approved authors.

2762–2763: Response of the Holy Office, September 14, 1842

Ed.: ACColon 232.

The Matter of Extreme Unction

Qu.: An in casu necessitatis parochus ad validitatem sacramenti extremae unctionis uti possit oleo a se benedicto?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice): Negative, ad formam Decreti [S. Officii] 13. Ian. 1611 [coram Paulo V]:

Propositio: Quod nempe sacramentum extremae unctionis oleo episcopali benedictione non consecrato ministrari valide possit:

Declaratio S. Officii: propositionem esse temerariam et errori proximam.

Question: May a parish priest, in case of necessity, for the validity of the sacrament of extreme unction, use oil blessed by himself? 2762

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff): No, in conformity to the version of the decree [of the Holy Office] of January 13, 1611 [in the presence of Paul V]:

Proposition: That the sacrament of extreme unction may be validly administered with oil not consecrated by an episcopal blessing: 2763

Declaration of the Holy Office: The proposition is rash and proximate to error.

2765–2769: Theses Subscribed to by Louis-Eugène Bautain by Order of the Sacred Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, April 26, 1844

Cf. *2751°.

Ed.: E. de Régný, L'Abbé Bautain: Sa Vie et ses oeuvres (Paris, 1884), 337f. / B. Gaudeau, Libellus fidei exhibens decreta dogmatica . . . ad "Tractatum de fide" pertinentia (Paris, 1898), 130 (nos. 537–40) (except *2769).

The Demonstrability of the Christian Religion and Its Indifference regarding Forms of Civil Government

Nous promettons pour aujourd'hui et pour l'avenir:
1. de ne jamais enseigner que, avec les seules lumières de la droite raison, abstraction faite de la révélation divine, on ne puisse donner une véritable démonstration de l'existence de Dieu;

We promise for today and for the future: 2765

1. never to teach that by the sole lights of natural reason, leaving aside divine revelation, one could not provide a genuine demonstration of the existence of God;

- 2766 2. qu'avec la raison seule on ne puisse démontrer la spiritualité et l'immortalité de l'âme, ou toute autre vérité purement naturelle, rationnelle ou morale;
- 2767 3. qu'avec la raison seule on ne puisse avoir la science des principes ou de la métaphysique, ainsi que des vérités qui en dépendent, comme science tout à fait distincte de la théologie surnaturelle qui se fonde sur la révélation divine;
- 2768 4. que la raison ne puisse acquérir une vraie et pleine certitude des motifs de crédibilité, c'est-à-dire de ces motifs qui rendent la révélation divine évidemment croyable, tels que sont spécialement les miracles et les prophéties, et particulièrement la résurrection de Jésus-Christ;
- 2769 5. que la religion chrétienne ne puisse s'adapter à toute forme légitime de gouvernement politique, tout en restant la même religion chrétienne et catholique, complètement indifférente à toutes les formes du régime politique, ne favorisant pas l'une plus que l'autre, et n'excluant aucune.
2. (never to teach) that by reason alone one could not demonstrate the spirituality and the immortality of the soul or any other purely natural truth, rational or moral;
3. (never to teach) that by reason alone one could not have knowledge of principles or of metaphysics, as well as the truths that depend on them, as knowledge entirely distinct from supernatural theology that is based on divine revelation;
4. (never to teach) that reason could not acquire a true and full certitude of the grounds of credibility, that is to say, of those grounds that render divine revelation clearly believable, among which are especially miracles and prophecies and in particular the Resurrection of Jesus Christ;
5. (never to teach) that the Christian religion could not adapt itself to any legitimate form of political government, while still remaining the same Christian and Catholic religion, completely indifferent to all forms of political rule, not favoring one more than another and not excluding any.

2771–2772: Encyclical Inter praecipuas machinationes, May 8, 1844

Ed.: ASS 9 (1876/1877): 621, 623f. / Gregory XVI, Acta, ed. by A. M. Bernasconi, 3:332f.

Translations of Sacred Scripture

- 2771 ... Neque denique ignoratis, quanta vel diligentia vel sapientia opus sit transferenda fideliter in aliam linguam eloquia Domini; ut nihil proinde facilius contingat, quam ut in eorundem versionibus per societates biblicas multiplicatis gravissimi ex tot interpretum vel imprudentia vel fraude inserantur errores; quos ipsa porro illarum multitudo et varietas diu occultat in perniciem multorum. Ipsarum tamen societatum parum aut nihil omnino interest, si homines Biblia illa vulgaribus sermonibus interpretata lecturi in alios potius quam alios errores dilabantur; dummodo assuescant paulatim ad liberum de Scripturarum sensu iudicium sibi met ipsis vindicandum, atque ad contemnendas traditiones divinas ex Patrum doctrina in Ecclesia catholica custoditas, ipsumque Ecclesiae magisterium repudiandum....
- ... Nor finally are you ignorant of the diligence and wisdom required to translate faithfully into another language the words of the Lord. In the many translations from the biblical societies, serious errors are easily inserted by the great number of translators, through either ignorance or deception. These errors, because of the very number and variety of these (translations), are long hidden to the detriment of many. It is of little or no concern at all to these societies themselves if men reading these Bibles translated into the vernacular fall into some errors rather than others, so long as they gradually become accustomed to claim for themselves a free judgment about the meaning of Scripture, to scorn divine traditions preserved by the Catholic Church on the basis of the teaching of the Fathers, and to repudiate the very Magisterium of the Church....
- 2772 Iis in regulis, quae a Patribus a Tridentina Synodo delectis conscriptae et a Pio IV [*1854] ... approbatae Indicique librorum prohibitorum praemissae sunt, generali sanctione statutum legitur, ut Biblia vulgari sermone edita non aliis permitterentur, nisi quibus illorum lectio ad fidei atque pietatis augmentum profutura iudicaretur. Huic eidem regulae nova subinde propter perseverantes haereticorum fraudes cautione constrictae ea demum auctoritate Benedicti XIV adiecta declaratio est, ut permissa porro habeatur lectio vulgarium versionum, quae ab Apostolica Sede approbatae, aut cum
- Therefore in the rules written by the Fathers chosen by the Council of Trent, approved by Pius IV [*1854], ... and placed in the Index of forbidden books, we read the statute of universal salvation declaring that vernacular Bibles are forbidden except to those for whom it is judged that the reading will contribute to the increase of faith and piety. To this rule, soon tightened with a new safeguard because of the continued deceptions of heretics, was finally added, by virtue of the authority of Benedict XIV, the declaration that henceforth (only) those vernacular translations may be read that have been approved by the Apostolic See or published with annotations taken from the holy Fathers of the Church or from learned and Catholic men.

annotationibus desumptis ex sanctis Ecclesiae Patribus vel ex doctis catholicisque viris editae fuerint.

PIUS IX: June 16, 1846–February 7, 1878

2775–2786: Encyclical Qui pluribus, November 9, 1846

Ed.: Pius IX, Acta (Rome, 1854), I/I, 6–13 / CollLac 6:83b–85d [*2775–2781]; 85a–c [*2782–2786] / ACColon 233–35 [*2775–2781 only].

The Errors of Rationalism

[Noscitis christiani nominis hostes docere] commentitia esse et hominum inventa sacrosancta nostrae religionis mysteria, catholicae Ecclesiae doctrinam humanae societatis bono et commodis adversari [cf. *2940], ac vel ipsum Christum et Deum eiurare non extimescant. Et quo facilius populis illudant atque incautos praesertim et imperitos decipiant et in errores secum abripiant, sibi unis prosperitatis vias notas esse comminiscuntur, sibi que philosophorum nomen arrogare non dubitant, perinde quasi philosophia, quae tota in naturae veritate investiganda versatur, ea respuere debeat, quae supremus et clementissimus ipse totius naturae auctor Deus singulari beneficio et misericordia hominibus manifestare est dignatus, ut veram ipsi felicitatem et salutem assequantur.

Hinc praepostero sane et fallacissimo argumentandi genere numquam desinunt humanae rationis vim et excellentiam appellare, extollere contra sanctissimam Christi fidem, atque audacissime blaterant, eam humanae refragari rationi [cf. *2906]. Quo certe nihil dementius, nihil magis impium, nihil contra ipsam rationem magis repugnans fingi vel excogitari potest. Etsi enim fides sit supra rationem, nulla tamen vera dissensio nullumque dissidium inter ipsas inveniri umquam potest, cum ambae ab uno eodemque immutabilis aeternaeque veritatis fonte, Deo optimo maximo, oriantur atque ita sibi mutuam opem ferant, ut recta ratio fidei veritatem demonstrat, tueatur, defendat; fides vero rationem ab omnibus erroribus liberet eamque divinarum rerum cognitione mirifice illustret, confirmet atque perficiat.

Neque minore certe fallacia, Venerabiles Fratres, isti divinae revelationis inimici humanum progressum summis laudibus efferentes in catholicam religionem temerario plane ac sacrilego ausu illum inducere vellent, perinde ac si ipsa religio non Dei, sed hominum opus esset aut philosophicum aliquod inventum, quod humanis modis perfici queat [cf. *2905].

[You know that the enemies of the name Christian teach] that the most holy mysteries of our religion are the fictions and inventions of men; that the teaching of the Catholic Church is opposed to the good and to the advantage of human society [cf. *2940], and they do not fear even to abjure Christ and God. And, to delude the people more easily and to deceive especially the incautious and the inexperienced, and to drag them with themselves into error, they pretend that the ways to prosperity are known to them alone; and they do not hesitate to arrogate to themselves the name of philosophers, just as if philosophy, which is occupied wholly in investigating the truth of nature, ought to reject what God, the supreme and most clement author of all nature, deigned to manifest to men with singular kindness and mercy, in order that they might obtain true happiness and salvation. 2775

By a preposterous and most deceitful kind of argumentation, they never cease to invoke the power and excellence of human reason, to exalt it against the most sacred faith of Christ, and, what is more, they boldly prate that it {faith} contradicts human reason [cf. *2906]. Certainly, nothing more insane, nothing more impious, nothing more repugnant to reason itself can be imagined or thought of than this. For, even if faith is above reason, nevertheless, no true dissension or disagreement can ever be found between them, since both have their origin from one and the same source of immutable, eternal truth, the excellent and great God, and they mutually help one another so much that right reason demonstrates, protects, and defends the truth of faith; but faith frees reason from all errors and, by a knowledge of divine things, wonderfully elucidates it, confirms, and perfects it. 2776

And with no less deceit certainly, venerable Brothers, those enemies of divine revelation, exalting human progress with the highest praise, with a rash and sacrilegious daring would wish to introduce it into the Catholic religion, just as if precisely this religion were the work, not of God, but of men or were some philosophical discovery that could be perfected by human means [cf. *2905]. 2777

In istos tam misere delirantes percommode quidem cadit, quod Tertullianus sui temporis philosophis merito exprobrabat: “qui stoicum et platonicum et dialecticum Christianismum protulerunt”.¹ Et sane cum sanctissima nostra religio non ab humana ratione fuerit inventa, sed a Deo hominibus clementissime patefacta, tum quisque vel facile intelligit, religionem ipsam ex eiusdem Dei loquentis auctoritate omnem suam vim acquirere neque ab humana ratione deduci aut perfici umquam posse.

To these miserably deranged men applies very suitably, indeed, the reproach Tertullian rightly made to the philosophers of his own time, “who have produced a stoic and platonic and dialectic Christianity”.¹ And since, indeed, our most holy religion has not been invented by human reason but has been mercifully disclosed to men by God, thus everyone easily understands that religion itself acquires all its force from the authority of the same God who speaks and (that it) cannot ever be deduced from or perfected by human reason.

The Correct Attitude of Human Reason toward the Faith

2778 Humana quidem ratio, ne in tanti momenti negotio decipiatur et erret, divinae revelationis factum diligenter inquirat oportet, ut certo sibi constet, Deum esse locutum, ac eidem, quemadmodum sapientissime docet Apostolus, “rationabile obsequium” exhibeat [Rm 12:1]. Quis enim ignorat vel ignorare potest, omnem Deo loquenti fidem esse habendam, nihilque rationi ipsi magis consentaneum esse, quam iis acquiescere firmiterque adhaerere, quae a Deo, qui nec falli nec fallere potest, revelata esse constiterit?

Indeed, human reason, lest it be deceived and err in a matter of so great importance, ought to investigate diligently the fact of divine revelation so that it can know with certainty that God has spoken and so render to him, as the apostle so wisely teaches, “a rational obedience” [Rom 12:1]. For who does not know or cannot know that all faith is to be given to God who speaks and that nothing is more suitable to reason itself than to acquiesce and firmly adhere to what it has determined to be revealed by God, who can neither deceive nor be deceived?

2779 [Motiva credibilitatis religionis christianae] Sed quam multa, quam mira, quam splendida praesto sunt argumenta, quibus humana ratio luculentissime evinci omnino debet, divinam esse Christi religionem et “omne dogmatum nostrorum principium radicem desuper ex caelorum Domino accepisse”,¹ ac propterea nihil fide nostra certius, nihil securius, nihil sanctius exstare, et quod firmioribus imitatur principiis.

[Reasons for the credibility of the Christian religion] But, how many, how wonderful, how splendid are the proofs at hand by which human reason ought to be entirely and most clearly convinced that the religion of Christ is divine, and that “every principle of our dogmas has received its root from above, from the Lord of the heavens”,¹ and that, therefore, nothing is more certain than our faith, nothing more secure, nothing more holy, and nothing based on firmer principles.

Haec scilicet fides vitae magistra, salutis index, vitiorum omnium expultrix ac virtutum foecunda parens et alitrix, divini sui auctoris et consummatoris Christi Iesu nativitate, vita, morte, resurrectione, sapientia, prodigiis, vaticinationibus confirmata, supernae doctrinae luce undique refulgens ac coelestium divitiarum ditata thesauris, tot prophetarum praedictionibus, tot miraculorum splendore, tot martyrum constantia, tot Sanctorum gloria vel maxime clara et insignis, salutare proferens Christi leges, ac maiores in dies ex crudelissimis ipsis persecutionibus vires acquirens, universum orbem terra marique, a solis ortu usque ad occasum, uno Crucis vexillo pervasit, atque idolorum profligata fallacia, errorum depulsa caligine triumphatisque cuiusque generis hostibus, omnes populos, gentes, nationes, utcumque immanitate barbaras ac indole, moribus, legibus, institutes diversas, divinae cognitionis lumine illustravit, atque suavissimo ipsius Christi iugo subiecit,

For, in truth, this faith is the teacher of life, the guide to salvation, expelling all faults, and in fruitfulness giving birth to and nurturing the virtues, confirmed by the birth, life, death, Resurrection, wisdom, miracles, and prophecies of its divine author and consummator, Christ Jesus; everywhere resplendent with the light of a supernatural teaching and enriched with the treasures of heavenly riches, brilliant and preeminent in the highest degree through the predictions of so many prophets, the splendor of so many miracles, the constancy of so many martyrs, the glory of so many saints, revealing the salutary laws of Christ and acquiring greater strength every day from these most cruel persecutions, (this faith) has pervaded the whole earth, land and sea, from the rising to the setting of the sun, under the one standard of the Cross, and also, having overcome the deceits of idols and torn away the mist of errors and triumphed over enemies of every kind, it has illuminated with the light annuntians omnibus pacem, annuntians bona [cf. Is 52:7]. Quae certe omnia tanto divinae sapientiae ac potentiae fulgore undique collucent, ut cuiusque mens et cogitatio vel facile intelligat, christianam fidem Dei opus esse.

*2777¹ Tertullian, De praescriptione haereticorum 7, 11 (R. F. Refoulé: CpChL 1 [1954]: 193_{36f} / CSEL 70:10_{37f} / PL 2 [1879]: 23f.).

*2779¹ John Chrysostom, Interpretatio in Isaiam 1, no. 1 (J. Dumortier: SC 304 [1983]: 46₆₆₋₆₈ / PG 56:14D).

[Obligatio credendi] Itaque humana ratio ex splendidissimis hisce aequae ac firmissimis argumentis clare aperteque cognoscens, Deum eiusdem fidei auctorem existere, ulterius progredi nequit, sed quavis difficultate ac dubitatione penitus abiecta atque remota, omne eidem fidei obsequium praebeat oportet; cum pro certo habeat, a Deo traditum esse, quicquid fides ipsa hominibus credendum et agendum proponit.

The Infallibility of the Pope

Atque hinc plane apparet, in quanto errore illi etiam versentur, qui ratione abutentes ac Dei eloquia tamquam humanum opus existimantes, proprio arbitrio illa explicare, interpretari temere audent, cum Deus ipse vivam constituerit auctoritatem, quae verum legitimumque caelestis suae revelationis sensum doceret, constabiliret omnesque controversias in rebus fidei et morum infallibili iudicio dirimeret, ne fideles circumferantur omni vento doctrinae in nequitia hominum ad circumventionem erroris [cf. Eph 4:14].

Quae quidem viva et infallibilis auctoritas in ea tantum viget Ecclesia, quae a Christo Domino supra Petrum, totius Ecclesiae caput, principem et pastorem, cuius fidem numquam defecturam promisit, aedificata suos legitimos semper habet Pontifices sine intermissione ab ipso Petro ducentes originem, in eius cathedra collocatos et eiusdem etiam doctrinae, dignitatis, honoris ac potestatis heredes et vindices.

Et quoniam ubi Petrus, ibi Ecclesia,¹ ac Petrus per Romanum Pontificem loquitur et semper in suis successoribus vivit et iudicium exercet ac praestat quaerentibus fidei veritatem, idcirco divina eloquia eo plane sensu sunt accipienda, quem tenuit ac tenet haec Romana beatissimi Petri cathedra, quae, omnium Ecclesiarum mater et magistra [*1616], fidem a Christo Domino traditam, integram inviolatamque semper servavit eamque fideles edocuit, omnibus ostendens salutis semitam et incorruptae veritatis doctrinam.

of divine knowledge all peoples, races, nations, however savagely barbarous and diverse in disposition, customs, laws, and institutions; and has subjected them to the most sweet yoke of Christ himself, “announcing peace” to all, “announcing good” [Is 52:7]. All of this certainly shines in every way with so great a glory of divine wisdom and power that the mind and intelligence of each one clearly understands that the Christian faith is the work of God.

[Obligation of believing] And so, human reason, 2780 knowing clearly and distinctly from these most splendid and equally most strong proofs that God is the author of this faith, can proceed no farther; but, rejecting and dispelling every difficulty and doubt, it must render all obedience to this faith, since it holds as certain that all which faith itself proposes to men to be believed or to be done has been transmitted by God.

And hence the great error is fully evident of those 2781 others, too, who, misusing (their) reason and considering the words of God to be a human work, blindly dare to explain and interpret these (words) by their own judgment, while God himself has set up a living authority to establish and teach the true and legitimate meaning of his heavenly revelation and to judge infallibly all disputes that concern matters of faith and morals so that the faithful might not be carried into the snares of error by every wind of doctrine (that springs) from the evilness of men [cf. Eph 4:14].

Now this living infallible authority is active only in that Church which was built by Christ the Lord upon Peter, the head, leader, and shepherd of the entire Church, whose faith he promised would never fail and who always has legitimate pontiffs whose origin is derived in an unbroken line from Peter himself, who sit on his chair and are also the heirs and defenders of his teaching, rank, office, and power.

And since where Peter is, there is the Church,¹ and since Peter speaks through the Roman pontiff and always lives in his successors, exercises judgment, and manifests the truth of the faith to those who seek it; for that reason, the divine words should be received entirely according to the same sense as this Roman See of the most blessed Peter holds and has held, which, as mother and teacher of all the Churches [*1616], has always maintained whole and inviolate the faith transmitted by Christ the Lord and has taught it to the faithful, showing to all the way of salvation and the doctrine of untainted truth.

*2781 ¹ Ambrose of Milan, In Psalmos 40, no. 30 (CSEL 64:250₁₉ / PL 14 [1866]: 1134B).

Other Errors of This Time

- 2782 Iam vero probe noscitis, Venerabiles Fratres, alia errorum monstra et fraudes, quibus huius saeculi filii catholicam religionem et divinam Ecclesiae auctoritatem eiusque leges accerrime oppugnare et tum sacrae tum civilis potestatis iura conculcare conantur:
- But you already know well, venerable Brothers, the other enormous errors and deceits by which the sons of this world try most violently to attack the Catholic religion and the divine authority of the Church and her laws and to trample underfoot the rights both of the sacred and of the civil power.
- 2783 Huc spectant ... clandestinae illae sectae e tenebris ad rei tum sacrae tum publicae exitium et vastitatem emersae atque a Romanis Pontificibus decessoribus Nostri iterato anathemate damnatae suis Apostolicis Litteris,¹ quas Nos Apostolicae Nostrae potestatis plenitudine confirmamus....
- To these belong ... those secret sects who have come forth from the darkness for the destruction and devastation of both the sacred and the civil commonwealth and who have been condemned by the Roman pontiffs who preceded Us with repeated anathema in their apostolic letters,¹ which We now confirm with the fullness of Our apostolic power....
- 2784 Hoc volunt vaferrimae biblicae societates, quae veterem haeticorum artem renovantes divinarum scripturarum libros contra ss. Ecclesiae regulas vulgaribus quibusque linguis translatis ac perversis saepe explicationibus interpretates cuiusque generis hominibus etiam rudioribus gratuito impertiri, obtrudere non cessant, ut divina traditione, Patrum doctrina et catholicae Ecclesiae auctoritate reiecta, omnes eloquia Domini privato suo iudicio interpretentur eorumque sensum pervertant atque ita in maximos elabuntur errores. Quas societates ... Gregorius XVI ... reprobavit,¹ et nos pariter damnatas esse volumus.
- This is what the very devious Bible societies want that, renewing the old skill of the heretics, ceaselessly distribute, free of charge, (and) force on people of all kinds, even the uneducated, the books of the Holy Scriptures translated into all possible vernacular languages, against the rules of the most holy Church, and often interpreted with perverse commentaries, so that, rejecting divine tradition, the doctrine of the Fathers, and the authority of the Catholic Church, they all interpret the words of the Lord according to their own private judgment, pervert their meaning, and so fall into the greatest errors. Gregory XVI ... rejected¹ ... these societies, and it is Our will to condemn them likewise.
- 2785 Huc spectat horrendum ac vel ipsi naturali rationis lumini maxime repugnans de cuiuslibet religionis indifferentia systema [Indifferentismus], quo isti veteratores, omni virtutis et vitii, veritatis et erroris, honestatis et turpitudinis sublato discrimine, homines in cuiusvis religionis cultu aeternam salutem assequi posse comminiscuntur ... ,
- To these also belong the dreadful system of the lack of difference in any religion [Indifferentism], which is profoundly contrary even to the natural light of reason, by which these crafty men, after abolishing all distinction between virtue and vice, truth and error, honesty and turpitude, claim that men can gain eternal salvation in the practice of any religion....
- 2786 huc infanda ac vel ipsi naturali iuri maxime adversa de communismo, uti vocant, doctrina, qua semel admissa omnium iura, res, proprietates ac vel ipsa humana societas funditus everterentur.¹
- To these also (belongs) the execrable doctrine of Communism, as it is called, which is profoundly contrary even to the natural law itself (and) in which, if it were admitted, the rights, assets, and property of all, and even human society itself, would be completely overturned.¹

2791–2793: Decree of the Holy Office, May 21, 1851

Ed.: F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 105f. / CollLac 4:790ab / J.P. Gury and R. Tummolo, Compendium theologiae moralis, 3rd ed., 2 (Naples, 1925), 508f. (no. 893).

*2783¹ Clement XII, constitution In eminenti, April 28, 1738 (cf. *2511–2513); Benedict XIV, constitution Providas Romanorum, May 18, 1751; Pius VII, constitution Ecclesiam a Iesu, September 13, 1821; Leo XII, constitution Quo graviora, March 13, 1825.

*2784¹ Gregory XVI, encyclical Inter praecipuas, May 8, 1844 (cf. *2771).

*2786¹ This is the first mention of Communism in papal documents.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

Qu.: Qua nota digna sint tres propositiones sequentes:

1. Ob rationes honestas coniugibus uti licet matrimonio eo modo quo usus est Onan [Gn 38:8s].

2. Probabile est istum matrimonii usum non esse prohibitum iure naturali.

3. Numquam expedit interrogare de hac materia utriusque sexus coniuges, etiamsi prudenter timeatur, ne coniuges, sive vir sive uxor, abutantur matrimonio.

Resp.: Scandalosa, erronea et iuri naturali matrimonii contraria.

Ad 2. Scandalosa, et alias implicite condemnata ab Innocentio XI propos. 49 [*2149].

Ad 3. Propositio ut iacet, est falsa; nimis laxa et in praxi periculosa.

Question: What value should be given to the following 2791 three propositions?

1. For honest reasons it is licit for spouses to make use of Onan's manner of acting within marriage [Gen 38:8f.].

2. It is probable that this use of marriage is not 2792 prohibited by natural law.

3. It is never expedient to interrogate spouses of either 2793 sex on this matter, even if it may be prudently feared that the spouses, whether the husband or the wife, are making abusive use of marriage.

Response: To 1: ⟨It is⟩ scandalous, erroneous, and contrary to the natural law of marriage.

To 2: Scandalous and on another occasion condemned implicitly by Innocent XI, proposition 49 [*2149].

To 3: The proposition, as it is presented, is false, overly lax, and dangerous in practice.

2795: Response of the Holy Office, April 6 (19), 1853

Ed.: L'Ami du Clergé 20 (1898): 1077, no. III.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

Qu.: 1) An usus imperfectus matrimonii, sive onanistice sive condomistice (seu adhibito nefario instrumento vulgo “condom”) fiat, prout in casu, sit licitus?

2) An uxor sciens in congressu condomistico possit passive se praeberere?

Resp. (decreta 6., publicata 19. Apr.): Ad 1) Negative; est enim intrinsece malus.

Ad 2) Negative; daret enim operam rei intrinsece illicitae.

Questions: 1. Is the imperfect use of marriage licit, 2795 whether it happens by onanism or “condomistically” (that is, by using the abominable instrument commonly called “the condom”)?

2. Can the wife, aware of such “condomistic” union, yield herself passively?

Response (decree of April 6, published April 19, 1853): To 1. No, indeed, it is intrinsically evil.

To 2. No, she would indeed be engaging in an act that is intrinsically illicit.

2800–2804: Bull Ineffabilis Deus, December 8, 1854

On June 1, 1848, Pius IX established a theological commission to prepare a definition of the Immaculate Conception of Mary. On February 2, 1849, he sent the encyclical Ubi primum (Pius IX, Acta 1/1, 162–66) to the Catholic episcopacy asking for the bishops' opinion on the possibility of such a definition. The responses of the bishops were published in the work Pareri dell'Episcopato cattolico, di capitoli, di congregazioni, di università ... sulla definizione dogmatica dell'Immacolato Concepimento della B. V. Maria ..., 10 vols. (Rome, 1851–1854). Of the 603 bishops questioned, 546 were in favor of the definition. After the publication of their votes, Pius IX had several drafts of the bull composed (ed. by V. Sardi, La solenne definizione del dogma dell'Immacolato concepimento di Maria Santissima: Atti e documenti ... [Rome, 1904–1905], 2:22ff., 60ff., 76ff., 103ff., 125ff., 151ff., 177ff., 259ff.). For the final version of the bull, the pope himself exercised a decisive role.

Ed.: V. Sardi, La solenne definizione del dogma dell'Immacolato concepimento di Maria Santissima: Atti e documenti ... (Rome, 1904–1905), 2:301[= *2800f.]; 306f. [= *2802]; 312f. [= *2803f.] / CollLac 6:836a–c; 839b; 842cd / Pius IX, Acta 1/1, 597f.; 606f., 616.

The Excellence of the Blessed Virgin Mary in General

Ineffabilis Deus ... ab initio et ante saecula Unigenito Filio suo matrem, ex qua caro factus in beata temporum plenitudine nasceretur, elegit atque ordinavit, tantoque prae creaturis universis est prosecutus amore, ut in illa una sibi propensissima voluntate complacuerit. Quapropter illam longe ante omnes Angelicos Spiritus

God ineffable ... from the beginning and before the 2800 ages chose and ordained a mother for his only begotten Son, from whom he would become incarnate and be born in the blessed fullness of time. And God honored her above all other creatures with such love that in her alone he was pleased with a most singular benevolence.

cunctosque Sanctos caelestium omnium charismatum copia de thesauro divinitatis deprompta ita mirifice cumulavit, ut ipsa ab omni prorsus peccati labe semper libera ac tota pulchra et perfecta eam innocentiae et sanctitatis plenitudinem prae se ferret, qua maior sub Deo nullatenus intelligitur, et quam praeter Deum nemo assequi cogitando potest.

2801 Et quidem decebat omnino, ut perfectissimae sanctitatis splendoribus semper ornata fulgeret, ac vel ab ipsa originalis culpa labe plane immunis amplissimum de antiquo serpente triumphum referret tam venerabilis mater, cui Deus Pater unicum Filium suum quem de corde suo aequalem sibi genitum tamquam seipsum diligit, ita dare disposuit, ut naturaliter esset unus idemque communis Dei Patris et Virginis Filius, et quam ipse Filius substantialiter facere sibi matrem elegit, et de qua Spiritus Sanctus voluit et operatus est, ut conciperetur et nasceretur ille, de quo ipse procedit.

Therefore, he wonderfully filled her, far more than all the angels and saints, with an abundance of all the heavenly gifts taken from the treasury of his divinity. In this way, she, being always and absolutely free from every stain of sin, completely beautiful and perfect, would possess such a plenitude of innocence and sanctity that, under God, none greater could be known and, apart from God, no mind could ever succeed in comprehending.

And, indeed, it was altogether fitting that so venerable a mother, aglow with radiance, ever adorned with the splendors of a most perfect holiness and entirely immune from the stain of original sin, should have the most complete triumph over the ancient serpent. It was she to whom the Father willed to give his only Son, generated from his heart and equal to himself and whom he loves as himself. (And he wished to) give him in such a way that he would be, by nature, one and the same common Son of God the Father and of the Virgin. And as the Son himself actually chose her to be his mother, just so the Holy Spirit willed and ordained that she should conceive and give birth to the one from whom he himself proceeds.

The Homogenous Nature of Dogmatic Evolution

2802 Christi enim Ecclesia, sedula depositorum apud se dogmatum custos et vindex, nihil in his umquam permutat, nihil minuit, nihil addit, sed omni industria vetera fideliter sapienterque tractando si qua antiquitus informata sunt et Patrum fides sevit, ita limare, expolire studet, ut prisca illa caelestis doctrinae dogmata accipiant evidentiam, lucem, distinctionem, sed retineant plenitudinem, integritatem, proprietatem, ac in suo tantum genere crescant, in eodem scilicet dogmate, eodem sensu eademque sententia.¹

Indeed, the Church of Christ, watchful guardian and protector of the dogmas deposited within her, never changes anything, never diminishes anything, never adds anything to these, but with complete diligence, she faithfully and wisely draws upon those things shaped from antiquity and sown by the faith of the Fathers; and, in this way, she strives to refine and polish them so that these ancient dogmas of heavenly instruction may attain clarity, light, and precision, but they still retain their fullness, integrity, and proper character, and they grow according to their own nature, namely, within the same dogma and in the same sense and the same meaning.¹

Definition of the Immaculate Conception of Mary

2803 ...Ad honorem sanctae et individuae Trinitatis, ad decus et ornamentum Virginis Deiparae, ad exaltationem fidei catholicae et christianae religionis augmentum, auctoritate Domini nostri Iesu Christi, beatorum Apostolorum Petri et Pauli ac Nostra declaramus, pronuntiamus et definimus, doctrinam, quae tenet, beatissimam Virginem Mariam in primo instanti suae conceptionis fuisse singulari omnipotentis Dei gratia et privilegio, intuitu meritorum Christi Iesu Salvatoris humani generis,

... To the honor of the holy and undivided Trinity, to the glory and distinction of the Virgin Mother of God, for the exaltation of the Catholic faith and the increase of the Christian religion, by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul and Our (own),

We declare, pronounce, and define:

that the doctrine that maintains that the Most Blessed Virgin Mary, at the first instant of her conception, by the singular grace and privilege of almighty God and in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Savior of the *2802 ¹ Vincent of Lérins, Commonitorium primum 23 (R. Demeulenaere: CpChL 64 [1985]: 178_{11f.} / PL 50:668A).

ab omni originalis culpa labe praeservatam immunem, esse a Deo revelatam atque idcirco ab omnibus fidelibus firmiter constanterque credendam.

Quapropter si qui secus ac a Nobis definitum est, quod Deus avertat, praesumpserint corde sentire, ii noverint ac porro sciant, se proprio iudicio condemnatos, naufragium circa fidem passos esse et ab unitate Ecclesiae defecisse, ac praeterea facto ipso suo semet poenis a iure statutis subiicere, si, quod corde sentiunt, verbo aut scripto vel alio quovis externo modo significare ausi fuerint.

human race, was preserved immune from all stain of original sin, is revealed by God and, therefore, firmly and constantly to be believed by all the faithful.

Therefore, if any people (which God forbid!) will 2804 presume in their hearts to think otherwise than what has been defined by Us, let them henceforth know and understand that they are condemned by their own judgment, and they have made shipwreck of their faith and defected from the unity of the Church; moreover, if they should dare to express in words or in writings, or by any other outward means, these errors that they think in their hearts, they subject themselves ipso facto to the penalties established by law.

2811–2814: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Index, June 11 (15), 1855

Augustin Bonnetty maintained a moderate traditionalism: the natural powers of the human intellect were unable to recognize “God and his attributes; man, his origin, his end, and his duties; and the rules of civil and domestic society” (Dieu et ses attributs, l’homme, son origin, sa fin, ses devoirs, les règles de la société civile et de la société domestique) (Bonnetty, in Annales de Philosophie chrétienne, ser. 4, vol. 8 [1853]: 374. He was denounced in Rome by numerous French bishops and had to subscribe to the theses prepared by the Sacred Congregation of the Index (July 12, 1855); theses 1–3 are taken from earlier documents (Pius IX, Qui pluribus [*2775–2786]; Bautain [*2751–2756; 2765–2769]). Pius IX confirmed the decree on June 15, 1855.

Ed.: ASS 3 (1867; 5th ed., 1878): 224 / B. Gaudeau, Libellus fidei (Paris, 1898), 138f. (nos. 552–55).

Theses against the Traditionalism of Augustin Bonnetty

1. “Etsi fides sit supra rationem, nulla tamen vera dissensio, nullum dissidium inter ipsas inveniri umquam potest, cum ambae ab uno eodemque immutabili veritatis fonte, Deo optimo maximo, oriuntur atque ita sibi mutuam opem ferant” [*2776; cf. *3019].

2. Ratiocinatio Dei existentiam, animae spiritualitatem, hominis libertatem cum certitudine probare potest. Fides posterior est revelatione, proindeque ad probandam Dei existentiam contra atheum, ad probandam animae rationalis spiritualitatem ac libertatem contra naturalismi ac fatalismi sectatorem allegari convenienter nequit [cf. *2751, 2754].

3. Rationis usus fidem praecedit et ad eam hominem ope revelationis et gratiae conducit [cf. *2755].

4. Methodus, qua usi sunt divus Thomas, divus Bonaventura et alii post ipsos scholastici, non ad rationalismum ducit, neque causa fuit, cur apud scholas hodiernas philosophia in naturalismum et pantheismum impingeret Proinde non licet in crimen doctoribus et magistris illis vertere, quod methodum hanc, praesertim approbante vel saltem tacente Ecclesia, usurpaverint.

1. “Although faith is above reason, nevertheless 2811
no true dissension, no disagreement can ever be found between them, since both arise from the one same immutable source of truth, the most excellent and great God, and thus bring mutual help to each other” [*2776; cf. *3019].

2. Reason can prove with certitude the existence of 2812
God, the spirituality of the soul, the freedom of man. Faith is posterior to revelation, and hence it cannot properly be alleged to prove the existence of God to an atheist or to prove the spirituality and the freedom of the rational soul against a follower of naturalism and fatalism [cf. *2751; 2754].

3. The use of reason precedes faith and leads men to it 2813 by the help of revelation and of grace [cf. *2755].

4. The method that St. Thomas and St. Bonaventura 2814 and other Scholastics after them used does not lead to rationalism, nor has it been the reason why philosophy in today’s schools tends toward naturalism and pantheism. Therefore, it is not lawful to charge as a reproach against these doctors and teachers that they made use of this method, particularly (as they did so) with the approval or at least the tacit (acquiescence) of the Church.

2817–2820: Instruction of the Holy Office to the Apostolic Vicar of Siam, July 4, 1855

This is a response to questions posed to the Vatican by the Apostolic Vicar of Siam.

Ed.: ColIPF, 2nd ed., 1:594, no. 1114 / CdICF 4:205f. (no. 931).

On the Pauline Privilege

2817 ... Vetitum omnino est christianam nubere pagano; quod si, praevia dispensatione disparitatis cultus a S. Sede obtenta, quandoque eiusmodi matrimonium fieri contingat, notum est illud indissolubile futurum quoad vinculum, et solum aliquando quoad torum posse dissolvi... Numquam proinde, vivente viro illo infidele, licet concubinario, poterit christiana mulier secundas inire nuptias.

2818 Si vero agatur de uxore pagana alicuius pagani concubinari, quae convertitur, tunc facta interpellatione (ut supra), si renuat converti aut cohabitare absque iniuria Creatoris, ac proinde desinere a concubinato (qui sine iniuria Creatoris certe haberi nequit), poterit uti privilegio in favorem fidei concesso.

2819 Generatim, si coniugis conversio praecesserit matrimonium cum infideli, praevia dispensatione Apostolica initum, nullo modo illo frui potest privilegio in favorem fidei concesso; si vero matrimonium praecesserit conversionem, tunc pars conversa poterit uti eo privilegio, servatis servandis, prout dictum est.

2820 Animadvertendum est etiam, quoad impedimenta dirimentia, ignorantiam invincibilem aut bonam fidem haud sufficere, ut valide contrahatur matrimonium. Etsi quandoque (quod tamen raro credendum est in praxi) illa ignorantia et bona fides excusare valeat a peccato, tamen numquam efficere potest matrimonium validum, quod obice dirimente fuerit initum.

... In general, it is prohibited for a Christian to marry a pagan; if, however, after a dispensation of disparity of cult has been obtained from the Holy See, matrimony of this kind should take place, it is known that it will be indissoluble with respect to the bond, and it is only with respect to the marriage bed that it is dissoluble... Therefore, the Christian wife, while the infidel man lives, even if there is concubinage, may never enter into a second marriage.

If, however, it is a case of a pagan wife of a pagan man in concubinage and the wife converts, and after having made the request (as above), the man should then refuse to convert or to live together without injury to the Creator and, accordingly, to desist from concubinage (in which it is certainly not possible to live without injury to the Creator), she will then be able to make use of the privilege granted in favor of the faith.

In general, if the conversion of the spouse should precede marriage with an infidel, with a prior apostolic dispensation in place, in no way is the spouse able to enjoy that privilege granted in favor of the faith; if, however, the marriage precedes the conversion, then the converted party is able to enjoy that privilege, with the things preserved that must be preserved, just as it is said.

It is also necessary to consider, with regard to diriment (nullifying) impediments, that invincible ignorance or good faith do not suffice for contracting a valid marriage. And even if sometimes (though rarely to be considered the case in practice) such ignorance and good faith are sufficient to excuse from sin, nevertheless, they can never render a marriage valid that was entered into despite a diriment impediment.

2823–2825: Encyclical of the Holy Office to the Bishops, August 4, 1856

This is similar to the response of the Holy Office of July 26, 1899, on hypnotism: ASS 32 (1899/1900): 189f.

Ed.: ASS 1 (1865/1866; 5th ed., 1872): 177f. / CollLac 6:103ab / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:604, no. 1128.

The Misuse of Magnetism

2823 ... Nonnullae iam hac de re a Sancta Sede datae sunt responsiones ad peculiare casus, quibus reprobantur tamquam illicita illa experimenta, quae ad finem non naturalem, non honestum, non debitis mediis assequendum ordinantur; unde in similibus casibus decretum est feria IV, 21. Aprilis 1841: "Usum magnetismi, prout exponitur, non licere". Similiter quosdam libros eiusmodi errores pervicaciter disseminantes prohibendos censuit S. Congregatio.

... Some responses on this subject have already been given by the Holy See to particular cases in which those experiments are condemned as illicit that are arranged for a purpose (that is) not natural, not honest, and not attained by proper means; therefore, in similar cases it was decreed on Wednesday, April 21, 1841: "The use of magnetism, as it is explained, is not permitted." Similarly, the Sacred Congregation decreed that certain books stubbornly disseminating errors of this kind should be forbidden.

Verum quia praeter particulares casus de usu magnetismi generatim agendum erat, hinc per modum regulae sic statutum fuit feria IV, 28. Iulii 1847: “Remoto omni errore, sortilegio, explicita aut implicita daemonis invocatione, usus magnetismi, nempe merus actus adhibendi media physica aliunde licita, non est moraliter vetitus, dummodo non tendat ad finem illicitum, aut quomodolibet pravum. Applicatio autem principiorum et mediorum pure physicorum ad res et effectus vere supernaturales, ut physice explicentur, non est nisi deceptio omnino illicita et haereticalis.”

Quamquam generali hoc decreto satis explicetur licitudo aut illicitudo in usu aut abusu magnetismi, tamen adeo crevit hominum malitia, ut, neglecto licito studio scientiae, potius curiosa sectantes magna cum animarum iactura ipsiusque civilis societatis detrimento ariolandi divinandi principium quoddam se nactus gloriantur. Hinc somnambulismi et clarae intuitionis, uti vocant, praestigiis mulierculae illae, gesticulationibus non semper verecundis abreptae, se invisibilia quaeque conspicere effutiunt, ac de ipsa religione sermones instituere animas mortuorum evocare, responsa accipere, ignota ac longinqua detegere aliaque id genus superstitiosa exercere ausu temerario praesumunt, magnum quaestum sibi ac dominis suis divinando certo consecuturæ. In hisce omnibus quacumque demum utantur arte vel illusionem, cum ordinentur media physica ad effectus non naturales, reperitur deceptio omnino illicita et haereticalis et scandalum contra honestatem morum.

But because, aside from particular cases, the use of magnetism in general had to be considered, the following was thus determined on Wednesday, July 28, 1847, (to serve) as a rule: “When all error, soothsaying, explicit or implicit invocation of the demon is removed, the use of magnetism, i.e., the mere act of employing physical means otherwise licit, is not morally forbidden, provided it does not tend to an illicit end or to one that is in any manner perverse. However, the application of principles and purely physical means to things and effects truly supernatural, in order to explain them physically, is nothing but an altogether illicit and heretical deception.”

Although by this general decree the lawfulness or unlawfulness in the use or misuse of magnetism was satisfactorily explained, nevertheless the wickedness of men grew to such an extent that, neglecting the legitimate quest for knowledge, with great damage to their souls and detriment to civil society, they prefer to chase after strange things and boast that they have discovered a principle of soothsaying or divination. Thus, foolish women with the tricks of sleepwalking and clairvoyance, as they call it, carried away by gestures not always modest, proclaim that they see the invisible and dare in their rash venture even to start holding talks about religion, to evoke the souls of the dead, to receive answers, to reveal the unknown and the distant, and to practice other superstitious things of that sort, in order to acquire great gain for themselves and for their masters through reliable divination. Therefore, in all these, whatever art or illusion they employ, since physical means are used for unnatural effects, there is deception altogether illicit and heretical and a scandal against good morals.

2828–2831: Brief Eximiam tuam to the Archbishop of Cologne, June 15, 1857

On January 8, 1857, the Sacred Congregation of the Index decided to prohibit new works of Anton Günther. In a letter to Pius IX dated February 10, Günther “submitted in a sincere, religious, and praiseworthy manner” (ingenue, religiose ac laudabiliter se subiecit), as noted by the decree, which was issued only after the act of submission, on February 20, 1857. Günther did not publish any more works. Since the errors of Günther were rejected only in a general manner in this decree, his followers continued to uphold some of his statements. In this brief sent to Cardinal Johannes von Geißel, Pius IX lists the particular errors of Günther.

Ed.: ASS 8 (1874/1875): 446f. / ASyll 166f. / Pius IX, Acta 1/II, 587f. / ACColon 241.

The Errors of Anton Günther

... Etenim non sine dolore apprime noscimus, in iisdem operibus erroneum ac perniciosissimum et ab hac Apostolica Sede saepe damnatum rationalismi systema ampliter dominari; itemque noscimus, in iisdem libris ea inter alia non pauca legi, quae a catholica fide sinceraque explicatione de unitate divinae substantiae in tribus distinctis sempiternisque Personis non minimum aberrant.

In compertis pariter habemus, neque meliora neque accuratiora esse, quae traduntur de sacramento Verbi

... Not without sorrow We especially observe that in these books that erroneous and most pernicious system of rationalism, often condemned by this Apostolic See, is particularly dominant; and likewise We note that in the same books are found, among other things, much that is not a little at variance with the Catholic faith and with the genuine explanation of the unity of the divine substance in three distinct, eternal Persons.

Likewise, We have found that neither better nor more accurate is what is related about the mystery of the incarnati deque unitate divinae Verbi personae in duabus naturis divina et humana.

2824

2825

2828

Noscimus, iisdem libris laedi catholicam sententiam ac doctrinam de homine, qui corpore et anima ita absolvatur, ut anima eaque rationalis sit vera per se atque immediata corporis forma.

Neque ignoramus, ea iisdem libris doceri et statui, quae catholicae doctrinae de suprema Dei libertate a quavis necessitate soluta in rebus procreandis plane adversantur.

2829 Atque illud etiam vel maxime improbandum ac damnandum, quod Guentherianis libris humanae rationi et philosophiae, quae in religionis rebus non dominari, sed ancillari omnino debent, magisterii ius temere attribuitur, ac propterea omnia perturbentur, quae firmissima manere debent tum de distinctione inter scientiam et fidem, tum de perenni fidei immutabilitate, quae una semper atque eadem est, dum philosophia humanaeque disciplinae neque semper sibi constant neque sunt a multiplici errorum varietate immunes.

2830 Accedit, nec ea sanctos Patres reverentia haberi, quam conciliorum canones praescribunt quamque splendidissima Ecclesiae lumina omnino promerentur, nec ab iis in catholicas scholas dicteris abstineri, quae recolendae memoriae Pius VI decessor Noster solemniter damnavit [*2679].

2831 Neque silentio praeteribimus, in Guentherianis libris vel maxime violari sanam loquendi formam, ac si liceret verborum Apostoli Pauli oblivisci [2 Tim 1:13] aut horum, quae gravissime monuit Augustinus: “Nobis ad certam regulam loqui fas est, ne verborum licentia etiam de rebus, quae his significantur, impiam gignat opinionem.”¹

2833: Apostolic Letter Dolore haud mediocri to the Bishop of Breslau, April 30, 1860

This letter condemned a work written (but never published) by Canon Johann Baltzer, Promemoria de dualismo anthropologico, which repeats Günther's opinions.

Ed.: ASS 8 (1874): 444 / ASyll 179.

The Rational Soul as the Vital Principle of Man

2833 Notatum ... est, Baltzerum..., cum omnem controversiam ad hoc revocasset, sitne corpori vitae principium proprium, ab anima rationali re ipsa discretum, eo temeritatis progressum esse, ut oppositam sententiam et incarnate Word and about the unity of the Divine Person of the Word in two natures, divine and human.

We note that in these same books there is harm to the Catholic concept and teaching concerning man, who is so composed of body and soul that the soul, as indeed rational, is of itself the true and immediate form of the body.

And We are not unaware that in these books those teachings are taught and maintained that completely contradict the Catholic doctrine about the supreme liberty of God, free from any necessity whatsoever, in the creation of things.

And also disapproved and condemned most strongly (is the fact) that in Günther's books human reason and philosophy, which in religious matters should not dominate but rather remain completely subservient, rashly attribute to themselves the right of a master; and therefore all (those things) are disturbed which should remain most stable, not only concerning the distinction between science and faith, but also concerning the eternal immutability of faith, which is always one and the same, while philosophy and human studies do not always stay the same and are not exempt from a multiple variety of errors.

In addition, the holy Fathers are not held in that reverence which the canons of the councils prescribe and which these most splendid lights of the Catholic Church entirely deserve, nor does he refrain from sarcastic remarks against Catholic schools, which Our predecessor of cherished memory Pius VI solemnly condemned [*2679].

Nor shall We pass over in silence that in Günther's books “the sound form of speaking” is completely violated, as if it were permissible to forget the words of the apostle Paul [2 Tim 1:13] or those that Augustine most earnestly advised: “It is right for us to speak according to a fixed rule, lest liberty with words give birth to an impious opinion, even about the things that are signified by them.”¹

It was ... criticized that Baltzer ..., when he brought the whole controversy back to the point of whether there is a principle of life proper to the body distinct in itself from the rational soul, progressed to such a point appellaret haereticam et pro tali habendam esse multis verbis argueret.

¹*2831 Augustine, De civitate Dei X, 23 (B. Dombart and A. Kalb: CpChL 47 [1955]: 297₂₃₋₂₅ / CSEL 40/I:485₁₋₃ / PL 41:300).

Quod quidem non possumus non vehementer improbare, considerantes hanc sententiam, quae unum in homine ponit vitae principium, animam scilicet rationalem, a qua corpus quoque et motum et vitam omnem et sensum accipiat, in Dei Ecclesia esse communissimam atque Doctoribus plerisque, et probatissimis quidem maxime, cum Ecclesiae dogmate ita videri coniunctam, ut huius sit legitima solaque vera interpretatio, nec proinde sine errore in fide possit negari.

of temerity that he declared the opposite opinion to be heretical, and with many words he argued for such to be maintained.

This, however, we cannot fail to condemn vehemently, considering that the judgment that assumes there is one principle of life in man—namely, the rational soul, from which the body also receives its movement and all its life and feeling—is the most universal within the Church of God and that, for the majority of the Doctors, and especially those most approved, it is seen to be so joined with the dogma of the Church that it may be the only legitimate and true interpretation, and, consequently, it may not be denied without error in the faith.

2835–2839: Instruction of the Holy Office to the Apostolic Vicar of Zhejiang, August 1 (3), 1860

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:655, no. 1198.

The Disposition Required in the Subject of Baptism

Expos.: [Missionarius, consulere volens tam reverentiae sacramenti quam saluti aeternae infirmi iam morituri, confert] baptismum sub hac condicione: “si tu es vere dispositus”, expresse intendens se non baptizare sepositis bonis dispositionibus.

Qu.: Utrum talis modus conferendi baptismum licitus sit vel non?

Resp.: Explorata res est, tres in adulto requiri dispositiones ad baptismum rite suscipiendum: fidem nempe, paenitentiam et intentionem illum percipiendi. Fides profecto necessaria est qua adultus debet esse sufficienter instructus, iuxta propriae intelligentiae mensuram, de mysteriis christianae religionis, et ea firmiter credere; et necessaria item est paenitentia, qua debet peccata sua dolere et actum elicere vel contritionis vel attritionis; ac tertio necessario requiritur intentio seu voluntas suscipiendi hoc sacramentum, eaque deficiente non imprimatur in adulto baptismatis character.

At enim vero fides et paenitentia in adulto requiruntur, ut licite sacramentum suscipiat et fructum sacramenti consequatur; intentio vero necessaria est ad illud valide consequendum, adeo ut qui baptizatur adultus sine fide ac paenitentia illicite quidem, at valide baptizatur, et contra, qui baptizatur absque voluntate sacramentum suscipiendi nec licite nec valide baptizatur.

Hisce praemissis facile erit dignoscere, missionarium in proposito casu non bene se gessisse, quando baptismum administrans adulto moribundo, eodem calculo habuit dispositiones requisitas ad baptismum licite administrandum et eas quae ad illum valide

Exposition: [A missionary, wishing to reflect on both the reverence for the sacrament and the eternal salvation of the sick about to die, confers] baptism under this condition: “if you are truly disposed”, intending expressly not to baptize in the absence of good dispositions.

Question: Is such a mode of conferring baptism licit or not?

Response: It is certain that three dispositions are required of an adult in undertaking the baptismal rite: namely, faith, repentance, and that intention of receiving it. Faith is certainly necessary, in which the adult ought to be sufficiently instructed, according to the capacity of the individual intelligence, concerning the mysteries of the Christian religion, and the adult ought to believe firmly in them; and likewise repentance is necessary, in which he (the adult) ought to be sorry for his sins and bring forth an act of contrition or attrition; and thirdly, the intention or the desire of receiving this sacrament is necessarily required, and if this is lacking, the character of baptism is not imprinted upon the adult.

But certainly faith and repentance are required in an adult so that the sacrament may be received licitly and the fruit of the sacrament may be obtained; but the intention is necessary for obtaining it validly; indeed, an adult who is baptized without faith and repentance certainly is baptized illicitly but baptized validly, and, conversely, he (the adult) who is baptized without the desire of receiving the sacrament is baptized neither licitly nor validly.

Based on these premises, it will be easy to recognize that the missionary has not conducted himself well in the proposed case, when, in administering baptism to a dying adult, he gave the dispositions required for administering baptism licitly the same weight as those that are percipiendum necessario requiruntur. In dubio enim, utrum adultus morti proximus sufficienter instructus sit de fidei mysteriis et ea sufficienter crediderit, atque in dubio, utrum ipsum anteactae vitae sincere paeniteat, cum mortis necessitas urgeat, sacramentum absolute administrare ei debet absque ulla condicione. In dubio vero, utrum ipse vere intendat baptismum suscipere, si praevio diligenti examine de hac intentione adhuc dubitetur, baptismus conferri debet sub condicione: dummodo sit capax baptismi. . . .

2839 Praeterea nec bene se gessit missionarius, quando baptismum conferens sub condicione, intendit se non baptizare sepositis bonis dispositionibus in suscipiente baptismum: nam in casu missionarius debet tantum intendere se baptizare quatenus suscipiens sit capax baptismi, id est illum sincere percipere velit.

necessarily required for receiving it validly. Indeed, in case of doubt as to whether the adult close to death is sufficiently instructed in the mysteries of the faith and believes them sufficiently and in a case of doubt as to whether he sincerely repents of prior acts of his life, when the urgency of death demands it, the sacrament must be absolutely administered to him without any condition. But in a doubt as to whether he truly intends to receive baptism, if, on the basis of a prior diligent examination, this intention is still subject to doubt, the baptism ought to be administered conditionally: as long as he is capable of baptism. . . .

In addition, the missionary has not conducted himself well when, conferring baptism conditionally, he intends not to baptize if the good dispositions are lacking in the one who receives baptism: for, in (the present) case, the missionary must only intend to baptize insofar as the one receiving is capable of baptism, that is, sincerely wishes to receive it.

2841–2847: Decree of the Holy Office, September 18, 1861

The decree itself does not name the author of the propositions suspected of pantheism and ontologism. An indication is given in the decree of the Holy Office of March 2, 1866, which condemns not only traditionalist ideas but also those related to ontologism and traducianism of the Louvain professor Gerhard Casimir Ubaghs (ASS 3 [1867/1868]: 215–17); where, on p. 216, it reads: “[The cardinals] were obliged to recognize that in these books [that is, the “Theodicea” and, at times, the “Logica” of the above-mentioned Ubaghs] doctrines are advanced that are clearly similar to the seven propositions that . . . on September 18, 1861, the Congregation of the Holy Office decided could not, in any way, be safely taught” ([Cardinales] perspicere debuerunt, tradi in illis libris [scilicet Theodicea, interdum et Logica dicti Ubaghs] doctrinas plane similes aliquot ex septem propositionibus, quas . . . S. Officii Congregatio die 18 Sept. a 1861 haud tuto tradi posse iudicavit). In light of this decree, Flavien-Abel-Antoine Hugonin, before being named bishop of Bayeux, was obliged to retract similar opinions that he had brought forward in his Ontologie ou Étude des lois de la pensée, 2 vols. (Paris, 1856–1857).

Ed.: ASS 3 (1867/1868; 5th ed., 1878): 204f.

Errors of the Ontologists

Qu.: Utrum sequentes propositiones tuto tradi possint:

Question.: May the following propositions be safely taught?

- 2841 1. Immediata Dei cognitio, habitualis saltem, intellectui humano essentialis est, ita ut sine ea nihil cognoscere possit: siquidem est ipsum lumen intellectuale.
- 2842 2. Esse illud, quod in omnibus et sine quo nihil intelligimus, est esse divinum.
- 2843 3. Universalia a parte rei considerata a Deo realiter non distinguuntur.
- 2844 4. Congenita Dei tamquam entis simpliciter notitia omnem aliam cognitionem eminenti modo involvit, ita ut per eam omne ens, sub quocumque respectu cognoscibile est, implicite cognitum habeamus.
- 2845 5. Omnes aliae ideae non sunt nisi modificationes ideae, qua Deus tamquam ens simpliciter intelligitur.

1. The immediate knowledge of God, habitual at least, is essential to the human intellect, so much so that, without it, it (the intellect) can know nothing, since indeed it is itself the light of understanding.
2. That being which we know in all things and without which (we know) nothing is the divine being.
3. Universals, considered in their reality, are not really distinct from God.
4. The innate knowledge of God, as being clear and simple, includes, in an eminent way, all other knowledge, so that through it we have knowledge implicitly of all being, under whatever aspect it is knowable.
5. All other ideas are nothing else but modifications of the idea by which God, as clear and simple being, is known.

6. Res creatae sunt in Deo tamquam pars in toto, non quidem in toto formali, sed in toto infinito, simplicissimo, quod suas quasi partes absque ulla sui divisione et diminutione extra se ponit.

7. Creatio sic explicari potest: Deus ipso actu speciali, quo se intelligit et vult tamquam distinctum a determinata creatura, homine v. g., creaturam producit.

Censura S. Officii: Negative.

6. Created things are in God as a part in the whole, not indeed in the formal whole, but in the infinite whole, the most simple, which sets its parts, as it were, outside of itself without any division or diminution of itself. 2846

7. Creation can be explained in this way: God produces a creature by the same special act by which he knows himself and wills himself as distinct from a determined creature, for example, man. 2847

Judgment of the Holy Office: No.

2850–2861: Letter Gravissimas inter to the Archbishop of Munich-Freising, December 11, 1862

Various doctrines of Jakob Frohschammer (1821–1893), professor at the University of Munich, were condemned by the Sacred Congregation of the Index and by the pope himself in the letter quoted. Pius IX refers to: Einleitung in die Philosophie and Grundriss der Metaphysik (1858); Über die Freiheit der Wissenschaft (1861); Athenaeum (philosophical review, vols. 1–3, 1858–1862, published at Munich). Frohschammer refused to submit. His archbishop published this letter and divested him of his office (March 1863).

Ed.: ASS 8 (1874): 430–34 / ASyll 220–24 / Pius IX, Acta 1/III, 549–55 / Katholik 43/I (1863): 386–91.

Errors of Jakob Frohschammer on the Liberty of Science

[S. Congregatio Indicis iudicavit, auctorem] a catholica veritate aberrare. Atque id ex duplici praesertim parte, et primo quidem quod auctor tales humanae rationi tribuat vires, quae rationi ipsi minime competunt, secundo vero, quod eam omnia opinandi et quidquid semper audendi libertatem eidem rationi concedat, ut ipsius Ecclesiae iura, officium et auctoritas de medio omnino tollantur.

Namque auctor in primis edocet, philosophiam, si recta eius habeatur notio, posse non solum percipere et intelligere ea christiana dogmata, quae naturalis ratio cum fide habet communia (tamquam commune scilicet perceptionis obiectum), verum etiam ea, quae christianam religionem fidemque maxime et proprie efficiunt, ipsumque scilicet supernaturalem hominis finem et ea omnia, quae ad ipsum spectant, atque sacratissimum Dominicae Incarnationis mysterium ad humanae rationis et philosophiae provinciam pertinere, rationemque, dato hoc obiecto, suis propriis principiis scienter ad ea posse pervenire.

Etsi vero aliquam inter haec et illa dogmata distinctionem auctor inducat, et haec ultima minore iure rationi attribuat, tamen clare aperteque docet, etiam haec contineri inter illa, quae veram propriamque scientiae seu philosophiae materiam constituunt.

Quocirca ex eiusdem auctoris sententia concludi omnino possit ac debeat, rationem in abditissimis etiam divinae sapientiae ac bonitatis, immo etiam et liberae eius voluntatis mysteriis, licet posito revelationis obiecto, posse ex se ipsa, non iam ex divinae auctoritatis

[The Sacred Congregation of the Index has decided that the author] strays from Catholic truth. And this especially in two respects; the first, indeed, because the author attributes to human reason such powers that in no way belong to reason itself; and the second, because he grants to this same reason such liberty of judging all things and of always daring anything whatsoever that the rights, office, and authority of the Church herself are completely abolished. 2850

For the author teaches especially that philosophy, if one has a right notion of it, can perceive and understand not only those Christian dogmas that natural reason has in common with faith (that is, as a common object of perception), but also those that principally and properly constitute Christian religion and faith, namely, the supernatural end of man itself and all that is related to it; and also that the most holy mystery of the Incarnation of the Lord belongs to the province of human reasoning and philosophy; and that reason, when this object is presented (to it), can by its own proper principles arrive at those (dogmas) with understanding. 2851

But, even if the author makes some distinction between these (natural) and those (Christian) dogmas and attributes these latter to reason with less right, nevertheless, he clearly and openly teaches that these (Christian dogmas) are also included among those that constitute the true and proper matter of science or philosophy.

Accordingly, it can and must definitely be inferred from the opinion of this same author that, even in the deepest mysteries of divine wisdom and goodness, indeed, even in the mysteries of his free will, provided only the object of revelation be given, reason can of 2852 principio, sed ex naturalibus suis principiis et viribus ad scientiam seu certitudinem pervenire. Quae auctoris doctrina quam falsa sit et erronea, nemo est, qui . . . non illico videat. . . .

2853 Namque si isti philosophiae cultores vera ac sola rationis et philosophicae disciplinae tuerentur principia et iura, debitis certe laudibus essent prosequendi. Siquidem vera ac sana philosophia nobilissimum suum locum habet, cum eiusdem philosophiae sit, veritatem diligenter inquirere humanamque rationem, licet primi hominis culpa obtenebratam, nullo tamen modo extinctam, recte ac sedulo excolere, illustrare, eiusque cognitionis obiectum ac permultas veritates percipere, bene intelligere, promovere, earumque plurimas, uti Dei existentiam, naturam, attributa, quae etiam fides credenda proponit, per argumenta ex suis principiis petita demonstrare, vindicare, defendere, atque hoc modo viam munire ad haec dogmata fide rectius tenenda et ad illa etiam reconditoria dogmata, quae sola fide percipi primum possunt, ut illa aliquo modo a ratione intelligantur. Haec quidem agere atque in his versari debet severa et pulcherrima verae philosophiae scientia. . . .

2854 At vero in hoc gravissimo sane negotio tolerare numquam possumus, ut omnia temere permisceantur, utque ratio illas etiam res, quae ad fidem pertinent, occupet atque perturbet, cum certissimi omnibusque notissimi sint fines, ultra quos ratio numquam suo iure est progressa vel progredi potest. Atque ad huiusmodi dogmata ea omnia maxime et apertissime spectant, quae supernaturalem hominis elevationem ac supernaturale eius cum Deo commercium respiciunt atque ad hunc finem revelata noscuntur. Et sane cum haec dogmata sint supra naturam, idcirco naturali ratione ac naturalibus principiis attingi non possunt. Numquam siquidem ratio suis naturalibus principiis ad huiusmodi dogmata scienter tractanda effici potest idonea.

Quod si haec isti temere asseverare audeant, sciant, se certe non a quorumlibet doctorum opinione, sed a communi et numquam immutata Ecclesiae doctrina recedere.

2855 Ex divinis enim Litteris et sanctorum Patrum traditione constat, Dei quidem existentiam multasque alias veritates ab iis etiam, qui fidem nondum susceperunt, naturali rationis lumine cognosci [cf. Rm 1], sed illa reconditoria dogmata Deum solum manifestasse, dum notum facere voluit “mysterium, quod absconditum fuit a saeculis et generationibus” [Col 1:26]. . . .

itself, no longer on the principle of divine authority, but on its own natural principles and strength, reach understanding or certitude. There is no one . . . who does not see immediately how “false” and “erroneous” is this teaching of the author. . . .

For, if these worshippers of philosophy were protecting the true and sole principles and rights of reason and philosophic study, they should certainly be honored with merited praise. For true and sound philosophy has its own most noble position, since it is the task of such philosophy to search diligently into truth and to cultivate and enlighten rightly and carefully human reason, darkened as it is by the guilt of the first man but by no means extinguished; and to perceive, to understand well, and to advance the object of its cognition and many truths; to demonstrate, vindicate, and defend, by arguments sought from its own principles, many of those truths, such as the existence, nature, and attributes of God that faith also proposes for (our) belief; and, in this way, to prepare the way so that these dogmas might be more correctly held by faith and even (so that) those more hidden dogmas that can be perceived at first by faith alone may in some way be understood by reason. The exacting and most beautiful science of true philosophy ought, indeed, to do such things and to be occupied with them. . . .

However, we can never tolerate that in this assuredly very grave matter all things be rashly confused and that reason should also seize upon and disturb those things that pertain to faith, even though the limits beyond which reason in its own right has never advanced nor can advance are fixed and well known to all. To dogmas of this sort belong particularly and clearly all those that treat of the supernatural elevation of man and his supernatural fellowship with God and that are known to have been revealed for this purpose. And surely, since these dogmas are above nature, they cannot, therefore, be reached by natural reason and natural principles. For, indeed, reason by its own natural principles can never be made fit to treat such dogmas scientifically.

But, if those (men) dare to assert this rashly, let them know that they are withdrawing, not merely from the opinion of a few learned persons, but from the common and never-changing doctrine of the Church.

For, on the basis of the divine Scriptures and the tradition of the holy Fathers, it is in fact established that the existence of God and many other truths were known [cf. Rom 1] by the natural light of reason, even by those who had not yet received the faith, but that God alone revealed those more hidden dogmas since he wished to make known “the mystery hidden for ages and generations” [Col 1:26]. . . .

... Sancti Patres in Ecclesiae doctrina tradenda continenter distinguere curarunt rerum divinarum notionem, quae naturalis intelligentiae vi omnibus est communis, ab illarum rerum notitia, quae per Spiritum Sanctum fide suscipitur, et constanter docuerunt, per hanc ea nobis in Christo revelari mysteria, quae non solum humanam philosophiam, verum etiam angelicam naturalem intelligentiam transcendunt, quaeque etiam si divina revelatione innotuerint et ipsa fide fuerint suscepta, tamen sacro adhuc ipsius fidei velo tecta et obscura caligine obvoluta permanent, quamdiu in hac mortali vita peregrinamur a Domino.

Ex his omnibus patet, alienam omnino esse a catholicae Ecclesiae doctrina sententiam, qua idem Frohschammer asserere non dubitat, omnia indiscriminatim christianae religionis dogmata esse obiectum naturalis scientiae seu philosophiae, et humanam rationem historice tantum excultam, modo haec dogmata ipsi rationi tamquam obiectum proposita fuerint, posse ex suis naturalibus viribus et principio ad veram de omnibus etiam reconditioribus dogmatibus scientiam pervenire [cf. *2909].

Nunc vero in memoratis eiusdem auctoris scriptis alia dominatur sententia, quae catholicae Ecclesiae doctrinae ac sensui plane adversatur. Etenim eam philosophiae tribuit libertatem, quae non scientiae libertas, sed omnino reprobanda et intoleranda philosophiae licentia sit appellanda. Quadam enim distinctione inter philosophum et philosophiam facta, tribuit philosopho ius et officium se submittendi auctoritati, quam veram ipse probaverit, sed utrumque philosophiae ita denegat, ut, nulla doctrinae revelatae ratione habita, asserat, ipsam numquam debere ac posse auctoritati se submittere.

Quod esset tolerandum et forte admittendum, si haec dicerentur de iure tantum, quod habet philosophia, suis principiis seu methodo ac suis conclusionibus uti, sicut et aliae scientiae, ac si eius libertas consisteret in hoc suo iure utendo, ita ut nihil in se admitteret, quod non fuerit ab ipsa suis condicionibus acquisitum aut fuerit ipsi alienum.

Sed haec iusta philosophiae libertas suos limites noscere et experiri debet. Numquam enim non solum philosopho, verum etiam philosophiae licebit aut aliquid contrarium dicere iis, quae divina revelatio et Ecclesia docet, aut aliquid ex eisdem in dubium vocare propterea, quod non intelligit, aut iudicium non suscipere, quod Ecclesiae auctoritas de aliqua philosophiae conclusione, quae hucusque libera erat, proferre constituit.

... The holy Fathers, in transmitting the teaching of the Church, have constantly taken care to distinguish the knowledge of divine things that is common to all by the power of natural intelligence from the knowledge of those things that is received on faith through the Holy Spirit; and they have continuously taught that through this (faith) those mysteries are revealed to us in Christ that transcend not only human philosophy but even the natural intelligence of angels and that, although they are known through divine revelation and have been accepted by faith itself, nevertheless, remain still covered by the sacred veil of faith itself and wrapped in an obscuring mist as long as in this mortal life we travel as pilgrims far from the Lord. 2856

From all this, it is clear that that proposition is wholly foreign to the teaching of the Catholic Church by which the same Frohschammer does not hesitate to assert that all the dogmas of the Christian religion without distinction are the object of natural science or philosophy and that human reason, cultivated merely historically, can from its own natural powers and principle arrive at the true understanding concerning all—even the more hidden—dogmas, provided these dogmas have been proposed to reason itself as an object [cf. *2909]. 2857

But now, in the said writings of this author another opinion prevails that is plainly opposed to the teaching and understanding of the Catholic Church. For, he attributes a freedom to philosophy that must be called, not the freedom of science, but an utterly reprobate and intolerable license of philosophy. For, having made a distinction between philosopher and philosophy, he attributes to the “philosopher” the right and duty of submitting himself to the authority that he himself has approved as true, but he denies both (right and duty) to philosophy, so that taking no account of revealed doctrine he asserts that it (philosophy) ought never and can never submit itself to authority. 2858

And this would be tolerable and perhaps admissible if it were said only about the right that philosophy has to use its own principles or methods and its own conclusions, as also the other sciences (do), and if its liberty consisted in employing this right in such a way that it would admit nothing into itself that had not been acquired by it according to its own conditions or was foreign to it. 2859

But, such legitimate freedom of philosophy must recognize and observe its limitations. For, it will never be permitted either to a philosopher or to philosophy to say anything contrary to what divine revelation and the Church teaches or to call any of the same into doubt because (he or it) does not understand them or not to accept a judgment that the authority of the Church has decided to bring forward concerning some conclusion of philosophy that was hitherto free.

2860 Accedit etiam, ut idem auctor philosophiae libertatem seu potius effrenatam licentiam tam acriter tam temere propugnet, ut minime vereatur asserere, Ecclesiam non solum non debere in philosophiam umquam animadvertere, verum etiam debere ipsius philosophiae tolerare errores eique relinquere, ut ipsa se corrigat [cf. *2911], ex quo evenit, ut philosophi hanc philosophiae libertatem necessario participant atque ita etiam ipsi ab omni lege solvantur. . . .

2861 Quocirca Ecclesia ex potestate sibi a divino suo auctore commissa non solum ius, sed officium praesertim habet, non tolerandi, sed proscribendi ac damnandi omnes errores, si ita fidei integritas et animarum salus postulaverint, et omni philosopho, qui Ecclesiae filius esse velit, ac etiam philosophiae id officium incumbit, nihil umquam dicere contra ea, quae Ecclesia docet, et ea retractare, de quibus eos Ecclesia monuerit.

Sententiam autem, quae contrarium edocet, omnino erroneam et ipsi fidei, Ecclesiae eiusque auctoritati vel maxime iniuriosam esse edicimus et declaramus.

To this it is also added that the same author so insistently, so rashly advocates the liberty, or rather the unbridled license, of philosophy that he does not at all fear to assert that the Church not only ought never to criticize philosophy but should even tolerate the errors of philosophy itself and leave it to correct itself [cf. *2911], from which it happens that philosophers necessarily share in this liberty of philosophy and so even they themselves are released from all law. . . .

Therefore, the Church, by the power entrusted to her by her divine Founder, has not only the right, but particularly the duty of not tolerating but of proscribing and condemning all errors, if the integrity of faith and the salvation of souls so demand; and it is incumbent as a duty on every philosopher who wishes to be a son of the Church, and also on philosophy, never to say anything against what the Church teaches and to retract that about which the Church has warned them.

We proclaim and declare, however, that a view that teaches the contrary is entirely erroneous and to the highest degree harmful to faith itself, to the Church, and to her authority.

2865–2867: Encyclical Quanto conficiamur moerore to the Italian Bishops, August 10, 1863

Pius IX linked the principle “Extra Ecclesiam nulla salus” (outside the Church, there is no salvation; cf. *802, n. 1), which at that time was used against indifferentism, with the pardonable ground of “ignorantia invincibilis” (invincible ignorance). On the unqualified use of the principle, cf. *870 and 1351. Besides the following text, cf. *2479 and the discourse Singulari quadam of December 9, 1854 (Pius IX, Acta 1/I, 626 / ASyll 125 / CollLac 6:845d): “It must, by all means, be maintained from faith that outside of the apostolic Roman Church no one can be saved . . . ; but, nevertheless, it must equally be held as certain that those who suffer from the ignorance of the true religion, if this ignorance should be invincible, are not subject to blame in this matter before the eyes of the Lord” (Tenendum quippe ex fide est, extra Apostolicam Romanam Ecclesiam salvum fieri neminem posse . . . ; sed tamen pro certo pariter habendum est, qui verae religionis ignorantia laborent, si ea sit invincibilis, nulla ipsos obstringi huiusce rei culpa ante oculos Domini). This is touched on very briefly in the encyclical Singulari quidem to the Austrian bishops (Pius IX, Acta 1/II, 517 / ASyll 146). For a further clarification of this principle, see *3866.

Ed.: ASyll 229 / Pius IX, Acta 1/III, 613 / Katholik 43/II (1863): 260.

Indifferentism

2865 Iterum commemorare et reprehendere oportet gravissimum errorem, in quo nonnulli catholici misere versantur, qui homines in erroribus viventes et a vera fide atque a catholica unitate alienos ad aeternam vitam pervenire posse opinantur [cf. *2917]. Quod quidem catholicae doctrinae vel maxime adversatur.

2866 Notum Nobis vobisque est, eos, qui invincibili circa sanctissimam nostram religionem ignorantia laborant, quique naturalem legem eiusque praecepta in omnium cordibus a Deo insculpta sedulo servantes ac Deo oboedire parati, honestam rectamque vitam agunt, posse, divinae lucis et gratiae operante virtute, aeternam consequi vitam, cum Deus, qui omnium mentes, animos, cogitationes habitusque plane intuetur, scrutatur et noscit, pro summa sua bonitate et clementia minime patiatur, quempiam aeternis puniri suppliciiis, qui voluntariae culpae reatum non habeat.

It is necessary once more to mention and censure the very serious error into which some Catholics have unfortunately fallen. For they are of the opinion that men who live in errors, estranged from the true faith and Catholic unity, can attain eternal life [cf. *2917]. This is certainly altogether contrary to Catholic teaching.

We know as well as you that those who suffer from invincible ignorance with regard to our most holy religion, by carefully keeping the natural law and its precepts, which have been written by God in the hearts of all, by being disposed to obey God and to lead a virtuous and correct life, can, by the power of divine light and grace, attain eternal life. For God, who sees, examines, and knows completely the minds and souls, the thoughts and qualities of all, will not permit, in his infinite goodness and mercy, anyone who is not guilty of a voluntary fault to suffer eternal punishment.

Sed notissimum quoque est catholicum dogma, neminem scilicet extra catholicam Ecclesiam posse salvari, et contumaces adversus eiusdem Ecclesiae auctoritatem, definitiones, et ab ipsius Ecclesiae unitate atque a Petri successore Romano Pontifice, cui vineae custodia a Salvatore est commissa, pertinaciter divisos aeternam non posse obtinere salutem....

However, also well known is the Catholic dogma that no one can be saved outside the Catholic Church and that those who obstinately oppose the authority of the definitions of the Church and who stubbornly remain separated from the unity of this Church and from the Roman pontiff, the successor of Peter, to whom the Savior entrusted the care of his vineyard, cannot obtain salvation....

2867

2875–2880: Letter Tuas libenter to the Archbishop of Munich-Freising, December 21, 1863

Johannes Joseph Ignaz von Döllinger, professor in Munich, was one of the originators, in September 1863, of that city's "assembly of Catholic scholars". In accordance with doctrinal statements, he asked for freedom of research in theology. In this letter, Pius IX sets out guidelines for the treatment of theology.

Ed.: ASS 8 (1874): 438–41 / ASyll 244–47 / Pius IX, Acta 1/III, 638–43 / Katholik 44/I (1864): 259–63.

Submission to the Magisterium of the Church

Noscebamus ... nonnullos ex catholicis, qui severioribus disciplinis excolendis operam navant, humani ingenii viribus nimium fidentes errorum periculis haud fuisse absteritos, ne in asserenda fallaci et minime sincera scientiae libertate abriperentur ultra limites, quos praetergredi non sinit oboedientia debita erga magisterium Ecclesiae ad totius revelatae veritatis integritatem servandam divinitus institutum. Ex quo evenit, ut huiusmodi catholici misere decepti et iis saepe consentiant, qui contra huius Apostolicae Sedis ac Nostrarum Congregationum decreta declamant ac blaterant, ea liberum scientiae progressum impedire [cf. *2912], et periculo se exponunt sacra illa frangendi oboedientiae vincula, quibus ex Dei voluntate eidem Apostolicae huic obstringuntur Sedi, quae a Deo ipso veritatis magistra et vindex fuit constituta.

We have heard ... that some Catholics who diligently devote themselves to cultivating serious scholarship, trusting too much in the powers of the human mind (and) not at all deterred by the dangers of errors in asserting a false and in no way genuine liberty of science, have been carried outside the limits beyond which the obedience due to the teaching authority of the Church, divinely appointed to preserve the integrity of all revealed truth, does not permit them to proceed. Therefore, it happens that such Catholics, miserably deceived, often agree with those who decry and rant against the decrees of this Apostolic See and of Our congregations that these (decrees) hinder the free progress of science [cf. *2912]; and they expose themselves to the danger of breaking those sacred ties of obedience by which, according to the will of God, they are bound to this same Apostolic See, which has been appointed by God himself as the teacher and defender of truth.

2875

Neque ignorabamus, in Germania etiam falsam invaluisse opinionem adversus veterem scholam et adversus doctrinam summorum illorum Doctorum [cf. *2913], quos propter admirabilem eorum sapientiam et vitae sanctitatem universalis veneratur Ecclesia. Qua falsa opinione ipsius Ecclesiae auctoritas in discrimen vocatur, quandoquidem ipsa Ecclesia non solum per tota saecula permisit, ut ex eorumdem Doctorum methodo et ex principiis communi omnium catholicarum scholarum consensu sancitis theologica excoleretur scientia, verum etiam saepissime summis laudibus theologiam eorum doctrinam extulit illamque veluti fortissimum fidei propugnaculum et formidanda contra suos inimicos arma vehementer commendavit....

Nor are We unaware that in Germany also there prevailed a false opinion against the old school and against the teaching of those eminent Doctors [cf. *2913] whom the universal Church venerates because of their admirable wisdom and sanctity of life. By this false opinion the authority of the Church herself is called into doubt, especially since the Church herself not only, through so many continuous centuries, has permitted that theological science be cultivated according to the method of these same Doctors and according to principles established by the common consent of all Catholic schools, but she (the Church) also very often extolled their theological doctrine with the highest praises and emphatically recommended it as a most strong rampart of the faith and a formidable weapon against its enemies....

2876

Equidem cum omnes eiusdem conventus viri ... asseruerint, scientiarum progressum et felicem exitum in devitandis ac refutandis miserrimae nostrae aetatis erroribus omnino pendere ab intima erga veritates

Indeed, since all the men of this assembly ... have asserted that the progress of science and its happy success in avoiding and refuting the errors of our most wretched age depend entirely on a close adherence to revealed revelatas adhaesione, quas catholica docet Ecclesia, ipsi noverunt ac professi sunt illam veritatem, quam veri catholici scientiis excolendis et evolvendis dediti semper tenere ac tradiderunt. Atque hac veritate innixi potuerunt ipsi sapientes ac veri catholici viri scientias easdem tuto excolere, explanare easque utiles certasque reddere.

2877

Quod quidem obtineri non potest, si humanae rationis lumen finibus circumscriptum eas quoque veritates investigando, quas propriis viribus et facultatibus assequi potest, non veneretur maxime, ut par est, infallibile et increatum divini intellectus lumen, quod in christiana revelatione undique mirifice elucet. Quamvis enim naturales illae disciplinae suis propriis ratione cognitis principiis nitantur, catholici tamen earum cultores divinam revelationem veluti reatricem stellam prae oculis habeant oportet, qua praelucente sibi a syrtibus et erroribus caveant, ubi in suis investigationibus et commentationibus animadvertant posse se illis adduci, ut saepissime accidit, ad ea proferenda, quae plus minusve adversentur infallibili rerum veritati, quae a Deo revelatae fuere.

2878 Hinc dubitare nolumus, quin ipsius conventus viri commemoratam veritatem noscentes ac profitentes, uno eodemque tempore plane reicere ac reprobare voluerint recentem illam ac praeposteram philosophandi rationem, quae etiamsi divinam revelationem veluti historicum factum admittat, tamen ineffabiles veritates ab ipsa divina revelatione propositas humanae rationis investigationibus supponit, perinde ac si illae veritates rationi subiectae essent vel ratio suis viribus et principiis posset consequi intelligentiam et scientiam omnium supernarum sanctissimae fidei nostrae veritatum et mysteriorum, quae ita supra humanam rationem sunt, ut haec numquam effici possit idonea ad illa suis viribus et ex naturalibus suis principiis intelligenda aut demonstranda [cf. *2909].

2879 ... Persuadere Nobis volumus, noluisse obligationem, qua catholici magistri ac scriptores omnino adstringuntur, coarctare in iis tantum, quae ab infallibili Ecclesiae iudicio veluti fidei dogmata ab omnibus credenda proponuntur [cf. *2922]. Atque etiam Nobis persuademus, ipsos noluisse declarare, perfectam illam erga revelatas veritates adhaesionem, quam agnoverunt necessariam omnino esse ad verum scientiarum progressum assequendum et ad errores confutandos, obtineri posse, si dumtaxat dogmatibus ab Ecclesia expresse definitis fides et obsequium adhibeatur. Namque etiamsi ageretur de illa subiectione, quae fidei divinae actu est praestanda, limitanda tamen non esset ad ea, quae expressis oecumenicorum Conciliorum aut Romanorum Pontificum huiusque Apostolicae Sedis truths that the Catholic Church teaches, they themselves have recognized and professed that truth which true Catholics devoted to cultivating and setting forth knowledge have always held and handed down. And so, relying on this truth, these wise and truly Catholic men could cultivate these sciences in safety, explain them, and make them useful and certain.

This could not be achieved, though, if the light of human reason, circumscribed by limits even in investigating those truths also that it can attain by its own powers and faculties, did not venerate above all, as is just, the infallible and uncreated light of the divine intellect that shines forth wonderfully everywhere in Christian revelation. For, although those natural disciplines rely on their own proper principles, apprehended by reason, nevertheless, Catholics who cultivate (these disciplines) must have divine revelation before their eyes as a guiding star, so that with the help of its light, they may guard against shoals and errors, when they perceive in their investigations and deliberations that they could be led by them—as often happens—to bring forward what is more or less in conflict with the infallible truth of things that have been revealed by God.

Hence, We do not doubt that the men of this assembly, knowing and professing the truth mentioned above, have wished at one and the same time clearly to reject and repudiate that recent and preposterous method of philosophizing which, even if it admits divine revelation as a historical fact, nevertheless, submits the ineffable truths made known by divine revelation to the investigations of human reason; just as if those truths had been subject to reason or as if reason, by its own powers and principles, could attain understanding and knowledge of all the supernal truths and mysteries of our most holy faith, which are so far above human reason that it can never be made fit to understand or demonstrate them by its own powers and by its own natural principles [cf. *2909].

... We readily wish to accept that they did not wish to restrict the obligation by which Catholic teachers and authors are absolutely bound only to what the infallible judgment of the Church sets forth as dogmas of the faith to be believed by all [cf. *2922]. And We are likewise persuaded that they did not wish to declare that this perfect adherence to revealed truths, which they recognized as absolutely necessary to attain true progress in the sciences and to refute errors, could be obtained if faith and obedience were given only to dogmas expressly defined by the Church. For even if it were a matter of that submission which must be manifested by an act of divine faith, nevertheless, this would not have to be limited to those matters that have been defined by explicit decrees of ecumenical councils or by the Roman pontiffs and by decretis definita sunt, sed ad ea quoque extendenda, quae ordinario totius Ecclesiae per orbem dispersae magisterio tamquam divinitus revelata traduntur ideoque universali et constanti consensu a catholicis theologis ad fidem pertinere retinentur.

Sed cum agatur de illa subiectione, qua ex conscientia ii omnes catholici obstringuntur, qui in contemplatrices scientias incumbunt, ut novas suis scriptis Ecclesiae afferant utilitates, idcirco eiusdem conventus viri recognoscere debent, sapientibus catholicis haud satis esse, ut praefata Ecclesiae dogmata recipiant ac venerentur, verum etiam opus esse, ut se subiciant tum decisionibus, quae ad doctrinam pertinentes a Pontificiis Congregationibus proferuntur, tum iis doctrinae capitibus, quae communi et constanti Catholicorum consensu retinentur ut theologicae veritates et conclusiones ita certae, ut opiniones eisdem doctrinae capitibus adversae, quamquam haereticae dici nequeant, tamen aliam theologiam mereantur censuram.

this Apostolic See, but would also have to be extended to those matters transmitted as divinely revealed by the ordinary Magisterium of the whole Church dispersed throughout the world and, for that reason, held by the universal and constant consensus of Catholic theologians as belonging to the faith.

But, since it is a matter of that subjection by which 2880 in conscience all those Catholics are bound who work in the speculative sciences, in order that they may bring new advantages to the Church by their writings, on that account, then, the men of that same convention must recognize that it is not sufficient for learned Catholics to accept and revere the aforesaid dogmas of the Church, but that it is also necessary to subject themselves to the decisions pertaining to doctrine that are issued by the Pontifical Congregations and also to those points of doctrine that are held by the common and constant consent of Catholics as theological truths and conclusions, so certain that opinions opposed to these same forms of doctrine, although they cannot be called heretical, nevertheless deserve some other theological censure.

2885–2888: Letter of the Holy Office to the Bishops of England, September 16, 1864

This letter opposes the “branch theory” and prohibits Catholics from joining the “Association for the Promotion of the Reunion of Christendom”, which supported this theory. Initially, the English bishops had tolerated this.

Ed.: AAS 11 (1919): 310f. (published on the occasion of another decree, ibid., p. 309); ASS 2 (2nd ed., 1870; 5th ed., 1977): 658f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 1:696f., no. 1262.

The Unicity of the Church

[Societas ad procurandam christianitatis unitatem Londinii anno 1857 erecta] expresse profitetur, tres videlicet christianas communionem romano-catholicam, graeco-schismaticam et anglicanam, quamvis invicem separatas ac divisas, aequo tamen iure catholicum nomen sibi vindicare. Aditus igitur in illam patet omnibus ubique locorum degentibus tum catholicis, tum graeco-schismaticis, tum anglicanis, ea tamen lege, ut nemini liceat de variis doctrinae capitibus, in quibus dissentiunt, quaestionem movere, et singulis fas sit propriae religiosae confessionis placita tranquillo animo sectari.

[The Society founded in London in the year 1857 for the promotion of the unity of Christianity] expressly declares 2885 that the three Christian communions, Roman Catholic, Greek-schismatic, and Anglican, however separated and divided from one another, nevertheless with equal right claim for themselves the name Catholic. Admission, therefore, into that society is open to all, wheresoever they may live, Catholics, Greek-schismatics, and Anglicans, under this condition, however, that no one is permitted to raise a question about the various forms of doctrine in which they disagree and that it is right for each individual to follow with tranquil soul what is acceptable to his own religious creed.

Sociis vero omnibus preces ipsa recitandas et sacerdotibus sacrificia celebranda indicit iuxta suam intentionem: ut nempe tres memoratae christianae communionem, utpote quae, prout supponitur, Ecclesiam catholicam omnes simul iam constituunt, ad unum corpus efformandum tandem aliquando coeant. . . .

It (the society), however, enjoins on all members the prayers to be recited and on the priests the sacrifices to be celebrated according to its own intention: namely, that the said three Christian communions, inasmuch as they, as it is alleged, together now constitute the Catholic Church, may at some time or other unite to form one body. . . .

Fundamentum, cui ipsa innititur, huiusmodi est, quod divinam Ecclesiae constitutionem susque deque vertit. Tota enim in eo est, ut supponat veram Iesu Christi Ecclesiam constare partim ex Romana Ecclesia per

The foundation on which this society rests is such 2886 that it completely overturns the divine constitution of the Church. For, it is wholly in this: that it supposes the true Church of Jesus Christ to be composed partly of the universum orbem diffusa et propagata, partim vero ex schismate photiano et ex anglicana haeresi, quibus aequae Ecclesiae Romanae “unus” sit “Dominus, una fides et unum baptisma” [Eph 4:5]....

2887 Nihil certe viro catholico potius esse debet, quam ut inter Christianos schismata et dissensiones a radice evellantur, et Christiani omnes sint “solliciti servare unitatem spiritus in vinculo pacis” [Eph 4:3].... At quod Christifideles et ecclesiastici viri, haereticorum ductu, et quod peius est, iuxta intentionem haeresi quam maxime pollutam et infectam, pro christiana unitate orent, tolerari nullo modo potest.

2888 Vera Iesu Christi Ecclesia quadruplici nota, quam in Symbolo credendam asserimus, auctoritate divina constituitur et dignoscitur: et quaelibet ex hisce notis ita cum aliis cohaeret, ut ab iis nequeat seungi; hinc fit, ut quae vere est et dicitur catholica, unitatis simul, sanctitatis et apostolicae successionis praerogativa debeat effulgere.

Ecclesia igitur catholica una est unitate conspicua perfectaue orbis terrae et omnium gentium, ea profecto unitate, cuius principium, radix et origo indefectibilis est beati Petri Apostolorum principis, eiusque in Cathedra Romana successorum suprema auctoritas et “potior principalitas”.¹ Nec alia est Ecclesia catholica, nisi quae super unum Petrum aedificata in unum conexus corpus atque compactum [cf. Eph 4:16] unitate fidei et caritatis assurgit. ...

2890–2896: Encyclical Quanta cura, December 8, 1864

Ed.: ASS 3 (1867/1868; 2nd ed., 1878): 163–66 / Pius IX, Acta 1/III, 691–95 / Katholik 45/I (1865): 4–8.

Naturalism and Socialism

2890 Quoniam, ubi a civili societate fuit amota religio ac repudiata divinae revelationis doctrina et auctoritas, vel ipsa germana iustitiae humanique iuris notio tenebris obscuratur et amittitur, atque in verae iustitiae legitimique iuris locum materialis substituitur vis, inde liquet, cur nonnulli certissimis sanae rationis principiis penitus neglectis posthabitisque audeant conclamare, “voluntatem populi, publica, quam dicunt, opinione vel alia ratione manifestatam constituere supremam legem ab omni divino humanoque iure solutam, et in ordine politico facta consummata eo ipso, quod consummata sunt, vim iuris habere.”

Roman Church scattered and propagated throughout the whole world, partly, indeed, of the schism of Photius, and of the Anglican heresy, to which, as well as to the Roman Church, “there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism” [cf. Eph 4:5]....

Nothing, certainly, could be more welcome to a Catholic man than that schisms and dissensions among Christians be torn out by the roots and that all Christians be “eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” [Eph 4:3].... But, that the faithful of Christ and the clergy should pray for Christian unity under the leadership of heretics and, what is worse, according to an intention profoundly polluted and infected as much as possible with heresy can in no way be tolerated.

The true Church of Jesus Christ is constituted by divine authority and is recognized by the four marks that, in the Creed, we affirm must be believed; and each one of these marks is so joined to the others that it cannot be separated from them; hence it happens that that Church which truly is and is called Catholic should at the same time shine with the prerogatives of unity, sanctity, and apostolic succession.

The Catholic Church, therefore, is one, with a unity that is visible and perfect in the whole world and among all nations, a unity in fact, whose principle, root, and indefectible origin is the supreme authority and “more powerful principality”¹ of Blessed Peter, the prince of the apostles, and of his successors in the chair of Rome. There is no other Catholic Church except the one that, built on the one Peter, grows in the unity of faith and charity in the one body joined and assembled together [cf. Eph 4:16]....

And, since where religion has been removed from civil society and the doctrine and authority of divine revelation repudiated, the genuine notion of justice and human right is darkened and lost, and in place of true justice and legitimate right brute force is substituted; thence it appears why it is that some, utterly neglecting and disregarding the surest principles of sound reason, dare to proclaim that “the people’s will, manifested by what is called public opinion or in some other way, constitutes a supreme law, free from all divine and human control; and that in the political order accomplished facts, from the very circumstance that they are accomplished, have the force of right.”

¹ 2888 Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses III, 3, no. 1 (ed. by W.A.W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1857], 2:9 / PG 7:849A / SC 211:326 [= no. 2]).

Verum equis non videt planeque sentit, hominum societatem religionis ac verae iustitiae vinculis solutam nullum aliud profecto propositum habere posse, nisi scopum comparandi cumulandique opes nullamque aliam in suis actionibus legem sequi, nisi indomitam animi cupiditatem inserviendi propriis voluptatibus et commodis? . . .

Neque contenti amovere religionem a publica societate volunt religionem ipsam a privatis etiam arcere familiis. Etenim funestissimum communismi et socialismi docentes ac profitentes errorem asserunt “societatem domesticam seu familiam totam suae existentiae rationem a iure dumtaxat civili mutuari; proindeque ex lege tantum civili dimanare ac pendere iura omnia parentum in filios, cum primis vero ius institutionis educationisque curandae.”

Quibus impiis opinionibus machinationibusque in id praecipue intendunt fallacissimi isti homines, ut salutifera catholicae Ecclesiae doctrina ac vis a iuventutis institutione et educatione prorsus eliminetur.

The Independence of Ecclesiastical from Civil Authority

Alii instaurantes prava ac toties damnata novatorum commenta insigni impudentia audent Ecclesiae et huius Apostolicae Sedis supremam auctoritatem a Christo Domino ei tributam civilis auctoritatis arbitrio subicere, et omnia eiusdem Ecclesiae et Sedis iura denegare circa ea, quae ad exteriorem ordinem pertinent.

Namque ipsos minime pudet affirmare “Ecclesiae leges non obligare in conscientia, nisi cum promulgantur a civili potestate; acta et decreta Romanorum Pontificum ad religionem et Ecclesiam spectantia indigere sanctione et approbatione vel minimum assensu potestatis civilis; constitutiones Apostolicas,¹ quibus damnantur clandestinae societates, sive in eis exigatur sive non exigatur iuramentum de secreto servando, earumque asseclae et fautores anathemate mulctantur, nullam habere vim in illis orbis regionibus, ubi eiusmodi aggregationes tolerantur a civili gubernio. . . .”

Neque erubescunt palam publiceque profiteri haereticorum effatum et principium, ex quo tot perversae oriuntur sententiae atque errores. Dicitant enim “Ecclesiasticam potestatem non esse iure divino distinctam et independentem a potestate civili, neque eiusmodi distinctionem—et independentiam servari posse, quin

But who does not see and clearly perceive that human society, when set loose from the bonds of religion and true justice, can have, in truth, no other end than the purpose of obtaining and amassing wealth and that (society under such circumstances) follows no other law in its actions except the unchastened desire of ministering to its own pleasure and interests? . . .

Moreover, not content with removing religion from public society, they wish to banish it also from private families. For, teaching and professing the most fatal error of Communism and Socialism, they assert that “domestic society or the family derives the whole principle of its existence from the civil law alone; and, consequently, that on civil law alone depend all rights of parents over their children, and especially that of providing for education.”

By impious opinions and machinations these most deceitful men chiefly aim at this result, viz., that the salutary teaching and influence of the Catholic Church may be entirely banished from the instruction and education of youth.

Others, meanwhile, reviving the wicked and so often condemned inventions of innovators, dare with extraordinary impudence to subject to the will of the civil authority the supreme authority of the Church and of this Apostolic See given to her by Christ himself and to deny all those rights of the same Church and See that concern matters of the external order.

For they are not ashamed of affirming “that the Church’s laws do not bind in conscience unless when they are promulgated by the civil power; that acts and decrees of the Roman pontiffs, referring to religion and the Church, need the civil power’s sanction and approbation, or at least its consent; that the Apostolic Constitutions,¹ whereby secret societies are condemned (whether an oath of secrecy is or is not required in such societies) and whereby their frequenters and favorers are smitten with anathema—have no force in those regions of the world wherein associations of the kind are tolerated by the civil government. . . .”

Nor do they blush openly and publicly to profess the maxim and principle of heretics from which arise so many perverse opinions and errors. For they repeat that the “ecclesiastical power is not by divine right distinct from, and independent of, the civil power and that such distinction and independence cannot be preserved ab Ecclesia invadantur et usurpentur essentialia iura potestatis civilis.”

*2894 ¹ Clement XII, In eminenti, April 28, 1738 (CdICF 1:656–58, no. 299; cf. *2511–2513); Benedict XIV, Providas Romanorum, May 18, 1751 (Benedict XIV, Bullarium, Mechelen ed., 8:416f.); Pius VII, Ecclesiam a Iesu Christo, September 13, 1821 (BullRCt 15:446b); Leo XII, Quo graviora, March 13, 1825 (BullRCt 16:345–55a).

Atque silentio praeterire non possumus eorum audaciam, qui ... contendunt “illis Apostolicae Sedis iudicii et decretis, quorum obiectum ad bonum generale Ecclesiae eiusdemque iura ac disciplinam spectare declaratur, dummodo fidei morumque dogmata non attingat, posse assensum et oboedientiam detrectari absque peccato et absque ulla catholicae professionis iactura.”...

2896 Itaque omnes et singulas pravas opiniones ac doctrinas singillatim hisce litteris commemoratas auctoritate Nostra Apostolica reprobamus, proscribimus atque damnamus, easque ab omnibus catholicae Ecclesiae filiis veluti reprobatas, proscriptas atque damnatas omnino haberi volumus et mandamus.

without the civil power’s essential rights being assailed and usurped by the Church.”

Nor can We be silent about the arrogant claim of those who ... maintain: “It is possible, without sinning and without at all departing from the profession of the Catholic faith, to refuse assent and obedience to those decisions and decrees of the Apostolic See whose declared object is the general good of the Church and her rights and discipline, provided only that such decisions do not touch upon dogmas of faith or morals.”...

Therefore, by Our apostolic authority, We reject, proscribe, and condemn all the singular and evil opinions and doctrines severally mentioned in this letter and will and command that they be thoroughly held by all children of the Catholic Church as rejected, proscribed, and condemned.

2901–2980: Syllabus of Pius IX: A Collection of Errors Proscribed in Diverse Documents of Pius IX, Published December 8, 1864

Pius IX attached to the encyclical Quanta cura (cf. *2890–2896) on the day of its publication (December 8, 1864) a collection of eighty propositions that he had previously condemned in diverse documents (cf. the following list). To evaluate the sense and the weight of the condemnations, the respective context and character of the documents in question must be considered. Certain propositions of a legal or ecclesiastical-political nature are, to a large extent, bound to the circumstances of the times. The syllabus was drawn up by a commission of cardinals on the basis of a pastoral instruction of Bishop Gerbert of Perpignan (1860), whose eighty-five propositions, summarized in sixty-one, are repeated in the syllabus. Already before this, Pius IX had thought, following the suggestions of Cardinal Gioacchino Pecci (later Leo XIII), of publishing such a syllabus along with the definition of the Immaculate Conception. The list, however, could not be completed at that time.

Ed.: ASS 3 (1867/1868; 2nd ed., 1878): 168–76 / ASyll, pp. IX–XXIV / Pius IX, Acta 1/III, 701–17 / Katholik 45/I (1865): 13–26.

Index of Documents of Pius IX from Which the Syllabus Was Collected

- 1^o Encyclical Qui pluribus, November 9, 1846 [cf. *2775–2786. —For props. 4–7, 16, § IV, 40, 63].
- 2^o Allocution Quisque vestrum, October 4, 1847 [for 63].
- 3^o Allocution Ubi primum, December 17, 1847 [for 16].
- 4^o Allocution Quibus quantisque, April 20, 1849 [for § IV, 40, 64, 76].
- 5^o Encyclical Nostis et nobiscum, December 8, 1849 [for 18, § IV, 63].
- 6^o Allocution Si semper antea, May 20, 1850 [for 76].
- 7^o Allocution In consistoriali, November 1, 1850 [for 43–53].
- 8^o Letter Multiplices inter, June 10, 1851 [condemnation of a work of Francisco González Vigil: Defensa de la autoridad de los gobiernos y de los obispos contra las pretensiones de la curia Romana (Lima, 1848). —For 15, 21, 23, 30, 51, 54, 68].
- 9^o Letter Ad apostolicae sedis, August 22, 1851 [condemnation of two works of Johannes Nepomuk Nuytz, Iuris ecclesiastici institutiones (Turin, 1844); In ius ecclesiasticum universum tractationes; Prologemena: De rebus; De matrimonio; De personis (Turin, 1846; 1847; 1848; 1850). —For 24f., 34–36, 38, 41f., 65–67, 69–75].
- 10^o Allocution Quibus luctuosissimis, September 5, 1851 [for 45].
- 11^o Letter to the King of Sardinia, September 9, 1852 [for 73].
- 12^o Allocution Acerbissimum, September 27, 1852 [for 31, 51, 53, 55, 67, 73f., 78].
- 13^o Allocution Singulari quadam, December 9, 1854 [for 8, 17, § IV, 19].
- 14^o Allocution Probe meminertis, January 22, 1855 [for 53].
- 15^o Allocution Cum saepe, July 26, 1855 [for 53].
- 16^o Allocution Nemo vestrum, July 26, 1855 [for 77].
- 17^o Encyclical Singulari quidem, March 17, 1856 [for 4, 16].
- 18^o Allocution Numquam fore, December 15, 1856 [for 26, 28f., 31, 46, 50, 52, 79].
- 19^o Letter Eximiam tuam to the Archbishop of Cologne, June 15, 1857 [cf. *2828–2831. —For 14NB].
- 20^o Apostolic letter Cum catholica Ecclesia, March 26, 1860 [for 63, 76NB].
- 21^o Apostolic letter Dolore haud mediocri to the Bishop of Breslau, April 30, 1860 [for 14NB].
- 22^o Allocution Novos et ante, September 28, 1860 [for 19, 62, 76NB].
- 23^o Allocution Multis gravibusque, December 17, 1860 [for 37, 43, 73].
- 24^o Allocution Iamdudum cernimus, March 18, 1861 [for 37, 61, 76NB, 80].
- 25^o Allocution Meminit unusquisque, September 30, 1861 [for 20].
- 26^o Allocution Maxima quidem, June 9, 1862 [for 1–7, 15, 19, 27, 39, 44, 49, 56–60, 76NB].

- 27' Letter Gravissimas inter to the Archbishop of Munich-Freising, December 11, 1862 [cf. *2850–2861. —For 9–11].
 28' Encyclical Quanto conficiamur, August 10, 1863 [cf. *2865–2867. —For 17, § IV, 58].
 29' Encyclical Incredibili afflictamur, September 17, 1863 [for 26].
 30' Letter Tuas libenter to the Archbishop of Munich-Freising, December 21, 1863 [cf. *2875–2880. —For 9f., 12–14, 22, 33].
 31' Letter Cum non sine to the Archbishop of Freiburg, July 14, 1864 [for 47f.].
 32' Letter Singulari nobisque to the Bishop of Monreale, September 29, 1864 [for 32].

Propositions of the Syllabus

(The numbers 1'–32' given at the end of each proposition refer to the foregoing list documents.)

§ I. Pantheismus, naturalismus et rationalismus absolutus

1. Nullum supremum, sapientissimum, providentissimumque Numen divinum existit, ab hac rerum universitate distinctum, et Deus idem est ac rerum natura et idcirco immutationibus obnoxius, Deusque reapse fit in homine et mundo, atque omnia Deus sunt et ipsissimam Dei habent substantiam; ac una eademque res est Deus cum mundo et proinde spiritus cum materia, necessitas cum libertate, verum cum falso, bonum cum malo et iustum cum iniusto (26').
2. Neganda est omnis Dei actio in homines et mundum (26').
3. Humana ratio, nullo prorsus Dei respectu habito, unicus est veri et falsi, boni et mali arbiter, sibi ipsi est lex et naturalibus suis viribus ad hominum ac populorum bonum curandum sufficit (26').
4. Omnes religionis veritates ex nativa humanae rationis vi derivant; hinc ratio est princeps norma, qua homo cognitionem omnium cuiuscunque generis veritatum assequi possit ac debeat (1', 17', 26').
5. Divina revelatio est imperfecta et idcirco subiecta continuo et indefinito progressui, qui humanae rationis progressui respondeat (1', 26').
6. Christi fides humanae refragatur rationi; divinaque revelatio non solum nihil prodest, verum etiam nocet hominis perfectioni (1', 26').
7. Prophetiae et miracula in sacris Litteris exposita et narrata sunt poetarum commenta, et christianae fidei mysteria philosophicarum investigationum summa; et utriusque Testamenti libris mythica continentur inventa; ipseque Iesus Christus est mythica fictio (1', 26').

§ II. Rationalismus moderatus

8. Cum ratio humana ipsi religioni aequiparetur, idcirco theologicae disciplinae perinde ac philosophicae tractandae sunt (13').
9. Omnia indiscriminatum dogmata religionis christianae sunt obiectum naturalis scientiae seu philosophiae; et humana ratio historice tantum exulta potest ex suis naturalibus viribus et principiis ad veram de omnibus etiam reconditionibus dogmatibus scientiam

§ I. Pantheism, Naturalism, and Absolute Rationalism

1. There does not exist any supreme, all-wise, all-provident divine being distinct from this universe of things; God is identical with the nature of things and therefore subject to change; God actually becomes himself in man and in the world; all things are God and have the very substance of God; God is one and the same reality with the world, and so is spirit with matter, necessity with liberty, truth with falsehood, good with evil, and justice with injustice (26'). 2901
2. Any action of God on man and the world must be denied (26'). 2902
3. Human reason, without any consideration at all of God, is the sole judge of truth and falsehood, of good and evil; it is a law unto itself, and by its natural powers, it suffices to care for the good of men and nations (26'). 2903
4. All religious truths originate from the natural power of human reason. Hence reason is the principal norm by which man can and must reach knowledge of any kind of truths whatever (1', 17', 26'). 2904
5. Divine revelation is imperfect and hence subject to continual and indefinite progress, which ought to correspond to the progress of human reason (1', 26'). 2905
6. Faith in Christ is detrimental to human reason; and divine revelation not only is of no use but is even harmful to man's perfection (1', 26'). 2906
7. The prophecies and miracles set forth in the narration of the Sacred Scriptures are the inventions of poets; the mysteries of the Christian faith are the outcome of philosophical reflections; mythical tales are contained in the books of both Testaments; Jesus Christ himself is a mythical fiction (1', 26'). 2907

§ II. Moderate Rationalism

8. Since human reason is on a par with religion itself, theological disciplines have to be handled in the same manner as the philosophical ones (13'). 2908
9. All dogmas of the Christian religion are, without distinction, the object of natural science or of philosophy; human reason with only historical training can, by means of its natural powers and principles, come to a true understanding of all, even the more obscure dogmas, 2909 pervenire, modo haec dogmata ipsi rationi tamquam obiectum proposita fuerint (27' [cf. *2857], 30' [cf. *2878]).

2910 10. Cum aliud sit philosophus, aliud philosophia, ille ius et officium habet se submittendi auctoritati, quam veram ipse probaverit; at philosophia neque potest neque debet ulli sese submittere auctoritati (27' [cf. *2858], 30').

2911 11. Ecclesia non solum non debet in philosophiam umquam animadvertere, verum etiam debet ipsius philosophiae tolerare errores eique relinquere, ut ipsa se corrigat (27' [cf. *2860]).

2912 12. Apostolicae Sedis Romanarumque Congregationum decreta liberum scientiae progressum impediunt (30' [cf. *2875]).

2913 13. Methodus et principia, quibus antiqui Doctores scholastici Theologiam excoluerunt, temporum nostrorum necessitatibus scientiarumque progressui minime congruunt (30' [cf. *2876]).

2914 14. Philosophia tractanda est nulla supernaturalis revelationis habita ratione (30').

NB. Cum rationalismi systemate cohaerent quoad maximam partem errores Antonii Guenther, qui damnantur in 19' et in 21'.

§ III. Indifferentismus, latitudinarismus

2915 15. Liberum cuique homini est eam amplecti ac profiteri religionem, quam rationis lumine quis ductus veram putaverit (8', 26').

2916 16. Homines in cuiusvis religionis cultu viam aeternae salutis reperire aeternamque salutem assequi possunt (1', 3', 17').

2917 17. Saltem bene sperandum est de aeterna illorum omnium salute, qui in vera Christi Ecclesia nequaquam versantur (13', 28' [cf. *2865°, 2865–2867]).

2918 18. Protestantismus non aliud est quam diversa verae eiusdem christianae religionis forma, in qua aequae ac in Ecclesia catholica Deo placere datum est (5').

§ IV. Socialismus, communismus, societates clandestinae, biblicae, clerico-liberales 2918a ... reprobantur in 1', 4', 5', 13', 28'.

§ V. Errores de Ecclesia eiusque iuribus

2919 19. Ecclesia non est vera perfectaue societas plane libera, nec pollet suis propriis et constantibus iuribus sibi a divino suo fundatore collatis, sed civilis provided only that such dogmas be proposed to reason as its object (27' [cf. *2857], 30' [cf. *2878]).

10. As there is a distinction between the philosopher and his philosophy, he has the right and the duty to submit himself to the authority he acknowledges as legitimate; but philosophy neither can nor must submit to any authority (27' [cf. *2858], 30').

11. The Church must not only abstain from any interference with philosophy; she must also tolerate the errors of philosophy and leave it to philosophy to correct itself (27' [cf. *2860]).

12. The decrees of the Apostolic See and of the Roman congregations hinder the free progress of science (30' [cf. *2875]).

13. The method and principles according to which the ancient Scholastic Doctors treated theology are by no means suited to the necessities of our times and to the progress of the sciences (30' [cf. *2876]).

14. Philosophy is to be treated without any regard to supernatural revelation (30').

NB. With regard to the system of rationalism, the errors for the most part are connected to those of Anton Günther which were condemned in 19' and 21'.

§ III. Indifferentism, Latitudinarianism

15. Everyone is free to embrace and profess the religion that by the light of reason he judges to be true (8', 26').

16. Men can find the way of eternal salvation and attain eternal salvation by the practice of any religion whatever (1', 3', 17').

17. At the very least, there must be good hope for the eternal salvation of all those who do not dwell in any way in the true Church of Christ (13', 28' [cf. *2865°, 2865–2867]).

18. Protestantism is nothing else than a different form of the same true Christian religion, in which it is possible to serve God as well as in the Catholic Church (5').

§ IV. Socialism, Communism, Secret Societies, Biblical Societies, and Clerical-Liberal Societies

... were rejected in 1', 4', 5', 13', 28'.

§ V. Errors Pertaining to the Church and Her Rights

19. The Church is not a true and perfect society that is absolutely free, nor does she operate by her own fixed and proper rights conferred on her by her divine founder;

potestatis est definire, quae sint Ecclesiae iura ac limites, intra quos eadem iura exercere queat (13', 23', 26').

20. Ecclesiastica potestas suam auctoritatem exercere non debet absque civilis gubernii venia et assensu (25').

21. Ecclesia non habet potestatem dogmatice definiendi, religionem catholicae Ecclesiae esse unice veram religionem (8').

22. Obligatio, qua catholici magistri et scriptores omnino adstringuntur, coarctatur in iis tantum, quae ab infallibili Ecclesiae iudicio veluti dogmata ab omnibus credenda proponuntur (30' [cf. *2879]).

23. Romani Pontifices et Concilia oecumenica a limitibus suae potestatis recesserunt, iura principum usurparunt atque etiam in rebus fidei et morum definiendis errarunt (8').

24. Ecclesia vis inferendae potestatem non habet neque potestatem ullam temporalem directam vel indirectam (9').

25. Praeter potestatem episcopatus inhaerentem, alia est attributa temporalis potestas a civili imperio vel expresse vel tacite concessa, revocanda propterea, cum liberit, a civili imperio (9').

26. Ecclesia non habet nativum ac legitimum ius acquirendi ac possidendi (18', 29').

27. Sacri Ecclesiae ministri Romanusque Pontifex ab omni rerum temporalium cura ac dominio sunt omnino excludendi (26').

28. Episcopis, sine gubernii venia, fas non est vel ipsas Apostolicas Litteras promulgare (18').

29. Gratiae a Romano Pontifice concessae existimari debent tamquam irritae, nisi per gubernium fuerint imploratae (18').

30. Ecclesiae et personarum ecclesiasticarum immunitas a iure civili ortum habuit (8').

31. Ecclesiasticum forum pro temporalibus clericorum causis sive civilibus sive criminalibus omnino de medio tollendum est, etiam inconsulta et reclamante Apostolica Sede (12', 18').

32. Absque ulla naturalis iuris et aequitatis violatione potest abrogari personalis immunitas, qua clerici ab onere subeundae exercendaeque militiae eximuntur; hanc vero abrogationem postulat civilis progressus, maxime in societate ad formam liberioris regiminis constituta (32').

but it belongs to the civil power to define which are the rights of the Church and the limits within which she may exercise these rights (13', 23', 26').

20. The ecclesiastical power should not exercise its authority without the permission and assent of the civil government (25'). 2920

21. The Church does not have the power of defining dogmatically that the religion of the Catholic Church is the only true religion (8'). 2921

22. The obligation by which Catholic teachers and writers are absolutely bound is restricted to those matters only that are proposed by the infallible judgment of the Church to be believed by all as dogmas of faith (30' [cf. *2879]). 2922

23. The Roman pontiffs and the ecumenical councils have transgressed the limits of their powers, have usurped the rights of princes, and have even erred in defining matters of faith and morals (8'). 2923

24. The Church does not have the power of using force, nor does she have any temporal power, direct or indirect (9'). 2924

25. Besides the power inherent in the episcopate, there is another temporal power attributed, either expressly or tacitly granted by the civil government, to be revoked, therefore, at will by the civil government (9'). 2925

26. The Church does not have a natural and legitimate right to acquire and to possess (18', 29'). 2926

27. The sacred ministers of the Church and the Roman pontiff should be entirely excluded from all administration and dominion over temporal things (26'). 2927

28. Without the permission of the government, it is not lawful for bishops to issue even apostolic letters (18'). 2928

29. Favors granted by the Roman pontiff should be considered void unless they have been requested through the government (18'). 2929

30. The immunity of the Church and of ecclesiastical persons had its origin in civil law (8'). 2930

31. The ecclesiastical court for the temporal cases of clerics, whether civil or criminal, should be absolutely abolished, even if the Apostolic See was not consulted and protests (12', 18'). 2931

32. Without any violation of natural right and equity, the personal immunity by which clerics are exempted from the obligation of undergoing and practicing military service can be abolished; in truth, civil progress demands this abrogation, especially in a society organized on the form of a more liberal government (32'). 2932

- 2933 33. Non pertinet unice ad ecclesiasticam iurisdictionis potestatem proprio ac nativo iure dirigere theologiarum rerum doctrinam (30').
- 2934 34. Doctrina comparantium Romanum Pontificem principi libero et agenti in universa Ecclesia doctrina est, quae medio aevo praevaluit (9').
- 2935 35. Nihil vetat, alicuius Concilii generalis sententia aut universorum populorum facto summum Pontificatum ab Romano episcopo atque Urbe ad alium episcopum aliamque civitatem transferri (9').
- 2936 36. Nationalis concilii definitio nullam aliam admittit disputationem, civilisque administratio rem ad hosce terminos exigere potest (9').
- 2937 37. Institui possunt nationales ecclesiae ab auctoritate Romani Pontificis subductae planeque divisae (23', 24').
- 2938 38. Divisioni Ecclesiae in orientalem atque occidentalem nimia Romanorum Pontificum arbitria contulerunt (9').
- § VI. Errores de societate civili tum in se tum in suis ad Ecclesiam relationibus spectata*
- 2939 39. Reipublicae status, utpote omnium iurium origo et fons, iure quodam pollet nullis circumscripto limitibus (26').
- 2940 40. Catholicae Ecclesiae doctrina humanae societatis bono et commodis adversatur (1' [cf. *2775], 4').
- 2941 41. Civili potestati vel ab infideli imperante exercitae competit potestas indirecta negativa in sacra; eidem proinde competit nedium ius quod vocant "exsequatur", sed etiam ius "appellationis", quam nuncupant, "ab abusu" (9').
- 2942 42. In conflictu legum utriusque potestatis ius civile praevalet (9').
- 2943 43. Laica potestas auctoritatem habet rescindendi, declarandi ac faciendi irritas solemnes conventiones (vulgo "Concordata") super usu iurium ad ecclesiasticam immunitatem pertinentium cum Sede Apostolica initas sine huius consensu, immo et ea reclamante (7', 23').
- 2944 44. Civilis auctoritas potest se immiscere rebus, quae ad religionem, mores et regimen spirituale pertinent. Hinc potest de instructionibus iudicare, quas Ecclesiae pastores ad conscientiarum normam pro suo munere edunt, quin etiam potest de divinorum sacramentorum administratione et dispositionibus ad ea suscipienda necessariis decernere (7', 26').
33. It does not belong exclusively to the ecclesiastical power of jurisdiction, by proper and natural right, to direct the teaching of theological matters (30').
34. The doctrine of those who compare the Roman pontiff to a free prince acting in the universal Church is a doctrine that prevailed in the Middle Ages (9').
35. There is nothing to forbid that by the vote of a general council or by the action of all peoples the Supreme Pontificate be transferred from the bishop of Rome and the City (Rome) to another bishopric and another city (9').
36. The definition of a national council allows for no other discussion, and the civil administration can enforce the matter according to these determinations (9').
37. National churches can be established that are exempt and completely separated from the authority of the Roman pontiff (23', 24').
38. The excessive decisions of the Roman pontiffs contributed to the division of the Church into an eastern and a western (Church) (9').
- § VI. Errors Pertaining to Civil Society, Viewed Both in Themselves and in Their Relations with the Church*
39. The state of the commonwealth, as the origin and source of all rights, exercises a right that is not circumscribed by any limits (26').
40. The doctrine of the Catholic Church is opposed to the good and the advantages of human society (1' [cf. *2775], 4').
41. To the civil power, even if exercised by an infidel ruler, belongs the indirect negative power over sacred things; and hence to the same belongs not only the right that is called exsequatur but also the right, as they call it, of appeal as from an abuse (9').
42. In a conflict between the laws of the two powers, the civil law prevails (9').
43. The lay power has the authority of rescinding, declaring, and making void the solemn agreements (commonly, concordats) made with the Apostolic See concerning the use of rights pertaining to ecclesiastical immunity without its consent and even against its protests (7', 23').
44. The civil authority can interfere in matters that pertain to religion, morals, and spiritual government. Hence, it can judge about the instructions that the pastors of the Church, in accordance with their duty, issue as a guide to consciences; it can even make decrees concerning the administration of the divine sacraments and the dispositions necessary to receive them (7', 26').

45. Totum scholarum publicarum regimen, in quibus iuventus christiana alicuius reipublicae instituitur, episcopalibus dumtaxat seminariis aliqua ratione exceptis, potest ac debet attribui auctoritati civili, et ita quidem attribui, ut nullum alii cuicumque auctoritati recognoscatur ius immiscendi se in disciplina scholarum, in regimine studiorum, in graduum collatione, in delectu aut approbatione magistrorum (7', 10').

46. Immo in ipsis clericorum seminariis methodus studiorum adhibenda civili auctoritati subicitur (18').

47. Postulat optima civilis societatis ratio, ut populares scholae, quae patent omnibus cuiusque e populo classis pueris, ac publica universim instituta, quae litteris severioribusque disciplinis tradendis et educationi iuventutis curandae sunt destinata, eximantur ab omni Ecclesiae auctoritate, moderatrice vi et ingerentia, plenoque civilis ac politicae auctoritatis arbitrio subiciantur ad imperantium placita et ad communium aetatis opinionum amussim (31').

48. Catholicis viris probari potest ea iuventutis instituendae ratio, quae sit a catholica fide et ab Ecclesiae potestate seiuncta, quaeque rerum dumtaxat naturalium scientiam ac terrenae socialis vitae fines tantummodo vel saltem primario spectet (31').

49. Civilis auctoritas potest impedire, quominus sacrorum antistites et fideles populi cum Romano Pontifice libere ac mutuo communicent (26').

50. Laica auctoritas habet per se ius praesentandi episcopos et potest ab illis exigere, ut ineamt dioecesium procuracionem, antequam ipsi canonicam a Sancta Sede institutionem et Apostolicas Litteras accipiant (18').

51. Immo laicum gubernium habet ius deponendi ab exercitio pastoralis ministerii episcopos, neque tenetur oboedire Romano Pontifici in iis, quae episcopatum et episcoporum respiciunt institutionem (8', 12').

52. Gubernium potest suo iure immutare aetatem ab Ecclesia praescriptam pro religiosa tam mulierum quam virorum professione, omnibusque religiosis familiis indicere, ut neminem sine suo permissu ad solemnia vota nuncupanda admittant (18').

53. Abrogandae sunt leges, quae ad religiosarum familiarum statum tutandum earumque iura et officia pertinent; immo potest civile gubernium iis omnibus auxilium praestare, qui a suscepto religiosae vitae instituto deficere ac solemnia vota frangere velint;

45. The entire administration of public schools in which the youth of any Christian State are educated, with only episcopal seminaries being excepted in some way, can and should be assigned to the civil authority, and assigned in such a way, indeed, that for no other authority is the right recognized to interfere in the discipline of the schools, in the system of studies, in the conferring of degrees, in the choice or approval of teachers (7', 10'). 2945

46. In fact, even in the very seminaries of the clergy, the program of studies to be followed is subject to the civil authority (18'). 2946

47. The best state of civil society demands that the peoples' schools that are open to all children of any class of people and the public institutions in general that are destined for the teaching of literature and the more exact studies and for caring for the education of youth should be exempted from all authority, control, and power of the Church and be subjected to the full authority of the civil and political power, exactly according to the pleasure of the rulers and the standard of current public opinion (31'). 2947

48. Catholic men can approve that system of instructing youth which is separated from the Catholic faith and the power of the Church and that pertains solely, or at least primarily, to natural science and the purposes of social life on earth (31'). 2948

49. Civil authority can hinder bishops and the faithful people from freely and reciprocally communicating with the Roman pontiff (26'). 2949

50. The lay authority has of itself the right of presenting bishops and can compel them to enter upon the administration of their dioceses before they receive from the Holy See their canonical appointment and apostolic letters (18'). 2950

51. Moreover, secular government has the right of deposing bishops from the exercise of their pastoral ministry and is not bound to obey the Roman pontiff in those matters that regard the institution of episcopates and bishops (8', 12'). 2951

52. The government can by its own right change the age prescribed by the Church for the religious profession of women as well as of men and can prescribe for all religious orders that they should not admit anyone to the pronouncement of solemn vows without its permission (18'). 2952

53. The laws that pertain to the protection of the status of religious orders and to their rights and duties should be abrogated; indeed, the civil government can furnish aid to all those who wish to abandon the institute of the religious life that they once accepted and to break their 2953 pariterque potest religiosas easdem familias perinde ac collegiatis ecclesias et beneficia simplicia etiam iuris patronatus penitus extinguere, illorumque bona et redditus civilis potestatis administrationi et arbitrio subicere et vindicare (12', 14', 15').

- 2954 54. Reges et principes non solum ab Ecclesiae iurisdictione eximuntur, verum etiam in quaestionibus iurisdictionis dirimendis superiores sunt Ecclesia (8').
- 2955 55. Ecclesia a statu statusque ab Ecclesia seiungendus est (12').

§ VII. Errores de ethica naturali et christiana

- 2956 56. Morum leges divina haud egent sanctione, minimeque opus est, ut humanae leges ad naturae ius conformentur aut obligandi vim a Deo accipiant (26').
- 2957 57. Philosophicarum rerum morumque scientia, item civiles leges possunt et debent a divina et ecclesiastica auctoritate declinare (26').
- 2958 58. Aliae vires non sunt agnoscendae nisi illae, quae in materia positae sunt, et omnis morum disciplina honestasque collocari debet in cumulandis et augendis quovis modo divitiis ac in voluptatibus expendis (26', 28').
- 2959 59. Ius in materiali facto consistit, et omnia hominum officia sunt nomen inane, et omnia humana facta iuris vim habent (26').
- 2960 60. Auctoritas nihil aliud est, nisi numeri et materialium virium summa (26').
- 2961 61. Fortunata facti iniustitia nullum iuris sanctitatis detrimentum affert (24').
- 2962 62. Proclamandum est et observandum principium, quod vocat de non-interventu¹ (22').
- 2963 63. Legitimis principibus oboedientiam detractare, immo et rebellare licet (1', 2', 5', 20').
- 2964 64. Tum cuiusque sanctissimi iuramenti violatio, tum quaelibet scelestas flagitiosaque actio sempiternae legi repugnans non solum haud est improbanda, verum etiam omnino licita summisque laudibus efferenda, quando id pro patriae amore agatur (4').

§ VIII. Errores de matrimonio christiano

- 2965 65. Nulla ratione ferri potest, Christum evexisse matrimonium ad dignitatem sacramenti (9').

solemn vows; and likewise, it can suppress these same religious orders as well as collegiate churches and simple benefices, even those of the right of patronage, and can lay claim to and subject their property and revenues to the administration and will of the civil power (12', 14', 15').

54. Kings and princes are not only exempt from the jurisdiction of the Church, but they also are superior to the Church in deciding questions of jurisdiction (8').
55. The Church is to be separated from the State, and the State from the Church (12').

§ VII. Errors Pertaining to Natural and Christian Ethics

56. Moral law needs no divine sanction, and there is not the least need that human laws conform to the natural law or receive their obligatory force from God (26').
57. The science of philosophy and of morals, likewise the civil laws, can and should avoid divine and ecclesiastical authority (26').
58. Other powers should not be recognized except those that have their basis in the material (physical side of man), and all moral discipline and honesty should be employed to accumulate and increase wealth in any way whatsoever and to satisfy man's pleasures (26', 28').
59. Right consists in a material fact; all the duties of men are an empty name, and all human deeds have the force of right (26').
60. Authority is nothing else but the sum of the number and the forces of matter (26').
61. The chance injustice of an act brings no detriment to the sanctity of the right (24').
62. The principle of "nonintervention"¹ must be proclaimed and observed (22').
63. It is lawful to withhold obedience to legitimate rulers, indeed, even to rebel (1', 2', 5', 20').
64. The violation of any most sacred oath and even any criminal and disgraceful action repugnant to eternal law not only must by no means be reproved but is even altogether lawful and worthy of the highest praise when it is done for love of country (4').

§ VIII. Errors Pertaining to Christian Marriage

65. In no way can it be asserted that Christ raised matrimony to the dignity of a sacrament (9').

¹ *2962 Emperor Napoleon III of France appealed to this principle in order not to keep his promise or to be obliged to help Pius IX against the Piedmontese who were occupying the Papal States.

66. Matrimonii sacramentum non est nisi quid contractui accessorium ab eoque separabile, ipsumque sacramentum in una tantum nuptiali benedictione situm est¹ (9').

67. Iure naturae matrimonii vinculum non est indissolubile, et in variis casibus divortium proprie dictum auctoritate civili sanciri potest (9', 12').

68. Ecclesia non habet potestatem impedimenta matrimonium dirimentia inducendi, sed ea potestas civili auctoritati competit, a qua impedimenta existientia tollenda sunt (8').

69. Ecclesia sequioribus saeculis dirimentia impedimenta inducere coepit, non iure proprio, sed illo iure usa, quod a civili potestate mutuata erat (9').

70. Tridentini canones, qui anathematis censuram illis inferunt, qui facultatem impedimenta dirimentia inducendi Ecclesiae negare audeant [cf. *1803s], vel non sunt dogmatici vel de hac mutuata potestate intelligendi sunt (9').

71. Tridentini forma [cf. *1813–1816] sub infirmitatis poena non obligat, ubi lex civilis aliam formam praestituit et velit hac nova forma interveniente matrimonium valere (9').

72. Bonifatius VIII votum castitatis in ordinatione emissum nuptias nullas reddere primus asseruit (9').

73. Vi contractus mere civilis potest inter Christianos constare veri nominis matrimonium, falsumque est, aut contractum matrimonii inter Christianos semper esse sacramentum, aut nullum esse contractum, si sacramentum excludatur (9', 11', 12', 23').

74. Causae matrimoniales et sponsalia suapte natura ad forum civile pertinent (9', 12').

NB. Huc facere possunt duo alii errores de clericorum caelibatu abolendo et de statu matrimonii statui virginitatis anteferendo. Confodiuntur, prior in 1', posterior in 8'.

§ IX. Errores de civili Romani Pontificis principatu

75. De temporalis regni cum spirituali compatibilitate disputant inter se christianae et catholicae Ecclesiae filii (9').

66. The sacrament of matrimony is nothing but an appendage to the contract and separable from it, and the sacrament itself consists merely in the nuptial blessing¹ (9'). 2966

67. By natural law the bond of matrimony is not indissoluble, and in various cases divorce, properly so-called, can be sanctioned by civil authority (9', 12'). 2967

68. The Church does not have the power to establish impediments nullifying marriage; but that power belongs to civil authority by which the existing impediments should be removed (8'). 2968

69. The Church in later centuries began to introduce diriment impediments, not by her own right, but by making use of a right that she had borrowed from the civil power (9'). 2969

70. The canons of the Council of Trent that impose the censure of anathema on those who have the boldness to deny to the Church the power of introducing diriment impediments [cf. *1803f.] are either not dogmatic or should be understood in terms of this borrowed power (9'). 2970

71. The form of the Council of Trent [cf. *1813–1816] does not oblige under penalty of nullity where the civil law prescribes another form and wishes to validate a marriage by the intervention of this new form (9'). 2971

72. Boniface VIII was the first to declare that the vow of chastity taken in ordination renders marriages invalid (9'). 2972

73. A true marriage can exist between Christians by virtue of a purely civil contract; and it is false to assert that the contract of marriage between Christians is always a sacrament or that there is no contract if the sacrament is excluded (9', 11', 12', 23'). 2973

74. Matrimonial cases and betrothals by their very nature belong to the civil court (9', 12'). 2974

NB. Here two other errors can be mentioned: one concerning the abolition of clerical celibacy and the other concerning the elevation of the state of marriage over that of virginity. They were previously refuted: the first in 1', and the second in 8'.

§ IX. Errors Related to the Civil Power of the Roman Pontiff

75. The sons of the Christian and Catholic Church dispute about the compatibility of the temporal power with the spiritual (9'). 2975

*2966¹ The thesis expressed in the second part of the proposition was upheld, for example, by Melchior Cano, De locis theologicis VIII, 5 (Venice, 1759), 196f.

2976 76. Abrogatio civilis imperii, quo Apostolica Sedes potitur, ad Ecclesiae libertatem felicitatemque vel maxime conduceret (4', 6').

NB. [Effata hac de re vide etiam in] 4', 6', 20', 22', 24', 26'.

§ X. Errores, qui ad liberarismum hodiernum referuntur

2977 77. Aetate hac nostra non amplius expedit, religionem catholicam haberi tamquam unicam status religionem, ceteris quibuscumque cultibus exclusis (16').

2978 78. Hinc laudabiliter in quibusdam catholicis nominis regionibus lege cautum est, ut hominibus illuc immigrantibus liceat publicum proprii cuiusque cultus exercitium habere (12').

2979 79. Enimvero falsum est, civilem cuiusque cultus libertatem, itemque plenam potestatem omnibus attributam quaslibet opiniones cogitationesque palam publiceque manifestandi conducere ad populorum mores animosque facilius corrumpendos ac indifferentismi pestem propagandam (18').

2980 80. Romanus Pontifex potest ac debet cum progressu, cum liberalismo et cum recenti civilitate sese reconciliare et componere (24').

76. The abolition of the civil power that the Apostolic See possesses would be extremely conducive to the liberty and prosperity of the Church (4', 6').

NB. [For declarations pertaining to this matter, see also] 4', 6', 20', 22', 24, 26'.

§ X. Errors Related to Present-Day Liberalism

77. In our age it is no longer advisable that the Catholic religion be the only State religion, excluding all the other forms of worship (16').

78. Therefore it is praiseworthy that in some Catholic regions the law has allowed people immigrating there to exercise publicly their own form of worship (12').

79. It is in fact false that civil freedom of worship and the full right granted to all to express openly and publicly any opinions and views lead to an easier corruption of morality and of the minds of people and help to propagate the plague of indifferentism (18').

80. The Roman pontiff can and should reconcile and adapt himself to progress, liberalism, and the modern culture (24').

2990–2993: Instruction of the Sacred Penitentiary, January 15, 1866

Ed.: ASS 1(1865/1866; 5th ed., 1872): 509–11.

Civil Marriage

2990 2990 (2) S. Paenitentiarum superfluum putat in memoriam cuiusque revocare, quod est sanctissimae religionis nostrae notissimum dogma, nimirum matrimonium unum esse ex septem sacramentis a Christo Domino institutis, proindeque ad Ecclesiam ipsam, cui idem Christus divinatorum suorum mysteriorum dispensationem commisit, illius directionem unice pertinere, tum etiam superfluum putat in cuiusque memoriam revocare formam a sancta Tridentina Synodo praescriptam [*Sessio XXIV, De reformatione matrimonii, c. 1: 1813–1816], sine cuius observantia in locis, ubi illa promulgata fuit, valide contrahi matrimonium nequaquam posset.

2991 (3) Sed ex hisce aliisque axiomatibus et catholicis doctrinis debent animarum pastores practicas instructiones conficere, quibus etiam fidelibus id persuadeant, quod sanctissimus Dominus noster in Consistorio secreto 27. Sept. 1852 proclamabat: "Inter fideles matrimonium dari non posse, quin uno eodemque tempore sit sacramentum; atque idcirco quamlibet aliam inter christianos viri et mulieris praeter sacramentum coniunctionem, etiam civilis legis vi factam, nihil aliud esse nisi turpem atque exitialem concubinatum."

(2) The Sacred Penitentiary considers it superfluous to remind everyone that it is a well-known dogma of our most holy religion that marriage is certainly one of the seven sacraments instituted by Christ the Lord and that therefore its regulation belongs to the Church alone, to whom Christ himself committed the dispensation of his divine mysteries; in addition, it considers it also superfluous to remind everyone about the form prescribed by the holy Council of Trent [*sess. 24, Reform of Marriage, chap. 1: 1813–1816], without whose observance, in places where it has been promulgated, a valid marriage can in no way be contracted.

(3) But from these and from other principles and from Catholic doctrine pastors of souls should develop practical instructions by means of which they can also convince the faithful that our most holy Lord proclaimed in a secret consistory on September 27, 1852: "Among the faithful there cannot be a true marriage that is not at the same time a sacrament; and therefore among Christians any other union of a man and a woman outside of the sacrament, even if it is made in accordance with civil law, is nothing else but a shameful and deadly concubinage."

(4) Atque hinc facile deducere poterunt, civilem actum coram Deo eiusque Ecclesia, nedum ut sacramentum, verum nec ut contractum haberi ullo modo posse; et quemadmodum civilis potestas ligandi quemquam fidelium in matrimonio incapax est, ita et solvendi incapax esse; ideoque ... sententiam omnem de separatione coniugum legitimo matrimonio coram Ecclesia coniunctorum, a laica potestate latam, nullius valoris esse; et coniugem, qui eiusmodi sententia abutens alii se personae coniungere auderet, fore verum adulterum: quemadmodum esset verus concubinarius, qui vi tantum civilis actus in matrimonio persistere praesumeret; atque utrumque absolutione indignum esse, donec haud respiscat ac praescriptionibus Ecclesiae se subiiciens ad paenitentiam convertatur.

(5) [Conceditur tamen ad poenas vitandas, ob prolis bonum et ad polygamiae periculum avertendum, ut] fideles, postquam matrimonium legitime contraxerint coram Ecclesia, se sistant actum lege decretum exsecuturi, ea tamen intentione ..., sistendo se Gubernii Officiali nil aliud faciant quam ut civilem caeremoniam exsequantur.¹

(4) And from that point they will be able to conclude easily that such a civil act, in the eyes of both God and the Church, cannot in any way be considered either a sacrament or even a contract; and that the civil authority, just as it does not have the power to bind together any of the faithful in a true marriage, so also does it lack the power to dissolve a true marriage; and that for this reason ... every decree of separation of spouses who have been joined together in legitimate matrimony by the Church—a decree promulgated by civil authority—has no validity; and that a spouse who, using such a decree, dares to attempt marriage with another person would be in fact an adulterer: just as that person would be living in concubinage who would presume to remain in a state of matrimony only because of a previous civil act of marriage; and that both are not worthy to receive absolution until they have a change of heart and do penance by submitting themselves to the prescriptions of the Church.

(5) [It may be conceded, however, in order to avoid punishment, for the benefit of the children and to remove the danger of polygamy, that] the faithful, after they have contracted a legitimate marriage in the eyes of the Church, can present themselves for a civil act prescribed by law, but only with the intention ... that by presenting themselves before a government official they are doing nothing else but performing a civil ceremony.¹

2997–2999: Apostolic Letter Iam vos omnes to All Protestants and Other Non-Catholics, September 13, 1868

On the occasion of the convocation of the First Vatican Council, Pius IX invited all non-Catholics to join the Catholic Church.

Ed.: MaC 50:203*–205* (= 49 of the second part, 1259–61) / CollLac 7:9b–10a / Pius IX, Acta 1/IV, 434–37 / ASS 4 (1868/1869, 5th ed., 1875): 132–34.

The Necessity of the Church for Salvation

Nemo inficiari ac dubitare potest, ipsum Christum Iesum, ut humanis omnibus generationibus redemptionis suae fructus applicaret, suam hic in terris supra Petrum unicum aedificasse Ecclesiam, id est unam, sanctam, catholicam, apostolicam, eique necessariam omnem contulisse potestatem, ut integrum inviolatumque custodiretur fidei depositum ac eadem fides omnibus populis, gentibus, nationibus traderetur, ut per baptisma omnes in mysticum suum Corpus cooptarentur homines, ... utque eadem Ecclesia, quae mysticum suum constituit Corpus, in sua propria natura semper stabilis et immota usque ad consummationem saeculorum permaneret. ...

Nunc vero qui accurate consideret ac meditetur condicionem, in qua versantur variae et inter se discrepantes religiosae societates seiunctae a catholica

No one can contest or doubt that the same Christ Jesus, in order to apply to all human generations the fruits of his redemption, established here on earth, on Peter, his unique Church, which is one, holy, catholic, and apostolic, and that he conferred all necessary power on her so that the deposit of faith might be protected whole and uncorrupted and so that the same faith might be transmitted to all peoples, races, and nations in order that, by means of baptism, all men might be joined to his Mystical Body, ... and in order that the same Church, which constitutes his Mystical Body, might continue in her proper nature always stable and unchanged until the consummation of the ages. ...

Now, however, one who carefully considers and reflects on the condition in which the diverse and mutually disagreeing religious societies that are separated from the *2993 ¹ Cf. Benedict XIV, brief Redditae sunt nobis, September 17, 1746 (Benedict XIV, Bullarium, Mechelen ed., 9:426–30 = supplement, no. III).

Ecclesia, . . . vel facile sibi persuadere debet, neque aliam peculiarem ex eisdem societatibus neque omnes simul coniunctas ullo modo constituere et esse illam unam et catholicam Ecclesiam, quam Christus Dominus aedificavit, constituit et esse voluit, neque membrum aut partem eiusdem Ecclesiae ullo modo dici posse, quandoquidem sunt a catholica unitate visibilibus divisae.

Cum enim eiusmodi societates careant viva illa et a Deo constituta auctoritate, quae homines res fidei morumque disciplinam praesertim docet eosque dirigit ac moderatur in iis omnibus, quae ad aeternam salutem pertinent, tum societates ipsae in suis doctrinis continenter variarunt, et haec mobilitas ac instabilitas apud easdem societates numquam cessat. Quisque vel facile intelligit . . . id vel maxime adversari Ecclesiae a Christo Domino institutae. . . .

2999 Quamobrem ii omnes, qui Ecclesiae catholicae unitatem et veritatem non tenent, occasionem amplectantur huius Concilii, quo Ecclesia catholica, cui eorum Maiores adscripti erant, novum intimae unitatis et inexpugnabilis vitalis sui roboris exhibet argumentum, ac indigentibus eorum cordis respondentes ab eo statu se eripere studeant, in quo de sua propria salute securi esse non possunt.

Catholic Church find themselves . . . should be able very easily to convince himself that no particular one of those societies or even all of them joined together in any way constitute and are that one and catholic Church that Christ the Lord established, constituted, and willed to exist, nor can they in any way be said to be a member or part of the same Church, because they are visibly separated from Catholic unity.

For since these societies lack that living authority constituted by God which teaches men chiefly about matters of faith and the discipline of morals and directs and governs them in all those things that pertain to eternal salvation, as a result, these same societies have undergone constant changes in their doctrines, and such mobility and instability never cease in these societies. Anyone can easily understand . . . that all of this is altogether opposed to the Church instituted by Christ the Lord. . . .

Wherefore all those who are not part of Catholic unity and truth should welcome the occasion of this council in which the Catholic Church, to which their forefathers at one time belonged, demonstrates a new argument of her inner unity and her invincible vitality; and, in response to the inner desires of their heart, they should seek to free themselves from a situation in which they cannot be certain about their own salvation.

First VATICAN Council (Twentieth Ecumenical): December 8, 1869–October 20, 1870

Shortly before the publication of the Syllabus in December 1864 (cf. *2901–2980), Pius IX had consulted with some cardinals about the convocation of a council that would place Catholic doctrine in opposition to the errors of the day. See the vote of the cardinals in MaC 49:9–98. Since the majority of the cardinals approved this plan, in 1867, on the occasion of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, Pius IX announced it to the bishops assembled in Rome. On June 29, 1868, he published the bull of convocation, Aeterni Patris (MaC 50:193*–200*) [= 49 of the second part, 1249–1256] / CollLac 7:1–7). The opening of the council was set for December 8, 1869.

The importance of this council lies in its dogmatic decisions. Two subject areas were prepared: the explanation of the Catholic faith in opposition to the errors of the day and the doctrine of the Church of Christ. Because of political events, only one part of the points for discussion could be completed. Two constitutions were approved: Dei Filius on the Catholic faith and Pastor aeternus on the Church of Christ. An additional constitution on the Church could not be passed because of the interruption of the council. When the occupation of Rome on September 20 resulted in the loss of the pope's secular authority, he adjourned the council "sine die", for an indeterminate time, with the bull Postquam Dei munere of October 20, 1870 (MaC 53:155–58 / CollLac 7:497–500).

3000–3045: Session 3, April 24, 1870: Dogmatic Constitution Dei Filius on the Catholic Faith

The eighteen-chapter schema Apostolici muneris (MaC 50:59–74 / CollLac 7:507–18) submitted to the council Fathers was rejected because it was too lengthy and scholastic. Completely revised, it was submitted again for discussion in two parts on March 1 and 11, 1870. It was decided to publish the first four chapters as a constitution on its own (MaC 53:164–69 / CollLac 7:1628–32c [no. 555]). On March 14, an improved schema was presented: Cum aeternus Dei Filius (MaC 51:31–38 / CollLac 7:69–78). Following the general discussion (March 18–22) and the subsequent specialized discussion, a definitive text was formulated that was solemnly read in session 3 of April 24 and confirmed by the pope. The second part of the schema, presented on March 11, dealt with the Trinity, creation, and the exaltation, fall, and redemption of man (MaC 53:170–77 / CollLac 7:1632d–1636 [no. 556]). Because of the insistence of many conciliar Fathers to treat the doctrine of papal infallibility as soon as possible, this second part was removed from the program and was not taken up again later since the council, in the meantime, had been suspended.

Ed.: MaC 51:430–36 / CollLac 7:250a–256d / Pius IX, Acta 1/V, 180–94 / ASS 5 (1869/1870): 462–71 / COeD, 3rd ed., 805₂₃–811₂₆.

[The list of contents that follows the original titles of the particular chapters normally corresponds to the presentation made by the reporters at the council.]

Preface

... Nunc autem, sedentibus Nobiscum et iudicantibus universi orbis episcopis, in hanc oecumenicam Synodum auctoritate Nostra in Spiritu Sancto congregatis, innixi Dei Verbo scripto et tradito, prout ab Ecclesia catholica sancte custoditum et genuine expositum accepimus, ex hac Petri cathedra in conspectu omnium salutarem Christi doctrinam profiteri et declarare constituimus, adversis erroribus potestate Nobis a Deo tradita proscriptis atque damnatis.

... But now, together with the bishops of the whole world who, gathered in the Holy Spirit in this ecumenical council by Our authority, sit and judge with Us, and relying on the Word of God, written and handed down as We have received it, reverently preserved and authentically interpreted by the Catholic Church, We have decided to profess and declare from this chair of Peter, in the sight of all, the saving doctrine of Christ, rejecting and condemning opposing errors by means of the power granted Us by God. 3000

Cap. 1. De Deo rerum omnium creatore

Chapter 1. God, the Creator of All Things

[*3001: The one God, perfect and distinct from the world. —*3002: The act of creation; its perfection, purpose, and accomplishment. —*3003 Divine providence.]

Sancta catholica apostolica Romana Ecclesia credit et confitetur, unum esse Deum verum et vivum, creatorem ac Dominum caeli et terrae, omnipotentem, aeternum, immensum, incomprehensibilem, intellectu ac voluntate omnique perfectione infinitum; qui cum sit una singularis, simplex omnino et incommutabilis substantia spiritualis, praedicandus est re et essentia a mundo distinctus, in se et ex se beatissimus, et super omnia, quae praeter ipsum sunt et concipi possunt, ineffabiliter excelsus [cann. 1–4].

The holy, catholic, apostolic Roman Church believes and confesses there is one God, true and living, Creator and Lord of heaven and earth, almighty, eternal, immense, incomprehensible, infinite in his intellect and will and in all perfection. As he is one, unique, and spiritual substance, entirely simple and unchangeable, we must proclaim him distinct from the world in existence and essence, all blissful in himself and from himself, ineffably exalted above all things that exist or can be conceived besides him [cann. 1–4]. 3001

Hic solus verus Deus bonitate sua et “omnipotenti virtute” non ad augendam suam beatitudinem nec ad acquirendam, sed ad manifestandam perfectionem suam per bona, quae creaturis impertitur, liberrimo consilio, “simul ab initio temporis utramque de nihilo condidit creaturam, spirituales et corporales, angelicam videlicet et mundanam, ac deinde humanam quasi communem ex spiritu et corpore constitutam” [*Concilium Lateranense IV: 800; infra cann. 2 et 5].

This one and only true God, of his own goodness and almighty power, not for the increase of his own happiness or for the acquirement of his perfection, but in order to manifest his perfection through the benefits that he bestows on creatures, with absolute freedom of counsel, “from the beginning of time made at once out of nothing both orders of creatures, the spiritual and the corporeal, that is, the angelic and the earthly, and then the human creature, who as it were shares in both orders, being composed of spirit and body” [*Fourth Lateran Council: 800; cann. 2 and 5 below]. 3002

Universa vero, quae condidit, Deus providentia sua tuetur atque gubernat, “attingens a fine usque ad finem fortiter et disponens omnia suaviter” [Sap 8:1]. “Omnia enim nuda et aperta sunt oculis eius” [Hbr 4:13], ea etiam, quae libera creaturarum actione futura sunt.

By his providence God protects and governs all things that he has made, “reaching mightily from one end of the earth to the other, and ordering all things well” [Wis 8:1]. For “all are open and laid bare to his eyes” [Heb 4:13], even those things that will be done by the free action of creatures. 3003

Cap. 2. De revelatione

Chapter 2. Revelation

[*3004: The reality of supernatural revelation. —*3005: Its necessity. —*3006: Its sources. —*3007: Its interpretation: The Church.]

Eadem sancta mater Ecclesia tenet et docet, Deum, rerum omnium principium et finem, naturali humanae rationis lumine e rebus creatis certo cognosci posse;

The same Holy Mother Church holds and teaches that God, the beginning and end of all things, can be known with certainty from the things that were created through 3004

“invisibilia enim ipsius, a creatura mundi, per ea quae facta sunt, intellecta, conspiciuntur” [Rm 1:20]: attamen placuisse eius sapientiae et bonitati, alia eaque supernaturali via se ipsum ac aeterna voluntatis suae decreta humano generi revelare, dicente Apostolo: “Multifariam multisque modis olim Deus loquens patribus in Prophetis: novissime diebus istis locutus est nobis in Filio” [Hbr 1:1s; can. 1].

3005 Huic divinae revelationi tribuendum quidem est, ut ea, quae in rebus divinis humanae rationi per se impervia non sunt, in praesenti quoque generis humani condicione ab omnibus expedite, firma certitudine et nullo admixto errore cognosci possint.¹ Non hac tamen de causa revelatio absolute necessaria dicenda est, sed quia Deus ex infinita bonitate sua ordinavit hominem ad finem supernaturalem, ad participanda scilicet bona divina, quae humanae mentis intelligentiam omnino superant; siquidem “oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus iis, qui diligunt illum” [1 Cor 2:9; cann. 2 et 3].

3006 Haec porro supernaturalis revelatio, secundum universalis Ecclesiae fidem a sancta Tridentina Synodo declaratam continetur “in libris scriptis et sine scripto traditionibus, quae ipsius Christi ore ab Apostolis acceptae, aut ab ipsis Apostolis Spiritu Sancto dictante quasi per manus traditae, ad nos usque pervenerunt” [*1501]. Qui quidem Veteris et Novi Testamenti libri integri cum omnibus suis partibus, prout in eiusdem Concilii decreto recensentur, et in veteri Vulgata latina editione habentur, pro sacris et canonicis suscipiendi sunt. Eos vero Ecclesia pro sacris et canonicis habet, non ideo, quod sola humana industria concinnati, sua deinde auctoritate sint approbati; nec ideo dumtaxat, quod revelationem sine errore contineant; sed propterea, quod Spiritu Sancto inspirante conscripti Deum habent auctorem, atque ut tales ipsi Ecclesiae traditi sunt [can. 4].

3007 Quoniam vero, quae sancta Tridentina Synodus de interpretatione divinae Scripturae ad coercenda petulantia ingenia salubriter decrevit, a quibusdam hominibus prave exponuntur, Nos idem decretum renovantes hanc illius mentem esse declaramus, ut in rebus fidei et morum ad aedificationem doctrinae christianae pertinentium is pro vero sensu sacrae Scripturae habendus sit, quem tenuit ac tenet sancta mater Ecclesia, cuius est iudicare de vero

the natural light of human reason, for “ever since the creation of the world his invisible nature ... has been clearly perceived in the things that have been made” [Rom 1:20]; but it pleased his wisdom and goodness to reveal himself and the eternal decrees of his will in another and a supernatural way, as the apostle says: “In many and various ways God spoke of old to our fathers by the prophets; but in these last days he has spoken to us by a Son” [Heb 1:1–2; can. 1].

It is to be ascribed to this divine revelation that such truths among things divine that of themselves are not beyond human reason can, even in the present condition of mankind, be known by everyone with facility, with firm certitude, and with no admixture of error.¹ It is, however, not for this reason that revelation is to be called absolutely necessary, but because God in his infinite goodness has ordained man to a supernatural end, viz., to share in the good things of God that utterly exceed the intelligence of the human mind, for “no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, what God has prepared for those who love him” [1 Cor 2:9; cann. 2 and 3].

Further, this supernatural revelation, according to the universal belief of the Church, declared by the sacred Council of Trent, “is contained in the written books and unwritten traditions that have come down to us, having been received by the apostles from the mouth of Christ himself or from the apostles themselves by the dictation of the Holy Spirit, and have been transmitted as it were from hand to hand” [*1501]. These books of the Old and New Testaments are to be received as sacred and canonical in their integrity, with all their parts, as they are enumerated in the decree of the said council and are contained in the ancient Latin edition of the Vulgate. These the Church holds to be sacred and canonical, not because, having been carefully composed by mere human industry, they were afterward approved by her authority or merely because they contain revelation with no admixture of error, but because, having been written by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, they have God for their author and have been delivered as such to the Church herself [can. 4].

Since, however, what the holy Council of Trent has laid down concerning the interpretation of the divine Scripture for the good purpose of restraining undisciplined minds has been explained by certain men in a distorted manner, We renew the same decree and declare this to be its sense: In matters of faith and morals, affecting the building up of Christian doctrine, that is to be held as the true sense of Holy Scripture which Holy sensu et interpretatione Scripturarum sanctarum; atque ideo nemini licere contra hunc sensum aut etiam contra unanimum consensum Patrum ipsam Scripturam sacram interpretari.

¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 1, a. 1 (Editio Leonina 4:6b).

Cap. 3. De fide

[*3008: The concept of faith. —*3009: Faith in accord with reason. —*3010: Faith, a gift of God. —*3011: The object of faith. —*3012: The necessity of faith. —*3013f.: The external and internal help of God for faith.]

Cum homo a Deo tamquam creatore et Domino suo totus dependeat et ratio creata increatae Veritati penitus subiecta sit, plenum revelanti Deo intellectus et voluntatis obsequium fide praestare tenemur [can. 1]. Hanc vero fidem, quae humanae salutis initium esse [*cf. 1532], Ecclesia catholica profitetur, virtutem esse supernaturalem, qua, Dei aspirante et adjuvante gratia, ab eo revelata vera esse credimus, non propter intrinsecam rerum veritatem naturali rationis lumine perspectam, sed propter auctoritatem ipsius Dei revelantis, qui nec falli nec fallere potest [*cf. 2778; can. 2]. “Est enim fides”, testante Apostolo, “sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium” [Hbr 11:1].

Ut nihilominus fidei nostrae obsequium rationi consentaneum [cf. Rm 12:1] esset, voluit Deus cum internis Spiritus Sancti auxiliis externa iungi revelationis suae argumenta, facta scilicet divina, atque imprimis miracula et prophetias, quae cum Dei omnipotentiam et infinitam scientiam luculenter commonstrent, divinae revelationis signa sunt certissima et omnium intelligentiae accommodata [cann. 3 et 4]. Quare tum Moyses et Prophetiae, tum ipse maxime Christus Dominus multa et manifestissima miracula et prophetias ediderunt; et de Apostolis legimus: “Illi autem profecti praedicaverunt ubique Domino cooperante et sermonem confirmante sequentibus signis” [Mc 16:20]. Et rursus scriptum est: “Habemus firmiorem propheticum sermonem, cui benefacitis attendentes quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco” [2 Pt 1:19].

Licet autem fidei assensus nequaquam sit motus animi caecus: nemo tamen “evangelicae praedicationi consentire” potest, sicut oportet ad salutem consequendam, “absque illuminatione et inspiratione Spiritus Sancti, qui dat omnibus suavitatem in consentiendo et credendo veritati” [*Synodus Arausicana II: 377]. Quare fides ipsa in se, etiamsi per caritatem non operetur [cf. Gal 5:6], donum Dei est, et actus eius est opus ad salutem pertinens, quo homo liberam praestat ipsi Deo oboedientiam gratiae eius, cui resistere posset, consentiendo et cooperando [*cf. 1525s; can. 5].

Mother the Church has held and holds, to whom it belongs to judge of the true sense and interpretation of Holy Scriptures. Therefore no one is allowed to interpret the same Sacred Scripture contrary to this sense or contrary to the unanimous consent of the Fathers.

Chapter 3. Faith

Since man is totally dependent upon God, as upon his Creator and Lord, and since created reason is absolutely subject to uncreated truth, we are bound to yield by faith the full homage of intellect and will to the God who reveals [can. 1]. The Catholic Church professes that this faith, which is the beginning of man’s salvation [*cf. 1532] is a supernatural virtue whereby, inspired and assisted by the grace of God, we believe that what he has revealed is true, not because the intrinsic truth of things is recognized by the natural light of reason, but because of the authority of God himself who reveals them, who can neither err nor deceive [*cf. 2778; can. 2]. For faith, as the apostle testifies, is “the substance of things hoped for, the proof of things not seen” [Heb 11:1].

However, in order that the obedience of our faith be nevertheless in harmony with reason [cf. Rom 12:1], God willed that exterior proofs of his revelation, viz., divine facts, especially miracles and prophecies, should be joined to the interior helps of the Holy Spirit; as they manifestly display the omnipotence and infinite knowledge of God, they are the most certain signs of the divine revelation, adapted to the intelligence of all men [cann. 3 and 4]. Therefore Moses and the prophets, and especially Christ our Lord himself, performed many manifest miracles and uttered prophecies; and of the apostles we read: “They went forth and preached everywhere, while the Lord worked with them and confirmed their speech with the signs that followed” [Mk 16:20]; and again it is written: “We have the prophetic word made more sure; you will do well to pay attention to this as to a lamp shining in a dark place” [2 Pet 1:19].

Though the assent of faith is by no means a blind impulse of the mind, still no man can “assent to the Gospel message”, as is necessary to obtain salvation, “without the illumination and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, who gives to all delight in assenting to the truth and believing it” [*Second Council of Orange: 377]. Wherefore faith itself, even when it is not working through love [cf. Gal 5:6], is in itself a gift of God, and the act of faith is a work appertaining to salvation by which man yields voluntary obedience to God himself by assenting to and cooperating with grace, which he could resist [*cf. 1525f.; can. 5].

3008

3009

3010

3011 Porro fide divina et catholica ea omnia credenda sunt, quae in verbo Dei scripto vel tradito continentur et ab Ecclesia sive solemn iudicio sive ordinario et universali magisterio tamquam divinitus revelata credenda proponuntur.

3012 Quoniam vero “sine fide impossibile est placere Deo” [Hbr 11:6] et ad filiorum eius consortium pervenire, ideo nemini umquam sine illa contigit iustificatio, nec ullus, nisi in ea “perseveraverit usque in finem” [Mt 10:22; 24:13], vitam aeternam assequetur. Ut autem officio veram fidem amplectendi in eaque constanter perseverandi satisfacere possemus, Deus per Filium suum unigenitum Ecclesiam instituit, suaeque institutionis manifestis notis instruxit, ut ea tamquam custos et magistra verbi revelati ab omnibus posset agnosci.

3013 Ad solam enim catholicam Ecclesiam ea pertinent omnia, quae ad evidentem fidei christianae credibilitatem tam multa et tam mira divinitus sunt disposita. Quin etiam Ecclesia per se ipsa, ob suam nempe admirabilem propagationem, eximiam sanctitatem et inexhaustam in omnibus bonis foecunditatem, ob catholicam unitatem invictamque stabilitatem magnum quoddam et perpetuum est motivum credibilitatis et divinae suae legationis testimonium irrefragabile.

3014 Quo fit, ut ipsa veluti signum levatum in nationes [cf. Is 11:12] et ad se invitet, qui nondum crediderunt, et filios suos certiores faciat, firmissimo niti fundamento fidem, quam profitentur. Cui quidem testimonio efficax subsidium accedit ex superna virtute. Etenim benignissimus Dominus et errantes gratia sua excitat atque adiuvat, ut “ad agnitionem veritatis venire” [1 Tim 2:4] possint, et eos, quos de tenebris transtulit in admirabile lumen suum [cf. 1 Pt 2:9; Col 1:13], in hoc eodem lumine ut perseverent, gratia sua confirmat, non deserens, nisi deseratur [*cf. 1537].

Quocirca minime par est condicio eorum, qui per caeleste fidei donum catholicae veritati adhaeserunt, atque eorum, qui ducti opinionibus humanis falsam religionem sectantur; illi enim, qui fidem sub Ecclesiae magisterio susceperunt, nullam umquam habere possunt iustam causam mutandi aut in dubium fidem eandem revocandi [can. 6]. Quae cum ita sint, “gratias agentes Deo Patri, qui dignos nos fecit in partem sortis sanctorum in lumine” [Col 1:12], tantam ne negligamus salutem [cf. Hbr 2:3], sed “aspicientes in auctorem fidei et consummatorem Iesum” [Hbr 12:2] “teneamus spei nostrae confessionem indeclinabilem” [Hbr 10:23].

Further, all those things are to be believed with divine and Catholic faith that are contained in the word of God, written or handed down, and which by the Church, either in solemn judgment or through her ordinary and universal teaching office, are proposed for belief as having been divinely revealed.

Since “without faith it is impossible to please God” [Heb 11:6] and to attain to the fellowship of his sons, therefore without faith no one has ever attained justification, nor will anyone obtain eternal life unless he has persevered in it to the end [cf. Mt 10:22; 24:13]. However, to enable us to fulfill the obligation to embrace the true faith and persistently to persevere in it, God has instituted the Church through his only begotten Son and has endowed her with manifest marks of his institution so that she may be recognized by all men as the guardian and teacher of the revealed word.

In fact, it is to the Catholic Church alone that belong all those signs that are so numerous and so wonderfully arranged by God to make evident the credibility of the Christian faith. In fact, the Church by herself, with her marvelous propagation, eminent holiness, and inexhaustible fruitfulness in everything that is good, with her catholic unity and invincible stability, is a great and perpetual motive of credibility and an irrefutable testimony of her divine mission.

Thus, like a standard lifted up among the nations [cf. Is 11:12], she invites to herself those who do not yet believe and at the same time gives greater assurance to her children that the faith that they profess rests on solid ground. To this testimony the efficacious help coming from the power above is added. For the merciful Lord stirs up and aids with his grace those who are wandering astray, that they be able to “come to the knowledge of the truth” [1 Tim 2:4], and those whom “he has called out of darkness into his marvelous light” [cf. 1 Pet 2:9; Col 1:13] he confirms with his grace that they may persevere in this faith, for he deserts none who does not desert him [*cf. 1537].

Therefore, the condition of those who by the heavenly gift of faith have embraced the Catholic truth and of those who led by human opinions follow a false religion is by no means the same. For, those who have received the faith under the teaching authority of the Church can never have a just reason to change this same faith or to call it into question [can. 6]. For this reason, “giving thanks to God the Father who has qualified us to share in the inheritance of the saints in light” [Col 1:12], let us not neglect so great a salvation [cf. Heb 2:3], but “looking to Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith” [Heb 12:2], “let us hold fast the confession of our hope without wavering” [Heb 10:23].

Cap. 4. De fide et ratione

Chapter 4. Faith and Reason

[*3015: The double order of knowledge. —*3016: The role of reason in the elaboration of supernatural truth. —*3017f.: No opposition between faith and reason. —*3019: The mutual assistance of faith and reason. —*3020: The nature of progress in theological knowledge.]

Hoc quoque perpetuus Ecclesiae catholicae consensus tenuit et tenet, duplicem esse ordinem cognitionis non solum principio, sed obiecto etiam distinctum: principio quidem, quia in altero naturali ratione, in altero fide divina cognoscimus; obiecto autem, quia praeter ea, ad quae naturalis ratio pertingere potest, credenda nobis proponuntur mysteria in Deo abscondita, quae, nisi revelata divinitus, innotescere non possunt [can. 1].

Quocirca Apostolus, qui a gentibus Deum “per ea, quae facta sunt” [Rm 1:20], cognitum esse testatur, disserens tamen de gratia et veritate, quae per Iesum Christum facta est [cf. Io 1:17], pronuntiat: “Loquimur Dei sapientiam in mysterio, quae abscondita est, quam praedestinavit Deus ante saecula in gloriam nostram, quam nemo principum huius saeculi cognovit. Nobis autem revelavit Deus per Spiritum suum: Spiritus enim omnia scrutatur, etiam profunda Dei” [1 Cor 2:7s 10]. Et ipse Unigenitus confitetur Patri, quia abscondit haec a sapientibus et prudentibus, et revelavit ea parvulis [cf. Mt 11:25].

Ac ratio quidem, fide illustrata, cum sedulo, pie et sobrie quaerit, aliquam Deo dante mysteriorum intelligentiam eamque fructuosissimam assequitur tum ex eorum, quae naturaliter cognoscit, analogia, tum e mysteriorum ipsorum nexu inter se et cum fine hominis ultimo; numquam tamen idonea redditur ad ea perspicenda instar veritatum, quae proprium ipsius obiectum constituunt. Divina enim mysteria suapte natura intellectum creatum sic excedunt, ut etiam revelatione tradita et fide suscepta ipsius tamen fidei velamine contacta et quadam quasi caligine obvoluta maneant, quamdiu in hac mortali vita “peregrinamur a Domino: per fidem enim ambulamus et non per speciem” [2 Cor 5:6s].

Verum etsi fides sit supra rationem, nulla tamen umquam inter fidem et rationem vera dissensio esse potest [*cf. 2776, 2811]: cum idem Deus, qui mysteria revelat et fidem infundit, animo humano rationis lumen indiderit, Deus autem negare se ipsum non possit, nec verum vero umquam contradicere. Inanis autem huius contradictionis species inde potissimum oritur, quod vel fidei dogmata ad mentem Ecclesiae intellecta et exposita non fuerint vel opinionum commenta pro rationis effatis habeantur. “Omnem” igitur “assertionem

The perpetual common belief of the Catholic Church 3015 has held and holds also this: there is a twofold order of knowledge, distinct not only in its principle but also in its object; in its principle, because in the one we know by natural reason, in the other by divine faith; in its object, because apart from what natural reason can attain, there are proposed to our belief mysteries that are hidden in God that can never be known unless they are revealed by God [can. 1].

Hence the apostle who, on the one hand, testifies that God is known to the Gentiles in the things that have been made [cf. Rom 1:20], on the other hand, when speaking about the grace and truth that came through Jesus Christ [cf. Jn 1:17], proclaims: “We speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, a wisdom which is hidden, which God ordained before the world unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world knew. . . . But to us God has revealed by his Spirit. For the Spirit searches everything, even the deep things of God” [1 Cor 2:7–10, Vulg.]. The Only-Begotten himself praises the Father because he has hidden these things from the wise and understanding and has revealed them to babes [cf. Mt 11:25].

Nevertheless, if reason illumined by faith inquires in 3016 an earnest, pious, and sober manner, it attains by God’s grace a certain understanding of the mysteries, which is most fruitful, both from the analogy with the objects of its natural knowledge and from the connection of these mysteries with one another and with man’s ultimate end. But it never becomes capable of understanding them in the way it does truths that constitute its proper object. For divine mysteries by their very nature so exceed the created intellect that, even when they have been communicated in revelation and received by faith, they remain covered by the veil of faith itself and shrouded, as it were, in darkness as long as in this mortal life “we are away from the Lord; for we walk by faith, not by sight” [2 Cor 5:6f.].

However, though faith is above reason, there can 3017 never be a real discrepancy between faith and reason [*cf. 2776, 2811], since the same God who reveals mysteries and infuses faith has bestowed the light of reason on the human mind, and God cannot deny himself, nor can truth ever contradict truth. The deceptive appearance of such a contradiction is mainly due to the fact that either the dogmas of faith have not been understood and expounded according to the mind of the Church or fanciful conjectures are taken for verdicts of reason.

veritati illuminatae fidei contrariam omnino falsam esse definimus” [*Concilium Lateranense V: 1441].

3018 Porro Ecclesia, quae una cum apostolico munere docendi mandatum accepit fidei depositum custodiendi, ius etiam et officium divinitus habet falsi nominis scientiam [cf. 1 Tim 6:20] proscribendi, ne quis decipiat per philosophiam et inanem fallaciam [cf. Col 2:8; can. 2].

Quapropter omnes Christiani fideles huiusmodi opiniones, quae fidei doctrinae contrariae esse cognoscuntur, maxime si ab Ecclesia reprobatae fuerint, non solum prohibentur tamquam legitimae scientiae conclusiones defendere, sed pro erroribus potius, qui fallacem veritatis speciem prae se ferant, habere tenentur omnino.

3019 Neque solum fides et ratio inter se dissidere numquam possunt, sed opem quoque sibi mutuam ferunt [*cf. 2776, 2811], cum recta ratio fidei fundamenta demonstrat eiusque lumine illustrata rerum divinarum scientiam excolat, fides vero rationem ab erroribus liberet ac teneat eamque multiplicitate cognitione instruat.

Quapropter tantum abest, ut Ecclesia humanarum artium et disciplinarum culturae obsistat, ut hanc multis modis iuvet atque promoveat. Non enim commoda ab iis ad hominum vitam dimanantia aut ignorat aut despicit; fatetur immo, eas, quemadmodum a Deo scientiarum Domino [cf. 1 Sm 2:3] profectae sunt, ita, si rite pertractentur, ad Deum iuvante eius gratia perducere.

Nec sane ipsa vetat, ne huiusmodi disciplinae in suo quaque ambitu propriis utantur principiis et propria methodo; sed iustam hanc libertatem agnoscens, id sedulo cavet, ne divinae doctrinae repugnando errores in se suscipiant, aut fines proprios transgressae ea, quae sunt fidei, occupent et perturbent.

3020 Neque enim fidei doctrina, quam Deus revelavit, velut philosophicum inventum proposita est humanis ingeniis perficienda, sed tamquam divinum depositum Christi Sponsae tradita, fideliter custodienda et infallibiliter declaranda. Hinc sacrorum quoque dogmatum is sensus perpetuo est retinendus, quem semel declaravit sancta mater Ecclesia, nec umquam ab eo sensu altioris intelligentiae specie et nomine recedendum [can. 3]. “Crescat igitur et multum vehementerque proficiat, tam singulorum quam omnium, tam unius hominis quam totius Ecclesiae, aetatum ac saeculorum gradibus, intelligentia, scientia, sapientia: sed in suo dumtaxat genere, in eodem scilicet dogmate, eodem sensu eademque sententia.”¹

Thus “we define that every assertion that is opposed to enlightened faith is utterly false” [*Fifth Lateran Council: 1441].

Further, the Church, which, along with the apostolic office of teaching, received the charge of guarding the deposit of faith, has also from God the right and the duty to proscribe what is falsely called knowledge [cf. 1 Tim 6:20], lest anyone be deceived by philosophy and vain fallacy [cf. Col 2:8; can. 2].

Hence all believing Christians are not only forbidden to defend as legitimate conclusions of science such opinions that they realize to be contrary to the doctrine of faith, particularly if they have been condemned by the Church, but they are seriously bound to account them as errors that put on the fallacious appearance of truth.

Not only can there be no conflict between faith and reason, they also support each other [*cf. 2776, 2811] since right reason demonstrates the foundations of faith and, illumined by its light, pursues the science of divine things, while faith frees and protects reason from errors and provides it with manifold insights.

It is therefore far remote from the truth to say that the Church opposes the study of human arts and sciences; on the contrary, she supports and promotes them in many ways. She does not ignore or despise the benefits that human life derives from them. Indeed, she acknowledges that, just as they have come forth from God, the Lord of knowledge [cf. 1 Sam 2:3], so too, if rightly pursued, they lead to God with the help of his grace.

Nor does the Church in any way forbid that these sciences, each in its own domain, should make use of their own principles and of the method proper to them. While, however, acknowledging this just freedom, she seriously warns lest they fall into error by going contrary to the divine doctrine or, stepping beyond their own limits, enter into the sphere of faith and create confusion.

For the doctrine of faith that God has revealed has not been proposed like a philosophical system to be perfected by human ingenuity; rather, it has been committed to the spouse of Christ as a divine trust to be faithfully kept and infallibly declared. Hence also that meaning of the sacred dogmas is perpetually to be retained which our Holy Mother Church has once declared, and there must never be a deviation from that meaning on the specious ground and title of a more profound understanding [can. 3]. “Therefore, let there be growth and abundant progress in understanding, knowledge, and wisdom, in each and all, in individuals and in the whole Church, at all times and in the progress of ages, but only within the proper limits, i.e., within the same dogma, the same meaning, the same judgment.”¹

¹ *3020 Vincent of Lérins, Commonitorium primum 23, no. 3 (R. Demeulenaere: CpChL 64 [1985]: 177–178₁₂ / PL 50:668A).

CanonesCanons1. De Deo rerum omnium creatoreI. God, the Creator of All Things

[Can. 1: Against all the errors pertaining to the existence of God, the Creator. —Can. 2: Against materialism. —Cann. 3f. Against pantheism in its various forms. —Can. 5: (a) Against the pantheists and materialists; (b) against the followers of Günther; (c) against the followers of Günther and Hermes.]

1. Si quis unum verum Deum visibilium et invisibilium creatorem et Dominum negaverit: anathema sit [cf. *3001].

1. If anyone denies the one true God, Creator and Lord of things visible and invisible, let him be anathema [cf. *3001]. 3021

2. Si quis praeter materiam nihil esse affirmare non erubuerit: anathema sit [cf. *3002].

2. If anyone is not ashamed to assert that nothing exists besides matter, let him be anathema [cf. *3002]. 3022

3. Si quis dixerit, unam eandemque esse Dei et rerum omnium substantiam vel essentiam: anathema sit [cf. *3001].

3. If anyone says that the substance and essence of God and all things is one and the same, let him be anathema [cf. *3001]. 3023

4. Si quis dixerit, res finitas tum corporeas tum spirituales aut saltem spirituales e divina substantia emanasse,

4. If anyone says that finite beings, the corporeal as well as the spiritual, or at least the spiritual ones, have emanated from the divine substance; 3024 aut divinam essentiam sui manifestatione vel evolutione fieri omnia, or that the divine essence becomes all things by self-manifestation or self-evolution;

aut denique Deum esse ens universale seu indefinitum, quod sese determinando constituat rerum universitatem in genera, species et individua distinctam: anathema sit.

or lastly that God is the universal or indefinite being which, by self-determination, constitutes the universality of beings, differentiated in genera, species, and individuals, let him be anathema.

5. Si quis non confiteatur, mundum resque omnes, quae in eo continentur, et spirituales et materiales secundum totam suam substantiam a Deo ex nihilo esse productas,

5. If anyone refuses to confess that the world and all things contained in it, the spiritual as well as the material, were in their whole substance produced by God out of nothing; 3025

aut Deum dixerit non voluntate ab omni necessitate libera, sed tam necessario creasse, quam necessario amat se ipsum, or says that God created, not by an act of will free from all necessity, but with the same necessity by which he necessarily loves himself;

aut mundum ad Dei gloriam conditum esse negaverit: anathema sit.

or denies that the world was made for the glory of God, let him be anathema.

2. De revelatione2. Revelation

[Can. 1: Against those who reject natural theology. —Can. 2: Against Deism. —Can. 3: Against absolute rationalism. —Can. 4: Against the biblical criticism of the rationalists.]

1. Si quis dixerit, Deum unum et verum, creatorem et Dominum nostrum, per ea, quae facta sunt, naturali rationis humanae lumine certo cognosci non posse: anathema sit [cf. *3004].

1. If anyone says that the one true God, our Creator and Lord, cannot be known with certainty with the natural light of human reason through the things that are created, let him be anathema [cf. *3004]. 3026

2. Si quis dixerit, fieri non posse aut non expedire, ut per revelationem divinam homo de Deo cultuque ei exhibendo doceatur: anathema sit.

2. If anyone says that it is impossible or useless for man to be taught through divine revelation about God and the worship to be rendered to him, let him be anathema. 3027

3. Si quis dixerit, hominem ad cognitionem et perfectionem, quae naturalem superet, divinitus evehi non posse, sed ex se ipso ad omnis tandem veri et boni possessionem iugi profectu pertingere posse et debere: anathema sit.

3. If anyone says that man cannot be called by God to a knowledge and perfection that surpasses the natural, but that he can and must by himself, through constant progress, finally arrive at the possession of all that is true and good, let him be anathema. 3028

3029 4. Si quis sacrae Scripturae libros integros cum omnibus suis partibus, prout illos sancta Tridentina Synodus recensuit [*1501–1508], pro sacris et canonicis non susceperit aut eos divinitus inspiratos esse negaverit: anathema sit [cf. *3006].

3. De fide

[Cann. 1f.: Against the autonomy of reason. —Can. 3: Against fideism. —Can. 4: Against agnosticism and mythologism. —Cann. 5f.: Against the followers of Hermes.]

3031 1. Si quis dixerit, rationem humanam ita independentem esse, ut fides ei a Deo imperari non possit: anathema sit [cf. *3008].

3032 2. Si quis dixerit, fidem divinam a naturali de Deo et rebus moralibus scientia non distingui, ac propterea ad fidem divinam non requiri, ut revelata veritas propter auctoritatem Dei revelantis credatur: anathema sit [cf. *3008].

3033 3. Si quis dixerit, revelationem divinam externis signis credibilem fieri non posse, ideoque sola interna cuiusque experientia aut inspiratione privata homines ad fidem moveri debere: anathema sit [cf. *3009].

3034 4. Si quis dixerit, miracula nulla fieri posse, proindeque omnes de iis narrationes, etiam in sacra Scriptura contentas, inter fabulas vel mythos ablegandas esse; aut miracula certo cognosci numquam posse nec iis divinam religionis christianae originem rite probari: anathema sit [cf. *3009].

3035 5. Si quis dixerit, assensum fidei christianae non esse liberum, sed argumentis humanae rationis necessario produci; aut ad solam fidem vivam, quae per caritatem operatur [cf. Gal 5:6], gratiam Dei necessariam esse: anathema sit [cf. *3010].

3036 6. Si quis dixerit, parem esse condicionem fidelium atque eorum, qui ad fidem unice veram nondum pervenerunt, ita ut catholici iustam causam habere possint fidem, quam sub Ecclesiae magisterio iam susceperunt, assensu suspenso in dubium vocandi, donec demonstrationem scientificam credibilitatis et veritatis fidei suae absolverint: anathema sit [cf. *3014].

4. De fide et ratione

[Against the more liberal philosophical and theological schools.]

3041 1. Si quis dixerit, in revelatione divina nulla vera et proprie dicta mysteria contineri, sed universa fidei dogmata posse per rationem rite excultam e naturalibus principiis intelligi et demonstrari: anathema sit [cf. *3015s].

4. If anyone does not receive as sacred and canonical the books of Holy Scripture, entire and with all their parts, as the sacred Council of Trent has enumerated them [*1501–1508] or denies that they have been divinely inspired, let him be anathema [cf. *3006].

3. Faith

1. If anyone says that human reason is so independent that faith cannot be enjoined upon it by God, let him be anathema [cf. *3008].

2. If anyone says that divine faith is not distinct from the natural knowledge of God and of moral truths; that, therefore, for divine faith it is not necessary that the revealed truth be believed on the authority of God who reveals it, let him be anathema [cf. *3008].

3. If anyone says that divine revelation cannot be made credible by outward signs and that, therefore, men ought to be moved to faith solely by each one's inner experience or by personal inspiration, let him be anathema [cf. *3009].

4. If anyone says that no miracles are possible and that, therefore, all accounts of them, even those contained in Holy Scripture, are to be dismissed as fables and myths; or that miracles can never be recognized with certainty and that the divine origin of the Christian religion cannot be legitimately proved by them, let him be anathema [cf. *3009].

5. If anyone says that the assent to the Christian faith is not free but is produced with necessity by arguments of human reason; or that the grace of God is necessary only for that living faith which works by love [cf. Gal 5:6], let him be anathema [cf. *3010].

6. If anyone says that the condition of the faithful and of those who have not yet attained to the only true faith is the same, so that Catholics could have a just reason for suspending their judgment and calling into question the faith that they have already received under the teaching authority of the Church until they have completed a scientific demonstration of the credibility and truth of their faith, let him be anathema [cf. *3014].

4. Faith and Reason

1. If anyone says that in divine revelation no true and properly so called mysteries are contained but that all dogmas of faith can be understood and demonstrated from natural principles by reason, if it is properly trained, let him be anathema [cf. *3015f.].

2. Si quis dixerit, disciplinas humanas ea cum libertate tractandas esse, ut earum assertiones, etsi doctrinae revelatae adversentur, tamquam verae retineri neque ab Ecclesia proscribi possint: anathema sit [cf. *3017].

2. If anyone says that human sciences are to be pursued with such liberty that their assertions, even if opposed to revealed doctrine, may be held as true and cannot be proscribed by the Church, let him be anathema [cf. *3017]. 3042

3. Si quis dixerit, fieri posse, ut dogmatibus ab Ecclesia propositis aliquando secundum progressum scientiae sensus tribuendus sit alius ab eo, quem intellexit et intelligit Ecclesia: anathema sit [cf. *3020].

3. If anyone says that, as science progresses, at times a sense is to be given to dogmas proposed by the Church different from the one that the Church has understood and understands, let him be anathema [cf. *3020]. 3043

Epilogue

Itaque supremi pastoralis Nostri officii debitum exsequentes, omnes Christi fideles, maxime vero eos, qui praesunt vel docendi munere funguntur, per viscera Iesu Christi obtestamur, necnon eiusdem Dei et Salvatoris nostri auctoritate iubemus, ut ad hos errores a sancta Ecclesia arcendos et eliminandos, atque purissimae fidei lucem pandendam studium et operam conferant.

Therefore, in fulfillment of Our supreme pastoral office, We beseech in the love of Jesus Christ, and We command in the authority of the same God our Savior, all Christian faithful, and especially those who hold authority or are engaged in teaching, to put their zeal and effort in removing and eliminating these errors from the holy Church and in spreading the light of the most pure faith. 3044

Quoniam vero satis non est, haereticam pravitatem devitare, nisi ii quoque errores diligenter fugiantur, qui ad illam plus minusve accedunt, omnes officii monemus, servandi etiam constitutiones et decreta, quibus pravae eiusmodi opiniones, quae isthic diserte non enumerantur, ab hac Sancta Sede proscriptae et prohibitae sunt.

It is, however, not enough to avoid the wickedness of heresy unless those errors that lead close to it are also carefully avoided. We therefore remind all of their duty to observe also the constitutions and decrees by which such perverse opinions, which are not explicitly enumerated here, are proscribed by this Holy See. 3045

3050–3075: Session 4, July 18, 1870: First Dogmatic Constitution Pastor aeternus on the Church of Christ

The council Fathers were presented with a schema of fifteen chapters and twenty-one canons, Supremi Pastoris (MaC 51:539–53 / CollLac 7:567–78), which contained the doctrine of the primacy (chap. 11) but not the infallibility of the pope. At the wish of many, Pius IX placed the theme of infallibility on the agenda for March 7, 1870. The day before, a schema of an additional chapter on the infallibility of the pope had been prepared (MaC 51:701D–702A / CollLac 7:641ab). In the course of the discussion, a constitution emerged that was exclusively on the pope, subdivided into four chapters. Consequently, a new schema was drawn up and, on May 9, 1870, it was submitted to the general assembly of the commission (MaC 52:4–7 / CollLac 7:1640–43 [no. 558]). It was presented, in an improved version, to the council on July 13. In the fourth public session, on July 18, the definition took place.

In the debate regarding the infallibility of the pope, many council Fathers expressed hesitations: such a definition would open the door to abuses of the ecclesiastical teaching authority; the linking of the pope to Scripture and tradition was not sufficiently secure; certain historical facts argued for a distinction between the pope as an infallible universal teacher and the pope as a fallible private teacher (cf. *2565). Because of these difficulties, a considerable portion of the council Fathers resisted the definition but lost to the majority. After one final effort of the minority failed at the last minute to persuade Pius IX to give in, many council Fathers departed before the decisive session of the council (July 18).

In the public arena, papal infallibility has often been rejected because of an exaggerated idea of it spread by the so-called Ultramontanists. Louis Veuillot, the influential editor of the journal L'Univers, for example, had proposed to have papal infallibility established simply by acclamation without making any precise theological clarification. On July 11, 1870, in the 84th general assembly, Bishop Vinzenz Gasser, spokesman for the Deputation on Faith, explained the meaning and the limits of papal infallibility in view of the subject, the object, and the act (MaC 52:1204–30 / CollLac 7:388–420). The secretary of the council, Bishop Joseph Feßler, after the closing of the council, wrote a book, Die wahre and die falsche Unfehlbarkeit der Päpste (3rd ed.: Vienna, 1871; French ed.: Paris, 1873; English ed.: The True and False Infallibility of the Popes [New York: Catholic Publication Society, 1875]), which has come to be regarded as one of the most excellent commentaries on the debate over infallibility.

Ed.: MaC 52:1330–34 / CollLac 7:482–87 / Pius IX, Acta, I/V, 207–18 / ASS 6 (1870/1871): 40–47 / COeD, 3rd ed., 811₂₉–816₃₉.

Prologue on the Institution and Foundation of the Church

Pastor aeternus et episcopus animarum nostrarum [cf. 1 Pt 2:25], ut salutiferum redemptionis opus perenne redderet, sanctam aedificare Ecclesiam decrevit, in qua veluti in domo Dei viventis fideles omnes unius fidei et

The eternal Shepherd and Guardian of our souls [cf. 1 Pet 2:25], in order to continue for all time the saving work of redemption, determined to build his holy Church so that in her, as in the house of the living God, all who 3050 caritatis vinculo continerentur. Quapropter, priusquam clarificaretur, rogavit Patrem non pro Apostolis tantum, sed et pro eis, qui credituri erant per verbum eorum in ipsum, ut omnes unum essent, sicut ipse Filius et Pater unum sunt [cf. Io 17:20s]. Quemadmodum igitur Apostolos, quos sibi de mundo elegerat [cf. Io 15:19], misit, sicut ipse missus erat a Patre [cf. Io 20:21]: ita in Ecclesia sua pastores et doctores “usque ad consummationem saeculi” [Mt 28:20] esse voluit.

3051 Ut vero episcopatus ipse unus et indivisus esset, et per cohaerentes sibi invicem sacerdotes credentium multitudo universa in fidei et communionis unitate conservaretur, beatum Petrum ceteris Apostolis praeponens in ipso instituit perpetuum utriusque unitatis principium ac visibile fundamentum, super cuius fortitudinem aeternum extrueretur templum, et Ecclesiae caelo inferenda sublimitas in huius fidei firmitate consurgeret.¹

3052 Et quoniam portae inferi ad evertendam, si fieri posset, Ecclesiam, contra eius fundamentum divinitus positum maiore in dies odio undique insurgunt, Nos ad catholici gregis custodiam, incolumitatem, augmentum, necessarium esse iudicamus, sacro approbante Concilio, doctrinam de institutione, perpetuitate ac natura sacri Apostolici primatus, in quo totius Ecclesiae vis ac soliditas consistit, cunctis fidelibus credendam et tenendam, secundum antiquam atque constantem universalis Ecclesiae fidem, proponere, atque contrarios, dominico gregi adeo perniciosos errores proscribere et condemnare.

Cap. 1. De apostolici primatus in beato Petro institutione

3053 Docemus itaque et declaramus, iuxta Evangelii testimonia primatum iurisdictionis in universam Dei Ecclesiam immediate et directe beato Petro Apostolo promissum atque collatum a Christo Domino fuisse. Unum enim Simonem, cui iam pridem dixerat: “Tu vocaberis Cephas” [Io 1:42], postquam ille suam edidit confessionem inquit: “Tu es Christus, Filius Dei vivi”, solemnibus his verbis allocutus est Dominus: “Beatus es, Simon Bar Iona: quia caro et sanguis non revelavit tibi, sed Pater meus, qui in caelis est. Et ego dico tibi, quia tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam, et portae inferi non praevalerunt adversus eam: et tibi dabo claves regni caelorum. Et quodcumque ligaveris believe might be united together in the bond of one faith and one love. For this reason, before he was glorified, he prayed to the Father, not for the apostles only, but for those also who would believe in him on their testimony, that all might be one as he, the Son, and the Father are one [cf. Jn 17:20f.]. Therefore, just as he sent the apostles whom he had chosen for himself out of the world [cf. Jn 15:19] as he himself was sent by the Father [cf. Jn 20:21], so also he wished shepherds and teachers to be in his Church until the consummation of the world [cf. Mt 28:20].

In order that the episcopate itself might be one and undivided and that the whole multitude of believers might be preserved in unity of faith and communion by means of a closely united priesthood, he placed St. Peter at the head of the other apostles and established in him a perpetual principle and visible foundation of this twofold unity, in order that on his strength an everlasting temple might be erected and on the firmness of his faith a Church might arise whose pinnacle was to reach into heaven.¹

But since the gates of hell, with a hatred that grows greater every day, are rising up everywhere against the Church’s divinely established foundation with the intention of overthrowing the Church, if this were possible, We, with the approval of the sacred council, judge it necessary for the protection, the safety, and the increase of the Catholic flock to propose to all the faithful what is to be believed and held, according to the ancient and constant belief of the universal Church, with regard to the establishment, the perpetuity, and the nature of this sacred apostolic primacy, in which is found the strength and solidity of the entire Church. Likewise [We judge it necessary] to proscribe with sentence of condemnation the contrary erroneous opinions so detrimental to the Lord’s flock.

Chapter 1: The institution of the apostolic primacy in St. Peter

We, therefore, teach and declare, according to the testimony of the Gospel, that the primacy of jurisdiction over the whole Church was immediately and directly promised to and conferred upon the blessed apostle Peter by Christ the Lord. To Simon alone he had first said: “You shall be called Cephas” [Jn 1:42]; to him alone, after he had acknowledged Christ with the confession: “You are the Christ, the Son of the living God”, the Lord also spoke these solemn words: “Blessed are you, Simon Bar-Jona! For flesh and blood has not revealed this to you, but my Father who is in heaven. And I tell you: you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. I will give super terram, erit ligatum et in caelis: et quodcumque solveris super terram, erit solutum et in caelis” [Mt 16:16–19]. Atque uni Simoni Petro contulit Iesus post suam resurrectionem summi pastoris et rectoris iurisdictionem in totum suum ovile dicens: “Pasce agnos meos”, “Pasce oves meas” [Io 21:15–17].

*3051 ¹ Leo I the Great, sermon 4 on his birthday [that is, the anniversary of his election as bishop of Rome], chap. 2 (PL 54:150C).

Huic tam manifestae sacrarum Scripturarum doctrinae, ut ab Ecclesia catholica semper intellecta est, aperte opponuntur pravae eorum sententiae, qui constitutam a Christo Domino in sua Ecclesia regiminis formam pervertentes negant, solum Petrum prae ceteris Apostolis sive seorsum singulis sive omnibus simul vero proprioque iurisdictionis primatu fuisse a Christo instructum; aut qui affirmant, eundem primatum non immediate directeque ipsi beato Petro, sed Ecclesiae et per hanc illi ut ipsius Ecclesiae ministro delatum fuisse.

[Canon.] Si quis igitur dixerit, beatum Petrum Apostolum non esse a Christo Domino constitutum Apostolorum omnium principem et totius Ecclesiae militantis visibile caput; vel eundem honoris tantum, non autem verae propriaeque iurisdictionis primatum ab eodem Domino nostro Iesu Christo directe et immediate accepisse: anathema sit.

Cap. 2. De perpetuitate primatus beati Petri in Romanis Pontificibus

Quod autem in beato Apostolo Petro princeps pastorum et pastor magnus ovium Dominus Christus Iesus in perpetuam salutem ac perenne bonum Ecclesiae instituit, id eodem auctore in Ecclesia, quae fundata super petram ad finem saeculorum usque firma stabit, iugiter durare necesse est. “Nulli” sane “dubium, immo saeculis omnibus notum est, quod sanctus beatissimusque Petrus, Apostolorum princeps et caput fideique columna et Ecclesiae catholicae fundamentum, a Domino nostro Iesu Christo, Salvatore humani generis ac Redemptore, claves regni accepit: qui ad hoc usque tempus et semper in suis successoribus”, episcopis sanctae Romanae Sedis, ab ipso fundatae eiusque consecratae sanguine “vivit” et praesidet et “iudicium exercet”.¹

Unde quicumque in hac cathedra Petro succedit, is secundum Christi ipsius institutionem primatum Petri in universam Ecclesiam obtinet. “Manet ergo dispositio veritatis, et beatus Petrus in accepta fortitudine petrae perseverans suscepta Ecclesiae gubernacula you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven” [Mt 16:16–19]. And after his Resurrection, Jesus conferred upon Simon Peter alone the jurisdiction of supreme shepherd and ruler over his whole flock with the words: “Feed my lambs. . . . Feed my sheep” [Jn 21:15–17].

In manifest opposition to this very clear teaching of the Holy Scriptures, as it has always been understood by the Catholic Church, are the perverse opinions of those who wrongly explain the form of government established by Christ in his Church; either by denying that Peter alone in preference to the other apostles, either singly or as a group, was endowed by Christ with the true and proper primacy of jurisdiction; or by claiming that this primacy was not given immediately and directly to blessed Peter, but to the Church and through her to him as a minister of the Church herself. 3054

[Canon.] Therefore, if anyone says that the blessed apostle Peter was not constituted by Christ the Lord as the prince of all the apostles and the visible head of the whole Church militant, or that he received immediately and directly from Jesus Christ our Lord only a primacy of honor and not a true and proper primacy of jurisdiction, let him be anathema. 3055

Chapter 2: The continuation of St. Peter’s primacy in the bishops of Rome

Now, what Christ, the Lord, the Prince of Shepherds and the great Shepherd of the flock, established in the blessed apostle Peter for the perpetual safety and everlasting good of the Church must, by the will of the same, endure without interruption in the Church, which was founded on the rock and which will remain firm until the end of the world. Indeed, “no one doubts, in fact it is obvious to all ages, that the holy and most blessed Peter, prince and head of all the apostles, the pillar of faith and the foundation of the Catholic Church, received the keys of the kingdom from our Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior and Redeemer of the human race; and even to this time and forever he lives” and governs “and exercises judgment in his successors”, the bishops of the holy Roman See, which he established and consecrated with his blood.¹ 3056

Therefore, whoever succeeds Peter in this chair, according to the institution of Christ himself, holds Peter’s primacy over the whole Church. “Therefore, the dispositions made by truth endure, and St. Peter still has the rock-like strength that has been given to him, and he non reliquit.”¹ Hac de causa ad Romanam Ecclesiam “propter potentio-rem principalitatem necesse” semper fuit “omnem convenire Ecclesiam, hoc est eos, qui sunt undique fideles”,² ut in ea sede, e qua “venerandae communionis iura”³ in omnes dimanant, tamquam membra in capite consociata in unam corporis compagem coalescerent.

¹ 3056 Discourse of the papal legate Philip at sess. 3 of the Council of Ephesus, July 11, 431 (ACOe I/III:60^{27–33}, no. 106₃₁ / MaC 4:1295B–1298A / HaC 1:1477B).

3058 [Canon.] Si quis ergo dixerit, non esse ex ipsius Christi Domini institutione seu iure divino, ut beatus Petrus in primatu super universam Ecclesiam habeat perpetuos successores: aut Romanum Pontificem non esse beati Petri in eodem primatu successorem: anathema sit.

Cap. 3. De vi et ratione primatus Romani Pontificis

[*3059: Description of the primacy. —*3060: The universal jurisdiction of the pope. —*3061: The jurisdiction of the bishops over their particular flocks. —*3062: The right of the pope to deal freely with all the Christian faithful. —*3063: The pope as the supreme judge. —*3064: Sanction.]

3059 Quapropter apertis innixi sacrarum Litterarum testimoniis, et inhaerentes tum praedecessorum Nostrorum, Romanorum Pontificum, tum Conciliorum generalium disertis perspicuisque decretis, innovamus oecumenici Concilii Florentini definitionem, qua credendum ab omnibus Christi fidelibus est, “sanctam Apostolicam Sedem, et Romanum Pontificem in universum orbem tenere primatum, et ipsum Pontificem Romanum successorem esse beati Petri, principis Apostolorum, et verum Christi vicarium totiusque Ecclesiae caput et omnium Christianorum patrem ac doctorem existere; et ipsi in beato Petro pascendi, regendi ac gubernandi universalem Ecclesiam a Domino nostro Iesu Christo plenam potestatem traditam esse; quemadmodum etiam in gestis oecumenicorum conciliorum et in sacris canonibus continetur” [*1307].

3060 Docemus proinde et declaramus, Ecclesiam Romanam, disponente Domino, super omnes alias ordinariae potestatis obtinere principatum, et hanc Romani Pontificis iurisdictionis potestatem, quae vere episcopalis est, immediatam esse: erga quam cuiuscumque ritus et dignitatis pastores atque fideles, tam seorsum singuli quam simul omnes, officio hierarchicae subordinationis veraeque oboedientiae obstringuntur, non solum in rebus, quae ad fidem et mores, sed etiam in iis, quae ad disciplinam et regimen Ecclesiae per has not surrendered the helm of the Church with which he has been entrusted.”¹ For this reason, “because of her more powerful principality”, it was always “necessary for every Church, that is, the faithful who are everywhere, to be in agreement” with the Roman Church;² thus in that See, from which “the rights of sacred communion”³ are imparted to all, the members will be joined as members under one head and coalesce into one compact body.

[Canon.] Therefore, if anyone says that it is not according to the institution of Christ our Lord himself, that is, by divine law, that blessed Peter should have perpetual successors in the primacy over the whole Church; or if anyone says that the Roman pontiff is not the successor of blessed Peter in the same primacy, let him be anathema.

Chapter 3. The nature and significance of the primacy of the bishop of Rome

Wherefore, relying on the clear testimony of the Holy Scriptures and following the express and definite decrees of Our predecessors, the Roman pontiffs, and of the general councils, We reaffirm the definition of the Ecumenical Council of Florence. According to this definition all the faithful must believe “that the holy Apostolic See and the Roman pontiff have the primacy over the whole world; and that the same Roman pontiff is the successor of blessed Peter, the prince of the apostles and the true vicar of Christ, the head of the whole Church, the father and teacher of all Christians; and that to him, in blessed Peter, was given by our Lord Jesus Christ the full power of feeding, ruling, and governing the whole Church, as is also contained in the proceedings of the ecumenical councils and in the sacred canons” [*1307].

And so We teach and declare that, in the disposition of God, the Roman Church holds the preeminence of ordinary power over all the other Churches; and that this power of jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, which is truly episcopal, is immediate. Regarding this jurisdiction, the shepherds of whatever rite or jurisdiction and the faithful, individually and collectively, are bound by a duty of hierarchical subjection and of true obedience; and this not only in matters that pertain to faith and morals, but also in matters that pertain to the discipline and government totum orbem diffusae pertinent; ita ut, custodita cum Romano Pontifice tam communionis quam eiusdem fidei professionis unitate, Ecclesia Christi sit unus grex sub uno summo pastore [cf. Io 10:16], Haec est catholicae veritatis doctrina, a qua deviare salva fide atque salute nemo potest.

*3057¹ Leo I the Great, sermon 3 on his birthday, chap. 3 (PL 54:146B).

² Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses III, 3, no. 2 (SC 211 [1974]: 32_{26r}) = III, 3, no. 1 (ed. by W.W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1875], 2:9 / PG 7:849A).

³ Ambrose of Milan, letter 11, 4 (PL 16:986B).

Tantum autem abest, ut haec Summi Pontificis potestas officiat ordinariae ac immediatae illi episcopalis iurisdictionis potestati, qua episcopi, qui positi a Spiritu Sancto [cf. Act 20:28] in Apostolorum locum successerunt, tamquam veri pastores assignatos sibi greges singuli singulos pascunt et regunt, ut eadem a supremo et universali pastore asseratur, roboretur ac vindicetur, secundum illud sancti Gregorii Magni: “Meus honor est honor universalis Ecclesiae. Meus honor est fratrum meorum solidus vigor. Tum ego vere honoratus sum, cum singulis quibusque honor debitus non negatur.”¹

Porro ex suprema illa Romani Pontificis potestate gubernandi universam Ecclesiam ius eidem esse consequitur, in huius sui muneris exercitio libere communicandi cum pastoribus et gregibus totius Ecclesiae, ut iidem ab ipso in via salutis doceri ac regi possint. Quare damnamus ac reprobamus illorum sententias, qui hanc supremi capitis cum pastoribus et gregibus communicationem licite impediri posse dicunt aut eandem reddunt saeculari potestati obnoxiam, ita ut contendant, quae ab Apostolica Sede vel eius auctoritate ad regimen Ecclesiae constituuntur, vim ac valorem non habere, nisi potestatis saecularis placito confirmetur.

Et quoniam divino Apostolici primatus iure Romanus Pontifex universae Ecclesiae praeest, docemus etiam et declaramus, eum esse iudicem supremum fidelium, et in omnibus causis ad examen ecclesiasticum spectantibus ad ipsius posse iudicium recurri [*cf. 861]; Sedis vero Apostolicae, cuius auctoritate maior non est, iudicium a nemine fore retractandum, neque cuiquam de eius licere iudicare iudicio [*cf. 638–642]. Quare a recto veritatis tramite aberrant, qui affirmant, licere ab iudiciis Romanorum Pontificum ad oecumenicum concilium tamquam ad auctoritatem Romano Pontifice superiorem appellare.

[Canon.] Si quis itaque dixerit, Romanum Pontificem habere tantummodo officium inspectionis vel directionis, non autem plenam et supremam potestatem iurisdictionis of the Church throughout the whole world. The result is that, when this bond of unity, both of communion and of profession of the same faith with the Roman pontiff, is guarded, then the Church of Christ is one flock under one supreme shepherd [cf. Jn 10:16]. This is the doctrine of Catholic truth; and no one can deviate from it without danger to faith and salvation.

This power of the supreme pontiff, however, is far from standing in the way of the power of ordinary and immediate episcopal jurisdiction by which the bishops who, under appointment of the Holy Spirit [cf. Acts 20:28], succeeded in the place of the apostles, feed and rule individually, as true shepherds, the particular flock assigned to them. Rather this latter power is asserted, confirmed, and vindicated by this same supreme and universal shepherd, as in the words of St. Gregory the Great: “My honor is the honor of the whole Church. My honor is the firm strength of my brothers. I am truly honored when due honor is paid to each and every one.”¹

Furthermore, from his supreme power of governing the whole Church, the Roman pontiff has the right of freely communicating with the shepherds and flocks of the whole Church in the exercise of his office so that they can be instructed and guided by him in the way of salvation. Hence, We condemn and reject the opinions of those who say that it can be licit to hinder the communication of the supreme head with the shepherds and the flocks; or those who make this communication subject to the secular power in such a way that they claim that whatever is decreed for the government of the Church by the Apostolic See or by its authority has no binding force unless it is confirmed by the approval of the secular power.

And because, by the divine right of apostolic primacy, the Roman pontiff is at the head of the whole Church, We also teach and declare that he is the supreme judge of the faithful; and that one can have recourse to his judgment in all cases pertaining to ecclesiastical jurisdiction [*cf. 861]. (We declare) that the judgment of the Apostolic See, whose authority is unsurpassed, is not subject to review by anyone; nor is anyone allowed to pass judgment on its decision [*cf. 638–642]. Therefore, those who say that it is permitted to appeal to an ecumenical council from the decisions of the Roman pontiff as to an authority superior to the Roman pontiff stray from the straight path of truth.

[Canon.] And so, if anyone says that the Roman pontiff has only the office of inspection and direction, but not the full and supreme power of jurisdiction over in universam Ecclesiam, non solum in rebus, quae ad fidem et mores, sed etiam in iis, quae ad disciplinam et regimen Ecclesiae per totum orbem diffusae pertinent; aut eum habere tantum potiores partes, non vero totam plenitudinem huius supremae potestatis; aut hanc eius potestatem non esse ordinariam et immediatam sive in omnes ac singulas ecclesias sive in omnes et singulos pastores et fideles: anathema sit.

¹ *3061 Gregory I the Great, letter to Eulogius of Alexandria (D. Norberg: CpChL 140A [1982]: 552₆₄₋₆₆ [= Registrum epistolarum VIII, 29] / MGH Ep. 2:31₂₈₋₃₀ [Registrum epistolarum VIII, 29] / PL 77:933C [= Registrum epistolarum VIII, 30]).

Cap. 4. De Romani Pontificis infallibili magisterio

[*3065–3068: Testimony of ecumenical councils. —*3069: The Magisterium recognized as infallible in practice. —*3070f.: Character, object, and purpose of papal infallibility. —*3072–3074: Definition. —*3075: Sanction.]

3065 Ipso autem Apostolico primatu, quem Romanus Pontifex tamquam Petri principis Apostolorum successor in universam Ecclesiam obtinet, supremam quoque magisterii potestatem comprehendit, haec Sancta Sedes semper tenuit, perpetuus Ecclesiae usus comprobatur, ipsaque oecumenica Concilia, ea imprimis, in quibus Oriens cum Occidente in fidei caritatisque unionem conveniebat, declaraverunt.

3066 Patres enim Concilii Constantinopolitani quarti, maiorum vestigiis inhaerentes, hanc solemnem ediderunt professionem: “Prima salus est, rectae fidei regulam custodire [...]. Et quia non potest Domini nostri Iesu Christi praetermitti sententia dicentis: ‘Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam’ [Mt 16:18], haec, quae dicta sunt, rerum probantur effectibus, quia in Sede Apostolica immaculata est semper catholica reservata religio, et sancta celebrata doctrina. Ab huius ergo fide et doctrina separari minime cupientes [...] speramus, ut in una communione, quam Sedes Apostolica praedicat, esse mereamur, in qua est integra et vera christianae religionis soliditas”¹ [*363–365].

3067 Approbante vero Lugdunensi Concilio secundo Graeci professi sunt: “Sanctam Romanam Ecclesiam summum et plenum primatum et principatum super universam Ecclesiam catholicam obtinere, quem se ab ipso Domino in beato Petro Apostolorum principe sive vertice, cuius Romanus Pontifex est successor, cum potestatis plenitudine recepisse veraciter et humiliter recognoscit; et sicut prae ceteris tenetur fidei veritatem defendere, sic et, si quae de fide subortae fuerint quaestiones, suo debent iudicio definiri” [*861].

the whole Church, not only in matters that pertain to faith and morals, but also in matters that pertain to the discipline and government of the Church throughout the whole world; or if anyone says that he has only a more important part and not the complete fullness of this supreme power; or if anyone says that this power is not ordinary and immediate either over each and every Church or over each and every one of the shepherds and faithful, let him be anathema.

Chapter 4. The infallible teaching authority of the bishop of Rome

Moreover, this holy See has always held, the perpetual practice of the Church confirms, and the ecumenical councils, especially those in which the Western and Eastern Churches were united in faith and love, have declared that the supreme power of teaching is also included in this apostolic primacy which the Roman pontiff, as the successor of Peter, the prince of the apostles, holds over the whole Church.

For the Fathers of the Fourth Council of Constantinople, following closely in the footsteps of their predecessors, made this solemn profession: “The first condition of salvation is to keep the norm of the true faith [...]. And because it is impossible to ignore those words of our Lord Jesus Christ: ‘You are Peter and upon this rock I will build my Church’ [Mt 16:18], what was said has been proved by the facts, for in the Apostolic See the Catholic religion has always been preserved immaculate and sacred doctrine honored. Therefore, wishing not to be separated in any way from this faith and doctrine [...], we hope to deserve to be in the one communion, which the Apostolic See proclaims and in which the entire and true solidity of the Christian religion resides”¹ [*363–365].

Furthermore, with the approval of the Second Council of Lyon, the Greeks professed that “the holy Roman Church possesses the supreme and full primacy and authority over the universal Catholic Church, which she recognizes in truth and humility to have received with fullness of power from the Lord himself in blessed Peter, the prince or head of the apostles, of whom the Roman pontiff is the successor. And, as she is bound above all to defend the truth of faith, so too, if any questions should arise regarding the faith, they must be decided by her judgment” [*861].

¹ *3066 This concerns an abridged citation of the Libellus fidei of Pope Hormisdas (*363–365): omissions that are not indicated in the constitution itself are designated here by ellipses [...].

Florentinum denique Concilium definivit: “Pontificem Romanum [...] verum Christi vicarium totiusque Ecclesiae caput et omnium Christianorum patrem et doctorem existere; et ipsi in beato Petro pascendi, regendi ac gubernandi universalem Ecclesiam a Domino nostro Iesu Christo plenam potestatem traditam esse” [*1307].

Huic pastorali muneri ut satisfacerent, praedecessores Nostri indefessam semper operam dederunt, ut salutaris Christi doctrina apud omnes terrae populos propagaretur, parique cura vigilarunt, ut, ubi recepta esset, sincera et pura conservaretur. Quocirca totius orbis antistites, nunc singuli, nunc in Synodis congregati, longam ecclesiarum consuetudinem et antiquae regulae formam sequentes, ea praesertim pericula, quae in negotiis fidei emergebant, ad hanc Sedem Apostolicam retulerunt, ut ibi potissimum resarcirentur damna fidei, ubi fides non potest sentire defectum.¹

Romani autem Pontifices, prout temporum et rerum condicio suadebat, nunc convocatis oecumenicis Conciliis aut explorata Ecclesiae per orbem dispersae sententia, nunc per Synodos particulares, nunc aliis, quae divina suppeditabat providentia, adhibitis auxiliis, ea tenenda definiverunt, quae sacris Scripturis et apostolicis traditionibus consentanea, Deo adiutore, cognoverant.

Neque enim Petri successoribus Spiritus Sanctus promissus est, ut eo revelante novam doctrinam patefacere, sed ut, eo assistente, traditam per Apostolos revelationem seu fidei depositum sancte custodirent et fideliter exponerent. Quorum quidem apostolicam doctrinam omnes venerabiles Patres amplexi et sancti Doctores orthodoxi venerati atque secuti sunt; plenissime scientes, hanc sancti Petri Sedem ab omni semper errore illibatam permanere, secundum Domini Salvatoris nostri divinam pollicitationem discipulorum suorum principi factam: “Ego rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua: et tu aliquando conversus confirma fratres tuos” [Lc 22:32].

Hoc igitur veritatis et fidei numquam deficientis charisma Petro eiusque in hac cathedra successoribus divinitus collatum est, ut excelso suo munere in omnium salutem fungerentur, ut universus Christi grex per eos ab erroris venenosa esca aversus, caelestis doctrinae pabulo nutrireretur, ut, sublata schismatis occasione, Ecclesia tota una conservaretur, atque suo fundamento innixa, firma adversus inferi portas consisteret.

Finally, the Council of Florence defined “that the Roman pontiff [...] is the true vicar of Christ, the head of the whole Church, the father and teacher of all Christians; and that to him, in blessed Peter, was given by our Lord Jesus Christ the full power of feeding, ruling, and governing the whole Church” [*1307]. 3068

To satisfy this pastoral care, Our predecessors have always expended untiring effort to propagate Christ’s doctrine of salvation among all the peoples of the world, and with similar care they were watchful that the doctrine might be preserved genuine and pure wherever it was received. Therefore, the bishops of the whole world, sometimes singly, sometimes assembled in councils, following the long-standing custom of the Churches and the form of the ancient rule, reported to this Apostolic See particularly the dangers that arose in matters of faith, so that there especially, where the faith cannot suffer impairment, the injuries to the faith might be repaired.¹ 3069

For their part, the Roman pontiffs, according as the conditions of the times and the circumstances dictated, sometimes by calling together ecumenical councils or sounding out the mind of the Church throughout the world, sometimes through regional councils, or sometimes by using other helps which divine providence supplied, have defined as having to be held those matters that, with the help of God, they had found consonant with the Holy Scriptures and with the apostolic tradition.

For the Holy Spirit was not promised to the successors of Peter that they might disclose a new doctrine by his revelation, but rather that, with his assistance, they might reverently guard and faithfully explain the revelation or deposit of faith that was handed down through the apostles. Indeed, it was this apostolic doctrine that all the Fathers held and the holy orthodox Doctors revered and followed, fully realizing that this See of St. Peter always remains untainted by any error, according to the divine promise of our Lord and Savior made to the prince of his disciples: “But I have prayed for you that your faith may not fail; and when you have turned again, strengthen your brethren” [Lk 22:32]. 3070

Now this charism of truth and of never-failing faith was conferred upon Peter and his successors in this chair in order that they might perform their supreme office for the salvation of all; that by them the whole flock of Christ might be kept away from the poisonous bait of error and be nourished by the food of heavenly doctrine; that, the occasion of schism being removed, the whole Church might be preserved as one and, resting on her foundation, might stand firm against the gates of hell. 3071

*3069 ¹ Bernard of Clairvaux, letter 190, or Tractatus contra errores Abaelardi, to Pope Innocent II, foreword (Opera 8, ed. J. Leclercq and H.M. Rochais [Rome, 1977], 179f. / PL 182:1053D).

3072 At vero cum hac ipsa aetate, qua salutifera Apostolici muneris efficacia vel maxime requiritur, non pauci inveniuntur, qui illius auctoritati obtrectant, necessarium omnino esse censemus, praerogativam, quam unigenitus Dei Filius cum summo pastoralis officio coniungere dignatus est, solemniter asserere.

3073 Itaque Nos traditioni a fidei christianae exordio perceptae fideliter inhaerendo, ad Dei Salvatoris nostri gloriam, religionis catholicae exaltationem et christianorum populorum salutem, sacro approbante Concilio, docemus et divinitus revelatum dogma esse definimus:

3074 Romanum Pontificem, cum ex cathedra loquitur, id est, cum omnium Christianorum pastoris et doctoris munere fungens pro suprema sua Apostolica auctoritate doctrinam de fide vel moribus ab universa Ecclesia tenendam definit, per assistentiam divinam ipsi in beato Petro promissam, ea infallibilitate pollere, qua divinus Redemptor Ecclesiam suam in definienda doctrina de fide vel moribus instructam esse voluit; ideoque eiusmodi Romani Pontificis definitiones ex sese, non autem ex consensu Ecclesiae, irreformabiles esse.

3075 [Canon.] Si quis autem huic Nostrae definitioni contradicere, quod Deus avertat, praesumpserit: anathema sit.

But since in this present age, which especially requires the salutary efficacy of the apostolic office, not a few are found who disparage its authority, We think it absolutely necessary to assert solemnly the prerogative that the only begotten Son of God deigned to join to the highest pastoral office.

And so, faithfully keeping to the tradition received from the beginning of the Christian faith, for the glory of God our Savior, for the exaltation of the Catholic religion, and for the salvation of Christian peoples, We, with the approval of the sacred council, teach and define that it is a dogma revealed by God:

That the Roman pontiff, when he speaks ex cathedra, that is, when, acting in the office of shepherd and teacher of all Christians, he defines, by virtue of his supreme apostolic authority, a doctrine concerning faith or morals to be held by the universal Church, possesses through the divine assistance promised to him in blessed Peter the infallibility with which the Divine Redeemer willed his Church to be endowed in defining the doctrine concerning faith or morals; and that such definitions of the Roman pontiff are therefore irreformable of themselves, not because of the consent of the Church.

[Canon.] But if anyone—God forbid—presumes to contradict this Our definition, let him be anathema.

3100–3102: Response of the Holy Office to the Apostolic Vicar of Central Oceania, December 18, 1872

The question and the response refer to the doctrine of the Methodists that baptism is purely and simply an exterior sign of insertion into the Christian community.

Ed.: ASS 25 (1892/1893): 246 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:60, no. 1392.

Faith and Intention of the Minister of the Sacraments

3100 Qu.: 1. Utrum baptismus ab illis haereticis [Methodistis] administratus sit dubius propter defectum intentionis faciendi quod voluit Christus, si expresse declaratum fuerit a ministro, antequam baptizet, baptismum nullum habere effectum in animam?

3101 2. Utrum dubius sit baptismus sic collatus, si praedicta declaratio non expresse facta fuerit immediate, antequam baptismus conferretur, sed illa saepe pronuntiata fuerit a ministro, et illa doctrina aperte praedicetur in illa secta?

3102 Resp.: Porro haec dubia iampridem agitata fuisse, ac pro validitate baptismi fuisse responsum, videre potes apud Benedictum XIV De synodis dioecesis l. VII cap. VI n. 9, ubi haec habentur: “Caveat episcopus, ne incertam et dubiam pronuntiet baptismi validitatem hoc tantum nomine, quod haereticus minister, a quo fuit collatus, cum non credat per regenerationis lavacrum deleri peccata, illud non contulerit in remissionem peccatorum, atque Questions: 1. Is baptism administered by those heretics [Methodists] doubtful because of the lack of intention to do what Christ willed, if it was explicitly stated by the minister, before he actually baptized, that baptism has no effect on the soul?

2. Is a baptism conferred in this manner doubtful if the above-mentioned declaration was not made explicitly immediately before the baptism was conferred but was often stated by the minister and if that doctrine is openly preached by that sect?

Response: These very doubts have been raised in the past and the response has been in favor of the validity of baptism; you can find this in a decision of Benedict XIV, in De synodis dioecesis VII, 6, no. 9, wherein he states: “The bishop should be careful to avoid declaring the validity of a baptism to be uncertain and doubtful solely because the heretical minister, by whom it was administered, did not administer it for the remission of ideo non habuerit intentionem illud conficiendi, prout a Christo Domino fuerit constitutum ...”.

Cuius rei ratio perspicue traditur a Cardinale Bellarmino De sacramentis in genere l. I c. 27 n. 13, ubi, exposito errore ... asserentium, Concilium Tridentinum in canone XI sessionis VII [*1611] definivisse, non esse ratum sacramentum, nisi minister intendat non solum actum, sed etiam finem sacramenti, id est intendat illud, propter quod sacramentum est institutum, haec subdit: “... Concilium enim in toto canone 11 non nominat finem sacramenti, neque dicit oportere ministrum intendere quod Ecclesia intendit, sed quod Ecclesia facit. Porro, quod Ecclesia facit, non finem, sed actionem significat. ...”

Ex quo est, quod Innocentius IV, in c. 2 De baptismo n. 9 ait, validum esse baptismum collatum a saraceno, de quo notum est, non credere per immersionem aliquid fieri nisi madefactionem, dummodo intenderit facere, quod ceteri baptizantes faciunt.

Conclusio Responsi: Ad 1. Negative: quia non obstante errore quoad effectum baptismi non excluditur intentio faciendi quod facit Ecclesia.—Ad 2. Provisum in primo.

sins because he does not believe that sins are taken away by the bath of regeneration, and, therefore, he did not have the intention of administering it as it was instituted by Christ the Lord ...”.

The reason for this response is clearly taught by Cardinal Bellarmine in De sacramentis in genere I, 27, no. 13, where, after having exposed the error ... of those who say that the Council of Trent in canon 11 of session 7 [*1611] ... defined that the sacrament is not valid unless the minister has the intention not only for the act but also for the purpose of the sacrament, that is, unless he intends that for the sake of which the sacrament was instituted; he (the cardinal) then adds: “... The council in fact in the whole of canon 11 does not mention the purpose of the sacrament; it says that it is necessary for the minister to intend, not what the Church intends, but what the Church does. What the Church does, therefore, signifies, not the purpose, but the action. ...”

From this follows what Innocent IV says in chapter 2 of De baptismo, no. 9, namely, that baptism conferred by a Saracen, about whom it is known that he does not believe that anything happens by immersion except a bath, is valid provided he intends to do what others do when they baptize.

Conclusion of the response: To 1: No: because in spite of the error regarding the effects of baptism, the intention of doing what the Church does is not excluded. —To 2: This is provided for in the first part.

3105–3109: Instruction of the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, 1873

The instruction is, for the most part, a repetition of eleven documents that deal with gaining profit from a loan. A special conclusion is added that contains a brief summary of the principles.

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:69f., no. 1393.

Interest on a Loan

Conclusio [ex omnibus resolutionibus in Instructione allatis]:

1. Generatim loquendo de lucro ex mutuo, nihil omnino percipi inde posse vi mutui, seu immediate et praecise ratione ipsius.

2. Aliquid ultra sortem percipere licitum esse, si forte titulus aliquis extrinsecus, non mutui naturae universim coniunctus et innatus, mutuo accedat.

3. Deficientibus licet aliis quibuslibet titulis, cuiusmodi sunt lucrum cessans, damnum emergens, atque periculum amittendae sortis, vel assumendi insolitos labores pro sortis recuperatione, unum quoque legis civilis titulum ceu sufficientem in praxi haberi posse, tum a fidelibus, tum ab eorum confessariis, quibus proinde suos paenitentes hac super re inquietare

Conclusion [from all the resolutions set forth in the instruction]: 3105

1. Speaking in general about interest from a loan, one cannot profit from it in any way whatsoever because of the loan, that is, immediately and precisely by reason of (the loan) itself.

2. It is licit to gain something in addition to the (loaned) capital if there happens to be some extrinsic title attached to the loan that is not generally connected to the nature of a loan or inherent in it. 3106

3. Even if various other titles are lacking, such as declining profit, increasing losses, and the danger of losing the capital or of having to bear unusual burdens to recover the capital, in practice one title in civil law can be considered as sufficient not only by the faithful but also by their confessors. The latter, therefore, are not allowed to upset their penitents in this matter while this problem 3107

non licet, donec quaestio haec sub iudice pendeat nec S. Sedes ipsam explicite definierit.

3108 4. Praxis huius tolerantiam minime extendi posse sive ad coonestandam usuram quamvis modicam erga pauperes sive usuram immodicam ac naturalis aequitatis limites excedentem.

3109 5. Denique, quaenam usurae quantitas dicenda sit immodica et excessiva, quaenam iusta ac moderata, universim determinari non posse, cum hoc dimetiri oporteat in singulis casibus, respectu habito ad omnes et singulas circumstantias locorum, personarum ac temporum.

is still under juridical investigation and the Holy See has not explicitly passed judgment on it.

4. The toleration of this practice cannot in any way be extended either to justify even small-scale usury when dealing with the poor or to justify uncontrolled usury exceeding the limits of fairness.

5. Finally, what amount of usury should be considered immoderate and excessive and what is just and moderate cannot be determined in general, since this must be determined in individual cases, having taken into consideration each and every circumstance of places, persons, and times.

3112–3117: Responses to the Circular Letter of Chancellor Bismarck on the Interpretation of the Constitution Pastor aeternus of the First Vatican Council, January–March 1875

The circular letter of Otto von Bismarck, Chancellor of Germany, was an important event in the Kulturkampf. According to the view of the chancellor, relations between the German Empire and the pope were seriously damaged by the First Vatican Council, because the council in its constitution on the bishop of Rome established as dogma Roman centralism and the totalitarianism of the pope. The circular letter had been composed on May 14, 1872, but it was not published until December 29, 1874, in the Deutschen Reichsanzeiger und Königlich Preussischen Staatsanzeiger. This induced the German bishops as a body to publish a clarification that was signed by all the bishops in January and February 1875. In their statement they refuted the theses of the chancellor: *3112–3116.

The bishops' declaration was criticized as a misrepresentation of Rome's position. In an apostolic letter (*3117) and in an audience granted to the German bishops, Pius IX confirmed their interpretation. See also the address to the cardinals on March 15, 1875 (ASS 8 [1874/1875]: 301–5; ibid., 303):

“God . . . in his providence has brought it about that the undaunted and distinguished bishops of the German Empire, by the publication of a brilliant declaration that will remain memorable in the history of the Church, with great wisdom have refuted the false doctrines and sophistries recently spread abroad, and they have also brought great joy to Us and to the whole Church by setting up this noble trophy to the truth. As We . . . offer before you and the Catholic world the greatest praise to the previously named bishops, We proclaim that their excellent declarations and demonstrations worthily reflect their virtue, status, and piety, and We confirm them with the fullness of Our apostolic authority” (Deus . . . provide effecit, ut fortissimi ac spectatissimi Germanici imperii episcopi illustri declaratione edita, quae in Ecclesiae fastis memorabilis erit, erroneas doctrinas et cavillationes hac occasione prolatas sapientissime refellerent et nobilissimo trophaeo veritati erecto Nos et universam Ecclesiam laetificarent. Dum autem amplissimas laudes coram vobis et catholico orbe praedictis episcopis . . . tribuimus, praeclaras eas declarationes et protestationes, ipsorum virtute, gradu ac religione dignas, ratas habemus, easque Apostolicae auctoritatis plenitudine confirmamus).

Ed.: Nikolaus Siegfried [pseudonym for V. Cathrein], Aktenstücke betreffend den preussischen Kulturkampf (Freiburg, 1882), 264–66 [= *3112–3116]; 270f. [= *3117] / O. Rousseau, in Irénikon 29 (1956): 143–47 / Pius IX, Acta 1/VII, 29f. [= *3117]. In what follows, the obsolete, original style of writing is retained.

The Jurisdiction of the Pope and the Bishops

a. Collective Declaration of the German Bishops, January–February 1875

3112 [Falsche Lehre:] Die Circulardepesche behauptet hinsichtlich der Beschlüsse des Vaticanischen Concils:

“Durch diese Beschlüsse ist der Papst in die Lage gekommen, in jeder einzelnen Diözese die bischöflichen Rechte in die Hand zu nehmen und die päpstliche Gewalt der landesbischoflichen zu substituieren.”

“Die bischöfliche Jurisdiction ist in der päpstlichen aufgegangen.”

“Der Papst übt nicht mehr, wie bisher, einzelne bestimmte Reservatrechte aus, sondern die ganze Fülle der bischöflichen Rechte ruht in seiner Hand.”

“Er ist im Princip an die Stelle jedes einzelnen Bischofs getreten, und es hängt nur von ihm ab, sich [False doctrine:] The circular letter with regard to the decrees of the Vatican Council asserts:

“In virtue of these decisions, the pope has appropriated to himself the rights of the bishop in every diocese, and he has replaced the territorial power of the bishop with his own papal power.”

“Episcopal jurisdiction has been absorbed by papal jurisdiction.”

“The pope no longer exercises, as he did in the past, certain definite rights reserved to him alone, but now all the rights of the local bishop have passed into his hands.”

“As a matter of principle, he has taken the place of each bishop, and it depends on him alone at any time auch in der Praxis in jedem einzelnen Augenblicke an die Stelle desselben gegenüber den Regierungen zu setzen.”

“Die Bischöfe sind nur noch seine Werkzeuge, seine Beamten ohne eigene Verantwortlichkeit;”

“sie sind den Regierungen gegenüber Beamte eines fremden Souveräns geworden, und zwar eines Souveräns, der vermöge seiner Unfehlbarkeit ein vollkommen absoluter ist, mehr als irgend ein absoluter Monarch der Welt.”

Alle diese Sätze entbehren der Begründung und stehen mit dem Wortlaute wie mit dem richtigen, durch den Papst, den Episkopat und die Vertreter der katholischen Wissenschaft wiederholt erklärten Sinn der Beschlüsse des Vaticanischen Concils entschieden im Widerspruch.

[Richtige Lehre:] Allerdings ist nach diesen Beschlüssen die kirchliche Jurisdictionsgewalt des Papstes eine potestas suprema, ordinaria et immediata (= höchste, ordentliche und unmittelbare Gewalt), eine dem Papst von Jesus Christus, dem Sohne Gottes, in der Person des hl. Petrus verliehene, auf die ganze Kirche, mithin auch auf jede einzelne Diözese und alle Gläubigen sich direct erstreckende oberste Amtsgewalt zur Erhaltung der Einheit des Glaubens, der Disciplin und der Regierung der Kirche, und keineswegs eine bloss aus einigen Reservatrechten bestehende Befugnis. Dies ist aber keine neue Lehre, sondern eine stets anerkannte Wahrheit des katholischen Glaubens . . . , welche das Vaticanische Concil gegenüber den Irrtümern der Gallicaner, Jansenisten und Febronianer . . . neuerdings erklärt und bestätigt hat. Nach dieser Lehre der katholischen Kirche ist der Papst Bischof von Rom, nicht Bischof irgendeiner anderen Stadt oder Diözese, nicht Bischof von Köln oder Breslau u.s.w. Aber als Bischof von Rom ist er zugleich Papst, d. h. Hirt und Oberhaupt der ganzen Kirche, Oberhaupt aller Bischöfe und aller Gläubigen, und seine päpstliche Gewalt lebt nicht etwa in bestimmten Ausnahmefällen erst auf, sondern sie hat immer und allezeit und überall Geltung und Kraft. In dieser seiner Stellung hat der Papst darüber zu wachen, dass jeder Bischof im ganzen Umfang seines Amtes seine Pflicht erfülle, und wo ein Bischof behindert ist oder eine anderweitige Notwendigkeit es erfordert, da hat der Papst das Recht und die Pflicht, nicht als Bischof der betreffenden Diözese, sondern als Papst, alles in derselben anzuordnen, was zur Verwaltung derselben gehört. . . .

Die Beschlüsse des Vaticanischen Concils bieten ferner keinen Schatten von Grund zu der Behauptung, es sei der Papst durch dieselben ein absoluter Souverän geworden, und zwar vermöge seiner Unfehlbarkeit ein “vollkommen absoluter, mehr als irgendein absoluter Monarch in der Welt”. Zunächst ist das Gebiet, auf with regard to practical matters to take the place of the bishop in negotiations with the civil government.”

“Now the bishops are only his instruments, his functionaries without personal responsibility;”

“regarding the civil government, they have become officials of a foreign sovereign; indeed, of a sovereign who, because of his infallibility, enjoys absolute authority, more than any absolute monarch in the world.”

All of these assertions are bereft of any foundation, and they contradict the wording and the meaning of the decisions of the Vatican Council, a meaning clearly and repeatedly expressed by the pope, by the bishops, and by the experts in Catholic studies.

[True doctrine:] To be sure, according to these decisions the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the pope is a potestas suprema, ordinaria, et immediata (supreme, ordinary, and immediate power) that was conferred on the pope by Jesus Christ, the Son of God, in the person of St. Peter; this supreme authority is exercised over the whole Church and therefore over every diocese and every individual believer with the purpose of maintaining the unity of the faith, of discipline, and of the government of the Church. In no way is it merely an authority limited to a few reserved rights. This is not a new doctrine, but a truth of the Catholic faith that has always been acknowledged . . . and that the Vatican Council . . . recently declared and confirmed in opposition to the errors of the Gallicans, the Jansenists, and the Febronians. According to this teaching of the Catholic Church, the pope is the bishop of Rome, not the bishop of any other city or diocese, not the bishop of Cologne or Breslau, etc. But as the bishop of Rome he is at the same time pope, that is, shepherd and sovereign of the whole Church, sovereign over all the bishops and all the faithful. His papal authority does not, as it were, suddenly appear to handle extraordinary events, but it is real and obligatory at all times and everywhere. In virtue of his office, the pope has the obligation to be vigilant, to see to it that every bishop fulfills his duties in all areas of his responsibility; and when a bishop cannot fulfill his duty or some other necessity requires it, then the pope has the right and the duty, not as the bishop of the diocese, but as the pope, to set in order everything that pertains to the administration of the diocese. . . .

Further, the decisions of the Vatican Council offer no basis for the assertion that the pope, because of them, has become an absolute master and, indeed, because of his infallibility, “enjoys absolute authority, more than any absolute monarch in the world”. First of all, the area covered by the ecclesiastical authority of the pope welches sich die kirchliche Gewalt des Papstes bezieht, wesentlich verschieden von demjenigen, worauf sich die weltliche Souveränität des Monarchen bezieht; auch wird die volle Souveränität des Landesfürsten auf staatlichem Gebiete von Katholiken nirgends bestritten. Aber abgesehen hiervon kann die Bezeichnung eines absoluten Monarchen auch in Beziehung auf kirchliche Angelegenheiten auf den Papst nicht angewendet werden, weil derselbe unter dem göttlichen Rechte steht und an die von Christus für seine Kirche getroffenen Anordnungen gebunden ist. Er kann die der Kirche von ihrem göttlichen Stifter gegebene Verfassung nicht ändern wie der weltliche Gesetzgeber eine Staatsverfassung ändern kann. Die Kirchenverfassung beruht in allen wesentlichen Punkten auf göttlicher Anordnung und ist jeder menschlichen Willkür entzogen.

3113

3114

- 3115 Kraft derselben göttlichen Einsetzung, worauf das Papsttum beruht, besteht auch der Episkopat; auch er hat seine Rechte und Pflichten vermöge der von Gott selbst getroffenen Anordnung, welche zu ändern der Papst weder das Recht noch die Macht hat. Es ist also ein völliges Missverständnis der Vaticanischen Beschlüsse, wenn man glaubt, durch dieselben sei “die bischöfliche Jurisdiktion in der päpstlichen aufgegangen”, der Papst sei “im Princip an die Stelle jedes einzelnen Bischofs getreten”, die Bischöfe seien nur noch “Werkzeuge des Papstes, seine Beamten ohne eigene Verantwortlichkeit”. ... Was insbesondere die [letztere] Behauptung betrifft, ... so können wir dieselbe nur mit aller Entschiedenheit zurückweisen; es ist wahrlich nicht die katholische Kirche, in welcher der unsittliche und despotische Grundsatz, der Befehl des Obern entbinde unbedingt von der eigenen Verantwortlichkeit, Aufnahme gefunden hat.

- 3116 Die Ansicht endlich, als sei der Papst “vermöge seiner Unfehlbarkeit ein vollkommen absoluter Souverän”, beruht auf einem durchaus irrigen Begriff von dem Dogma der päpstlichen Unfehlbarkeit. Wie das Vaticanische Concil es mit klaren und deutlichen Worten ausgesprochen hat und die Natur der Sache von selbst ergibt, bezieht sich dieselbe lediglich auf eine Eigenschaft des höchsten päpstlichen Lehramts: dieses erstreckt sich genau auf dasselbe Gebiet wie das unfehlbare Lehramt der Kirche überhaupt und ist an den Inhalt der Hl. Schrift und der Überlieferung sowie an die bereits von dem kirchlichen Lehramt gegebenen Lehrentscheidungen gebunden. Hinsichtlich der Regierungshandlungen des Papstes ist dadurch nicht das Mindeste geändert worden.

b. Apostolic Letter Mirabilis illa constantia to the Bishops of Germany, March 4, 1875

- 3117 ... Gloriam Ecclesiae vos continuastis, Venerabiles Fratres, dum germanum Vaticanani Concilii definitionum is essentially different from that over which the earthly power of a sovereign monarch extends, and Catholics do not challenge in any way the sovereignty of kings and princes over civil matters. But prescindng from that, the application of the term “absolute monarch” to the pope in reference to ecclesiastical affairs is not correct because he is subject to divine laws and is bound by the directives given by Christ for his Church. The pope cannot change the constitution given to the Church by her divine Founder, as an earthly ruler can change the constitution of a State. In all essential points the constitution of the Church is based on divine directives, and therefore it is not subject to human arbitrariness.

Just as the papacy is of divine institution, so also is the episcopacy. The latter has its own rights and duties in virtue of having been instituted by God, and the pope has neither the right nor the power to change them. Therefore, a complete misunderstanding of the Vatican decisions is involved if one concludes from them that “episcopal jurisdiction has been absorbed by papal jurisdiction”, that the pope, “as a matter of principle, has taken the place of each bishop”, that the bishops are only “his instruments, his functionaries without personal responsibility”... With regard to the [last] assertion in particular, ... we must reject it categorically; it is certainly not the Catholic Church that has embraced the immoral and despotic principle that the command of a superior frees one unconditionally from all personal responsibility.

Finally, the opinion according to which the pope is “an absolute sovereign because of his infallibility” is based on a completely false understanding of the dogma of papal infallibility. As the Vatican Council has expressed the idea in clear and precise words and as the nature of the matter requires, infallibility is a characteristic of the papacy that refers exclusively to the supreme Magisterium of the pope: it is coextensive with the area of the infallible Magisterium of the Church in general, and it is restricted to the contents of Holy Scripture and tradition and also to the dogmas previously defined by the teaching authority of the Church. Consequently, the teaching on infallibility has not changed in any way the popes’ administrative actions.

- ... You have increased the glory of the Church, venerable Brothers, because you have taken upon sensum a vulgata quadam circulari epistola captiosa commentatione detortum restituendum suscepistis, ne fideles deciperet et, in invidiam conversus, ansam praebere videretur machinationibus obiiiciendis libertati electionis novi Pontificis. Equidem ea est perspicuitas et soliditas declarationis vestrae, ut, cum nihil desiderandum relinquat, amplissimis tantum gratulationibus Nostris occasionem suppeditare deberet; nisi gravius etiam testimonium exposceret a Nobis versuta quarundam ephemeridum vox, quae, ad restituendam refutatae a vobis epistolae vim, conata est lucubrationi vestrae fidem derogare, suadendo, emollitam et minime propterea respondentem huiusce Sedis Apostolicae menti probatam a vobis fuisse conciliarium definitionum doctrinam.

Nos itaque vafram hanc et calumniosam insinuationem ac suggestionem reiicimus; cum declaratio vestra nativam referat catholicam ac propterea sacri Concilii et huius Sanctae Sedis sententiam luculentis et ineluctabilibus rationum momentis scitissime munitam et nitide sic explicatam, ut honesto cui libet ostendere valeat, nihil prorsus esse in impetitis definitionibus, quod novum sit aut quidquam immutet in veteribus relationibus quodque obtentum aliquem praebere possit urgendae vexationi Ecclesiae....

3121–3124: Decree of the Holy Office, July 7, 1875

Between 1873 and 1875, Joseph Bayma, S.J., had offered some reflections on the Eucharist in the journal The Catholic World. On May 20, 1875, the Father General, Pierre Beckx, S.J., requested a response to this from the curia.

Ed.: ASS 11 (1878/1879): 615f.

The Doctrine of Transubstantiation in the Eucharist

Qu.: Utrum tolerari possit explicatio transubstantiationis in sanctissimae Eucharistiae sacramento, quae sequentibus propositionibus comprehenditur:

1. Sicut formalis ratio hypostaseos est per se esse seu per se subsistere, ita formalis ratio substantiae est in se esse et actualiter non sustentari in alio tamquam primo subiecto; probe enim ista duo discernenda sunt: esse per se (quae est formalis ratio hypostaseos), et esse in se (quae est formalis ratio substantiae).

2. Quare sicut natura humana in Christo non est hypostasis, quia non per se subsistit, sed est assumpta ab hypostasi superiore divina, ita substantia finita, ex. gr. substantia panis, desinit esse substantia eo solum et absque alia sui mutatione, quod in alio supernaturaliter sustentatur, ita ut iam non in se sit, sed in alio ut in primo subiecto.

yourselves the task of reestablishing the true sense of the definitions of the Vatican Council that had been distorted by a widely distributed and deceptive circular letter. (You wrote so that the aforesaid letter) might not deceive the faithful and, subverted by envy, provide a pretext for intrigue against the freedom of the election of a new pope. The clarity and solidity of your declaration is truly of such a nature that, since it leaves nothing more to desire, it can only give rise to Our deepest congratulations, unless the cunning voice of certain newspapers should require from Us an even stronger testimony. For, in order to put some power back into the letter that you rightly rejected, they tried to attack the credibility of your document by claiming that the doctrine of the conciliar definitions was toned down by you and therefore in no way corresponds to the intention of this Holy See.

We therefore reject this cunning and calumnious insinuation and suggestion; for your declaration presents the truly Catholic understanding, which is that of the holy council and of this Holy See; you defended the teaching so skillfully and brilliantly with convincing and irrefutable arguments that it is obvious to any honest person that there is absolutely nothing in the attacked definitions that is new or that changes anything at all with regard to our relations with civil governments or that can offer any excuse to persist in the persecution of the Church....

Question: Is it permissible to explain the doctrine on transubstantiation as summarized in the following propositions: 3121

1. Just as the formal meaning of hypostasis is to be through itself or to subsist through itself, so the formal meaning of substance is to be in itself and not actually to be sustained in another as the primary subject; these two, in fact, are very distinct: to be through itself (which is the formal meaning of hypostasis) and to be in itself (which is the formal meaning of substance).

2. Now, the human nature of Christ is not a hypostasis because it does not subsist per se, i.e., by itself; rather, it is assumed by a higher, a divine, hypostasis. But a finite substance, e.g., the substance of bread, ceases to be a substance because of this one fact only and without any change in itself, viz., by its being sustained supernaturally, in such wise that it is no longer in se, but in something else as its primary subject. 3122

3123 3. Hinc transsubstantiatio seu conversio totius substantiae panis in substantiam corporis Christi Domini nostri explicari potest hac ratione, quod corpus Christi, dum fit substantialiter praesens in Eucharistia, sustentat naturam panis, quae hoc ipso et absque alia sui mutatione desinit esse substantia, quia iam non est in se, sed in alio sustentante; adeoque manet quidem natura panis, sed in ea cessat formalis ratio substantiae; et ideo non duae sunt substantiae, sed una sola, nempe corporis Christi.

3124 4. Igitur in Eucharistia manent materia et forma elementorum panis; verum iam in alio supernaturaliter existentes rationem substantiae non habent, sed habent rationem supernaturalis accidentis, non quasi ad modum naturalium accidentium afficerent corpus Christi, sed eo dumtaxat, quod a corpore Christi modo, quo dictum est, sustentantur.

Resp.: Prout hic exponitur, tolerari non posse.

3. Hence “transubstantiation”, viz., the change of the total substance of bread into the substance of the body of Christ our Lord, can be explained in this fashion: The body of Christ, on becoming substantially present in the Eucharist, sustains the nature of bread, which by this very fact and without any change in itself ceases to be a substance, because it is no longer in se, but rather is in another thing sustaining it. The nature of bread thus remains, but the formal meaning of substance ceases. And so there are not two substances present but only one, viz., the substance of the body of Christ.

4. Therefore in the Eucharist there remain the matter and the form of the elements of bread. But because they now subsist supernaturally in another subject, they do not have the formal meaning of substance. Rather, they have the formal meaning of supernatural accidents. This does not mean that they affect the body of Christ after the manner of natural accidents. It means only that they are now sustained in a manner, as stated, by the body of Christ.

Response: As it is explained here, it cannot be tolerated.

3126: Instruction of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Nesqually, January 24, 1877

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:99f., no. 1465.

Faith and Intention of the Minister of the Sacraments

3126 ... Novit Amplitudo Tua, dogma fidei esse baptismum a quocumque sive schismatico sive haeretico sive etiam infideli administratum validum esse habendum, dummodo in eiusdem administratione singula concurrerint, quibus sacramentum perficitur, scilicet debita materia, praescripta forma, et persona ministri cum intentione faciendi quod facit Ecclesia. Hinc consequitur errores peculiare, quos ministrantes sive privatim sive etiam publice profitentur, nihil officere posse validitati baptismi vel cuiuscumque sacramenti. . . Immo ... peculiare errores ministrantium per se et propria ratione neque excludunt illam intentionem, quam minister sacramentorum debet habere, faciendi nempe quod facit Ecclesia. [*Recolitur Resp. S. Officii 18. Dec. 1872, cf. 3100–3102.]

Videt igitur Amplitudo Tua ... errores, quos haeretici ... profitentur, non esse impossibiles cum illa intentione, quam sacramentorum ministri de necessitate eorumdem sacramentorum tenentur habere, faciendi nempe quod facit Ecclesia vel faciendi quod Christus voluit ut fieret; et eosdem errores per se non posse inducere generalem praesumptionem contra validitatem

... Your Excellency knows that it is a dogma of faith that the baptism administered by whomever—whether a schismatic or a heretic or even an infidel—must be considered valid, provided all and each of the conditions for a valid administration of a sacrament are fulfilled. These conditions are: the requisite matter, the prescribed form, and the person of a minister having the intention to do what the Church does. Consequently, any particular errors that any minister (of a sacrament) may profess, whether privately or even publicly, can in no way affect the validity of baptism or of any other sacrament. . . . Indeed ... the particular errors of a minister do not exclude, of themselves and by their own nature, that intention which a minister of the sacraments must have, viz., to do what the Church does. [*The response of the Holy Office of December 18, 1872, is repeated: cf. 3100–3102.]

Your Excellency surely sees ... that the errors which heretics profess ... are not incompatible with that intention which the ministers of the sacraments must hold regarding what is necessary to these same sacraments, viz., (the intention) of doing what the Church does or of doing what Christ willed to be done. Those same errors cannot of themselves induce a general presumption sacramentorum in genere et baptismi in specie, ita ut ea ipsa sola statui possit practicum principium omnibus casibus applicandum, vi cuius quasi a priori, ut aiunt, baptismus sit iterum conferendus.

against the validity of the sacraments in general or of baptism in particular, so that on that sole presumption a practical principle can be made applicable to all cases, by virtue of which “a priori” (as they say) a baptism must be repeated.

LEO XIII: February 20, 1878–July 20, 1903

3128: Decree of the Holy Office, November 20, 1878

Ed.: ASS 11 (1878/1879): 605f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:127, no. 1504.

The Administration of Absolute and Conditional Baptism

Qu.: An baptismum sub condicione conferri debeat haereticis, qui se convertunt ad religionem catholicam, a quocumque loco proveniant et ad quancumque sectam pertineant?

Resp.: Negative. Sed in conversione haereticorum, a quocumque loco vel a quacumque secta venerint, inquirendum de validitate baptismi in haeresi suscepti. Instituto igitur in singulis casibus examine, si compertum fuerit, aut nullum aut nulliter collatum fuisse, baptizandi erunt absolute. Si autem pro tempore et locorum ratione, investigatione peracta, nihil sive pro validitate sive pro invaliditate detegatur, aut adhuc probabile dubium de baptismi validitate supersit, tum sub condicione secreto baptizentur. Demum si constiterit validum fuisse, recipiendi erunt tantummodo ad abiurationem seu professionem fidei.

Question: Should baptism be conferred conditionally on heretics who are converted to the Catholic religion, from whatever locality they come and to whatever sect they pertain? 3128

Response: No. But in the conversion of heretics, from whatever place or from whatever sect they come, inquiry should be made regarding the validity of the baptism received in heresy that was adopted. Then, after the examination has been established in individual cases, if it is found either that none was conferred or that it was conferred in a null manner, they shall have to be baptized absolutely. But if, according to circumstances and by reason of the localities, after the investigation has been completed, nothing is discovered in favor either of validity or invalidity or if probable doubt still exists regarding the validity of the baptism, then let them be baptized conditionally, in secret. Finally, if it shall be established that it was valid, they will have to be received only for abjuration or the profession of faith.

3130–3133: Encyclical Quod apostolici muneris, December 28, 1878

Ed.: ASS 11 (1878/1879): 372–74 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 1:175–80 / Brugge 1:49–52.

The Rights of Man in Society

Ex Evangelicis documentis ea est hominum aequalitas, ut omnes eandem naturam sortiti ad eandem filiorum Dei celsissimam dignitatem vocentur, simulque ut uno eodemque fine omnibus praestituto singuli secundum eandem legem iudicandi sint, poenas aut mercedem pro merito consecuturi.

In accordance with the teachings of the Gospel, the equality of men consists in this: that all, having inherited the same nature, are called to the same most high dignity of the sons of God and that, as one and the same end is set before all, each one is to be judged by the same law and will receive punishment or reward according to his deserts. 3130

Inaequalitas tamen iuris et potestatis ab ipso naturae auctore dimanat, “ex quo omnis paternitas in caelis et in terra nominatur” [Eph 3:15]. Principum autem et subditorum animi mutuis officiis et iuribus secundum catholicam doctrinam ac praecepta ita devinciuntur, ut et

The inequality of rights and of power proceeds from the very Author of nature, “from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named” [Eph 3:15]. But the minds of princes and their subjects are, according to Catholic doctrine and precepts, bound up one with the other in 3131 imperandi temperetur libido et oboedientiae ratio facilis, firma et nobilissima efficiatur....

- 3132 Si tamen quandoque contingat temere et ultra modum publicam a principibus potestatem exerceri, catholicae Ecclesiae doctrina in eos insurgere proprio Marte non sinit, ne ordinis tranquillitas magis magisque turbetur neve societas maius exinde detrimentum capiat. Cumque res eo devenerint, ut nulla alia spes salutis affulgeat, docet, christianae patientiae meritis et instantibus ad Deum precibus remedium esse maturandum.

Quod si legislatorum ac principum placita aliquid sanciverint aut iusserint, quod divinae aut naturali legi repugnet, christiani nominis dignitas et officium atque Apostolica sententia suadent, oboediendum esse magis Deo quam hominibus [Act 5:29]....

- 3133 Publicae autem ac domesticae tranquillitati catholica sapientia, naturalis divinaeque legis praeceptis suffulta, consultissime providit etiam per ea, quae sentit ac docet de iure dominii et partitione bonorum, quae ad vitae necessitatem et utilitatem sunt comparata. Cum enim socialistae ius proprietatis tamquam humanum inventum naturali hominum aequalitati repugnans traducant, et communionem bonorum affectantes, pauperiem haud aequo animo esse perferendam, et ditiorum possessiones ac iura impune violari posse arbitrentur: Ecclesia multo satius et utilius inaequalitatem inter homines, corporis ingeniique viribus naturaliter diversos, etiam in bonis possidendis agnoscit, et ius proprietatis ac dominii, ab ipsa natura profectum, intactum cuiilibet et inviolatum esse iubet; novit enim furtum ac rapinam a Deo, omnis iuris auctore ac vindice, ita fuisse prohibita, ut aliena vel conspicere [concupiscere] non liceat, furesque et raptores, non secus ac adulteri et idololatrae, a caelesti regno excludantur [cf. 1 Cor 6:9s].

3135–3140: Encyclical Aeterni Patris, August 4, 1879

This encyclical presents Thomas Aquinas as the master teacher of Christian philosophy and theology.

Ed.: ASS 12 (1879/1880), 98–114 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 1:257–83 / Brugge 1:89–107.

The Value of Philosophy in Providing a Foundation for the Faith

- 3135 Equidem non tantam humanae philosophiae vim et auctoritatem tribuimus, ut cunctis omnino erroribus propulsandis vel evellendis parem esse iudicemus: sicut enim ... per admirabile fidei lumen “non persuasibilibus humanae sapientiae verbis” diffusum, “sed in ostensione spiritus et virtutis” [1 Cor 2:4] orbi terrarum contigit, ut such a manner, by mutual duties and rights, that the thirst for power is restrained and the rational ground of obedience made easy, firm, and noble....

And if at any time it happen that the power of the State is rashly and tyrannically wielded by princes, the teaching of the Catholic Church does not allow an insurrection on private authority against them, lest public order be only the more disturbed and lest society take greater hurt therefrom. And when affairs come to such a pass that there is no other hope of safety, she teaches that relief may be hastened by the merits of Christian patience and by earnest prayers to God.

But, if the will of legislators and princes shall have sanctioned or commanded anything repugnant to the divine or natural law, the dignity and duty of the Christian name, as well as the judgment of the apostle, urge that “we must obey God rather than men” [Acts 5:29]....

But Catholic wisdom, sustained by the precepts of natural and divine law, provides with special care for public and private tranquility in its doctrines and teachings regarding the duty of government and the distribution of the goods that are necessary for life and use. For, while the socialists would destroy the “right” of property, alleging it to be a human invention altogether opposed to the inborn equality of man, and, claiming a community of goods, argue that poverty should not be peaceably endured and that the property and privileges of the rich may be rightly invaded, the Church, with much greater wisdom and good sense, recognizes the inequality among men, who are born with different powers of body and mind, inequality in actual possession, also, and holds that the right of property and of ownership, which springs from nature itself, must not be touched and stands inviolate. For she knows that stealing and robbery were forbidden in so special a manner by God, the Author and Defender of right, that he would not allow man even to desire what belonged to another and that thieves and despoilers, no less than adulterers and idolaters, are shut out from the kingdom of heaven [cf. 1 Cor 6:9f].

We do not, indeed, attribute such force and authority to human philosophy as to esteem it equal to the task of combating and rooting out all errors; for just as ... by the admirable light of faith, diffused, “not in plausible words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power” [1 Cor 2:4], so also at the present time We primaevae dignitati restitueretur; ita etiam in praesens ab omnipotenti potissimum virtute et auxilio Dei exspectandum est, ut mortalium mentes . . . resipiscant.

Sed neque spernenda neve posthabenda sunt naturalia adiumenta, quae divinae sapientiae beneficio . . . hominum generi suppetunt; quibus in adiumentis rectum philosophiae usum constat esse praecipuum. Non enim frustra rationis lumen humanae menti Deus inseruit; et tantum abest, ut superaddita fidei lux intelligentiae virtutem exstinguat aut imminuat, ut potius perficiat, auctisque viribus, habilem ad maiora reddat. . . .

Ac primo quidem philosophia, si rite a sapientibus usurpetur, iter ad veram fidem quodammodo sternere et munire valet, suorumque alumnorum animos ad revelationem suscipiendam convenienter praeparare. . . .

Et sane benignissimus Deus in eo quod pertinet ad res divinas, non eas tantum veritates lumine fidei patefecit, quibus attingendis impar humana intelligentia est, sed nonnullas etiam manifestavit, rationi non omnino impervias, ut scilicet, accedente Dei auctoritate, statim et sine aliqua erroris admixtione omnibus innotescerent. Ex quo factum est, ut quaedam vera, quae vel divinitus ad credendum proponuntur, vel cum doctrina fidei arctis quibusdam vinculis colligantur, ipsi ethnicorum sapientes, naturali tantum ratione praevalente, cognoverint, aptisque argumentis demonstraverint ac vindicaverint. . . .

Haec autem vera, vel ipsis ethnicorum sapientibus explorata, vehementer est opportunum in revelatae doctrinae commodum utilitatemque convertere, ut reipsa ostendatur, humanam quoque sapientiam, atque ipsum adversariorum testimonium, fidei christianae suffragari. . . .

Solidissimis ita [ope philosophiae] positis fundamentis, perpetuus et multiplex adhuc requiritur philosophiae usus, ut sacra theologia naturam, habitum, ingeniumque verae scientiae suscipiat atque induat. In hac enim nobilissima disciplinarum magnopere necesse est, ut multae ac diversae caelestium doctrinarum partes in unum veluti corpus colligantur, ut suis quaeque locis convenienter dispositae, et ex propriis principiis derivatae apto inter se nexu cohaereant; demum ut omnes et singulae suis iisque invictis argumentis confirmantur.

Nec silentio praetereunda aut minimi facienda est accuratior illa atque uberior rerum quae creduntur cognitio et ipsorum fidei mysteriorum, quoad fieri potest, aliquanto lucidior intelligentia, quam Augustinus aliique Patres et laudarunt et assequi studuerunt, quamque ipsa look above all things to the powerful help of Almighty God to bring back to a right understanding the minds of man.

But the natural helps with which the grace of the divine wisdom . . . has supplied the human race are to be neither despised nor neglected, chief among which is evidently the right use of philosophy. For, not in vain did God set the light of reason in the human mind; and so far is the superadded light of faith from extinguishing or lessening the power of the intelligence that it in fact completes it and, by adding to its strength, renders it capable of greater things. . . .

In the first place, philosophy, if rightly made use of by the wise, in a certain way tends to smooth and fortify the road to true faith and to prepare the souls of its disciples for the fit reception of revelation. . . . 3136

And, assuredly, the God of all goodness, in all that pertains to divine things, has manifested by the light of faith not only those truths that human intelligence could not attain of itself, but others, also, not altogether unattainable by reason, that by the help of divine authority they may be made known to all at once and without any admixture of error. Hence it is that certain truths that were either divinely proposed for belief or were bound by the closest chains to the doctrine of faith were discovered by pagan sages with nothing but their natural reason to guide them (and) were demonstrated and proved by becoming arguments. . . .

But it is most fitting to turn these truths that have been discovered even by the pagan sages to the use and purposes of revealed doctrine, in order to show that both human wisdom and the very testimony of our adversaries serve to support the Christian faith. . . .

The solid foundations having been thus laid [with the help of philosophy], a perpetual and varied service is further required of philosophy, in order that sacred theology may receive and assume the nature, form, and genius of a true science. For in this, the most noble of studies, it is of the greatest necessity to bind together, as it were, in one body the many and various parts of the heavenly doctrines, that, each being allotted to its own proper place and derived from its own proper principles, the whole may join together in a complete union; in order, in fine, that all and each part may be strengthened by its own and the others' invincible arguments. 3137

Nor should we pass over in silence or belittle that more accurate or fuller knowledge of the things that are believed, and somewhat more lucid understanding, as far as it can go, of the very mysteries of faith that Augustine and the other Fathers commended and strove to reach and that the Vatican Council itself [Constitution on the Catholic Faith, chap. 4: *3016] declared to be most fruitful....

Vaticana Synodus [Constitutio de fide catholica, c. 4: *3016] fructuosissimam esse decrevit....

3138 Postremo hoc quoque ad disciplinas philosophicas pertinet, veritates divinitus traditas religiose tueri, et iis qui oppugnare audeant resistere. Quam ad rem, magna est philosophiae laus, quod fidei propugnaculum ac veluti firmum religionis munimentum habeatur. “Est quidem”, sicut Clemens Alexandrinus testatur, “per se perfecta et nullius indiga Servatoris doctrina, cum sit Dei virtus et sapientia. Accedens autem graeca philosophia veritatem non facit potentiores; sed cum debiles efficiat sophistarum adversus eam argumentationes et propulset dolosas adversus veritatem insidias, dicta est vineae apta sepes et vallus.”¹...

Lastly, the duty of religiously defending the truths divinely delivered and of resisting those who dare oppose them pertains to philosophic pursuits. Wherefore, it is the glory of philosophy to be esteemed as the bulwark of faith and the strong defense of religion. As Clement of Alexandria testifies, “the doctrine of the Savior is indeed perfect in itself and lacks nothing, since it is the power and wisdom of God. And the assistance of the Greek philosophy does not make the truth more powerful; but, inasmuch as it weakens the contrary arguments of the sophists and repels the veiled attacks against the truth, it has been fitly called the hedge and fence of the vine.”¹...

The Preeminence of the Scholastic Method and the Authority of St. Thomas Aquinas

3139 Inter scholasticos Doctores omnium princeps et magister longe eminet Thomas Aquinas: qui, uti Caietanus animadvertit, veteres “Doctores sacros quia summe veneratus est, ideo intellectum omnium quodammodo sortitus est”.¹ Illorum doctrinas, velut dispersa cuiusdam corporis membra, in unum Thomas collegit et coagmentavit, miro ordine digessit et magnis incrementis ita adauxit, ut catholicae Ecclesiae singulare praesidium et decus iure meritoque habeatur....

Among the Scholastic Doctors, as the chief and master of all, towers Thomas Aquinas, who, as Cajetan observes, because “he most venerated the ancient Doctors of the Church, in a certain way seems to have inherited the intellect of all”.¹ The doctrines of those illustrious men, like the scattered members of a body, Thomas collected together and cemented, distributed in wonderful order, and so increased with important additions that he is rightly and deservedly esteemed the special bulwark and glory of the Catholic faith....

3140 Nos igitur, dum edicimus, libenti gratoque animo excipendum esse quidquid sapienter dictum, quidquid utiliter fuerit a quopiam inventum atque excogitatum, vos omnes ... quam enixe hortamur, ut ad catholicae fidei tutelam et decus, ad societatis bonum, ad scientiarum omnium incrementum auream sancti Thomae sapientiam restituatis et quam latissime propagetis. Sapientiam sancti Thomae dicimus: si quid enim est a Doctoribus scholasticis vel nimia subtilitate quaesitum vel parum considerate traditum, si quid cum exploratis posterioris aevi doctrinis minus cohaerens vel denique quoquo modo non probabile, id nullo pacto in animo est aetati nostrae ad imitandum proponi.

While, therefore, We hold that every word of wisdom, every useful thing by whomsoever discovered or planned, ought to be received with a willing and grateful mind, We exhort you ... in all earnestness to restore the golden wisdom of St. Thomas and to spread it far and wide for the defense and beauty of the Catholic faith, for the good of society, and for the advantage of all the sciences. The wisdom of St. Thomas, We say; for if anything is taken up with too great subtlety by the Scholastic Doctors, or too carelessly stated—if there be anything that ill agrees with the discoveries of a later age, or, in a word, improbable in whatever way—it does not enter Our mind to propose that for imitation to our age.

3142–3146: Encyclical Arcanum divinae sapientiae, February 10, 1880

Ed.: ASS 12 (1879/1880): 388–94 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 2:16–26 / Brugge 1:121–27.

The Essence of Christian Marriage

3142 [Universalis traditio docet] Christum Dominum ad sacramenti dignitatem evexisse matrimonium, simulque

[Universal tradition teaches] that Christ our Lord raised marriage to the dignity of a sacrament; that to *3138¹ Clement of Alexandria, Stromata I, 20 (PG 8:817AB [Gr.]; 818B [Lat.]) / O. Stählin [GChSch 52 (15)] 2:63₂₉–64₂ [= § 100, 1]).

*3139¹ Cajetan de Vio, commentary on Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae II–II, q. 148, a. 4 (Editio Leonina 10:174b).

effecisse, ut coniuges caelesti gratia, quam merita eius pepererunt, saepti ac muniti, sanctitatem in ipso coniugio adipiscerentur, atque in eo, ad exemplar mystici connubii sui cum Ecclesia mire conformato, et amorem, qui est naturae consentaneus, perfecisse et viri ac mulieris individuum suapte naturam societatem divinae caritatis vinculo validius coniunxisset....

Similiter Apostolis auctoribus didicimus unitatem perpetuamque firmitatem quae ab ipsa requirebatur nuptiarum origine, sanctam esse et nullo tempore violabilem Christum iussisset....

Neque iis dumtaxat, quae commemorata sunt, christiana eius perfectio absolutioque continetur. Nam primo quidem nuptiali societati excelsius quiddam et nobilius propositum est quam antea fuisset: ea enim spectare iussa est non modo ad propagandum genus humanum, sed ad ingenerandam Ecclesiae sobolem, “cives Sanctorum et domesticos Dei” [Eph 2:19]....

Secundo loco sua utrique coniugum sunt officia definita, sua iura integre descripta. Eos scilicet ipsos necesse est sic esse animo semper affectos, ut amorem maximum, constantem fidem, sollers assiduumque praesidium alteri alterum debere intelligant. Vir est familiae princeps et caput mulieris; quae tamen, quia caro est de carne illius et os de ossibus eius, subiiciatur pareatque viro in morem non ancillae, sed sociae: ut scilicet oboedientiae praestitae nec honestas nec dignitas absit. In eo autem qui praeest et in hac quae paret, cum imaginem uterque referant alter Christi, altera Ecclesiae, divina caritas esto perpetua moderatrix officii....

The Power of the Church in Regard to Christian Marriage

Christus igitur, cum ad talem et tantam excellentiam matrimonia renovavisset, totam ipsorum disciplinam Ecclesiae credidit et commendavit. Quae potestatem in coniugia christianorum omni cum tempore tum loco exercuit, atque ita exercuit, ut illam propriam eius esse appareret, nec hominum concessu quaesitam, sed auctoris sui voluntate divinitus adeptam....

Simili modo ius matrimonii aequabile inter omnes atque unum omnibus est constitutum, vetere inter husband and wife, guarded and strengthened by the heavenly grace that his merits gained for them, he gave power to attain holiness in the married state; and that, in a wondrous way, making marriage an example of the mystical union between himself and his Church, he not only perfected that love which is according to nature, but also made the naturally indivisible union of one man with one woman far more perfect through the bond of heavenly love....

In like manner, from the teaching of the apostles we learn that the unity of marriage and its perpetual indissolubility, the indispensable conditions of its very origin, must, according to the command of Christ, be holy and inviolable without exception....

Furthermore, the Christian perfection and completeness of marriage are not comprised in those points only that have been mentioned. For, first, there has been vouchsafed to the marriage union a higher and nobler purpose than was ever previously given to it. By the command of Christ, it looks not only to the propagation of the human race, but to the bringing forth of children for the Church, “fellow citizens with the saints, and the members of the household of God” [Eph 2:19]....

Secondly, the mutual duties of husband and wife have been defined, and their several rights accurately established. They are bound, namely, to have such feelings for one another as to cherish always very great mutual love, to be ever faithful to their marriage vow, and to give one another an unfailing and unselfish help. The husband is the chief of the family and the head of the wife. The woman, because she is flesh of his flesh and bone of his bone, must be subject to her husband and obey him; not, indeed, as a servant, but as a companion, so that her obedience shall be wanting in neither honor nor dignity. Since the husband represents Christ, and since the wife represents the Church, let there always be, both in him who commands and in her who obeys, a heaven-born love guiding both in their respective duties....

Christ, therefore, having renewed marriage to such and so great excellence, commended and entrusted all the discipline bearing upon these matters to his Church. The Church, always and everywhere, has so used her power with reference to the marriages of Christians that men have seen clearly how it belongs to her as of native right; not being made hers by any human grant, but given divinely to her by the will of her Founder....

In like manner, moreover, a law of marriage just to all and the same for all, was enacted by the abolition of servos et ingenuos sublato discrimine;¹ exaequata viri et uxoris iura; etenim, ut aiebat Hieronymus,² “apud nos, quod non licet feminis, aequè non licet viris, et eadem servitus pari condicione censetur”: atque illa eadem iura ob remunerationem benevolentiae et vicissitudinem officiorum stabiliter firmata; adserta et vindicata mulierum dignitas; vetitum viro poenam capitis de adultera sumere iuratamque fidem libidinosè atque impudicè violare.

Atque illud etiam magnum est, quod de potestate patrumfamilias Ecclesia, quantum oportuit, limitaverit, ne filiis et filiabus coniugii cupidis quidquam de iusta libertate minueretur; quod nuptias inter cognatos et affines certis gradibus nullas esse posse decreverit, ut nimirum supernaturalis coniugum amor latiore se campo diffunderet; quod errorem et vim et fraudem, quantum potuit, a nuptiis prohibenda curaverit; quod sanctam pudicitiam thalami, quod securitatem personarum, quod coniugiorum decus, quod religionis incolumitatem sarta tecta esse voluerit. Denique tanta vi, tanta providentia legum divinum istud institutum communiit, ut nemo sit rerum aequus existimator, quin intelligat, hoc etiam ex capite quod ad coniugia refertur, optimam esse humani generis custodem ac vindicem Ecclesiam. . . .

3145 Neque quemquam moveat illa tantopere a Regalisticis praedicata distinctio, vi cuius contractum nuptialem a sacramento disiungunt, eo sane consilio, ut, Ecclesiae reservatis sacramenti rationibus, contractum tradant in potestatem arbitriumque principum civitatis.

Etenim non potest huiusmodi distinctio, seu verius distractio, probari; cum exploratum sit, in matrimonio christiano contractum a sacramento non esse dissociabilem; atque ideo non posse contractum verum et legitimum consistere, quin sit eo ipso sacramentum. Nam Christus Dominus dignitate sacramenti auxit matrimonium; matrimonium autem est ipse contractus, si modo sit factus iure.

3146 Huc accedit, quod ob hanc causam matrimonium est sacramentum, quia est sacrum signum et efficiens gratiam, et imaginem referens mysticarum nuptiarum Christi cum Ecclesia. Istarum autem forma ac figura illo ipso exprimitur summae coniunctionis vinculo, quo vir et mulier inter se conligantur, quodque aliud nihil

the old distinction between slaves and free-born men and women;¹ and thus the rights of husbands and wives were made equal: for, as St. Jerome says, “with us that which is unlawful for women is unlawful for men also, and the same restraint is imposed on equal conditions.”² The self-same rights also were firmly established for reciprocal affection and for the interchange of duties; the dignity of the woman was asserted and assured; and it was forbidden to the man to inflict capital punishment for adultery or lustfully and shamelessly to violate his pledged faith.

It is also a great blessing that the Church has limited, so far as is needful, the power of fathers of families, so that sons and daughters, wishing to marry, are not in any way deprived of their rightful freedom; that, for the purpose of spreading more widely the supernatural love of husbands and wives, she has decreed marriages within certain degrees of consanguinity or affinity to be null and void; that she has taken the greatest pains to safeguard marriage, as much as is possible, from error and violence and deceit; that she has always wished to preserve the holy chasteness of the marriage bed, the security of persons, the honor of husband and wife, and the sanctity of religion. Lastly, with such foresight of legislation has the Church guarded her divine institution that no one who thinks rightfully of these matters can fail to see how, with regard to marriage, she is the best guardian and defender of the human race. . . .

Let no one, then, be deceived by the distinction that some civil jurists have so strongly insisted upon—the distinction, namely, by virtue of which they sever the matrimonial contract from the sacrament, with intent to hand over the contract to the power and will of the rulers of the State, while reserving questions concerning the sacrament to the Church.

A distinction, or rather severance, of this kind cannot be approved; for certain it is that in Christian marriage the contract is inseparable from the sacrament and that, for this reason, the contract cannot be true and legitimate without being a sacrament as well. For Christ our Lord added to marriage the dignity of a sacrament; but marriage is the contract itself, whenever that contract is lawfully concluded.

Marriage, moreover, is a sacrament, because it is a holy sign that gives grace, showing forth an image of the mystical nuptials of Christ with the Church. But the form and image of these nuptials is shown precisely by the very bond of that most close union in which man and woman are joined together; which bond is est, nisi ipsum matrimonium. Itaque apparet, omne inter christianos iustum coniugium in se et per se esse sacramentum: nihilque magis abhorrere a veritate, quam esse sacramentum decus quoddam adiunctum, aut proprietatem allapsam extrinsecus, quae a contractu disiungi ac disparari hominum arbitrato queat.

*3144 ¹ Cf. Gregory IX, Decretales, I. IV, tit. 9, c. 1 (Frdb 2:691f.).

² Jerome, letter 77 to Oceanus, chap. 3 (CSEL 55:39₁₅₋₁₇ / PL 22:691D).

nothing else but the marriage itself. Hence it is clear that among Christians every true marriage is, in itself and by itself, a sacrament; and that nothing can be farther from the truth than to say that the sacrament is a certain added ornament, or outward endowment, which can be separated and torn away from the contract at the caprice of man.

3148: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, June 16, 1880

The decision is important for the judgment on the “Knaus-Ogino” method.

Ed.: AnIP 22 (1883): 249 / NvRTh 13 (1881): 459f. / F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 101.

The Observance of Non-fertile Times

Qu.: An licitus sit usus matrimonii illis tantum diebus, quibus difficilior est conceptio?

Resp.: Coniuges praedicto modo utentes inquietandos non esse, posseque confessarium sententiam de qua agitur, illis coniugibus, caute tamen, insinuare, quos alia ratione a detestabili onanismi crimine abducere frustra tentaverit.

Question: Is it permitted to have marital union only on those days when conception is more difficult? 3148

Response: Spouses who use this above-mentioned method need not be troubled, and the confessor can, though with caution, suggest the idea in question to those spouses whom he has sought in vain to lead by some other means away from the detestable crime of onanism.

3150–3152: Encyclical Diuturnum illud, June 29, 1881

Ed.: ASS 14 (1881/1882): 4–8 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 2:271–77 / Brugge 1:211–15.

Authority within Civil Society

Etsi homo arrogantia quadam et contumacia incitatus frenos imperii depellere saepe contendit, numquam tamen assequi potuit, ut nemini pareret. Praeesse aliquos in omni consociatione hominum et communitate cogit ipsa necessitas. . . .

Interest autem attendere hoc loco, eos, qui reipublicae praefuturi sint, posse in quibusdam causis voluntate iudicioque deligi multitudinis non adversante neque repugnante doctrina catholica. Quo sane delectu designatur princeps, non conferuntur iura principatus: neque mandatur imperium, sed statuitur, a quo sit gerendum.

Neque hic quaeritur de rerum publicarum modis: nihil enim est, cur non Ecclesiae probetur aut unius aut plurium principatus, si modo iustus sit, et in communem utilitatem intentus. Quamobrem, salva iustitia, non prohibentur populi illud sibi genus comparare reipublicae, quod aut ipsorum ingenio aut maiorum institutis moribusque magis apte conveniat.

Ceterum ad politicum imperium quod attinet, illud a Deo proficisci recte docet Ecclesia. . . .

Although man, when excited by a certain arrogance and contumacy, has often striven to cast aside the reins of authority, he has never yet been able to arrive at the state of obeying no one. In every association and community of men, necessity itself compels that some should hold preeminence. . . . 3150

It is of importance, however, to remark in this place that those who may be placed over the State may in certain cases be chosen by the will and decision of the multitude, without opposing or impugning Catholic doctrine. And by this choice, in truth, the ruler is designated, but the rights of ruling are not thereby conferred. Nor is the authority delegated to him, but the person by whom it is to be exercised is determined.

There is no question here respecting forms of government, for there is no reason why the Church should not approve of the chief power being held by one man or by more, provided only it be just and that it tend to the common advantage. Wherefore, so long as justice be respected, the people are not hindered from choosing for themselves that form of government which suits best either their own disposition or the institutions and customs of their ancestors.

But, as regards political power, the Church rightly teaches that it comes from God. . . . 3151

Qui civilem societatem a libero hominum consensu natam volunt, ipsius imperii ortum ex eodem fonte petentes, de iure suo iniquit aliquid unumquemque cessisse et voluntate singulos in eius se contulisse potestatem, ad quem summa illorum iurium pervenisset. Sed magnus est error non videre, id quod manifestum est, homines cum non sint solivagum genus, citra liberam ipsorum voluntatem ad naturalem communitatem esse natos: ac praeterea pactum, quod praedicant, est aperte commenticium et fictum, neque ad impertiendum valet politicae potestati tantum virium, dignitatis, firmitudinis, quantum tutela reipublicae et communes civium utilitates requirunt. Ea autem decora et praesidia universa tunc solum est habiturus principatus, si a Deo, augusto sanctissimoque fonte, manare intelligatur. . . .

- 3152 Una illa hominibus causa est non parendi, si quid ab iis postuletur, quod cum naturali aut divino iure aperte repugnet: omnia enim, in quibus naturae lex vel Dei voluntas violatur, aequae nefas est imperare et facere. Si cui igitur usuveniat, ut alterutrum malle cogatur, scilicet aut Dei aut principum iussa negligere, Iesu Christo parendum est reddere iubenti “quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, quae sunt Dei, Deo” [Mt 22:21], atque ad exemplum Apostolorum animose respondendum: “Oboedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus” [Act 5:29]. . . .

Those who believe civil society to have risen from the free consent of men, looking for the origin of its authority from the same source, say that each individual has given up something of his right and that voluntarily every person has put himself into the power of the one man in whose person the whole of those rights has been centered. But it is a great error not to see what is manifest, (namely,) that men, as they are not a race of solitary wanderers, are born, independent of their own free will, to (form) a natural community of life. It is plain, moreover, that the pact that they allege is openly a falsehood and a fiction and that it has no authority to confer on political power such great force, dignity, and firmness as the safety of the State and the common good of the citizens require. Then only will the government have all those ornaments and guarantees, when it is understood to emanate from God as its august and most sacred source. . . .

The one only reason that men have for not obeying is when anything is demanded of them that is openly repugnant to the natural or the divine law, for it is equally unlawful to command to do anything in which the law of nature or the will of God is violated. If, therefore, it should happen to anyone to be compelled to prefer one or the other, viz., to disregard either the commands of God or those of rulers, he must obey Jesus Christ, who commands us to “render . . . to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s, and to God the things that are God’s” [Mt 22:21], and must reply courageously after the example of the apostles: “We must obey God rather than men” [Acts 5:29]. . . .

3154–3155: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Index, December 5 (30), 1881

The occasion for this decree was the controversy surrounding the writings of Antonio Rosmini-Serbati (philosopher, theologian, and political thinker, d. 1855). After censors had examined his works for three years, on July 3, 1854, at a meeting presided over by Pius IX, the cardinals made the decision “to dismiss (the proceeding)” (dimittantur). Rosmini’s ideas did not allow his opponents to rest. The friends of Rosmini and the theologian of the papal household interpreted the decision of the cardinals as an indirect approval. The Civiltà cattolica and the Osservatore romano denied the approval: The works of Rosmini were merely not forbidden. At first the interpretation of the theologian of the papal household prevailed. He induced a retraction from the Osservatore romano (cf. Katholik 56/II [1876]: 214–17). The Civiltà cattolica refused the retraction, and on June 28, the Congregation of the Index issued a declaration dated June 21, 1880: “The Sacred Congregation of the Index . . . declared the formula ‘dismissed’ signifies only this: that a work (whose proceeding) has been dismissed is not prohibited” (S. Indicis Congregatio . . . declaravit, quod formula “dimittantur” hoc tantum significat: Opus quod dimittitur, non prohiberi: ASS 13 [1880/1881]: 92).

Ed.: ASS 14 (1881/1882): 288.

The Freedom to Criticize Works Whose Proceedings Have Been Dismissed by the Sacred Congregation of the Index

- 3154 Qu.: 1. Utrum libri ad S. Indicis Congregationem delati et ab eadem dimissi seu non prohibiti, censeri debeant immunes ab omni errore contra fidem et mores.
- 3155 2. Et quatenus negative, utrum libri dimissi seu non prohibiti a S. Indicis Congregatione, possint tum philosophice tum theologice citra temeritatis notam impugnari.

Questions: 1. Must books denounced before the Sacred Congregation of the Index and dismissed or not prohibited by the same (congregation) be considered free from all error against faith and morals?

2. If the response is No, may books dismissed or not prohibited by the Sacred Congregation of the Index be criticized philosophically as well as theologically without the charge of rashness?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 28. Dec.): Ad 1: Negative.—Ad 2: Affirmative.

Response (confirmed by the pope on December 28): To no. 1: No. —To no. 2: Yes.

3156–3158: Encyclical Humanum genus, April 20, 1884

Ed.: ASS (1883/1884): 420f., 430 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 4:49–65 / Brugge 2:60f., 71.

Freemasonry

Simulare et velle in occulto latere, obligare sibi homines tamquam mancipia, tenacissimo nexu nec satis declarata causa, alieno addictos arbitrio ad omne facinus adhibere . . . : immanitas quaedam est, quam rerum natura non patitur. Quapropter societatem de qua loquimur cum iustitia et naturali honestate pugnare, ratio et veritas ipsa convincit. . . .

Ex certissimis indiciis, quae supra commemoravimus, erumpit illud, quod est consiliorum suorum ultimum, scilicet evertere funditus omnem eam quam instituta christiana pepererunt disciplinam religionis reique publicae, novamque ad ingenium suum exstruere, ductis e medio naturalismo fundamentis et legibus.

Haec quae diximus aut dicturi sumus, de secta Massonica intelligi oportet spectata in genere suo et quatenus sibi cognatas foederatasque complectitur societates, non autem de sectatoribus earum singulis. In quorum numero utique possunt esse nec pauci, qui quamvis culpa non careant quod sese istius modi implicuerint societatibus, tamen nec sint flagitiose factorum per se ipsi participes et illud ultimum ignorent quod illae nituntur adipisci. Similiter ex consociationibus ipsis nonnullae fortasse nequaquam probant conclusiones quasdam extremas, quas, cum ex principiis communibus necessario consequantur, consentaneum esset amplexari, nisi per se foeditate sua turpitudine ipsa detererent. . . .

Nomen sectae Massonum dare nemo sibi quapiam de causa licere putet, si catholica professio et salus sua tanti apud eum sit, quanti esse debet.

But to simulate and wish to lie hidden; to bind men like slaves in the very tightest bonds and without giving any sufficient reason; to make use of men enslaved to the will of another for any arbitrary act . . . : all this is an enormity from which nature recoils: Wherefore, reason and truth itself make it plain that the society of which we are speaking is in antagonism with justice and natural uprightness. . . .

For, from what we have above most clearly shown, that which is their ultimate purpose forces itself into view—namely, the utter overthrow of that whole religious and political order of the world which the Christian teaching has produced and the substitution of a new state of things in accordance with their ideas, of which the foundations and laws shall be drawn from mere naturalism.

What we have said, and are about to say, must be understood of the sect of the Freemasons taken generically, and insofar as it comprises the associations kindred to it and confederated with it, but not of the individual members of them. There may be persons among these, and not a few, who, although not free from the guilt of having entangled themselves in such associations, yet are neither themselves partners in their criminal acts nor aware of the ultimate object that they are endeavoring to attain. In the same way, some of the affiliated societies, perhaps, by no means approve of the extreme conclusions that they would, if consistent, embrace as necessarily following from their common principles, if the turpitude itself, by reason of its very foulness, did not deter (them). . . .

Let no man think that he may for any reason whatsoever join the Masonic sect if he values his Catholic name and his eternal salvation as he ought to value them.

3159–3160: Instruction of the Holy Office Ad gravissima avertenda, May 10, 1884

This instruction on Freemasonry was sent to all the bishops of the world.

Ed.: ASS 17 (1884/1885): 44 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:119, no. 1615 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 4:81f.

Freemasonry

(3) Ne quis vero errori locus fiat, cum diiudicandum erit, quanam ex his perniciosis sectis censurae, quae vero prohibitioni tantum obnoxiae sint, certum imprimis est, excommunicatione latae sententiae mulctari massonicam aliasque eius generis sectas, quae . . . contra Ecclesiam vel legitimas potestates machinantur, sive id clam sive

(3) Lest there be any room for error, however, when a judgment will need to be made as to which of these pernicious sects are subject to censure and which are subject only to prohibition, it is first of all certain that Freemasonry and other sects of this kind, which . . . plot against the Church and lawful powers—whether they do palam fecerint, sive exegerint sive non a suis asseclis secreti servandi iuramentum.

- 3160 (4) Praeter istas sunt et aliae sectae prohibitae atque sub gravis culpae reatu vitandae, inter quas praecipue recensendae illae omnes, quae a sectatoribus secretum nemini pandendum et omnimodam oboedientiam occultis ducibus praestandam iureiurando exigunt. Animadvertendum insuper est, adesse nonnullas societates, quae, licet certo statui nequeat, pertineant necne ad has, quas memoravimus, dubiae tamen et periculi plenae sunt tum ob doctrinas quas profitentur, tum ob agendi rationem, quam sequuntur ii, quibus ducibus ipsae coaluerunt et reguntur. . . .

so secretly or openly, whether they demand an oath from their followers to keep the secret or not—are condemned by automatic excommunication.

(4) Besides these there are also other sects that are prohibited and must be avoided under pain of grave sin, among which are to be reckoned especially all those that bind their followers under oath to a secret to be divulged to no one and exact absolute obedience to be offered to secret leaders. It is to be noted, furthermore, that there are some societies that, although it cannot be determined with certainty whether or not they belong to these that we have mentioned, are nevertheless doubtful and full of danger not only because of the doctrines they profess, but also because of the course of action followed by those under whose leadership they have gathered and by whom they are directed. . . .

3162: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Poitiers, May (28) 31, 1884

Ed.: ASS 17 (1884/1885): 601 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:200f., no. 1617 / ArchKKR 54 (1885): 346.

The Assistance of a Physician or Confessor at a Duel

- 3162 Qu.: 1. Potestne medicus rogatus a duellantibus duello assistere cum intentione citius finem pugnae imponendi, vel simpliciter vulnera ligandi ac curandi, quin incurrat excommunicationem Summo Pontifici simpliciter reservatam?

2. Potestne saltem, quin duello sit praesens, in domo vicina vel in loco propinquo sistere, proximus ac paratus ad praebendum suum ministerium, si duellantibus opus fuerit?

3. Quid de confessario in iisdem condicionibus?

Resp.: Ad 1. Non posse, et excommunicationem incurrere.

Ad 2. et 3. Quatenus ex conducto fiat, item non posse et excommunicationem incurrere.

Questions: 1. Can a physician when invited by duelists assist at a duel with the intention of bringing an end to the fight more quickly, or simply to bind and cure wounds, without incurring the excommunication reserved simply to the supreme pontiff?

2. Can he at least, without being present at the duel, stay at a neighboring house or in a place nearby, ready to offer his service if the duelists have need of it?

3. What about a confessor under the same conditions?

Response: To 1. He cannot, and excommunication is incurred.

To 2. and 3. Insofar as it takes place as described, he cannot, and likewise excommunication is incurred.

3165–3179: Encyclical Immortale Dei, November 1, 1885

Ed.: ASS 18 (1885/1886): 162–75 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 5:120–42 / Brugge 2:147–62.

The End and the Authority of Civil Society

- 3165 Insitum homini natura est, ut in civili societate vivat: is enim necessarium vitae cultum et paratum, itemque ingenii atque animi perfectionem cum in solitudine adipisci non possit, provisum divinitus est, ut ad coniunctionem congregationemque hominum nasceretur cum domesticam, tum etiam civilem, quae suppeditare vitae sufficientiam perfectam sola potest. Quoniam vero non potest societas ulla consistere, nisi si aliquis omnibus praesit, efficaci similique movens singulos ad commune propositum impulsione, efficitur, civili hominum communitati necessariam esse auctoritatem, qua regatur:

Man's natural instinct moves him to live in civil society, for he cannot, if dwelling apart, provide himself with the necessary requirements of life or procure the means of developing his mental and moral faculties. Hence, it is divinely ordained that he should lead his life—be it family or civil—with his fellowmen, among whom alone his several wants can be adequately supplied. But, as no society can hold together unless someone be over all, directing all to strive earnestly for a common purpose, every body politic must have a ruling authority, and this authority, no less than society itself, quae, non secus ac societas, a natura proptereaque a Deo ipso oriatur auctore.

Ex quo illud consequitur, potestatem publicam per se ipsam non esse nisi a Deo [cf. Rm 13:1]. . . .

Ius autem imperii per se non est cum ulla reipublicae forma necessario copulatum: aliam sibi vel aliam assumere recte potest, modo utilitatis bonique communis reapse efficientem.

has its source in nature and has, consequently, God for its Author.

Hence, it follows that public power exists, not of itself, but from God [cf. Rm 13:1]. . . .

The right to rule, however, is not in itself bound by necessity to any form of government. It may legitimately assume one (form) or another as long as it is really working toward the common good and benefit.

The Church as a Perfect Society

Sicut Iesus Christus in terras venit, ut homines “vitam habeant et abundantius habeant” [Io 10:10], eodem modo Ecclesia propositum habet tamquam finem salutem animorum sempiternam: ob eamque rem talis est natura sua, ut porrigat sese ad totius complexum gentis humanae, nullis nec locorum nec temporum limitibus circumscripta. . . .

Haec societas, quamvis ex hominibus constet, non secus ac civilis communitas, tamen propter finem sibi constitutum atque instrumenta, quibus ad finem contendit, supernaturalis est et spiritualis: atque ideo distinguitur ac differt a societate civili: et, quod plurimum interest, societas est genere et iure perfecta, cum adiumenta ad incoluitatem actionemque suam necessaria voluntate beneficioque Conditoris sui, omnia in se et per se ipsa possideat. Sicut finis, quo tendit Ecclesia, longe nobilissima est, ita eius potestas est omnium praestantissima, neque imperio civili potest haberi inferior aut eidem esse ullo modo obnoxia.

Consequently, as Jesus Christ came into the world that men “may have life, and have it abundantly” [Jn 10:10], so also has the Church for her aim and end the eternal salvation of souls, and hence she is so constituted as to open wide her arms to all mankind, unhampered by any limit of either time or place. . . . 3166

This society is made up of men, just as civil society is, and yet is supernatural and spiritual on account of the end for which it was founded and of the means by which it aims at attaining that end. Hence, it is distinguished and differs from civil society, and, what is of highest moment, it is a society chartered as of right divine, perfect in its nature and in its title, to possess in itself and by itself, through the will and loving kindness of its Founder, all needful provision for its maintenance and action. And just as the end at which the Church aims is by far the noblest of ends, so is her authority the most exalted of all authority, nor can it be looked upon as inferior to the civil power or in any manner dependent upon it. 3167

The Coordination of Ecclesiastical and Civil Power

Itaque Deus humani generis procurationem inter duas potestates partitus est, scilicet ecclesiasticam et civilem, alteram quidem divinis, alteram humanis rebus praepositam. Utraque est in suo genere maxima: habet utraque certos, quibus contineatur, terminos eosque sua cuiusque natura causaque proxima definitos; unde aliquis velut orbis circumscribitur, in quo sua cuiusque actio iure proprio versetur. Sed quia utriusque imperium est in eosdem, cum usu venire possit, ut res una atque eadem, quamquam aliter atque aliter, sed tamen eadem res ad utriusque ius iudiciumque pertineat, debet providentissimus Deus, a quo sunt ambae constitutae, utriusque itinera recte atque ordine composuisse. . . .

The Almighty, therefore, has given the charge of the human race to two powers, the ecclesiastical and the civil, the one being set over divine, and the other over human, things. Each in its kind is supreme; each has fixed limits within which it is contained, limits that are defined by the nature and special object of the province of each, so that there is, we may say, an orbit traced out within which the action of each is brought into play by its own native right. But, inasmuch as each of these two powers has authority over the same subjects, and as it might come to pass that one and the same thing—related differently, but still remaining one and the same thing—might belong to the jurisdiction and determination of both, therefore God, who foresees all things and who is the author of these two powers, has marked out the course of each in right correlation to the other. . . . 3168

Itaque inter utramque potestatem quaedam intercedat necesse est ordinata colligatio; quae quidem coniunctioni non immerito comparatur, per quam anima et corpus in homine copulantur. . . .

There must, accordingly, exist between these two powers a certain orderly connection, which may be compared to the union of the soul and body in man. . . .

Quidquid igitur est in rebus humanis quoquo modo sacrum, quidquid ad salutem animorum cultumve Dei pertinet, sive tale illud sit natura sua, sive rursus tale intelligatur propter causam, ad quam refertur, id est omne in potestate arbitrioque Ecclesiae: cetera vero, quae civile et politicum genus complectitur, rectum est civili auctoritati esse subiecta, cum Iesus Christus iusserit, quae Caesaris sint, reddi Caesari, quae Dei, Deo [Mt 22:21]. . . .

- 3169 Ecclesiam vero etiam in suorum officiorum munere potestati civili velle esse subiectam, magna quidem iniuria, magna temeritas est. Hoc facto perturbatur ordo, quia quae naturalia sunt praeposuntur iis, quae sunt supra naturam: tollitur aut certe magnopere minuitur frequentia bonorum, quibus, si nulla re impediretur, communem vitam Ecclesia compleret; praetereaque via ad inimicitias munitur et certamina, quae, quantum utrique reipublicae perniciem afferant, nimis saepe eventus demonstravit.

Compendium of Christian Doctrine regarding the Constitution of States

- 3170 Intelligi necesse est, ortum publicae potestatis a Deo ipso, non a multitudine repeti oportere: seditionum licentiam cum ratione pugnare: officia religionis nullo loco numerare, vel uno modo esse in disparibus generibus affectos, nefas esse privatis hominibus, nefas civitatibus: immoderatam sentiendi sensusque palam iactandi potestatem non esse in civium iuribus neque in rebus gratia patrocinioque dignis ulla ratione ponendam.
- 3171 Similiter intelligi debet, Ecclesiam societatem esse, non minus quam ipsam civitatem, genere et iure perfectam: neque debere qui summam imperii teneant, committere, ut sibi servire aut subesse Ecclesiam cogant, aut minus esse sinant ad suas res agendas liberam, aut quicquam de ceteris iuribus detrahant, quae in ipsam a Iesu Christo collata sunt.
- 3172 In negotiis autem mixti iuris, maxime esse secundum naturam, itemque secundum Dei consilia non secessionem alterius potestatis ab altera, multoque minus contentionem, sed plane concordiam, eamque cum causis proximis congruentem, quae causae utramque societatem genuerunt.

Haec quidem sunt, quae de constituendis temperandisque civitatibus ab Ecclesia catholica praecipuntur.

Whatever, therefore, in things human is of a sacred character, whatever belongs, either of its own nature or by reason of the end to which it is referred, to the salvation of souls or to the worship of God, is subject to the power and judgment of the Church. Whatever is to be ranged under the civil and political order is rightly subject to the civil authority. Jesus Christ has himself given command that what is Caesar's is to be rendered to Caesar and that what belongs to God is to be rendered to God [Mt 22:21]. . . .

To wish the Church to be subject to the civil power in the exercise of her duty is a great folly and a sheer injustice. Whenever this is the case, order is disturbed, for things natural are put above things supernatural; the many benefits that the Church, if free to act, would confer on society are either prevented or at least lessened in number; and a way is prepared for enmities and rivalries, which have brought so much destruction for both societies, as experience has all too often shown.

It is evident that the origin of public power is to be sought for in God himself and not in the multitude and that it is repugnant to reason to allow free scope for sedition. Again, that it is not lawful for the State, any more than for the individual, either to disregard all religious duties or to hold in equal favor different kinds of religion; that the unrestrained freedom of thinking and of openly making known one's thoughts is not inherent in the rights of citizens and is by no means to be reckoned worthy of favor and support.

In like manner it is to be understood that the Church no less than the State itself is a society perfect in its own nature and its own right and that those who exercise sovereignty ought not so to act as to compel the Church to become subservient or subject to them, or to hamper her liberty in the management of her own affairs or to despoil her in any way of the other privileges conferred upon her by Jesus Christ.

In matters, however, of mixed jurisdiction, it is in the highest degree consonant to nature, as also to the designs of God, that, so far from one of the powers separating itself from the other, or still less coming into conflict with it, complete harmony, such as is suited to the end for which each power exists, should be preserved between them.

This, then, is the teaching of the Catholic Church concerning the constitution and government of the State.

Civil Liberties

Quibus tamen dictis decretisque si recte diiudicari velit, nulla per se reprehenditur ex variis reipublicae formis, ut quae nihil habent, quod doctrinae catholicae repugnet, eademque possunt, si sapienter adhibeantur et iuste, in optimo statu tueri civitatem.

Immo neque illud per se reprehenditur, participem plus minus esse populum reipublicae: quod ipsum certis in temporibus certisque legibus potest non solum ad utilitatem, sed etiam ad officium pertinere civium.

Insuper neque causa iusta nascitur, cur Ecclesiam quisquam criminetur aut esse in lenitate facilitateque plus aequo restrictam aut ei, quae germana et legitima sit, libertati inimicam.

Revera si divini cultus varia genera eodem iure esse, quo veram religionem, Ecclesia iudicat non licere, non ideo tamen eos damnat rerum publicarum moderatores, qui, magni alicuius adipiscendi boni aut prohibendi causa mali, moribus atque usu patienter ferunt, ut ea habeant singula in civitate locum.

Atque illud quoque magnopere cavere Ecclesia solet, ut ad amplexandam fidem catholicam nemo invitus cogatur, quia quod sapienter Augustinus monet: “Credere non potest homo nisi volens.”¹

Simili ratione nec potest Ecclesia libertatem probare eam, quae fastidium gignat sanctissimarum Dei legum debitamque potestati legitima oboedientiam exuat. Est enim licentia verius quam libertas: rectissimeque ab Augustino “libertas perditionis”,¹ a Petro Apostolo “velamen malitiae” [I Pt 2:16] appellatur: immo, cum sit praeter rationem, vera servitus est: “qui” enim “facit peccatum, servus est peccati” [Io 8:34]. Contra illa germana est atque expetenda libertas, quae, si privatim spectetur, erroribus et cupiditatibus, teterrimis dominis, hominem servire non sinit: si publice, civibus sapienter praees, facultatem augendorum commodorum large ministrat remque publicam ab alieno arbitrio defendit.

By the words and decrees just cited, if judged dispassionately, no one of the several forms of government is in itself condemned, inasmuch as none of them contains anything contrary to Catholic doctrine and all of them are capable, if wisely and justly managed, to insure the welfare of the State. 3173

Neither is it blameworthy in itself, in any manner, for the people to have a share greater or less in the government: for at certain times, and under certain laws, such participation may not only be of benefit to the citizens but may even be of obligation. 3174

Moreover, no just reason exists for accusing the Church either of being unfairly sparing with (her) clemency and tolerance or of being opposed to real and lawful liberty. 3175

The Church, indeed, deems it unlawful to place the various forms of divine worship on the same footing as the true religion but does not, on that account, condemn those rulers who, for the sake of securing some great good or of hindering some great evil, allow patiently custom or usage to be a kind of sanction for each kind of religion having its place in the State. 3176

And, in fact, the Church is wont to take earnest heed that no one shall be forced to embrace the Catholic faith against his will, for, as St. Augustine wisely reminds us, “Man cannot believe otherwise than of his own will.”¹ 3177

In the same way, the Church cannot approve of that liberty which begets a contempt of the most sacred laws of God and casts off the obedience due to lawful authority, for this is not liberty so much as license and is most correctly styled by St. Augustine the “liberty of self-ruin”¹ and by the apostle St. Peter the “cloak of malice” [I Pet 2:16]. Indeed, since it is opposed to reason, it is a true slavery, for “every one who commits sin is a slave to sin” [Jn 8:34]. On the other hand, that liberty is truly genuine, and to be sought after, which in regard to the individual does not allow men to be the slaves of error and of passion, the worst of all masters; which, too, in public administration guides the citizens in wisdom and provides for them increased means of well-being; and which, further, protects the State from foreign interference. 3178

*3177 ¹ Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 2 (R. Willems: CpChL [1954] 36:260₁₄ / PL 35:1607).

*3178 ¹ Augustine, letter 105 to the Donatists, chap. 2, no. 9 (CSEL 34/II:601₂₅ / PL 33:399).

3179 Atqui honestam hanc et homine dignam libertatem Ecclesia probat omnium maxime, eamque ut tueretur in populis firmam atque integram, eniti et contendere numquam destitit.

This honorable liberty, alone worthy of human beings, the Church approves most highly and has never slackened her endeavor to preserve, strong and unchanged, among nations.

3185–3187: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, March 10, 1886

Ed.: L'Ami du Clergé 20 (1898): 1079f., no. V / F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 98f. / Le Canoniste Contemporain 9 (1886): 463f.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

3185 Expos.: Ex responso S. Poenitentiariae diei 14 Dec. 1876 dato ad rectorem parochiae in dioecesi Andegavensii constat non esse licitum, favere paenitentium errori, qui a multis bona fides dicitur, nec talem bonam fidem creare.

Explanation: From the response of the Sacred Penitentiary of December 14, 1876, given to a rector of a parish in the Diocese of Angers, it is established that it is not permitted to support the error of penitents that many call good faith, and neither is it licit to produce such good faith.

Constat etiam, non satisfacere muneri suo eos confessarios, qui, quando paenitens solummodo accusat onanism, altum silentium servant, et finita confessione peccatorum, illum verbis generalibus ad contritionem excitant illique asserenti, se detestari omne peccatum lethale, sanctam absolutionem impertiuntur.

Thus, it is also established that those confessors do not fulfill their duties who, when a penitent accuses (himself) only of onanism, maintain a profound silence and, when the confession of sins is over, exhort him to contrition with general words and, if he claims to detest all mortal sin, give him holy absolution.

Constat praeterea, omni reprehensione carere eos confessarios, qui (intra limites [decentiae] ... quoad interrogaciones ...) non omittunt quemcumque paenitentem, sive sponte sive ex interrogatione prudenter facta, confessum de onanismo, reprehendere, non secus ac de aliis gravibus peccatis, ... nec illum absolvunt, nisi sufficientibus signis monstret se dolere de praeterito et habere propositum non amplius onanistice agendi. — [Remanent vero sequentia dubia:]

Furthermore, it is established that those confessors are exempt from all reproach who (within the limits [of decency] ... in regard to such questions ...) do not neglect to reprimand any penitent who, spontaneously or from a prudently posed question, has confessed to onanism, just as for any other mortal sin, ... and who do not absolve him unless he manifests sufficient signs of sorrow for what has been committed and is resolved not to practice onanism any more. — [There remain, however, the following questions:]

3186 Qu.: 1. Quando adest fundata suspicio, paenitentem, qui de onanismo omnino silet, huic crimini esse addictum, num confessario liceat a prudenti et discreta interrogatione abstinere, eo quod praevideat, plures a bona fide exturbandos, multosque sacramenta deserturos esse? — Annon potius teneatur confessarius prudenter ac discrete interrogare?

Questions: 1. When there exists a well-founded suspicion that the penitent, who remains completely silent about onanism, is attached to this sin, is it permitted for the confessor to refrain from a prudent and discreet interrogation, inasmuch as he foresees that many would be driven away from their good faith and many would be neglectful of the sacraments? — Or is the confessor not, rather, bound to interrogate prudently and discreetly?

3187 2. An confessarius, qui sive ex spontanea confessione sive ex prudenti interrogatione cognoscit paenitentem esse onanistam, teneatur illum de huius peccati gravitate, aequae ac de aliorum peccatorum mortalium, monere ... eique absolutionem tunc solum impertiri, cum sufficientibus signis constet eundem dolere de praeterito et habere propositum non amplius onanistice agendi?

2. Is the confessor who, either from a spontaneous confession or from a prudent interrogation, knows that the penitent is an onanist bound to admonish him about the gravity of this sin just like other mortal sins ... and to impart the absolution only when the penitent shows sufficient signs of sorrow for what has been committed and is resolved not to practice onanism any more?

Resp.: Ad 1. Regulariter negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad secundam.

Response: To 1. No, as a general rule, to the first part; yes, to the second.

Ad 2. Affirmative, iuxta doctrinam probatorum auctorum.

To 2. Yes, according to the teaching of approved authors.

3188: Decree of the Holy Office, May 19, 1886

Ed.: ASS 19 (1886/1887): 46 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:215, no. 1657 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 6:72f.

Cremation

Qu.: 1. An licitum sit nomen dare societatibus, quibus propositum est, promovere usum comburendi hominum cadavera?

2. An licitum sit, mandare, ut sua aliorumve cadavera comburantur?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice): Ad 1. Negative, et si agatur de societatibus Massonicae sectae filialibus, incurri poenas contra hanc latas. —Ad 2. Negative.

Questions: 1. Is it permitted to join societies whose purpose is to promote the practice of burning the corpses of men? 3188

2. Is it permitted to command that one's own or the corpses of others be burned?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff): To 1. No, and if it concerns societies affiliated with the Masonic sect, the penalties passed against this sect are incurred. —To 2. No.

3190–3193: Decree of the Holy Office, May 27, 1886

Ed.: ASS 22 (1889/1890): 635f.

Civil Divorce

Expos.: A nonnullis Galliarum episcopis sequentia dubia S. Romanae et Universalis Inquisitioni proposita sunt: In epistola S. R. et U. Inquisitionis 25. Iunii 1885 ad omnes in Gallica ditione Ordinarios circa civilis divortii legem ita decernitur: "Attentis gravissimis rerum, temporum ac locorum adiunctis tolerari posse, ut qui magistratus obtinent et advocati causas matrimoniales in Gallia agant, quin officio cedere teneantur", condiciones adiecit, quarum secunda haec est: "Dummodo ita animo comparati sint tum circa valorem et nullitatem coniugii, tum circa separationem corporum, de quibus causis iudicare coguntur, ut numquam proferant sententiam, neque proferendam defendant vel ad eam provocent vel excitent divino aut ecclesiastico iuri repugnantem."

Qu.: 1. An recta sit interpretatio per Gallias diffusa ac etiam typis data, iuxta quam satisfacit conditioni praecitatae iudex, qui, licet matrimonium aliquod validum sit coram Ecclesia, ab illo matrimonio vero et constanti omnino abstrahit, et applicans legem civilem pronuntiat, locum esse divortio, modo solos effectus civiles solumque contractum civilem abrumpere mente intendat, eaque sola respiciant termini prolatae sententiae? Aliis terminis, an sententia sic lata dici possit divino aut ecclesiastico iuri non repugnans?

2. Postquam iudex pronuntiavit locum esse divortio, an possit syndicus (gallice: le maire) et ipse solos effectus civiles solumque civilem contractum intendens, ut supra

Explanation: Some French bishops presented the following inquiries to the Sacred Roman and Universal Inquisition: in the June 25, 1885, letter of the Sacred Roman and Universal Inquisition to all the Ordinaries of the territories under French jurisdiction with regard to the law of civil divorce, it was declared as follows: "Considering the very serious circumstances of events, times, and places, it can be tolerated that those who hold the office of magistrate and lawyers may conduct matrimonial cases in France without being obliged to relinquish their office"; and it added conditions, of which the second is: "Provided that, regarding the validity and nullity of marriage as well as the separation of bodies about which they are constrained to judge, they are disposed interiorly never to offer an opinion, or to defend, provoke, or encourage one, that is contrary to divine or ecclesiastical law." 3190

Questions: 1. Is the interpretation right that is widespread throughout France and even put in print, according to which the judge satisfies the above-mentioned condition who, although a certain marriage is valid in the sight of the Church, prescinds completely from that true and unbroken marriage and, applying civil law, pronounces that there is ground for divorce, provided he intends in his mind to break only the civil effects and only the civil contract and provided the terms of the opinion offered consider these alone? In other words, can an opinion so offered be said not to be at odds with the divine and ecclesiastical law? 3191

2. After the judge has decided that there is ground for divorce, may the mayor (in French: le maire), who is himself also intending only the civil effects and the civil 3192

exponitur, divortium pronuntiare, quamvis matrimonium validum sit coram Ecclesia.¹

contract, as explained above, pronounce a divorce, even though the previous marriage is valid in the eyes of the Church?¹

- 3193 3. Pronuntiato divortio, an possit idem syndicus coniugem ad alias nuptias transire attentantem civiliter cum alio iungere, quamvis matrimonium prius validum sit coram Ecclesia vivatque altera pars?

3. After the divorce has been pronounced, may the same mayor join to another in a civil ceremony a spouse who is seeking to enter into another marriage, even though the prior marriage is valid in the eyes of the Church and the other party is still living?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice): Negative ad 1, 2 et 3.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff): No to 1, 2, and 3.

3195–3196: Decree of the Holy Office, December 15, 1886

Ed.: ASS 25 (1892/1893): 63/ CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:218, no. 1665.

Cremation

- 3195 Quoties agatur de iis, quorum corpora non propria ipsorum, sed aliena voluntate cremationi subiiciantur, Ecclesiae ritus et suffragia adhiberi posse tum domum in ecclesia, non autem usque ad cremationis locum, remoto scandalo. Scandalum vero removeri etiam poterit, si notum fiat, cremationem non propria defuncti voluntate electam fuisse.

Insofar as it is a question of those whose bodies are subjected to cremation, not by their own will, but by that of another, the rites and prayers of the Church can be employed not only at home but also in the church, not, however, at the place of cremation, scandal being avoided. Indeed, scandal can also be avoided if it be known that cremation was not elected by the deceased's own will.

- 3196 At ubi agatur de iis, qui propria voluntate cremationem elegerunt, et in hac voluntate certo et notorie usque ad mortem perseverarunt, attento Decreto feria IV 19. Maii 1886 [*3/88] agendum cum iis iuxta normas Ritualis Romani, tit. “Quibus non licet dare ecclesiasticam sepulturam”. In casibus autem particularibus, in quibus dubium vel difficultas oriatur, consulendus erit Ordinarius....

But when it is a question of those who elect cremation by their own will and have persevered in this will definitely and notoriously even until death, with due attention to the decree of Wednesday, May 19, 1886 [*3/88], action must be taken in such cases according to the norms of the Roman Ritual, title “To Whom It Is Not Permitted to Give Burial in the Church”. But in particular cases where doubt or difficulty arises, the Ordinary will have to be consulted....

3198: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Carcassone, May 8, 1887

Ed.: ASS 23 (1890/1891): 699 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:220, no. 1672.

The Wine for Mass

- 3198 Qu.: [Utrum ad periculum corruptionis vini praecavendum remedia quae sequuntur sint licita et quodnam praeferendum:]

Question: [In order to prevent the risk of a corruption of the wine, which of the following remedies may be permitted and which is to be preferred?]

¹ *3192 A September 24, 1887, response of the Sacred Penitentiary is less rigorous: in a particular case, it is permitted that a mayor (who otherwise might lose his office), after the civil judges have determined a divorce to be legal, could decide in favor of the civil divorce, provided that: (1) “he publicly upholds the Catholic doctrine concerning marriage as well as the fact that matrimonial matters belong solely to the competence of ecclesiastical judges; and that (2) in accepting the judgment itself and speaking as a state official, he publicly declares that he can only consider the civil effects and the civil contract and that, otherwise, the bond of marriage remains completely firm before God and conscience” (catholicam doctrinam de matrimonio deque causis matrimonialibus ad solos iudices ecclesiasticos pertinentibus palam profiteretur, 2. ipsa sententia et tamquam magistratus loquens publice declaret, se solos effectus civiles solumque contractum civilem spectare posse, aliunde vinculum matrimonii omnino firmum remanere coram Deo et conscientia: Revue des sciences ecclésiastiques 60 [Amiens, 1889/II]: 476).

1. Vino naturali addatur parva quantitas “d’eau-de-vie”;
2. Ebulliat vinum ad 65 altitudinis gradus.

Resp.: Praeferendum vinum prout secundo loco exponitur.

1. A small quantity of “eau-de-vie” (brandy or spirits) is added to the wine.
2. The wine is boiled to a temperature of 65 degrees (centigrade).

Response: (It is) preferable to have wine as explained in the second case.

3201–3241: Decree of the Holy Office Post obitum, December 14, 1887

Ever since 1831, Antonio Rosmini-Serbati had stirred up opposition with some of his theses. Numerous works of Rosmini were denounced to the Congregation of the Index. However, since both Gregory XVI and Pius IX esteemed him because of his extraordinary capabilities (Pius IX, in 1848, wanted to name him a cardinal), he had, at first, little to fear from his opponents. They did, it is true, obtain a condemnation of two small works of his from the Congregation of the Index on May 30, 1849, but in regard to the other works criticized, the Congregation decided, on July 3, 1854, that they could be “dismissed (from the proceeding)” (dimittenda esse; cf. *3154f.). However, after his death (July 1, 1855), some new works of his appeared that were denounced. Other works were republished without corrections. As a result, the Holy Office condemned forty propositions and published these in both Italian and Latin. Cf. the letter of Leo XIII to the archbishop of Milan of June 1, 1889, which confirms the validity of this condemnation (ASS 21 [1888/1889]: 709f.).

Ed.: ASS 20 (1887/1888): 398–410; cf. also DThC 13/II, 2929–49.

The works of Antonio Rosmini-Serbati from which the propositions are taken:

A' = Teosofia, vols. 1–5 (Turin, 1859ff.) [for propositions 1–18, 20–22, 24–26].

B' = Introduzione del Vangelo secondo Giovanni commentata (Turin, 1882) [for 19, 23, 26f., 29–34].

C' = Psicologia, vols. 1–3 (Milan, 1887) [for 20, 24].

D' = Antropologia in servizio della scienza morale (Milan, 1838) [for 21].

E' = Teodicea (Milan, 1845) [for 23, 38–40].

F' = Introduzione alla filosofia (Casale, 1850) [for 28, 37].

G' = Trattato della coscienza morale (Filosofia morale, part 3) (Milan, 1844) [for 35].

H' = Filosofia del diritto, vols. 1–2 (Milan, 1841f.) [for 36].

Errors of Antonio Rosmini-Serbati

1. In ordine rerum creaturarum immediate manifestatur humano intellectui aliquid divini in se ipso, huiusmodi nempe, quod ad divinam naturam pertineat.¹

2. Cum divinum dicimus in natura, vocabulum istud divinum non usurpamus ad significandum effectum non divinum causae divinae; neque mens nobis est loqui de divino quodam, quod tale sit per participationem.¹

3. In natura igitur universi, id est in intelligentiis, quae in ipso sunt, aliquid est, cui convenit denominatio divini non sensu figurato, sed proprio. —Est actualitas non distincta a reliquo actualitatis divinae.¹

4. Esse indeterminatum, quod procul dubio notum est omnibus intelligentiis, est divinum illud, quod homini in natura manifestatur.¹

1. In the order of created things there is immediately manifested to the human intellect something of the divine in its very self, namely, such as pertains to divine nature.¹ 3201

2. When we speak of the divine in nature, we do not use that word divine to signify a nondivine effect of a divine cause; nor is it our mind to speak of a certain thing as divine because it is such through participation.¹ 3202

3. In the nature of the universe, then—that is, in the intelligences that are in it—there is something to which the term divine, not in a figurative, but in a real sense, is fitting.—The actuality is not distinct from the rest of divine actuality.¹ 3203

4. Indeterminate being, which without doubt is known to all intelligences, is that divine (reality) which is manifest to man in nature.¹ 3204

*3201¹ A' 4:6, no. 2.

*3202¹ Ibid.

*3203¹ A' 4:18f., no. 15; 3:344, no. 1423.

*3204¹ A' 4:8, nos. 5f.

- 3205 5. Esse, quod homo intuetur, necesse est, ut sit aliquid entis necessarii et aeterni, causae creatantis, determinantis ac finientis omnium entium contingentium: atque hoc est Deus.¹
- 3206 6. In esse, quod praescindit a creaturis et a Deo, quod est esse indeterminatum, atque in Deo, esse non indeterminato, sed absoluto, eadem est essentia.¹
- 3207 7. Esse indeterminatum intuitionis, esse initiale, est aliquid Verbi, quod mens Patris distinguit non realiter, sed secundum rationem a Verbo.¹
- 3208 8. Entia finita, quibus componitur mundus, resultant ex duobus elementis, id est ex termino reali finito et ex esse initiali, quod eidem termino tribuit formam entis.¹
- 3209 9. Esse, obiectum intuitionis, est actus initialis omnium entium. —Esse initiale est initium tam cognoscibilium quam subsistentium: est pariter initium Dei, prout a nobis concipitur, et creaturarum.¹
- 3210 10. Esse virtuale et sine limitibus est prima ac simplicissima omnium entitatum, adeo ut quaelibet alia entitas sit composita, et inter ipsius componentia semper et necessario sit esse virtuale. —Est pars essentialis omnium omnino entitatum, utut cogitatione dividantur.¹
- 3211 11. Quidditas (id quod res est) entis finiti non constituitur eo, quod habet positivi, sed suis limitibus. Quidditas entis infiniti constituitur entitate, et est positiva; quidditas vero entis finiti constituitur limitibus entitatis, et est negativa.¹
- 3212 12. Finita realitas non est, sed Deus facit eam esse addendo infinitae realitati limitationem. —Esse initiale fit essentia omnis entis realis. —Esse, quod actuatur naturas finitas, ipsis coniunctum, est recisum a Deo.¹
5. Being, which man contemplates, must be something of the necessary and eternal being, the creating cause, the determining and final cause of all contingent beings; and this is God.¹
6. In the being that prescinds from creatures and from God, which is indeterminate being, and in God, not indeterminate but absolute being, the essence is the same.¹
7. The indeterminate being of intuition, initial being, is something of the Word, which the mind of the Father distinguishes from the Word, not really, but according to reason.¹
8. Finite beings, of which the world is composed, result from two elements, that is, from the real finite terminus and from the initial being, which contributes the form of being to the same terminus.¹
9. Being, the object of intuition, is the initial act of all beings. —Initial being is the beginning of both the knowable and the subsisting; it is likewise the beginning of God, according as he is conceived by us, and of creatures.¹
10. Virtual and limitless being is the first and most simple of all entities, so that any other entity is composite, and among its components is always and necessarily virtual being. —It is the essential part of absolutely all entities, according as they are divided by thought.¹
11. The quiddity (that which a thing is) of a finite being consists, not of that which it has of the positive, but of its limits. The quiddity of an infinite being consists of its entity and is positive; but the quiddity of a finite being consists of the limits of the entity and is negative.¹
12. There is no finite reality, but God causes it to exist by adding limitation to infinite reality. —Initial being becomes the essence of every real being. —Being that actuates finite natures and is joined with them is cut off from God.¹

*3205 ¹ A' 1:241, no. 298.*3206 ¹ A' 2:150, no. 848.*3207 ¹ Ibid. A' 1:445, no. 490.*3208 ¹ A' 1:396, no. 454.*3209 ¹ A' 3:73, no. 1235; 1:229f., nos. 287f.*3210 ¹ A' 1:221, no. 280; 223, no. 281.*3211 ¹ A' 1:708f., no. 726.*3212 ¹ A' 1:658, no. 681; 1:399, no. 458; 3:346, no. 1425.

13. Discrimen inter esse absolutum et esse relativum non illud est, quod intercedit substantiam inter et substantiam, sed aliud multo maius; unum enim est absolute ens, alterum est absolute non-ens. At hoc alterum est relative ens. Cum autem ponitur ens relativum, non multiplicatur absolute ens; hinc absolutum et relativum absolute non sunt unica substantia, sed unicum esse; atque hoc sensu nulla est diversitas esse, immo habetur unitas esse.¹

14. Divina abstractione producitur esse initiale, primum finitorum entium elementum; divina vero imaginatione producitur reale finitum seu realitates omnes, quibus mundus constat.¹

15. Tertia operatio esse absoluti mundum creantis est divina synthesis, id est unio duorum elementorum: quae sunt esse initiale, commune omnium finitorum entium initium, atque reale finitum, seu potius diversa realia finita, termini diversi eiusdem esse initialis. Qua unione creantur entia finita.¹

16. Esse initiale per divinam synthesim ab intelligentia relatum, non ut intelligibile, sed mere ut essentia, ad terminos finitos reales, efficit, ut existant entia finita subjective et realiter.¹

17. Id unum efficit Deus creando, quod totum actum esse creaturarum integre ponit: hic igitur actus proprie non est factus, sed positus.¹

18. Amor, quo Deus se diligit etiam in creaturis et qui est ratio, qua se determinat ad creandum, moralem necessitatem constituit, quae in ente perfectissimo semper inducit effectum: huiusmodi enim necessitas tantummodo in pluribus entibus imperfectis integram relinquit libertatem bilateralem.¹

19. Verbum est materia illa invisibilis, ex qua, ut dicitur Sap 11:18, creatae fuerunt res omnes universi.¹

20. Non repugnat, ut anima humana generatione multiplicetur, ita ut concipiatur, eam ab imperfecto, nempe a gradu sensitivo, ad perfectum, nempe ad gradum intellectivum, procedere.¹

13. The difference between absolute being and relative being is not that which exists between ⟨one⟩ substance and ⟨another⟩ substance, but something much greater; the one, in fact, is absolute being, the other absolute non-being, but this other is a relative being. But when a relative being is posited, absolute being is not multiplied; hence, absolute ⟨being⟩ and relative ⟨being⟩ are not absolutely one substance but one being; and in this sense, there is not a diversity of being but, rather, a unity of being.¹

14. By divine abstraction initial being is produced, the first element of finite beings; but by divine imagination the finite real ⟨being⟩ or all realities are produced of which the world consists.¹

15. The third operation of absolute being creating the world is divine synthesis, that is the union of two elements, which are initial being, the common beginning of all finite beings, and finite reality, or rather diverse finite realities, the diverse ends of the same initial being. By this union finite beings are created.¹

16. Initial being through divine synthesis referred by intelligence, not as intelligible but merely as essence, to the real finite ends causes the finite beings to exist subjectively and really.¹

17. In creating, God brings about this one ⟨thing⟩, that he posits completely the whole act of the existence of creatures: strictly speaking, therefore, this act is not made but posited.¹

18. The love by which God loves himself even in creatures, and which is the reason by which he determines himself to create, constitutes a moral necessity, which in the most perfect being always produces its effect; in fact, only this type of necessity leaves bilateral freedom intact in the many imperfect creatures.¹

19. The Word is that invisible matter from which, as it is said in Wisdom 11:17, all things of the universe were created.¹

20. It is not contradictory that the human soul multiplies through generation in such a way that it is understood as progressing from the imperfect, that is, from the sensitive level, to the perfect, that is, to the intellectual level.¹

*3213 ¹ A' 5:9, chap. 4.

*3214 ¹ A' 1:408, no. 463.

*3215 ¹ Ibid.

*3216 ¹ A' 1:410, no. 464.

*3217 ¹ A' 1:350, no. 412.

*3218 ¹ A' 1:49f., no. 51.

*3219 ¹ B' 109, lesson 37.

*3220 ¹ C' bk. 4, no. 656; A' 1:619, no. 646.

- 3221 21. Cum sensitivo principio intuibile fit esse, hoc solo tactu, hac sui unione, principium illud antea solum sentiens, nunc simul intelligens, ad nobiliorem statum evehitur, naturam mutat, ac fit intelligens, subsistens atque immortale.¹
- 3222 22. Non est cogitatu impossibile, divina potentia fieri posse, ut a corpore animato dividatur anima intellectiva, et ipsum adhuc maneat animale; maneret nempe in ipso, tamquam basis puri animalis, principium animale, quod antea in eo erat veluti appendix.¹
- 3223 23. In statu naturali anima defuncti existit perinde ac non existeret: cum non possit ullam super se ipsam reflexionem exercere, aut ullam habere sui conscientiam, ipsius condicio similis dici potest statui tenebrarum perpetuarum et somni sempiterni.¹
- 3224 24. Forma substantialis corporis est potius effectus animae atque interior terminus operationis ipsius: propterea forma substantialis corporis non est ipsa anima. —Unio animae et corporis proprie consistit in immanenti perceptione, qua subiectum intuens ideam, affirmat sensibile, postquam in hac eius essentiam intuitum fuerit.¹
- 3225 25. Revelato mysterio Sanctissimae Trinitatis, potest ipsius existentia demonstrari argumentis mere speculativis, negativis quidem et indirectis, huiusmodi tamen, ut per ipsa veritas illa ad philosophicas disciplinas revocetur, atque fiat propositio scientifica sicut ceterae: si enim ipsa negaretur, doctrina theosophica purae rationis non modo incompleta maneret, sed etiam omni ex parte absurditatibus scatens annihilaretur.¹
- 3226 26. Tres supremæ formæ esse, nempe subiectivitas, obiectivitas, sanctitas, seu realitas, idealitas, moralitas, si transferantur ad esse absolutum, non possunt aliter concipi nisi ut personæ subsistentes et viventes. —Verbum, quatenus obiectum amatum, et non quatenus Verbum, id est obiectum in se subsistens per se cognitum, est persona Spiritus Sancti.¹
- 3227 27. In humanitate Christi humana voluntas fuit ita raptā a Spiritu Sancto ad adhaerendum Esse obiectivo, id est Verbo, ut illa Ipsi integre tradiderit regimen hominis, et Verbum illud personaliter assumpsit, ita
21. When being is capable of being intuited by the sensitive principle, by this sole contact, by this union with itself, this principle, which at first only senses and now simultaneously understands, is elevated to a more noble state, changes nature, and becomes intelligent, subsistent, and immortal.¹
22. It is not impossible to think that, through the divine power, it could happen that the intellectual soul is separated from the animated body while (the latter) itself remains animal: surely there could remain in it, as the basis of the purely animal, the animal principle, which before was in it as an appendix.¹
23. The soul of the deceased exists in a natural state as if it did not exist; since it cannot exercise any reflection upon itself or have any consciousness of itself, its condition can be said to be like the state of perpetual shadows and eternal sleep.¹
24. The substantial form of the body is rather the effect of the soul and the interior terminus of the operation itself; therefore, the substantial form of the body is not the soul itself. —The union of the soul and the body properly consists in immanent perception, by which the subject viewing the idea affirms the sensible, after it has viewed its essence in this (idea).¹
25. When the mystery of the Most Blessed Trinity has been revealed, its existence can be demonstrated by merely speculative arguments, negative indeed, and indirect; yet such that through them the truth is brought to philosophic studies and the proposition becomes scientific like the rest; for if it were denied, the theosophic doctrine of pure reason would not only remain incomplete, but it would also be annihilated, teeming with absurdities on every side.¹
26. If the three supreme forms of being, namely, subjectivity, objectivity, sanctity; or, reality, ideality, and morality, are transferred to absolute being, they cannot be conceived otherwise than as subsisting and living persons. —The Word, insofar as it is the object loved and not insofar as it is the Word—that is, the object subsisting in itself (and) known by itself—is the person of the Holy Spirit.¹
27. In the humanity of Christ, the human will was so carried away by the Holy Spirit to cling to objective Being, that is, to the Word, that it (the will) completely yielded control of the man to (the Word) and the Word

*3221 ¹ D' bk. 4, chap. 5, no. 819; A' 1:619, no. 646.

*3222 ¹ A' 1:591, no. 621.

*3223 ¹ E' 638, appendix, art. 10; B' 217, lesson 69.

*3224 ¹ C' pt. 2, bk. 1, chap. 11, no. 849; A' 5:377, chap. 53, art. 2, § 5, 4°.

*3225 ¹ A' 1:155–58, nos. 191, 193f.

*3226 ¹ A' 1:154, no. 190; 159, no. 196; B' 200, lesson 65.

sibi uniens naturam humanam. Hinc voluntas humana desiit esse personalis in homine, et cum sit persona in aliis hominibus, in Christo remansit natura.¹

28. In christiana doctrina Verbum, character et facies Dei, imprimitur in animo eorum, qui cum fide suscipiunt baptismum Christi. —Verbum, id est character, in anima impressum, in doctrina christiana, est Esse reale (infinite) per se manifestum, quod deinde novimus esse secundam personam Sanctissimae Trinitatis.¹

29. A catholica doctrina, quae sola est veritas, minime alienam putamus hanc coniecturam: In eucharistico Sacramento substantia panis et vini fit vera caro et verus sanguis Christi, quando Christus eam facit terminum sui principii sentientis, ipsamque sua vita vivificat: eo ferme modo, quo panis et vinum vere transsubstantiantur in nostram carnem et sanguinem, quia fiunt terminus nostri principii sentientis.¹

30. Peracta transsubstantiatione, intelligi potest corpori Christi glorioso partem aliquam adiungi in ipso incorporatam, indivisam pariterque gloriosam.¹

31. In sacramento Eucharistiae vi verborum corpus et sanguis Christi est tantum ea mensura, quae respondet quantitati (“a quel tanto”) substantiae panis et vini, quae transsubstantiatur: reliquum corporis Christi ibi est per concomitantiam.¹

32. Quoniam qui “non manducat carnem Filii hominis et bibit eius sanguinem, non habet vitam in se” [Io 6:54], et nihilominus qui moriuntur cum baptisate aquae, sanguinis aut desiderii, certo consequuntur vitam aeternam, dicendum est, his qui in hac vita non comederunt corpus et sanguinem Christi, subministrari hunc caelestem cibum in futura vita, ipso mortis instanti. —Hinc etiam Sanctis Veteris Testamenti potuit Christus descendens ad inferos se ipsum communicare sub speciebus panis et vini, ut aptos eos redderet ad visionem Dei.¹

33. Cum daemones fructum possederint, putarunt se ingressuros in hominem, si de illo ederet; converso enim cibo in corpus hominis animatum, ipsi poterant libere assumed it personally, thus uniting human nature to itself. For this reason, the human will ceased to be personal in the man, and, although it is person in other men, in Christ it remained nature.¹

28. According to Christian doctrine, the Word, the character and countenance of God, is impressed on the souls of those who receive the baptism of Christ with faith. —The Word, that is, the character, impressed on the soul, is, according to Christian doctrine, real (infinite) Being manifest through itself, which we afterward know to be the second Person of the Most Blessed Trinity.¹ 3228

29. We think that the following conjecture is by no means at variance with Catholic doctrine, which alone is truth: In the eucharistic sacrament the substance of bread and wine becomes the true flesh and true blood of Christ when Christ makes it the terminus of his sentient principle and vivifies it with his life; almost in that way by which bread and wine truly are transubstantiated into our flesh and blood, because they become the terminus of our sentient principle.¹ 3229

30. When transubstantiation has been accomplished, it can be understood that to the glorious body of Christ some part is added, incorporated in it, undivided, and equally glorious.¹ 3230

31. In the sacrament of the Eucharist by the power of words the body and blood of Christ are present only in that measure which corresponds to the quantity (“a quel tanto”) of the substance of the bread and wine that is transubstantiated; the rest of the body of Christ is there through concomitance.¹ 3231

32. Since he who does not eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink of his blood does not have life in him [cf. Jn 6:53], and nevertheless those who die with the baptism of water, of blood, or of desire certainly attain eternal life, it must be said that these who have not eaten of the body and blood of Christ are administered this heavenly food in the future life, at the very moment of death. — Hence, also to the saints of the Old Testament Christ was able by descending to the dead to communicate himself under the appearances of bread and wine in order to make them ready for the vision of God.¹ 3232

33. Since the demons possessed the fruit, they thought that they would enter into man, if he should eat of it; for, when the food was turned into the animated body 3233

*3227 ¹ B' 281, lesson 85.

*3228 ¹ F' no. 92 and note.

*3229 ¹ B' 285f., lesson 87.

*3230 ¹ Ibid.

*3231 ¹ B' 286f.

*3232 ¹ B' 238, lesson 74.

ingredi animalitatem, id est in vitam subiectivam huius entis, atque ita de eo disponere sicut proposuerant.¹

3234 34. Ad praeservandam B. Virginem Mariam a labe originis, satis erat, ut incorruptum maneret minimum semen in homine, neglectum forte ab ipso daemone, e quo incorrupto semine de generatione in generationem transfuso, suo tempore oriretur Virgo Maria.¹

3235 35. Quo magis attenditur ordo iustificationis in homine, eo aptior apparet modus dicendi scripturalis, quod Deus peccata quaedam tegit aut non imputat. —Iuxta Psalmistam [Ps 31:1] discrimen est inter iniquitates, quae remittuntur, et peccata, quae teguntur: illae, ut videtur, sunt culpae actuales et liberae, haec vero sunt peccata non libera eorum, qui pertinent ad populum Dei, quibus propterea nullum afferunt nocumentum.¹

3236 36. Ordo supernaturalis constituitur manifestatione esse in plenitudine suae formae realis; cuius communicationis seu manifestationis effectus est sensus (“sentimento”) deiformis, qui inchoatus in hac vita constituit lumen fidei et gratiae, completus in altera vita constituit lumen gloriae.¹

3237 37. Primum lumen reddens animam intelligentem est esse ideale; alterum primum lumen est etiam esse, non tamen mere ideale, sed subsistens ac vivens: illud abscondens suam personalitatem ostendit solum suam obiectivitatem: at qui videt alterum (quod est Verbum), etiamsi per speculum et in aenigmate, videt Deum.¹

3238 38. Deus est obiectum visionis beatificae, in quantum est auctor operum ad extra.¹

3239 39. Vestigia sapientiae ac bonitatis, quae in creaturis relucent, sunt comprehensoribus necessaria; ipsa enim in aeterno exemplari collecta sunt ea Ipsius pars, quae ab illis videri possit (“che è loro accessibile”), ipsaque argumentum praebent laudibus, quas in aeternum Deo Beati concinunt.¹

3240 40. Cum Deus non possit, nec per lumen gloriae, totaliter se communicare entibus finitis, non potuit essentiam suam comprehensoribus revelare et communicare, nisi eo modo, qui finitis intelligentes sit of man, they themselves were able freely to enter the animality, i.e., into the subjective life of this being, and so to dispose of it as they had proposed.¹

34. To preserve the Blessed Virgin Mary from original sin, it was enough for the slightest seed in man to remain uncorrupted, neglected perchance by the demon himself, from which uncorrupted seed transfused from generation to generation the Virgin Mary might arise in her time.¹

35. The more the order of justification in man is considered, the more appropriate appears the scriptural way of saying that God covers and does not reckon certain sins. —According to the Psalmist [cf. Ps 32:1] there is a difference between iniquities that are forgiven and sins that are covered; the former, as it seems, are actual and willing faults; but the latter are unwilling sins on the part of those who belong to the people of God, to whom on this account they bring no harm.¹

36. The supernatural order is established by the manifestation of being in the fullness of its real form; the effect of this communication or manifestation is a deiform sense (“sentimento”), which, begun in this life, constitutes the light of faith and of grace and which, completed in the other life, constitutes the light of glory.¹

37. The first light rendering the soul intelligent is ideal being; the other first light is also being, not merely ideal, but subsisting and living; that conceals its personality and shows only its objectivity; but he who sees the other (which is the Word), even through a reflection or in enigma, sees God.¹

38. God is the object of the beatific vision insofar as he is the author of works ad extra.¹

39. The traces of wisdom and goodness that shine out in creatures are necessary for those who contemplate (in heaven); for these, in fact, gathered into the eternal exemplar, are that part of him (God) which can be seen by them (“che è loro accessibile”), and these form the substance of the praise that the Blessed sing forever to God.¹

40. Since God cannot, even by the light of glory, communicate himself wholly to finite beings, he was not able to reveal and communicate his essence to those who contemplate (in heaven) except in that way which

*3233 ¹ B¹ 191, lesson 63.

*3234 ¹ B¹ 193, lesson 64.

*3235 ¹ G¹ bk. 1, chap. 6, art. 2.

*3236 ¹ H¹ pt. 2, nos. 674, 676f.

*3237 ¹ F¹ no. 85.

*3238 ¹ E¹ no. 672.

*3239 ¹ E¹ no. 674.

accommodatus: scilicet Deus se illis manifestat, quatenus cum ipsis relationem habet, ut eorum creator, provisor, redemptor, sanctificator.¹

[Censura, confirmata a Summo Pontifice: S. Officium] propositiones ... in proprio auctoris sensu reprobandas ac proscribendas esse iudicavit, prout hoc generali decreto reprobatur, damnatur, proscribitur...

is accommodated to finite intelligences; that is, God manifests himself to them, insofar as he has relations with them, as their creator, provider, redeemer, sanctifier.¹

[Censure: approved by the supreme pontiff: The Holy Office] has judged that the propositions, ... in the author's own sense, are to be rejected and proscribed, and, by means of this general decree, it rejects, condemns, and proscribes (them)...

3245–3255: Encyclical Libertas praestantissimum, June 20, 1888

Ed.: ASS 20 (1887/1888): 593–95 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 8:212–15.

The Dignity of Man as Free

Libertas, praestantissimum naturae bonum, idemque intelligentia aut ratione utentium naturarum unice proprium, hanc tribuit homini dignitatem, ut sit in manu consilii sui obtineatque actionum suarum potestatem.

Verumtamen eiusmodi dignitas plurimum interest, qua ratione geratur... Sane integrum est homini parere rationi, morale bonum sequi, ad summum finem suum recta contendere. Sed idem potest ad omnia alia deflectere, fallacesque bonorum imagines persecutus, ordinem debitum perturbare et in interitum ruere voluntarium...

Libertatem nemo altius praedicat nec constantius asserit Ecclesia catholica, quae [id] ... tuetur ut dogma. Neque id solum: sed contradicentibus haereticis ... [nominantur Manichaei, adversarii Concilii Tridentini, Iansenistae, Fatalistae] patrocinium libertatis Ecclesia suscepit hominisque tam grande bonum ab interitu vindicavit.

Liberty, the highest of natural endowments, being the portion only of intellectual or rational natures, confers on man this dignity—that he is in the hand of his counsel and has power over his actions.

But the manner in which such dignity is exercised is of the greatest moment... Man, indeed, is free to obey his reason, to seek moral good, and to strive unwaveringly after his last end. Yet he is free also to turn aside to all other things; and, in pursuing the empty semblance of good, to disturb rightful order and to fall headlong into the destruction that he has voluntarily chosen...

No one proclaims liberty more loudly or argues for it more persistently than the Catholic Church, which ... protects [it] as a dogma. Not only this, but when heretics have asserted the contrary ... [the Manichaeans, the adversaries of the Council of Trent, the Jansenists, and the Fatalists are named], the Church has come to liberty's defense and rescued this great good of man from destruction.

Natural Law

Cur homini lex necessaria sit, in ipso eius arbitrio, scilicet in hoc, nostrae ut voluntates a recta ratione ne discrepent, prima est causa, tamquam in radice, quaerenda...

Talis [lex] est princeps omnium lex naturalis, quae scripta est et insculpta in hominum animis singulorum, quia ipsa est humana ratio recte facere iubens et peccare vetans. Ista vero humanae rationis praescriptio vim habere legis non potest, nisi quia altioris est vox atque interpretis rationis, cui mentem libertatemque nostram subiectam esse oporteat. “Vis enim legis cum ea sit, officia imponere et iura tribuere, tota in auctoritate nititur, hoc est: in vera potestate statuendi officia describendique iura, item poenis praemiisque imperata sancienda: quae quidem omnia in homine liquet esse non posse, si normam actionibus ipse suis summus sibi legislator daret. Ergo consequitur, ut naturae lex sit ipsa lex aeterna, insita

In man's free will, therefore, or in the moral necessity of our voluntary acts being in accordance with reason, lies the very root of the necessity of law...

Foremost in this office comes the natural law, which is written and engraved in the mind of every man, for it is human reason itself that commands (us) to do right and forbid sin. Nevertheless, all prescriptions of human reason can have force of law only inasmuch as they are the voice and the interpreters of some higher power on which our reason and liberty necessarily depend. For, since the force of law consists in the imposing of obligations and the granting of rights, authority is the one and only foundation of all law—the power, that is, of fixing duties and defining rights, as also of assigning the necessary sanctions of reward and chastisement to each and all of its commands. But all this, clearly, cannot in iis qui ratione utuntur, eosque inclinans ad debitum actum et finem, eaque est ipsa aeterna ratio Creatoris universumque mundum gubernantis Dei.

*3240¹ E' no. 677.

be found in man, if, as his own supreme legislator, he is to be the rule of his own actions. It follows, therefore, that the law of nature is the same thing as the eternal law, implanted in rational creatures and inclining them to their right action and end; and this can be nothing else but the eternal reason of God, the Creator and Ruler of all the world.

Human Law

3248 Quod ratio lexque naturalis in hominibus singulis, idem efficit in consociatis lex humana ad bonum commune civium promulgata.

For, what reason and the natural law (do) for individuals, that human law, promulgated for their good, does for the citizens of States.

Ex hominum legibus aliae in eo versantur quod est bonum malumve natura.... Sed istiusmodi decreta nequaquam ducunt ab hominum societate principium, ... sed potius ipsi hominum societati antecedunt, omninoque sunt a lege naturali ac propterea a lege aeterna repetenda....

Of the laws enacted by men, some are concerned with what is good or bad by its very nature.... But such laws by no means derive their origin from civil society.... Laws come before men live together in society and have their origin in the natural and, consequently, in the eternal....

Alia vero civilis potestatis praescripta non ex naturali iure statim et proxime, sed longius et oblique consequuntur, resque varias definiunt, de quibus non est nisi generatim atque universe natura cautum.... Iamvero peculiaribus hisce vivendi regulis prudenti ratione inventis legitimaque potestate propositis lex humana proprii nominis continetur.... Ex eo intelligitur, omnino in aeterna Dei lege normam et regulam positam esse libertatis, nec singulorum dumtaxat hominum, sed etiam communitatis et coniunctionis humanae.

Now, there are other enactments of the civil authority that do not follow directly, but somewhat remotely, from natural right and decide many points that the law of nature treats only in a general and indefinite way.... It is in the constitution of these particular rules of life, suggested by reason and prudence and put forth by competent authority, that human law, properly so called, consists.... From this it is manifest that the eternal law of God is the sole standard and rule of human liberty, not only in each individual man, but also in the community and civil society that men constitute when united.

3249 Igitur in hominum societate libertas veri nominis non est in eo posita, ut agas quod lubet, ... sed in hoc, ut per leges civiles expeditius possis secundum legis aeternae praescripta vivere. Eorum vero qui praesunt, non in eo sita libertas est, ut imperare temere et ad libidinem queant, ... sed humanarum vis legum haec debet esse, ut ab aeterna lege manare intelligantur nec quidquam sancire, quod non in ea, veluti in principio universi iuris, contineatur.

Therefore, the true liberty of human society does not consist in every man doing what he pleases, ... but rather in this, that through the injunctions of the civil law all may more easily conform to the prescriptions of the eternal law. Likewise, the liberty of those who are in authority does not consist in the power to lay unreasonable and capricious commands upon their subjects, ... but the binding force of human laws is in this, that they are to be regarded as applications of the eternal law and incapable of sanctioning anything that is not contained in the eternal law, as in the principle of all law.

Freedom of Conscience and Tolerance

3250 Illa [libertas] quoque magnopere praedicatur, quam conscientiae libertatem nominant: quae si ita accipiatur, ut suo cuique arbitratu aequae liceat Deum colere, non colere, argumentis quae supra allata sunt, satis vincitur.

Another [liberty] is widely advocated, namely, liberty of conscience. If by this is meant that everyone may, as he chooses, worship God or not, it is sufficiently refuted by the arguments already adduced.

Sed potest etiam in hanc sententiam accipi, ut homini ex conscientia officii. Dei voluntatem sequi et iussa facere, nulla re impediante, in civitate liceat. Haec quidem vera, haec digna filiis Dei libertas, quae humanae dignitatem personae honestissime tuetur, est omni vi iniuriae maior: eademque Ecclesiae semper optata ac

But it may also be taken to mean that every man in the State may follow the will of God and, from a consciousness of duty and free from every obstacle, obey his commands. This, indeed, is true liberty, a liberty worthy of the sons of God, which nobly maintains the dignity of man and is stronger than all violence or wrong—a liberty that the Church has always desired and praecipue cara. Huius generis libertatem sibi constanter vindicavere Apostoli...

[Ecclesia] nihil quidem impertiens iuris nisi iis quae vera quaeque honesta sint, non recusat quominus quidpiam a veritate iustitiaque alienum ferat tamen publica potestas, scilicet maius aliquod vel vitandi causa malum, vel adipiscendi aut conservandi bonum. Ipse providentissimus Deus cum infinitae sit bonitatis, idemque omnia possit, sinit tamen esse in mundo mala, partim ne ampliora impediatur bona, partim ne maiora mala consequantur. In regendis civitatibus Rectorem mundi par est imitari: quin etiam cum singula mala prohibere auctoritas hominum non possit, debet “multa concedere atque impunita relinquere, quae per divinam tamen providentiam vindicantur, et recte”.¹

Verumtamen in eiusmodi rerum adiunctis, si communis boni causa, et hac tantum causa, potest vel etiam debet lex hominum ferre toleranter malum, tamen nec potest nec debet id probare aut velle per se: quia malum per se cum sit boni privatio, repugnat bono communi, quod legislator, quoad optime potest, velle ac tueri debet. Et hac quoque in re ad imitandum sibi lex humana proponat Deum necesse est, qui in eo quod mala esse in mundo sinit, “neque vult mala fieri, neque vult mala non fieri, sed vult permittere mala fieri, et hoc est bonum”.² Quae Doctoris Angelici sententia brevissime continet de malorum tolerantia doctrinam.

Compendium of Doctrine regarding Civil Liberty

Itaque ex dictis consequitur, nequaquam licere petere, defendere, largiri cogitandi, scribendi, docendi, itemque promiscuam religionum libertatem, veluti iura totidem, quae homini natura dederit. Nam si vere natura dedisset, imperium Dei detrectari ius esset, nec ulla temperari lege libertas humana posset.

Similiter consequitur, ista genera libertatis posse quidem, si iustae causae sint, tolerari, definita tamen moderatione, ne in libidinem atque insolentiam degenerent...

Ubi dominatus premat aut impendat eiusmodi, qui oppressam iniusta vi teneat civitatem, vel carere Ecclesiam cogat libertate debita, fas est aliam quaerere temperationem reipublicae, in qua agere cum libertate concessum sit: tunc enim non illa expeditur immodica et vitiosa libertas, sed sublevatio aliqua salutis omnium causa quaeritur, et hoc unice agitur, ut, ubi rerum malarum licentia tribuitur, ibi potestas honeste faciendi ne impediatur.

held most dear. This is the kind of liberty the apostles claimed for themselves with intrepid constancy....

For this reason, while not conceding any right to anything save what is true and honest, [the Church] does not forbid public authority to tolerate what is at variance with truth and justice for the sake of avoiding some greater evil or of obtaining or preserving some greater good. God himself in his providence, though infinitely good and powerful, permits evil to exist in the world, partly that greater good may not be impeded and partly that greater evil may not ensue. In the government of States it is not forbidden to imitate the Ruler of the world; and, as the authority of man is powerless to prevent every evil, it has “to overlook and leave unpunished many things that are punished, and rightly, by divine providence”.¹

But if, in such circumstances, for the sake of the common good (and this is the only legitimate reason), human law may or even should tolerate evil, it may not and should not approve or desire evil for its own sake; for evil of itself, being a privation of good, is opposed to the common welfare that every legislator is bound to desire and defend to the best of his ability. In this, human law must endeavor to imitate God, who, as St. Thomas teaches, in allowing evil to exist in the world, “neither wills evil to be done, nor wills it not to be done, but wills only to permit it to be done; and this is good.”² This saying of the Angelic Doctor contains briefly the whole doctrine of the permission of evil.

From what has been said it follows that it is quite unlawful to demand, to defend, or to grant unconditional freedom of thought, of speech, of writing, or of worship as if these were so many rights given by nature to man. For, if nature had really granted them, it would be lawful to refuse obedience to God, and there would be no restraint on human liberty.

It likewise follows that freedom in these things may be tolerated wherever there is just cause, but only with such moderation as will prevent its degenerating into license and excess...

Whenever there exists, or there is reason to fear, an unjust oppression of the people, on the one hand, or a deprivation of the liberty of the Church, on the other, it is lawful to seek for such a change of government as will bring about due liberty of action. In such case, an excessive and vicious liberty is not sought, but only some relief, for the common welfare, in order that, while license for evil is allowed by the State, the power of doing good may not be hindered.

*3251¹ Augustine, De libero arbitrio I, no. 41 (CSEL 74:14_{if}) = I, 5, no. 13 (PL 32:1228C).

² Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 19, a. 9 ad 3 (Editio Leonina 4:247b).

3254 Atque etiam malle reipublicae statum populari temperatum genere, non est per se contra officium, salva tamen doctrina catholica de ortu atque administratione publicae potestatis. Ex variis reipublicae generibus, modo sint ad consulendum utilitati civium per se idonea, nullum quidem Ecclesia respuit: singula tamen vult, quod plane idem natura iubet, sine iniuria cuiusquam, maximeque integris Ecclesiae iuribus, esse constituta. . .

3255 Neque illud Ecclesia damnat, velle gentem suam nemini servire nec externo, nec domino, si modo fieri incolumi iustitia queat. Denique nec eos reprehendit, qui efficere volunt, ut civitates suis legibus vivant civesque quam maxima augendorum commodorum facultate donentur.

Again, it is not of itself wrong to prefer a democratic form of government, if only the Catholic doctrine be maintained as to the origin and exercise of power. Of the various forms of government, the Church does not reject any that are fitted to procure the welfare of the subject; she wishes only—and this nature itself requires—that they should be constituted without involving wrong to anyone, and especially without violating the rights of the Church. . .

Neither does the Church condemn those who, if it can be done without violation of justice, wish to make their country independent of any foreign or despotic power. Nor does she blame those who wish to assign to the State the power of self-government and to its citizens the greatest possible measure of prosperity.

3258: Response of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Cambrai, August 14 (19), 1889

In an answer to the archbishop of Lyon of May 31, 1884 (May 28 session), the Holy Office had replied that it could not be safely taught in Catholic schools that a craniotomy may be permitted (ASS 17 [1884]: 556) “when it is likely, if it is not done, the mother and the child will die, and, on the other hand, if it is done, the mother may be saved while the child will die” (quando scilicet, ea omnia, mater et infans perituri sint, ea e contra admissa, salvanda sit mater, infante pereunte). The Holy Office repeated this response in writing to the archbishop of Cambrai, but added the words “et quamcumque” (and (likewise) by whatever means). Cf., as well, ASS 7 (1872): 285–88, 460–64, 516–28; AnE 2 (1894): 84–88, 125–31, 179–81, 220–23, 321–23.

Ed.: ASS 22 (1889/1890): 748 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:241, no. 1716.

Craniotomy

3258 In scholis catholicis tuto doceri non posse, licitam esse operationem chirurgicam, quam “craniotomiam” appellant, sicut declaratum fuit die 28. Maii 1884, et quamcumque chirurgicam operationem directe occisivam fetus vel matris gestantis.

In Catholic schools, it cannot be safely taught that the surgical operation called “craniotomy” is permitted, as was declared on May 28, 1884, and (likewise) any surgical operation whatsoever that directly kills the fetus or the pregnant mother.

3260–3263: Encyclical Quamquam pluries, August 15, 1889

Pius IX, with the decree Quemadmodum Deus Iosephum of December 8, 1870 (Pius IX, Acta, 1/V, 282f.), had elevated St. Joseph to Patron of the Church. He thereby answered the petition of a group of the Fathers of the First Vatican Council.

Ed.: ASS 22 (1889/1890): 66f. / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 9:177–79 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:241, no. 1717.

The Dignity and Role of St. Joseph in the Plan of Salvation

3260 Cur beatus Iosephus nominatim habeatur Ecclesiae patronus vicissimque plurimum sibi Ecclesia de eius tutela patrocinioque polliceatur, causae illae sunt rationesque singulares, quod is vir fuit Mariae, et pater, ut putabatur, Iesu Christi. Hinc omnis eius dignitas, gratia, sanctitas, gloria profectae. Certe Matris Dei tam in excelso dignitas est, ut nihil fieri maius queat. Sed tamen, quia intercessit Iosepho cum Virgine beatissima maritale vinculum, ad illam praestantissimam dignitatem, qua naturis creatis omnibus longissime Deipara antecellit, non est dubium, quin accesserit ipse ut nemo magis. Est enim coniugium societas necessitudoque omnium maxima, quae natura sua adiunctam habet bonorum unius cum altero communicationem. Quocirca si sponsum Virgini Deus Iosephum dedit, dedit profecto non modo vitae socium, virginitatis testem, tutorem honestatis,

The special motives for which St. Joseph has been proclaimed Patron of the Church, and from which the Church looks for singular benefit from his patronage and protection, are that Joseph was the spouse of Mary and that he was reputed the father of Jesus Christ. From these sources have sprung his dignity, his holiness, his glory. In truth, the dignity of the Mother of God is so lofty that nothing created can rank above it. But as Joseph has been united to the Blessed Virgin by the ties of marriage, it may not be doubted that he approached nearer than any to the eminent dignity by which the Mother of God surpasses so nobly all created natures. For marriage is the most intimate of all unions and relationships, which, by its nature, contains a mutual sharing of goods between those joined together. Thus in giving Joseph the Blessed Virgin as spouse, God appointed him to be not only her life’s sed etiam excelsae dignitatis eius ipso coniugali foedere participem.

Similiter augustissima dignitate unus eminet inter omnes, quod divino consilio custos Filii Dei fuit, habitus hominum opinione pater. Qua ex re consequens erat, ut Verbum Dei Iosepho modeste subesset, dictoque esset audiens omnemque adhiberet honorem, quem liberi adhibeant parenti suo necesse est.

Iamvero ex hac duplici dignitate officia sponte sequebantur, quae patribusfamilias natura praescripsit, ita quidem, ut domus divinae, cui Iosephus praeerat, custos idem et curator et defensor esset legitimus ac naturalis. Cuiusmodi officia ac munia ille quidem, quoad suppeditavit vita mortalis, revera exercuit. . . .

Atqui domus divina, quam Iosephus velut potestate patria gubernavit, initia exorientis Ecclesiae continebat. Virgo sanctissima quemadmodum Iesu Christi genitrix, ita omnium est christianorum mater, quippe quos ad Calvariae montem inter supremos Redemptoris cruciatus generavit; itemque Iesus Christus tamquam primogenitus est christianorum, qui ei sunt adoptione ac redemptione fratres.

Quibus rebus causa nascitur, cur beatissimus Patriarcha commendatam sibi peculiari quadam ratione sentiat multitudinem christianorum, ex quibus constat Ecclesia, scilicet innumerabilis isthaec perque omnes terras fusa familia, in quam, quia vir Mariae et pater est Iesu Christi, paterna propemodum auctoritate pollet. Est igitur consentaneum et beato Iosepho apprime dignum, ut sicut ille olim Nazarethanam familiam, quibuscumque rebus usuenit, sanctissime tueri consuevit, ita nunc patrocinio caelestis Ecclesiam Christi tegat ac defendat.

companion, the witness of her maidenhood, the protector of her honor, but also, by virtue of the conjugal tie, a participator in her sublime dignity.

And Joseph shines among all mankind by the most august dignity, since by divine will, he was the guardian of the Son of God and reputed as his father among men. Hence it came about that the Word of God was humbly subject to Joseph, that he obeyed him, and that he rendered to him every honor that children are bound to render to their parents.

From this twofold dignity flowed the obligation that nature lays upon the head of families, so that Joseph became the guardian, the administrator, and the legitimate and natural defender of the divine house whose chief he was. And during the whole course of his life he fulfilled those charges and those duties. . . . 3261

Now the divine house that Joseph ruled with the authority of a father contained the initial stages of the emerging Church. Just as the most holy Virgin is the mother of Jesus Christ, so also is she the mother of all Christians, whom she bore on Mount Calvary amid the supreme throes of the Redemption; Jesus Christ is, in a manner, the firstborn of Christians, who by the adoption and redemption are his brothers. 3262

And for such reasons the Blessed Patriarch looks upon the multitude of Christians who make up the Church as confided specially to his trust—this limitless family spread over the earth, over which, because he is the spouse of Mary and the father of Jesus Christ, he holds, as it were, a paternal authority. It is, then, natural and worthy that as once the Blessed Joseph ministered to all the needs of the family at Nazareth and surrounded it with his most blessed protection, he should now cover and defend the Church of Christ with his celestial protection. 3263

3264: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Marseille, July 30, 1890

Cf. a similar response in *3312.

Ed.: ASS 23 (1890/1891): 699f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:250, no. 1735.

The Wine Used for Mass

In pluribus Galliae partibus, maxime si eae ad meridiem sitae reperiantur, vinum album, quod incruento Missae sacrificio inservit, tam debile est ac impotens, ut diu conservari non valeat, nisi eidem quaedam spiritus vini (spirito alcool) quantitas admisceatur.

Qu.: 1. An istiusmodi commixtio licita sit?

2. Et, si affirmative, quanam quantitas huiusmodi materiae extraneae vino adiungi permittatur?

3. In casu affirmativo, requiritur spiritus vini ex vino puro seu ex vitis fructu extractus?

In many parts of France, especially in those located toward the south, the white wine that does service at the bloodless sacrifice of the Mass is so weak and impotent that it cannot be kept for long unless a quantity of the spirit of wine (alcohol) is mixed with the same. 3264

Questions: 1. Is a mixture of this kind lawful?

2. And if so, what quantity of such extraneous matter may be added to the wine?

3. In case of an affirmative answer, is it required to extract the spirit of wine from pure wine or from the fruit of the vine?

Resp. (confirmata Summo Pontifice, 31. Iul.): Dummodo spiritus (alcohol) extractus fuerit ex genimine vitis, et quantitas alcoholica addita una cum ea, quam vinum, de quo agitur, naturaliter continet, non excedat proportionem duodecim pro centum, et admixtio fiat, quando vinum est valde recens, nihil ob stare, quominus idem vinum in Missae sacrificio adhibeatur.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 31): Provided that the spirit (alcohol) has been extracted from the fruit of the vine and the quantity of alcohol added to that which the wine in question naturally contains does not exceed a proportion of 12 percent, and the mixture is made when the wine is very new, there is no objection to this wine being used in the sacrifice of the Mass.

3265–3271: Encyclical Rerum novarum, May 15, 1891

This first fundamental papal writing on the social doctrine of the Church was prompted by Cardinal Gaspard Mermillod, Bishop of Lausanne-Geneva and founder of the Union catholique d'études sociales et économiques. The initial drafts of this text come from P. Matteo Liberatore, S.J., Cardinal Tommaso Zigliara, O.P., and Cardinal Camillo Mazzella, S.J. For the encyclicals of Pius XI, John XXIII, Paul VI, and John Paul II on the occasions of the fortieth, seventieth, eightieth, and ninetieth anniversaries of Rerum novarum, cf. *3725–3744, 3935–3953, 4500–4512, and 4690–4699.

Ed.: ASS 23 (1890/1891): 643–52 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 11:100–133.

The Right to Private Property and Its Use

3265 Possidere res privatim ut suas, ius est homini a natura datum. . . . Neque est, cur providentia introducatur reipublicae: est enim homo, quam respublica, senior: quocirca ius ille suum ad vitam corpusque tuendum habere natura ante debuit, quam civitas ulla coisset. . . .

Res enim eas, quae ad conservandam vitam maximeque ad perficiendam requiruntur, terra quidem cum magna largitate fundit, sed fundere ex se sine hominum cultu et curatione non posset. Iamvero cum in paradisi naturae bonis industriam mentis viresque corporis homo insumat, hoc ipso applicat ad sese eam naturae corporeae partem, quam ipse percoluit, in qua velut formam quandam personae suae impressam reliquit; ut omnino rectum esse oporteat, eam partem ab eo possideri uti suam, nec ullo modo ius ipsius violare cuiquam licere. . . .

3266 Iura vero istiusmodi, quae in hominibus insunt singulis, multo validiora intelliguntur esse, si cum officiis hominum in convictu domestico apta et connexa spectentur. . . .

Quod igitur demonstravimus, ius dominii personis singularibus natura tributum, id, transferri in hominem, qua caput est familiae, oportet: immo tanto ius est illud validius, quanto persona humana in convictu domestico plura complectitur. Sanctissima naturae lex est, ut victu omnique cultu paterfamilias tueatur, quos ipse procreant: idemque illuc a natura ipsa deducitur, ut velit liberis suis, quippe qui paternam referunt et quodam modo producunt personam, acquirere et parare, unde se honeste possint in incipiti vitae cursu a misera fortuna defendere. Id vero efficere non alia ratione potest, nisi fructuosarum possessione rerum, quas ad liberos hereditate transmittat. . . .

For, every man has by nature the right to possess property as his own. . . . There is no need to bring in the State. Man precedes the State and possesses, prior to the formation of any State, the right of providing for the substance of his body. . . .

Truly, that which is required for the preservation of life, and for life's well-being, is produced in great abundance from the soil, but not until man has brought it into cultivation and expended upon it his solicitude and skill. Now, when man thus turns the activity of his mind and the strength of his body toward procuring the fruits of nature, by such act he makes his own that portion of nature's field which he cultivates—that portion on which he leaves, as it were, the impress of his personality; and it cannot but be just that he should possess that portion as his very own and have a right to hold it without anyone being justified in violating that right. . . .

The rights here spoken of, belonging to each individual man, are seen in much stronger light when considered in relation to man's social and domestic obligations. . . .

That right to property, therefore, which has been proved to belong naturally to individual persons, must in like wise belong to a man in his capacity of head of a family; indeed, that right is all the stronger in proportion as the human person receives a wider extension in the family group. It is a most sacred law of nature that a father should provide food and all necessities for those whom he has begotten; and, similarly, it is natural that he should wish that his children, who carry on, so to speak, and continue his personality, should be by him provided with all that is needful to enable them to keep themselves decently from want and misery amid the uncertainties of this mortal life. Now, in no other way can a father effect this except by the ownership of productive property, which he can transmit to his children by inheritance. . . .

Iusta possessio pecuniarum a iusto pecuniarum usu distinguitur. Bona privatim possidere, quod paulo ante vidimus ius est homini naturale: eoque uti iure, maxime in societate vitae, non fas modo est, sed plane necessarium....

At vero si illud quaeratur, qualem esse usum bonorum necesse sit, Ecclesia quidem sine ulla dubitatione respondet: “Quantum ad hoc, non debet homo habere res exteriores ut proprias, sed ut communes, ut scilicet de facili aliquis eas communicet in necessitate aliorum. Unde Apostolus dicit: ‘Divitibus huius saeculi praecipue ... facile tribuere, communicare’ [1 Tim 6:17s].”¹ Nemo certe opitulari aliis de eo iubetur, quod ad usum pertineat cum suos tum suorum necessarios: immo nec tradere aliis, quo ipse egeat ad id servandum, quod personae conveniat, quodque deceat.... Sed ubi necessitati satis et decoro datum, officium est de eo, quod superat, gratificari indigentibus. “Quod superest, date eleemosynam” [Lc 11:41]. Non iustitiae, excepto in rebus extremis, officia ista sunt, sed caritatis christianae, quam profecto lege agendo petere ius non est. Sed legibus iudiciisque hominum lex antecedit iudiciumque Christi Dei, qui multis modis suadet consuetudinem largiendi ... et collatam negatamve iudicaturus [Mt 25:34s].

The Rights that Derive from Labor

Duas velut notas habet in homine labor natura insitas, nimirum ut personalis sit, quia vis agens adhaeret personae, atque eius omnino est propria, a quo exercetur, et eius est utilitati nata: deinde ut sit necessarius, ob hanc causam, quod fructus laboris est homini opus ad vitam tuendam: vitam autem tueri ipsa rerum, cui maxime parendum, natura iubet.

Iamvero si ex ea dumtaxat parte spectetur, quod personalis est, non est dubium, quin integrum opifici sit pactae mercedis angustius finire modum: quemadmodum enim operas dat ille voluntate, sic et operarum mercede vel tenui vel plane nulla contentus esse voluntate potest.

Sed longe aliter iudicandum, si cum ratione personalitatis ratio coniungitur necessitatis, cogitatione quidem, non re, ab illa separabilis. Reapse manere in vita, commune singulis officium est, cui scelus est deesse. Hinc ius reperiendarum rerum, quibus vita sustentatur, necessario nascitur: quarum rerum facultatem infimo cuique non nisi quaesita labore merces suppeditat. Esto

It rests on the principle that it is one thing to have a right to the possession of money and another to have a right to use money as one wills. Private ownership, as we have seen, is the natural right of man, and to exercise that right, especially as members of society, is not only lawful, but absolutely necessary.... 3267

But if the question be asked: How must one’s possessions be used?—the Church replies without hesitation in the words of the same holy Doctor: “Man should not consider his material possessions as his own, but as common to all, so as to share them without hesitation when others are in need. Thus the apostle says, ‘Tell the rich of this world ... to share liberally’ [1 Tim 6:17f].”¹ True, no one is commanded to distribute to others that which is required for his own needs and those of his household; or even to give away what is reasonably required to keep up becomingly his condition in life.... But, when what necessity demands has been supplied, and one’s standing fairly taken thought for, it becomes a duty to give to the indigent out of what remains over. “Of that which remains, give alms” [Lc 11:41]. It is a duty, not of justice (save in extreme cases), but of Christian charity—a duty not enforced by human law. But the laws and judgments of men must yield place to the laws and judgments of Christ the true God, who in many ways urges on his followers the practice of almsgiving ... and who will judge what has been given or refused [Mt 25:34f.].

Hence, a man’s labor necessarily bears two notes or characters. First of all, it is personal, inasmuch as the force that acts is bound up with the personality and is the exclusive property of him who acts and, further, was given to him for his advantage. Secondly, man’s labor is necessary; for without the result of labor a man cannot live, and self-preservation is a law of nature, which it is wrong to disobey. 3268

Now, were we to consider labor merely insofar as it is personal, there is no doubt that the worker is free to agree to a more restricted wage; for just as he performs his work voluntarily, so he is free to settle for a small wage or even none at all. 3269

But our conclusion must be very different if, together with the personal element in a man’s work, we consider the fact that work is also necessary for him to live: these two aspects of his work are separable in thought, but not in reality. The preservation of life is the bounden duty of one and all, and to be wanting therein is a crime. It necessarily follows that each one has a natural right to 3270

*3267¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae II–II, q. 66, a. 2 (Editio Leonina 9:85b).

igitur, ut opifex atque herus libere in idem placitum, ac nominatim in salarii modum consentiant: subest tamen semper aliquid ex iustitia naturali, idque libera paciscentium voluntate maius et antiquius, scilicet alendo opifici, frugi quidem et bene morato, haud impari esse mercedem oportere. Quod si necessitate opifex coactus, aut mali peioris metu permotus duriores condiciones accipiat, quae, etiamsi nolit, accipienda sit, quod a domino vel a redemptore operum imponitur, istud quidem est subire vim, cui iustitia reclamatur...

3271 Mercedem si ferat opifex satis amplam, ut ea se uxoremque et liberos tueri commodum queat, facile studebit parsimoniae, si sapit, efficietque, quod ipsa videtur natura monere, ut detractis sumptibus, aliquid etiam redundet, quo sibi liceat ad modicum census pervenire...

Non tamen ad haec commoda perveniri nisi ea condicione potest, ut privatus census ne exhaustiatur immanitate tributorum et vectigalium. Ius enim possidendi privatim bona cum non sit lege hominum, sed natura datum, non ipsum abolere, sed tantummodo ipsius usum temperare et cum communi bono componere auctoritas publica potest. Faciat ergo iniuste atque inhumane, si de bonis privatorum plus aequo, tributorum nomine, detraherit...

procure what is required in order to live, and the poor can procure that in no other way than by what they can earn through their work. Let the working man and the employer make free agreements, and in particular let them agree freely as to the wages; nevertheless, there underlies a dictate of natural justice more imperious and ancient than any bargain between man and man, namely, that wages ought not to be insufficient to support a frugal and well-behaved wage-earner. If through necessity or fear of a worse evil the workman accept harder conditions because an employer or contractor will afford him no better, he is subjected to violence against which justice cries out in protest...

If a workman's wages be sufficient to enable him comfortably to support himself, his wife, and his children, he will find it easy, if he be a sensible man, to practice thrift, and he will not fail, by cutting down expenses, to put by some little savings and thus secure a modest source of income...

These important benefits, however, can be reckoned on only provided that a man's means be not drained and exhausted by an excess of tributes and taxes. The right to possess private property is derived from nature, not from the law of man; and the State has the right to control its use in the interests of the public good alone, but by no means to absorb it altogether. The State would therefore be unjust and cruel if under the name of taxation it were to deprive the private owner of more than is fair...

3272–3273: Letter Pastoralis officii to the Bishops of Germany and Austria, September 12, 1891

Ed.: ASS 24 (1891/1892): 204–6 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 11:284–87 / CdICF 3:378–80 (no. 612).

Dueling

3272 ... Utraque divina lex, tum ea quae naturalis rationis lumine, tum quae Litteris divino afflatu perscriptis promulgata est, districte vetant, ne quis extra causam publicam hominem interimat aut vulneret, nisi salutis suae defendendae causa, necessitate coactus. At qui ad privatum certamen provocant vel oblatum suscipiunt, hoc agunt, huc animum viresque intendunt, nulla necessitate adstricti, ut vitam eripiant aut saltem vulnus inferant adversario.

Utraque porro divina lex interdicat, ne quis temere vitam proiciat suam, gravi et manifesto obiciens discrimini, cum id nulla officii aut caritatis magnanimae ratio suadeat; haec autem caeca temeritas, vitae contemptrix, plane inest in natura duelli.

Quare obscurum nemini aut dubium esse potest, in eos, qui privatim proelium conserunt singulare, utrumque cadere et scelus alienae cladis et vitae propriae discrimen voluntarium. Demum vix ulla pestis est, quae a civilis vitae disciplina magis abhorreat et iustum civitatis

... The two divine laws, that which is promulgated by the light of natural reason and that by Scriptures written under divine inspiration, strictly forbid the killing or wounding of anyone outside a public process, unless forced by necessity to defend his own safety. But those who provoke to a private struggle or accept a challenge do this; they lend their minds and their strength to this, although bound by no necessity, to take the life or at least to inflict a wound on an adversary.

Furthermore, the two divine laws forbid anyone rashly casting aside his own life, subjecting it to grave and manifest danger, when no reason of duty or of magnanimous charity urges it; but this blind rashness, something scornful of life, is clearly in the nature of a duel.

Therefore, it can be obscure and doubtful to no one that upon those who engage in individual combat privately fall both crimes, that of another's destruction and that of voluntarily endangering his own life. Finally, there is scarcely any affliction that is more at variance ordinem pervertat, quam permissa civibus licentia, ut sui quisque assertor iuris privata vi manuque et honoris, quem violatum putet, ultor existat....

Neque illis, qui oblatum certamen suscipiunt, iusta suppetit excusatio metus, quod timeant se vulgo segnes haberi, si pugnam detrectent. Nam si officia hominum ex falsis vulgi opinionibus dimetienda essent, non ex aeterna recti iustique norma, nullum esset naturale ac verum inter honestas actiones et flagitiose facta discrimen. Ipsi sapientes ethnici et norunt et tradiderunt, fallacia vulgi iudicia spernenda esse a forti et constanti viro. Iustus potius et sanctus timor est, qui avertit hominem ab iniqua caede eumque facit de propria et fratrum salute sollicitum. Immo qui inania vulgi aspernatur iudicia, qui contumeliam verbera subire mavult, quam ulla in re officium deserere, hunc longe maiore atque excelsiore animo esse perspicitur, quam qui ad arma procurrit lacessitus iniuria. Quin etiam, si recte diiudicari velit, ille est unus, in quo solida fortitudo eluceat, illa, inquam, fortitudo, quae virtus vere nominatur et cui gloria comes est non fucata, non fallax. Virtus enim in bono consistit rationi consentaneo, et nisi quae in iudicio nitatur approbantis Dei, stulta omnis est gloria.

with the good order of civil life than the license permitted a citizen to be his own individual defender of the law by private force and the avenger of honor that he thinks has been violated....

Nor do those who accept combat when it is offered have fear as a just excuse, because they dread to be regarded publicly as lazy if they decline battle. For, if the duties of men were to be measured by the false opinions of the public, there would be no natural and true distinction according to an eternal norm of right and justice between honest actions and shameful deeds. Even the pagan philosophers knew and taught that the false judgments of the public are to be spurned by a strong and stable man. Rather is the fear just and sacred that turns a man away from unjust slaughter and makes him solicitous of his own safety and that of his brothers. Surely, he who spurns the vain judgments of the public, who prefers to undergo the scourges of contumely than to abandon duty in any matter, this man, surely, is of a far greater and higher mind than he who when annoyed by an injury rushes to arms. Yes, indeed, if there is a desire for right judgment, he is the one in whom stout fortitude shines, that fortitude, I say, which is truly called a virtue and whose companion is glory, not counterfeited and not false. For virtue consists in a good in accord with reason, and all glory is foolish except that which depends on the judgment of God who approves.

3273

3274–3275: Encyclical Octobri mense, September 22, 1891

In his encyclical on the Rosary, Leo XIII discusses several dogmatic principles of Mariology.

Ed.: ASS 24 (1891/1892): 195f. / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 11:303–5 / Brugge 5:10f.

Mary as Mother and Mediatrix of Grace

Filius Dei aeternus, cum ad hominis redemptionem et decus, hominis naturam vellet suscipere, eaque re mysticum quoddam cum universo humano genere initurus esset conubium, non id ante perfecit, quam liberrima consensio accessisset designatae matris, quae ipsius generis humani personam quodammodo agebat, ad eam illustrem verissimamque Aquinatis sententiam: “Per annuntiationem exspectabatur consensus Virginis loco totius humanae naturae.”¹

Ex quo non minus vere proprieque affirmare licet, nihil prorsus de permagno illo omnis gratiae thesauro, quem attulit Dominus, siquidem “gratia et veritas per Iesum Christum facta est” [Io 1:17], nihil nobis, nisi per Mariam, Deo sic volente, impertiri; ut, quo modo ad summum Patrem nisi per Filium nemo potest accedere, ita fere nisi per matrem accedere nemo possit ad Christum....

The eternal Son of God, about to take upon himself our nature for the saving and ennobling of man and about to consummate thus a mystical union between himself and all mankind, did not accomplish his design without adding there the free consent of the elect Mother, who acted in some way in the role of the human race itself, according to the illustrious and most true opinion of St. Thomas: “Through the Annunciation, the consent of the Virgin, in the place of all human nature, was awaited.”¹

3274

Consequently, it may be affirmed with no less truth and justice that absolutely nothing from this immense treasury of all the graces brought forth by the Lord—inasmuch as “grace and truth have come from Jesus Christ” [Jn 1:17]—is imparted to us, by the will of God, except through Mary. Thus, just as no one can go to the supreme Father except through the Son, so, as a rule, no one can go to Christ except through the Mother....

*3274¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 30, a. 1 (Editio Leonina 11:315b).

3275 Talem [Mariam] nobis praestitit Deus, cui, hoc ipso, quod Unigenae sui matrem elegit, maternos plane indidit sensus, aliud nihil spirantes nisi amorem et veniam; talem facto suo Iesus Christus ostendit, cum Mariae subesse et obtemperare ut matri filius sponte voluit; talem de cruce praedicavit, cum universitatem humani generis, in Ioanne discipulo, curandam ei fovendamque commisit [Io 19:26s]; talem denique se dedit ipsa, quae eam immensi laboris hereditatem, a moriente Filio relictam, magno complexa animo, materna in omnes officia confestim coepit impendere.

As such God gave [Mary] to us. Having chosen her for the Mother of his only begotten Son, he taught her all a mother's feeling that breathes nothing but pardon and love. Such Christ desired she should be, for he consented to be subject to Mary and to obey her as a son a mother. Such he proclaimed her from the Cross when he entrusted to her care and love the whole of the race of man in the person of his disciple John [Jn 19:26f.]. As such, finally, she offered herself, in that she accepted with generosity the inheritance of immeasurable labor left by her dying Son and began immediately to devote herself to her maternal duty toward all.

3276–3279: Response of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Freiburg, July 27, 1892

Ed.: AnE 3 (1895): 98f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:277f., no. 1808.

Cremation

3276 Qu.: 1. Utrum liceat sacramenta morientium ministrare fidelibus, qui massonicae quidem sectae non adhaerent nec eius ducti principiis, sed aliis rationibus moti corpora sua post mortem cremanda mandarunt, si hoc mandatum retractare nolint?

Questions: 1. Is it permitted to administer the last sacraments to the faithful who certainly do not belong to the Order of Masons and are not guided by its principles but, motivated by other reasons, have ordered the cremation of their bodies after death, if they do not wish to retract this order?

3277 2. Utrum liceat pro fidelibus, quorum corpora non sine ipsorum culpa cremata sunt, Missae sacrificium publice offerre vel etiam privatim applicare, itemque fundationes ad hunc finem acceptare?

2. Is it permitted to offer the sacrifice of the Mass, publicly or even to apply it privately for the faithful whose bodies have been cremated through no fault of their own and likewise to accept donations for this purpose?

3278 3. Utrum liceat cadaverum cremationi cooperari, sive mandato ac consilio, sive praestita opera, ut medicis, officialibus, operariis in crematorio inservientibus? Et utrum hoc liceat saltem, si fiat in quadam necessitate aut ad evitandum magnum damnum?

3. Is it permitted to cooperate in the cremation of dead bodies, either by command and counsel or by assistance, as doctors, officials, or workers in a crematorium do? And is this at least permitted if there is some necessity or in order to avoid a great harm?

3279 4. Utrum liceat taliter cooperantibus ministrare sacramenta, si ab hac cooperatione desistere nolunt aut desistere non posse affirmant?

4. Is it permitted to administer the sacraments to those who cooperate in this manner if they do not wish to desist from such cooperation or if they say they cannot desist?

Resp.: Ad 1. Si moniti renuant, negative. Ut vero fiat aut omittatur monitio, serventur regulae a probatis auctoribus traditae, habita praesertim ratione scandali vitandi.

Responses: To 1: No, if after being warned they refuse. The rules handed down by approved authors are to be observed whether a warning occurs or is omitted, taking care, above all, to avoid scandal.

Ad 2. Circa publicam Missae applicationem, negative; circa privatam, affirmative.

To 2: With regard to the public application of the Mass, no; with regard to its private (application), yes.

Ad 3. Numquam licere formaliter cooperari mandato vel consilio. Tolerari autem aliquando posse materialem cooperationem, dummodo 1. crematio non habeatur pro signo protestativo massonicae sectae; 2. non aliquid in ipsa contineatur, quod per se directe atque unice exprimat reprobationem catholicae doctrinae et approbationem sectae; 3. neque constet, officiales et operarios catholicos ad opus adstringi vel vocari in contemptum catholicae religionis. Ceterum quamvis in hisce casibus relinquendi

To 3: It is never permitted to cooperate formally by command or counsel. However, material cooperation can at times be tolerated provided that: 1. the cremation is not considered a sign proclaiming the Masonic sect; 2. there is not contained in this anything that in itself, directly and univocally, expresses a rejection of Catholic doctrine and approval of the (Masonic) sect; 3. it in no way happens that the officials and the Catholic workers are constrained or called to the work in contempt of the sunt in bona fide, semper tamen monendi sunt, ne cremationi cooperari intendant.

Ad 4. Provisum in praecedenti. Et detur decretum 15. Dec. 1886 [*3195s].

Catholic religion. Besides, even if, in these cases, they are to be left in good faith, they are still always to be warned not to seek to cooperate in the cremation.

To 4: It is provided for in the foregoing. And it is given in the decree of December 15, 1886 [*3195f].

3280–3294: Encyclical Providentissimus Deus, November 18, 1893

This encyclical is one of the first papal comments on the problem of modern historical-critical exegesis.

Ed.: ASS 26 (1893/1894): 279–91 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 13:342–62 / Brugge 5:211–24 / EnchB nos. 106–31.

Authorities in the Interpretation of Sacred Scripture

[Magister ad docendum exemplar] sumet versionem Vulgatam, quam Concilium Tridentinum “in publicis lectionibus, disputationibus, praedicationibus et expositionibus pro authentica” habendam decrevit [cf. *1506] atque etiam commendat quotidiana Ecclesiae consuetudo. Neque tamen non sua habenda erit ratio reliquarum versionum, quas christiana laudavit usurpavitque antiquitas, maxime codicum primigeniorum. Quamvis enim, ad summam rei quod spectat, ex dictionibus Vulgatae hebraea et graeca bene eluceat sententia, attamen si quid ambigue, si quid minus accurate inibi elatum sit, “inspectio praecedentis linguae”, suasore Augustino,¹ proficiet. . .

. . . Patrum doctrinam Synodus Vaticana amplexa est, quando Tridentinum decretum de divini verbi scripti interpretatione renovans hanc illius mentem esse declaravit, ut “in rebus fidei et morum, ad aedificationem doctrinae christianae pertinentium, is pro vero sensu sacrae Scripturae habendus sit, quem tenuit ac tenet sancta mater Ecclesia, cuius est iudicare de vero sensu et interpretatione Scripturarum sanctarum; atque ideo nemini licere contra hunc sensum aut etiam contra unanimum consensum Patrum ipsam Scripturam sacram interpretari” [*1507, 3007].

Qua plena sapientiae lege nequaquam Ecclesia pervestigationem scientiae biblicae retardat aut coerces; sed eam potius ab errore integram praestat, plurimumque ad veram adiuvat progressionem. Nam privato cuique doctori magnus patet campus, in quo, tutis vestigiis, sua interpretandi industria praeclare certet Ecclesiaeque utiliter. In locis quidem divinae Scripturae, qui expositionem certam et definitam adhuc desiderant, effici ita potest ex suavi Dei providentis consilio, ut quasi praeparato studio iudicium Ecclesiae maturetur; in locis vero iam definitis potest privatus doctor aequae prodesse, si eos vel enucleatius apud fidelium plebem et ingeniosius apud doctos edisserat vel insignius evincat ab adversariis. . .

[The teacher as the model for instruction] will make use of the Vulgate as his text; for the Council of Trent decreed that “in public lectures, disputations, preaching, and exposition” [cf. *1506], the Vulgate is the “authentic” version; and this is the existing custom of the Church. At the same time, the other versions that Christian antiquity has approved should not be neglected, more especially the more ancient manuscripts. For although the meaning of the Hebrew and Greek is substantially rendered by the Vulgate, nevertheless wherever there may be ambiguity or want of clearness, the “examination of older tongues”, to quote St. Augustine,¹ will be useful and advantageous. . .

. . . The teaching of the Fathers is taken up by the Council of the Vatican [I], which, in renewing the decree of Trent, declares its “mind” to be this—that “in things of faith and morals, belonging to the building up of Christian doctrine, that is to be considered the true sense of Holy Scripture which has been held and is held by our Holy Mother the Church, whose place it is to judge of the true sense and interpretation of the Scriptures; and therefore that it is permitted to no one to interpret Holy Scripture against such sense or also against the unanimous agreement of the Fathers” [cf. *1507, 3007].

By this most wise decree the Church by no means prevents or restrains the pursuit of biblical science but rather protects it from error and largely assists its real progress. A wide field is still left open to the private student, in which his hermeneutical skill may display itself with signal effect and to the advantage of the Church. On the one hand, in those passages of Holy Scripture that have not as yet received a certain and definitive interpretation, such labors may, in the benign providence of God, prepare for and bring to maturity the judgment of the Church; on the other, in passages already defined, the private student may do work equally valuable, either by setting them forth more clearly to the flock and more skillfully to scholars or by defending them more powerfully from hostile attack. . .

*3280 ¹ Augustine, De doctrina christiana III, 4, no. 8 (J. Martin: CpChL 32 [1962]: 82_{21f.} / PL 34:68).

3283 In ceteris analogia fidei sequenda est, et doctrina catholica, qualis ex auctoritate Ecclesiae accepta, tamquam summa norma est adhibenda....

3284 Iamvero sanctorum Patrum, quibus “post Apostolos sancta Ecclesia plantatoribus, rigatoribus, aedificatoribus, pastoribus, nutritoribus crevit”,¹ summa auctoritas est, quotiescumque testimonium aliquod biblicum, ut ad fidei pertinens morumve doctrinam uno eodemque modo explicant omnes: nam ex ipsa eorum consensione, ita ab Apostolis secundum catholicam fidem traditum esse nitide eminet....

Neque ideo tamen viam sibi [exegeta] putet obstructam, quominus, ubi iusta causa adfuerit, inquirendo et exponendo vel ultra procedat, modo praeceptioni illi ab Augustino sapienter propositae religiose obsequatur, videlicet a litterali et veluti obvio sensu minime discedendum nisi qua eum vel ratio tenere prohibeat vel necessitas cogat dimittere.²...

3285 Ceterorum interpretum catholicorum est minor quidem auctoritas; attamen, quoniam Bibliorum studia continuum quendam progressum in Ecclesia habuerunt, istorum pariter commentariis suis tribuendus est honor, ex quibus multa opportune peti liceat ad refellenda contraria, ad difficiliora enodanda....

The Sciences Applied in the Interpretation of Sacred Scripture

3286 Sacrae Scripturae magistris necesse est atque theologos addecet eas linguas cognitatas habere, quibus libri canonici sunt primitus ab hagiographis exarati....

Hos autem ipsos eiusdem rei gratia doctiores esse oportet atque exercitiores in vera artis criticae¹ disciplina: perperam enim et cum religionis damno inductum est artificium, nomine honestatum criticae sublimioris, quo ex solis internis, uti loquuntur, rationibus cuiuspiam libri origo, integritas, auctoritas diiudicata emergant. Contra perspicuum est, in quaestionibus rei historicae, cuiusmodi origo et conservatio librorum, historiae testimonia valere prae ceteris eaque esse quam studiosissime et conquiranda et excutienda: illas vero rationes internas plerumque non esse tanti, ut in causam, nisi ad quandam confirmationem, possint advocari....

3287 Scripturae sacrae doctori cognitio naturalium rerum bono erit subsidio, quo huius quoque modi captiones in divinos libros instructas facilius detegat et refellat.

In the other passages, the analogy of faith should be followed, and Catholic doctrine, as authoritatively proposed by the Church, should be held as the supreme law....

The holy Fathers “to whom, after the apostles, the Church owes her growth—who have planted, watered, built, governed, and cherished her”,¹ the holy Fathers, we say, are of supreme authority whenever they all interpret in one and the same manner any text of the Bible as pertaining to the doctrine of faith or morals; for their unanimity clearly evinces that such interpretation has come down from the apostles in accordance with Catholic faith....

But [the exegete] must not on that account consider that it is forbidden, when just cause exists, to push inquiry and exposition beyond (what the Fathers have done), provided he carefully observes the rule so wisely laid down by St. Augustine—not to depart from the literal and obvious sense except only where reason makes it untenable or necessity requires.²...

The authority of other Catholic interpreters is not so great; but the study of Scripture has always continued to advance in the Church, and, therefore, these commentaries also have their own honorable place and are serviceable in many ways for the refutation of assailants and the explanation of difficulties....

It is, therefore, necessary for professors of Sacred Scripture and proper for theologians to acquire knowledge of those languages in which the canonical books were originally composed by the sacred writers....

These latter, with a similar object in view, should make themselves well and thoroughly acquainted with the art of true criticism.¹ There has arisen, to the great detriment of religion, an inept method, dignified by the name of the “higher criticism”, that pretends to judge of the origin, integrity, and authority of each Book from internal indications alone. It is clear, on the other hand, that in historical questions, such as the origin and the handing down of writings, the witness of history is of primary importance and that historical investigation should be made with the utmost care; and that in this matter internal evidence is seldom of great value except as confirmation....

Hence to the professor of Sacred Scripture a knowledge of natural science will be of very great assistance in detecting such attacks on the Sacred Books and in refuting them.

*3284¹ Augustine, Contra Iulianum Pelagianum II, 10, no. 37 (PL 44:700).

² Cf. Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram VIII, 7, no. 13 (CSEL 28:241 / PL 34:378).

*3286¹ The critical method is recommended also in the apostolic letter of Leo XIII Vigilantiae studique of October 30, 1902 (ASS 35 [1902/1903]: 236 / EnchB no. 142).

Nulla quidem theologum inter et physicum vera dissensio intercesserit, dum suis uterque finibus se contineant, id caventes secundum S. Augustini monitum, “ne aliquid temere et incognitum pro cognito asserant”.¹ Sin tamen dissenserint, quemadmodum se gerat theologus, summam est regula ab eodem oblata: “Quidquid, inquit, ipsi de natura rerum veracibus documentis demonstrare potuerint, ostendamus nostris Litteris non esse contrarium: quidquid autem de quibuslibet suis voluminibus his nostris Litteris, id est catholicae fidei, contrarium protulerint, aut aliqua etiam facultate ostendamus aut nulla dubitatione credamus esse falsissimum.”²

De cuius aequitate regulae in consideratione sit primum, scriptores sacros seu verius “Spiritum Dei, qui per ipsos loquebatur, noluisse ista (videlicet intimam adspectabilium rerum constitutionem) docere homines, nulli saluti profutura”;¹ quare eos, potius quam explorationem naturae recta persequantur, res ipsas aliquando describere et tractare aut quodam translationis modo aut sicut communis sermo per ea ferebat tempora hodieque de multis fert rebus in quotidiana vita ipsos inter homines scientissimos. Vulgari autem sermone cum ea primo proprieque efferantur, quae cadant sub sensus, non dissimiliter scriptor sacer (monuitque et Doctor Angelicus) “ea secutus est, quae sensibilibus apparent”,² seu quae Deus ipse, homines alloquens, ad eorum captum significavit humano more.

Quod vero defensio Scripturae sanctae agenda strenue est, non ex eo omnes aequae sententiae tuendae sunt, quas singuli Patres aut qui deinceps interpretes in eadem declaranda ediderint: qui prout erant opiniones aetatis, in locis edisserendis, ubi physica aguntur, fortasse non ita semper iudicaverunt ex veritate, ut quaedam posuerint, quae nunc minus probentur.

Quocirca studiose dignoscendum in illorum interpretationibus, quae nam reapse tradant tamquam spectantia ad fidem aut cum ea maxime copulata, quae nam unanimi tradant consensu; namque “in his quae de necessitate fidei non sunt, licuit Sanctis diversimode opinari, sicut et nobis”,¹ ut est S. Thomae sententia. Qui et alio loco prudentissime habet: “Mihi videtur

There can never, indeed, be any real discrepancy between the theologian and the physicist, as long as each confines himself within his own lines and both are careful, as St. Augustine warns us, “not to make rash assertions or to assert what is not known as known”.¹ If dissension should arise between them, here is the rule also laid down by St. Augustine for the theologian: “Whatever they can really demonstrate to be true of physical nature, we must show to be capable of reconciliation with our Scriptures; and whatever they assert in their treatises that is contrary to these Scriptures of ours, that is to Catholic faith, we must either prove it as well as we can to be entirely false or at all events we must, without the smallest hesitation, believe it to be so.”²

To understand how just is the rule here formulated 3288 we must remember, first, that the sacred writers, or to speak more accurately, the Holy Spirit, “who spoke by them, did not intend to teach men these things (that is to say, the essential nature of the things of the visible universe), things in no way profitable unto salvation”.¹ Hence they did not seek to penetrate the secrets of nature, but rather described and dealt with things in more or less figurative language, or in terms that were commonly used at the time and that in many instances are in daily use at this day, even by the most eminent men of science. Ordinary speech primarily and properly describes what comes under the senses; and somewhat in the same way the sacred writers—as the Angelic Doctor also reminds us—“went by what sensibly appeared”,² or put down what God, speaking to men, signified in the way men could understand and were accustomed to.

The unshrinking defense of Holy Scripture, however, 3289 does not require that we should equally uphold all the opinions that each of the Fathers or the more recent interpreters have put forth in explaining it; for it may be that, in commenting on passages where physical matters occur, they have sometimes expressed the ideas of their own times and thus made statements that are now less acceptable.

Hence, in their interpretations, we must carefully note what they lay down as belonging to faith or as intimately connected with faith—what they are unanimous in. For “in those things that do not come under the obligation of faith, the saints were at liberty to hold divergent opinions, just as we ourselves are”,¹ according to the saying of St. Thomas. And in another place he says most wisely:

*3287¹ Cf. Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram imperfectus liber, c. 9, no. 30 (CSEL 28:481₁₃ / PL 34:233).

² Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram I, 21, no. 41 (CSEL 28:31₄₋₉ / PL 34:262).

*3288¹ Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram II, 9, no. 20 (CSEL 28:46₈₋₁₀ / PL 34:270f.).

² Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 70, a. 1 ad 3 (Editio Leonina 5:178b).

*3289¹ Thomas Aquinas, Super IV libros Sententiarum II, dist. 2, q. 1, a. 3, solutio (Parma ed. 6:405b / R. Busa, Opera omnia 1 [1980], 130).

tutius esse, huiusmodi, quae philosophi communiter senserunt et nostrae fidei non repugnant, nec sic esse asserenda ut dogmata fidei, etsi aliquando sub nomine philosophorum introducantur, nec sic esse neganda tamquam fidei contraria, ne sapientibus huius mundi occasio contemnendi doctrinam fidei praebeatur.”²

Sane, quamquam ea, quae speculatores naturae certis argumentis certa iam esse affirmarint, interpretes ostendere debet nihil Scripturis recte explicatis obsistere, ipsum tamen ne fugiat, factum quandoque esse, ut certa quaedam ab illis tradita, postea in dubitationem adducta sint et repudiata. . . .

3290 Haec ipsa deinde ad cognatas disciplinas, ad historiam praesertim, iuvabit transferri.

The Inspiration and Inerrancy of Sacred Scripture

3291 Fieri quidem potest, ut quaedam librariis in codicibus describendis minus recte exciderint; quod considerate iudicandum est nec facile admittendum, nisi quibus locis rite sit demonstratum; fieri etiam potest, ut germana alicuius loci sententia permaneat anceps; cui enodandae multum afferent optimae interpretandi regulae: at nefas omnino fuerit aut inspirationem ad aliquas tantum sacrae Scripturae partes coangustare aut concedere sacrum ipsum errasse auctorem. Nec enim toleranda est eorum ratio, qui ex istis difficultatibus sese expediunt, id nimirum dare non dubitantes, inspirationem divinam ad res fidei morumque, nihil praeterea, pertinere, eo quod falso arbitrentur, de veritate sententiarum cum agitur, non adeo exquirendum, quaenam dixerit Deus, ut non magis pendatur, quam ob causam ea dixerit.

3292 Etenim libri omnes atque integri, quos Ecclesia tamquam sacros et canonicos recipit, cum omnibus suis partibus, Spiritu Sancto dictante conscripti sunt; tantum vero abest, ut divinae inspirationi error ullus subesse possit, ut ea per se ipsa non modo errorem excludat omnem, sed tam necessario excludat et respuat, quam necessarium est, Deum, summam Veritatem, nullius omnino erroris auctorem esse.

3293 Haec est antiqua et constans fides Ecclesiae, sollemni etiam sententia in Conciliis definita Florentino [cf. *1334] et Tridentino [cf. 1501–1508], confirmata denique atque expressius declarata in Concilio Vaticano, a quo absolute edictum: “Veteris et Novi Testamenti libri . . . Deum habent auctorem” [*3006]. Quare nihil

“When philosophers are agreed upon a point, and it is not contrary to our faith, it is safer, in my opinion, neither to lay down such a point as a dogma of faith, even though it is perhaps so presented by the philosophers, nor to reject it as against faith, lest we thus give to the wise of this world an occasion of despising our faith.”²

The Catholic interpreter, although he should show that those facts of natural science which investigators affirm to be now quite certain are not contrary to the Scripture rightly explained, must nevertheless always bear in mind that much which has been held and proved as certain has afterward been called in question and rejected. . . .

The principles here laid down will apply to cognate sciences and especially to history.

It is true, no doubt, that copyists have made mistakes in the text of the Bible; this question, when it arises, should be carefully considered on its merits and the fact not too easily admitted, but only in those passages where the proof is clear. It may also happen that the sense of a passage remains ambiguous, and in this case good hermeneutical methods will greatly assist in clearing up the obscurity. But it is absolutely wrong and forbidden either to narrow inspiration to certain parts only of Holy Scripture or to admit that the sacred writer has erred. For the system of those who, in order to rid themselves of these difficulties, do not hesitate to concede that divine inspiration regards the things of faith and morals, and nothing beyond, because (as they wrongly think) in a question of the truth or falsehood of a passage, we should consider not so much what God has said as the reason and purpose that he had in mind in saying it—this system cannot be tolerated.

For all the books that the Church receives as sacred and canonical are written wholly and entirely, with all their parts, at the dictation of the Holy Spirit; and so far is it from being possible that any error can co-exist with inspiration, that inspiration not only is essentially incompatible with error, but excludes and rejects it as absolutely and necessarily as it is impossible that God himself, the supreme Truth, can utter that which is not true.

This is the ancient and unchanging faith of the Church, solemnly defined in the Councils of Florence [cf. *1334] and of Trent [cf. *1501–1508], and finally confirmed and more expressly formulated by the Council of the Vatican. These are the words of the last: “The books of the Old and New Testament . . . have God for their author” [*3006].

² *3289 Thomas Aquinas, Responsio ad lectorem Vercellensem de articulis 42, proemium (opusculum 10 in Roman ed. = opusculum 22 in the Mandonnet ed. 3 [Paris, 1927], 197 = opusculum 9 in the Parma ed. 16:163b).

admodum refert, Spiritum Sanctum assumpsisse homines tamquam instrumenta ad scribendum, quasi, non quidem primario auctori, sed scriptoribus inspiratis quidpiam falsi elabi potuerit. Nam supernaturali ipse virtute ita eos ad scribendum excitavit et movit, ita scribentibus adstitit, ut ea omnia eaque sola, quae ipse iuberet, et recte mente conciperent et fideliter conscribere vellent et apte infallibili veritate exprimerent: secus non ipse esset auctor sacrae Scripturae universae. . . .

Atque adeo Patribus omnibus et Doctoribus persuasissimum fuit, divinas Litteras, quales ab hagiographis editae sunt, ab omni omnino errore esse immunes, ut propterea non pauca illa, quae contrarii aliquid vel dissimile viderentur afferre . . . , non subtiliter minus quam religiose componere inter se et conciliare studuerint; professi unanimes, libros eos et integros et per partes a divino aequae esse afflatu, Deumque ipsum per sacros auctores elocutum nihil admodum a veritate alienum ponere potuisse.

Ea valeant universe quae idem Augustinus ad Hieronymum scripsit: "... Si aliquid in eis offendero Litteris, quod videatur contrarium veritati, nihil aliud quam vel mendosum esse codicem, vel interpretem non assecutum esse quod dictum est, vel me minime intellexisse non ambigam."¹ . . .

. . . Permulta enim ex omni doctrinarum genere sunt diu multumque contra Scripturam iactata, quae nunc, utpote inania, penitus obsolevere; item non pauca de quibusdam Scripturae locis (non proprie ad fidei morumque pertinentibus regulam) sunt quondam interpretando proposita, in quibus rectius postea vidit acrior quaedam investigatio. Nempe opinionum commenta delet dies; sed "veritas manet et invalescit in aeternum."¹

Hence, because the Holy Spirit employed men as his instruments, we cannot therefore say that it was these inspired instruments who, perchance, have fallen into error, and not the primary author. For, by supernatural power, he so moved and impelled them to write—he was so present to them—that the things which he ordered, and those only, they, first, rightly understood, then willed faithfully to write down, and finally expressed in apt words and with infallible truth. Otherwise, it could not be said that he was the Author of the entire Scripture. . . .

And so emphatically were all the Fathers and Doctors agreed that the divine writings, as left by the hagiographers, are free from all error that they labored earnestly . . . , with no less skill than reverence, to reconcile with each other those numerous passages that seem at variance, for they were unanimous in laying it down that those writings in their entirety and in all their parts were equally of divine inspiration and that God himself, speaking through the sacred writers, could not set down anything but what was true.

The words that St. Augustine wrote to St. Jerome have universal value: . . . If in these books I meet anything that seems contrary to truth, I shall not hesitate to conclude either that the text is faulty or that the translator has not expressed the meaning of the passage or that I myself do not understand."¹ . . .

. . . There have been objections without number 3294 perseveringly directed against the Scripture for many a long year that have been proved to be futile and are now never heard of; and not unfrequently interpretations have been placed on certain passages of Scripture (not belonging to the rule of faith or morals) that have been rectified by more careful investigations. As time goes on, mistaken views die and disappear; but "truth remains and forever grows stronger."¹

3296: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Krishnagur (India), July 18, 1894

Ed.: CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:308f., no. 1877 / The Pastoral Gazette 21 (Bombay): 65.

The Baptism of Children of Unbelieving Parents

Qu. (28. Aug. 1886): 1. An possint baptizari filii infidelium, in periculo, non vero in articulo mortis constituti?

2. An iidem possint saltem baptizari, quando non est spes eos denuo revisendi?

3. Quid, si valde prudenter dubitetur, quod ex infirmitate, qua actu afficiuntur, non vivant, sed moriantur ante aetatem discretionis?

Questions (August 28, 1886): 1. May children of unbelieving parents be baptized if they are found to be in danger but not at the point of death? 3296

2. May these (children) at least be baptized when there is no hope of seeing them again?

3. What (may be done) if there is a very well-founded presumption that (these children), because of an illness with which they are presently afflicted, will not survive but will, rather, die before reaching the age of discretion?

*3293 ¹ Augustine, letter (82) to Jerome, chap. 1, no. 3 (CSEL 34:354₈₋₁₁ / PL 33:277).

*3294 ¹ 3 Ezra 4:38.

4. An baptizari possint filii infidelium in periculo vel articulo mortis constituti, de quibus dubitatur, an attigerint statum discretionis, et non adest opportunitas eos docendi in rebus fidei?

Resp.: Ad 1–3: Affirmative; ad 4: Conentur missionarii eos instruere eo meliori modo quo fieri possit; secus baptizentur sub condicione.

4. May the children of unbelievers be baptized who are found in danger or at the point of death if there is a doubt as to whether they have reached the state of discretion and there is no opportunity to instruct them in matters of the faith?

Responses: To 1–3: Yes. To 4: Let the missionaries try to instruct them in the best way possible; otherwise, they should be baptized conditionally.

3298: Response of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Cambrai, July 24, 1895

Ed.: ASS 28 (1895/1896): 383f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:1906, no. 1906.

Craniotomy and Abortion

3298 Expos.: Titius medicus, cum ad praegnantem graviter decumbentem vocabatur, passim animadvertibat, lethalis morbi causam aliam non subesse praeter ipsam praegnationem, hoc est fetus in utero praesentiam. Una igitur, ut matrem a certa atque imminente morte salvaret, praesto ipsi erat via, procurandi scilicet abortum seu fetus eiectionem. Viam hanc consueto ipse inibat, adhibitis tamen mediis et operationibus, per se atque immediate non quidem ad id tendentibus, ut in materno sinu fetum occiderent, sed solummodo ut vivus, si fieri posset, ad lucem ederetur, quamvis proxime moriturus, utpote qui immaturus omnino adhuc esset.

Iamvero lectis, quae die 19. Augusti 1889 sancta Sedes ad Cameracensem archiepiscopum rescripsit: “tuto doceri non posse” licitam esse quamcumque operationem directe occisivam fetus, etiam si hoc necessarium foret ad matrem salvandam: dubius haeret Titius circa liceitatem operationum chirurgicarum, quibus non raro ipse abortum hucusque procurabat, ut praegnantem graviter aegrotantes salvaret.

Qu.: Titius petit: Utrum enuntiatas operationes in repetitis dictis circumstantiis instaurare tuto possit.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 25. Iulii): Negative, iuxta alia decreta diei scilicet 28. Maii 1884 et 19. Aug. 1889.

Explanation: When the doctor, Titius, was called to a pregnant woman who was seriously sick, he gradually realized that the cause of the deadly sickness was nothing else than pregnancy, that is, the presence of the fetus in the womb. Therefore, to save the mother from certain and imminent death, one way presented itself to him, that of procuring an abortion or ejection of the fetus. In the customary manner he adopted this way, but the means and operations applied did not by themselves tend directly to the killing of the fetus in the mother’s womb but only to its being brought forth to light alive, if it could possibly be done, although it would die soon, inasmuch as it was not mature.

Yet, despite what the Holy See wrote on August 19, 1889, in answer to the archbishop of Cambrai, that it could not be taught safely that any operation causing the death of the fetus directly, even if this were necessary to save the mother, was licit, Titius is in doubt about the liceity of the surgical operations by which he himself has not infrequently procured an abortion in order to save gravely ill pregnant women.

Question: Titius asks whether he can, with security, repeat the above-mentioned operations under the reoccurring circumstances.

Response: (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 25): No, according to other decrees, namely, of May 28, 1884, and of August 19, 1889.

3300–3310: Encyclical Satis cognitum, June 29, 1896

Ed.: ASS 28 (1895/1896): 709–57 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 16:159–205 / Brugge 6:157–87 / AnE 4 (1896): 246a–257a.

The Unity of the Church as the Mystical Body of Christ

3300 [Ecclesia] quidem, si extremum illud quod vult causaeque proximae sanctitatem efficientes spectentur, profecto est spiritualis; si vero eos consideres, quibus cohaeret, resque ipsas quae ad spiritualia dona perducunt, externa est necessarioque conspicua. . . .

Quibus de causis Ecclesiam cum “corpus”, tum etiam “corpus Christi” tam crebro sacrae Litterae nominant: “Vos autem estis corpus Christi” [1 Cor 12:27]. Propter

If we consider the chief end of [the Church] and the proximate efficient causes of salvation, she is undoubtedly spiritual; but in regard to those who constitute her and to the things that lead to these spiritual gifts, she is external and necessarily visible. . . .

For this reason the Church is so often called in Sacred Scripture a body, and even the body of Christ—“Now you are the body of Christ” [1 Cor 12:27]. Because she eam rem quod corpus est, oculis cernitur Ecclesia; propterea quod est Christi, vivum corpus est actuosum et vegetum, quia [Christus] eam tuetur ac sustentat. . . . Quemadmodum autem in animalibus principium vitae in occulto est ac penitus abditum, indicatur tamen atque ostenditur motu actuque membrorum, sic in Ecclesia supernaturalis principium vitae perspicue ex iis, quae ab ipsa aguntur, apparet.

Ex quo consequitur, in magno eodemque pernicioso errore versari, qui ad arbitrium suum fingunt Ecclesiam atque informant quasi latentem minimeque conspicuam; item qui perinde habent atque institutum quoddam humanum cum temperatione quadam disciplinae ritibusque externis, et sine perenni communicatione munerum gratiae divinae, sine rebus iis, quae haustam a Deo vitam quotidiana atque aperta significatione testentur. Nimirum alterutram esse posse Iesu Christi Ecclesiam tam repugnat, quam solo corpore vel anima sola constare hominem. Complexio copulatioque earum duarum velut partium prorsus est ad veram Ecclesiam necessaria, sic fere ut ad naturam humanam intima animae corporisque coniunctio.

Non est Ecclesia intermortuum quiddam, sed Corpus Christi vita supernaturali praeditum. Sicut Christus, Caput et exemplar, non omnis est, si in eo vel humana dumtaxat spectetur natura visibilis . . . vel divina tantummodo natura in visibilis, . . . sed unus est ex utraque et in utraque natura cum visibili tum invisibili, sic corpus eius mysticum non vera Ecclesia est nisi propter eam rem, quod eius partes conspicuae vim vitamque ducunt ex donis supernaturalibus rebusque ceteris, unde propria ipsarum ratio ac natura efflorescit. . . .

In diiudicanda statuendaque natura unitatis multos varius error de via deflectit. Ecclesiae quidem non solum ortus, sed tota constitutio ad rerum voluntate libera effectarum pertinet genus: quocirca ad id, quod revera gestum est, iudicatio est omnis revocanda, exquirendumque non sane, quo pacto una esse Ecclesia queat, sed quo unam esse is voluit, qui condidit.

Iamvero, si ad id respicitur, quod gestum est, Ecclesiam Iesus Christus non talem finxit formavitque, quae communitates plures complecteretur genere similes, sed distinctas neque iis vinculis alligatas, quae Ecclesiam individuum atque unicam efficerent eo plane modo, quo “Credo unam . . . Ecclesiam” in Symbolo fidei profitemur . . .

Sane Iesus Christus de aedificio eiusmodi mystico cum loqueretur, Ecclesiam non commemorat nisi unam quam appellat suam: “aedificabo Ecclesiam meam” [Mt 16:18]. Quaecumque praeter hanc cogitur alia, cum non is a body, the Church is visible, and precisely because she is (the Body) of Christ, she is a living body, energetic and vital, because [Christ] guards and sustains her. . . . In the same way as in animals the vital principle is unseen and invisible and is evidenced and manifested by the movements and action of the members, so the principle of supernatural life in the Church is clearly shown in that which is done by her.

From this it follows that those who arbitrarily conjure up and picture to themselves, as it were, a hidden and invisible Church are in grievous and pernicious error: as also are those who regard the Church as a human institution that claims a certain obedience in discipline and external duties but that is without the perennial communication of the gifts of divine grace and without all that which testifies by constant and undoubted signs to the existence of that life which is drawn from God. It is assuredly as impossible that the Church of Jesus Christ can be the one or the other as that man should be a body alone or a soul alone. The connection and union of both elements is as absolutely necessary to the true Church as the intimate union of the soul and body is to human nature.

The Church is not something dead: she is the Body of Christ endowed with supernatural life. As Christ, the Head and Exemplar, is not wholly in his visible human nature . . . or wholly in the invisible divine nature, . . . but is one, from and in both natures, visible and invisible; so the Mystical Body of Christ is the true Church only because her visible parts draw life and power from the supernatural gifts and other things whence spring their very nature and essence. . . .

But in judging and determining the nature of this unity, many have erred in various ways. Not the foundation of the Church alone, but her whole constitution belongs to the class of things effected by Christ’s free choice. For this reason the entire case must be judged by what was actually done. We must consequently investigate, not how the Church may possibly be one, but how he who founded her willed that she should be one.

But when we consider what was actually done, we find that Jesus Christ did not, in point of fact, institute a Church to embrace several communities similar in nature, but in themselves distinct, and lacking those bonds that render the Church unique and indivisible after that manner in which in the profession of our faith we profess: “I believe in one . . . Church.”. . .

For this reason Christ, speaking of the mystical edifice, mentions only one Church, which he calls his own—“I will build my Church” [Mt 16:18]; any other (Church) imagined outside of this one, since it was not sit per Iesum Christum condita, Ecclesia Christi vera esse non potest. . . .

3301

3302

3303

Itaque partam per Iesum Christum salutem simulque beneficia omnia, quae inde proficiscuntur, late fundere in omnes homines atque ad omnes propagare aetates debet Ecclesia. Quocirca ex voluntate auctoris sui unicam in omnibus terris in perpetuitate temporum esse necesse est. . . .

3304 Illud accedit, quod Ecclesiam Filius Dei mysticum corpus suum decrevit fore, quocum ipse velut Caput coniungeretur, ad similitudinem corporis humani quod suscepit. . . . Sicut igitur mortale corpus sibi sumpsit unicum, quod obtulit ad cruciatus et necem, ut liberationis humanae pretium exsolveret, sic pariter unum habet corpus mysticum, in quo et cuius ipsius opera facit sanctitatis salutisque aeternae homines compotes: “Ipsium (Christum) dedit (Deus) caput supra omnem Ecclesiam, quae est corpus ipsius” [Eph 1:22s]. Dispersa membra atque seiuncta non possunt eodem cum capite, unum simul effectura corpus, cohaerere. Atqui Paulus “Omnia autem” inquit “membra corporis cum sint multa, unum tamen corpus sunt: ita et Christus” [1 Cor 12:12]. Propterea corpus istud mysticum “compactum” ait esse “et connexum”. “Caput Christus: ex quo totum corpus compactum, et connexum per omnem iuncturam subministrationis, secundum operationem in mensuram uniuscuiusque membri” [Eph 4:15s]. Quamobrem dispersa a membris ceteris siqua membra vagantur, cum eodem atque unico capite conglutinata esse nequeunt. . . .

Est igitur Ecclesia Christi unica et perpetua: quicumque seorsum eant, aberrant a voluntate et praescriptione Christi Domini relictoque salutis itinere ad interitum digrediuntur.

The Foundations of the Unity of the Church

3305 At vero qui unicam condidit, is idem condidit unam: videlicet eiusmodi, ut quotquot in ipsa futuri essent, artissimis vinculis sociati tenerentur ita prorsus, ut unam gentem, unum regnum, corpus unum efficerent: “unum corpus et unus spiritus . . .” [Eph 4:4]. . . . Tanta autem inter homines ac tam absolutae concordiae necessarium fundamentum est convenientia coniunctioque mentium. . . .

[In hunc finem] instituit Iesus Christus in Ecclesia vivum, authenticum, idemque perenne magisterium, quod suapte potestate auxit, spiritu veritatis instruxit, miraculis confirmavit, eiusque praecepta doctrinae aequae accipi ac sua voluit gravissimeque imperavit.

Quoties igitur huius verbo magisterii edicatur, traditae divinitus doctrinae complexu hoc contineri vel illud, id quisque debet certo credere verum esse: si falsum esse ullo modo posset, illud consequatur, quod aperte founded by Jesus Christ, cannot be the true Church of Christ. . . .

The Church, therefore, is bound to spread out widely among all men and to transmit through all ages the salvation effected by Jesus Christ and the blessings flowing therefrom. Wherefore, by the will of her Founder, it is necessary that this Church should be one in all lands and at all times. . . .

Furthermore, the Son of God decreed that the Church should be his Mystical Body, with which he should be united as the Head, after the manner of the human body that he assumed, to which the natural head is physiologically united. . . . As he took to himself a mortal body, which he gave to suffering and death in order to pay the price of man’s redemption, so also he has one Mystical Body in which and through which he renders men partakers of holiness and of eternal salvation. God “has made him (Christ) head over all things for the Church, which is his body” [Eph 1:22–23]. Scattered and separated members cannot possibly cohere with the head so as to make one body. But St. Paul says: “All the members of the body, though many, are one body, so it is with Christ” [1 Cor 12:12]. Wherefore this Mystical Body, he declares, is “joined and knit together”. Christ (is) the Head, from whom the whole body is joined and knit together by every joint with which it is supplied according to the operation, in due measure, of every part” [Eph 4:15–16]. And so dispersed members, separated one from the other, cannot be united with one and the same head. . . .

The Church of Christ, therefore, is one and the same forever; those who leave her depart from the will and command of Christ, the Lord—leaving the path of salvation, they enter on that of perdition.

But he, indeed, who made this one Church also gave her unity, that is, he made her such that all who are to belong to her must be united by the closest bonds, so as to form one people, one kingdom, one body—“one body and one Spirit . . .” [Eph 4:4]. . . . Agreement and union of minds is the necessary foundation of this perfect concord among men. . . .

[For this purpose] Christ instituted in the Church a living, authoritative, and permanent Magisterium, which by his own power he strengthened, by the Spirit of truth he taught, and by miracles confirmed. He willed and ordered, under the gravest penalties, that its teachings should be received as if they were his own.

As often, therefore, as it is declared on the authority of this teaching that this or that is contained in the deposit of divine revelation, it must be believed by everyone as true. If it could in any way be false, an evident contradiction repugnat, erroris in homine ipsum esse auctorem Deum: “Domine, si error est, a te decepti sumus”¹....

Sicut ad unitatem Ecclesiae, quatenus est coetus fidelium, necessario unitas fidei requiritur, ita ad ipsius unitatem, quatenus est divinitus constituta societas, requiritur iure divino unitas regiminis, quae unitatem communionis efficit....

Si Petri eiusque successorum plena ac summa potestas est, ea tamen ne putetur sola. Nam qui Petrum Ecclesiae fundamentum posuit, idem elegit “duodecim ... quos et Apostolos nominavit” [Lc 6:13]. Quo modo Petri auctoritatem in Romano Pontifice perpetuam manere necesse est, sic episcopi, quod succedunt Apostolis, horum potestatem ordinariam hereditate capiunt, ita ut intimam Ecclesiae constitutionem ordo episcoporum necessario attingat. Quamquam vero neque plenam neque universalem ii neque summam obtinent auctoritatem, non tamen vicarii Romanorum Pontificum putandi, quia potestatem gerant sibi propriam, verissimeque populorum quos regunt, antistites ordinarii dicuntur....

Sed episcoporum ordo tunc rite, ut Christus iussit, colligatus cum Petro putandus, si Petro subsit eique pareat; secus in multitudinem confusam ac perturbatam necessario delabitur. Fidei et communionis unitati rite conservandae, non gerere honoris causa priores partes, non curam agere satis est; sed omnino auctoritate est opus vera eademque summa, cui obtemperet tota communitas....

Hinc illae de beato Petro singulares veterum locutiones, quae in summo dignitatis potestatisque gradu locatum luculenter praedicant. Appellant passim “principem coetus discipulorum”, “sanctorum Apostolorum principem”, “chori illius coryphaeum”, “os Apostolorum omnium”, “caput illius familiae”, “orbis totius praepositum”, “inter Apostolos primum”, “Ecclesiae columnen”....

Illud vero abhorret a veritate et aperte repugnat constitutioni divinae, iurisdictioni Romanorum Pontificum episcopos subesse singulos ius esse, universos ius non esse. Haec enim omnis est causa ratioque fundamenti, ut unitatem stabilitatemque toti potius aedificio quam partibus eius singulis tueatur....

follows; for then God himself would be the author of error in man. “Lord, if we be in error, we are being deceived by you”¹....

Just as the unity of the Church, insofar as she is the assembly of the faithful, necessarily requires unity of faith; in the same way, insofar as she is a society instituted by God, she requires by divine right a unity of government that brings about unity of communion.... 3306

But if the authority of Peter and his successors is plenary and supreme, it is not to be regarded as the sole authority. For he who made Peter the foundation of the Church also “chose twelve ..., whom he named apostles” [Lk 6:13]; and just as it is necessary that the authority of Peter should be perpetuated in the Roman pontiff, so, by the fact that the bishops succeed the apostles, they inherit their ordinary power, and thus the episcopal order necessarily belongs to the essential constitution of the Church. Although they do not receive plenary or universal or supreme authority, they are not to be looked on as vicars of the Roman pontiffs; because they exercise a power really their own and are most truly called the ordinary pastors of the peoples over whom they rule.... 3307

But the episcopal order is rightly judged to be in communion with Peter, as Christ commanded, if it be subject to and obeys Peter; otherwise it necessarily becomes a lawless and disorderly crowd. It is not sufficient for the due preservation of the unity of the faith that the head should merely have been charged with the office of superintendent or should have been invested solely with a primacy of honor. But it is absolutely necessary that he should have received real and sovereign authority that the whole community is bound to obey.... 3308

Hence those remarkable expressions of the ancients concerning St. Peter, which most clearly set forth the fact that he was placed in the highest degree of dignity and authority. They frequently call him “the prince of the college of the disciples; the prince of the holy apostles; the leader of that choir; the mouthpiece of all the apostles; the head of that family; the one in charge of the whole world; the first of the apostles; the safeguard of the Church”....

But it is opposed to the truth, and in evident contradiction with the divine constitution of the Church, to hold that while each bishop is individually bound to obey the authority of the Roman pontiffs, taken collectively the bishops are not so bound. For it is the nature and object of a foundation to support the unity of the whole edifice and to give stability to it, rather than to each component part.... 3309

*3305 ¹ Richard of St. Victor, De trinitate I, 2 (PL 196:891D).

Hanc vero, de qua dicimus, in ipsum episcoporum collegium potestatem ... agnoscere ac testari nullo tempore Ecclesia destitit [*Allegantur inter alia 641, 1445]....

Sane claves regni caelorum uni creditas Petro, item ligandi solvendique potestatem Apostolis una cum Petro collatam sacrae Litterae testantur; at vero summam potestatem sine Petro et contra Petrum unde Apostoli acceperint, nusquam est testatum....

Neque vero potestati geminae eosdem subesse confusionem habet administrationis. Tale quicquam suspicari primum sapientia Dei prohibemur, cuius consilio est temperatio isthaec regiminis constituta. Illud praeterea animadvertendum, tum rerum ordinem mutuasque necessitudines perturbari, si bini magistratus in populo sint eodem gradu, neutro alteri obnoxio. Sed Romani Pontificis potestas summa est, universalis, planeque sui iuris: episcoporum vero certis circumscripta finibus nec plane sui iuris: "Inconveniens est, quod duo aequaliter super eundem gregem constituantur. Sed quod duo, quorum unus alio principalior est, super eandem plebem constituantur, non est inconveniens, et secundum hoc super eandem plebem immediate sunt et sacerdos parochialis et episcopus et papa."¹

- 3310 Romani autem Pontifices, officii sui memores, maxime omnium conservari volunt, quidquid est in Ecclesia divinitus constitutum: propterea quemadmodum potestatem suam ea, qua par est, cura vigilantiaque tuentur, ita et dedere et dabunt constanter operam, ut sua episcopis auctoritas salva sit. Immo quidquid episcopis tribuitur honoris, quidquid obsequii, id omne sibimet ipsis tributum deputant.

3312: Response of the Holy Office to a Bishop in Brazil, August 5, 1896

Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 316f. / AnE 4 (1896): 385a / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:340, no. 1949.

The Wine Used for Mass

- 3312 Expos.: ... Uva his in locis adeo debilis et aquosa est, ut ad tolerabile vinum habendum aliquid sacchari e planta quam vulgo "canna de assugar" appellamus, musto admisceri debeat. ... Cognita Responsione Sanctae Romanae et Universalis Inquisitionis ... 25. Iun. 1891 lata, dubitationes ortae sunt:

Qu.: Utrum sic confectum vinum pro s. Missae sacrificio tuto adhiberi valeat?

This power over the episcopal college to which we refer ... has ever been acknowledged and attested by the Church [*among others, reference is made to 641, 1445]....

Indeed, Sacred Scripture attests that the keys of the kingdom of heaven were given to Peter alone and that the power of binding and loosening was granted to the apostles together with Peter; but there is nothing to show that the apostles received supreme power without Peter and against Peter....

Nor does it beget any confusion in the administration that Christians are bound to obey a twofold authority. We are prohibited in the first place by Divine Wisdom from entertaining any such thought, since this form of government was constituted by the counsel of God himself. In the second place, we must note that the due order of things and their mutual relations are disturbed if there be a twofold magistracy of the same rank set over a people, neither of which is amenable to the other. But the authority of the Roman pontiff is supreme, universal, independent; that of the bishops, however, is circumscribed by specific limits and not entirely independent. "It is not congruous that two superiors with equal authority should be placed over the same flock; but that two, one of whom is higher than the other, should be placed over the same people is not incongruous. Thus the parish priest, the bishop, and the pope are placed immediately over the same people."¹

So the Roman pontiffs, mindful of their duty, wish above all things that the divine constitution of the Church should be preserved. Therefore, as they defend with all necessary care and vigilance their own authority, so they have always labored and will continue to labor, that the authority of the bishops may be upheld. Yea, they look on whatever honor or obedience is given to the bishops as paid to themselves.

Explanation: ... In this region the grapes are so weak and watery that to get an acceptable wine a certain quantity of sugar from a plant that we call in the language of the country "canna de assugar" (sugar cane) must be added. ... Having taken note of the response of the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition ... given on June 25, 1891, certain doubts have arisen:

Question: Can wine so prepared be safely used for the holy sacrifice of the Mass?

¹ *3309 Thomas Aquinas, Super libros IV Sententiarum, l. IV, dist. 17, q. 3, a. 3, solutio 5 (to qc. 5), 3 (Parma ed. 7:800a / R. Busa, Opera omnia 1:539).

Resp. (confirmata a Summa Pontifice, 7. Aug.): Loco sacchari extracti e canna saccharina, vulgo “canna de assugar”, addendum potius esse spiritum alcool, dummodo ex genimine vitis extractus fuerit et eius quantitas, addita cum ea quam vinum de quo agitur naturaliter continet, haud excedat proportionem 12 pro centum; huiusmodi vero admixtio fiat, quando fermentatio tumultuosa, ut aiunt, defervescere inceperit.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on August 7): In place of using sugar extracted from sugar cane, called in the language of the country “canna de assugar”, alcohol should rather be added as long as it was extracted from the fruit of the vine and its quantity, added to that which the wine naturally contains, by no means exceeds the proportion of 12 percent; this mixture, however, should be made when the so-called tumultuous fermentation has begun to subside.

3313: Response of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Tarragona, August 5, 1896

Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 318f. / AnE 4 (1896): 483b–484a / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:340, no. 1950.

The Wine Used for Mass

Qu.: 1. Utrum ... vinis [exportandis] praesertim dulcibus, pro eorumdem conservatione, tantum spiritus seu “alcool” ex uva deprompti addi queat, ut ad 17 circiter vel 18 vis alcoolicae gradus increscant, quin cessent exinde esse materia apta pro s. Missae sacrificio?

2. Utrum licitum sit ad s. Missae sacrificium conficiendum uti vino ex musto obtento, quod ante fermentationem vinosam per evaporationem igneam condensatum est?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 7. Aug.): Ad 1. Dummodo ... spiritus extractus fuerit ex genimine vitis, et quantitas alcoolica adiungenda una cum ea quam vinum de quo agitur naturaliter continet, non excedat proportionem 17 vel 18 pro centum, et admixtio fiat, quando fermentatio tumultuosa, ut aiunt, defervescere inceperit, nihil obstare, quominus idem vinum in Missae sacrificio adhibeatur.

Ad 2. Licere, dummodo decoctio huiusmodi fermentationem alcoolicam haud excludat, ipsaque fermentatio naturaliter obtineri possit et de facti obtineatur.

Questions: 1. Can ... a certain quantity of spirit or alcohol extracted from grapes be added to wine [to be exported], especially sweet wines, for their preservation, so as to increase the alcoholic content up to around 17 or 18 percent, without their ceasing to be matter suitable for the holy sacrifice of the Mass? 3313

2. For the accomplishment of the holy sacrifice of the Mass, is it permitted to use wine obtained from unfermented juice, which prior to the wine’s fermentation was condensed by means of evaporation over fire?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on August 7): To 1: Provided that ... the extracted spirit was from the fruit of the vine and the quantity of alcohol that must be added together with that which the wine naturally contains does not exceed a proportion of 17 or 18 percent and the mixture takes place when the so-called tumultuous fermentation has begun to subside, there is no objection to using this same wine in the sacrifice of the Mass.

To 2: It is permitted provided that this type of boiling down does not in any way exclude alcoholic fermentation and the same fermentation can be and is in fact obtained naturally.

3315–3319: Apostolic Letter Apostolicae curae et caritatis, September 13, 1896

In the Anglican Church, the Ordinale of Edward VI, which had been initially introduced in 1550–1552 and abolished during the time of the Catholic Mary [Tudor], was in 1559 considered definitive for ecclesiastical ordinations. Because of assertions on the Eucharist, above all concerning the sacrificial nature of the Mass, Anglican ordinations according to this Ordinale were very early on not recognized by Rome: cf. Julius III, letter to Cardinal Pole, March 8, 1554; Paul IV, letters of January 20 and October 30, 1555. The Holy Office examined the question in 1685, 1704, and 1875. Books defending the validity of Anglican ordinations were forbidden: cf. Benedict XIII, decree of June 25, 1728 [BullTau 22:665], against two works of an anonymous author, namely, Pierre François le Courayer, which were published in 1723 and 1726 in “Brussels” [actually in Nancy]. Anglican priests who converted to the Catholic Church were ordained again into holy orders, and not conditionally. Toward the end of the nineteenth century, Lord Halifax, Abbé Portal, Gasparri, and Duchesne argued for the possible validity of Anglican ordinations. Leo XIII, after an examination by a papal commission, resolved the question with this letter. Cf. also his letter Religioni apud Anglos to the archbishop of Paris, November 5, 1896 (ASS 29 [1896/1897]: 664f. / Acta [Rome] 16:305f.).

Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 198–202 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 16:267–73 / Brugge 6:204–8.

Anglican Ordinations

In ritu cuiuslibet sacramenti conficiendi et administrandi iure discernunt inter partem ceremoniam et partem essentialem, quae materia et forma appellari consuevit. Omnesque norunt, sacramenta novae Legis utpote signa sensibilia atque gratiae invisibilis efficientia, debere gratiam et significare quam efficiunt, et efficere quam significant [cf. *1310, 1606]. Quae significatio, etsi in toto ritu essentiali, in materia scilicet et forma, haberi debet, praecipue tamen ad formam pertinet; cum materia sit pars per se non determinata, quae per illam determinetur. Idque in sacramento ordinis manifestus apparet, cuius conferendi materia, quatenus hoc loco se dat considerandam, est manuum impositio; quae quidem nihil definitum per se significat, et aequae ad quosdam ordines, aequae ad confirmationem usurpatur.

In the rite of confecting and administering any sacrament, one rightly distinguishes between the 3315

3316 Iamvero verba, quae ad proximam usque aetatem habentur passim ab Anglicanis tamquam forma propria ordinationis presbyteralis, videlicet “Accipe Spiritum Sanctum”, minime sane significant definite ordinem sacerdotii vel eius gratiam, et potestatem, quae praecipue est potestas “consecrandi et offerendi verum corpus et sanguinem Domini” [*1771], eo sacrificio, quod non est “nuda commemoratio sacrificii in cruce peracti” [*1753]. Forma huiusmodi aucta quidem est postea iis verbis: ad officium et opus presbyteri; sed hoc potius convincit, Anglicanos vidisse ipsos, primam eam formam fuisse mancā neque idoneam rei. Eadem vero adiectio, si forte quidem legitimam significationem apponere formae posset, serius est inducta, elapso iam saeculo post receptum Ordinale Edwardianum: cum propterea, hierarchia extincta, potestas ordinandi iam nulla esset. . . .

3317 De consecratione episcopali similiter est. Nam formulae “Accipe Spiritum Sanctum” non modo serius annexa sunt verba “ad officium et opus episcopi”, sed etiam de iisdem, ut mox dicemus, iudicandum aliter est quam in ritu catholico. Neque rei proficit quidquam advocasse praefationis precem Omnipotens Deus: cum ea pariter deminuta sit verbis, quae summum sacerdotium declarent.

Sane nihil huc attinet explorare, utrum episcopatus complementum sit sacerdotii, an ordo ab illo distinctus: aut collatus, ut aiunt, per saltum, scilicet homini non sacerdoti, utrum effectum habeat necne. At ipse procul dubio, ex institutione Christi, ad sacramentum ordinis verissime pertinet, atque est praecellenti gradu sacerdotium; quod nimirum et voce sanctorum Patrum et rituali nostra consuetudine summum sacerdotium, sacri ministerii summa nuncupatur.

ceremonial part and the essential part, usually called matter and form. All know that the sacraments of the New Law, inasmuch as they are sensible and efficacious signs of invisible grace, must both signify the grace that they effect and effect the grace that they signify [cf. *1310, 1606]. Even if this signification must be found in the whole essential rite, namely, in the matter and form, nevertheless, it pertains in a special way to the form, since the matter is the part not determined by itself but determined by the form. And this appears even more clearly in the sacrament of orders, the matter of which, as far as it can be considered in this case, is the imposition of hands, which, indeed, by itself signifies nothing definite, and it is used equally for certain orders and also for confirmation.

The words that, until quite recent times, have been generally held by Anglicans to be the proper form of priestly ordination: “Receive the Holy Spirit”, certainly do not signify definitely the order of the priesthood or its grace and power, which is preeminently the power “to consecrate and offer the true Body and Blood of the Lord” [*1771] in that sacrifice which is no “mere commemoration of the sacrifice accomplished on the Cross” [*1753]. It is true that this form was subsequently amplified by the addition of the words: “for the office and work of a priest”; but this proves, rather than anything else, that the Anglicans themselves had recognized that the first form had been defective and inadequate. Even if this addition could have lent the form a legitimate signification, it was made too late, when a century had already elapsed since the adoption of the Edwardine Ordinale and when, consequently, with the hierarchy now extinct, the power of ordaining no longer existed. . . .

The same is true in regard to episcopal consecration. For to the formula “Receive the Holy Spirit” not only were the words “for the office and work of a bishop” added later, but also, as regards these very words, as we shall soon see, a different sense is to be understood than in the Catholic rite. Nor is it any advantage in the matter to bring up the prayer of the preface, Almighty God, since this likewise has been stripped of the words that bespeak the height of the priesthood.

It is, of course, not relevant to examine here whether the episcopate is a complement of the priesthood or an order distinct from it; or whether when conferred, as they say, per saltum, that is, on a man who is not a priest, it has its effect or not. But the episcopate without doubt, from the institution of Christ, most truly pertains to the sacrament of orders and is a priesthood of a preeminent grade, that which in the words of the Fathers and in the custom of our ritual is, of course, called the height of the priesthood, the fullness of holy ministry.

Inde fit ut, quoniam sacramentum ordinis verumque Christi sacerdotium a ritu Anglicano penitus extrusum est, atque adeo in consecratione episcopali eiusdem ritus nullo modo sacerdotium confertur, nullo item modo episcopatus vere ac iure possit conferri: eoque id magis, quia in primis episcopatus muniis illud scilicet est, ministros ordinandi in sanctam Eucharistiam et sacrificium.

Ad rectam vero plenamque Ordinalis anglicani aestimationem, praeter ista per aliquas eius partes notata, nihil profecto tam valet quam si probe aestimetur quibus adiunctis rerum conditum sit et publice constitutum: Longum est singula persequi, neque est necessarium: eius namque aetatis memoria satis diserte loquitur, cuius animi essent in Ecclesiam catholicam auctores Ordinalis, quos adsciverint fautores ab heterodoxis sectis, quod demum consilia sua referrent.

Nimis enimvero scientes quae necessitudo inter fidem et cultum, inter legem credendi et legem supplicandi intercedat, liturgiae ordinem, specie quidem redintegrandae eius formae primaevae, ad errores Novatorum multis modis deformarunt. Quamobrem toto Ordinali non modo nulla est aperta mentio sacrificii, consecrationis, sacerdotii potestatisque consecrandi et sacrificium offerendi; sed immo omnia huiusmodi rerum vestigia, quae superessent in precationibus ritus catholici non plane reiectis, sublata et deleta sunt de industria, quod supra attigimus.

Ita per se apparet nativa Ordinalis indoles ac spiritus, uti loquuntur. Hinc vero ab origine ducto vitio, si valere ad usum ordinationum minime potuit, nequaquam decursu aetatum, cum tale ipsum permanserit, futurum fuit ut valeret. Atque ii egerunt frustra qui inde a temporibus Caroli I conati sunt admittere aliquid sacrificii et sacerdotii, nonnulla dein ad Ordinale facta accessione,¹ frustra que similiter contendit pars ea Anglicanorum non ita magna, recentiore tempore coalita, quae arbitratu posse idem Ordinale ad sanam rectamque sententiam intelligi et deduci.

Vana, inquit, fuere et sunt huiusmodi conata: idque hac etiam de causa, quod, si qua quidem verba, in Ordinali anglicano ut nunc est, porrigant se in ambiguum,

Therefore, it happens that since the sacrament of orders and the true priesthood of Christ have been utterly thrust out of the Anglican rite, and so in the consecration of a bishop of this same rite the priesthood is by no means conferred, likewise, by no means can the episcopacy be truly and validly conferred; and this is all the more true because among the first duties of the episcopacy is this, namely, of ordaining ministers for the Holy Eucharist and the sacrifice.

For the full and accurate understanding of the Anglican Ordinale, besides what We have noted as to some of its parts, there is nothing more pertinent than to consider carefully the circumstances under which it was composed and publicly authorized. It would be tedious to enter into details, nor is it necessary to do so, as the history of that time is sufficiently clear as to the animus of the authors of the Ordinale against the Catholic Church, as to the abettors whom they associated with themselves from the heterodox sects, and as to the end they had in view. 3317a

Being fully cognisant of the necessary connection between faith and worship, between the law of believing and the law of praying, under a pretext of returning to the primitive form, they corrupted the liturgical order in many ways to suit the errors of the innovators. For this reason, in the whole Ordinale not only is there no clear mention of the sacrifice, the consecration, the priesthood, or the power of consecrating and offering the sacrifice, but, as We have just stated, every trace of these things, which had been in such prayers of the Catholic rite as they had not entirely rejected, was deliberately removed and struck out.

In this way the native character—or spirit, as it is called—of the Ordinale clearly manifests itself. Hence if contaminated in its origin, it was wholly insufficient to confer orders, and it was impossible that in the course of time it could become sufficient, since no change had taken place. And those who, from the time of Charles I, tried to admit something of the sacrifice and the priesthood, having thereupon made some addition to the Ordinale, have acted in vain.¹ In a similar manner, that not very large group of Anglicans recently formed contends in vain by judging that the same Ordinale can be understood and interpreted in a sense that is sound and proper. 3317b

Such efforts, We affirm, have been and are made in vain, and for this reason, that any words in the Anglican Ordinale, as it now is, that lend themselves to ambiguity ea tamen sumere sensum eundem nequeunt quem habent in ritu catholico. Nam semel novato ritu, ut vidimus, quo nempe negetur vel adulteretur sacramentum Ordinis, et a quo quaevis notio repudiata sit consecrationis et sacrificii, iam minime constat “Accipe Spiritum Sanctum”, qui Spiritus, cum gratia nimirum sacramenti, in animam infunditur: minimeque constant verba illa “ad officium et opus presbyteri” vel “episcopi” ac similia, quae restant nomina sine re quam instituit Christus....

¹ *3317b In the years 1661–1662 certain adjustments in the rite were introduced; thus, the following words were added: “for the office and work of the priest” or “bishop”.

- 3318 Cum hoc igitur intimo formae defectu coniunctus est defectus intentionis, quam aequae necessario postulat, ut sit sacramentum. De mente vel intentione, utpote quae per se quiddam est interius, Ecclesia non iudicat: at quatenus extra proditur, iudicare de ea debet. Iamvero cum quis ad sacramentum conficiendum et conferendum materiam formamque debitam serio ac rite adhibuit, eo ipso censetur id nimirum facere intendisse quod facit Ecclesia. Quo sane principio innititur doctrina quae tenet, esse vere sacramentum vel illud quod ministerio hominis haeretici aut non baptizati, dummodo ritu catholico, conferatur.

Contra, si ritus immutetur, eo manifesto consilio, ut alius inducatur ab Ecclesia non receptus, utque id repellatur quod facit Ecclesia et quod ex institutione Christi ad naturam attinet sacramenti, tunc palam est, non solum necessariam sacramento intentionem deesse, sed intentionem immo haberi sacramento adversam et repugnantem.

- 3319 ... [Consultores S. Officii] ad unum consensere, propositam causam iam pridem ab Apostolica Sede plene fuisse et cognitam et iudicatam.... [Verum optimum duximus] eadem rem auctoritate Nostra rursus declarari....

Itaque ... [Pontificum praedecessorum decreta] confirmantes ac veluti renovantes, auctoritate Nostra, motu proprio, certa scientia pronuntiamus et declaramus, ordinationes ritu Anglicano actas irritas prorsus fuisse et esse omninoque nullas.

cannot be taken in the same sense as they possess in the Catholic rite. For once a new rite has been initiated in which, as we have seen, the sacrament of orders is adulterated or denied, and from which all idea of consecration and sacrifice has been rejected, the formula “Receive the Holy Spirit” no longer holds good; because the Spirit is infused into the soul with the grace of the sacrament, and the words, “for the office and work of a priest or bishop”, and the like, no longer hold good but remain as words without the reality that Christ instituted....

With this inherent defect of form is joined the defect of intention, which is equally essential to the sacrament. The Church does not judge about the mind or intention insofar as it is something by its nature internal; but insofar as it is manifested externally, she is bound to judge concerning it. When anyone has rightly and seriously made use of the due form and the matter requisite for effecting or conferring the sacrament, he is considered by the very fact to do what the Church does. On this principle rests the doctrine that a sacrament is truly conferred by the ministry of one who is a heretic or unbaptized, provided the Catholic rite be employed.

On the other hand, if the rite be changed, with the manifest intention of introducing another rite not approved by the Church and of rejecting what the Church does and what by the institution of Christ belongs to the nature of the sacrament, then it is clear that not only is the necessary intention wanting to the sacrament, but that the intention is adverse to and destructive of the sacrament.

... [The consultors of the Holy Office] have unanimously agreed that the facts of the case before them had long since been fully known and judged by the Apostolic See.... [We, however, judged it best] to pronounce on this matter again in virtue of Our authority....

Therefore,... confirming and, as it were, renewing [the decrees of previous pontiffs], by virtue of Our authority, of Our own initiative, and with sure knowledge, We proclaim and declare that the ordinations carried out according to the Anglican rite have been and are absolutely null and utterly void.

3320–3321: Encyclical Fidentem piumque, September 20, 1896

Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 206 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 16:282f. / Brugge 6:213f.

The Blessed Virgin Mary as Mediatrix of Grace

- 3320 Certissime quidem perfecti Conciliatoris nomen et partes alii nulli conveniunt quam Christo, quippe qui unus, homo idem et Deus, humanum genus summo Patri in gratiam restituerit: “Unus mediator Dei et hominum, homo Christus Iesus ...” [1 Tim 2:5s]. At vero si “nihil prohibet”, ut docet Angelicus, “aliquos alios secundum Undoubtedly the name and attributes of the absolute Mediator belong to no other than to Christ, for he alone, both man and God, restored the human race to the favor of the heavenly Father: “one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus ...” [1 Tim 2:5]. But if, as the Angelic Doctor teaches, “there is no reason why certain quid dici mediatores inter Deum et homines, prout scilicet cooperantur ad unionem hominis cum Deo dispositive et ministerialiter”,¹ cuiusmodi sunt Angeli Sanctique caelites, prophetae et utriusque Testamenti sacerdotes, profecto eiusdem gloriae decus Virgini excelsae cumulatus convenit.

Nemo etenim unus cogitari quidem potest, qui reconciliandis Deo hominibus parem atque illa operam vel umquam contulerit vel aliquando sit collaturus. Nempe ipsa ad homines in sempiternum ruentes exitium Servatorem adduxit, iam tum scilicet cum pacifici sacramenti nuntium ab Angelo in terras allatum admirabili assensu “loco totius humanae naturae”¹ excepit; ipsa est, “de qua natus est Iesus” [Mt 1:16], vera scilicet eius mater, ob eamque causam digna et peraccepta ad Mediatorem mediatrix.

3323: Response of the Holy Office, March 17, 1897

Cf. the discourse of Pius XII to the Fourth International Congress of Catholic Physicians, September 29, 1949 (*3873a).
Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 704 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:354, no. 1964.

Artificial Insemination

Qu.: An adhiberi possit artificialis mulieris fecundatio?
Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 26. Mart.):
Non licere.
Question: Can artificial insemination of a woman be others should not be called in a certain way mediators between God and man, that is to say, insofar as they cooperate by predisposing and ministering in the union of man with God”,¹ among whom are the angels and saints, the prophets and priests of both Testaments, then, indeed, the honor of this glory befits the Blessed Virgin in a still higher degree.

For no single individual can even be imagined who has ever contributed or ever will contribute so much toward reconciling man with God. She offered to mankind, hastening to eternal ruin, a Savior, at that moment when she received the announcement of the mystery of peace brought to this earth by the angel, with that admirable act of consent “in the name of the whole human race”.¹ She it is “of whom Jesus was born” [Mt 1:16]. She is therefore truly his mother and, for this reason, a worthy and most acceptable mediatrix to the Mediator.

3321

3323 employed?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on March 26): It is not permitted.

3325–3331: Encyclical Divinum illud munus, May 9, 1897

Ed.: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 646–53 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 17:128–40.

The Trinity

Periculum [errandi de Trinitate] ... ex eo fit, ne in fide aut in cultu vel divinae inter se Personae confundantur vel unica in ipsis natura separetur; ... Quare Innocentius XII, decessor Noster, sollemnia quaedam honori Patris propria postulantis omnino negavit. Quod si singula Incarnati Verbi mysteria certis diebus festis celebrantur, non tamen proprio ullo festo celebratur Verbum secundum divinam tantum naturam: atque ipsa etiam Pentecostes sollemnia non ideo inducta antiquitus sunt, ut Spiritus Sanctus per se simpliciter honoraretur, sed ut eiusdem recoleretur adventus sive externa missio. Quae quidem omnia sapienti consilio sancita sunt, ne quis forte a distinguendis Personis ad divinam essentiam distinguendam prolaberetur. Quin etiam Ecclesia, ut in fidei integritate filios contineret, sanctissimae Trinitatis festum instituit, quod Iohannes XXII [a. 1331] deinde iussit ubique agendum.... Multaque rem confirmant.

The danger [of erring in regard to the Trinity] ... is lest the Divine Persons be confounded one with the other in faith or worship, or lest the one nature in them be separated.... Therefore, Our predecessor Innocent XII absolutely refused the petition of those who desired a special festival in honor of God the Father. For, although the separate mysteries connected with the Incarnate Word are celebrated on certain fixed days, yet there is no special feast on which the Word is honored according to his Divine Nature alone. And even the feast of Pentecost was instituted in the earliest times, not simply to honor the Holy Spirit in himself, but to commemorate his coming, or his external mission. And all this has been wisely ordained, lest from distinguishing the Persons men should be led to distinguish the Divine Essence. Moreover, the Church, in order to preserve in her children the purity of faith, instituted the feast of the Most Holy

3325

*3320 ¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 26, a. 1 (Editio Leonina 11:285b).

*3321 ¹ Ibid., III, q. 30, a. 1 (Editio Leonina 11:315b).

Cultus enim, qui sanctis Caelitibus atque Angelis, qui Virgini Deiparae, qui Christo tribuitur, is demum in Trinitatem ipsam redundat et desinit. . . .

3326 Aptissimeque Ecclesia ea divinitatis opera, in quibus potentia excellit, tribuere Patri, ea, in quibus excellit sapientia, tribuere Filio, ea, in quibus excellit amor, Spiritui Sancto tribuere consuevit. Non quod perfectiones cunctae atque opera extrinsecus edita Personis divinis communia non sint; sunt enim “indivisa opera Trinitatis, sicut et indivisa est Trinitatis essentia”,¹ quia, uti tres Personae divinae “inseparabiles sunt, ita inseparabiliter operantur”;² verum quod ex comparatione quadam et propemodum affinitate, quae inter opera ipsa et Personarum proprietates intercedit, ea alteri potius quam alteris addicuntur sive, ut aiunt, appropriantur: “Sicut similitudine vestigii vel imaginis in creaturis inventa, utimur ad manifestationem divinarum Personarum, ita et essentialibus attributis; et haec manifestatio Personarum per essentialia attributa appropriatio dicitur.”³

Hoc modo Pater, qui est “principium totius Deitatis”,⁴ idem causa est effectrix universitatis rerum et Incarnationis Verbi et sanctificationis animorum, ex ipso sunt omnia: ex ipso, propter Patrem. Filius autem, Verbum Imago Dei, idem est causa exemplaris, unde res omnes formam et pulchritudinem, ordinem et concentum imitantur; qui exstitit nobis via, veritas, vita, hominis cum Deo reconciliator, per ipsum sunt omnia: per ipsum, propter Filium. Spiritus vero Sanctus idem est omnium rerum causa ultima, eo quia sicut in fine suo voluntas lateque omnia conquiescunt, non aliter ille, qui divina bonitas est ac Patris ipsa Filiique inter se caritas, arcana ea opera de salute hominum . . . complet et perficit, in ipso sunt omnia: in ipso, propter Spiritum Sanctum.

Trinity, which John XXII afterward extended to the Universal Church [A.D. 1331]. . . . Many facts confirm its truths. The worship paid to the saints and angels, to the Mother of God, and to Christ himself finally redounds to the honor of the Blessed Trinity. . . .

The Church is accustomed most fittingly to attribute to the Father those works of the Divinity in which power excels, to the Son those in which wisdom excels, and those in which love excels to the Holy Spirit. Not that all perfections and external operations are not common to the Divine Persons; for “the operations of the Trinity are indivisible, even as the essence of the Trinity is indivisible”,¹ because as the three Divine Persons “are inseparable, so do they act inseparably”.² But by a certain comparison and a kind of affinity between the operations and the properties of the Persons, these operations are attributed or, as it is said, “appropriated” to one Person rather than to the others. “Just as we make use of the traces of similarity or likeness that we find in creatures for the manifestation of the Divine Persons, so do we use their essential attributes; and this manifestation of the Persons by their essential attributes is called appropriation.”³

In this manner the Father, who is “the principle of the whole Godhead”,⁴ is also the efficient cause of all things, of the Incarnation of the Word, and of the sanctification of souls; “of him are all things”: of him, referring to the Father. But the Son, the Word and Image of God, is also the exemplar cause, whence all creatures borrow their form and beauty, their order and harmony. He is for us the Way, the Truth, and the Life; the Reconciler of man with God. “By him are all things”: by him, referring to the Son. The Holy Spirit is the ultimate cause of all things, since, as the will and all other things finally rest in their end, so he, who is the Divine Goodness and the mutual Love of the Father and Son, completes and perfects, by his strong yet gentle power, the secret work of man’s eternal salvation. . . . “In him are all things”: in him, referring to the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit in Relation to the Incarnate Word

3327 Sane in operibus Dei externis illud eximie praestat Incarnati Verbi mysterium, in quo divinarum perfectionum sic enitet lux ut quidquam supra ne cogitari quidem possit. . . . Hoc igitur tantum opus, etsi totius Trinitatis fuit, attamen Spiritui Sancto tamquam proprium adscribitur: ita ut de Virgine sic Evangelia commemorant: “Inventa est in utero habens de Spiritu

Among the external operations of God, the highest of all is the mystery of the Incarnation of the Word, in which the splendor of the divine perfections shines forth so brightly that nothing more sublime can even be imagined. . . . Now this work, although belonging to the whole Trinity, is still appropriated especially to the Holy Spirit, so that the Gospels thus speak of the Blessed

*3326¹ Cf. Augustine, De trinitate I, 4, no. 7, and 5, no. 8 (W.J. Mountain and F. Glorie: CpChL 50 [1968]: 35f. / PL 42:824).

² Ibid. I, 4, no. 7 (CpChL 50:36_{23f} / PL 42:824C).

³ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 39, a. 7 (Editio Leonina 4:407ab).

⁴ Augustine, De trinitate IV, 20, no. 29 (CpChL 50:200₁₂₂ / PL 42:908D).

Sancto”, et “Quod in ea natum est, de Spiritu Sancto est” [Mt 1:18, 20]. . . .

Divini autem Spiritus opera non solum conceptio Christi effecta est, sed eius quoque sanctificatio animae, quae unctio in sacris libris nominatur [Act 10:38]: atque adeo omnis actio “praesente spiritu peragebatur”¹ praecipueque sacrificium eius sui: “Per Spiritum Sanctum semetipsum obtulit immaculatum Deo” [Hbr 9:14].

Ista qui perpenderit, nihil erit ei mirum, quod charismata omnia almi Spiritus in animam Christi affluerint. . . . Itaque Spiritus Sancti et praesentia conspicua super Christum et virtute intima in anima eius duplex eiusdem Spiritus praesignificatur missio, ea nimirum, quae in Ecclesia manifesto patet, et ea, quae in animis iustorum secreto illapsu exercetur.

The Holy Spirit as the Soul of the Church

Ecclesia, quae iam concepta, ex latere ipso secundi Adami velut in cruce dormientis orta erat, sese in lucem hominum insigni modo primitus dedit die celeberrima Pentecostes. Ipsaque die beneficia sua Spiritus Sanctus in mystico Christi Corpore prodere coepit. . . .

Ita plane eveniebat illud extremum Christi ad Apostolos suos promissum de Spiritu Sancto mittendo, qui doctrinae, ipso afflante, traditae completurus ipse esset et quodammodo obsignaturus depositum: “. . . cum autem venerit ille Spiritus veritatis, docebit vos omnem veritatem” [Jo 16:12s]. . . . quam quidem veritatem impertit ac largitur Ecclesiae, auxilio praesentissimo providens, ut ipsa ne ulli unquam errori obnoxia sit, utque divinae doctrinae germina alere copiosius in dies possit et frugifera praestare ad populorum salutem. Et quoniam populorum salus, ad quam nata est Ecclesia, postulat, ut haec munus idem in perpetuitatem temporum persequatur, perennis idcirco vita atque virtus a Spiritu Sancto suppetit, quae Ecclesiam conservat augetque [citatur Jo 16:16s]. Ab ipso namque episcopi constituuntur, quorum ministerio non modo filii generantur, sed etiam patres, sacerdotes videlicet, ad eam regendam enutriendamque. . . . Utrique autem, episcopi et sacerdotes, insigni Spiritus munere id habent, ut peccata pro potestate deleant [citatur Jo 20:22s].

Porro Ecclesiam opus esse plane divinum, alio nullo argumento praeclarius constat quam charismatum, quibus undique illa ornatur splendore et gloria, auctore nimirum et datore Spiritu Sancto. Atque hoc affirmare sufficiat, Virgin: “(She) was found to be with child of the Holy Spirit”, and “that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit” [Mt 1:18, 20]. . . .

By the operation of the Holy Spirit, not only was the conception of Christ accomplished, but also the sanctification of his soul, which, in Holy Scripture, is called his “anointing” [Acts 10:38]. Wherefore all his actions were “performed in the Holy Spirit”,¹ and especially the sacrifice of himself: “Christ, . . . through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without blemish to God” [Heb 9:14].

Considering this, no one can be surprised that all the gifts of the Holy Spirit inundated the soul of Christ. . . . Therefore, by the conspicuous apparition of the Holy Spirit over Christ and by his invisible power in his soul, the twofold mission of the Spirit is foreshadowed, namely, his outward and visible mission in the Church and his secret indwelling in the souls of the just.

The Church that, already conceived, came forth from the side of the second Adam in his sleep on the Cross first showed herself before the eyes of men on the great day of Pentecost. On that day the Holy Spirit began to manifest his gifts in the Mystical Body of Christ. . . .

Thus was clearly accomplished that last promise of Christ to his apostles of sending the Holy Spirit, who was to complete and, as it were, to seal the deposit of doctrine committed to them under his inspiration. “. . . When the Spirit of Truth comes, he will guide you into all the truth” [Jn 16:12–13]. . . . This truth he communicates to his Church, guarding her by his all-powerful help from ever falling into error and aiding her to foster daily more and more the seeds of divine doctrine and to make them fruitful for the welfare of the peoples. And since the welfare of the peoples, for which the Church was established, absolutely requires that this office should be continued for all time, the Holy Spirit perpetually supplies life and strength to preserve and increase the Church [Jn 16:16f. is cited]. By him the bishops are constituted, and by their ministry are multiplied not only the children, but also the fathers—that is to say, the priests—to rule and feed. . . . And both bishops and priests, by the miraculous gift of the Spirit, have the power of absolving sins [Jn 20:22f. is cited].

That the Church is a divine institution is most clearly proved by the splendor and glory of those gifts and graces with which she is adorned and whose author and giver is the Holy Spirit. Let it suffice to state that, as Christ is the *3327 ¹ Basil the Great, De Spiritu Sancto 16, § 39 (SC 17 [Paris, 1947]: 181 / PG 32:139C [Lat.]; 140C [Gr.]).

3328

quod cum Christus Caput sit Ecclesiae, Spiritus Sanctus sit eius Anima: “Quod est in corpore nostro anima, id est Spiritus Sanctus in Corpore Christi quod est Ecclesia.”¹

Head of the Church, so is the Holy Spirit her soul. “What the soul is in our body, that is the Holy Spirit in Christ’s body, the Church.”¹

The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the Just 3329 Certum quidem est, in ipsis etiam hominibus iustis qui ante Christum fuerunt, insedisse per gratiam Spiritum Sanctum, quemadmodum de prophetis, de Zacharia, de Ioanne Baptista, de Simeone et Anna scriptum accepimus; quippe in Pentecoste non ita se Spiritus Sanctus tribuit, “ut tunc primum esse Sanctorum inhabitator inciperet, sed ut copiosius inundaret, cumulans sua dona, non inchoans, nec ideo novus opere, quia ditior largitate”.¹ Verum, si et illi in filiis Dei numerabantur, condicione tamen perinde erant ac servi, quia etiam filius “nihil differt a servo”, quousque est “sub tutoribus et actoribus” [Gal 4:1s]: ac, praeterquam quod iustitia in illis non erat nisi ex Christi meritis adventuri, communicatio Spiritus Sancti post Christum facta multo est copiosior, propemodum ut arram pretio vincit res pacta atque ut imagini longe praestat veritas....

It is indeed true that in those of the just who lived before Christ, the Holy Spirit resided by grace, as we read in the Scriptures concerning the prophets, Zechariah, John the Baptist, Simeon, and Anna; so that on Pentecost the Holy Spirit did not communicate himself in such a way “as then for the first time to begin to dwell in the saints, but by pouring himself forth more abundantly; crowning, not beginning, his gifts; not commencing a new work, but giving more abundantly”.¹ But if they also were numbered among the children of God, they were in a state like that of servants, for “as long as the heir is a child, he differs not from a servant, but is under tutors and governors” [Gal 4:1–2]. Moreover, not only was their justice derived from the merits of Christ who was to come, but the communication of the Holy Spirit after Christ was much more abundant, just as the price surpasses in value the earnest and the reality excels the image....

3330 Regenerationis et renovationis initia sunt homini per baptisma; in quo sacramento ... illabitur primum Spiritus Sanctus eamque [animam] similem sibi facit. “Quod natum est ex Spiritu, spiritus est” [Io 3:6]. Uberiusque per sacram confirmationem ad constantiam et robur christianae vitae sese dono dat idem Spiritus.... Ipse non modo affert nobis divina munera, sed eorumdem est auctor, atque etiam munus ipse est supremum; qui a mutuo Patris Filiique amore procedens, iure habetur et nuncupatur “altissimi donum Dei”.

The beginnings of this regeneration and renovation of man are by baptism. In this sacrament ... the Holy Spirit enters in [the soul] for the first time and makes it like to himself. “That which is born of the Spirit is spirit” [Jn 3:6]. The same Spirit gives himself more abundantly in confirmation, strengthening and confirming Christian life.... For he not only brings to us his divine gifts, but is the Author of them and is himself the supreme Gift, who, proceeding from the mutual love of the Father and the Son, is justly believed to be and is called “Gift of God most High”.

Cuius doni natura et vis quo illustrius pateat, revocare oportet ea quae in divinis Litteris tradita sacri doctores explicaverunt, Deum videlicet adesse rebus omnibus in eisque esse “per potentiam, in quantum omnia eius potestati subduntur; per praesentiam, in quantum omnia nuda sunt et aperta oculis eius; per essentiam, in quantum adest omnibus ut causa essendi”.¹ At vero in homine est Deus non tantummodo ut in rebus, sed eo amplius cognoscitur ab ipso et diligitur; cum vel duce natura bonum sponte amemus, cupiamus, conquiramus. Praeterea Deus ex gratia insidet animae iustae tamquam in templo, modo penitus intimo et singulari; ex quo etiam sequitur ea necessitudo caritatis, qua Deo adhaeret

To show the nature and efficacy of this gift, it is well to recall the explanation given by the Doctors of the Church of the words of Holy Scripture. They say that God is present and exists in all things, “by his power, insofar as all things are subject to his power; by his presence, inasmuch as all things are naked and open to his eyes; by his essence, inasmuch as he is present to all as the cause of their being”.¹ But God is in man, not only as in inanimate things, but because he is more fully known and loved by him, since even by nature we spontaneously love, desire, and seek after the good. Moreover, God by grace resides in the just soul as in a temple, in a most intimate and singular manner. From anima coniunctissime, plus quam amico amicus possit benevolenti maxime et dilecto, eoque plene suaviterque fruitur.

*3328¹ Augustine, sermon 267 (formerly 186) for Pentecost I, 4, no. 4 (PL 38:1231D).

*3329¹ Leo I the Great, sermon 77 (formerly 75) on Pentecost III, 1 (PL 54:412A).

*3330¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 8, a. 3 (Editio Leonina 4:87b).

Haec autem mira coniunctio, quae suo nomine inhabitatio dicitur, condicione tantum seu statu ab ea discrepans, qua caelites Deus beando complectitur, tametsi verissime efficitur praesenti totius Trinitatis numine, “ad eum veniemus et mansionem apud eum faciemus” [Io 14:23], attamen de Spiritu Sancto tamquam peculiaris praedicatur. Siquidem divinae et potentiae et sapientiae vel in homine improbo apparent vestigia; caritatis, quae propria Spiritus veluti nota est, alius nemo nisi iustus est particeps.

this proceeds that union of affection by which the soul adheres most closely to God, more so than the friend is united to his most loving and beloved friend, and enjoys God in all fullness and sweetness.

Now this wonderful union, which is properly called 3331 “indwelling”, differing only in degree or state from that with which God beatifies the saints in heaven, although it is most certainly produced by the presence of the whole Blessed Trinity—“We will come to him and make our abode with him” [Jn 14:23—nevertheless is attributed in a special manner to the Holy Spirit. For, while traces of divine power and wisdom appear even in the wicked man, charity, which, as it were, is the special mark of the Holy Spirit, is shared in only by the just.

3333–3335: Response of the Holy Office, March 30, 1898

Ed.: ASS 30 (1897/1898): 699–701 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:365f., no. 1993.

The Faith and Intention Required for Baptism

Qu.: Utrum missionarius conferre possit baptismum in articulo mortis mahumedano adulto, qui in suis erroribus supponitur in bona fide:

1. Si habeat adhuc plenam advertentiam, tantum illum adhortando ad dolorem et ad confidentiam, minime loquendo de nostris mysteriis, ex timore, ut ipsis non crediturus sit.

2. Quaecumque habeat advertentiam, nihil ei dicendo, cum ex una parte supponitur illi non deesse contritionem, ex alia vero prudens non esse loqui cum eo de nostris mysteriis.

3. Si iam advertentiam amiserit, nihil prorsus ei dicendo.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 1. Apr.): Ad 1 et 2. Negative, id est non licere huiusmodi mahumedanis . . . sive absolute sive condionate administrare baptismum; et dentur decreta S. Officii ad episcopum Quebecensem sub die 25. Ian. et 10. Maii 1703 et Instructio S. Officii, ad Vicarium Apostolicum Tche-Kiang 1. Aug. 1860 [*2380–2382, 2835–2839].

Ad 3: De mahumedanis moribundis et sensibus iam destitutis respondendum ut in decreto S. Officii 18. Sept. 1850 ad episcopum Perthensem; id est: “Si antea dederint signa velle baptizari, vel in praesenti statu aut nutu aut alio modo eandem dispositionem ostenderint, baptizari posse sub condicione, quatenus tamen missionarius, cunctis rerum adiunctis inspectis, ita prudenter iudicaverit.”

Questions: Can a missionary confer baptism on an 3333 adult Mohammedan [Muslim] at the point of death, who is presupposed to be in good faith in his errors:

1. If he still has his full faculties, only by exhorting him to sorrow (for his sins) and to confidence, not by speaking about our mysteries, for fear that he will not believe them.

2. Whatever of his faculties he has, by saying nothing 3334 to him, since on the one hand, he is not supposed to be wanting in contrition and, on the other, it is supposed to be imprudent to speak with him about our mysteries.

3. If now he has lost his faculties, by saying nothing 3335 further to him.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on April 1): To 1 and 2: No, i.e., it is not permitted to administer baptism . . . either absolutely or conditionally to such Mohammedans; and the decrees of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Quebec of January 25 and May 10, 1703 [*2380–2382], and the Instruction of the Holy Office to the Apostolic Vicar of Zhejiang of August 1, 1860 [*2835–2839] are given.

To 3: In regard to Mohammedans who are dying and are already deprived of their senses, we must respond in the same manner as the decree of the Holy Office of September 18, 1850, to the Bishop of Perth, that is: “If previously they have given some signs that they wish to be baptized or have in their present condition indicated with a nod or in some other way the same disposition, they can be baptized conditionally; provided, however, that the missionary, taking note of all the circumstances, has prudently judged so.”

3336–3338: Response of the Holy Office to the Bishop of Sinaloa (Mexico), May 4, 1898

Ed.: ASS 30 (1897/1898): 703f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:366f., no. 1997 / AnE 6 (1898): 277ab.

Diverse Modes of Extracting a Fetus

3336 Qu.: 1. Eritne licita partus acceleratio, quoties ex mulieris arctitudine impossibilis evaderet fetus egressio suo naturali tempore?

3337 2. Et si mulieris arctitudo talis sit, ut neque partus praematurus possibilis censeatur, licebitne abortum provocare aut caesaream suo tempore perficere operationem?

3338 3. Estne licita laparotomia, quando agitur de praegnatione extra-uterina, seu de ectopicis conceptibus?
Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 6. Maii): Ad 1. Partus accelerationem per se illicitam non esse, dummodo perficiatur iustis de causis et eo tempore ac modis, quibus ex ordinariis contingentibus matris et fetus vitae consulatur.

Ad 2. Quoad primam partem: negative, iuxta decretum feria IV, 24. Iulii 1895, de abortus illiciteate. —Ad secundam vero quod spectat: nihil ob stare, quominus mulier, de qua agitur, caesareae operationi suo tempore subiciatur.

Ad 3. Necessitate cogente, licitam esse laparotomiam ad extrahendos e sinu matris ectopicos conceptus, dummodo et fetus et matris vitae, quantum fieri potest, serio et opportune provideatur.

Questions: 1. Will an acceleration of birth be permitted when the coming forth of the child at its natural time is impossible because of the narrowness of the woman's ⟨pelvis⟩?

2. And if the narrowness of the woman's ⟨pelvis⟩ is such that even a premature birth is not considered possible, will it be permitted to induce an abortion or perform a Caesarean operation at the ⟨appropriate⟩ time?

3. Is a laparotomy permitted in the case of an extrauterine pregnancy or an ectopic conception?

Responses (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on May 6): To 1: The acceleration of the birth in itself is not illicit, provided it is performed for just reasons and at such a time and in such a manner that, under ordinary circumstances, care is taken for the life of the mother and the offspring.

To 2: With regard to the first part, no, according to the decree of Wednesday, July 24, 1895, on the illicitness of abortion. —With regard to the second part, nothing stands in the way of the woman whom this concerns from submitting to a Caesarian operation at the appropriate time.

To 3: In the case of strict necessity, it is permitted to have a laparotomy to extract the ectopic conception from the womb of the mother, provided that, insofar as possible, care is shown for the life of both the mother and the fetus in a serious and appropriate manner.

3339: Encyclical Caritatis studium to the Bishops of Scotland, July 25, 1898

In this encyclical, Leo XIII presents a defense of the Church as mediator of spiritual goods. He refutes the doctrine of the Scottish Reformed, who rejected the sacrificial character of the Mass and maintained that communion has only a commemorative significance. Cf. the Confessio fidei et doctrinae per Ecclesiam Reformatam [Presbyterian] Scotiae professae, art. 22: ed. by E. F. K. Müller, Bekennnisschriften der reformatorischen Kirche [Leipzig, 1903], 261^{11–18}; cf. also *1753.

Ed.: Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 18:1106f. / ASS 31 (1898/1899): 11f.

The Identity of the Sacrifice of the Cross with That of the Mass

3339 Necessitatem ... sacrificii vis ipsa et natura religionis continet. ... Remotisque sacrificiis nulla nec esse nec cogitari religio potest: Lege veteri non est lex inferior Evangelii; immo multo praestantior, quia id cumulate perfecit, quod illa inchoarat. Iamvero sacrificium in Cruce factum praesignificabant sacrificia in Testamento veteri usitata, multo ante quam Christus nasceretur: post eius ascensum in caelum idem illud sacrificium sacrificio eucharistico continuatur. Itaque vehementer errant, qui hoc perinde respuunt, ac si veritatem virtutemque sacrificii deminuat, quod Christus, cruci suffixus, fecit;

The very essence and nature of religion implies the necessity ... of sacrifice. ... And if sacrifices are eliminated, religion can neither exist nor even be conceived. The law of the Gospel is not inferior to the Old Law; on the contrary, it is much more excellent since it abundantly completes what ⟨the Old Law⟩ had begun. Already, long before Christ was born, the sacrifices used in the Old Testament prefigured the sacrifice accomplished on the Cross. After the Ascension ⟨Christ⟩ to heaven, this same sacrifice is continued by the eucharistic sacrifice. For this reason, they err exceedingly “semel oblatum ad multorum exhaurienda peccata” [Hbr 9:28].

Omnino perfecta atque absoluta illa expiatio mortalium fuit; nec ullo modo altera, sed ipsa illa in sacrificio eucharistico inest. Quoniam enim sacrificalem ritum comitari in omne tempus religioni oportebat, divinissimum fuit Redemptoris consilium, ut sacrificium, semel in Cruce consummatum, perpetuum et perenne fieret. Huius autem ratio perpetuitatis inest in sacratissima Eucharistia, quae non similitudinem inanem memoriamve tantum rei affert, sed veritatem ipsam, quamquam specie dissimili, propterea huius sacrificii efficientia sive ad impetrandum sive ad expiandum ex morte Christi tota fluit.

who reject this (sacrifice) as if it diminished the truth and power of the sacrifice accomplished by Christ, nailed to the Cross, “having been offered once to expiate the sins of the many” [Heb 9:28].

This expiation for mortals was completely perfect and absolute; and it is not in any way another but the very same (expiation) present in the eucharistic sacrifice. In fact, inasmuch as a sacrificial rite must be connected with religion in all times, it was the most divine determination of the Redeemer that the sacrifice, accomplished once and for all on the Cross, should become continuous and everlasting. The reason for this perpetuity, however, is found in the most holy Eucharist, which produces, not an empty resemblance or only a memorial of the reality, but, rather, the truth itself, although in a different form; for this reason, the efficacy of this sacrifice, whether for intercession or for expiation, flows totally from the death of Christ.

3340–3346: Letter Testem benevolentiae to the Archbishop of Baltimore, January 22, 1899

In a book by Walter Elliot (published in New York in 1891 and translated into French in 1897) on the life of Isaac Thomas Hecker (d. 1888), the founder of the Congregation of Missionary Priests of St. Paul the Apostle (Paulists), certain teachings of Hecker were reported about how, in Hecker’s mind, the Catholic religion might be adapted to the new conditions. With this letter, Leo XIII brought to a close the dispute that arose from this.

Ed.: ASS 31 (1898/1899): 471–79 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 19:6–18 / AnE 7 (1899): 55b–58b / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:382–86, no. 2035.

The Error of Accommodating Dogmas to Modern Sensibilities

Novarum igitur, quas diximus, opinionum id fere constituitur fundamentum: quo facilius qui dissident ad catholicam sapientiam traducantur, debere Ecclesiam ad adulti saeculi humanitatem aliquanto propius accedere, ac, veteri relaxata severitate, recens invectis populorum placitis ac rationibus indulgere. Id autem non de vivendi solum disciplina, sed de doctrinis etiam, quibus fidei depositum continetur, intelligendum esse multi arbitrantur. Opportunum enim esse contendunt ad voluntates discordium alliciendas, si quaedam doctrinae capita, quasi levioris momenti, praetermittantur, aut molliantur ita, ut non eundem retineant sensum, quem constanter tenuit Ecclesia.

Id porro . . . quam improbando sit consilio excogitatum, haud longo sermone indiget; si modo doctrinae ratio atque origo repetatur, quam tradit Ecclesia. Ad rem Vaticana Synodus: “Neque enim . . . recedendum” [*3020]. . .

Aetatum vero praeteritarum omnium historia testis est, Sedem hanc Apostolicam, cui non magisterium modo, sed supremum etiam regimen totius Ecclesiae tributum

The basis of the new opinions that We have mentioned 3340 is established as essentially this: In order that those who dissent may more easily be brought over to Catholic wisdom, the Church should come closer to the humanity of a more mature age and, relaxing her old severity, manifest indulgence toward the beliefs and opinions of the people that have recently been introduced. Moreover, many think that this should be understood not only with regard to the standard of living, but even with regard to the doctrines in which the deposit of faith is contained. For, they contend that it is opportune, to win over those who are in disagreement, if certain topics of doctrine are passed over as of lesser importance or are so softened that they do not retain the same sense as the Church has always held.

Now there is no need of a long discussion . . . to show with what a reprehensible purpose this has been thought out, if only the character and origin of the teaching that the Church hands down are considered. On this subject the Vatican Council says: “Indeed there is to be no receding . . .” [*3020]. . .

Now the history of all past ages is witness that this 3341 Apostolic See, to which not only the office of teaching but also the supreme government of the whole Church est, constanter quidem “in eodem dogmate, eodem sensu eademque sententia” [cf. *3020 cum nota] haesisse; at vivendi disciplinam ita semper moderari consuevisse, ut, divino incolumi iure, diversarum adeo gentium, quas amplectitur, mores et rationes numquam neglexerit. Id si postulet animorum salus, nunc etiam facturam quis dubitet?

Non hoc tamen privatorum hominum arbitrio definiendum, qui fere specie recti decipiuntur; sed Ecclesiae iudicium esse oportet. . . .

3342 Externum magisterium omne ab iis, qui christianae perfectioni adipiscendae studere velint, tamquam superfluum, immo etiam minus utile reicitur: ampliora, aiunt, atque uberiora nunc quam elapsis temporibus in animos fidelium Spiritus Sanctus influit charismata, eosque medio nemine docet arcano quodam instinctu atque agit. . . .

were assigned, has indeed continually adhered “to the same doctrine, in the same sense, and in the same mind” [cf. *3020 with note] but, on the other hand, that it has always been accustomed to regulate the rule of life so as never to overlook the manners and customs of the various peoples it embraces, while keeping the divine law unimpaired. If the safety of souls demands this, who will doubt that it will do so now?

This, however, is not to be determined by the decision of private individuals who are quite deceived by the appearance of right; but it should be the judgment of the Church. . . .

The entire external teaching office is rejected as superfluous, nay even as useless, by those who wish to strive for the acquisition of Christian perfection; they say that the Holy Spirit now pours forth into the souls of the faithful more and richer gifts than in times past and, with no intermediary, by a kind of hidden instinct teaches and moves them. . . .

The Contempt for Supernatural and Passive Virtues

3343 Maxime in excolendis virtutibus Spiritus Sancti praesidio opus est omnino; verum qui nova sectari adamant, naturales virtutes praeter modum efferunt, quasi hae praesentis aetatis moribus ac necessitatibus respondeant aptius, iisque exornari praestet, quod hominem paratiorem ad agendum ac strenuiorem faciant.

Difficile quidem intellectu est, eos, qui christiana sapientia imbuantur, posse naturales virtutes supernaturalibus anteferre maioremque illis efficacitatem ac fecunditatem tribuere. . . .

3344 Cum hac de naturalibus virtutibus sententia alia cohaeret admodum, qua christianae virtutes universae in duo quasi genera dispertuntur, in passivas, ut aiunt, atque activas; adduntque, illas in elapsis aetatibus convenisse melius, has cum praesenti magis congruere. . . .

Christianas autem virtutes alias temporibus aliis accommodatas esse is solum velit, qui Apostoli verba non meminerit: “Quos praescivit, hos et praedestinavit conformes fieri imaginis Filii sui” [Rm 8:29].

Magister et exemplar sanctitatis omnis Christus est; ad cuius regulam aptari omnes necesse est, quotquot advent beatorum sedibus inseri. Iamvero, haud mutatur Christus progredientibus saeculis, sed “idem heri et hodie et in saecula” [Hbr 13:8]. Ad omnium igitur aetatum homines pertinet illud: “Discite a me, quia mitis sum et humilis corde” [Mt 11:59]; nulloque non tempore Christus se nobis exhibet “factum oboedientem usque ad mortem”

It is chiefly in the practice of virtues that the help of the Holy Spirit is absolutely required. But those who are enthusiastic about following the new trends exalt beyond measure the natural virtues as though these suited more aptly the manners and the needs of the present times and as if it were preferable to possess them, because they render a man more fit and more vigorous for action.

It is hard to understand that those who are imbued with Christian wisdom could prefer natural virtues to supernatural ones and ascribe to them a greater efficacy and fruitfulness. . . .

Intimately connected with this opinion about natural virtues is another one according to which the Christian virtues as a whole are divided, as it were, into two classes: the passive ones, as they say, and the active ones; and they add that, while the former were more suited for the past ages, the latter agree better with the present times. . . .

Now, that some Christian virtues are more appropriate to one time and some to another will only be held by a man who does not remember the words of the apostle: “Those whom he foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son” [Rom 8:29].

The teacher and the model of all holiness is Christ; all those who wish to be admitted in the home of the blessed must be adapted to that rule. Now Christ does not change in the course of centuries, but “(he) is the same yesterday and today and for ever” [Heb 13:8]. Hence the saying applies to men of all ages: “Learn from me; for I am gentle and lowly in heart” [Mt 11:29]; and there is no period when Christ does not present himself to us [Phil 2:8]; valetque quavis aetate Apostoli sententia: “Qui sunt Christi, carnem suam crucifixerunt cum vitiiis et concupiscentiis” [Gal 5:24]. . . .

Ex quo virtutum evangelicarum veluti contemptu, quae perperam passivae appellantur, pronum erat sequi, ut religiosae etiam vitae despectus sensim per animos pervaderet. Atque id novarum opinionum fautoribus commune esse, conicimus ex eorum sententiis quibusdam circa vota, quae ordines religiosi nuncupant. Aiunt enim illa ab ingenio aetatis nostrae dissidere plurimum, utpote quae humanae libertatis fines coerceant; esseque ad infirmos animos magis quam ad fortes apta; nec admodum valere ad christianam perfectionem humanaeque consociationis bonum, quin potius utrique rei obstare atque officere. . . .

Ex his igitur, quae huc usque disseruimus, patet, . . . non posse Nobis opiniones illas probari, quarum summam Americanismi nomine nonnulli indicant.

3350–3353: Encyclical Annum sacrum, May 25, 1899

With this encyclical, Leo XIII prepared for the consecration of mankind to the Sacred Heart of Jesus in the Jubilee year of 1900.
Ed.: ASS 31 (1898/1899): 647–49 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 19:72–76.

The Regal Power of Christ

Amplissimum istud maximumque obsequii et pietatis testimonium [scilicet actus devovendi genus humanum Cordi Iesu] omnino convenit Iesu Christo, quia ipse princeps est ac Dominus summus. Videlicet imperium eius non est tantummodo in gentes catholici nominis, aut in eos solum, qui sacro baptismate rite abluti, utique ad Ecclesiam, si spectetur ius, pertinent, quamvis vel error opinionum devios agat vel dissensio a caritate seiungat, sed complectitur etiam quotquot numerantur christianae fidei expertes, ita ut verissime in potestate Christi sit universitas generis humani.

Nam qui Dei Patris Unigenitus est eandemque habet cum ipso substantiam, “splendor gloriae et figura substantiae eius” [Hbr 1:3], huic omnia cum Patre communia necesse est propterea quoque rerum omnium summum imperium. Ob eam rem Dei Filius de se ipse apud Prophetam “Ego autem” effatur “constitutus sum rex super Sion montem sanctum eius. . . . Dominus dixit ad me: Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te. Postula a me, et dabo tibi gentes hereditatem tuam, et possessionem tuam terminos terrae” [Ps 2:6–8]. Quibus declarat, se potestatem a Deo accepisse cum in omnem Ecclesiam, quae per Sion montem intelligitur, tum in reliquum terrarum orbem, qua eius late termini made “obedient unto death” [Phil 2:8]; and this saying of the apostle is valid for all times: “Those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires” [Gal 5:24]. . . .

From this kind of contempt for the evangelical virtues, wrongly called passive, it was likely to follow that a disregard for the religious life would also gradually pervade minds. And that this is commonly the case with the champions of the new opinions, We gather from some of their sayings about the vows that are pronounced in religious orders. For they say that these vows are very remote from the spirit of our time inasmuch as they restrict the field of liberty; that they are suited to weak souls rather than to strong ones; and that they have absolutely no value to foster Christian perfection and the good of human society, but are rather an obstacle and a hindrance to both. . . .

From what We have dealt with up to now, it is clear . . . that those opinions that, taken as a whole, some designate as “Americanism” cannot have Our approval.

This worldwide and solemn testimony of allegiance and piety [that is, the act of devotion to the humanity of the Heart of Jesus] is completely appropriate to Jesus Christ, who is himself Prince and Supreme Lord. His empire extends not only over Catholic nations and those who, having been duly washed in the waters of holy baptism, belong by right to the Church, although erroneous opinions keep them astray or dissension separates them from (the bond of) charity; it comprises also all those who are deprived of the Christian faith, so that the whole human race is most truly under the power of Jesus Christ.

For he who is the only begotten Son of God the Father, having the same substance with him and being the refulgence of his glory and the form of his substance [cf. Heb 1:3] necessarily has everything in common with the Father and therefore sovereign power over all things. This is why the Son of God thus speaks of himself through the prophet: “But I am appointed king by him over Zion, his holy mountain. . . . The Lord said to me, You are my son, this day have I begotten you. Ask of me and I will give you the Gentiles for your inheritance and the utmost parts of the earth for your possession” [Ps 2:6–8]. By these words he declares that he has power from God over the whole Church, which is signified by proferuntur. Quo autem summa ista potestas fundamento nitatur, satis illa docent: “Filius meus es tu”.

Hoc enim ipso quod omnium Regis est Filius, universae potestatis est heres: ex quo illa “Dabo tibi gentes hereditatem tuam”. Quorum sunt ea similia, quae habet Paulus Apostolus: “Quem constituit heredem universorum” [Hbr 1:2].

3351 Illud autem considerandum maxime, quid affirmaverit de imperio suo Iesus Christus ... suis ipse verbis. Quaerenti enim Romano praesidi “Ergo rex es tu?” sine ulla dubitatione respondit: “Tu dicis quia rex sum ego” [Io 18:37]. Atque huius magnitudinem potestatis et infinitatem regni illa ad Apostolos apertius confirmant: “Data est mihi omnis potestas in caelo et in terra” [Mt 28:18]. Si Christo data potestas omnis, necessario consequitur, imperium eius summum esse oportere, absolutum, arbitrio nullius obnoxium, nihil ut ei sit nec par nec simile; cumque data sit in caelo et in terra, debet sibi habere caelum terrasque parentia.

Re autem vera ius istud singulare sibi proprium exercuit, iussis nimirum Apostolis evulgare doctrinam suam, congregare homines in unum corpus Ecclesiae per lavacrum salutis, leges denique imponere, quas recusare sine salutis sempiternae discrimine nemo posset.

3352 Neque tamen sunt in hoc omnia. Imperat Christus non iure tantum nativo, quippe Dei Unigenitus, sed etiam quaesito. Ipse enim “eripuit nos de potestate tenebrarum” [Col 1:13] idemque “dedit redemptionem semetipsum pro omnibus” [1 Tim 2:6]. Ei ergo facti sunt “populus acquisitionis” [1 Pt 2:9] non solum et catholici et quotquot christianum baptismum rite acceperunt, sed homines singuli et universi...

Cur autem ipsi infideles potestate dominatuque Iesu Christi teneantur, causam sanctus Thomas rationemque edisserendo docet. Cum enim de iudiciali eius potestate quaesisset, num ad homines porrigatur universos, affirmassetque “iudicialia potestas consequitur potestatem regiam”, plane concludit: “Christo omnia sunt subiecta quantum ad potestatem, etsi nondum sunt ei subiecta quantum ad executionem potestatis.”¹ Quae Christi potestas et imperium in homines exercetur per veritatem, per iustitiam, maxime per caritatem.

Mount Zion and also over the rest of the world to its uttermost ends.

On what foundation this sovereign power rests is made sufficiently plain by the words, “You are my Son.” For by the very fact that he is the Son of the King of all, he is also the heir of universal power: hence the words “I will give you the Gentiles for your inheritance”, which are similar to those used by Paul the apostle, “whom he has appointed the heir of all things” [Heb 1:2].

But we should now give most special consideration to the declarations made by Jesus Christ ... by his own words. To the Roman governor who asked him, “Are you then a king?” he answered unhesitatingly, “You say that I am a king” [Jn 18:37]. And the greatness of this power and the boundlessness of his kingdom is still more clearly declared in these words to the apostles: “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me” [Mt 28:18]. If then all power has been given to Christ, it follows of necessity that his empire must be supreme, absolute, and independent of the will of any other, so that none is either equal or like unto it: and since it has been given in heaven and on earth, it ought to have heaven and earth obedient to it.

And verily he has acted on this extraordinary and peculiar right when he commanded his apostles to preach his doctrine over the earth, to gather all men together into the one body of the Church by the baptism of salvation and to bind them by laws, which no one could reject without risking his eternal salvation.

But this is not all. Christ reigns not only by natural right as the Son of God, but also by a right that he has acquired. For he it was who snatched us “from the dominion of darkness” [Col 1:13] and “gave himself as a ransom for all” [1 Tim 2:6]. Therefore not only Catholics and those who have duly received Christian baptism, but also all men, individually and collectively, have become to him “a chosen people” [1 Pet 2:9]...

How it comes about that infidels themselves are subject to the power and dominion of Jesus Christ is clearly shown by St. Thomas, who gives us the reason and its explanation. For having put the question whether his judicial power extends to all men, and having stated that judicial authority flows naturally from royal authority, he concludes decisively as follows: “All things are subject to Christ as far as his power is concerned, although they are not all subject to him in the exercise of that power.”¹ This sovereign power of Christ over men is exercised by truth, justice, and, above all, by charity.

¹ *3352 Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 59, a. 4 ad 2 (Editio Leonina 11:545b).

The Sacred Heart of Jesus as Object of Devotion

Quoniamque inest in Sacro Corde symbolum atque expressa imago infinitae Iesu Christi caritatis, quae movet ipsa nos ad amandum mutuo, ideo consentaneum est dicere se Cordi eius augustissimo: quod tamen nihil aliud est quam dedere atque obligare se Iesu Christo, quia quidquid honoris, obsequii, pietatis divino Cordi tribuitur, vere et proprie Christo tribuitur ipsi.

And since there is in the Sacred Heart a symbol and the express image of the infinite love of Jesus Christ that moves us to love one another, it is, therefore, fit and proper that we should consecrate ourselves to his most Sacred Heart—an act that is nothing else than an offering and a binding of oneself to Jesus Christ, for whatever honor, veneration, and love is given to this divine Heart is really and truly given to Christ himself.

3353

3356: Response of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Utrecht, August 21, 1901

Ed.: ASS 34 (1901/1902): 319f. / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:421, no. 2121.

The Matter of Baptism

Expos.: Plures medici in nosocomiis aut alibi casu necessitatis infantes, praecipue in utero matris, baptizare solent aqua cum hydrargyro bichlorato corrosivo (gallice: chloride de mercure) permixta. Componitur fere haec aqua solutione unius partis huius chloreti hydrargici in mille partibus aquae, eaque solutione aquae potio venefica est. Ratio vero, cur hac mixtura utantur, est, ne matris uterus morbo afficiatur.

Explanation: Many physicians in hospitals and elsewhere in cases of necessity are accustomed to baptize infants, especially in the mother's womb, with water mixed with mercury bichloride corrosive (in French: chloride de mercure). This water is compounded approximately of a solution of one part mercury chloride in a thousand parts of water, and in this solution of water the potion is toxic. The reason, in fact, for using this mixture is to prevent infection in the mother's womb.

3356

Qu.: 1. Estne baptisma cum huiusmodi aqua administratum certo an dubie validum?

Questions: 1. Is a baptism administered with such water of certain or doubtful validity?

2. Estne licitum ad omne morbi periculum vitandum huiusmodi aqua sacramentum baptismatis administrare?

2. Is it permitted to administer the sacrament of baptism with such water in order to avoid all danger of disease?

3. Licetne etiam tum hac aqua uti, quando sine ullo morbi periculo aqua pura adhiberi potest?

3. Is it permitted also to use this water when pure water can be used without any danger of disease?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 23. Aug.): Ad 1. Providebitur in 2.

Responses (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on August 23): To 1. This is provided in 2.

Ad 2. Licere, ubi verum adest morbi periculum.

To 2. It is permitted when there is a real danger of disease.

Ad 3. Negative.

To 3. No.

3358: Response of the Holy Office to the Theological Faculty of the University of Montreal, March 5, 1902

Ed.: ASS 35 (1902/1903): 162 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:424, no. 2131 / AnE 10 (1902): 337ab.

The Methods of Extracting a Fetus

Qu.: Utrum aliquando liceat e sinu matris extrahere fetus ectopicos adhuc immaturos, nondum exacto sexto mense post conceptionem?

Question: Is it sometimes permitted to extract from the womb of the mother ectopic fetuses still immature, when the sixth month after conception has not passed?

3358

Resp.: Negative, iuxta Decr. 4. Maii 1898 [*3336–3338], vi cuius fetus et matris vitae, quantum fieri potest, serio et opportune providendum est; quoad vero tempus, iuxta idem Decretum, Orator meminerit, nullam partus accelerationem licitam esse, nisi perficiatur tempore ac modis, quibus ex ordinariis contingentibus matris ac fetus vitae consulatur.

Response: No, according to the decree of Wednesday, May 4, 1898 [*3336–3338], by the force of which care must be taken seriously and fittingly, insofar as it can be done, for the life of the fetus and that of the mother; moreover, with respect to time, according to the same decree, the questioner is reminded that no acceleration of the birth is licit, unless it be performed at the time and according to the methods by which in the ordinary course of events the life of the mother and that of the fetus are considered.

3360–3364: Encyclical Mirae caritatis, May 28, 1902

Ed.: ASS 34 (1901/1902): 642–50 / Leo XIII, Acta (Rome) 2:118–30.

The Eucharistic Christ as the Life of Men

3360 Beneficia porro ex Eucharistia manantia qui ... consideret, illud sane praestare atque eminere intelliget, quo cetera quaecumque sunt continentur: ex ipsa nempe vitam in homines, quae vere vita est, influere: “Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est pro mundi vita” [Io 6:52].

Non uno modo ... Christus est vita ...: statim namque ut in terris “benignitas et humanitas apparuit Salvatoris nostri Dei” [Tit 3:4], nemo quidem ignorat vim quamdam continuo erupisse ordinis rerum prorsus novi procreatricem eamque in venas omnes societatis civilis et domesticae permanasse ...; quod autem praecipuum, hominum animos et studia ad veritatem religionis sanctitatemque morum traducta atque adeo vitam homini communicatam caelestem plane ac divinam....

At vero, quoniam haec ipsa de qua dicimus vita expressam habet similitudinem cum vita hominis naturali, sicut altera cibo alitur ac viget, ita alteram sustentari cibo suo et augeri oportet. Apte hic [cibus] facit revocare, quo quidem Christus tempore ac modo moverit animos hominum et adduxerit, ut panem vivum, quem daturus erat, ... exciperent.... “Si quis manducaverit ex hoc pane, vivet in aeternum ...” [Io 6:52]. Gravitatem porro praecepti ita ipse convincit: “Amen, amen, dico vobis, nisi manducaveritis carnem Filii hominis et biberitis eius sanguinem, non habebitis vitam in vobis” [Io 6:54].

3361 Absit igitur pervagatus ille error perniciosissimus opinantium, Eucharistiae usum ad eos fere amandandum esse, qui vacui curis angustique animo conquiescere instituant in quodam vitae religiosioris proposito. Ea quippe res, qua nihil sane nec excellentius nec salutaris, ad omnes omnino, cuiuscumque demum muneris praestantiaeve sint, attinet, quotquot velint (neque unus quisquam non velle debet) divinae gratiae in se fovere vitam, cuius ultimum est adeptio vitae cum Deo beatae.

Now if anyone will ... consider the benefits that flow from the Eucharist, he will understand that conspicuous and chief among them all is that in which the rest, without exception, are included; in a word, it is for men the source of life, of that life which best deserves the name. “The bread which I shall give for the life of the world is my flesh” [Jn 6:51].

In more than one way ... is Christ “the life”.... Everyone is aware that no sooner had “the goodness and loving kindness of God our Savior appeared” [Tit 3:4] than there at once burst forth a certain creative force, which issued in a new order of things and flowed through all the veins of society, civil and domestic ...; and most important of all, man’s thoughts and energies were turned toward religious truth and the pursuit of holiness. Thus was life communicated to man, a life truly heavenly and divine....

But now, since this life of which We are speaking bears a definite resemblance to the natural life of man, as the one draws its nourishment and strength from food, so also the other must have its own food whereby it may be sustained and augmented. And here it will be opportune to recall to mind on what occasion and in what manner Christ moved and prepared the hearts of men for the ... reception of the living bread he was about to give them.... “If any one eats of this bread, he will live for ever ...” [Jn 6:51]. And in these other words, he brings home to them the gravity of the precept: “Truly, truly, I say to you, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, you have no life in you” [Jn 6:53].

Away, then, with the widespread but most mischievous error of those who give it as their opinion that the reception of the Eucharist is in a manner reserved for those narrow-minded persons (as they are deemed) who rid themselves of the cares of the world in order to find rest in some kind of professedly religious life. For this gift, than which nothing can be more excellent or more conducive to salvation, is offered to all those, whatever their office or dignity may be, who wish—as every one ought to wish—to foster in themselves that life of divine grace whose goal is the attainment of the life of blessedness with God.

The Eucharistic Bond between the Church and the Communion of Saints

3362 ... Vel signa ipsa quibus huiusmodi constat sacramentum peropportuna coniunctionis incitamenta sunt. Qua de re sanctus Cyprianus: “... Quando Dominus corpus suum panem vocat de multorum granorum

... Add to this that the outward and visible elements of this sacrament supply a singularly appropriate stimulus to union. On this topic St. Cyprian writes: “... For when our Lord calls his body bread, a substance that is kneaded adunatione congestum, populum nostrum quem portabat indicat adunatum; et quando sanguinem suum vinum appellat de botris atque acinis plurimis expressum atque in unum coactum, gregem item nostrum significat commixtione adunatae multitudinis copulatum.”¹

Similiter Angelicus Doctor² ex Augustini sententia haec habet: “Dominus noster corpus et sanguinem suum in eis rebus commendavit, quae ad unum aliquid rediguntur ex multis; namque aliud, scilicet panis, ex multis granis in unum constat, aliud, scilicet vinum, in unum ex multis acinis confluit,”³ et ideo Augustinus alibi dicit: ‘O sacramentum pietatis, o signum unitatis, o vinculum caritatis.’”⁴

Quae omnia confirmantur Concilii Tridentini sententia, Christum Eucharistiam Ecclesiae reliquisse “tamquam symbolum eius unitatis et caritatis, qua Christianos omnes inter se coniunctos et copulatos esse voluit ... symbolum unius illius corporis, cuius ipse caput exsistit ...” [*1635, 1638]. Idque edixerat Paulus: “Quoniam unus panis, unum corpus multi sumus, omnes qui de uno pane participamus” [1 Cor 10:17]....

Mutuae praeterea inter vivos caritatis gratia, cui a sacramento eucharistico tantum accedit roboris et incrementi, Sacrificii praesertim virtute ad omnes permanat qui in Sanctorum communionem numerantur. Nihil est enim aliud Sanctorum communio ... nisi mutua auxilii, expiationis, precum, beneficiorum communicatio inter fideles vel caelesti patria potitos vel igni piaculari addictos vel adhuc in terris peregrinantes, in unam coalescentes civitatem, cuius caput Christus, cuius forma caritas.

Hoc autem fide est ratum, etsi soli Deo Sacrificium augustum offerri liceat, tamen etiam honori Sanctorum in caelis cum Deo regnantium, qui illos coronavit, celebrari posse ad eorum patrocinium nobis conciliandum atque etiam, ut ab Apostolis traditum, ad labes fratrum abolendas, qui, iam in Domino mortui, nondum plane sint expiati....

Ipsam [sacramentum Eucharistiae] denique est velut anima Ecclesiae, ad quod ipsa sacerdotalis gratiae amplitudo per varios ordinum gradus dirigitur.

together out of many grains, he indicates that we his people, whom he sustains, are bound together in close union; and when he speaks of his blood as wine, in which the juice pressed from many clusters of grapes is mingled in one fluid, he likewise indicates that we his flock are by the commingling of a multitude of persons made one.”¹

In like manner the Angelic Doctor,² adopting the sentiments of St. Augustine, writes: “Our Lord has bequeathed to us his body and blood in (the form of) these elements in which a multitude of things have been reduced to unity, for one of them, namely, bread, consisting as it does of many grains, is yet one, and the other, that is to say, wine, has its unity of being from the confluent juice of many grapes,³ and therefore St. Augustine elsewhere says: ‘O Sacrament of mercy, O sign of unity, O bond of charity!’”⁴

All of which is confirmed by the declaration of the Council of Trent that Christ left the Eucharist in his Church “as a symbol of that unity and charity whereby he would have all Christians mutually joined and united ... a symbol of that one body of which he is himself the head ...” [cf. *1635, 1638]. The same idea had been expressed by St. Paul when he wrote: “We who are many are one body, for all we who partake of the one bread” [1 Cor 10:17]....

Besides all this, the grace of mutual charity among the living, which derives from the sacrament of the Eucharist so great an increase of strength, is further extended by virtue of the Sacrifice to all those who are numbered in the communion of saints. For the communion of saints is nothing but ... the mutual communication of help, expiation, prayers, blessings, among all the faithful, who, whether they have already attained to the heavenly home or are detained in the purgatorial fire or are yet exiles here on earth, all enjoy the common franchise of that city whereof Christ is the head and the constitution is charity. 3363

For faith teaches us that, although the venerable Sacrifice may be lawfully offered to God alone, yet it may be celebrated in honor of the saints reigning in heaven with God, who has crowned them in order that we may gain for ourselves their patronage. And it may also be offered—in accordance with an apostolic tradition—for the purpose of expiating the sins of those of the brethren who, having died in the Lord, have not yet been fully purified....

In a word, this [sacrament of the Eucharist] is, as it were, the very soul of the Church; and to it the grace of the priesthood is ordered and directed in all its fullness 3364

*3362¹ Cyprian of Carthage, letter (69) to Magnus 5 (CSEL 3/II:754₆₋₁₁ / PL 3:1189 [= chap. 6]).

² Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 79, a. 1 (Editio Leonina 12:218a).

³ Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 26, no. 17 (R. Willems: CpChL 36 [1954]: 268₈₋₁₁ / PL 35:1614).

⁴ Ibid., 13 (CpChL 36:266_{26f} / PL 35:1613).

Indidemque haurit habetque Ecclesia omnem virtutem suam et gloriam, omnia divinatorum charismatum ornamenta, bona omnia: quae propterea summam curarum in eo collocat, ut fidelium animos ad intimam cum Christo coniunctionem per sacramentum Corporis et Sanguinis eius instruat et adducat.

and through the various degrees of order. From the same source the Church draws and has all her strength, all her glory, her every supernatural endowment and adornment, every good thing that is here; wherefore she makes it the greatest of all her cares to prepare and lead the hearts of the faithful to an intimate union with Christ through the sacrament of his Body and Blood, and to draw them thereto.

PIUS X: August 4, 1903–August 20, 1914

3370: Encyclical Ad diem illum, February 2, 1904

This encyclical was published on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the definition of the Immaculate Conception of Mary. It is concerned, above all, with the mediation of grace through Mary.

Ed.: ASS 36 (1903/1904): 453f. / Pius X, Acta 1:153–55.

The Blessed Virgin Mary as Mediatrix of Grace

3370 Ex hac autem Mariam inter et Christum communionem dolorum ac voluntatis “promeruit” illa, “ut reparatrix perditis orbis dignissime fieret”,¹ atque ideo universorum munerum dispensatrix, quae nobis Iesus nece et sanguine comparavit.

Equidem non diffitemur horum erogationem munerum privato proprioque iure esse Christi; siquidem et illa eius unius morte sunt parta, et Ipse pro potestate mediator Dei atque hominum est. Attamen, pro ea quam diximus dolorum atque aerumnarum Matris cum Filio communionem, hoc Virgini augustae datum est, ut sit “totius terrarum orbis potentissima apud unigenitum Filium suum mediatrix et conciliatrix.”²

Fons igitur Christus est, “et de plenitudine eius nos omnes accepimus” [Io 1:16]; “ex quo totum corpus compactum et connexum per omnem iuncturam subministrationis ... augmentum corporis facit in aedificationem sui in caritate” [Eph 4:16]. Maria vero ... “aquaeductus”³ est aut etiam collum, per quod corpus cum capite iungitur...⁴

Patet itaque abesse profecto plurimum, ut nos Deiparae supernaturalis gratiae efficiendae vim tribuamus, quae Dei unius est. Ea tamen, quoniam universis sanctitate praestat coniunctionemque cum Christo atque a Christo ascita in humanae salutis opus, de congruo, ut aiunt,

And from this communion of will and suffering between Christ and Mary, she merited to become “most worthily the reparatrix of the lost world”¹ and dispensatrix of all the gifts that our Savior purchased for us by his death and by his blood.

It cannot, of course, be denied that the dispensation of these treasures is the particular and peculiar right of Jesus Christ, for they are the exclusive fruit of his death, who by his nature is the mediator between God and man. Nevertheless, by this companionship in sorrow and suffering already mentioned between the Mother and the Son, it has been allowed to the august Virgin to be “the most powerful mediatrix and advocate of the whole world in the presence of her only begotten Son.”²

The source, then, is Christ “from [whose] fullness we have all received” [Jn 1:16]; “from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every joint with which it is supplied ... makes bodily growth and upbuilds itself in love” [Eph 4:16]. But Mary ... is “the aqueduct”,³ or rather also the neck, by which the head is joined to the body...⁴

We are, then, it will be seen, very far from attributing to the Mother of God a productive power of grace—a power that belongs to God alone. Yet, since Mary carries it over all in holiness and union with Christ and has been associated by Christ in the work of redemption, she

*3370 ¹ Eadmer, De excellentia Virginis Mariae 9 (PL 159:573).

² Pius IX, bull Ineffabilis Deus, December 8, 1854 (CollLac 6:843a).

³ Bernard of Clairvaux, homily for the Feast of Mary’s Nativity De aquaeductu, no. 4 (Opera 5, ed. J. Leclercq and H. M. Rochais [Rome, 1968], 277₁₀ / PL 183:440).

⁴ Bernardine of Siena, Quadragesimale de evangelio aeterno, sermo 51, art. 3, a. 1: The fullness of grace is “in Christ as flowing forth from the head; in Mary as being transfused from the neck to the whole body of the Church” (in Christo ut in capite influente; in Maria ut in collo toti corpori Ecclesiae transfundente; Opera omnia 4 [Quaracchi, 1956], 551₂₃).

promeret nobis, quae Christus de condigno promeruit, estque princeps largiendarum gratiarum ministra.

merits for us de congruo (in a congruous manner), in the language of theologians, what Christ merits for us de condigno (in a condign manner), and she is the supreme minister of the distribution of graces.

3372: Response of the Biblical Commission, February 13, 1905

Ed.: ASS 37 (1904/1905): 666 / AnE 13 (1905): 172b / EnchB no. 160.

“Implicit Citations” in Sacred Scripture

Qu.: Utrum ad enodandas difficultates, quae occurrunt in nonnullis sacrae Scripturae textibus, qui facta historica referre videntur, liceat exegetae catholico asserere, agi in his de citatione tacita vel implicita documenti ab auctore non inspirato conscripti, cuius asserta omnia auctor inspiratus minime approbare aut sua facere intendit, quaeque ideo ab errore immunia haberi non possunt?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 13. Febr.): Negative, excepto casu, in quo, salvis sensu ac iudicio Ecclesiae, solidis argumentis probetur:

1. Hagiographum alterius dicta vel documenta revera citare, et
2. eadem nec probare nec sua facere, ita ut iure censeatur non proprio nomine loqui.

Question: In order to resolve difficulties that occur in some texts of Sacred Scripture that seem to relate historical facts, is the Catholic exegete permitted to assert that in these it is a matter of a tacit or implicit citation of a document written by a non-inspired author, all of whose assertions the inspired author by no means intends to approve or make his own and which, therefore, cannot be considered immune from error? 3372

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on February 13): No, except in the case where, preserving the sense and judgment of the Church, it is proved by strong arguments:

1. that the sacred writer really is citing the words or documents of another, and
2. that he does not approve the same or make them his own, so that it is rightly decided that he is not speaking in his own name.

3373: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 23, 1905

Ed.: ASS 38 (1905/1906): 124f. / AnE 13 (1905): 353b / EnchB no. 161.

The Parts of Sacred Scripture Only Apparently Historical

Qu.: Utrum admitti possit tamquam principium rectae exegeseos sententia, quae tenet, sacrae Scripturae libros, qui pro historicis habentur, sive totaliter sive ex parte non historiam proprie dictam et obiective veram quandoque narrare, sed speciem tantum historiae prae se ferre ad aliquid significandum a proprie litterali seu historica verborum significatione alienum?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice): Negative, excepto tamen casu non facile nec temere admittendo, in quo, Ecclesiae sensu non refragante eiusque salvo iudicio, solidis argumentis probetur, Hagiographum voluisse non veram et proprie dictam historiam tradere, sed sub specie et forma historiae parabolam, allegoriam, vel sensum aliquem a proprie litterali seu historica verborum significatione remotum proponere.

Question: Can the opinion be admitted as a principle of sound exegesis that holds that the books of Sacred Scripture that are held to be historical, either in whole or in part, sometimes do not narrate history properly so called, which is objectively true, but present an appearance of history only, to signify something different from the properly literal and historical significance of the words? 3373

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff): No, except in the case, however, not readily or rashly to be admitted, where without opposing the sense of the Church and preserving her judgment, it is proved with strong arguments that the sacred writer did not wish to put down true history, and history properly so-called, but to set forth, under the appearance and form of history, a parable, an allegory, or some meaning removed from the properly literal or historical significance of the words.

3375–3383: Decree Sacra Tridentina Synodus, December 16 (20), 1905

This decree was issued in response to heated debates in Belgium over the question of frequent communion. It was adopted on December 16, confirmed by the pope on December 17, and published on December 20, 1905.

The decree enumerates the essential conditions for the daily reception of communion: the state of grace and the right intention. It opposes the opinion that the recipient should not be in a state of venial sin intentionally committed.

In a decree of 1910 (*3530–3536), the requisite age for the reception of first communion was established. On December 8, 1938, the Congregation of the Sacraments published an “Internal Instruction concerning Habitual Daily Communion in Seminaries, Colleges, and Religious Communities and the Prevention of Abuses” (PerRMor 28 [1939]: 317–24).

Ed.: ASS 38 (1905/1906): 401–5 / AAS 2 (1910): 894–97 / Pius X, Acta 2:251–55 / CollPF, 2nd ed., 2:464, no. 2225.

Daily Eucharistic Communion

- 3375 ... Desiderium vero Iesu Christi et Ecclesiae, ut omnes Christifideles quotidie ad sacrum convivium accedant, in eo potissimum est, ut Christifideles per sacramentum Deo coniuncti robur inde capiant ad compescendam libidinem, ad leves culpas quae quotidie occurrunt abluendas, et ad graviora peccata, quibus humana fragilitas est obnoxia, praecavenda: non autem praecipue, ut Domini honori ac venerationi consulatur, nec, ut sumentibus id quasi merces aut praemium sit suarum virtutum. Unde S. Tridentinum Concilium Eucharistiam vocat “antidotum, quo liberemur a culpis quotidianis et a peccatis mortalibus praeservemur” [*1638]....
- 3376 Defervescente interim pietate ac potissimum Ianseniana lue undequaque grassante disputari coeptum est de dispositionibus, quibus ad frequentem et quotidianam communionem accedere oporteat, atque alii prae aliis maiores ac difficiliores tamquam necessarias expostularunt. Huiusmodi disceptationes id effecerunt, ut perpauci digni haberentur, qui ss. Eucharistiam quotidie sumerent et ex tam salutifero sacramento pleniore effectus haurirent, contentis ceteris eo refici aut semel in anno aut singulis mensibus, vel unaquaque ad summum hebdomada. Quin etiam eo severitatis ventum est, ut a frequentanda caelesti mensa integri coetus excluderentur, uti mercatorum, aut eorum, qui essent matrimonio coniuncti.
- 3377 Nonnulli tamen in contrariam abierunt sententiam. Hi arbitrati communionem quotidianam iure divino esse praeceptam, ne dies ulla praeteriret a communionem vacua, ... etiam feria VI in Parasceve Eucharistiam sumendam censebant et ministrabant.¹
- 3378 Ad haec Sancta Sedes officio proprio non defuit [cf. *2090–2095, 2323].... Virus tamen Iansenianum, quod bonorum etiam animos infecerat, sub specie honoris ac venerationis Eucharistiae debiti, haud penitus evanuit. Quaestio de dispositionibus ad frequentandam recte ac legitime communionem Sanctae Sedis declarationibus supervixit; quo factum est, ut nonnulli etiam boni nominis theologi raro et positus compluribus condicionibus
- ... The desire, in fact, of Jesus Christ and of the Church that all the faithful of Christ approach the sacred banquet daily consists above all in this, that the faithful of Christ being joined with God through the sacrament may receive from it the strength to restrain passion, to wash away the little faults that occur daily, and to guard against more grievous sins to which human frailty is subject; not principally, however, to render honor and veneration to God or as a sort of compensation or reward for the virtues of those who receive (communion). Whence, the Sacred Council of Trent calls the Eucharist “an antidote, by which we are freed from daily faults and are preserved from mortal sins” [*1638]....
- Because piety grew cold in the interim, and especially because the plague of Jansenism raged on all sides, disputes began as to what dispositions are necessary for approaching communion on a frequent and daily basis, and some more than others demanded the greater and more difficult as necessary. Such discussions brought it about that very few were judged worthy to partake of the most holy Eucharist every day and to draw the more abundant effects from such a salutary sacrament: the rest being content to be renewed either once a year or every month, or at most once a week. Such a point of severity was reached that entire groups were excluded from frequenting the heavenly table, for example, merchants or those joined in marriage.
- Yet others went astray to the contrary view. Judging daily communion to be a divine precept, and in order that not a day might pass without communion, ... they believed that it was necessary to receive and distribute the Eucharist even on Good Friday.¹
- The Holy See did not neglect its duty in this regard [cf. *2090–2095, 2323].... Nevertheless, the Jansenist virus, which had infected even the minds of good people under the semblance of the honor and veneration due to the Eucharist, did not completely disappear. The question of the dispositions for properly and legitimately receiving frequent communion continued even after the declarations of the Holy See; as a result, even some quotidianam communionem fidelibus permitti posse censuerint.

¹ 3377 Cf. the decree of the Congregation of the Council of February 12, 1679 (*2095 and 2090^o) in relation to the eucharistic movement that developed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries in northern Italy and especially in Spain. The conclusion that communion should also be provided on Good Friday was maintained in particular by Antonio Velásquez Pinto, C.R.M., Tesoro de los Christianos (Madrid, 1662). Against this conclusion, the above-mentioned decree had already upheld the Roman usage. After the reform of the Holy Week liturgy, the previously rejected usage was admitted: cf. the decree of the Congregation of Rites, Maxima Redemptionis of November 16, 1955, instruction no. 19 (AAS 47 [1955]: 846).

Concilii Congregatio ... statuit et declaravit:

1. Communio frequens et quotidiana ... omnibus Christifidelibus cuiusvis ordinis aut condicionis pateat, ita ut nemo, qui in statu gratiae sit et cum recta piaque mente ad s. mensam accedat, impediri ab ea possit.

2. Recta autem mens in eo est, ut qui ad s. mensam accedit, non usui aut vanitati aut humanis rationibus imdulgeat, sed Dei placito satisfacere velit, ei arctius caritate coniungi ac divino illo pharmaco suis infirmitatibus ac defectibus occurrere.

3. Etsi quam maxime expediat, ut frequenti et quotidiana communione utentes venialibus peccatis, saltem plene deliberatis, eorumque affectu sint expertes, sufficit nihilominus, ut culpis mortalibus vacent, cum proposito, se numquam in posterum peccaturos...

4. ... Curandum est, ut sedula ad sacram communionem praeparatio antecedit et congrua gratiarum actio inde sequatur iuxta uniuscuiusque vires, condicionem ac officia.

5. ... Confessarii consilium intercedat. Caveant tamen confessarii, ne a frequenti seu quotidiana communione quemquam avertant, qui in statu gratiae reperiatur et recta mente accedat...

reputable theologians have held that daily communion could be permitted for the faithful only rarely and under numerous conditions.

The Congregation of the Council has ... established and decreed: 3379

1. Frequent and daily communion ... must be open to all the faithful of whatever class or condition, so that none who is in the state of grace and approaches the holy table with a right and pious intention may be turned away from it.

2. The right intention consists in this, that a person approach the holy table, not from routine, vanity, or human motives, but because he wishes to please God, to be more closely united with him in charity, and to overcome his infirmities and defects by means of this divine remedy. 3380

3. Though it is extremely desirable that those who practice frequent and daily communion be free from venial sins, or at least from fully deliberate ones, and from all attachment to them, yet it is enough that they be free from mortal sins and resolved never to sin again. ... 3381

4. ... Care must be taken that holy communion be preceded by a solid preparation and followed by a proper thanksgiving, according to each one's strength, condition, and duties. 3382

5. ... The advice of a confessor should be sought. Nevertheless, confessors should take care not to keep away from frequent or daily communion anyone who is found (to be) in the state of grace and who approaches (the sacrament) with the right disposition. ... 3383

3385–3388: Decree Provida sapientique cura, January 18, 1906

Since the Tridentine decree Tametsi (*1813–1816) had authority only in certain German territories, some uncertainties arose in marital legislation. These were further increased by the modification of territorial boundaries. In order to resolve this problem, the German bishops, together with the Congregation of the Inquisition, collaborated on the decree Provida sapientique cura.

Ed.: ASS 39 (1906/1907): 82–84 / Pius X, Acta 3:10–12 / AnE 14 (1906): 149b–150a / ArchKKR 86 (1906): 344f.

The Tridentine Norm concerning Clandestine Marriages

... I. In universo hodierno Imperio Germaniae caput "Tametsi" Concilii Tridentini [*1813–1816], quamvis in pluribus locis sive per expressam publicationem sive per legitimam observantiam nondum fuerit certo promulgatum et inductum, tamen inde a die festo Paschae (id est a die 15. Aprilis) huius anni 1906 omnes catholicos, etiam hucusque immunes a forma Tridentina servanda, ita adstringat, ut inter se non aliter quam coram paroco et duobus vel tribus testibus validum matrimonium celebrare possint [cf. *3468–3474].

... I. Even though the chapter Tametsi of the Council of Trent [*1813–1816], has certainly not yet been promulgated and introduced in many places—either by express publication or by lawful observance—nevertheless, beginning on the feast of Easter (that is, on April 15) this year, 1906, it must bind all Catholics in the entire German empire today, even those who, up until now, were exempt from the Tridentine form, so that they cannot celebrate a valid marriage between one another except in the presence of a parish priest and two or three witnesses [cf. *3468–3474]. 3385

3386 II. Matrimonia mixta, quae a catholicis cum haereticis vel schismaticis contrahuntur, graviter sunt manentque prohibita, nisi accedente iusta gravique causa canonica, datis integre, formiter, utrimque legitimis cautionibus, per partem catholicam dispensatio super impedimento mixtae religionis rite fuerit obtenta.

Quae quidem matrimonia, dispensatione licet impetrata, omnino in facie Ecclesiae coram parochia ac duobus tribusve testibus celebranda sunt, adeo ut graviter delinquant, qui coram ministro acatholico vel coram solo civili magistratu vel alio quolibet modo clandestino contrahunt. Immo si qui catholici in matrimoniis istis mixtis celebrandis ministri acatholici operam exquirunt vel admittunt, aliquid patrant delictum et canonicis censuris subiacent.

3387 Nihilominus matrimonia mixta in quibusvis Imperii Germanici provinciis et locis, etiam in iis, quae iuxta Romanarum Congregationum decisiones vi irritanti capituli "Tametsi" certo hucusque subiecta fuerunt, non servata forma Tridentina iam contracta vel (quod Deus avertat) in posterum contrahenda, dummodo nec aliud obstet canonicum impedimentum, nec sententia nullitatis propter impedimentum clandestinitatis ante diem festum Paschae huius anni legitime lata fuerit et mutuus coniugum consensus usque ad dictam diem perseveraverit, pro validis omnino haberi volumus idque expresse declaramus, definimus atque decernimus.

3388 III. Ut autem iudicibus ecclesiasticis tuta norma praesto sit, hoc idem iisdemque sub condicionibus et restrictionibus declaramus, statuimus ac decernimus de matrimoniis acatholicorum, sive haereticorum sive schismaticorum, inter se in iisdem regionibus non servata forma Tridentina hucusque contractis vel in posterum contrahendis; ita ut, si alter vel uterque acatholicorum coniugum ad fidem catholicam convertatur, vel in foro ecclesiastico controversia incidat de validitate matrimonii duorum acatholicorum cum quaestione validitatis matrimonii ab aliquo catholico contracti vel contrahendi conexa, eadem matrimonia ceteris paribus pro omnino validis pariter habenda sint. . . .

II. Mixed marriages, which are contracted by Catholics with heretics or schismatics, are and remain firmly prohibited, unless, when a just and grave canonical reason is present, the legitimate cautions have been given to both parties, fully and according to form, (and) a dispensation has been duly obtained from the impediment of the mixed religion by the Catholic party.

These marriages, to be sure, although a dispensation has been procured, are by all means to be celebrated in the sight of the Church, in the presence of a priest and two or three witnesses, so much so that they sin gravely who contract them in the presence of a non-Catholic minister or in the presence of only a civil magistrate or in any clandestine manner. Moreover, if any Catholics in celebrating these marriages seek and accept the service of a non-Catholic minister, they commit another sin and are subject to canonical censures.

Nevertheless, mixed marriages in all provinces and localities of the German Empire, even in those that according to the decisions of the Roman Congregations have thus far been subject to the definitely invalidating force of the chapter Tametsi, already contracted without preserving the Tridentine form or (and, may God forbid this) to be contracted in the future, provided no other canonical impediment stands in the way and no decision of nullity because of the impediment of clandestinity has been lawfully passed before the feast day of Easter of this year and the mutual consent of the spouses has persevered up to the said day, these mixed marriages we wish to be upheld as entirely valid, and we declare, define, and decree this expressly.

III. In order, however, that a safe norm may be guaranteed for ecclesiastical judges, we declare, decide, and decree this same (pronouncement), and under the same conditions and restrictions, with regard to non-Catholic marriages, whether of heretics or of schismatics, thus far contracted between themselves in the same regions without preserving the Tridentine formula or hereafter to be contracted; so that, if one or both of the non-Catholic spouses should be converted to the Catholic faith, or controversy should occur in an ecclesiastical court regarding the validity of the marriage of two non-Catholics, which is bound up with the question of the validity of the marriage contracted or to be contracted by some Catholic, these same marriages, all other things being equal, are similarly to be held as entirely valid. . . .

3391: Decree of the Holy Office, April 25, 1906

The decree, confirmed by Pius X on April 26, is directed against those theologians who, in reference to the Council of Florence (cf. *1324), taught that express mention of the senses to be anointed belongs to the essential form of the anointing of the sick.

Ed.: ASS 39 (1906/1907): 273 / AnE 14 (1906): 278a.

The Necessary Form of Extreme Unction

Cum ... quaesitum fuerit, ut unica determinaretur formula brevis in administratione sacramenti Extremae Unctionis in casu mortis imminentis, ... [Inquisitores] decreverunt:

In casu verae necessitatis sufficere formam: “Per istam sanctam unctionem indulgeat tibi Dominus, quidquid deliquisti. Amen.”

Since ... it has been asked that a single brief formula be established for administering the sacrament of extreme unction in case of imminent death, ... [the Inquisitors] have decreed:

In case of real necessity, this form suffices: “By means of this holy oil, may the Lord pardon you for whatever wrong you have done. Amen.”

3394–3397: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 27, 1906

Ed.: ASS 39 (1906/1907): 377f. / AnE 14 (1906): 305 / EnchB nos. 181–84.

The Mosaic Authorship of the Pentateuch

Qu. 1: Utrum argumenta a criticis congesta ad impugnandam authenticam mosaicam sacrorum librorum, qui Pentateuchi nomine designantur, tanti sint ponderis, ut, posthabitis quampluribus testimoniis utriusque Testamenti collective sumptis, perpetua consensione populi iudaici, Ecclesiae quoque constanti traditione nec non indiciis internis, quae ex ipso textu eruuntur, ius tribuant affirmandi, hos libros non Moysen habere auctorem, sed ex fontibus maxima ex parte aetate mosaica posterioribus fuisse confectos?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 2: Utrum mosaica authenticam Pentateuchi talem necessario postulet redactionem totius operis, ut prorsus tenendum sit, Moysen omnia et singula manu sua scripsisse vel amanuensibus dictasse; an etiam eorum hypothesis permitti possit, qui existimant, eum opus ipsum a se sub divinae inspirationis afflatu conceptum alteri vel pluribus scribendum commisisse, ita tamen, ut sensa sua fideliter redderent, nihil contra suam voluntatem scriberent, nihil omitterent; ac tandem opus hac ratione confectum, ab eodem Moyse principe inspiratoque auctore probatum, ipsiusmet nomine vulgaretur?

Resp.: Negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad secundam.

Qu. 3: Utrum absque praeiudicio mosaicae authenticam Pentateuchi concedi possit, Moysen ad suum conficiendum opus fontes adhibuisse, scripta videlicet documenta vel orales traditiones, ex quibus secundum peculiarem scopum sibi propositum et sub divinae inspirationis afflatu nonnulla hauserit eaque ad verbum vel quoad sententiam contracta vel amplificata ipsi operi inseruerit?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 4: Utrum salva substantialiter mosaica authenticam et integritate Pentateuchi admitti possit, tam longo saeculorum decursu nonnullas ei modificationes

Question 1: Are the arguments accumulated by critics to impugn the Mosaic authenticity of the Sacred Books that are designated by the name of Pentateuch of such weight that, in spite of the very many indications of both Testaments taken together, the continuous conviction of the Jewish people, and also the unbroken tradition of the Church in addition to the internal evidences drawn from the text itself, they justify affirming that these books were not written by Moses but were composed for the most part from sources later than the time of Moses?

Response: No.

Question 2: Does the Mosaic authenticity of the Pentateuch necessarily demand such a redaction of the whole work that it must be held absolutely that Moses wrote all and each book with his own hand or dictated them to copyists; or, also, can the hypothesis be permitted of those who think that the work was conceived by him under the influence of divine inspiration and was committed to another or several to be put into writing, but in such manner that they rendered his thought faithfully, wrote nothing contrary to his wish, omitted nothing; and, finally, when the work was composed in this way, approved by Moses as its chief and inspired author, it was published under his name?

Response: No, for the first part; yes, for the second.

Question 3: Can it be granted, without prejudice to the Mosaic authenticity of the Pentateuch, that Moses for the composition of the work made use of sources, namely, written documents or oral tradition, from which, according to the particular goal set before him and under the influence of divine inspiration, he made some borrowings, and these, arranged word for word according to sense or amplified, he inserted into the work itself?

Response: Yes.

Question 4: Can it be admitted, safeguarding substantially the Mosaic authenticity and the integrity of the Pentateuch, that over such a long course of ages it obvenisse, uti: additamenta post Moysi mortem vel ab auctore inspirato apposita vel glossas et explicationes textui interiectas, vocabula quaedam et formas e sermone antiquato in sermonem recentiorem translatas, mendosas demum lectiones vitio amanuensium adscribendas, de quibus fas sit ad normas artis criticae disquirere et iudicare?

Resp.: Affirmative, salvo Ecclesiae iudicio.

underwent some modifications, for example: additions made after the death of Moses or by an inspired author or glosses and explanations inserted in the texts, certain words and forms of the antiquated language translated into more modern language; finally false readings to be ascribed to the errors of copyists, which should be examined and judged according to the norms of textual criticism.

Response: Yes, the judgment of the Church being maintained.

3398–3400: Response of the Biblical Commission, May 29, 1907

Ed.: ASS 40 (1907): 383f. / AnE 15 (1907): 259f. / EnchB nos. 187–89.

The Author and Historical Truth of the Fourth Gospel

3398 Qu. 1: Utrum ex constanti, universali ac solemnii Ecclesiae traditione iam a saeculo II decurrente, prout maxime eruitur:

a) ex SS. Patrum, scriptorum ecclesiasticorum, imo etiam haereticorum, testimoniis et allusionibus, quae, cum ab Apostolorum discipulis vel primis successoribus derivasse oportuerit, necessario nexu cum ipsa libri origine cohaerent;

b) ex recepto semper et ubique nomine auctoris quarti Evangelii in canone et catalogis sacrorum Librorum;

c) ex eorundem Librorum vetustissimis manuscriptis, codicibus et in varia idiomatica versionibus;

d) ex publico usu liturgico inde ab Ecclesiae primordiis toto orbe obtinente;

praescindendo ab argumento theologico, tam solido argumento historico demonstratur Ioannem Apostolum et non alium quarti Evangelii auctorem esse agnoscendum, ut rationes a criticis in oppositum adductae hanc traditionem nullatenus infirment?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3399 Qu. 2: Utrum etiam rationes internae, quae eruuntur ex textu quarti Evangelii seiunctim considerato, ex scribentis testimonio et Evangelii ipsius cum I Epistola Ioannis Apostoli manifesta cognatione, censendae sint confirmare traditionem, quae eidem Apostolo quartum Evangelium indubitanter attribuit?

Et utrum difficultates, quae ex collatione ipsius Evangelii cum aliis tribus desumuntur, habita prae oculis diversitate temporis, scopi et auditorum, pro quibus vel contra quos auctor scripsit, solvi rationabiliter possint, prout SS. Patres et exegetae catholici passim praestiterunt?

Resp.: Affirmative ad utramque partem.

Question 1: On the basis of the constant, universal, and solemn tradition of the Church coming down from the second century, inasmuch as it is taken chiefly:

a. from the testimonies and allusions of the holy Fathers, ecclesiastical writers, even heretics, which, since they must derive from the disciples and first successors of the apostles, are necessarily closely connected with the very origin of the work itself;

b. from the acceptance always and everywhere of the name of the author of the fourth Gospel in the canon and in the lists of the Sacred Scriptures;

c. from the oldest manuscripts, codices, and versions in various languages of the same books;

d. from the public liturgical practice prevailing in the whole world from the beginnings of the Church;

prescinding from theological proof, is it demonstrated by such strong historical proof that John the apostle and no other is to be recognized as the author of the fourth Gospel that the reasons adduced by critics in opposition by no means weaken this tradition?

Response: Yes.

Question 2: Likewise, are the internal reasons, which are taken from the text of the fourth Gospel, considered separately, from the testimony of the author and the manifest relationship of the Gospel itself with the First Epistle of the apostle John, to be considered as confirming the tradition that undoubtedly attributes the fourth Gospel to the same apostle?

And can the difficulties that are taken from a comparison of this Gospel with the other three be reasonably solved, keeping in view the diversity of the times, purposes, and audiences for whom and against whom the author wrote, just as the holy Fathers and Catholic exegetes far and wide have shown?

Response: Yes, to both parts.

Qu. 3: Utrum, non obstante praxi, quae a primis temporibus in universa Ecclesia constantissime viguit, arguendi ex quarto Evangelio tamquam ex documento proprie historico, considerata nihilominus indole peculiari eiusdem Evangelii et intentione auctoris manifesta illustrandi et vindicandi Christi divinitatem ex ipsis factis et sermonibus Domini, dici possit, facta narrata in quarto Evangelio esse totaliter vel ex parte conficta ad hoc, ut sint allegoriae vel symbola doctrinalia, sermones vero Domini non proprie et vere esse ipsius Domini sermones, sed compositiones theologicas scriptoris, licet in ore Domini positas?

Resp.: Negative.

Question 3: Can it be said, notwithstanding the practice that flourished constantly in the whole Church from the earliest times of arguing from the fourth Gospel as from a truly historical document, in consideration, nevertheless, of the particular nature of the same Gospel and of the manifest intention of the author to illustrate and to prove the divinity of Christ from the very deeds and words of the Lord, that the deeds related in the fourth Gospel are totally or partially so invented that they are allegories or doctrinal symbols; but that the words of the Lord are not properly and truly the words of the Lord himself, but theological compositions of the writer, although placed in the mouth of the Lord?

Response: No.

3401–3466: Decree of the Holy Office Lamentabili, July 3, 1907

This decree, confirmed by the Pope on July 4, is the first papal doctrinal writing in which what is called modernism was condemned. The condemned propositions are taken partly from certain authors of whom the most important are: Alfred Loisy (especially for his book L'Évangile et L'Église [1902] and Autour d'un petit livre [1903]), Edouard le Roy, Ernest Dimnet, and Albert Houtin (La Question biblique chez les catholiques de France au XIX^e siècle [1902]). In part, however, the propositions from the condemned writings contain conclusions not drawn by the authors themselves. A third group of propositions expresses views supported by the spirit of the age, which are condemned as they sound ("prout sonant"). A complement to the decree is constituted by the encyclical Pascendi dominici gregis (*3475–3500) and the oath against modernism (*3537–3550). The obligation of the oath was suspended in 1967.

Ed.: ASS 40 (1907): 470–78 / Pius X, Acta 5:77–84 / AnE 15 (1907): 276b–278b / EnchB nos. 192–256.

Errors of the Modernists

The Emancipation of Exegesis from the Magisterium of the Church

1. Ecclesiastica lex, quae praescribit subicere praeviae censurae libros divinas respicientes Scripturas, ad cultores critices aut exegeseos scientifica Librorum Veteris et Novi Testamenti non extenditur.

2. Ecclesiae interpretatio sacrorum Librorum non est quidem spernenda, subiacet tamen accuratiori exegetarum iudicio et correctioni.

3. Ex iudiciis et censuris ecclesiasticis contra liberam et cultiorem exegesim latis colligi potest, fidem ab Ecclesia propositam contradicere historiae, et dogmata catholica cum verioribus christianae religionis originibus componi reipsa non posse.

4. Magisterium Ecclesiae ne per dogmaticas quidem definitiones genuinum sacrarum Scripturarum sensum determinare potest.

5. Cum in deposito fidei veritates tantum revelatae contineantur, nullo sub respectu ad Ecclesiam pertinet iudicium ferre de assertionibus disciplinarum humanarum.

6. In definiendis veritatibus ita collaborant discens et docens Ecclesia, ut docenti Ecclesiae nihil supersit, nisi communes discentis opinioniones sancire.

1. The ecclesiastical law that prescribes that books concerning the divine Scriptures are subject to previous examination does not apply to critical scholars and students of scientific exegesis of the Old and New Testament.

2. The Church's interpretation of the Sacred Books is by no means to be rejected; nevertheless, it is subject to the more accurate judgment and correction of the exegetes.

3. From the ecclesiastical judgments and censures passed against free and more scientific exegesis, one can conclude that the faith the Church proposes contradicts history and that Catholic teaching cannot really be reconciled with the true origins of the Christian religion.

4. Even by dogmatic definitions the Church's Magisterium cannot determine the genuine sense of the Sacred Scriptures.

5. Since the deposit of faith contains only revealed truths, the Church has no right to pass judgment on the assertions of the human sciences.

6. The "Church learning" and the "Church teaching" collaborate in such a way in defining truths that it only remains for the "Church teaching" to sanction the opinions of the "Church learning".

- 3407 7. Ecclesia, cum proscribit errores, nequit a fidelibus exigere ullum internum assensum, quo iudicia a se edita complectantur.
- 3408 8. Ab omni culpa immunes existimandi sunt, qui reprobationes a Sacra Congregatione Indicis aliisve Sacris Romanis Congregationibus latas nihili pendunt.
7. In proscribing errors, the Church cannot demand any internal assent from the faithful by which the judgments she issues are to be embraced.
8. They are free from all blame who treat lightly the condemnations passed by the Sacred Congregation of the Index or by the other Sacred Roman Congregations.

The Inspiration and Inerrancy of Sacred Scripture

- 3409 9. Nimiam simplicitatem aut ignorantiam prae se ferunt, qui Deum credunt vere esse Scripturae sacrae auctorem.
- 3410 10. Inspiratio librorum Veteris Testamenti in eo consistit, quod scriptores israelitae religiosas doctrinas sub peculiari quodam aspectu, gentibus parum noto aut ignoto, tradiderunt.
- 3411 11. Inspiratio divina non ita ad totam Scripturam sacram extenditur, ut omnes et singulas eius partes ab omni errore praemuniat.
- 3412 12. Exegeta, si velit utiliter studiis biblicis incumbere, imprimis quamlibet praeconceptam opinionem de supernaturali origine Scripturae sacrae seponere debet, eamque non aliter interpretari quam cetera documenta mere humana.
- 3413 13. Parabolas evangelicas ipsimet Evangelistae ac Christiani secundae et tertiae generationis artificiose digesserunt, atque ita rationem dederunt exigui fructus praedicationis Christi apud Iudaeos.
- 3414 14. In pluribus narrationibus non tam quae vera sunt Evangelistae retulerunt, quam quae lectoribus, etsi falsa, censuerunt magis proficua.
- 3415 15. Evangelia usque ad definitum constitutumque canonem continuis additionibus et correctionibus aucta fuerunt; in ipsis proinde doctrinae Christi non remansit nisi tenue et incertum vestigium.
- 3416 16. Narrationes Ioannis non sunt proprie historia, sed mystica Evangelii contemplatio; sermones in eius Evangelio contenti sunt meditationes theologicae circa mysterium salutis, historica veritate destitutae.
- 3417 17. Quartum Evangelium miracula exaggeravit, non tantum ut extraordinaria magis apparerent, sed etiam ut aptiora fierent ad significandum opus et gloriam Verbi Incarnati.
- 3418 18. Ioannes sibi vindicat quidem rationem testis de Christo; re tamen vera non est nisi eximius testis vitae christianae, seu vitae Christi in Ecclesia exeunte primo saeculo.
- 3419 19. Heterodoxi exegetae fidelius expresserunt sensum verum Scripturarum quam exegetae catholici.
9. They display excessive simplicity or ignorance who believe that God is really the author of the Sacred Scriptures.
10. The inspiration of the books of the Old Testament consists in this: The Israelite writers handed down religious doctrines under a certain particular aspect that was either little or not at all known to the Gentiles.
11. Divine inspiration does not extend to the whole of Sacred Scriptures in such a way that each and every one of its parts is protected from all error.
12. If he wishes to apply himself usefully to biblical studies, the exegete must first put aside all preconceived opinions about the supernatural origin of Sacred Scripture and interpret it the same as any other merely human document.
13. The evangelists themselves, as well as the Christians of the second and third generation, artificially arranged the evangelical parables. And in this way they gave an explanation for the meager fruit of the preaching of Christ among the Jews.
14. In many narrations the evangelists recorded, not so much things that are true as things that, even though false, they judged to be more profitable for their readers.
15. Until the time the canon was defined and constituted, the Gospels were increased by additions and corrections. Therefore there remained in them only a faint and uncertain trace of the doctrine of Christ.
16. The narrations of John are not properly history but a mystical contemplation of the Gospel. The discourses contained in his Gospel are theological meditations on the mystery of salvation that lack historical truth.
17. The fourth Gospel exaggerated miracles, not only to have them appear more extraordinary, but also in order that it might become more suitable for showing forth the work and glory of the Word Incarnate.
18. John claims for himself the quality of witness concerning Christ. In reality, however, he is only a distinguished witness of the Christian life, or of the life of Christ in the Church at the close of the first century.
19. Heterodox exegetes have expressed the true sense of the Scriptures more faithfully than Catholic exegetes.

The Concept of Revelation and of Dogma

20. Revelatio nihil aliud esse potuit quam acquisita ab homine suae ad Deum relationis conscientia. 20. Revelation could be nothing else than the consciousness acquired by man of his relation to God. 3420
21. Revelatio, obiectum fidei catholicae constituens, non fuit cum Apostolis completa. 21. Revelation, constituting the object of the Catholic faith, was not completed with the apostles. 3421
22. Dogmata, quae Ecclesia perhibet tamquam revelata, non sunt veritates e caelo delapsae, sed sunt interpretatio quaedam factorum religiosorum, quam humana mens laborioso conatu sibi comparavit. 22. The dogmas the Church presents as revealed are not truths fallen from heaven, but a certain interpretation of religious facts that the human mind has acquired by laborious effort. 3422
23. Existere potest et reipsa existit oppositio inter facta, quae in sacra Scriptura narrantur, eisque innixa Ecclesiae dogmata; ita ut criticus tamquam falsa reicere possit facta, quae Ecclesia tamquam certissima credit. 23. Opposition may, and actually does, exist between the facts narrated in Sacred Scripture and the Church's dogmas that rest on them. Thus the critic may reject as false facts the Church holds as most certain. 3423
24. Reprobandus non est exegeta, qui praemissas adstruit, ex quibus sequitur, dogmata historice falsa aut dubia esse, dummodo dogmata ipsa directe non neget. 24. The exegete who constructs premises from which it follows that dogmas are historically false or doubtful is not to be reproved as long as he does not directly deny the dogmas themselves. 3424
25. Assensus fidei ultimo innititur in congerie probabilitatum. 25. The assent of faith ultimately rests on an assembly of probabilities. 3425
26. Dogmata fidei retinenda sunt tantummodo iuxta sensum practicum, id est tamquam norma praeceptiva agendi, non vero tamquam norma credendi. 26. The dogmas of the faith are to be held only according to their practical sense; that is to say, as preceptive norms of conduct and not as norms of believing. 3426

On Christ

27. Divinitas Iesu Christi ex Evangeliiis non probatur; sed est dogma, quod conscientia christiana e notione Messiae deduxit. 27. The divinity of Jesus Christ is not proved from the Gospels. It is a dogma that the Christian conscience has derived from the notion of the Messiah. 3427
28. Iesus, cum ministerium suum exercebat, non in eum finem loquebatur, ut doceret se esse Messiam, neque eius miracula eo spectabant, ut id demonstraret. 28. When he was exercising his ministry, Jesus was not speaking in order to teach he was the Messiah, nor were his miracles aiming to prove this. 3428
29. Concedere licet, Christum, quem exhibet historia, multo inferiorem esse Christo, qui est obiectum fidei. 29. It is permissible to grant that the Christ whom history presents is far inferior to the Christ who is the object of faith. 3429
30. In omnibus textibus evangelicis nomen Filius Dei aequivalet tantum nomini Messias, minime vero significat Christum esse verum et naturalem Dei Filium. 30. In all the evangelical texts the name "Son of God" is equivalent only to that of "Messiah". It does not in the least way signify that Christ is the true and natural Son of God. 3430
31. Doctrina de Christo, quam tradunt Paulus, Ioannes et Concilia Nicaenum, Ephesinum, Chalcedonense, non est ea, quam Iesus docuit, sed quam de Iesu concepit conscientia christiana. 31. The doctrine concerning Christ taught by Paul, John, and the Councils of Nicaea, Ephesus, and Chalcedon is not that which Jesus taught but that which the Christian conscience conceived concerning Jesus. 3431
32. Conciliari nequit sensus naturalis textuum evangelicorum cum eo, quod nostri theologi docent de conscientia et scientia infallibili Iesu Christi. 32. It is impossible to reconcile the natural sense of the Gospel texts with the sense taught by our theologians concerning the conscience and the infallible knowledge of Jesus Christ. 3432
33. Evidens est cuique, qui praeconceptis non ducitur opinionibus, Iesum aut errorem de proximo messianico 33. Everyone who is not led by preconceived opinions can readily see that either Jesus professed an error 3433

adventu fuisse professum, aut maiorem partem ipsius doctrinae in Evangeliiis synopticis contentae authenticitate carere.

3434 34. Criticus nequit asserere Christo scientiam nullo circumscriptam limite nisi facta hypothese, quae historice haud concipi potest quaeque sensui morali repugnat, nempe Christum uti hominem habuisse scientiam Dei et nihilominus noluisse notitiam tot rerum communicare cum discipulis ac posteritate.

3435 35. Christus non semper habuit conscientiam suae dignitatis messianicae.

3436 36. Resurrectio Salvatoris non est proprie factum ordinis historici, sed factum ordinis mere supernaturalis nec demonstratum nec demonstrabile, quod conscientia christiana sensim ex aliis derivavit.

3437 37. Fides in resurrectionem Christi ab initio fuit non tam de facto ipso resurrectionis, quam de vita Christi immortalis apud Deum.

3438 38. Doctrina de morte piaculari Christi non est evangelica, sed tantum paulina.

concerning the immediate messianic coming or the greater part of his doctrine as contained in the Synoptic Gospels is destitute of authenticity.

34. The critic can ascribe to Christ an unlimited knowledge only on a hypothesis that cannot be historically conceived and is repugnant to the moral sense: namely, that Christ as man possessed the knowledge of God and yet was unwilling to communicate the knowledge of so many things to his disciples and posterity.

35. Christ did not always possess the consciousness of his messianic dignity.

36. The Resurrection of the Savior is not properly a fact of the historical order. It is a fact of merely the supernatural order (neither demonstrated nor demonstrable) that the Christian conscience gradually derived from other facts.

37. In the beginning, faith in the Resurrection of Christ was not so much in the fact itself of the Resurrection as in the immortal life of Christ with God.

38. The doctrine of the expiatory death of Christ is not evangelical but only Pauline.

The Sacraments

3439 39. Opiniones de origine sacramentorum, quibus Patres Tridentini imbuti erant quaeque in eorum canones dogmaticos procul dubio influxum habuerunt, longe distant ab iis, quae nunc penes historicos rei christianae indagatores merito obtinent.

3440 40. Sacramenta ortum habuerunt ex eo, quod Apostoli eorumque successores ideam aliquam et intentionem Christi, suadentibus et moventibus circumstantiis et eventibus, interpretati sunt.

3441 41. Sacramenta eo tantum spectant, ut in mentem hominis revocent praesentiam Creatoris semper beneficam.

3442 42. Communitas christiana necessitatem baptismi induxit, adoptans illum tamquam ritum necessarium eique professionis christianae obligationes annectens.

3443 43. Usus conferendi baptismum infantibus evolutio fuit disciplinaria, quae una ex causis exstitit, ut sacramentum resolveretur in duo, in baptismum scilicet et paenitentiam.

3444 44. Nihil probat ritum sacramenti confirmationis usurpatum fuisse ab Apostolis: formalis autem distinctio duorum sacramentorum, baptismi scilicet et confirmationis, haud spectat ad historiam christianismi primitivi.

39. The opinions on the origin of the sacraments with which the Fathers of Trent were imbued and that no doubt influenced their dogmatic canons are far different from those that now rightly prevail among historians of Christianity.

40. The sacraments had their origin in the fact that the apostles and their successors, swayed and moved by circumstances and events, interpreted some idea and intention of Christ.

41. The sacraments are intended merely to recall to man's mind the ever-beneficent presence of the Creator.

42. The Christian community imposed the necessity of baptism, adopted it as a necessary rite, and added to it the obligations of the Christian profession.

43. The practice of administering baptism to infants was a disciplinary evolution, which became one of the causes why the sacrament was divided into two, namely, baptism and penance.

44. There is nothing to prove that the rite of the sacrament of confirmation was employed by the apostles. The formal distinction of the two sacraments of baptism and confirmation does not pertain to the history of primitive Christianity.

45. Non omnia, quae narrat Paulus de institutione Eucharistiae [1 Cor 11:23–25], historice sunt sumenda.

45. Not everything that Paul narrates concerning the institution of the Eucharist [1 Cor 11:23–25] is to be taken historically. 3445

46. Non adfuit in primitiva Ecclesia conceptus de christiano peccatore auctoritate Ecclesiae reconciliato, sed Ecclesia nonnisi admodum lente huiusmodi conceptui assuevit. Immo etiam postquam paenitentia tamquam Ecclesiae institutio agnita fuit, non appellabatur sacramenti nomine, eo quod haberetur uti sacramentum probrosum.

46. In the primitive Church the concept of the Christian sinner reconciled by the authority of the Church did not exist. Only very slowly did the Church accustom herself to this concept. As a matter of fact, even after penance was recognized as an institution of the Church, it was not called a sacrament since it would be held as a disgraceful sacrament. 3446

47. Verba Domini: “Accipite Spiritum Sanctum; quorum remisieritis peccata, remittuntur eis, et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt” [Io 20:22s], minime referuntur ad sacramentum paenitentiae, quidquid Patribus Tridentinis asserere placuit.

47. The words of the Lord, “Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained” [Jn 20:22–23] in no way refer to the sacrament of penance, in spite of what it pleased the Fathers of Trent to say. 3447

48. Iacobus in sua epistola [Iac 5:14s] non intendit promulgare aliquod sacramentum Christi, sed commendare pium aliquem morem, et si in hoc more forte cernit medium aliquod gratiae, id non accipit eo rigore, quo acceperunt theologi, qui notionem et numerum sacramentorum statuerunt.

48. In his Epistle [Jas 5:14–15], James did not intend to promulgate a sacrament of Christ but only to commend a pious custom. If in this custom he happens to distinguish a means of grace, it is not in that rigorous manner in which it was taken by the theologians who laid down the notion and number of the sacraments. 3448

49. Coena christiana paulatim indolem actionis liturgicae assumente, hi, qui Coenae praeesse consueverant, characterem sacerdotalem acquisiverunt.

49. When the Christian supper gradually assumed the nature of a liturgical action, those who customarily presided over the supper acquired the sacerdotal character. 3449

50. Seniores, qui in Christianorum coetibus invigilandi munere fungebantur, instituti sunt ab Apostolis presbyteri aut episcopi ad providendum necessariae crescentium communitatum ordinationi, non proprie ad perpetuandam missionem et potestatem Apostolicam.

50. The elders who fulfilled the office of watching over the gatherings of the faithful were instituted by the apostles as priests or bishops to provide for the necessary ordering of the increasing communities and not properly for the perpetuation of the apostolic mission and power. 3450

51. Matrimonium non potuit evadere sacramentum novae legis nisi serius in Ecclesia; siquidem, ut matrimonium pro sacramento haberetur, necesse erat, ut praecederet plena doctrinae de gratia et sacramentis theologica explicatio.

51. It is impossible that matrimony could have become a sacrament of the New Law until later in the Church, since it was necessary that a full theological explication of the doctrine of grace and the sacraments should first take place before matrimony should be held as a sacrament. 3451

The Constitution of the Church

52. Alienum fuit a mente Christi Ecclesiam constituere veluti societatem super terram per longam saeculorum seriem duraturam; quin immo in mente Christi regnum caeli una cum fine mundi iamiam adventurum erat.

52. It was far from the mind of Christ to found a Church as a society that would continue on earth for a long course of centuries. On the contrary, in the mind of Christ the kingdom of heaven together with the end of the world was about to come immediately. 3452

53. Constitutio organica Ecclesiae non est immutabilis; sed societas christiana perpetuae evolutioni aequae ac societas humana est obnoxia.

53. The organic constitution of the Church is not immutable. Like human society, Christian society is subject to a perpetual evolution. 3453

54. Dogmata, sacramenta, hierarchia, tum quod ad notionem tum quod ad realitatem attinet, non sunt nisi intelligentiae christianae interpretationes evolutionesque, quae exiguum germen in Evangelio latens externis incrementis auxerunt perfeceruntque.

54. Dogmas, sacraments, and hierarchy, both their notion and reality, are only interpretations and evolutions of the Christian intelligence that have increased and perfected by an external series of additions the little germ latent in the Gospel. 3454

- 3455 55. Simon Petrus ne suspicatus quidem umquam est, sibi a Christo demandatum esse primatum in Ecclesia. 55. Simon Peter never even suspected that Christ entrusted the primacy in the Church to him.
- 3456 56. Ecclesia Romana non ex divinae providentiae ordinatione, sed ex mere politicis condicionibus caput omnium Ecclesiarum effecta est. 56. The Roman Church became the head of all the churches, not through the ordinance of divine providence, but merely through political conditions.
- 3457 57. Ecclesia sese praebet scientiarum naturalium et theologiarum progressibus infensam. 57. The Church has shown that she is hostile to the progress of the natural and theological sciences.

The Immutability of Religious Truths

- 3458 58. Veritas non est immutabilis plus quam ipse homo, quippe quae cum ipso, in ipso et per ipsum evolvitur. 58. Truth is no more immutable than man himself, since it evolved with him, in him, and through him.
- 3459 59. Christus determinatum doctrinae corpus omnibus temporibus cunctisque hominibus applicabile non docuit, sed potius inchoavit motum quendam religiosum diversis temporibus ac locis adaptatum vel adaptandum. 59. Christ did not teach a determined body of doctrine applicable to all times and all men but, rather, inaugurated a religious movement adapted or to be adapted to different times and places.
- 3460 60. Doctrina christiana in suis exordiis fuit iudaica, sed facta est per successivas evolutiones primum paulina, tum ioannica, demum hellenica et universalis. 60. Christian doctrine was originally Judaic. Through successive evolutions it became first Pauline, then Joannine, finally Hellenic and universal.
- 3461 61. Dici potest absque paradoxo, nullum Scripturae caput, a primo Genesis ad postremum Apocalypsis, continere doctrinam prorsus identicam illi, quam super eadem re tradit Ecclesia, et idcirco nullum Scripturae caput habere eundem sensum pro critico ac pro theologo. 61. It may be said without paradox that there is no chapter of Scripture, from the first of Genesis to the last of the Apocalypse, that contains a doctrine absolutely identical with that which the Church teaches on the same matter. For the same reason, therefore, no chapter of Scripture has the same sense for the critic and the theologian.
- 3462 62. Praecipui articuli Symboli Apostolici non eandem pro Christianis primorum temporum significationem habebant, quam habent pro Christianis nostri temporis. 62. The chief articles of the Apostles' Creed did not have the same sense for the Christians of the first ages as they have for the Christians of our time.
- 3463 63. Ecclesia sese praebet imparem ethicae evangelicae efficaciter tuendae, quia obstinate adhaeret immutabilibus doctrinis, quae cum hodiernis progressibus componi nequeunt. 63. The Church shows that she is incapable of effectively maintaining evangelical ethics since she obstinately clings to immutable doctrines that cannot be reconciled with modern progress.
- 3464 64. Progressus scientiarum postulat, ut reformentur conceptus doctrinae christianae de Deo, de creatione, de revelatione, de persona Verbi Incarnati, de redemptione. 64. Scientific progress demands that the concepts of Christian doctrine concerning God, creation, revelation, the Person of the incarnate Word, and Redemption be reformed.
- 3465 65. Catholicismus hodiernus cum vera scientia componi nequit, nisi transformetur in quendam christianismum non dogmaticum, id est in protestantismum latum et liberalem. 65. Modern Catholicism can be reconciled with true science only if it is transformed into a nondogmatic Christianity; that is to say, into a broad and liberal Protestantism.
- 3466 Censura Summi Pontificis: “Sanctitas Sua Decretum Eminentissimorum Patrum adprobavit et confirmavit, ac omnes et singulas supra recensitas propositiones ceu reprobatas ac proscriptas ab omnibus haberi mandavit.” Censure by the supreme pontiff: His Holiness approved and confirmed the decree of the most eminent Fathers and ordered that each and every one of the above-listed propositions be held by all as condemned and proscribed.

3468–3474: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Council Ne temere, August 2, 1907

Ed.: ASS 40 (1907): 527–30 / Pius X Acta 4:42–45 / AnE 15 (1907): 320b–321b.

Betrothal and Marriage

De sponsalibus. I. Ea tantum sponsalia habentur valida et canonicos sortiuntur effectus, quae contracta fuerint per scripturam subsignatam a partibus et vel a parochi aut loci Ordinario, vel saltem a duobus testibus. . . .

De matrimonio. III. Ea tantum matrimonia valida sunt, quae contrahuntur coram parochi vel loci Ordinario vel sacerdote ab alterutro delegato et duobus saltem testibus. . . .

VII. Imminente mortis periculo, ubi parochus vel loci Ordinarius vel sacerdos ab alterutro delegatus haberi nequeat, ad consulendum conscientiae et (si casus ferat) legitimationi proliis matrimonium contrahi valide ac licite potest coram quolibet sacerdote et duobus testibus.

VIII. Si contingat, ut in aliqua regione parochus locive Ordinarius aut sacerdos ab eis delegatus, coram quo matrimonium celebrari queat, haberi non possit eaque rerum condicio a mense iam perseveret, matrimonium valide ac licite iniri potest emissio a sponsis formali consensu coram duobus testibus.

XI. § 1. Statutis superius legibus tenentur omnes in catholica Ecclesia baptizati et ad eam ex haeresi aut schismate conversi (licet sive hi sive illi ab eadem postea defecerint), quoties inter se sponsalia vel matrimonia ineant.

§ 2. Vigent quoque pro iisdem de quibus supra catholicis, si cum acatholicis sive baptizatis sive non baptizatis, etiam post obtentam dispensationem ab impedimento mixtae religionis vel disparitatis cultus, sponsalia vel matrimonium contrahunt; nisi pro aliquo particulari loco aut regione aliter a S. Sede sit statutum.

§ 3. A catholici sive baptizati sive non baptizati, si inter se contrahunt, nullibi ligantur ad catholicam sponsalium vel matrimonii formam servandam.

Betrothal. I. Those betrothals alone are held valid and carry canonical effects that have been contracted in writing signed by the parties and either by the pastor or local Ordinary or at least by two witnesses. . . . 3468

Marriage. III. Only those marriages are valid that are contracted in the presence of the pastor or the local Ordinary, or a priest delegated by either one of the two, and at least two witnesses. . . . 3469

VII. If the danger of death is imminent, when the pastor or local Ordinary, or a priest delegated by either one of the two, cannot be obtained, out of consideration for the conscience (of the betrothed) and (if occasion warrants) for legitimizing offspring, marriage can be validly and licitly contracted in the presence of any priest and two witnesses. 3470

VIII. If it happens that in some region the pastor or local Ordinary or priest delegated by them, before whom marriage can be celebrated, cannot be obtained and this state of affairs has now endured for a month, the marriage can be validly and licitly entered upon after a formal consent has been given by the betrothed before two witnesses. 3471

XI. § 1. All who have been baptized in the Catholic Church and have been converted to her from heresy or schism, even if one or the other has afterward defected, as often as they enter upon mutual betrothal or marriage are bound by the laws above established. 3472

§ 2. They also hold for the same Catholics mentioned above if they contract betrothal or marriage with non-Catholics, whether baptized or not baptized, even after having obtained dispensation from the impediment of mixed marriage or of disparity of cult, unless it has otherwise been established by the Holy See for some particular place or region. 3473

§ 3. Non-Catholics, whether baptized or not baptized, if they make contracts between themselves are nowhere bound to keep the Catholic form of betrothal or of marriage. 3474

3475–3500: Encyclical Pascendi dominici gregis, September 8, 1907

Cf. *3401°. With this encyclical, so-called modernism was reduced to a system. This construct of ideas was not, as such, advanced by any of the “modernists”. It is almost certain that the dogmatic section was drafted by P. Johannes B. Lemius, O.M.I., and the practical section by Cardinal Louis Billot, S.J. Numerous drafts by other theologians were judged to be inadequate by the pope.

Ed.: ASS 40 (1907): 596–628 / Pius X, Acta 4:50–88.

Errors of the Modernists on Philosophical Principles

Philosophiae religiosae fundamentum in doctrina illa modernistae ponunt, quam vulgo agnosticis vocant. Vi huius humana ratio phaenomenis omnino includitur, Modernists place the foundation of religious philosophy in that doctrine which is usually called agnosticism. According to this teaching, human reason 3475

rebus videlicet, quae apparent eaque specie, qua apparent: earundem praetergredi terminos nec ius nec potestatem habet. Quare nec ad Deum se erigere potis est, nec illius existentiam, utut per ea, quae videntur, agnoscere. Hinc infertur, Deum scientiae obiectum directe nullatenus esse posse; ad historiam vero quod attinet, Deum subiectum historicum minime censendum esse.

His autem positis, quid de naturali theologia, quid de motivis credibilitatis, quid de externa revelatione fiat, facile quisque perspiciet. Ea nempe modernistae penitus e medio tollunt et ad intellectualismum amandant. . . .

3476 [597] [Ex agnosticismo deducunt:] atheam debere esse scientiam itemque historiam; in quarum finibus non nisi phaenomenis possit esse locus, exturbato penitus Deo et quidquid divinum est. . . .

3477 Hic tamen agnosticismus in disciplina modernistarum non nisi ut pars negans habenda est: positiva, ut aiunt, in immanentia vitali constituitur. Harum nempe ad aliam ex altera sic procedunt.

Religio, sive ea naturalis est sive supra naturam, ceu quodlibet factum explicationem aliquam admittat oportet. Explicatio autem, naturali theologia deleta adituque ad revelationem ob reiecta credibilitatis argumenta intercluso, immo etiam revelatione qualibet externa penitus sublata, extra hominem inquiritur frustra. Est igitur in ipso homine quaerenda: et quoniam religio vitae quaedam est forma, in vita omnino hominis reperienda est. Ex hoc immanentiae religiosae principium asseritur. Vitalis porro cuiuscumque phaenomeni, cuiusmodi religionem esse iam dictum est, prima veluti motio ex indigentia quapiam seu impulsione est repetenda: primordia vero, si de vita pressius loquamur, [598] ponenda sunt in motu quodam cordis, qui sensus dicitur. Eam ob rem, cum religionis obiectum sit Deus, concludendum omnino est, fidem, quae initium est ac fundamentum cuiusvis religionis, in sensu quodam intimo collocari debere, qui ex indigentia divini oriatur.

Haec porro divini indigentia, quia non nisi certis aptisque in complexibus sentitur, pertinere ad conscientiae ambitum ex se non potest; latet autem primo infra conscientiam, seu, ut mutuato vocabulo a moderna philosophia loquantur, in subconscientia. . . .

3478 In eiusmodi enim sensu modernistae non fidem tantum reperiunt; sed, cum fide inque ipsa fide, prout illam intelligunt, revelationi locum esse affirmant. . . . [599] Cum fidei Deus obiectum sit aequae et causa, revelatio illa et de Deo pariter et a Deo est; habet Deum videlicet revelantem simul ac revelatum. Hinc autem, is confined entirely within the field of phenomena, that is to say, to things that are perceptible to the senses and in the manner in which they are perceptible; it has no right and no power to transgress these limits. Hence it is incapable of lifting itself up to God and of recognizing his existence, even by means of visible things. From this it is inferred that God can never be the direct object of science and that, as regards history, he must not be considered as a historical subject.

Given these premises, all will readily perceive what becomes of natural theology, of the motives of credibility, of external revelation. The modernists simply make away with them altogether; they include them in intellectualism. . . .

[From agnosticism, they deduce that:] both science and history must be atheistic: and within their boundaries there is room for nothing but phenomena; God and all that is divine are utterly excluded. . . .

However, this agnosticism is only the negative part of the system of the modernists: the positive side of it consists in what they call vital immanence. This is how they advance from one to the other.

Religion, whether natural or supernatural, must, like every other fact, admit of some explanation. But when natural theology has been destroyed, the road to revelation closed through the rejection of the arguments of credibility, and all external revelation absolutely denied, it is clear that this explanation will be sought in vain outside man himself. It must, therefore, be looked for in man; and since religion is a form of life, the explanation must certainly be found in the life of man. Hence the principle of religious immanence is formulated. Moreover, the first actuation, so to say, of every vital phenomenon, and religion, as has been said, belongs to this category, is due to a certain necessity or impulsion; but it has its origin, speaking more particularly of life, in a movement of the heart, which movement is called a sentiment. Therefore, since God is the object of religion, we must conclude that faith, which is the basis and the foundation of all religion, consists in a sentiment that originates from a need of the divine.

This need of the divine, which is experienced only in special and favorable circumstances, cannot, of itself, appertain to the domain of consciousness; it is at first latent within the consciousness, or, to borrow a term from modern philosophy, in the subconsciousness. . . .

For modernism finds in this sentiment not faith only, but with and in faith, as they understand it, revelation, they say, abides. . . . Since God is both the object and the cause of faith, this revelation is at the same time of God and from God; that is, God is both the revealer and the revealed. Hence, Venerable Brethren, springs Venerabiles Fratres, affirmatio illa modernistarum perabsurda, qua religio quaelibet pro diverso aspectu naturalis una ac supernaturalis dicenda est. Hinc conscientiae ac revelationis promiscua significatio. Hinc lex, qua conscientia religiosa ut regula universalis traditur, cum revelatione penitus aequanda, cui subesse omnes oporteat, supremam etiam in Ecclesia potestatem, sive haec doceat, sive de sacris disciplinave statuatur. . . .

Incognoscibile, de quo loquuntur, non se fidei sistit ut nudum quid aut singulare; sed contra in phaenomeno aliquo arcte inhaerens, quod, quamvis ad campum scientiae aut historiae pertinet, ratione tamen aliqua praetergreditur. . . . Turn vero fides, ab incognoscibili allecta, quod cum phaenomeno iungitur, totum ipsum phaenomenon complectitur ac sua vita quodammodo permeat.

Ex hoc autem duo consequuntur. Primum, quaedam phaenomeni transfiguratio per elationem scilicet supra veras illius condiciones, qua aptior fiat materia ad induendam divini formam, quam fides est inductura. Secundum, phaenomeni eiusdem aliquapiam, sic vocare liceat, defiguratio inde nata, quod fides illi loci temporisque adiunctis exempto tribuit, quae reapse non habet; quod usuvenit praecipue, cum de phaenomenis agitur exacti temporis, eoque amplius, quo sunt vetustiora. Ex gemino hoc capite binos iterum modernistae [600] eruunt canones, qui alteri additi iam ex agnosticismo habito critices historicae fundamenta constituunt.

Exemplo res illustrabitur, sitque illud e Christi persona petitum. In persona Christi, aiunt, scientia atque historia nil praeter hominem offendunt. Ergo vi primi canonis ex agnosticismo deducti ex eius historia quidquid divinum redolet, delendum est. Porro vi alterius canonis Christi persona historica transfigurata est a fide: ergo subducendum ab ea, quidquid ipsam evehit supra condiciones historicas. Demum vi tertii canonis eadem persona Christi a fide defigurata est: ergo removenda sunt ab illa sermones, acta, quidquid, uno verbo, ingenio, statui, educationi eius, loco ac tempori, quibus vixit, minime respondet. . . .

Religiosus igitur sensus, qui per vitalimmanentiam e latebris subconscientiae erumpit, germen est totius religionis ac ratio pariter omnium, quae in religione quavis fuere aut sunt futura. . . .

that ridiculous proposition of the modernists, that every religion, according to the different aspect under which it is viewed, must be considered as both natural and supernatural. Hence it is that they make consciousness and revelation synonymous. Hence the law according to which religious consciousness is given as the universal rule to be put on an equal footing with revelation and to which all must submit, even the supreme authority of the Church, whether in its teaching capacity or in that of legislator in the province of sacred liturgy or discipline. . . .

For the unknowable of which they speak does 3479 not present itself to faith as something solitary and isolated; but rather it is in close conjunction with some phenomenon, which, though it belongs to the realm of science and history, yet to some extent oversteps their bounds. . . . Then faith, attracted by the unknowable that is united with the phenomenon, possesses itself of the whole phenomenon and, as it were, permeates it with its own life.

From this two things follow. The first is a sort of transfiguration of the phenomenon, by its elevation above its own true conditions, by which it becomes more adapted to that form of the divine which faith will infuse into it. The second is a kind of disfigurement, which springs from the fact that faith, which has made the phenomenon independent of the circumstances of place and time, attributes to it qualities that it has not; and this is true particularly of the phenomena of the past, and the older they are, the truer it is. From these two principles the modernists deduce two laws, which, when united with a third that they have already got from agnosticism, constitute the foundation of historical criticism.

We will take an illustration from the Person of 3480 Christ. In the Person of Christ, they say, science and history encounter nothing that is not human. Therefore, in virtue of the first canon deduced from agnosticism, whatever there is in his history suggestive of the divine must be rejected. Then, according to the second canon, the historical Person of Christ was transfigured by faith; therefore, everything that raises it above historical conditions must be removed. Finally, the third canon, which lays down that the Person of Christ has been disfigured by faith, requires that everything should be excluded, deeds and words and all else that is not in keeping with his character, circumstances, and education, and with the place and time in which he lived. . . .

Therefore, the religious sentiment, which through the 3481 agency of vital immanence emerges from the lurking places of the subconsciousness, is the germ of all religion and the explanation of everything that has been or ever will be in any religion. . . .

[601] In sensu illo, inquit, quem saepius nominavimus, quoniam sensus est, non cognitio, Deus quidem se homini sistit; verum confuse adeo ac permixte, ut a subiecto credente vix aut minime distinguatur. Necessè igitur est aliquo eundem sensum collustrari lumine, ut Deus inde omnino exiliat ac secernatur. Id nempe ad intellectum pertinet, cuius est cogitare et analysis instituire; per quem homo vitalia phaenomena in se exsurgentia in species primum traducit, tum autem verbis significat. Hinc vulgata modernistarum enuntiatio: debere religiosum hominem fidem suam cogitare...

3482 In eiusmodi autem negotio mens dupliciter operatur; primum, naturali actu et spontaneo, reddique rem sententia quadam simplici ac vulgari; secundo vero, reflexe ac penitius, vel, ut aiunt, cogitationem elaborando, eloquiturque cogitata secundariis sententiis, derivatis quidem a prima illa simplici, limatioribus tamen ac distinctioribus. Quae secundariae [602] sententiae, si demum a supremo Ecclesiae magisterio sancitae fuerint, constituent dogma.

3483 Sic igitur in modernistarum doctrina ventum est ad caput quoddam praecipuum, videlicet ad originem dogmatis atque ad ipsam dogmatis naturam. Originem enim dogmatis ponunt quidem in primigeniis illis formulis simplicibus, quae quodam sub respectu necessariae sunt fidei; nam revelatio, ut reapse sit, manifestam Dei notitiam in conscientia requirit. Ipsum tamen dogma secundariis proprie contineri formulis affirmare videntur...

Formularum eiusmodi non alium esse finem quam modum suppeditare credenti, quo sibi suae fidei rationem reddat. Quamobrem mediae illae sunt inter credentem eiusque fidem: ad fidem autem quod attinet, sunt inadaequatae eius obiecti notae, vulgo symbola vocitant; ad credentem quod spectat, sunt mera instrumenta.

... Obiectum autem sensus religiosi, utpote quod absoluto continetur, infinitos habet aspectus, quorum modo hic, modo alius apparere potest. Similiter homo, qui credit, aliis uti potest condicionibus. Ergo et formulas, quas dogma appellamus, vicissitudini eidem subesse oportet ac propterea varietati esse obnoxias. Ita vero ad intimam evolutionem dogmatis expeditum est iter.

Errors of the Modernists on the Concept of Faith

3484 [604] Modernistae credenti ratum ac certum est, realitatem divini reapse in se ipsam existere nec prorsus a credente pendere. Quod si postules, in quo tandem haec credentis assertio nitatur, reponent: in privata cuiusque hominis experientia ...: in sensu religioso quendam esse agnoscendum cordis intuitum; quo homo ipsam, sine

In that sentiment of which we have frequently spoken, since sentiment is not knowledge, God indeed presents himself to man, but in a manner so confused and indistinct that he can hardly be perceived by the believer. It is therefore necessary that a ray of light should be cast upon this sentiment, so that God may be clearly distinguished and set apart from it. This is the task of the intellect, whose office it is to reflect and to analyze and by means of which man first transforms into mental pictures the vital phenomena that arise within him and then expresses them in words. Hence the common saying of modernists: that the religious man must ponder his faith...

The operation of the intellect in this work is a double one: first by a natural and spontaneous act it expresses its concept in a simple, ordinary statement; then, on reflection and deeper consideration, or, as they say, by elaborating its thought, it expresses the idea in secondary propositions, which are derived from the first, but are more perfect and distinct. These secondary propositions, if they finally receive the approval of the supreme Magisterium of the Church, constitute dogma.

Thus, we have reached one of the principal points in the modernists' system, namely, the origin and the nature of dogma. For they place the origin of dogma in those primitive and simple formulae that, under a certain aspect, are necessary to faith; for revelation, to be truly such, requires the clear manifestation of God in the consciousness. But dogma itself, they apparently hold, is contained in the secondary formulae...

These formulas have no other purpose than to furnish the believer with a means of giving an account of his faith to himself. These formulas therefore stand midway between the believer and his faith; in their relation to the faith, they are the inadequate expression of its object and are usually called symbols; in their relation to the believer, they are mere instruments.

... But the object of the religious sentiment, since it embraces that absolute, possesses an infinite variety of aspects of which now one, now another, may present itself. In like manner, he who believes may pass through different phases. Consequently, the formulae too, which we call dogmas, must be subject to these vicissitudes and are, therefore, liable to change. Thus the way is open to the intrinsic evolution of dogma.

For the modernist believer, it is an established and certain fact that the divine reality does really exist in itself and quite independently of the person who believes in it. If you ask on what foundation this assertion of the believer rests, they answer: On the private experience of each man... In the religious sentiment one must medio, Dei realitatem attingit tantamque de existentia Dei haurit persuasionem deque Dei tum intra tum extra hominem actione, ut persuasionem omnem, quae ex scientia peti possit, longe antecellat. Veram igitur ponunt experientiam eamque rationali qualibet experientia praestantiorem....

[606] Fides ... id unice spectat, quod scientia incognoscibile sibi esse profitetur. Hinc ... scientia versatur in phaenomenis, ubi nullus fidei locus; fides e contra versatur in divinis, quae scientia penitus ignorat. Unde demum conficitur, inter fidem et scientiam numquam esse posse discidium....

Quibus si qui forte obiciant, quaedam in aspectabili occurrere natura rerum, quae ad fidem etiam pertineant, uti humanam Christi vitam, negabunt. Nam, etsi haec phaenomenis accensentur, tamen, quatenus vita fidei imbuuntur, et a fide, quo supra dictum est modo, transfigurata ac defigurata fuerunt [cf. *3479s], a sensibili mundo sunt abrepta et in divini materiam translata.

Quamobrem poscenti ulterius, an Christus [607] vera patrarit miracula vereque futura praesenserit, an vere revixerit atque in caelum conscenderit, scientia agnostica abnuet, fides affirmabit; ex hoc tamen nulla erit inter utramque pugna. Nam abnuet alter ut philosophus philosophos alloquens, Christum scilicet unice contemplatus secundum realitatem historicam; affirmabit alter ut credens cum credentibus locutus, Christi vitam spectans prout iterum vivitur a fide et in fide.

Ex his tamen fallitur vehementer, qui reputet posse opinari, fidem et scientiam alteram sub altera nulla penitus ratione esse subiectam. Nam de scientia quidem recte vereque existimabit; secus autem de fide, quae non uno tantum, sed triplici ex capite scientiae subici dicenda est.

Primum namque advertere oportet, in facto quovis religioso, detracta divina realitate quamque de illa habet experientiam, qui credit, cetera omnia, praesertim vero religiosas formulas, phaenomenorum ambitum minime transgredi, atque ideo cadere sub scientiam. ...

Praeterea, quamvis dictum est Deum solius fidei esse obiectum, id de divina quidem realitate concedendum est, non tamen de idea Dei. Haec quippe scientiae subest; quae dum in ordine, ut aiunt, logico philosophatur, quidquid etiam absolutum est attingit atque ideale. Quocirca philosophia seu scientia cognoscendi de idea recognize a kind of intuition of the heart that puts man in immediate contact with the very reality of God and infuses such a persuasion of God's existence and his action both within and without man as to exceed greatly any scientific conviction. They assert, therefore, the existence of a real experience, and one of a kind that surpasses all rational experience....

For faith ... occupies itself solely with something that science declares to be unknowable for it. Hence ... science is entirely concerned with the reality of phenomena, into which faith does not enter at all; faith, on the contrary, concerns itself with the divine reality that is entirely unknown to science. Thus the conclusion is reached that there can never be any dissension between faith and science.... 3485

And if it be objected that in the visible world there are some things that appertain to faith, such as the human life of Christ, (the modernists) reply by denying this. For though such things come within the category of phenomena, still in as far as they are lived by faith and in the way already described have been by faith transfigured and disfigured [cf. *3479f.], they have been removed from the world of sense and translated to become material for the divine.

Hence should it be further asked whether Christ has wrought real miracles and made real prophecies, whether he rose truly from the dead and ascended into heaven, the answer of agnostic science will be in the negative and the answer of faith in the affirmative—yet there will not be, on that account, any conflict between them. For it will be denied by the philosopher as philosopher, speaking to philosophers and considering Christ only in his historical reality; and it will be affirmed by the believer, speaking to believers and considering the life of Christ as lived again by the faith and in the faith.

Yet, it would be a great mistake to suppose that, given these theories, one is authorized to believe that faith and science are independent of one another. On the side of science the independence is indeed complete, but it is quite different with regard to faith, which is subject to science not on one but on three grounds. 3486

For in the first place it must be observed that in every religious fact, when you take away the divine reality and the experience of it that the believer possesses, everything else, and especially the religious formulas of it, belongs to the sphere of phenomena and therefore falls under the control of science....

Further, when it is said that God is the object of faith alone, the statement refers only to the divine reality, not to the idea of God. The latter also is subject to science, which, while it philosophizes in what is called the logical order, soars also to the absolute and the ideal. It is therefore the right of philosophy and of science to form conclusions concerning the idea of God, to direct it in its evolution, and to purify it of any extraneous elements that may become confused with it. From this, there follows the axiom of the modernists: Religious evolution ought to be brought into accord with moral and intellectual evolution; that is, as one of their teachers puts it, it should be subordinated to it.

Dei ius habet eamque in sui evolutione moderandi et, si quid extrarium invaserit, corrigendi. Hinc modernistarum effatum: evolutionem religiosam cum morali et intellectuali componi debere; videlicet, ut quidam tradit, quem magistrum sequuntur, eisdem subdi.

Accedit demum, quod homo dualitatem in se ipse non patitur: quamobrem credentem quaedam intima urget necessitas fidem cum scientia sic componendi, ut a generali ne discrepet idea, quam scientia exhibet de hoc mundo [608] universo. Sic ergo conficitur, scientiam a fide omnino solutam esse, fidem contra, utut scientiae extranea praedicetur, eidem subesse.

Finally, man does not suffer a dualism to exist in him, and the believer therefore feels within him an impelling need so to harmonize faith with science that it may never oppose the general conception that science sets forth concerning the universe. Thus it is evident that science is to be entirely independent of faith, while, on the other hand, and notwithstanding that they are supposed to be strangers to each other, faith is made subject to science.

Errors of the Modernists on Theological Dogmas

3487 [609]... Modernista theologus eisdem utitur principiis, quae usui philosopho esse vidimus, illaque ad credentem aptat: principia iniquimus immanentiae et symbolismi. Sic autem rem expeditissime perficit Traditur a philosopho, principium fidei esse immanens; a credente additur, hoc principium Deum esse; concludit ipse: Deus ergo est immanens in homine. Hinc immanentia theologica.

Iterum: philosopho certum est, repraesentationes obiecti fidei esse tantum symbolicas; credenti pariter certum est, fidei obiectum esse Deum in se; theologus igitur colligit: repraesentationes divinae realitatis esse symbolicas. Hinc symbolismus theologicus....

3488 [611] Fidei autem cum multa sint germina, praecipua vero Ecclesia, dogma, sacra et religiones, Libri quos sanctos nominamus, de his quoque quid modernistae doceant, inquirendum.

Atque ut dogma initium ponamus, huius quae sit origo et natura iam supra indicatum est [cf. *3482]. Oritur illud ex impulsione quadam seu necessitate, vi cuius qui credit in suis cogitatis elaborat, ut conscientia tam sua quam aliorum illustretur magis. Est hic labor in rimando totus expoliendoque primigeniam mentis formulam, non quidem in se illam secundum logicam explicationem, sed secundum circumstantia, seu, ut minus apte ad intelligendum inquirunt, vitaliter. Inde fit ut, circa illam, secundariae quaedam, ut iam innuimus, sensim enascantur formulae [cf. *3482s]; quae postea in unum corpus coagmentatae vel in unum doctrinae aedificium, cum a magisterio publico sancitae fuerint utpote communi conscientiae respondentes, dicuntur dogma. Ab hoc discernendae sunt probe theologorum commentationes....

The modernist theologian avails himself of exactly the same principles that we have seen employed by the modernist philosopher and applies them to the believer: the principles of immanence and symbolism. The process is an extremely simple one. The philosopher has declared: The principle of faith is immanent; the believer has added: This principle is God; and the theologian draws the conclusion: God is immanent in man. Thus we have theological immanence.

So too, the philosopher regards as certain that the representations of the object of faith are merely symbolical; the believer has affirmed that the object of faith is God in himself; and the theologian proceeds to affirm that: The representations of the divine reality are symbolical. And thus we have theological symbolism....

But as faith has many shoots, and chief among them the Church, dogma, worship, the Books that we call "Sacred", of these also we must know what is taught by the modernists.

To begin with dogma, we have already indicated its origin and nature [cf. *3482]. Dogma is born of the species of impulse or necessity by virtue of which the believer is constrained to elaborate his religious thought so as to render it clearer for himself and others. This elaboration consists entirely in the process of penetrating and refining the primitive formula, not indeed in itself and according to logical development, but as required by circumstances, or vitally, as the modernists more abstrusely put it. Hence it happens that around the primitive formula secondary formulas gradually continue to be formed [cf. *3482f.], and these, subsequently grouped into bodies of doctrine or into doctrinal constructions, as they prefer to call them, and further sanctioned by the public Magisterium as responding to the common consciousness, are called dogma. Dogma is to be carefully distinguished from the speculations of theologians....

[612] De cultu sacrorum haud foret multis dicendum, nisi eo quoque nomine sacramenta venirent; de quibus maximi modernistarum errores. Cultum ex duplici impulsione seu necessitate oriri perhibent. . . .

Altera est ad sensibile quiddam religioni tribuendum, altera ad eam proferendam, quod fieri utique nequaquam possit sine forma quadam sensibili et consecrantibus actibus, quae sacramenta dicimus. Sacramenta autem modernistis nuda sunt symbola seu signa, quamvis non vi carentia. Quam vim ut indicent, exemplo ipsi utuntur verborum quorundam, quae vulgo fortunam dicuntur sortita, eo quod virtutem conceperint ad notiones quasdam propagandas robustas maximeque percipientes animos. Sicut ea verba ad notiones, sic sacramenta ad sensum religiosum ordinata sunt: nihil praeterea. Clarius profecto dicerent, si sacramenta unice ad nutriendam fidem instituta affirmarent. Hoc tamen tridentina Synodus damnavit: “Si quis dixerit, haec sacramenta propter solam fidem nutriendam instituta fuisse, anathema sit” [*1605].

[Sacros Libros] ad modernistarum scita definire probe quis possit syllogem experientiarum non cuique passim advenientium, sed extraordinariarum atque insignium, quae in quapiam religione sunt habitae. . . .

Quamvis experientia sit praesentis temporis, posse tamen illam de praeteritis aequae ac de futuris materiam sumere, prout videlicet [613], qui credit, vel exacta rursus per recordationem in modum praesentium vivit, vel futura per praecoccupationem. Id autem explicat, quomodo historici quoque et apocalyptici in Libris sacris censerentur.

Sic igitur in hisce Libris Deus quidem loquitur per credentem; sed, uti fert theologia modernistarum, per immanentiam solummodo et permanentiam vitalem.

Quaeremus, quid tum de inspiratione? Haec, respondent, ab impulsione illa, nisi forte vehementia, nequaquam secernitur, qua credens ad fidem suam verbo scriptovae aperiendam adigitur. Simile quid habemus in poetica inspiratione; quare quidam aiebat: “Est Deus in nobis, agitante calescimus illo.”¹ Hoc modo Deus initium dici debet inspirationis sacrorum Librorum.

[De Ecclesia imaginantes] ponunt initio eam ex duplici necessitate oriri, una in credente quovis, in eo praesertim, qui primigeniam ac singularem aliquam sit nactus experientiam, ut fidem suam cum aliis communicet;

Concerning worship there would not be much to be said were it not that under this head are comprised the sacraments, concerning which the modernists fall into the gravest errors. For them the sacraments are the result of a double impulse or need. . . . 3489

In the present case, the first need is that of giving some sensible manifestation to religion; the second is that of propagating it, which could not be done without some sensible form and consecrating acts, and these are called sacraments. But for the modernists the sacraments are mere symbols or signs, though not devoid of a certain efficacy—an efficacy, they tell us, like that of certain phrases vulgarly described as having “caught on”, inasmuch as they have become the vehicle for the diffusion of certain great ideas that strike the public mind. What the phrases are to the ideas, that the sacraments are to the religious sentiment—that and nothing more. The modernists would be speaking more clearly were they to affirm that the sacraments are instituted solely to foster the faith—but this is condemned by the Council of Trent: “If anyone say that these sacraments are instituted solely to foster the faith, let him be anathema” [*1605].

According to the principles of the modernists [the Sacred Books] may be rightly described as a collection of experiences, not indeed of the kind that may come to anybody, but those extraordinary and striking ones that have happened in any religion. . . . 3490

Although experience is something belonging to the present, still it may derive its material from the past and the future alike, inasmuch as the believer by memory lives the past over again after the manner of the present and lives the future already by anticipation. This explains how it is that the historical and apocalyptic books are included among the Sacred Writings.

God does indeed speak in these books—through the medium of the believer, but only, according to modernistic theology, by vital immanence and permanence.

We will ask, then, what happens to inspiration? 3491 Inspiration, they reply, is distinguished only by its vehemence from that impulse which stimulates the believer to reveal the faith that is in him by words or writing. It is something like what happens in poetical inspiration, of which it has been said: “There is God in us, and when he stirreth he sets us afire.”¹ And it is precisely in this sense that God is said to be the origin of the inspiration of the Sacred Books.

[Fantazizing about the Church] they presuppose that the Church has her birth in a double need, one, the need of the individual believer, especially if he has had some original and special experience, to communicate his 3492

*3491 ¹ Ovidius Naso, Fastorum VI, 5 (ed. R. Merkel [Leipzig, 1911], 332).

altera, postquam fides communis inter plures evaserit, in collectivitate ad coalescendum in societatem et ad commune bonum tuendum, augendum, propagandum. Quid igitur Ecclesia? Partus est conscientiae collectivae seu consociationis conscientiarum singularium, quae vi permanentiae vitalis a primo [614] aliquo credente pendeant, videlicet, pro catholicis a Christo.

- 3493 [617] Principium [explicandi modernistice fidem] hic generale est: in religione, quae vivat, nihil variabile non esse atque idcirco variandum. Hinc gressum faciunt ad illud, quod in eorum doctrinis fere caput est, videlicet ad evolutionem. Dogma igitur, Ecclesia, sacrorum cultus, libri, quos ut sanctos veremur, quin etiam fides ipsa, nisi intermortua haec omnia velimus, evolutionis teneri legibus debent.

Errors of the Modernists regarding the Principles of Historical and Critical Investigation

- 3494 [621] Modernistarum quidam, qui componendis historiis se dedunt, solliciti magnopere videntur, ne credantur philosophi . . . : ne scilicet cuiquam sit opinio, eos praeiudicatis imbui philosophiae opinionibus nec esse propterea, ut aiunt, omnino obiectivos. Verum tamen est, historiam illorum aut critice meram loqui philosophiam; quaeque ab iis inferuntur, ex philosophicis eorum principiis iusta ratiocinatione concludi. . . .

Primi tres huiusmodi historicorum aut criticorum canones, ut diximus, eadem illa sunt principia, quae supra ex philosophis attulimus: nimirum agnosticismus, theorema de transfiguratione rerum per fidem, itemque aliud, quod de defiguratione [622] dici posse visum est. Iam consecutiones ex singulis notemus.

- 3495 Ex agnosticismo historia non aliter ac scientia unice de phaenomenis est. Ergo tam Deus quam quilibet in humanis divinus interventus ad fidem reiiciendus est, utpote ad illam pertinens unam. Quapropter, si quid occurrat duplici constans elemento, divino atque humano, cuiusmodi sunt Christus, Ecclesia, sacramenta aliaque id genus multa, sic partiendum erit ac discernendum, ut, quod humanum fuerit, historiae, quod divinum, tribuatur fidei. Ideo vulgata apud modernistas discretio inter Christum historicum et Christum fidei, Ecclesiam historiae et Ecclesiam fidei, sacramenta historiae et sacramenta fidei, aliaque similia passim.
- 3496 Deinde hoc ipsum elementum humanum, quod sibi historicum sumere videmus, quale illud in monumentis apparet, a fide per transfigurationem ultra condiciones historicas elatum dicendum est. Adiectiones igitur a fide factas rursus discernere oportet, easque ad fidem ipsam amandare atque ad historiam fidei: sic, cum de Christo faith to others and, the other, the need of the mass, when the faith has become common to many, to form itself into a society and to guard, increase, and propagate the common good. What, then, is the Church? She is the fruit of the collective conscience, that is to say, of the society of individual consciences that by virtue of the principle of vital permanence all depend on one first believer, who for Catholics is Christ.

The general principle [for explaining the faith in a modernistic manner] is that in a living religion everything is subject to change, and must change, and in this way they pass to what may be said to be among the chief of their doctrines, that of evolution. Everything, therefore: dogma, the Church, sacred worship, the books we revere as sacred, even faith itself—if we do not wish all these to die—must be subject to the laws of evolution.

Some modernists, devoted to historical studies, seem to be greatly afraid of being taken for philosophers . . . , for they are particularly anxious not to be suspected of being prejudiced in favor of philosophical theories that would lay them open to the charge of not being objective, to use the word in vogue. And yet the truth is that their history and their criticism are saturated with their philosophy and that their historico-critical conclusions are the just result of their philosophical principles. . . .

Their three first laws are contained in those three principles of their philosophy already dealt with: the principle of agnosticism, the principle of the transfiguration of things by faith, and the principle that we have called disfiguration. Let us see what consequences flow from each of them.

Agnosticism tells us that history, like every other science, deals entirely with phenomena, and the consequence is that God, and every intervention of God in human affairs, is to be relegated to the domain of faith as belonging to it alone. In things where a double element, the divine and the human, mingles, in Christ, for example, or the Church or the sacraments or the many other objects of the same kind, a division must be made and the human element assigned to history while the divine will go to faith. Hence we have that distinction, so current among the modernists, between the Christ of history and the Christ of faith, between the sacraments of history and the sacraments of faith, and so on.

Next we find that the human element itself, which the historian has to work on, as it appears in the documents, has been by faith transfigured, that is to say, raised above its historical conditions. It becomes necessary, therefore, to eliminate also the accretions that faith has added, to assign them to faith itself and to the history agitur, quidquid conditionem hominis superat sive naturalem, prout a psychologia exhibetur, sive ex loco atque aetate, quibus ille vixit, conflata.

Praeterea ex tertio philosophiae principio res etiam, quae historiae ambitum non excedunt, cribro veluti cernunt, eliminantque omnia ac pariter ad fidem amandant, quae ipsorum iudicio in factorum logica, ut inquiunt, non sunt vel personis apta non fuerint. Sic volunt Christum ea non dixisse, quae audientis vulgi captum excedere videntur. . . .

[623] Ut autem historia ab philosophia, sic critice ab historia suas accipit conclusiones. Criticus namque . . . monumenta partitur bifariam. Quidquid post dictam triplicem obruncationem superat, reali historiae assignat; cetera ad fidei historiam seu internam alegant. Has enim binas historias accurate distinguunt; et historiam fidei, quod bene notatum volumus, historiae reali, ut realis est, opponunt. Hinc, ut iam diximus, geminus Christus: realis alter, alter, qui numquam reapse fuit, sed ad fidem pertinet. . . .

Monumentis, ut diximus, bifariam distributis, adest iterum philosophus cum suo dogmate vitalis immanentiae; atque omnia edicit, quae sunt in Ecclesiae historia, per vitalis emanationem esse explicanda.

Errors of the Modernists on the Apologetic Method

[626] [Apologeta] apud modernistas dupliciter a philosopho et ipse pendet. Non directe primum, materiam sibi sumens historiam, philosopho, ut vidimus, praecipiente conscriptam: directe dein, mutuatus ab illo dogmata ac iudicia. Inde illud [627] vulgatum in schola modernistarum praeceptum, debere novam apologesin controversias de religione dirimere historicis inquisitionibus et psychologicis. . . .

Finis, quem sibi assequendum praestituit, hic est: hominem fidei adhuc expertem eo adducere, ut eam de catholica religione experientiam assequatur, quae ex modernistarum scitis unicum fidei est fundamentum. . . .

Ad hoc, ostendere necessum est, catholicam religionem, quae modo est, eam omnino esse, quam Christus fundavit, seu non aliud praeter progredientem eius germinis explicationem, quod Christus invexit.

Primo igitur germen illud quale sit, determinandum. Idipsum porro hac formula exhiberi volunt: Christum adventum regni Dei nuntiasset, quod brevi foret of faith: thus, when treating of Christ, the historian must set aside all that surpasses man in his natural condition, either according to the psychological conception of him or according to the place and period of his existence.

Finally, by virtue of the third principle, even those things that are not outside the sphere of history they pass through the crucible, excluding from history and relegating to faith everything that, in their judgment, is not in harmony with what they call the logic of facts and in character with the persons of whom they are predicated. Thus, they will not allow that Christ ever uttered those things that do not seem to be within the capacity of the multitudes that listened to him. . . . 3497

And as history receives its conclusions, ready-made, from philosophy, so too criticism takes its own from history. For the critic, . . . divides the documents into two parts. Those that remain after the triple elimination above described go to form the real history; the rest is attributed to the history of the faith or, as it is styled, to internal history. For the modernists distinguish very carefully between these two kinds of history, and it is to be noted that they oppose the history of the faith to real history precisely as real. Thus we have a double Christ: a real Christ and a Christ, the one of faith, who never really existed. . . . 3498

Given that division, of which we have spoken, of the documents into two parts, the philosopher steps in again with his principle of vital immanence and shows how everything in the history of the Church is to be explained by vital emanation.

[The apologist] according to the modernists depends in two ways on the philosopher. First, indirectly, inasmuch as his theme is history—history dictated, as we have seen, by the philosopher; and, secondly, directly, inasmuch as he takes both his laws and his principles from the philosopher. Hence that common precept of the modernist school that the new apologetics must be fed from psychological and historical sources. . . . 3499

The aim he sets before himself is to make the nonbeliever attain that experience of the Catholic religion which, according to the system, is the sole basis of faith. . . . 3500

To this end it is necessary to prove that this religion, as it exists today, is that which was founded by Jesus Christ; that is to say, that it is the product of the progressive development of the germ that he brought into the world.

Hence it is imperative first of all to establish what this germ was, and this the modernist claims to be able to do by the following formula: Christ announced the coming constituendum, eiusque ipsum fore Messiam, actorem nempe divinitus datum atque ordinatorem.

Post haec demonstrandum, qua ratione id germen, semper immanens in catholica religione ac permanens sensim ac secundum historiam sese [628] evolverit aptarumque succedentibus adiunctis, ex iis ad se vitaliter trahens quidquid doctrinalium, culturalium, ecclesiasticarum formarum sibi esset utile; interea vero impedimenta si quae occurrerent superans, adversarios profligans insectationibus quibusvis pugnisque superstes.

Postquam autem haec omnia, impedimenta nimirum, adversarios, insectationes, pugnas itemque vitam fecunditatemque Ecclesiae id genus fuisse monstratum fuerit, ut, quamvis evolutionis leges in eiusdem Ecclesiae historia incolumes appareant, non tamen eidem historiae plene explicandae sint pares; incognitum coram stabit, suaque sponte se offeret.

Sic illi. In qua tota ratiocinatione unum tamen non advertunt, determinationem illam germinis primigenii deberi unice apriorismo philosophi agnostici et evolutionistae, et germen ipsum sic gratis ab eis definiri, ut eorum causae congruat.

of the kingdom of God, which was to be realized within a brief lapse of time and of which he was to become the Messiah, the divinely given agent and ordainer.

Then it must be shown how this germ, always immanent and permanent in the bosom of the Church, has gone on slowly developing in the course of history, adapting itself successively to the different mediums through which it has passed, borrowing from them by vital assimilation all the dogmatic, cultural, ecclesiastical forms that served its purpose; while, on the other hand, it surmounted all obstacles, vanquished all enemies, and survived all assaults and all combats.

Anybody who well and duly considers this mass of obstacles, adversaries, attacks, combats, and the vitality and fecundity that the Church has shown throughout them all must admit that if the laws of evolution are visible in her life, they fail to explain the whole of her history—the unknown rises forth from it and presents itself before us.

Thus do they argue, never suspecting that their determination of the primitive germ is an a priori of agnostic and evolutionist philosophy and that the germ itself has been gratuitously invented for the sake of buttressing their position.

3503: Motu Proprio Praestantia Scripturae, November 18, 1907

Ed.: ASS 40 (1907): 724f. / Pius X, Acta 4:234f. / EnchB nos. 270f. / AnE 15 (1907): 435.

The Authority of the Decisions of the Biblical Commission

3503 [Sunt, qui] non eo, quo par est, obsequio sententias eiusmodi, quamquam a Pontifice probatas, exceperint aut excipiant.

Quapropter declarandum illud praecipendumque videmus, quemadmodum declaramus in praesens expresseque praecipimus, universos omnes conscientiae obstringi officio sententiae Pontificalis Consilii de re Biblica, sive quae adhuc sunt emissae, sive quae posthac edentur, perinde ac Decretis Sacrarum Congregationum pertinentibus ad doctrinam probatisque a Pontifice, se subiciendi; nec posse notam tum detrectatae oboedientiae tum temeritatis devitare aut culpa propterea vacare gravi, quotquot verbis scriptisve sententias has tales impugnent; idque praeter scandalum, quo offendant, ceteraque quibus in causa esse coram Deo possint, aliis, ut plurimum, temere in his errateque pronuntiat.

[There are some who] have not received or do not receive such decisions with the proper submission, even though they are approved by the pontiff.

Therefore, We see that it must be declared and ordered as We do now declare and expressly order that all are bound by the duty of conscience to submit to the decisions of the Biblical Pontifical Commission, both those that have been given up until now and those that will be given in the future, just as to the decrees of the Sacred Congregations that pertain to doctrine and have been approved by the pontiff; and that all who impugn such decisions as these by word or in writing cannot escape the stigma of disobedience and temerity or on this account be free of serious guilt; and this in addition to the scandal whereby they offend and the other ways they are liable before God, mostly by pronouncing rashly and erroneously on these matters.

3505–3509: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 29, 1908

Ed.: ASS 41 (1908): 613f. / AnE 16 (1908): 297b / Pius X, Acta 4:140–42 / EnchB nos. 276–80.

The Nature and Author of the Book of Isaiah

3505 Qu. 1: Utrum doceri possit, vaticinia, quae leguntur in libro Isaiae—et passim in Scripturis—, non esse veri

Question 1: May it be taught that the prophecies that are read in the book of Isaiah, and here and there nominis vaticinia, sed vel narrationes post eventum confictas, vel, si ante eventum praenuntiatum quidpiam agnosci opus sit, id prophetam non ex supernaturali Dei futurorum praescii revelatione, sed ex his, quae iam contigerunt, felici quadam sagacitate et naturalis ingenii acumine, concinendo praenuntiasse?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 2: Utrum sententia, quae tenet, Isaiam ceterosque prophetas vaticinia non edidisse nisi de his, quae in continenti vel post non grande temporis spatium eventura erant, conciliari possit cum vaticiniis, imprimis messianicis et eschatologicis, ab eisdem prophetis de longinquo certo editis, necnon cum communi sanctorum Patrum sententia concorditer asserentium, prophetas ea quoque praedixisse, quae post multa saecula essent implenda?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 3: Utrum admitti possit, prophetas non modo tamquam correctores pravitatis humanae divinique verbi in profectum audientium praecones, verum etiam tamquam praenuntios eventuum futurorum, constanter alloqui debuisse auditores non quidem futuros, sed praesentes et sibi aequales, ita ut ab ipsis plane intelligi potuerint; proindeque secundam partem libri Isaiae (cap. XL–LXVI), in qua vates non Iudaeos Isaiae aequales, at Iudaeos in exilio Babylonico lugentes veluti inter ipsos vivens alloquitur et solatur, non posse ipsum Isaiam iamdiu emortuum auctorem habere, sed oportere eam ignoto cuidam vati inter exules viventi assignare?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 4: Utrum, ad impugnandam identitatem auctoris libri Isaiae, argumentum philologicum, ex lingua stiloque desumptum, tale sit censendum, ut virum gravem, criticae artis et hebraicae linguae peritum, cogat in eodem libro pluralitatem auctorum agnoscere?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 5: Utrum solida prostent argumenta, etiam cumulative sumpta, ad evincendum Isaiae librum non ipsi soli Isaiae, sed duobus, imo pluribus auctoribus esse tribuendum?

Resp.: Negative.

in the Scriptures, are not prophecies in the true sense, but either narratives composed subsequent to the event or, if it must be acknowledged that something was foretold before the event, that the prophet foretold this, not from a supernatural revelation of God who foreknows the future, but by a deduction based on what had already happened (along) with a happy sagacity and the acuteness of natural intelligence?

Response: No.

Question 2: Can the opinion that holds that Isaiah and the other prophets uttered prophecies concerning only those things that were to take place immediately or after a short space of time be reconciled with the prophecies, particularly the messianic and eschatological, that were undoubtedly uttered by the same prophets about the remote future as well as with the common opinion of the holy Fathers who unanimously assert that the prophets foretold also those things that should be fulfilled after many centuries?

Response: No.

Question 3: May it be admitted that the prophets, not only as criticizers of human wickedness and heralds of the divine Word for the good of their hearers, but also as foretellers of future events, must always have addressed themselves to a present and contemporary and not to a future audience, so that they could be completely understood by them; and that therefore, the second part of the book of Isaiah (chaps. 40–66), in which the prophet addresses and consoles, not the Jews contemporary with Isaiah, but, as one living among them, those mourning in the exile of Babylon, cannot have for its author Isaiah himself, then long dead, but must be attributed to some unknown prophet living among the exiles?

Response: No.

Question 4: Is the philological argument, derived from the language and the style in order to impugn the identity of the author of the book of Isaiah, to be considered weighty enough to compel a man of judgment, versed in the principles of criticism and the Hebrew language, to acknowledge for the same book a plurality of authors?

Response: No.

Question 5: Are solid arguments available, even when taken together, to prove that the book of Isaiah is to be attributed, not to Isaiah alone, but to two or even more authors?

Response: No.

3512–3519: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 30, 1909

Ed.: AAS 1 (1909): 567–69 / AnE 17 (1909): 334ab / EnchB nos. 324–31.

The Historical Character of the First Chapters of Genesis

Qu. 1: Utrum varia systemata exegetica, quae ad excludendum sensum litteralem historicum trium

Question 1: Are the various exegetical systems that have been devised for the purpose of excluding the literal priorum capitum libri Geneseos excogitata et scientiae fucio propugnata sunt, solido fundamento fulciantur?

Resp.: Negative.

3513 Qu. 2: Utrum, non obstantibus indole et forma historica libri Geneseos, peculiari trium priorum capitum inter se et cum sequentibus capitibus nexu, multiplici testimonio Scripturarum tum Veteris tum Novi Testamenti, unanimi fere sanctorum Patrum sententia ac traditionali sensu, quem, ab Israëlitico etiam populo transmissum, semper tenuit Ecclesia, doceri possit: praedicta tria capita Geneseos continere non rerum vere gestarum narrationes, quae scilicet obiectivae realitati et historicae veritati respondeant; sed vel fabulosa ex veterum populorum mythologiis et cosmogoniis deprompta et ab auctore sacro, expurgato quovis polytheismi errore, doctrinae monotheisticae accommodata; vel allegorias et symbola, fundamento obiectivae realitatis destituta, sub historiae specie ad religiosas et philosophicas veritates inculcandas proposita; vel tandem legendas ex parte historicas [568] et ex parte fictitias ad animorum instructionem et aedificationem libere compositas?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

3514 Qu. 3: Utrum speciatim sensus litteralis historicus vocari in dubium possit, ubi agitur de factis in eisdem capitibus enarratis, quae christianae religionis fundamenta attingunt: uti sunt, inter cetera, rerum universarum creatio a Deo facta in initio temporis; peculiaris creatio hominis; formatio primae mulieris ex primo homine; generis humani unitas; originalis protoparentum felicitas in statu iustitiae, integritatis et immortalitatis; praeceptum a Deo homini datum ad eius obedientiam probandam; divini praecepti, diabolo sub serpentis specie suasore, transgressio; protoparentum deiectio ab illo primaevae innocentiae statu; nec non Reparatoris futuri promissio?

Resp.: Negative.

3515 Qu. 4: Utrum in interpretandis illis horum capitum locis, quos Patres et Doctores diverso modo intellexerunt, quin certi quippiam definitique tradiderint, liceat, salvo Ecclesiae iudicio servataque fidei analogia, eam, quam quisque prudenter probaverit, sequi tuerique sententiam?

Resp.: Affirmative.

historical sense of the first three chapters of Genesis and advocated under the guise of being scientific based upon solid arguments?

Response: No.

Question 2: Is it possible, in spite of the character and historic form of the book of Genesis, of the close connection of the first three chapters with one another and with those that follow, of the manifold testimony of the Scriptures both of the Old and the New Testament, of the almost unanimous opinion of the holy Fathers, and of the traditional view—transmitted also by the Jewish people—that has always been held by the Church, to teach that the three aforesaid chapters of Genesis do not contain the narrative of things that actually happened, that is, (a narrative) that corresponds to objective reality and historic truth, but, rather, either fables derived from mythologies and cosmologies of ancient peoples but purified of all polytheistic error and accommodated to monotheistic teaching by the sacred author; or allegories and symbols destitute of any foundation in objective reality but presented under the garb of history for the purpose of inculcating religious and philosophical truth; or, finally, legends partly historical and partly fictitious, freely composed for the instruction and edification of souls?

Response: No to each part.

Question 3: Is it possible, in particular, to call in question the literal and historical meaning where there is question of facts narrated in these same chapters that touch the foundation of the Christian religion, such as, among others, the creation of all things that was accomplished by God at the beginning of time, the special creation of man, the formation of the first woman from the first man, the unity of the human race, the original happiness of the first parents in a state of justice, integrity, and immortality, the command given by God to man to prove his obedience, the transgression of the divine command at the instigation of the devil under the form of a serpent, the fall of the first parents from that primitive state of innocence, and the promise of a future Redeemer?

Response: No.

Question 4: In interpreting those passages of these chapters that the Fathers and Doctors have interpreted in divers ways without leaving us anything definite or certain, is it permitted, subject to the judgment of the Church and following the analogy of faith, to follow and defend that opinion which each one has prudently found correct?

Response: Yes.

Qu. 5: Utrum omnia et singula, verba videlicet et phrases, quae in praedictis capitibus occurrunt, semper et necessario accipienda sint sensu proprio, ita ut ab eo discedere numquam liceat, etiam cum locutiones ipsae manifesto appareant improprie, seu metaphorice vel anthropomorphice usurpatae, et sensum proprium vel ratio tenere prohibeat vel necessitas cogat dimittere?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 6: Utrum, praesupposito litterali et historico sensu, nonnullorum locorum eorundem capitum interpretatio allegorica et prophetica, praefulgente sanctorum Patrum et Ecclesiae ipsius exemplo, adhiberi sapienter et utiliter possit?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 7: Utrum, cum in conscribendo primo Geneseos capite non fuerit sacri auctoris mens intimam adspectabilium rerum constitutionem ordinemque creationis completum scientifico more docere, sed potius suae genti tradere notitiam popularem, prout communis sermo per ea ferebat tempora, sensibus et captui hominum accommodatam, sit in horum interpretatione adamussim semperque investiganda scientifici sermonis proprietates?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 8: Utrum in illa sex dierum denominatione atque distinctione, de [569] quibus in Geneseos capite primo, sumi possit vox Yôm (dies) sive sensu proprio pro die naturali, sive sensu improprio pro quodam temporis spatio, deque huiusmodi quaestione libere inter exegetas disceptare liceat?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3521–3528: Response of the Biblical Commission, May 1, 1910

Ed.: AAS 2 (1910): 354f. / EnchB nos. 332–39.

The Authors and the Time of the Composition of the Psalms

Qu. 1: Utrum appellationes Psalmi David, Hymni David, Liber psalmodum David, Psalterium Davidicum, in antiquis collectionibus et in Conciliis ipsis usurpatae ad designandum Veteris Testamenti Librum CL psalmodum; sicut etiam plurium Patrum et Doctorum sententia, qui tenuerunt, omnes prorsus Psalterii psalmos uni David esse adscribendos, tantam vim habeant, ut Psalterii totius unicus auctor David haberi debeat?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 2: Utrum ex concordantia textus hebraici cum graeco textu Alexandrino aliisque vetustis versionibus argui iure possit, titulos psalmodum hebraico textui

Question 5: Must each and everything, namely, the words and phrases, that occur in the aforesaid chapters always and of necessity be interpreted in the literal sense, so that it is never permitted to deviate from it, even when expressions are manifestly used not literally (but) metaphorically or anthropomorphically, and when reason forbids us to hold, or necessity impels us to depart from, the literal sense? 3516

Response: No.

Question 6: Presupposing the literal and historical sense, may an allegorical and prophetic interpretation of certain passages of these same chapters, corresponding to the luminous example of the holy Fathers and the Church herself, be prudently and usefully applied? 3517

Response: Yes.

Question 7: Although it was not the intention of the sacred author, when writing the first chapter of Genesis, to teach us in a scientific manner the innermost nature of visible things and the complete order of creation but rather to hand on to his people a popular account, such as the common parlance of that age allowed, adapted to the senses and to man's capacity, is it necessary, when interpreting these chapters, to seek strictly and always the particular characteristics of scientific discourse? 3518

Response: No.

Question 8: Can the word yôm (day), (which) is used in the first chapter of Genesis to describe and distinguish the six days, be understood both in its literal sense as natural day and also in a non-literal sense as a certain space of time; and is it permitted to discuss this question among exegetes? 3519

Response: Yes.

Question 1: Are the terms Psalms of David, Hymns of David, the Book of the Psalms of David, the Davidic Psalter, which in the old collections and in the councils are used to designate the Old Testament book of 150 psalms, as also the opinion of many Fathers and Doctors who held that absolutely all the psalms of the Psalter were to be attributed to David alone, of such force that we have to consider David as the sole author of the entire Psalter? 3521

Response: No.

Question 2: From the agreement of the Hebrew text with the Alexandrian Greek text and with other old versions, is it possible to conclude rightly that the titles 3522

praeifixos antiquiores esse versione sic dicta LXX virorum; ac proinde si non directe ab auctoribus ipsis psalmodum, a vetusta saltem iudaica traditione derivasse?

Resp.: Affirmative.

- 3523 Qu. 3: Utrum praedicti psalmodum tituli, iudaicae traditionis testes, quando nulla ratio gravis est contra eorum genuinitatem, prudenter possint in dubium revocari?

Resp.: Negative.

- 3524 Qu. 4: Utrum, si considerentur sacrae Scripturae haud infrequentia testimonia circa naturalem Davidis peritiam, Spiritus Sancti charismate illustrata, in componendis carminibus religiosis, institutiones ab ipso conditae de cantu psalmodum liturgico, attributiones psalmodum ipsi factae tum in Veteri Testamento, tum in Novo, tum in ipsis inscriptionibus, quae psalmis ab antiquo praefixae sunt; insuper consensus Iudaeorum, Patrum et Doctorum Ecclesiae, prudenter denegari possit, praecipuum Psalterii carminum Davidem esse auctorem, vel contra affirmari pauca dumtaxat eidem regio Psalterii carmina esse tribuenda?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.[355]

- 3525 Qu. 5: Utrum in specie denegari possit Davidica origo eorum psalmodum, qui in Veteri vel Novo Testamento discrete sub Davidis nomine citantur, inter quos prae ceteris recensendi veniunt psalmus 2 “Quare fremuerunt gentes”; psalmus 15 “Conserve me, Domine”; psalmus 17 “Diligam te, Domine, fortitudo mea”; psalmus 31 “Beati, quorum remissae sunt iniquitates”; psalmus 68 “Salvum me fac, Deus”; psalmus 109 “Dixit Dominus Domino meo”?

Resp.: Negative.

- 3526 Qu. 6: Utrum sententia eorum admitti possit, qui tenent, inter psalterii psalmos nonnullos esse sive Davidis sive aliorum auctorum, qui propter rationes liturgicas et musicales, oscitantiam amanuensium aliasve incompetas causas in plures fuerint divisi vel in unum coniuncti; itemque alios esse psalmos, uti “Miserere mei, Deus”, qui ut melius aptarentur circumstantiis historicis vel solemnitatibus populi iudaici, leviter fuerint retractati vel modificati, subtractione aut additione unius alteriusve versiculi, salva tamen totius textus sacri inspiratione?

Resp.: Affirmative ad utramque partem.

- 3527 Qu. 7: Utrum sententia eorum inter recentiores scriptorum, qui indiciis dumtaxat internis innixi vel minus recta sacri textus interpretatione demonstrare conati sunt, non paucos esse psalmos post tempora praefixis in psalmis in the Hebrew text are of older date than the aforesaid LXX version and that consequently they derive, if not directly from the authors of the psalms, at least from an ancient Jewish tradition?

Response: Yes.

Question 3: Can the aforesaid titles of the Psalms, witnesses to the Jewish tradition, be prudently called into question when there is no important reason against their authenticity?

Response: No.

Question 4: Considering the not infrequent testimonies in Sacred Scripture to David’s natural skill, illumined by the special gift of the Holy Spirit, for the composition of religious verses; (considering, too,) the arrangement drawn up by him for the liturgical chanting of the psalms, the attributions of psalms to him, both in the Old Testament and the New, as also in the inscriptions themselves that have from of old been placed before the psalms; (considering,) moreover, the common opinion of the Jews and of the Fathers and Doctors of the Church, can it be prudently denied that David is the principal author of the verses contained in the Psalter, or, on the other hand, (can it be prudently) affirmed that only a few verses are to be attributed to the aforesaid royal Psalmist?

Response: No to both questions.

Question 5: Is it possible, in particular, to deny the Davidic origin of the psalms that, in the Old or New Testament, are expressly cited under David’s name, among which must above all be numbered Psalm 2: “Why have the Gentiles raged”; Psalm 16, “Preserve me, O Lord”; Psalm 18, “I will love you, O Lord, my strength”; Psalm 32, “Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven”; Psalm 69, “Save me, O God”; Psalm 110, “The Lord said to my Lord”?

Response: No.

Question 6: Is it possible to admit the view of those who affirm that among the Psalms of David there are some that, whether by David or by other authors, have for liturgical and musical reasons or through the carelessness of copyists or for other unknown reasons, been divided or combined into one; and, likewise, that there are other psalms, such as “Have mercy on me, God”, that, in order to be better adapted to historical circumstances or festivals of the Jewish people, have been slightly reworked or modified, either by the removal or by the addition of one or two verses, without detriment to the inspiration of the whole sacred text?

Response: Yes to both questions.

Question 7: Is it possible to maintain with any real probability the opinion of those recent writers who, basing their views only upon internal grounds or upon an unsound interpretation of the sacred text, strive to Esdrae et Nehemiae, quin imo aevo Machabaeorum, compositos, probabiliter sustineri possit?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 8: Utrum ex multiplici sacrorum Librorum Novi Testamenti testimonio et unanimi Patrum consensu, fatentibus etiam iudaicae gentis scriptoribus, plures agnoscendi sint psalmi prophetici et messianici, qui futuri Liberatoris adventum, regnum, sacerdotium, passionem, mortem et resurrectionem vaticinati sunt; ac proinde reicienda prorsus eorum sententia sit, qui indolem psalmorum propheticam ac messianicam pervertentes, eadem de Christo oracula ad futuram tantum sortem populi electi praenuntiandam coarctant?

Resp.: Affirmative ad utramque partem.

3530–3536: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Sacraments Quam singulari, August 8, 1910

Ed.: AAS 2 (1910): 582f.

Eucharistic Communion and Extreme Unction of Children

I. Aetas discretionis tum ad confessionem tum ad s. communionem ea est, in qua puer incipit ratiocinari, hoc est circa septimum annum, sive supra, sive etiam infra. Ex hoc tempore incipit obligatio satisfaciendi utrique praecepto confessionis et communionis [cf. *812].

II. Ad primam confessionem et ad primam communionem necessaria non est plena et perfecta doctrinae christianae cognitio. Puer tamen postea debet integrum catechismum pro modo suae intelligentiae gradatim addiscere.

III. Cognitio religionis, quae in puero requiritur, ut ipse ad primam communionem convenienter se praeparet, ea est, qua ipse fidei mysteria necessaria necessitate medii pro suo captu percipiat, atque eucharisticum panem a communi et corporali distinguat, ut ea devotione, quam ipsius fert aetas, ad ss. Eucharistiam accedat.

IV. Obligatio praecepti confessionis et communionis, quae puerum gravat, in eos praecipue recidit, qui ipsius curam habere debent, hoc est in parentes, in confessorium, in institutores et in parochum. Ad patrem vero, aut ad illos, qui vices eius gerunt, et ad confessorium, secundum Catechismum Romanum, pertinet admittere puerum ad primam communionem.

VI. Puerorum curam habentibus omni studio curandum est, ut post primam communionem iidem pueri ad sacram mensam saepius accedant, et, si fieri possit, etiam quotidie, prout Christus Iesus et mater Ecclesia desiderant [cf. *3375–3383], utque id agant ea animi devotione, quam talis fert aetas. . . . [583] demonstrate that not a few psalms were composed after the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, indeed, even in the period of the Maccabees?

Response: No.

Question 8: On the basis of the many testimonies of the holy books of the New Testament, the unanimous agreement of the Fathers, (and) also the statements of the writers of the Jewish people, must many prophetic and messianic psalms be recognized that foretell the coming, kingdom, priesthood, Passion, death, and Resurrection of a future Redeemer? And is it necessary for this reason to reject completely the opinion of those who, perverting the prophetic and messianic character of the psalms, limit these prophecies concerning Christ to mere predictions of the future lot of the chosen people?

Response: Yes to both questions.

I. The age of discretion both for confession and for holy communion is that at which the child begins to reason, that is, at about the seventh year, more or less. The obligation of satisfying both precepts of confession and communion begins from that time [cf. *812].

II. For first confession and for first communion a full and perfect knowledge of Christian doctrine is not necessary. But the child will be obliged afterward to learn gradually the whole catechism in accord with his intelligence.

III. The knowledge of religion that is required in a child that he may be fittingly prepared for (his) first communion is such that, by virtue of the necessity of means, he understands the necessary mysteries of faith in accord with his capacity and distinguishes eucharistic bread from the common and corporeal, in order that he may approach the most blessed Eucharist with that devotion which his age permits.

IV. The obligation of the precept of confession and communion that rests upon a child falls especially upon those who have charge of him, that is, upon parents, confessor, teachers, and pastor. But to the father, or to those who take his place, and to the confessor, it pertains, according to the Roman Catechism, to admit the child to first communion.

VI. Those who have charge over children must make every effort to see that these same children after first communion approach the holy table often and, if it can be done, daily, just as Jesus Christ and Mother Church desire [cf. *3375–3383], and that they do this with that devotion of heart which such an age permits. . . .

- 3535 VII. Consuetudo non admittendi ad confessionem pueros, aut numquam eos absolvendi, cum ad usum rationis pervenerint, est omnino improbanda.
- 3536 VIII. Detestabilis omnino est abusus non ministrandi Viaticum et extremam unctionem pueris post usum rationis eosque sepeliendi ritu parvulorum.

VII. The custom of never admitting children to confession or of never absolving them when they have arrived at the use of reason is to be disapproved entirely.

VIII. Not to administer the viaticum and extreme unction to children past the age of reason and to bury them according to the rite of infants is a completely detestable abuse.

3537–3550: Motu Proprio Sacrorum antistitum, September 1, 1910

Cf. *3401°. The obligation of taking this oath was suspended in 1967.
Ed.: AAS 2 (1910): 669–72.

Oath against the Errors of Modernism

- 3537 Ego N. N. firmiter amplector ac recipio omnia et singula, quae ab inerranti Ecclesiae magisterio definita, adserta ac declarata sunt, praesertim ea doctrinae capita, quae huius temporis erroribus directo adversantur.
- 3538 Ac primum quidem: Deum, rerum omnium principium et finem, naturali rationis lumine “per ea quae facta sunt” [Rm 1:20], hoc est, per visibilia creationis opera, tamquam causam per effectus, certo cognosci, adeoque demonstrari etiam posse, profiteor.
- 3539 Secundo: externa revelationis argumenta, hoc [670] est facta divina, in primisque miracula et prophetias admitto et agnosco tanquam signa certissima divinitus ortae christianae religionis, eademque teneo aetatum omnium atque hominum, etiam huius temporis, intelligentiae esse maxime accommodata.
- 3540 Tertio: firma pariter fide credo Ecclesiam, verbi revelati custodem et magistram, per ipsum verum atque historicum Christum, cum apud nos degeret, proxime ac directo institutam eandemque super Petrum, apostolicae hierarchiae principem, eiusque in aevum successores aedificatam.
- 3541 Quarto: fidei doctrinam ab Apostolis per orthodoxos Patres eodem sensu eademque semper sententia ad nos usque transmissam, sincere recipio; ideoque prorsus reicio haereticum commentum evolutionis dogmatum, ab uno in alium sensum transeuntium, diversum ab eo, quem prius habuit Ecclesia; pariterque damno errorem omnem, quo, divino deposito, Christi Sponsae tradito ab eaque fideliter custodiendo, sufficitur philosophicum inventum, vel creatio humanae conscientiae, hominum conatu sensim efformatae et in posterum indefinito progressu perficiendae.

I, N.N., firmly embrace and accept each and every thing that is defined, proposed, and declared by the infallible teaching authority of the Church and, in particular, those points of doctrine that are directly opposed to the errors of this time.

First of all, I profess that God, the beginning and the end of all things, can be known with certainty and, indeed, also demonstrated through the natural light of reason from “the things that have been made” [Rom 1:20], namely, from the visible works of creation, as the cause from its effects.

Secondly, I accept and recognize the exterior proofs of revelation, that is to say, the divine works, mainly the miracles and prophecies, as sure signs of the divine origin of the Christian religion, and I hold that they are well adapted to the understanding of all ages and of all men, even those of the present time.

Thirdly, I believe with equally firm faith that the Church, the guardian and teacher of the revealed word, was personally and directly instituted by the true and historical Christ himself during his life among us and that she (is) built upon Peter, the prince of the apostolic hierarchy and (upon) his successors through the ages.

Fourthly, I sincerely accept that the doctrine of the faith (was) handed down to us in the same sense and always with the same meaning from the apostles through the orthodox Fathers; I therefore entirely reject the heretical theory of an evolution of the dogmas, (namely,) that they change from one meaning to another, different from the one that the Church previously held. I also condemn any error that substitutes for the divine legacy entrusted to the Spouse of Christ, to be faithfully guarded by her, a philosophical system or a creation of human reflection that gradually formed through human effort and is to be perfected in the future through unlimited progress.

- 3542 Quinto: certissime teneo ac sincere profiteor, fidem non esse caecum sensum religionis e latebris subconscientiae erumpentem, sub pressione cordis et

Fifthly, I hold with certainty and I sincerely confess that faith is not a blind inclination of religion welling up from the depth of the subconscious under the impulse of inflexionis voluntatis moraliter informatae, sed verum assensum intellectus veritati extrinsecus acceptae ex auditu, quo nempe, quae a Deo personali, creatore ac Domino nostro dicta, testata et revelata sunt, vera esse credimus, propter Dei auctoritatem summe veracis.

Me etiam, qua par est, reverentia subicito totoque animo adhaereo damnationibus, declarationibus, praescriptis omnibus, quae in Encyclicis litteris "Pascendi" [*3475–3500] et in Decreto "Lamentabili" [*3401–3466] continentur, praesertim circa eam quam historiam dogmatum vocant.

Idem reprobō errorem affirmantium, propositam ab Ecclesia fidem posse historiae repugnare, et catholica dogmata, quo sensu nunc intelliguntur, cum verioribus christianae religionis originibus componi non posse.

Damno quoque ac reicio eorum sententiam, qui dicunt christianum hominem [671] eruditorem induere personam duplicem, aliam credentis, aliam historici, quasi liceret historico ea retinere, quae credentis fidei contradicant, aut praemissas adstruere, ex quibus consequatur, dogmata esse aut falsa aut dubia, modo haec directo non denegentur.

Reprobō pariter eam Scripturae sanctae diiudicandae atque interpretandae rationem, quae, Ecclesiae traditione, analogia fidei et Apostolicae Sedis normis posthabitis, rationalistarum commentis inhaeret, et critice textus velut unicam supremamque regulam haud minus licenter quam temere amplectitur.

Sententiam praeterea illorum reicio, qui tenent, doctori disciplinae historicae theologicae tradendae aut iis de rebus scribenti seponendam prius esse opinionem ante conceptam sive de supernaturali origine catholicae traditionis, sive de promissa divinitus ope ad perennem conservationem uniuscuiusque revelati veri; deinde scripta Patrum singulorum interpretanda solis scientiae principiis, sacra qualibet auctoritate seclusa, eaque iudicii libertate, qua profana quaevis monumenta solent investigari.

In universum denique me alienissimum ab errore profiteor, quo modernistae tenent in sacra traditione nihil inesse divini, aut, quod longe deterius, pantheistico sensu illud admittunt, ita ut nihil iam restet nisi nudum factum et simplex, communibus historiae factis aequandum: hominum nempe sua industria, sollertia, ingenio scholam a Christo eiusque Apostolis inchoatam per subsequentes aetates continuantium.

the heart and the inclination of a morally conditioned will but is the genuine assent of the intellect to a truth that is received from outside by hearing. In this assent, given on the authority of the all-truthful God, we hold to be true what has been said, attested to, and revealed by the personal God, our Creator and Lord.

I also submit myself with due reverence and I adhere wholeheartedly to all the condemnations, declarations, and prescripts contained in the encyclical Pascendi [*3475–3500] and the decree Lamentabili [*3401–3466], particularly those referring to the so-called history of dogma. 3543

I also reject the error of those who maintain that the faith proposed by the Church can be contrary to history and that the Catholic dogmas in the sense in which they are now understood are irreconcilable with the true origins of the Christian religion. 3544

I condemn and reject also the conception of those who say that an educated Christian puts on a double personality, the one of a believer, the other of a historian, as though it were allowed for the historian to hold something contrary to the faith of the believer or to advance hypotheses from which it would follow that the dogmas are false or doubtful, provided only that these are not directly denied. 3545

Equally I reject any way of judging and interpreting Holy Scripture that, disregarding the Church's tradition, the analogy of faith, and the norms laid down by the Apostolic See, adheres to the inventions of the rationalists and, with as much presumption as temerity, accepts textual criticism as the only and supreme rule. 3546

Equally I reject the opinion of those who maintain that an instructor who teaches a historical theological discipline or writes about these things must first of all discard any preconceived opinion about the supernatural origin of Catholic tradition or about the help promised by God to preserve forever all revealed truth; (and that) therefore he must interpret the writings of the individual Fathers on purely scientific principles to the exclusion of all sacred authority and with the same freedom of judgment with which any profane document is studied. 3547

Finally, I profess in general that I am completely adverse to the error of the modernists who say that there is nothing divine in the sacred tradition or—what (is) still worse—who admit (the divine) in a pantheistic sense, which would leave us with a bare and simple fact, on a par with the common facts of history, (the fact), namely, that men, through their efforts, their skillfulness, and their ingenuity, continued in subsequent ages the instruction that was started by Christ and his apostles. 3548

3549 Proinde fidem Patrum firmissime retineo et ad extremum vitae spiritum retinebo, de charismate veritatis certo, quod est, fuit eritque semper in “episcopatus ab Apostolis successione”;¹ non ut id teneatur, quod melius et aptius videri possit secundum suam cuiusque aetatis culturam, sed ut “numquam aliter credatur, numquam aliter” intelligatur absoluta et immutabilis veritas ab initio per Apostolos praedicata.²

3550 Haec omnia spondeo me fideliter, integre sincereque ser[672]vaturum et inviolabiliter custoditurum, nusquam ab iis sive in docendo sive quomodolibet verbis scriptisque deflectendo. Sic spondeo, sic iuro, sic me Deus adiuvet et haec sancta Dei Evangelia.

Thus I hold steadfastly, and shall continue to hold to my last breath, the faith of the Fathers in the sure charism of truth that is, has been, and always will be “in the succession of the bishops from the apostles”,¹ not so that what seems better and more suited according to the culture of each age should be held, but so that the absolute and immutable truth, which from the beginning was preached by the apostles, “should never be believed, never be understood, in a different way”.²

I promise that I shall keep all this faithfully, wholly, and sincerely, that I shall keep it inviolate, never deviating from it in teaching or in any way in word or in writing. Thus I promise, thus I swear; so help me God and these holy Gospels of God.

3553–3556: Letter Ex quo, nono to the Apostolic Legates in Byzantium, Greece, Egypt, Mesopotamia, etc., December 26, 1910

Ed.: AAS 3 (1911):118f.

Errors of the Orientals

3553 Non minus temere quam falso huic opinioni fit aditus, dogma de processione Spiritus Sancti a Filio haudquaquam ex ipsis Evangelii verbis profluere, aut antiquorum Patrum fide comprobari;

No less rashly than falsely recourse is made to the opinion that the dogma of the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Son in no way flows from the very words of the Gospel or is established from the faith of the ancient Fathers;

3554 pariter imprudentissime in dubium [119] revocatur, utrum sacra de Purgatorio ac de Immaculata Beatae Mariae Virginis Conceptione dogmata a sanctis viris priorum saeculorum agnita fuerint;

likewise, most imprudently, doubt is expressed as to whether the sacred dogmas of purgatory and the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary were acknowledged by holy men of the first centuries;

3555 ... de Ecclesiae constitutione ... primo renovatur error a decessore Nostro Innocentio X iamdiu damnatus [cf. *1999], quo suadetur, S. Paulum haberi tamquam fratrem omnino parem S. Petro; —deinde non minori falsitate inicitur persuasio, Ecclesiam catholicam non fuisse primis saeculis principatum unius, hoc est monarchiam; aut primum Ecclesiae Romanae nullis validis argumentis inniti.

... in regard to the constitution of the Church, ... there is first a renewal of the error condemned a long time ago by Our predecessor Innocent X [cf. *1999] that suggests that St. Paul is to be considered a brother completely equal to St. Peter; —and then, with no less falsity, the conviction is set forth that the Catholic Church in the first centuries was not under the governance of a single head, that is, a monarchy; or that the primacy of the Roman Church is not founded on valid arguments.

3556 Sed nec ... intacta relinquitur catholica doctrina de sanctissimo Eucharistiae Sacramento, cum praeefracte docetur, sententiam suscipi posse, quae tenet, apud Graecos verba consecratoria effectum non sortiri, nisi iam prolata oratione illa, quam epiclesim vocant,¹ cum tamen compertum sit, Ecclesiae minime competere

But ... not even the Catholic doctrine of the most holy sacrament of the Eucharist is left intact when it is obstinately taught that the view may be sustained that among the Greeks the words of consecration do not produce any effect unless the prayer called the epiclesis¹ is recited, while, nevertheless, it is known that the ius circa ipsam sacramentorum substantiam quidpiam innovandi; —cui haud minus absonum est, validam habendam esse Confirmationem a quovis presbytero collatam [cf. *2522].

*3549¹ Cf. Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses IV, 40, no. 2 (ed. W.W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1857], 2:236 / = IV, 26, no. 2: SC 100/II:718 / PG 7:1053C).

² Cf. Tertullian, De praescriptione haereticorum 28 (R.F. Refoulé: CpChL 1 [1954]: 209 / CSEL 70:34 / PL 2:47).

*3556¹ Opposed to this opinion already were Benedict XII (*1017) and Pius VII (*2718); moreover, Clement VI, letter Super quibusdam to Consolator, Catholicos of the Armenians, of September 29, 1351 (BarAE at year 1351, no. 11), Benedict XIII, instruction to the Patriarch of the Melkites of Antioch, May 31, 1729 (CollLac 2:439–41), and Benedict XIV, brief Singularis Romanorum, September 1, 1741 (CollLac 2:488d–492b).

[Censura: Notantur tamquam] graves errores.

Church does not possess in any way the right to innovate in regard to what pertains to the very substance of the sacraments; —no less inadmissible is the view that one should regard as valid the confirmation administered by any priest whatsoever [cf. *2552].

[Censure: These should be regarded as] grave errors.

3561–3567: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 19, 1911

Ed.: AAS 3 (1911): 294–96 / EnchB nos. 383–89.

The Author, Time of Composition, and Historical Truth of the Gospel according to Matthew

Qu. 1: Utrum, attento universali et a primis saeculis constanti Ecclesiae consensu, quem luculenter ostendunt diserta Patrum testimonia, codicum Evangeliorum inscriptiones, sacrorum Librorum versiones vel antiquissimae, et catalogi a sanctis Patribus, ab ecclesiasticis scriptoribus, a Summis Pontificibus et Conciliis traditi, ac tandem usus liturgicus Ecclesiae orientalis et occidentalis, affirmari certo possit et debeat, Matthaeum, Christi Apostolum, revera Evangelii sub eius nomine vulgati esse auctorem?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 2: Utrum traditionis suffragio satis fulciri censenda sit sententia, quae tenet, Matthaeum et ceteros Evangelistas in scribendo praecessisse et primum Evangelium patrio sermone a Iudaeis palaestinensibus tunc usitato, quibus opus illud erat directum, conscripsisse?

Resp.: Affirmative ad utramque partem. [295]

Qu. 3: Utrum redactio huius originalis textus differri possit ultra tempus eversionis Ierusalem, ita ut vaticinia, quae de eadem eversione ibi leguntur, scripta fuerint post eventum; aut, quod allegari solet Irenaei testimonium,¹ incertae et controversae interpretationis, tanti ponderis sit existimandum, ut cogat reicere eorum sententiam, qui congruentius traditioni censent, eandem redactionem etiam ante Pauli in Urbem adventum fuisse confectam?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

Qu. 4: Utrum sustineri vel probabiliter possit illa modernorum quorundam opinio, iuxta quam Matthaeus non proprie et stricte Evangelium composuisset, quale nobis est traditum, sed tantummodo collectionem aliquam dictorum seu sermonum Christi, quibus tamquam fontibus usus esset alius auctor anonymus, quem Evangelii ipsius redactorem faciunt?

Resp.: Negative.

Question 1: Bearing in mind the universal and constant consensus of the Church dating from the first centuries, which explicit testimonies of the Fathers, the titles of the manuscripts of the Gospels, the oldest translations of the sacred books, as well as the catalogues transmitted (to us) by the holy Fathers, ecclesiastical writers, supreme pontiffs, and councils, and, finally, the liturgical usages of the Eastern and Western Church clearly record, can and must it be affirmed with certainty that Matthew, the apostle of Christ, is in truth the author of the Gospel published under his name?

Response: Yes.

Question 2: Must the opinion be considered as sufficiently supported by the testimony of tradition that holds that Matthew preceded the other evangelists in writing and that he composed the first Gospel in the native language then in use by the Jews of Palestine, for whom this work was intended?

Response: Yes to both parts.

Question 3: May the redaction of this original text be deferred beyond the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, so that the prophecies that one reads therein about that destruction would have been written after the event, or must such great authority be attributed to the frequently quoted testimony of Irenaeus,¹ the interpretation (of which) is uncertain and disputed, as to necessitate the rejection of the opinion of those who consider it more in conformity with tradition that the aforementioned composition was completed even before the arrival of Paul in the City (Rome)?

Response: No to both parts.

Question 4: May the opinion of certain moderns be sustained even as probable according to which Matthew is said not to have composed the Gospel in the proper and strict sense as it has been transmitted to us, but only a collection of words and discourses of Christ, which an anonymous author, whom these (moderns) call the redactor of the Gospel, has used as sources?

Response: No.

*3563¹ Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses III, 1, no. 2 (ed. W.W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1857], 2:3–6 / SC 211 [1974]: 22–24 / PG 7:844f.).

3565 Qu. 5: Utrum ex eo, quod Patres et ecclesiastici scriptores omnes, immo Ecclesia ipsa iam a suis incunabulis unice usi sunt, tamquam canonico, graeco textu Evangelii sub Matthaei nomine cogniti, ne iis quidem exceptis, qui Matthaenum Apostolum patrio scripsisse sermone expresse tradiderunt, certo probari possit, ipsum Evangelium graecum identicum esse quoad substantiam cum Evangelio illo, patrio sermone ab eodem Apostolo exarato?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3566 Qu. 6: Utrum ex eo, quod auctor primi Evangelii scopum prosequitur praecipue dogmaticum et apologeticum, demonstrandi nempe Iudaeis Iesum esse Messiam a prophetis praenuntiatum et a Davidica stirpe progenitum, et quod insuper in disponendis factis et dictis, quae enarrat et refert, non semper ordinem chronologicum tenet, deduci inde liceat, ea non esse ut vera recipienda; aut etiam affirmari possit, narrationes gestorum et sermonum Christi, quae in ipso Evangelio leguntur, alterationem quamdam et adaptationem sub influxu prophetiarum Veteris Testamenti et adultioris Ecclesiae status subiisse, ac proinde historicae veritati haud esse conformes?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

3567 Qu. 7: Utrum speciatim solido fundamento destituta censi iure debeant opiniones eorum, qui in dubium revocant authenticitatem historicam duorum priorum capitum, in quibus genealogia et infantia Christi [296] narrantur, sicut et quarundam in re dogmatica magni momenti sententiarum, uti sunt illae, quae respiciunt primatum Petri [Mt 16:17–19], formam baptizandi cum universali missione praedicandi Apostolis traditam [Mt 28:19s], professionem fidei Apostolorum in divinitatem Christi [Mt 14:33], et alia huiusmodi, quae apud Matthaenum peculiari modo enuntiata occurrunt?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3568–3578: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 26, 1912

Ed.: AAS 4 (1912): 463–65 / EnchB nos. 390–98.

I. The Author, Time of Composition, and Historical Truth of the Gospels according to Mark and Luke

3568 Qu. 1: Utrum luculentum traditionis suffragium, inde ab Ecclesiae primordiis mire consentiens ac multiplici argumento firmatum, nimirum disertis sanctorum Patrum et scriptorum ecclesiasticorum testimoniis, citationibus et allusionibus in eorundem scriptis currentibus, veterum haereticorum usu, versionibus Librorum Novi Testamenti, codicibus manuscriptis antiquissimis et pene universis, atque etiam internis rationibus ex ipso sacrorum Librorum textu desumptis, Question 5: From the fact that the Fathers and ecclesiastical writers, and even the Church herself, from her beginning, have used only the Greek text of the Gospel known under the name of Matthew as canonical, not even excepting those who have explicitly testified that Matthew, the apostle, wrote in his native language, can it be proved with certainty that the Greek Gospel is identical in substance with the Gospel written by the same apostle in his native language?

Response: Yes.

Question 6: From the fact that the purpose of the author is principally dogmatic and apologetic, demonstrating to the Jews that Jesus is the Messiah foretold by the prophets and a descendant of the house of David, and that, moreover, the author does not always follow the chronological order in arranging the deeds and sayings that he narrates and records, is it permitted to conclude that these are not to be accepted as true; and may it also be affirmed that the accounts of the deeds and words of Christ that one reads in the Gospel have been subjected to changes and adaptations under the influence of the prophecies of the Old Testament and the more developed status of the Church and are, consequently, not in conformity with historical truth?

Response: No to both parts.

Question 7: Must in particular the opinions be considered devoid of any solid foundation of those who call in question the historical authenticity of the first two chapters, in which the genealogy and the infancy of Christ are narrated, as also certain passages of great importance with respect to dogma, such as those relating to the primacy of Peter [Mt 16:17–19], the form of baptism transmitted to the apostles together with the universal mission of proclamation [Mt 28:19f.], the apostles' profession of faith in the divinity of Christ [Mt 14:33], and others such as this, which are expressed in a particular manner in Matthew?

Response: Yes.

Question 1: Does the clear voice of tradition, wonderfully consistent from the beginnings of the Church and supported by numerous arguments, namely, by the explicit testimonies of the holy Fathers and ecclesiastical writers, by the citations and allusions occurring in their writings, by the usage of the ancient heretics, by the translations of the books of the New Testament, by almost all the most ancient manuscripts, and also by intrinsic reasons taken from the text of the sacred books themselves, certo affirmare cogat, Marcum, Petri discipulum et interpretem, Lucam vero medicum, Pauli adiutorem et comitem, revera Evangeliorum, quae ipsis respective attribuuntur, esse auctores?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 2: Utrum rationes, quibus nonnulli critici demonstrare nituntur, postremos duodecim versus Evangelii Marci [Mc 16:9–20] non esse ab ipso Marco conscriptos, sed ab aliena manu appositos, tales sint, quae ius tribuant affirmandi, eos non esse ut inspiratos et canonicos recipiendos; vel saltem demonstrent, versuum eorumdem Marcum non esse auctorem?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

Qu. 3: Utrum pariter dubitare liceat de inspiratione et canonicitate narrationum Lucae de infantia Christi [Lc 1–2]; aut de apparitione Angeli Iesum confortantis et de sudore sanguineo [Lc 22:43s]; vel solidis saltem rationibus ostendi possit—quod placuit antiquis haereticis et quibusdam etiam recentioribus criticis arridet—easdem narrationes ad genuinum Lucae Evangelium non pertinere?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

Qu. 4: Utrum rarissima illa et prorsus singularia documenta, in quibus Canticum “Magnificat” [Lc 1:46–55] non beatae Virgini Mariae, sed Elisabeth tribuitur, ullo modo praevalere possint ac debeant contra testimonium concors [464] omnium fere codicum tum graeci textus originalis, tum versionum, necnon contra interpretationem, quam plane exigunt non minus contextus, quam ipsius Virginis animus et constans Ecclesiae traditio?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 5: Utrum, quoad ordinem chronologicum Evangeliorum, ab ea sententia recedere fas sit, quae, antiquissimo aequae ac constanti traditionis testimonio roborata, post Matthaum, qui omnium primus Evangelium suum patrio sermone conscripsit, Marcum ordine secundum et Lucam tertium scripsisse testatur; aut huic sententiae adversari vicissim censenda sit eorum opinio, quae asserit, Evangelium secundum et tertium ante graecam primi Evangelii versionem esse compositum?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

Qu. 6: Utrum tempus compositionis Evangeliorum Marci et Lucae usque ad urbem Ierusalem eversam differre liceat; vel, eo quod apud Lucam prophetia Domini circa huius urbis eversionem magis determinata videatur, ipsius saltem Evangelium obsidione iam inchoata fuisse conscriptum, sustineri possit?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

compel us to affirm with certainty that Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, and Luke, a physician, the assistant and companion of Paul, are really the authors of the Gospels that are respectively attributed to them?

Response: Yes.

Question 2: Are the reasons by which some critics endeavor to prove that the last twelve verses of the Gospel of Mark [Mk 16:9–20] were not written by Mark himself but added by another hand of such a kind as to confer the right to maintain that these (verses) are not to be accepted as inspired and canonical or at least prove that Mark is not the author of said verses?

Response: No to both parts.

Question 3: Is it likewise permitted to doubt the inspiration and canonicity of the narrations of Luke about the infancy of Christ [Lk 1–2] or about the apparition of the angel who comforted Jesus and about the bloody sweat [Lk 22:43–44]; or can it at least be shown by solid evidence—which pleased ancient heretics and also suits certain more recent critics—that these narrations do not belong to the genuine Gospel of Luke?

Response: No to both parts.

Question 4: Can and should those very rare and altogether isolated documents in which the canticle Magnificat [Lc 1:46–55] is attributed, not to the Blessed Virgin Mary, but to Elizabeth prevail in any way against the unanimous testimony of nearly all the manuscripts both of the original Greek text and also of the translations as well as against the interpretation clearly required no less by the context than by the attitude of the Virgin herself and constant tradition of the Church?

Response: No.

Question 5: With regard to the chronological order of the Gospels, is it permitted to depart from the opinion, confirmed by the very ancient as well as the constant testimony of tradition, which testifies that, after Matthew, who, as the first of all, wrote his Gospel in his native language, Mark wrote second in order, and Luke third; or, on the other hand, is this opinion to be regarded as opposed to that which asserts that the second and third Gospels were composed before the Greek translation of the first Gospel?

Response: No to both parts.

Question 6: May the date of the composition of the Gospels of Mark and Luke be deferred up to the destruction of the city of Jerusalem; or can it at least be held, from the fact that in Luke the prophecy of the Lord concerning the destruction of this city seems to be more definite, that his Gospel was written after the siege had begun?

Response: No to both parts.

3569

3570

3571

3572

3573

3574 Qu. 7: Utrum affirmari debeat, Evangelium Lucae praecessisse librum Actuum Apostolorum; et cum hic liber, eodem Luca auctore [Act 1:1s], ad finem captivitatis Romanae Apostoli fuerit absolutus [Act 28:30s], eiusdem Evangelium non post hoc tempus fuisse compositum?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3575 Qu. 8: Utrum, prae oculis habitis tum traditionis testimoniis, tum argumentis internis, quoad fontes, quibus uterque Evangelista in conscribendo Evangelio usus est, in dubium vocari prudenter queat sententia, quae tenet Marcum iuxta praedicationem Petri, Lucam autem iuxta praedicationem Pauli scripsisse; simulque asserit, iisdem Evangelistis praesto fuisse alios quoque fontes fide dignos, sive orales sive etiam iam scriptis consignatos?

Resp.: Negative.

3576 Qu. 9: Utrum dicta et gesta, quae a Marco iuxta Petri praedicationem accurate et quasi graphice enarrantur, et a Luca assecuto omnia a principio diligenter per testes fide plane dignos, quippe qui ab initio ipsi viderunt et ministri fuerunt sermonis [Lc 1:2s], sincerissime exponuntur, plenam sibi eam fidem historicam iure vindicent, quam eisdem semper praestitit Ecclesia; an e contrario eadem facta et gesta censenda sint historica veritate, saltem ex parte, destituta, sive quod scriptores non fuerint testes oculares, sive quod apud utrumque Evangelistam defectus ordinis ac discrepantia in successione factorum haud raro [465] deprehendantur; sive quod, cum tardius venerint et scripserint, necessario conceptiones menti Christi et Apostolorum extraneas aut facta plus minusve iam imaginatione populi inquinata referre debuerint, sive demum quod dogmaticis ideis praeconceptis, quisque pro suo scopo, indulserint?

Resp.: Affirmative ad primam partem; negative ad alteram.

II. The Synoptic Question, or the Mutual Relationship between the Three First Evangelists

3577 Qu. 1: Utrum, servatis quae iuxta praecedenter statuta omnino servanda sunt, praesertim de authenticitate et integritate trium Evangeliorum Matthaei, Marci et Lucae, de identitate substantiali Evangelii graeci Matthaei cum eius originali primitivo, necnon de ordine temporum, quo eadem scripta fuerunt, ad explicandum eorum ad invicem similitudines aut dissimilitudines, inter tot varias oppositasque auctorum sententias, liceat exegetis libere disputare et ad hypotheses traditionis sive scriptae sive oralis vel etiam dependentiae unius a praecedenti seu a praecedentibus appellare?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Question 7: Must it be affirmed that the Gospel of Luke preceded the book of the Acts of the Apostles; and, since this book of which the same Luke is author [Acts 1:1–2] was finished at the end of the Roman imprisonment of the apostle [Acts 28:30–31], that his Gospel was composed not after this date?

Response: Yes.

Question 8: In view both of the testimony of tradition and of internal arguments, with regard to the sources that both evangelists used in writing (their) Gospels, can the opinion reasonably be called into question that holds that Mark wrote according to the preaching of Peter and Luke according to the preaching of Paul and that at the same time asserts that these evangelists also had at their disposal other trustworthy sources, either oral or already written?

Response: No.

Question 9: Do the words and actions that are accurately and almost graphically narrated by Mark, according to the preaching of Peter, and are most sincerely set forth by Luke, having diligently learned everything from the beginning from eminently trustworthy witnesses, (namely,) “who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word” [Lk 1:2f.], have a just claim to the full historical credence that the Church has ever given them; or, on the contrary, are the events and actions to be regarded as devoid of historical truth at least in part, either because the writers were not eyewitnesses or because in both evangelists a lack of order and discrepancy in the succession of events are not infrequently found or because, since they came and wrote later, they must necessarily have related conceptions foreign to the mind of Christ and the apostles or facts more or less distorted by popular imagination or, finally, because they indulged in preconceived dogmatic ideas, each according to his objective.

Response: Yes to the first part; no to the second.

Question 1: Observing what is to be absolutely observed according to what has been already laid down, especially with regard to the authenticity and integrity of the three Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, the substantial identity of the Greek Gospel of Matthew with its primitive original, and the order of time in which they were written, is it permitted for exegetes, in order to explain the similarities and dissimilarities between them (and) in view of so many varying and opposing opinions of authors, to debate freely and to appeal to hypotheses of oral or written tradition or even to the dependence of one on the one or both that precede?

Response: Yes.

Qu. 2: Utrum ea, quae superius statuta sunt, ii servare censi debeant, qui, nullo fulti traditionis testimonio nec historico argumento, facile amplectuntur hypothesim vulgo “duorum fontium” nuncupatam, quae compositionem Evangelii graeci Matthaei et Evangelii Lucae ex eorum potissimum dependentia ab Evangelio Marci et a collectione sic dicta sermonum Domini contendit explicare; ac proinde eam libere propugnare valeant?

Resp.: Negative ad utramque partem.

Question 2: Is what has been laid down above to be considered as observed by those who, unsupported by any testimony of tradition or by any historical evidence, readily endorse the so-called “two-source” hypothesis, which strives to explain the composition of the Greek Gospel of Matthew and the Gospel of Luke mainly by their dependence on the Gospel of Mark and on the so-called collection of “Sayings of the Lord”; and can they, therefore, freely advocate it?

Response: No to both parts.

3578

3581–3590: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 12, 1913

Ed.: AAS 5 (1913): 291–93 / EnchB nos. 401–10.

I. The Author, Time of Composition, and Historical Truth of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles

Qu. 1: Utrum, perspecta potissimum Ecclesiae universae traditione usque ad primaevos ecclesiasticos scriptores assurgente, attentisque internis rationibus libri Actuum sive in se sive in sua ad tertium Evangelium relatione considerati et praesertim mutua utriusque prologi affinitate et connexionione [Lc 1:1–4; Act 1:1s], uti certum tenendum sit, volumen, quod titulo Actus Apostolorum, seu Πράξεις Ἀποστόλων, praenotatur, Lucam Evangelistam habere auctorem?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 2: Utrum criticis rationibus, desumptis tum ex lingua et stilo, tum ex enarrandi modo, tum ex unitate scopi et doctrinae, demonstrari possit, librum Actuum Apostolorum uni dumtaxat auctori tribui debere; ac proinde eam recentiorum scriptorum sententiam, quae tenet, Lucam non esse libri auctorem unicum, sed diversos esse agnoscendos eiusdem libri auctores, quovis fundamento esse destitutam?

Resp.: Affirmative ad utramque partem.

Qu. 3: Utrum, in specie, pericopae in Actis conspicuae, in quibus, abrupto usu tertiae personae, inducitur prima pluralis (“WirStücke”), unitatem compositionis et authenticitatem infirmit; vel potius historice et philologicè consideratae eam confirmare dicendae sint?

Resp.: Negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad secundam.

Qu. 4: Utrum ex eo, quod liber ipse, vix mentione facta bienni primae romanae Pauli captivitatis, abrupte clauditur, inferri liceat, auctorem volumen alterum deperditum conscripsisse, aut conscribere intendisse, ac proinde tempus compositionis libri Actuum longe possit post eandem captivitatem differri; vel potius

Question 1: In view especially of the tradition of the universal Church going back to the earliest ecclesiastical writers, considering the internal reasons furnished by the book of the Acts considered in itself and its relation to the third Gospel, and particularly the mutual affinity and connection of the two prologues [Lk 1:1–4; Acts 1:1–2], must it be held as certain that the volume entitled The Acts of the Apostles, or Πράξεις Ἀποστόλων, has the evangelist Luke for its author?

Response: Yes.

Question 2: Can it be proved by critical arguments based on the language and style, on the method of narration, on the unity of purpose and doctrine, that the book of the Acts of the Apostles must be attributed to one sole author; and that, therefore, the opinion of recent writers that Luke is not the sole author of the book, but that several authors of the aforementioned book must be admitted, lacks any foundation?

Response: Yes to both parts.

Question 3: In particular, do those striking pericopes in the Acts (of the Apostles) in which the use of the third person is abandoned and the first (person) plural (Wir-stücke, we-sections) introduced weaken the unity of composition and the authenticity; or must these passages, considered historically and philologically, rather be said to confirm (the unity of composition and the authenticity)?

Response: No to the first part; yes to the second part.

Question 4: From the fact that the book itself, after barely mentioning the two years of the first Roman captivity of Paul, abruptly closes, may it be inferred that the author either wrote another volume that has been lost or intended to write (one) and that the date of composition of the book of the Acts (of the Apostles) can therefore be iure et merito retinendum sit, Lucam sub finem primae captivitatis Romanae Apostoli Pauli libram absolvisse?

3582

3583

3584

Resp.: Negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad secundam. [292]

3585 Qu. 5: Utrum, si simul considerentur tum frequens ac facile commercium, quod procul dubio habuit Lucas cum primis et praecipuis ecclesiae Palaestinensis fundatoribus nec non cum Paulo, gentium Apostolo, cuius et in evangelica praedicatione adiutor et in itineribus comes fuit, tum solita eius industria et diligentia in exquirendis testibus rebusque suis oculis observandis, tum denique plerumque evidens et mirabilis consensus libri Actuum cum ipsis Pauli epistolis et cum sincerioribus historiae monumentis, certo teneri debeat, Lucam fontes omni fide dignos prae manibus habuisse eosque accurate, probe et fideliter adhibuisse, adeo ut plenam auctoritatem historicam sibi iure vindicet?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3586 Qu. 6: Utrum difficultates, quae passim obici solent tum ex factis supernaturalibus a Luca narratis, tum ex relatione quorundam sermonum, qui, cum sint compendiose traditi, censentur conficti et circumstantiis adaptati, tum ex nonnullis locis ab historia sive profana sive biblica apparenter saltem dissentientibus, tum demum ex narrationibus quibusdam, quae sive cum ipso Actuum auctore sive cum aliis auctoribus sacris pugnare videntur, tales sint, ut auctoritatem Actuum historicam in dubium revocare vel saltem aliquomodo minuere possint?

Resp.: Negative.

II. The Authorship, Integrity, and Time of Composition of the Pastoral Letters of the Apostle Paul

3587 Qu. 1: Utrum, prae oculis habita Ecclesiae traditione inde a primordiis universaliter firmiterque perseverante, prout multimodis ecclesiastica monumenta vetusta testantur, teneri certo debeat, epistolas, quae pastorales dicuntur, nempe ad Timotheum utramque et aliam ad Titum, non obstante quorundam haereticorum ausu, qui eas, utpote suo dogmati contrarias, de numero paulinarum epistolarum, nulla reddita causa, eraserunt, ab ipso Apostolo Paulo fuisse conscriptas et inter genuinas et canonicas perpetuo recensitas?

Resp.: Affirmative.

3588 Qu. 2: Utrum hypothesis sic dicta fragmentaria a quibusdam recentioribus criticis inventa et varie proposita, qui nulla ceteroquin probabili [293] ratione, assigned to a time far later than this captivity; or, rather, is it rightly and properly to be held that Luke finished the book toward the end of the first Roman captivity of the apostle Paul?

Response: No to the first part; yes to the second part.

Question 5: If we consider at once the frequent and easy relations that Luke undoubtedly had with the first and principal founders of the Church of Palestine as well as with Paul, apostle of the Gentiles, to whom he was an assistant in his proclamation of the gospel and companion in his journeys; (Luke's) customary industry and diligence in examining witnesses and in seeing things for himself; and finally the evident and most remarkable agreement of the Acts (of the Apostles) with the Epistles of Paul himself and with the more genuine historical records; must it be held for certain that Luke had in hand absolutely trustworthy sources and that he used them accurately, properly, and faithfully, so that complete historical authority may be claimed for him?

Response: Yes.

Question 6: Are the difficulties commonly alleged on the basis of the supernatural events narrated by Luke and also on the basis of (his) account of certain discourses that, being given summarily, are considered fictional and adapted to circumstances, and also on the basis of certain passages that are at least apparently in conflict with secular or biblical history; and, finally, also on the basis of several accounts that seem to disagree either with the author of the Acts himself or with other sacred writers of a kind to render doubtful or at least in some way to diminish the historical authority of the Acts?

Response: No.

Question 1: If one considers the universally and persistently enduring tradition of the Church from the beginning, as ancient ecclesiastical records testify in various ways, must it be held for certain that the Epistles known as Pastoral, namely, the two to Timothy and the one to Titus, notwithstanding the efforts of certain heretics who have, without giving any reason, eliminated them from the number of Pauline Epistles as being contrary to their (own) teachings, were written by the apostle Paul himself and ever counted as genuine and canonical?

Response: Yes.

Question 2: Can the so-called "fragment hypothesis", introduced and set forth in various ways by certain recent critics who, without indeed any probable ground immo inter se pugnantem contendunt, epistolas pastorales posteriori tempore ex fragmentis epistolarum sive ex epistolis paulinis deperditis ab ignotis auctoribus fuisse contextas et notabiliter auctas, perspicuo et firmissimo traditionis testimonio aliquod vel leve praeiudicium inferre possit?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 3: Utrum difficultates, quae multifariam obici solent sive ex stilo et lingua auctoris, sive ex erroribus praesertim Gnosticorum, qui uti iam tunc serpentes describuntur, sive ex statu ecclesiasticae hierarchiae, quae iam evoluta supponitur, aliaeque huiusmodi in contrarium rationes sententiam, quae genuinitatem epistolarum pastoralium ratam certamque habet, quomodolibet infirmant?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 4: Utrum, cum non minus ex historicis rationibus quam ex ecclesiastica traditione, sanctorum Patrum orientalium et occidentalium testimoniis consona, necnon ex indiciis ipsis, quae tum ex abrupta conclusione libri Actuum, tum ex paulinis epistolis Romae conscriptis et praesertim ex secunda ad Timotheum facile eruuntur, uti certa haberi debeat sententia de duplici romana captivitate Apostoli Pauli; tuto affirmari possit epistolas pastorales conscriptas esse in illo temporis spatio, quod intercedit inter liberationem a prima captivitate et mortem Apostoli?

Resp.: Affirmative.

and actually contradicting each other, contend that the Pastoral Letters were put together at a later period by unknown authors from fragments of letters or from lost Pauline Letters, and greatly augmented, do even the least harm to the conspicuous and most firm testimony of tradition?

Response: No.

Question 3: Do the difficulties commonly cited in various ways either on the basis of the style and language of the author or on the basis of the errors, especially of the Gnostics, that are already described at that time as serpents or on the basis of the state of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, which is supposed to be already developed, and other such reasons to the contrary, in any way weaken the opinion that holds the authenticity of the Pastoral Letters to be established and certain?

Response: No.

Question 4: Since not only on historical grounds and on the basis of ecclesiastical tradition, in harmony with the testimony of the Eastern and Western holy Fathers, as well as on the basis of the indications easily gleaned both from the abrupt conclusion of the book of the Acts and from the Pauline Letters written at Rome, especially the second to Timothy, the opinion about the two Roman imprisonments of the apostle Paul must be held as certain, can it be safely affirmed that the Pastoral Letters were written during the period between the liberation from the first imprisonment and the death of the apostle?

Response: Yes.

3591–3593: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 24, 1914

Ed.: AAS 6 (1914): 417 / EnchB nos. 411–13.

The Author and Mode of Composition of the Letter to the Hebrews

Qu. 1: Utrum dubiis, quae primis saeculis, ob haereticorum imprimis abusum, aliquorum in Occidente animos tenere circa divinam inspirationem ac paulinam originem epistolae ad Hebraeos, tanta vis tribuenda sit, ut, attenta perpetua, unanimi ac constanti orientalium Patrum affirmatione, cui post saeculum IV totius occidentalis Ecclesiae plenus accessit consensus; perpensis quoque Summorum Pontificum sacrorumque conciliorum, Tridentini praesertim, actis, necnon perpetuo Ecclesiae universalis usu, haesitare liceat, eam non solum inter canonicas—quod de fide definitum est—, verum etiam inter genuinas Apostoli Pauli epistolas certo recensere?

Resp.: Negative.

Question 1: Should so much importance be attached to the doubts concerning the divine inspiration and Pauline origin of the Letter to the Hebrews—which, owing chiefly to its misuse by heretics, occupied the minds of some in the West in the first centuries—that when we take into account the abiding, unanimous, and constant testimony of the Eastern Fathers, with which since the fourth century the whole Western Church has been in perfect accord; considering also the decrees of the supreme pontiffs and of the sacred councils, that of Trent especially, and finally the continuous practice of the universal Church, we may hesitate to count the Letter with certainty not only among the canonical Letters (which has been defined to be of faith), but also among the genuine letters of the apostle Paul as well?

Response: No.

3592 Qu. 2: Utrum argumenta, quae desumi solent sive ex insolita nominis Pauli absentia et consueti exordii salutationisque omissione in epistola ad Hebraeos—sive ex eiusdem linguae graecae puritate, dictionis ac stili elegantia et perfectione,—sive ex modo, quo in ea Vetus Testamentum allegatur et ex eo arguitur,—sive ex differentiis quibusdam, quae inter huius ceterarumque Pauli epistolarum doctrinam existere praetenduntur, aliquomodo eiusdem paulinam originem infirmare valeant; an potius perfecta doctrinae ac sententiarum consensio, admonitionum et exhortationum similitudo, necnon locutionum ac ipsorum verborum concordia a nonnullis quoque acatholicis celebrata, quae inter eam et reliqua Apostoli gentium scripta observantur, eandem paulinam originem commonstrent atque confirment?

Resp.: Negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad alteram.

3593 Qu. 3: Utrum Paulus Apostolus ita huius epistolae auctor censendus sit, ut necessario affirmari debeat, ipsum eam totam non solum Spiritu Sancto inspirante concepisse et expressisse, verum etiam ea forma donasse, qua prostat?

Resp.: Negative, salvo ulteriori Ecclesiae iudicio.

Question 2: Can the arguments generally advanced, drawn from the singular absence of Paul's name and the omission of the regular introduction and greeting in the Letter to the Hebrews or from the faultlessness of its Greek language, from the elegance and perfection of expression and style, or from the way in which the Old Testament is quoted and argued from in it, or from some discrepancies that are alleged to exist between the doctrine of this letter and that of the other letters of Paul in any way disprove its Pauline origin? Or, on the other hand, do not the complete harmony of doctrine and concepts, the similarity of the cautions and counsels, and the consistency in ways of speaking and in the very words, praised even by some non-Catholics, that are to be observed between it and the other works of the apostle of the Gentiles rather manifest and confirm the aforementioned Pauline origin?

Response: No to the first part; yes to the second part.

Question 3: Must the apostle Paul be accounted so to have been the author of this letter that one must necessarily assert that he not only planned and composed it in its entirety under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, but also that he provided it with exactly the form in which it now stands?

Response: No, subject to further decision of the Church.

3601–3624: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Studies, July 27, 1914

In his motu proprio Doctoris Angelici of June 29, 1914, Pius X had ordered the ecclesiastical schools of Italy “to uphold religiously the principles and major declarations of Thomas Aquinas” (principia et maiora Thomae Aquinatis pronuntiata sancte teneantur). Several Thomists thereupon presented to the Congregation of Studies twenty-four metaphysical theses (that they held) for approval. Philosophical schools of other traditions suspected that Neo-Thomism would be imposed on them against their convictions and that their freedom to hold other perspectives would be removed. In view of such objections, the Congregation of Studies, on March 7, 1916, declared: “All those twenty-four philosophical theses express the authentic doctrine of St. Thomas, and they are to be proposed as sure directional norms” (Omnes illae 24 theses philosophicae germanam S. Thomae doctrinam expriment, eaeque proponantur veluti tutae normae directivae; AAS 8 [1916]: 157). The theses, as such, are not obligatory in an absolute manner. In order “to adhere to St. Thomas” (adhaerendum Sancto Thomae), it is not necessary that one embrace the doctrinal system of St. Thomas in its entirety. In his March 19, 1917, letter, Quod de fovenda, to Wladimir Ledóchowski, the Superior General of the Jesuits, Benedict XV clarified the manner in which these directional norms should be understood:

“With no less satisfaction have We observed that you have considered carefully, with an accurate scale, the weight of the reasons on both sides of this discussion regarding the manner in which one must be based on the doctrines of St. Thomas. We, in fact, believe that you have decided correctly when you judge that they adhere sufficiently to the Angelic Doctor who suppose that the theses of Thomas’ doctrine, taken as a whole, are to be proposed as secure directional norms without, however, an obligation being imposed to accept all of the theses. In consideration of this rule, the students of the Society [of Jesus] can rightfully cast off the fear of not following with adequate obedience the commands of the Roman pontiff, whose constant opinion has been that St. Thomas should be considered the guide and teacher of studies in theology and philosophy, in which, however, anyone is free to dispute on either side about which one can and usually does dispute” (Neque minus iucunde animadvertimus aequa te lance rationum momenta perpensis, quibus quemadmodum oporteat a S. Thomae doctrinis esse, hinc inde disceptando contenditur. Quo quidem in iudicio recte Nos te sensisse arbitramur, quum eos putasti Angelico Doctori satis adhaerere, qui universas de Thomae doctrina theses perinde proponendas censeant, ac tutas ad dirigendum normas, nullo scilicet omnium amplectendarum thesium imposito officio. Eiusmodi spectantes regulam, possunt Societatis alumni iure timorem deponere, ne eo quo par est obsequio iussa non prosequantur Rom. Pontificum, quorum ea constans sententia fuit, ducem ac magistrum in theologiae et philosophiae studiis S. Thomam haberi opus esse, integro tamen cuique de iis in utramque partem disputare, de quibus possit soleatque disputari; Acta Romana S.I. 9 [1917]: 318f. / ZKTh 42 [1918]: 206).

On this subject, see also: Pius XI, encyclical Studiorum ducem, June 29, 1923 (*3666); Pius XII, Discourse to Students, June 24, 1939 (AAS 31 [1939]: 246); Discourse to Members of the Dominican Order, September 22, 1946 (AAS 38 [1946]: 387); Discourse to Members of the Gregorian University on the Occasion of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of Its Foundation, October 17, 1953 (AAS 45 [1953]: 684–86); Second Vatican Council, decree Optatam totius, November 28, 1965 (AAS 58 [1966]: 713–27).

Ed.: AAS 6 (1914): 384–86.

Approved Theses of Thomistic Philosophy

1. Potentia et actus ita dividunt ens, ut quidquid est, vel sit actus purus, vel ex potentia et actu tamquam primis atque intrinsicis principiis necessario coalescat. 3601
1. Potency and act subdivide all being in such a way that whatever is either is pure act or is necessarily composed of potency and act as its primary and intrinsic principles.
2. Actus, utpote perfectio, non limitatur nisi per potentiam, quae est capacitas perfectionis. Proinde in quo ordine actus est purus, in eodem nonnisi illimitatus et unicus existit; ubi vero est finitus ac multiplex, in veram incidit cum potentia compositionem. 3602
2. Inasmuch as act is perfection, it is not limited except by potency, which is the capability for perfection. Therefore, to the degree that act is pure, to that same degree it exists only as unlimited and unique. When, however, it is finite and multiple, it is found to be in a true composition with potency.
3. Quapropter in absoluta ipsius esse ratione unus subsistit Deus, unus est simplicissimus, cetera cuncta quae ipsum esse participant, naturam habent qua esse coarctatur, ac tamquam distinctis realiter principiis, essentia et esse constant. 3603
3. Therefore, God alone subsists in the absolute understanding of being itself: he is one and completely simple. All other beings, which participate in being itself, have a nature, which limits being, and are made up of essence and existence as really distinct principles.
4. Ens quod denominatur ab esse, non univoce de Deo ac de creaturis dicitur, nec tamen prorsus aequivoce, sed analogice, analogia tum attributionis tum proportionalitatis. 3604
4. Being, which receives its name from to be, is not predicated univocally of God and creatures, nor is it indeed predicated equivocally, but analogously by means of an analogy of both attribution and proportionality.
5. Est praeterea in omni creatura realis compositio subiecti subsistentis cum formis secundario additis, sive accidentibus: ea vero, nisi esse realiter in essentia distincta reciperetur, intelligi non posset. 3605
5. There is, moreover, in every creature a real composition of the subsistent subject with forms that are added on secondarily, or accidents: this (composition), however, would be unintelligible unless being really were received into a distinct essence.
6. Praeter absoluta accidentia est etiam relativum, sive ad aliquid. Quamvis enim ad aliquid non significet secundum propriam rationem aliquid alicui inhaerens, saepe tamen causam in rebus habet, et ideo realem entitatem distinctam a subiecto. 3606
6. In addition to absolute accidents, there is also a relative (accident), or (an accident) in relation to something. For although in relation to something does not in the proper sense signify something that inheres in another, yet frequently it has its cause in things and, therefore, has its real entity distinct from the subject.
7. Creatura spiritualis est in sua essentia omnino simplex. Sed remanet in ea compositio duplex: essentiae cum esse et substantiae cum accidentibus. 3607
7. A spiritual creature is completely simple in its essence. But a twofold composition remains in it: the composition of essence with being and substance with accidents.
8. Creatura vero corporalis est quoad ipsam essentiam composita potentia et actu; quae potentia et actus ordinis essentiae, materiae et formae nominibus designantur. 3608
8. But a corporeal creature is in its very essence composed of act and potency; this potency and act in the order of essence are called matter and form.
9. Earum partium neutra per se esse habet, nec per se producitur vel corrumpitur, nec ponitur in praedicamento nisi reductive ut principium substantiale. 3609
9. Neither of these parts of themselves possesses being; neither is produced or corrupted of itself; neither is used as a predicate except reductively as a substantial principle.
10. Etsi corpoream naturam extensio in partes integrales consequitur, non tamen idem est corpori esse substantiam et esse quantum. Substantia quippe ratione sui indivisibilis est, non quidem ad modum [385] puncti, 3610
10. Although extension into integral parts is a consequence of corporeal nature, it is, nevertheless, not the same thing for a body to be a substance and to have quantity. Substance of itself is indivisible, not indeed like a point, sed ad modum eius quod est extra ordinem dimensionis. Quantitas vero, quae extensionem substantiae tribuit, a substantia realiter differt, et est veri nominis accidens.

3611 11. Quantitate signata materia principium est individuationis, id est numericae distinctionis, quae in puris spiritibus esse non potest, unius individui ab alio in eadem natura specifica.

3612 12. Eadem efficitur quantitate, ut corpus circumscriptive sit in loco, et in uno tantum loco de quacumque potentia per hunc modum esse possit.

3613 13. Corpora dividuntur bifariam: quaedam enim sunt viventia, quaedam expertia vitae. In viventibus, ut in eodem subiecto pars movens et pars mota per se habeantur, forma substantialis, animae nomine designata, requirit organicam dispositionem seu partes heterogeneas.

3614 14. Vegetalis et sensilis ordinis animae nequaquam per se subsistunt, nec per se producuntur, sed sunt tantummodo ut principium quo vivens est et vivit, et cum a materia se totis dependeant, corrupto composito, eo ipso per accidens corrumpuntur.

3615 15. Contra, per se subsistit anima humana, quae, cum subiecto sufficienter disposito potest infundi, a Deo creatur, et sua natura incorruptibilis est atque immortalis.

3616 16. Eadem anima rationalis ita unitur corpori, ut sit eiusdem forma substantialis unica, et per ipsam habet homo ut sit homo et animal et vivens et corpus et substantia et ens. Tribuit igitur anima homini omnem gradum perfectionis essentialem; insuper communicat corpori actum essendi, quo ipsa est.

3617 17. Duplicis ordinis facultates, organicae et inorganicae, ex anima humana per naturalem resultantiam emanant: priores, ad quas sensus pertinet, in composito subiectantur, posteriores in anima sola. Est igitur intellectus facultas ab organo intrinsece independens.

3618 18. Immaterialitatem necessario sequitur intellectualitas, et ita quidem, ut secundum gradus elongationis a materia sint quoque gradus intellectualitatis. Adequatum intellectionis obiectum est communiter ipsum ens; proprium vero intellectus humani in praesenti statu unionis, quidditatibus abstractis a condicionibus materialibus continetur.

but like what is outside the order of dimension. Quantity, however, which gives extension to a substance, really differs from substance and is, truly speaking, an accident.

11. Quantified matter is the principle of individuation, that is, of numerical distinction, which cannot exist in pure spirits, of one individual from another in the same specific nature.

12. Because of this same quantity, a body happens to be in place in a circumscribed way and can be in this way in only one place with respect to any potency.

13. Bodies are divided into two parts: some are living, others lack life. Among the living (bodies), the substantial form, called the soul, demands organic disposition, or heterogeneous parts, in order for there to be independently in the same subject a moving part and a part moved.

14. Souls of the vegetable or sensitive order in no way subsist of themselves, nor are they produced of themselves, but they are only the principle by means of which a thing is alive and lives, and since they depend completely on matter, when the composite corrupts, they by that very fact corrupt in an accidental fashion.

15. On the other hand, the human soul subsists by itself. When it can be infused into a subject adequately disposed, it is created by God, and by its nature it is incorruptible and immortal.

16. The same rational soul is united with a body in such a way that it is the unique substantial form of the same body; and, by means of (the soul), man has that (by which) he is man, animal, living, body, substance, and being. The soul, therefore, confers on man every essential grade of perfection. Moreover, it communicates the act of being to the body by means of which it (the soul) itself exists.

17. The faculties of the twofold order, the organic and inorganic, flow as a natural result from the human soul: the first (organic), to which sense perception belongs, are dependent on the composite; the latter (inorganic) (are dependent) on the soul alone. The faculty of the intellect, therefore, is intrinsically independent of any organ.

18. Intellectuality necessarily implies immateriality, and indeed to such an extent that the degree of intellectuality is commensurate with the degree of separation from matter. The adequate object of an intellectual act is commonly being itself; but the proper (object) of the human intellect in its present state of union (with the body) is found in the essences abstracted from material conditions.

19. Cognitionem ergo accipimus a rebus sensibilibus. Cum autem sensibile non sit intelligibile in actu, praeter intellectum formaliter intelligentem admittenda est in anima virtus activa, quae species intelligibiles a phantasmatis abstrahat. [386]

20. Per has species directe universalia cognoscimus; singularia sensu attingimus, tum etiam intellectu per conversionem ad phantasmata; ad cognitionem vero spiritualium per analogiam ascendimus.

21. Intellectum sequitur, non praecedit, voluntas, quae necessario appetit id quod sibi praesentatur tamquam bonum ex omni parte explens appetitum, sed inter plura bona, quae iudicio mutabili appetenda proponuntur, libere eligit. Sequitur proinde electio iudicium practicum ultimum; at quod sit ultimum, voluntas efficit.

22. Deum esse neque immediata intuitionem percipimus, neque a priori demonstramus, sed utique a posteriori, hoc est, “per ea quae facta sunt” [Rom 1:20], ducto argumento ab effectibus ad causam: videlicet, a rebus quae moventur et sui motus principium adaequatum esse non possunt, ad primum motorem immobilem; a processu rerum mundanarum e causis inter se subordinatis ad primam causam incausam; a corruptilibus quae aequaliter se habent ad esse et non esse, ad ens absolute necessarium; ab iis quae secundum minoratas perfectiones essendi, vivendi, intelligendi, plus et minus sunt, vivunt, intelligunt, ad eum qui est maxime intelligens, maxime vivens, maxime ens; denique, ab ordine universi ad intellectum separatum, qui res ordinavit, disposuit, et dirigit ad finem.

23. Divina essentia, per hoc quod exercitae actualitati ipsius esse identificatur, seu per hoc quod est ipsum Esse subsistens, in sua veluti metaphysica ratione bene nobis constituta proponitur, et per hoc idem rationem nobis exhibet suae infinitatis in perfectione.

24. Ipsa igitur puritate sui esse, a finitis omnibus rebus discernitur Deus. Inde infertur primo, mundum non nisi per creationem a Deo procedere potuisse; deinde virtutem creativam, qua per se primo attingitur ens in quantum ens, nec miraculose ulli finitae naturae esse communicabilem; nullum denique creatum agens in esse cuiuscumque effectus influere, nisi motione accepta a prima Causa.

19. Therefore, we receive knowledge from sensible things. Since, however, the sensible is not the intelligible in act, in addition to the formally intelligent intellect an active power that can abstract the intelligible species from the phantasms must be granted in the soul. 3619

20. By means of these species we know universals directly; we come into contact with individual (things) through sense perceptions and also through the intellect by means of a conversion to the phantasms; but we reach the knowledge of spiritual things by analogy. 3620

21. The will follows upon the intellect; it does not precede it. The will necessarily desires what is presented to it as a good that fulfills its desire in every aspect. But it makes a free choice among several goods that are proposed to it by a changeable judgment as things to be desired. Choice therefore follows upon the final practical judgment; but the will brings it about that it is the final (judgment). 3621

22. We perceive that God exists neither by an immediate intuition nor by an a priori demonstration but rather a posteriori, that is, “through the things that have been made” [Rom 1:20]. This argument from effect to cause proceeds as follows: from things that are moved and that cannot be the adequate principle of their motion, (we conclude) to a first unmoved mover; from a succession of things in the world from causes subordinate to each other, (we conclude) to a first uncaused cause; from corruptible beings that, in themselves, are equally open to be or not to be, (we conclude) to an absolutely necessary being; from those things that more or less are, live, or comprehend in accordance with diminished perfections of being, living, and comprehension to him who is supremely comprehending, supremely living, and supremely being; finally from the order of the universe to the separate intellect that ordered, disposed, and (now) directs things to (their) end. 3622

23. The divine essence by the fact that it is identified with the realized actuality of its very being, in other words, by the fact that it is subsistent Being itself, is presented to us as well constituted in its, as it were, metaphysical concept, and precisely because of this, it shows us the reason for its infinity in perfection. 3623

24. God, therefore, is separated from all finite things by the very purity of his being. Therefore we may conclude: first, the world was able to come forth from God only by creation; then, this creative power, by means of which being as being is of itself first reached, is not miraculously communicable to any created nature; nor finally does a created agent influence the being of any effect except by means of a movement received from the first Cause. 3624

BENEDICT XV: September 3, 1914–January 22, 19223625–3626: Encyclical Ad beatissimi Apostolorum, November 1, 1914

Ed.: AAS 6 (1914): 576–78.

The Extent of Free Theological Discussion

3625 Ubi potestas legitima quid certo praeceperit, nemini fas esto negligere praeceptum, propterea quia non probetur sibi: sed quod cuique videatur, id quisque subiiciat eius auctoritati, cui subest, eique ex officii conscientia pareat.

Item nemo privatus, vel libris diariisve vulgandis vel sermonibus publice habendis, se in Ecclesia pro magistro gerat. Norunt omnes, cui sit a Deo magisterium Ecclesiae datum: huic igitur integrum ius esto pro arbitrato loqui, cum voluerit; ceterorum officium est, loquenti religiose obsequi dictoque audientes esse.

In rebus autem, de quibus, salva fide ac disciplina,—cum Apostolicae Sedis iudicium non intercesserit—in utramque partem disputari potest, dicere, quid sentiat idque defendere, sane nemini non licet. Sed ab his disputationibus omnis intemperantia sermonis absit, quae graves afferre potest offensiones caritati; suam quisque tueatur libere quidem, sed modeste, sententiam; nec sibi pu[577]tet fas esse, qui contrariam teneant, eos, hac ipsa tantum causa, vel suspectae fidei arguere vel non bonae disciplinae...

Vis et natura catholicae fidei est eiusmodi, ut nihil ei possit addi, nihil demi: aut omnis tenetur aut omnis abiicitur.

Hence, therefore, whenever legitimate authority has once given a clear command, let no one transgress that command because it does not happen to commend itself to him; but let each one subject his own opinion to the authority of him who is his superior and obey him as a matter of conscience.

Again, let no private individual, whether in books or in the press or in public speeches, take upon himself the position of an authoritative teacher in the Church. All know to whom the teaching authority of the Church has been given by God: he, then, possesses a perfect right to speak as he wishes and when he thinks it opportune. The duty of others is to hearken to him reverently when he speaks and to carry out what he says.

As regards matters in which without harm to faith or discipline—in the absence of any authoritative intervention of the Apostolic See—there is room for divergent opinions, it is clearly the right of everyone to express and defend his own opinion. But in such discussions no expressions should be used that might constitute serious breaches of charity; let each one freely defend his own opinion, but let it be done with due moderation, so that no one should consider himself entitled to affix on those who merely do not agree with his ideas the stigma of disloyalty to faith or to discipline. . . .

Such is the nature of Catholicism that it does not admit of more or less but must be held as a whole or as a whole rejected.

The Nature of Progress in Knowledge and Religious Practice

3626 [578] Nec vero tantum ab erroribus catholici homines, cupimus, abhorreant, sed ab ingenio etiam seu spiritu, ut aiunt, Modernistarum: quo spiritu qui agitur, is quidquid sapiat vetustatem, fastidiose respuit, avide autem ubi nova conquirit: in ratione loquendi de rebus divinis, in celebritate divini cultus, in catholicis institutis, in privata ipsa exercitatione pietatis. Ergo sanctam haberi volumus eam maiorem legem: “Nihil innovetur nisi quod traditum est” [*110]; quae lex tametsi inviolate servanda est in rebus fidei, tamen ad eius normam dirigenda sunt etiam, quae mutationem pati possunt, quamquam in his ea quoque regula plerumque valet: Non nova, sed noviter.¹

We desire that Catholics should shrink, not merely from the errors of modernism, but also from the tendencies or what is called the spirit of modernism. Those who are infected by that spirit develop a keen dislike for all that savors of antiquity and become eager searchers after novelties in everything: in the way in which they carry out religious functions, in the ruling of Catholic institutions, and even in private exercises of piety. Therefore it is Our will that the law of our forefathers should still be held sacred: “Let nothing be introduced except what is already handed down” [*110]. In matters of faith, that must be inviolably adhered to as the law; it may, however, also serve as a guide even in matters subject to change, but even in such cases the rule would hold: “Not new things, but in a new way.”¹

*3626 ¹ Obviously an allusion to Vincent of Lérins, Commonitorium I, 22, at the end: “Nevertheless, teach the same things that you have learned (in such a way) that even if you articulate them in a new manner, you do not articulate new things” (Eadem tamen, quae didicisti, doce, ut cum dicas nove, non dicas nova: PL 50:667 / R. Demeulenaere: CpChL 64 [1985]: 177_{29f.}).

3628–3630: Response of the Biblical Commission, June 18, 1915

Ed.: AAS 7 (1915): 357f. / EnchB nos. 414–16.

The Second Coming of Christ in the Pauline Letters

Qu. 1: Utrum ad solvendas difficultates, quae in epistolis sancti Pauli aliorumque Apostolorum occurrunt, ubi de “Parousia”, ut aiunt, seu de secundo adventu Domini nostri Iesu Christi sermo est, exegetae catholico permissum sit asserere, Apostolos, licet sub inspiratione Spiritus Sancti nullum doceant errorem, proprios nihilominus humanos sensus exprimere, quibus error vel deceptio subesse possit?

Resp.: Negative.

Qu. 2: Utrum, prae oculis habitis genuina muneris apostolici notione et indubia sancti Pauli fidelitate erga doctrinam Magistri; dogmate item catholico de inspiratione et inerrantia sacrarum Scripturarum, quo omne id, quod hagiographus asserit, enuntiat, insinuat, retineri debet assertum, enuntiatum, insinuat a Spiritu Sancto; perpensis quoque textibus epistolarum Apostoli in se consideratis, modo loquendi ipsius Domini apprime consonis, affirmare oporteat, Apostolum Paulum in scriptis suis nihil omnino dixisse, quod non perfecte concordet cum illa tem[poris] Parousiae ignorantia, quam ipse Christus hominum esse proclamavit?

Resp.: Affirmative.

Qu. 3: Utrum attenta locutione graeca ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περιλειπόμενοι; perpensa quoque expositione Patrum, imprimis sancti Iohannis Chrysostomi, tum in patrio idiomate, tum in epistolis Paulinis versatissimi, liceat tamquam longius petitam et solido fundamento destitutam reicere interpretationem in scholis catholicis traditionalem (ab ipsis quoque novatoribus saeculi XVI retentam), quae verba sancti Pauli in cap. IV epist 1 ad Thessalonicenses, vv. 15–17, explicat, quin ullo modo involvat affirmationem Parousiae tam proximae, ut Apostolus seipsum suosque lectores adnumeret fidelibus illis, qui superstites ituri sunt obviam Christo?

Resp.: Negative.

3632: Decree of the Holy Office, March 29 (April 8), 1916

This decree, already decided by January 15, 1913, was taken up again at a meeting of the Holy Office on March 29, 1916, and published on April 8. The Holy Office rejected the veneration of the Virgin Mary as priest. Cf. the letter of Cardinal Merry del Val to the bishop of the diocese of Adria of March 10, 1927 (published in Palestra del Clero de Rovigo 6 [1927]: 611). The letter was occasioned by two publications written by Silvio Fasso on the Virgin-Priest (published in ibid., 6 [1927]: 71–75 and 151f.). Against these writings, the cardinal refers to the decree that is presented here: “The devotion that is treated [in Fasso’s articles]—in conformity with the Decree of the Holy Office of April 8, 1916—is not approved and must not be spread” (La divozione di cui ivi si tratta, in conformità al Decreto del Sant’Ufficio del 8 Aprile 1916, non è approvata e non si può propagare).

Ed.: AAS 8 (1916): 146.

Question 1: To solve the difficulties that occur in the epistles of St. Paul and of other apostles, where the Parousia, as it is called, or the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is spoken of, is it permitted to the Catholic exegete to assert that the apostles, although under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit they teach no error, nevertheless express their own human views, into which error or deception can enter? 3628

Response: No.

Question 2: If one keeps before one’s eyes the genuine idea of the apostolic office and of St. Paul’s undoubted fidelity to the teaching of the Master; likewise, the Catholic dogma regarding the inspiration and inerrancy of the Scriptures, whereby all that the sacred writer asserts, enunciates, and suggests must be held to be asserted, enunciated, and suggested by the Holy Spirit; if one also weighs the text of the apostle’s epistles, considered in themselves, which concur in the highest degree with the speech of the Lord himself, 3629 must one affirm that the apostle Paul in his writings certainly said nothing that is not in perfect harmony with that ignorance of the time of the Parousia which Christ himself proclaimed to be men’s portion?

Response: Yes.

Question 3: If one considers the Greek phrase ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περιλειπόμενοι [we the living who remain], and if one also weighs carefully the explanation of the Fathers, especially that of St. John Chrysostom, who was highly versed both in his country’s language and in the Pauline epistles, 3630 is it lawful to reject as farfetched and destitute of solid foundation the interpretation traditional in the Catholic schools (also retained by the sixteenth-century reformers themselves), which explains the words of St. Paul in the fourth chapter of the First Letter to the Thessalonians without in any way implying the affirmation of a Parousia so imminent that the apostle counted himself and his readers among those of the faithful who would survive to meet Christ?

Response: No.

Condemnation of Images of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Priestly Attire

3632 Cum recentioribus praesertim temporibus pingi atque diffundi coepissent imagines exhibentes beatissimam Virginem Mariam indutam vestibus sacerdotalibus, ... cardinales ... die 15 Ian. 1913 decreverunt: Imaginem B. M. Virginis vestibus sacerdotalibus indutae esse reprobendam.

Since especially in recent times there have begun to be painted and diffused images showing the most blessed Virgin Mary dressed in priestly vestments, ... the cardinals ... on January 15, 1913, decreed: Images of the Blessed Virgin Mary dressed in priestly vestments are to be condemned.

3634: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, April 3, 1916

Ed.: F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 100 / J.B. Ferreres and A. Mondria, Compendium theologiae moralis 2, 17th ed. (Barcelona, 1950), 711f., no. 1095 / NvRTh 47 (1920): 627f. / C. Marc and F. X. Gestermann, Institutiones morales Alphonsianae 2, 20th ed. (Lyon and Paris, 1946), 633f., no. 2116.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage

3634 Qu.: Utrum mulier alicui actioni mariti, qui, ut voluptati indulgeat, crimen Onan aut Sodomitarum committere vult, illique sub mortis poena aut gravium molestiarum minatur, nisi obtemperet, cooperari licite possit?

Question: Can a woman cooperate legitimately in an action of her husband who, in order to indulge his lust, wants to commit the crime of Onan or the Sodomites and threatens her with death or other grave injury if she does not submit?

Resp.: a) Si maritus in usu coniugii committere vult crimen Onan, effundendo scilicet semen extra vas post inceptam copulam idemque minetur uxori aut mortem aut graves molestias, nisi perversae eius voluntati sese accommodet, uxor ex probatorum theologorum sententia licite potest hoc in casu sic cum marito suo coire, quippe cum ipsa ex parte sua det operam rei et actioni licitae, peccatum autem mariti permittat ex gravi causa, quae eam excusat, quoniam caritas, qua illud impedire teneretur, cum tanto incommodo non obligat.

Response: a. If the husband wants to commit the crime of Onan in the marital act, that is, by expelling his seed outside of the vagina after the initiation of copulation; and if he threatens his wife with death or other serious injuries if she does not agree with his perverse will, the wife, according to approved theologians, can, in such a case, join herself sexually to her husband since, on her part, she engages in a legitimate object and act, but she permits the sin of her husband for a grave reason, which excuses her: since charity, which would require the prevention of the act, does not oblige in the face of such peril.

b) At si maritus committere cum ea velit Sodomitarum crimen, cum hic sodomiticus coitus actus sit contra naturam ex parte utriusque coniugis sic coeuntis isque doctorum omnium iudicio graviter malus, hinc nulla plane de causa ne mortis quidem vitandae licite potest uxor hac in re impudico suo marito morem gerere.

b. If, however, the husband wishes to commit the crime of the Sodomites with her, since sodomitic intercourse is against nature on the part of both spouses who are united in this way and, in the judgment of all the learned teachers, is gravely evil, there is clearly no motive, not even to avoid death, that would permit the wife legitimately to carry out such a shameless act with her husband.

3635–3636: Response of the Holy Office to the Ordinaries of Various Dioceses, May 17, 1916

Ed.: ThPrQ 69 (1916): 693 / Kölner Pastorblatt 50 (1916): 304.

Sacraments of the Dying to Schismatics

3635 Qu. 1: An schismaticis materialibus in mortis articulo constitutis bona fide sive absolutionem sive extremam unctionem petentibus, ea sacramenta conferri possint sine abiuratione errorum?

Question 1: When “material” (i.e., not formal, desiring the schism) schismatics at the point of death in good faith seek either absolution or extreme unction, can these sacraments be conferred on them without a renunciation of their errors?

Resp.: Negative, sed requiri, ut meliori quo fieri possit modo¹ errores reiciant et professionem fidei faciant.

Response: No, it is required that they reject their errors as best they can¹ and make a profession of faith.

*3635¹ The Holy Office, in its response of November 15, 1941, which is otherwise the same, added this point: “(corresponding to the circumstances of the situation and of persons) at least implicitly” [pro rerum et personarum adiunctis] saltem implicite”: Il Monitore Ecclesiastico (1942), 114].

Qu. 2: An schismaticis in mortis articulo sensibus destitutis absolutio et extrema unctio conferri possit?

Resp.: Sub condicione affirmative, praesertim si ex adiunctis conicere liceat, eos implicite saltem errores suos reicere, remoto tamen efficaciter scandalo,¹ manifestando scilicet adstantibus, Ecclesiam supponere, eos in ultimo momento ad unitatem rediisse.

Question 2: Can absolution and extreme unction be conferred on unconscious schismatics at the point of death? 3636

Response: Conditionally, yes, especially if from additional circumstances it can be conjectured that they at least implicitly rejected their errors, yet effectually removing scandal¹ by manifesting to bystanders that the Church assumes that they returned at the last moment to unity.

3638–3640: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, June 3, 1916

Ed.: F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (Rome, 1953), 100 / J. B. Ferreres and A. Mondria, Compendium theologiae moralis 2, 17th ed. (Barcelona, 1950), 712, no. 1095 / NvRTh 47 (1920): 628 / C. Marc and F. X. Gestermann, Institutiones morales Alphonsianae 2, 20th ed. (Lyon and Paris, 1946), 634, no. 2117.

The Practice of Onanism within Marriage by Means of an Instrument

Qu.: 1. Utrum mulier casu, quo vir ad onanismum exercendum uti velit instrumento, ad positivam resistantiam teneatur?

2. Si negative, utrum sufficient ad resistantiam passivam ex parte mulieris coonestandam rationes aequae graves ac pro onanismo naturali (sine instrumento) vel potius omnino necessariae sint rationes praegravissimae?

3. Utrum ut tutiore tramite tota haec materia evolvatur et edoceatur, vir talibus utens instrumentis, oppressori vere debeat aequiparari, cui proinde mulier eam resistantiam opponere debeat, quam virgo invasori?

Resp.: Ad 1. Affirmative. —Ad 2. Provisum in primo. —Ad 3. Affirmative.

Questions: 1. Is a wife, when her husband wishes to practice onanism by means of an (artificial) instrument, required to exercise positive resistance? 3638

2. If the answer is negative, could the woman honestly exercise passive resistance for reasons equally serious as those that pertain to natural onanism (without an artificial instrument), or, rather, are the most grave reasons absolutely necessary? 3639

3. So that this entire matter might be developed and taught in a more certain way, must a man, using such instruments, truly be regarded as equivalent to an aggressor toward whom the wife must offer the same resistance as a virgin would toward a rapist? 3640

Response: to 1. Yes. —To 2. Provided for in the first. —To 3. Yes.

3642: Response of the Holy Office, April 24, 1917

Ed.: AAS 9 (1917): 268.

Spiritism

Qu.: An liceat per Medium, ut vocant, vel sine Medio, adhibito vel non hypnotismo, locutionibus aut manifestationibus spiritisticis quibuscumque adsistere, etiam speciem honestatis vel pietatis praeseferentibus, sive interrogando animas aut spiritus, sive audiendo responsa, sive tantum aspiciendo, etiam cum protestatione tacita vel expressa, nullam cum malignis spiritibus partem se habere velle.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 26. Apr.): Negative in omnibus.

Question: Is it permitted through a medium, as they call him, or without a medium, with or without the application of hypnotism, to be present at spiritistic conversations or manifestations of any kind, even though these (phenomena) present the appearance of honesty and piety, whether by interrogating souls or spirits or by listening to responses or only by looking on, even with a tacit or expressed protestation that one does not wish to have anything to do with evil spirits? 3642

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on April 26): No in all (cases).

*3636¹ In the same response of 1941, this affirmation concerning scandal is expressed as follows: "Care, however, must always be taken to avoid scandal and even the suspicion of interconfessionalism. But the less danger there is in waiting, the more the need for an explicit retraction of errors and the profession of the Catholic faith" (Semper autem curandum est, ut scandalum et vel suspicio interconfessionalismi evitentur. Quo minus autem est periculum in mora, eo magis explicita retractatio errorum et fidei catholicae professio exigi debent).

3645–3647: Decree of the Holy Office, June 5, 1918*Ed.*: AAS 10 (1918): 282.The Knowledge of the Soul of Christ

3645 Qu.: Utrum tuto doceri possint sequentes propositiones:

1. Non constat, fuisse in anima Christi inter homines degentis scientiam, quam habent beati seu comprehensores.

3646 2. Nec certa dici potest sententia, quae statuit, animam Christi nihil ignoravisse, sed ab initio cognovisse in Verbo omnia, praeterita, praesentia et futura, seu omnia, quae Deus scit scientia visionis.

3647 3. Placitum quorundam recentiorum de scientia animae Christi limitata, non est minus recipiendum in scholis catholicis, quam veterum sententia de scientia universalis:

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 6. Iun.): Negative.

3648: Response of the Holy Office, July 16 (18), 1919*Ed.*: AAS 11 (1919): 317.Theosophical Teachings

3648 Qu.: An doctrinae, quas hodie theosophicas dicunt, componi possint cum doctrina catholica; ideoque an liceat nomen dare societatibus theosophicis, earum conventibus interesse, ipsarumque libros, ephemerides, diaria, scripta legere.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 17. Iul.): Negative in omnibus.

3650–3654: Encyclical Spiritus Paraclitus, September 15, 1920*Ed.*: AAS 12 (1920): 389–97 / EnchB nos. 448, 453–58, 461.The Nature of the Inspiration of Sacred Scripture

3650 Nullam profecto in scriptis Doctoris Maximi [Hieronymi] paginam reperies, unde non liqueat, eum cum universa catholica Ecclesia firmiter constanterque tenuisse, libros sacros Spiritu Sancto inspirante conscriptos Deum habere auctorem atque ut tales ipsi Ecclesiae traditos esse [*cf. 3006]. Asseverat nimirum Codicis sacri libros Spiritu Sancto inspirante vel suggerente vel insinuante vel etiam dictante compositos esse, immo ab ipso conscriptos et editos; sed nihil praeterea dubitat, quin singuli eorum auctores, pro sua quisque natura atque ingenio, operam afflanti Deo libere navarint.

Etenim non modo id universe affirmat, quod omnibus sacris scriptoribus commune est, ipsos in scribendo

Question: Can the following propositions be safely taught?

1. It is not certain that there was in the soul of Christ, while he was living among men, the knowledge possessed by the blessed or those who have the beatific vision.

2. Nor can the view be called certain that maintains that the soul of Christ not only was ignorant of nothing, but also from the beginning knew all things past, present, and future in the Word, that is, all things that God knows by the knowledge of vision.

3. The opinion of some more recent (theologians) on the limited knowledge of the soul of Christ is to be accepted in Catholic schools no less than the older opinion on (his) universal knowledge.

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on June 6): No.

Question: Can the doctrines that today are called theosophical be in harmony with Catholic doctrine; and thus is it permitted to join theosophical societies, attend their meetings, and read their books, periodicals, newspapers, and writings?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 17): No in all cases.

You will not find a page in the writings of the Great Doctor [Jerome] that does not show clearly that he, in common with the whole Catholic Church, firmly and consistently held that the Sacred Books—written as they were under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit—have God for their Author and as such were delivered to the Church [*cf. 3006]. Thus he asserts that the books of the Bible were composed at the inspiration or suggestion or even at the dictation of the Holy Spirit; even that they were written and edited by him. Yet he never questions but that the individual authors of these books worked in full freedom under the divine inspiration, each of them in accordance with his individual nature and character.

Thus he is not merely content to affirm as a general principle—what indeed pertains to all the sacred writers—

Dei spiritum secutos, ut omnis sensus omniumque sententiarum Scripturae Deus causa princeps habendus sit, sed etiam quod uniuscuiusque proprium est, accurate dispicit. . . .

[390] Quam quidem Dei cum homine communitatem laboris ad unum idemque opus conficiendum Hieronymus comparatione illustrat artificis, qui in aliqua re factitanda organo¹ seu instrumento utitur. . . .

Quod si etiam inquirimus, qua ratione haec Dei, uti causae principis, virtus atque actio in hagiographum sit intelligenda, cernere licet, inter Hieronymi verba et communem de inspiratione catholicam doctrinam nihil omnino interesse, cum ipse teneat, Deum, gratia collata, scriptoris menti lumen praeferre ad verum quod attinet “ex persona Dei” hominibus proponendum; voluntatem praeterea movere atque ad scribendum impellere; ipsi denique peculiariter continenterque adesse, donec librum perficiat.

The Innerancy of Sacred Scripture

[394] . . . Illorum comprobamus consilium, qui, ut semetipsos aliosque ex difficultatibus sacri Codicis expediant, ad eas diluendas, omnibus studiorum et artis criticae freti subsidiis, novas vias atque rationes inquirunt; at misere a proposito aberrant, si decessoris Nostri praescripta neglexerint et certos fines terminosque a Patribus constitutos praeterierint [cf. Prv 22:28].

Quibus sane praeceptis et finibus nequaquam recentiorum illorum continetur opinio, qui, inducto inter elementum Scripturae primum seu religiosum et secundarium seu profanum discrimine, inspirationem quidem ipsam ad omnes sententias, immo etiam ad singula Bibliorum verba pertinere volunt, sed eius effectus, atque in primis erroris immunitatem absolutamque veritatem, ad elementum primum seu religiosum contrahunt et coangustant. Eorum enim sententia est, id unum, quod ad religionem spectet, a Deo in Scripturis intendi ac doceri; reliqua vero, quae ad profanas disciplinas pertineant et doctrinae revelatae quasi quaedam externa divinae veritatis vestis inserviant, permitti tantummodo et scriptoris imbecillitati relinqui. . . .

Haec opinionum commenta, sunt qui nihil repugnare contendant decessoris Nostri praescriptionibus, cum is hagiographum in naturalibus rebus secundum externam speciem, utique fallacem, loqui declaraverit [*cf. 3288]. Id vero quam temere, quam falso affirmetur, ex ipsis Pontificis verbis manifesto apparet. Neque enim ab externa rerum specie . . . ulla falsi labes divinis litteris adspersitur, quandoquidem sensus in iis rebus proxime that they followed the Spirit of God as they wrote, so that God is the principal cause of all that Scripture means and says; but he also accurately describes what pertains to each individual writer. . . .

This partnership of God and man in the production of a work in common Jerome illustrates by the case of a workman who uses instruments¹ for the production of his work. . . .

If we ask how we are to explain this power and action 3651 of God, the principal cause, on the sacred writers, we shall find that St. Jerome in no way differs from the common teaching of the Catholic Church on inspiration. For he holds that God, through his grace, illumines the writer’s mind regarding the particular truth which, “in the person of God”, he is to set before men; he holds, moreover, that God moves the writer’s will—indeed, even impels it—to write; finally, that God abides with him unceasingly, in unique fashion, until his task is accomplished.

. . . We approve the endeavors of those who, in 3652 order to clear away the difficulties in Sacred Scripture for themselves and others, seek new ways and means to resolve them with all the resources of science and criticism; but they will stray miserably from their purpose if they neglect Our predecessor’s injunctions and overstep the limits set by the Fathers [cf. Prv 22:28].

Included within the scope of these prescriptions and limitations are certainly by no means the opinion of those recent (authors) who, while conceding that inspiration extends to every phrase—and, indeed, to every single word of Scripture—by introducing a distinction between a primary or religious and a secondary or profane element in the Bible, claim that the effects of inspiration—and first and foremost, absolute truth and immunity from error—are to be restricted to that primary or religious element. Their notion is that only what concerns religion is intended and taught by God in Scripture and that all the rest—things concerning “profane knowledge”, the garments in which divine truth is presented—is merely permitted and left to the (individual) author’s weakness. . . .

Some maintain that these views do not conflict with the prescriptions of Our predecessor, since (so they claim) he said that the sacred writers spoke in accordance with the external—and thus deceptive—appearance of things in nature [*cf. 3288]. But the pontiff’s own words show that this is a rash and false deduction. For sound philosophy teaches that the senses can never be deceived as regards their own proper and immediate object. Therefore, from *3650 ¹ Cf. Jerome, Tractatus sive Homilia in Psalmos 88:3 (G. Morin: CpChL 78 [1958]: 406^{76f.} / G. Morin, Anecdota Maredsolana, tom. I, vol. 3/III [Maredsous, 1903], 53₂₃).

[395] cognoscendis, quarum sit propria ipsorum cognitio, minime decipi dogma est sanae philosophiae.

Praeterea decessor Noster, quovis inter elementum primum et secundarium, ut vocant, remoto discrimine omnique ambiguitate sublata, luculenter ostendit, longissime a vero abesse illorum opinionem, qui arbitrantur “de veritate sententiarum cum agitur, non adeo exquirendum, quaenam dixerit Deus, ut non magis perpendatur, quam ob causam ea dixerit” [*3291]; idemque docet divinum afflatum ad omnes Bibliorum partes sine ullo delectu ac discrimine proferri nullumque in textum inspiratum errorem incidere posse: “At nefas omnino fuerit aut inspirationem ad aliquas tantum s. Scripturae partes coangustare aut concedere sacrum ipsum errasse auctorem” [*3291].

3653 Neque minus ab Ecclesiae doctrina . . . ii dissentiunt, qui partes Scripturarum historicas non factorum absoluta inniti veritate arbitrantur, sed tantummodo relativa, quam vocant, et concordii vulgi opinione: idque non ventur ex ipsis Leonis Pontificis verbis inferre, propterea quod principia de rebus naturalibus statuta ad disciplinas historicas transferri posse dixerit [cf. *3290]. Itaque contendunt, hagiographos, uti in physicis secundum ea quae apparent locuti sint, ita eventa ignaros rettulisse, prouti haec e communi vulgi sententia vel falsis aliorum testimoniis constare viderentur, neque fontes scientiae suae indicasse neque aliorum enarrationes fecisse suas. . . .

3654 [397] [Alii] nimis facile ad citationes, quas vocant implicitas, vel ad narrationes specietenus historicas confugiunt; aut genera quaedam litterarum in libris sacris inveniri contendunt, quibuscum integra ac perfecta verbi divini veritas componi nequeat; aut de Bibliorum origine ita opinantur, ut eorundem labet vel prorsus pereat auctoritas.

the merely external appearance of things . . . we can never conclude that there is any error in Sacred Scripture.

Moreover, Our predecessor, sweeping aside all such distinctions between so-called primary and secondary elements, says in no ambiguous fashion that “those who fancy that when it is a question of the truth of certain expressions we have not got to consider so much what God said as why he said it” [*3291] are very far indeed from the truth. He also teaches that divine inspiration extends to every part of the Bible without the slightest exception or distinction and that no error can occur in the inspired text: “It would be wholly impious either to limit inspiration to certain portions only of Scripture or to concede that the sacred authors themselves could have erred” [*3291].

Those, too, who hold that the historical portions of Scripture do not rest on the absolute truth of the facts but merely upon a so-called relative truth and upon what people then commonly thought are no less (than are the aforementioned critics) out of harmony with the Church’s teaching. . . . Yet they are not afraid to deduce such views from the words of Leo XIII himself on the ground that he allowed that the principles he had laid down touching the things of nature could be applied to historical things as well [cf. *3290]. Hence they maintain that precisely as the sacred writers spoke of physical things according to appearance, so, too, they recounted (even historical) events of which they had no personal knowledge as these seemed to be established by general opinion or the false testimony of others; neither do they tell us the sources whence they derived their knowledge, nor do they make other peoples’ narrative their own. . . .

[Others] take too ready a refuge in such notions as “implicit quotations” or “pseudo-historical narratives”, or they claim that certain literary genres are found in the Holy Books that cannot be reconciled with the entire and perfect truth of God’s word, or they speculate about origins of the Bible in such a way that would inevitably weaken—if not destroy—its authority.

PIUS XI: February 6, 1922–February 10, 1939

3660–3662: Decree of the Holy Office, November 22, 1922

Ed.: Nederlandsche Katholieke Stemmen 23 (1923): 35f.

Partial Penetration

3660 Qu.: 1. An tolerari possit, confessarios sponte sua docere praxim copulae dimidiatae, illamque suadere promiscue omnibus paenitentibus, qui timent, ne proles numerosior nascatur?

Questions: 1. Can it be tolerated for confessors, on their own, to teach the practice of partial penetration and indiscriminately recommend it to all penitents who fear giving birth to too many children?

2. An carpendus sit confessarius, qui, omnibus remediis ad paenitentem matrimonio abutentem ab hoc malo avertendum frustra tentatis, docet exercere copulam dimidiatam ad peccata mortalia praecavenda?

3. An carpendus sit confessarius, qui in circumstantiis sub 2 copulam dimidiatam paenitenti aliunde notam suadet vel paenitenti interroganti, num hic modus licitus sit, respondet simpliciter licere absque ulla restrictione seu explicatione?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 23. Nov.): Ad 1. Negative. —Ad 2 et 3. Affirmative.

3665–3667: Encyclical Studiorum duces, June 29, 1923

Ed.: AAS 15 (1923): 323f.

The Manner of Following the Doctrine of St. Thomas Aquinas

Nos autem, quae et decessores Nostri in primisque Leo XIII et Pius X decreverunt et Nosmetipsi anno superiore mandavimus,¹ ea omnia volumus sedulo attendant inviolateque servent ii praesertim, quicumque in clericorum scholis maiorum disciplinarum magisteria obtinent.

Idem vero sibi persuadeant, tum se suo officio satisfacturos itemque expectationem Nostram expleturos esse, si cum Doctorem Aquinatem, scripta eius diu multumque volutando, adamare coeperint, amoris huius flagrantiam cum alumnis disciplinae suae, ipsum Doctorem interpretando, communicent, idoneosque eos reddant ad simile studium in aliis excitandum.

Scilicet inter amatores sancti Thomae, quales omnes decet esse Ecclesiae filios, qui in studiis optimis versantur, honestam illam quidem cupimus iusta in libertate aemulationem, unde studia progrediuntur, intercedere, at obtreactionem nullam, quae nec veritati suffragatur et unice ad dissolvenda valet [324] vincula caritatis. Sanctumigitur unicuique eorum esto, quod in Codice iuris canonici praecipitur [can. 1366, § 2], ut “philosophiae rationalis ac theologiae studia et alumnorum in his disciplinis institutionem professores omnino pertractant ad Angelici Doctoris rationem, doctrinam et principia, eaque sancte teneant”; atque ad hanc normam ita se omnes gerant, ut eum ipsi suum vere possint appellare magistrum.

At ne quid eo amplius alii ab aliis exigant, quam quod ab omnibus exigit omnium magistra et mater Ecclesia: neque enim in iis rebus, de quibus in scholis catholicis

2. Should a confessor be criticized who, after having tried in vain by every means to have a penitent avoid the abuse of marriage, teaches partial penetration as a means of avoiding mortal sin? 3661

3. Should a confessor be criticized who, in regard to the circumstance of no. 2, suggests partial penetration to a penitent who knows of it from another source, or who, to the penitent’s question of whether this means is licit, responds simply that it is permitted, without any restriction or explanation? 3662

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on November 23, 1922): To 1. No. —To: 2 and 3. Yes.

And now, We desire that all those especially who hold the teaching positions of the higher disciplines in the schools of the clergy consider carefully and preserve inviolably all that Our predecessors, and first of all Leo XIII and Pius X, have decreed and We ourselves have ordered last year.¹ 3665

Moreover, let them be convinced that they will then satisfy their obligation and will likewise fulfill our expectation if, when, by a long and intensive study of his works, they have begun truly to love the Doctor Aquinas, they, through the interpretation of this Doctor, communicate the warmth of this love to the students under their instruction and render them capable of exciting a similar zeal in others.

Naturally among lovers of St. Thomas, such as all the sons of the Church who are concerned with the highest studies should be, We desire that there exist that honorable rivalry with just freedom from which studies make progress, but no detraction that is not favorable to truth and that serves only to break the bonds of charity. Therefore, let whatever is prescribed in the Code of Canon Law [can. 1366, § 2] be sacred to each one of them, that “the professors shall conduct studies of rational philosophy and of theology and the instruction of students in these disciplines according to the method, doctrine, and principles of the Angelic Doctor and maintain these religiously”, and all are to hold themselves to this norm in such a way that they can truly call him their teacher. 3666

But let not some exact more from others than what the Church, the teacher and mother of all, demands of all; for in those matters about which there tend to be opposing 3667

¹ *3665 This relates to the encyclical Aeterni Patris of Leo XIII of August 4, 1879 (cf. *3139f.), the motu proprio Doctoris angelici of Pius X of June 29, 1914 (cf. *3601°), and the encyclical Officiorum omnium of Pius XI of August 1, 1922 (AAS 14 [1922]: 449–58).

inter melioris notae auctores in contrarias partes disputari solet, quisquam prohibendus est eam sequi sententiam, quae sibi verisimilior videatur.

opinions argued among authors of higher distinction in our Catholic schools, no one is to be prevented from following the opinion that seems to him the more probable.

3670: Bull Infinita Dei misericordia, May 29, 1924

With this letter, the “Holy Year” 1925 was announced.

Ed.: AAS 16 (1924): 210.

The Revival of Merits and Gifts

3670 Quod scilicet Hebraei Anno Sabbatico, bonis recuperatis, quae in aliorum ius cesserant, “ad possessionem suam” revertebantur; quod servi “ad familiam pristinam” [Lv 25:10] sese liberi recipiebant et debitorum aes alienum condonabatur, id omne apud nos feliciter piaculari anno contingit atque efficitur. Quicumque enim paenitendo Apostolicae Sedis salutaria iussa, lubilaeo magno vertente, perficiunt, iidem, tum eam, quam peccando amiserant, meritorum donorumque copiam ex integro reparant ac recipiunt, tum de asperissimo Satanae dominatu sic eximuntur, ut libertatem repetant, “qua Christus nos liberavit” [Gal 4:31], tum denique poenis omnibus, quas pro culpis vitiisque suis luere debuerant, ob cumulatissima Christi Iesu, B. Mariae Virginis Sanctorumque merita plene exsolvuntur.

Now, as to the fact that the Hebrews in the Sabbath year, after recovering their goods that had passed into the ownership of others, returned “to their property”, and the servants, now free, went back “to their former family” [cf. Lv 25:10], and the debt of the debtors was cancelled, all this happens and is accomplished among us still more abundantly in the year of atonement. For, all who with a repentant attitude fulfill the salutary ordinances of the Apostolic See in the course of the great Jubilee, on the one hand, renew and receive that abundance of merits and gifts which they had lost by sinning, and, on the other hand, they are so set free from the cruel domination of Satan that they regain the freedom “wherewith Christ has made us free” [cf. Gal 4:31], and, finally, because of the superabundant merits of Jesus Christ, the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the saints, they are fully absolved of all the punishment they would have been obliged to pay for their faults and sins.

3672: Decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Council, June 13, 1925

Cf. the exposition of this case and its discussion in AAS 18 (1926): 132–38; AAS 15 (1923): 154–56.

Ed.: AAS 18 (1926): 137f.

The Duels that Are Called “Bestimmungs-Mensuren”

3672 Qu.: An declarationes S. Congregationis Concilii anni 1890 [9. Aug.] et 1923 [10. Febr.], quibus mensurae in universitatibus Germaniae usitatae quae speciali nomine “Bestimmungs-Mensuren” vocantur, poenis ecclesiasticis subiiciuntur, illas tantum mensuras respiciant, iuxta nonnullorum recentiorum sententiam, quae cum periculo gravis vulneris committuntur, vel etiam complectantur eas, quae [138] sine periculo gravis vulneris fiunt in casu?

Question: Do the declarations of the Sacred Congregation of the Council in 1890 [August 9] and of 1923 [February 10], whereby the types of duels used in German universities known by the special name of “Bestimmungs-Mensuren” [= pre-arranged duels] were placed under ecclesiastical penalties, refer, according to the opinion of some recent (thinkers), only to those duels that are engaged in with danger of a serious wound, or do they include also those that take place without danger of a serious wound?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 20. Iun.):
Negative ad primam partem, affirmative ad alteram.

Response: (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on June 20): No to the first part; yes to the second.

3675–3679: Encyclical Quas primas, December 11, 1925

This encyclical introduces the feast of Christ the King.

Ed.: AAS 17 (1925): 595–601.

The Royal Dignity and Power of Christ, the Man

3675 Ut translata verbi significatione “rex” appellaretur Christus ob summum excellentiae gradum, quo inter

It has long been a common custom to give to Christ the metaphorical title of “King”, because of the high omnes res creatas praestat atque eminet, iam diu communiterque usu venit. Ita enim fit ut regnare in mentibus hominum dicatur ..., in voluntatibus item hominum... Cordium denique rex Christus agnoscitur....

[596] Verum, ut rem pressius ingrediamur, nemo non videt, nomen potestatemque regis, propria quidem verbi significatione, Christo homini vindicari oportere; nam, nisi quatenus homo est, a Patre potestatem et honorem et regnum accepisse [cf. Dn 7:13s] dici nequit, quandoquidem Dei Verbum, cui eadem est cum Patre substantia, non potest omnia cum Patre non habere communia, proptereaque ipsum in res creatas universas summum atque absolutissimum imperium.

(It is then demonstrated from Scripture that Christ is King; reference is made in particular to Num 24:19; Ps 2; 45:7; 72:7f.; Is 9:6f.; Jer 23:5; Dan 2:44; 7:13f.; Zech 9:9; Lk 1:32f.; Mt 28:18; Rev 1:5; 19:16; Heb 1:2.)

[598] Quo autem haec Domini nostri dignitas et potestas fundamento consistat, apte Cyrillus Alexandrinus animadvertit: “Omnium, ut verbo dicam, creaturarum dominatum obtinet, non per vim extortum, nec aliunde invecum, sed essentia sua et natura”;¹ scilicet eius principatus illa nititur unione mirabili, quam hypostaticam appellant. Unde consequitur, non modo ut Christus ab angelis et hominibus Deus sit adorandus, sed etiam ut eius imperio Hominis angeli et homines pareant et subiecti sint: nempe ut vel solo [599] hypostaticae unionis nomine Christus potestatem in universas creaturas obtineat.

At vero quid possit iucundius nobis suaviusque ad cogitandum accidere, quam Christum nobis iure non tantum nativo, sed etiam quaesito, scilicet redemptionis, imperare [cf. *3352]? Servatori enim nostro quanti steterimus, obliviosi utinam homines recolant omnes: “Non enim corruptibilibus auro vel argento redempti estis ..., sed pretioso sanguine quasi agni immaculati Christi et incontaminati” [I Pt 1:18s]. Iam nostri non sumus, cum Christus “pretio magno” [I Cor 6:20] nos emerit; corpora ipsa nostra “membra sunt Christi” [ibid., 15].

Iamvero, ut huius vim et naturam principatus paucis declaremus, dicere vix attinet, triplici eum potestate contineri, qua si caruerit, principatus vix intelligitur.... Est catholica fide credendum, Christum Iesum hominibus datum esse utique Redemptorem, cui fidant, at una simul legislatorem, cui obediant [*Concilium Tridentinum, sessio VI, can. 21: 1571]. Ipsa autem evangelia non tam leges condidisse narrant, quam leges condentem inducunt....

Iudiciariam vero potestatem sibi a Patre attributam ipse Iesus Iudaeis, de sabbati requiete per mirabilem degree of perfection whereby he excels all creatures. So he is said to reign in the souls of men ... and so also in the wills of men.... Finally Christ is recognized as the King of hearts....

But if we ponder this matter more deeply, we cannot but see that the title and the power of King belongs to Christ as man in the strict and proper sense, too. For it is only as man that he may be said to have received from the Father “power and glory and a kingdom” [cf. Dan 7:13f.], since the Word of God, as consubstantial with the Father, has all things in common with him and, therefore, has necessarily supreme and absolute dominion over all things created.

The foundation of this power and dignity of our Lord 3676 is rightly indicated by Cyril of Alexandria. “Christ”, he says, “has dominion over all creatures, a dominion not seized by violence or usurped, but his by essence and by nature.”¹ His kingship is founded upon the ineffable hypostatic union. From this it follows not only that Christ is to be adored by angels and men, but that to him as man angels and men are subject and must recognize his empire; by reason of the hypostatic union Christ has power over all creatures.

But what can give our thoughts greater joy and consolation than that Christ is our King by acquired as well as by natural right, for he is our Redeemer [cf. *3352]? Would that they who forget what they have cost their Savior might recall the words: “You were not redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb unspotted and undefiled” [I Pet 1:18f.]. We are no longer our own property, for Christ has purchased us “with a great price” [I Cor 6:20]; our very bodies are the “members of Christ” [I Cor 6:15].

Let Us explain briefly the nature and meaning of this 3677 lordship of Christ. It consists, We need scarcely say, in a threefold power that is essential to lordship.... And moreover it is a dogma of faith that Jesus Christ was given to man, not only as our Redeemer, but also as a lawgiver, to whom obedience is due [*Council of Trent, sess. 6, can. 21: 1571]. Not only do the Gospels tell us that he made laws, but they present him to us in the act of making them....

Jesus himself claimed judicial power as received from his Father, when the Jews accused him of breaking the debilis hominis sanationem violata crinantibus, denuntiat: “Neque enim Pater iudicat quemquam, sed omne iudicium dedit Filio” [Io 5:22]. In quo id etiam comprehenditur—quoniam res a iudicio disiungi nequit—, ut praemia et poenas hominibus adhuc viventibus iure suo deferat.

*3676 ¹ Cyril of Alexandria, Commentarius in Iohannem XII, 18 (PG 74:622C).

At praeterea potestas illa, quam executionis vocant, Christo adiudicanda est, utpote cuius imperio parere omnes necesse sit, et ea quidem denunciata contumacibus irrogatione suppliciorum, quae nemo possit effugere.

3678 [600] Verumtamen eiusmodi regnum praecipuo quodam modo et spirituale esse et ad spiritualia pertinere, cum ea, quae ex Bibliis supra protulimus, verba planissime ostendant, tum Christus Dominus sua agendi ratione confirmat. Siquidem non una data occasione, cum Iudaei, immo vel ipsi Apostoli, per errorem censerent, fore ut Messias populum in libertatem vindicaret regnumque Israel restitueret, vanam ipse opinionem ac spem adimere et convellere; rex a circumfusa admirantium multitudine renuntiandus, et nomen et honorem fugiendo latendoque detrectare; coram praeside romano edicere, regnum suum “de hoc mundo” [Io 18:36] non esse.

Quod quidem regnum tale in evangelii proponitur, in quod homines paenitentiam agendo ingredi parent, ingredi vero nequeant nisi per fidem et baptismum, qui, etsi est ritus externus, interiorem tamen regenerationem significat atque efficit; opponitur unice regno Satanae et potestati tenebrarum, et ab asseclis postulat, non solum ut, abalienato a divitiis rebusque terrenis animo, morum praeferant lenitatem et esuriant sitianteque iustitiam, sed etiam ut semet ipsos abnegent et crucem suam tollant. Cum autem Christus et Ecclesiam Redemptor sanguine suo acquisiverit et Sacerdos se ipse pro peccatis hostiam obtulerit perpetuoque offerat, cui non videatur regium ipsum munus utriusque illius naturam muneris induere ac participare?

3679 Turpiter ceteroquin erret, qui a Christo homine rerum civilium quarumlibet imperium abiudicet, cum is a Patre ius in res creatas absolutissimum sic obtineat, ut omnia in suo arbitrio sint posita. At tamen, quoad in terris vitam traduxit, ab eiusmodi dominatu exercendo se prorsus abstinuit, atque, ut humanarum rerum possessionem procuracionemque olim contempsit, ita eas possessoribus et tum permisit et hodie permittit. In quo perbelle illud: “Non eripit mortalia, qui regna dat caelestia.”¹

Itaque principatus Redemptoris nostri universos complectitur homines; quam ad rem verba immortalis memoriae decessoris Nostri Leonis XIII Nostra libenter

Sabbath by the miraculous cure of a sick man. For “the Father judges no one, but has given all judgment to the Son” [Jn 5:22]. In this power is included the right of rewarding and punishing all men living, for this right is inseparable from that of judging.

Executive power, too, belongs to Christ, for all must obey his commands; none may escape them or the sanctions he has imposed.

This kingdom is spiritual and is concerned above all with spiritual things. That this is so the above quotations from Scripture amply prove, and Christ by his own action confirms it. On many occasions, when the Jews and even the apostles wrongly supposed that the Messiah would restore the liberties and the kingdom of Israel, he repelled and denied such a suggestion. When the populace thronged around him in admiration and would have acclaimed him king, he shrank from the honor and sought safety in flight. Before the Roman magistrate he declared that his kingdom was not “of this world” [Jn 18:36].

The Gospels present this kingdom as one that men prepare to enter by penance and cannot actually enter except by faith and by baptism, which, though an external rite, signifies and produces an interior regeneration. This kingdom is opposed to none other than that of Satan and the power of darkness. It demands of its subjects a spirit of detachment from riches and earthly things and a spirit of gentleness. They must hunger and thirst after justice, and more than this, they must deny themselves and carry the cross. Christ as our Redeemer purchased the Church at the price of his own blood; as priest he offered himself and continues to offer himself as a victim for our sins. Is it not evident, then, that his kingly dignity partakes in a manner of both these offices?

It would be a grave error, on the other hand, to say that Christ has no authority whatever in civil affairs, since, by virtue of the absolute legal right over all creatures committed to him by the Father, all things are in his power. Nevertheless, during his life on earth he refrained from the exercise of such authority, and although he himself disdained to possess or to care for earthly goods, he did not, nor does he today, interfere with those who possess them. To this, the words well apply: “He does not take away mortal things who gives the reign of heavenly things.”¹

Thus the dominion of our Redeemer embraces all men. To use the words of Our immortal predecessor Pope Leo XIII: “His empire includes not only Catholic nations, facimus: “Videlicet imperium eius non est tantummodo in gentes catholici nominis, aut in eos [601] solum, qui, sacro baptismo abluti, utique ad Ecclesiam, si spectetur ius, pertinent, quamvis error opinionum devios agat, vel dissensio a caritate seiungat: sed complectitur etiam quotquot numerantur christianae fidei expertes, ita ut verissime in potestate Iesu Christi sit universitas generis humani” [*3350].

¹ *3679 Hymn “Crudelis Herodes” in the office of Epiphany.

Nec quicquam inter singulos hac in re et convictiones domesticas civilesque interest, quia homines societate coniuncti nihilo sunt minus in potestate Christi quam singuli. Idem profecto fons privatae ac communis salutis: “Et non est in alio aliquo salus; nec aliud nomen est sub caelo datum hominibus, in quo oporteat nos salvos fieri” [Act 4:12].

3680: Instruction of the Holy Office, June 19, 1926

Ed.: AAS 18 (1926): 282.

Cremation

Cum non pauci etiam inter catholicos barbarum hunc morem, nedum christianae, sed et naturalis erga defunctorum corpora pietatis sensui constantique Ecclesiae inde a primis eius initiis disciplinae plane repugnantem veluti unum e potioribus hodierni ut aiunt civilis progressus scientiaeque valetudinis tuendae meritis celebrare non dubitent, . . . [Christifideles docendi sunt,] hoc reapse consilio a christiani nominis hostibus cadaverum cremationem laudari ac propagari, ut, animis a mortis consideratione speque corporum resurrectionis paulatim aversis, materialismo sternatur via.

Quamvis igitur cadaverum crematio, quippe non absolute mala, in extraordinariis rerum adiunctis ex certa gravique boni publici ratione permitti queat et revera permittatur, communiter tamen ac veluti ex regula ordinarie eidem operam vel favorem praestare, impium et scandalosum ideoque graviter illicitum esse nemo non videt.

3681–3682: Declaration of the Holy Office, June 2, 1927

With this declaration, the Holy Office distances itself from its response of January 13, 1897, on the “Johannine comma”. The presumed purely disciplinary function is not apparent from the text of the first response.

Ed.: [1897 Decree]: ASS 29 (1896/1897): 637. —[both decrees]: EnchB nos. 135f .

The Johannine Comma

Qu.: Utrum tuto negari aut saltem in dubium revocari possit, esse authenticum textum s. Iohannis in Epistola I, cap. 5 vs. 7, qui sic se habet: “Quoniam tres sunt, qui not only baptized persons who, though belonging to the Church by right, have been led astray by error or have been cut off from her by schism, but also all those who are outside the Christian faith; so that truly the whole of mankind is subject to the power of Jesus Christ” [*3350].

Nor is there any difference in this matter between the individual and the family or the State; for all men, whether collectively or individually, are under the dominion of Christ. In him is the salvation of the individual; in him is the salvation of society. “Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is no other name under heaven given to men whereby we must be saved” [Acts 4:12].

Since there are many, even among Catholics, who do not hesitate to extol this barbaric custom—one clearly repugnant not only to the Christian but to the natural sense of duty toward the bodies of the deceased and to the constant discipline of the Church from her origins—as one of the more excellent services of contemporary, as they say, civil progress and of the science of safeguarding health, . . . [the Christian faithful are to be taught] that, in reality, the cremation of cadavers is praised and propagated by the enemies of the Christian name with the intention that, in turning souls from consideration of death and the hope of the resurrection of the bodies, the way may be opened to materialism.

Therefore, although the cremation of cadavers is not absolutely evil, and in extraordinary circumstances, for a certain and grave reason of the public good, it may be permitted and is, in fact, permitted, nevertheless to carry it out or to prefer it ordinarily, in general and as a rule, no person can fail to see as something impious and scandalous and, for this reason, gravely illicit.

Question.: Can it safely be denied, or at least called into doubt, that the text of St. John in the first epistle, chapter 5, verse 7, which reads as follows, is authentic: 3681 testimonium dant in caelo: Pater, Verbum et Spiritus Sanctus: et hi tres unum sunt”?

“And there are three who give testimony in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit. And these three are one”?

To this question, the Holy Office had given its response of January 13, 1897:

Negative.

No.

In the declaration of June 2, 1927, the Holy Office considered this question again:

3682 Decretum hoc latum est, ut coerceretur audacia privatorum doctorum ius sibi tribuentium, authenticam commatis Ioannei aut penitus reiiciendi aut ultimo iudicio suo saltem in dubium vocandi. Minime vero impedire voluit, quominus scriptores catholici rem plenius investigarent atque, argumentis hinc inde accurate perpensis, cum ea, quam rei gravitas requirit, moderatione et temperantia, in sententiam genuinitati contrariam inclinarent, modo profiterentur, se paratos esse stare iudicio Ecclesiae, cui a Iesu Christo munus demandatum est, sacras Litteras non solum interpretandi, sed etiam fideliter custodiendi.

This decree was passed to check the audacity of private teachers who attributed to themselves the right either of rejecting entirely the authenticity of the Johannine comma, or at least of calling it into question by their own final judgment. But it was not meant at all to prevent Catholic writers from investigating the subject more fully and, after weighing the arguments accurately on both sides, with that moderation and temperance which the gravity of the subject requires, from inclining toward an opinion in opposition to its authenticity, provided they professed that they were ready to abide by the judgment of the Church, to which the duty was delegated by Jesus Christ not only of interpreting Holy Scripture but also of guarding it faithfully.

3683: Encyclical Mortalium animos, January 6, 1928

This encyclical is concerned with the promotion of the true unity of religion.

Ed.: AAS 20 (1928): 13f.

The Duty and Scope of the Ecclesiastical Magisterium

3683 Quod ad res credendas attinet, discrimine illo uti nequaquam licet, quod inter capita fidei fundamentalia et non fundamentalia, quae vocant, induci placuit, quasi altera recipi ab omnibus debeant, libera, contra, fidelium assensionem permitti altera queant; supernaturalis enim virtus fidei causam formalem habet Dei revelantis auctoritatem, quae nullam distinctionem eiusmodi patitur...

Besides this, in connection with things that must be believed, it is in no way licit to use that distinction which some have seen fit to introduce between those articles of faith that are fundamental and those that are not fundamental, as they say, as if the former are to be accepted by all, while the latter may be left to the free assent of the faithful: for the supernatural virtue of faith has a formal cause, namely, the authority of God revealing, and this permits no such distinction...

Neque enim, quod eiusmodi veritates alias aliis aetatibus vel proxime superioribus sollemni Ecclesiae decreto sanxit ac definivit, eadem idcirco non aequae certae, non aequae credendae; [14] nonne Deus illas omnes revelavit? Etenim Ecclesiae magisterium—quod divino consilio in terris constitutum est, ut revelatae doctrinae cum incolumes ad perpetuitatem consistent tum ad cognitionem hominum facile tutoque traducerentur—quamquam per Romanum Pontificem et episcopos cum eo communionem habentes cotidie exercetur, id tamen complectitur munus, ut, si quando aut haeticorum erroribus atque oppugnationibus obsisti efficacius aut clarius subtiliusque explicata sacrae doctrinae capita in fidelium mentibus imprimi oporteat, ad aliquid tum sollemnibus ritibus decretisque definiendum opportune procedat.

Are these truths not equally certain, or not equally to be believed, because the Church has solemnly sanctioned and defined them, some in one age and some in another, even in those times immediately before our own? Has not God revealed them all? For the teaching authority of the Church, which in the divine wisdom was constituted on earth in order that revealed doctrines might remain intact forever and that they might be brought with ease and security to the knowledge of men and which is daily exercised through the Roman pontiff and the bishops who are in communion with him, has also the office of defining, when it sees fit, any truth with solemn rites and decrees, whenever this is necessary either to oppose the errors or the attacks of heretics or more clearly and in greater detail to stamp the minds of the faithful with the articles of sacred doctrine that have been explained.

Quo quidem extraordinario magisterii usu nullum sane inventum inducitur nec quidquam additur novi ad earum summam veritatum, quae in deposito revelationis, Ecclesiae divinitus tradito, saltem implicite continentur, verum aut ea declarantur, quae forte adhuc obscura compluribus videri possint aut ea tenenda de fide statuuntur, quae a nonnullis ante in controversiam vocabantur.

But in the use of this extraordinary teaching authority no newly invented matter is brought in, nor is anything new added to the number of those truths that are at least implicitly contained in the deposit of revelation, divinely handed down to the Church: rather, either what perhaps might until then have seemed obscure to many is clarified or what some have previously called into question is determined to be of faith.

3684: Decree of the Holy Office, July 24 (August 2), 1929

Ed.: AAS 21 (1929): 490.

Masturbation Directly Procured

Qu.: Utrum licita sit masturbatio directe procurata, ut obtineatur sperma, quo contagiosus morbus “blenorragia” detegatur et, quantum fieri potest, curetur.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 26. Iul.): Negative.

Question: Is masturbation, directly procured in order to obtain sperm for detecting and, insofar as possible, curing the contagious disease “blenorragia” (gonorrhea) permitted? 3684

Response: (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 26, 1929): No.

3685–3698: Encyclical Divini illius magistri, December 31, 1929

Ed.: AAS 22 (1930): 52–73.

The Right and Duty of Education in General

Educandi munus non singulorum hominum, sed necessario societatis est. Tres vero numerantur societates necessariae, inter se distinctae, at, Deo volente, congruenter copulatae, quibus quidem homo ab ortu suo adscribitur: harum duae, domestica nempe ac civilis consortio, naturalis ordinis; ac tertia, Ecclesia nimirum, supernaturalis.

Primum obtinet locum domesticus convictus, qui, cum ab ipso Deo ad eiusmodi propositum constitutus ac comparatus sit, ut sobolis procreandae educandaeque curam habeat, idcirco natura sua, adeoque iuribus sibi propriis, civili societati [53] antecedit.

Nihilo setius familia ideo imperfecta est societas, quia non omnibus iis rebus est praedita, quibus nobilissimum propositum suum perfecte assequatur; civilis autem congregatio, cum omnia in sua facultate sint ad destinatum sibi finem, videlicet ad commune terrestri huius vitae bonum, necessaria, societas est numeris omnibus absoluta ac perfecta; hac igitur de causa domestico convictui eadem praestat, qui quidem in civili solummodo consortione institutum suum tuto riteque absolvere potest.

Tertia denique societas, in qua homines, per baptismatis lavacrum, divinae gratiae vitam ingrediuntur, Ecclesia est, supernaturalis quidem societas universum humanum genus complectens, atque in se perfecta, cum sibi omnia suppetant ad finem suum, sempiternam

Education is essentially a social and not a mere individual activity. Now there are three necessary societies, distinct from one another and yet harmoniously combined by God, into which man is born: two, namely, the family and civil society, belong to the natural order; the third, the Church, to the supernatural order. 3685

In the first place comes the family, instituted and arranged by God himself for the purpose of the generation and formation of offspring; for this reason it has priority of nature and therefore of rights with respect to civil society.

Nevertheless, the family is an imperfect society, since it has not in itself all the means to attain its most noble end; whereas civil society is a perfect society, having in itself all the means for its appointed end, which is the temporal well-being of the community; and so, in this respect, that is, in view of the common good, it has preeminence over the family, which finds its own suitable temporal perfection precisely in civil society.

The third society, into which man is born when through baptism he reaches the divine life of grace, is the Church; a society of the supernatural order and of universal extent; a perfect society, because it has in itself all the means required for its own end, which is the nempe hominum salutem, consequendum, ideoque in suo ordine suprema.

Consequens est, educationem, quae ad totum respicit hominem, qua hominem singillatim quaque societatis humanae participem, sive in naturae sive in divinae gratiae ordine constitutum, ad necessarias has societates tres, fini cuiusque proprio congruenter, pro praesenti ordine divinitus constituto aequabiliter pertinere.

eternal salvation of mankind; hence it is supreme in its own domain.

Consequently, education, which is concerned with man as a whole, individually and socially, in the order of nature and in the order of grace, necessarily belongs to all these three societies, in due proportion, corresponding, according to the disposition of divine providence, to the coordination of their respecting ends.

The Right of the Church to Educate

3686 [53] Ac primo loco, praestantiore quodam modo ea ad Ecclesiam pertinet, duplici scilicet titulo ordinis supernaturalis, quem Deus ipsi tantummodo contulit, adeoque potiore omnino ac validiore quam quilibet alius naturalis ordinis titulus.

Prima iuris huiusmodi ratio in suprema magisterii auctoritate ac munere nititur, quod divinus Ecclesiae Conditor eidem tradidit [Mt 28:18–20]...

[54] Altera iuris ratio e supernaturali illo oritur matris munere, quo Ecclesia, purissima Christi sponsa, divinae gratiae vitam hominibus largitur, eamque sacramentis praeceptisque suis alit ac provehit. Merito igitur S. Augustinus ait: “Non habebit Deum patrem, qui Ecclesiam noluerit habere matrem.”¹...

And first of all education belongs preeminently to the Church, by reason of a double title in the supernatural order, conferred exclusively upon her by God himself; absolutely superior, therefore, to any other title in the natural order.

The first title is founded upon the express mission and supreme authority to teach, given her by her divine Founder [Mt 28:18–20]...

The second title is the supernatural motherhood, in virtue of which the Church, spotless spouse of Christ, generates, nurtures, and educates souls in the divine life of grace with her sacraments and her doctrine. With good reason, then, does St. Augustine maintain: “He has not God for father who refuses to have the Church as mother.”¹...

3687 [55] Litteras igitur, scientias et artes, quatenus ad christianam educationem ad omnemque suam de animarum salute operam sunt necessariae vel utiles, Ecclesia promovet, suas etiam scholas, instituta sua condendo sustentandoque, ubi quaevis disciplina tradatur et ad quemlibet eruditionis gradum fiat aditus. Nec putanda est ab materno eius magisterio aliena ipsa, quam vocant, physica educatio, cum ea quoque id habeat, ut christianae educationi aut prodesse aut nocere possit. ...

Therefore, with full right the Church promotes letters, science, and art insofar as necessary or helpful to Christian education in addition to her work for the salvation of souls: founding and maintaining schools and institutions adapted to every branch of learning and degree of culture. Nor may even physical education, as it is called, be considered outside the range of her maternal supervision, for the reason that it also is a means that may help or harm Christian education. ...

3688 [56] Est praeterea Ecclesiae et ius, quod abdicare, et officium, quod deserere nequit, pro tota vigilandi educatione, qualiscumque filiis suis, scilicet fidelibus, in institutis vel publicis vel privatis impertitur, non modo quod attinet ad religiosam, quae ibidem tradatur, doctrinam, sed etiam quod ad quamlibet aliam disciplinam rerumve ordinationem, quatenus cum religione morumque praeceptis aliquid habeant necessitudinis. ...

Again, it is the inalienable right as well as the indispensable duty of the Church to watch over the entire education of her children, in all institutions, public or private, not merely in regard to the religious instruction there given, but in regard to every other branch of learning and every regulation insofar as religion and morality are concerned. ...

3689 [58] ... Cum praecipuo eiusmodi Ecclesiae iure ... etiam iura omnino congruunt et familiae et civitatis, immo vel ipsa quae in singulis civibus insunt ad iustam quod attinet cum scientiae, tum rationis ac disciplinae in ea pervestiganda, tum denique cuiusvis culturae animorum profanae libertatem. Etenim, ut talis concordiae causam

... This is the more true because the rights of the family and of the State, even the rights of individuals regarding a just liberty in the pursuit of science, research methods, and all sorts of profane culture ... are in complete harmony with this preeminence of the Church. The fundamental reason for this harmony is that the atque originem, nulla mora, declaremus, supernaturalis ordo, in quo iura Ecclesiae nituntur, tantum abest, ut naturalem ordinem, ad quem alia pertinent, quae memoravimus, iura, destruat atque extenuet, ut, contra, eundem extollat ac perficiat: quorum quidem ordinum alter auxilium et quasi complementum alteri praestat, suae cuiusque naturae ac dignitati consentaneum, cum ambo a Deo profluant, qui non constare sibi non potest. . . .

*3686¹ Pseudo-Augustine [= Quodvultdeus of Carthage], De Symbolo sermo [no. IV. PL; no. III. CpChL] ad catechumenos 13 (PL 40:668C; R. Braun: CpChL 60 [1976]: 363_{4f}).

supernatural order, to which the Church owes her rights, not only does not in the least destroy the natural order, to which pertain the other rights mentioned, but elevates the natural and perfects it, each affording mutual aid to the other and completing it in a manner proportioned to its respective nature and dignity. The reason is because both come from God, who cannot contradict himself. . . .

The Right of the Family to Educate

[58] Atque primum cum Ecclesiae munere familiae munus mirifice concordat, cum utraque a Deo simillime proficiscatur. Namque [59] cum familia, in naturali ordine, Deus proxime fecunditatem communicat, principium vitae ideoque principium educationis ad vitam, una simul cum auctoritate, quae est ordinis principium. . . .

Habet igitur familia proxime a Creatore munus propterea ius prolis educandae; quod quidem ius cum abici nequeat, quia cum gravissimo officio coniunctum, tum cuius societatis civilis et reipublicae iuri antecedit, eaque de causa nulli in terris potestati illud infringere licet. . . .

[Contra illud ius ii omnes pugnant] quotquot affirmare audent, [60] prolem ante ad Civitatem quam ad familiam pertinere, et Civitati ius esse educandi absolutum. . . . [Refelluntur verbis Leonis XIII:]¹ “Filii sunt aliquid patris et velut paternae amplificatio quaedam personae, propriaeque loqui si volumus, non ipsi per se, sed per communitatem domesticam, in qua generati sunt, civilem ineunt ac participant societatem.” Itaque “patria potestas est eiusmodi, ut nec exstingui neque absorberi a republica possit, quia idem et commune habet cum ipsa hominum vita principium.”². . . .

Unde tamen non sequitur, ius educandi quo parentes fruuntur, absolutum esse atque imperiosum, utpote quod et fini supremo et legi naturali divinaeque coniunctissime subiiciatur. . . .

The Right of Civil Society to Educate

[62] Ex hoc educandi munere, quod imprimis ad Ecclesiam familiamque pertinet, cum maximae utilitates, uti vidimus, in societatem universam dimanant, tum nullum damnum veris propriisque reipublicae iuribus quod ad civium educationem attinet, secundum ordinem a Deo statutum, obvenire potest. Haec iura ab ipso naturae auctore societati civili tribuuntur, non paternitatis titulo, uti Ecclesiae ac familiae, sed propter

In the first place, the Church’s mission of education is in wonderful agreement with that of the family, for both proceed from God and in a remarkably similar manner. God directly communicates to the family, in the natural order, fecundity, which is the principle of life and hence also the principle of education to life, together with authority, the principle of order. . . . 3690

The family therefore holds directly from the Creator the mission and hence the right to educate the offspring, a right inalienable because inseparably joined to a strict obligation, a right anterior to any right whatever of civil society and of the State and, therefore, inviolable on the part of any power on earth. . . .

[In open contradiction with this right are those] who dared maintain that the children belong to the State before they belong to the family and that the State has an absolute right over their education. . . . [They are refuted by the words of Leo XIII:]¹ “The children are something of the father and, as it were, an extension of the person of the father; and, to be perfectly accurate, they enter into and become part of civil society, not directly by themselves, but through the family in which they were born.” “And therefore (says the same Leo XIII) the father’s power is of such a nature that it cannot be destroyed or absorbed by the State; for it has the same origin as human life itself.”². . . .

It does not, however, follow from this that the parents’ right to educate their children is absolute and despotic; for it is necessarily subordinated to the last end and to natural and divine law. . . .

From such priority of rights on the part of the Church and of the family in the field of education, most important advantages, as we have seen, accrue to the whole of society. Moreover, in accordance with the divinely established order of things, no damage can follow from it to the true and just rights of the State in regard to the education of its citizens. These rights have been conferred upon civil society by the Author of nature 3691 auctoritatem, quae in eadem inest ad commune bonum in terris promovendum, qui quidem est finis eius proprius.

*3690 ¹ Leo XIII, encyclical Rerum novarum, May 15, 1891 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 646 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:106).

² Ibid., slightly earlier.

3692 Ex his sequitur educationem non eodem modo ad societatem civilem, quo ad Ecclesiam familiamque pertinere, sed alio plane, qui scilicet fini eius proprio respondeat. Hic autem finis, id est commune bonum temporalis ordinis, in pace ac securitate consistit, quibus familiae singulique cives in suis exercendis iuribus fruuntur, simulque in maxima, quae in mortali hac vita esse potest, spiritualium fluxarumque rerum copia, omnium quidem opera atque consensione assequenda.

[63] Duplex igitur est civilis auctoritatis munus, quae est in republica: tuendi nempe atque provehendi, minime vero familiam singulosque cives quasi absorbendi vel se in eorum locum substituendi.

3693 Quamobrem, quod ad educationem spectat, ius est vel, ut rectius loquamur, officium est reipublicae tutandi suis legibus antecedens familiae ius—quod supra memoravimus—christiano nempe more prolem educandi, adeoque supernaturali Ecclesiae iuri in christianam eiusmodi educationem obsequendi.

Itemque civitatis est, hoc ius in prole ipsa tueri, si quando parentum opera—ob eorum vel inertiam vel imperitiam vel indignitatem aut physice aut moraliter fortasse desit; siquidem ipsorum ius educandi, ut supra diximus, non absolutum est atque imperiosum, sed a naturali et divina lege dependens, ob eamque rem non modo auctoritati et iudicio Ecclesiae subiectum, sed etiam vigilantiae ac tutelae, pro communi bono, civitatis; neque enim familia perfecta est societas, quae necessaria omnia in se habeat ad se cumulate planeque perficiendam. . . .

3694 Praecipue vero civitatis est, ut commune bonum postulat, educationem ipsam iuventutis atque eruditionem pluribus modis promovere. Primum ac per se, operae ab Ecclesia familiisque susceptae favendo atque opitulando, quae, quam sit efficax, historia usuque rerum comprobatur; deinde operam ipsam perficiendo, ubi ea deest vel haud sufficit; scholas quoque et instituta propria condendo; civitas enim magis quam ceteri opibus pollet, quas sibi pro communibus omnium necessitatibus traditas, aequum omnino est et consentaneum ut in eorum utilitatem, a quibus accepit, impendat. Praeterea praecipere civitas potest ac proinde curare, ut cives omnes cum civilia et nationalia iura perdiscant, tum a [64] scientia, doctrina morum physicisque ludis instructi himself, not by title of fatherhood, as in the case of the Church and of the family, but in virtue of the authority that it possesses to promote the common temporal welfare, which is precisely the purpose of its existence.

Consequently, education cannot pertain to civil society in the same way in which it pertains to the Church and to the family, but in a different way corresponding to its own particular end and object. Now this end and object, the common welfare in the temporal order, consists in that peace and security in which families and individual citizens have the free exercise of their rights and at the same time enjoy the greatest spiritual and temporal prosperity possible in this life by the mutual union and coordination of the work of all.

The function, therefore, of the civil authority residing in the State is twofold, to protect and to foster, but by no means to absorb the family and the individual or to substitute itself for them.

Accordingly, in the matter of education, it is the right, or, to speak more correctly, it is the duty of the State to protect in its legislation the prior rights, already described, of the family as regards the Christian education of its offspring and, consequently, also to respect the supernatural rights of the Church in this same realm of Christian education.

It also belongs to the State to protect the rights of the child himself when the parents are found wanting either physically or morally in this respect, whether by default, incapacity, or misconduct, since, as has been shown, their right to educate is not an absolute and despotic one, but dependent on the natural and divine law and, therefore, subject alike to the authority and jurisdiction of the Church and to the vigilance and administrative care of the State in view of the common good. Besides, the family is not a perfect society, that is, it has not in itself all the means necessary for its full development. . . .

In the first place, it pertains to the State, in view of the common good, to promote in various ways the education and instruction of youth. It should begin by encouraging and assisting, of its own accord, the initiative and activity of the Church and the family, whose successes in this field have been clearly demonstrated by history and experience. It should, moreover, supplement their work whenever this falls short of what is necessary, even by means of its own schools and institutions. For the State more than any other society is provided with the means put at its disposal for the needs of all, and it is only right that it use these means to the advantage of those who have contributed them. Over and above this, the State can exact and take measures to secure that all its citizens sint, quantum decet atque hisce nostris temporibus commune bonum reapse postulat.

Verumtamen plane liquet, eo civitatem officio teneri, ut, in publica privataque educatione atque eruditione omnibus his modis provehenda, non solum nativa Ecclesiae et familiae iura christiane educandi vereatur, sed etiam iustitiae, quae suum cuique tribuit, parere. Itaque nefas est, civitatem educationis institutionisque causam ita ad se redigere totam, ut familiae, contra christianae conscientiae officia vel contra quam legitime malint, physice aut moraliter ad civitatis ipsius scholas liberos suos mittere cogantur.

Attamen id non prohibet, quominus, ob rectam rei publicae administrationem vel pacem domi forisque defendendi causa . . . scholas civitas instituat quas dixeris praeparatorias ad quaedam sua officia, ad militiam praesertim, dummodo ab Ecclesiae et familiae iuribus laedendis in iis, quae ad eas pertinent, se absteat.

Nec immerito equidem id Nos iterum hic admonemus; hac enim aetate nostra—qua nationalismus quidam, cum immoderatus et fallax tum paci veri nominis prosperitatisque infensus, gliscere coepit—modi omnes excedi solent in physica educatione, quam vocant, adolescentulorum (atque interdum puellarum, contra ipsam humanarum rerum naturam) militari more ordinanda. . . .

Quamquam non hoc loco rectum disciplinae habitum iustamque animi audaciam, sed quidquid immodicum est Nos reprehensum volumus, uti violentiae spiritum, qui quidem aliud omnino est atque animi fortitudo nobilissimusque militaris virtutis sensus pro patriae ac publici ordinis defensione. . . .

Iamvero non solum iuventutis, sed etiam aetatum omnium et condicionum ad civilem societatem statumque educatio pertinet, [65] quae civica appellari potest, quaeque, pro parte, ut aiunt, positiva, in eo consistit, ut hominibus ad societatem eiusmodi pertinentibus res publice proponantur, quae, et mentes cognitionibus rerumque imaginibus imbuendo et sensus percellendo, voluntates ad honestum invitent et morali quadam necessitate perducant; pro negativa autem, ut ea praecaveat atque impediatur, quae sibi adversantur.

have the necessary knowledge of their civic and political duties, and a certain degree of physical, intellectual, and moral culture, that, considering the conditions of our times, is really necessary for the common good.

However it is clear that in all these ways of promoting education and instruction, both public and private, the State should respect the inherent rights of the Church and of the family concerning Christian education and, moreover, have regard for distributive justice. Accordingly, unjust and unlawful is any monopoly, educational or scholastic, that, physically or morally, forces families to make use of government schools, contrary to the dictates of their Christian conscience or contrary even to their legitimate preferences.

This does not prevent the State from making due provision for the right administration of public affairs and for the protection of its peace, within or without the realm. . . . The State may therefore reserve to itself the establishment and direction of schools intended to prepare for certain civic duties and especially for military service, provided it be careful not to injure the rights of the Church or of the family in what pertains to them. 3695

It is well to repeat this warning here; for in these days there is spreading a spirit of nationalism that is false and exaggerated as well as dangerous to true peace and prosperity. Under its influence various excesses are committed in giving a military turn to the so-called physical training of boys (sometimes even of girls, contrary to the very instincts of human nature). . . .

It is not Our intention, however, to condemn what is good in the spirit of discipline and legitimate bravery promoted by these methods; We condemn only what is excessive, as for example violence, which must not be confounded with courage or with the noble sentiment of military valor in defense of country and public order. . . .

In general also it belongs to civil society and the State to provide what may be called civic education, not only for its youth, but for all ages and classes. This consists in the practice of presenting publicly to groups of individuals information having an intellectual, imaginative, and emotional appeal, calculated to draw their wills to what is upright and honest and to urge its practice by a sort of moral compulsion, positively by disseminating such knowledge and negatively by suppressing what is opposed to it. 3696

Sexual Education

[71] . . . Bene multi et stulte et periculose eam tenent provehantque educandi rationem, quae sexualis putide dicitur, cum iidem perperam sentiant, posse se, per artes

. . . Far too common is the error of those who with dangerous assurance and under an ugly term propagate a so-called sex-education, falsely imagining they can 3697

mere naturales et quovis amoto religionis pietatisque praesidio, adolescentibus a voluptate et luxuria praecavere, scilicet hos omnes, nullo sexus discrimine, vel publice, lubricis initiando instruendoque doctrinis, immo, quod peius est, mature occasionibus obiciendo, ut eorum animus, eiusmodi rebus—quemadmodum ipsi aiunt—assuetus, quasi ad pubertatis pericula obdurescat.

In eo autem isti homines graviter errant, quod nativam humanae naturae fragilitatem non agnoscunt neque legem illam membrum nostris insitam, quae, ut verbis utamur Pauli Apostoli, mentis legi repugnat [cf. Rm 7:23], idque praeterea temere infitiantur quod usu quotidiano didicimus, iuvenes nempe prae aliis in turpia saepius incidere non tam ob mancam mentis cognitionem, quam ob infirmitatem voluntatis illecebris obnoxiae atque divinis auxiliis destitutae.

Qua de re prorsus difficili, si quidem, omnibus perpensis, adolescentem aliquem tempestive ab iis moneri oporteat, quibus Deus educandi pueros officium commisit cum gratis opportunis coniunctum, illae profecto cautiones et artes sunt adhibendae, christianis [72] institutoribus non ignotae....

3698 Aequae vero fallax atque christianae institutioni infensa illa adolescentem instruendi ratio habenda est, quam vulgo coeducationem appellant....

Alter ... et alter sexus a Dei sapientia ad hoc sunt constituti, ut in familia et societate mutuo se compleant et in unum quid apte coalescant, ob illud ipsum corporis animique discrimen, quo inter se differunt, quod idcirco in educatione atque institutione tenendum, imo fovendum est per aptam distinctionem ac separationem, [73] aetatibus ac condicionibus congruentem. Eiusmodi vero praecepta, ad christianae prudentiae praescriptum, tempestive atque opportune servanda sunt non modo in scholis omnibus, praesertim per trepidos adolescentiae annos, unde totius ferme futurae vitae ratio omnino pendet, sed etiam in gymniciis ludis atque exercitationibus....

3700–3724: Encyclical Casti connubii, December 31, 1930

Ed.: AAS 22 (1930): 541–73.

The Divine Institution of Marriage

3700 Primum quidem id maneat immotum et inviolabile fundamentum: Matrimonium non humanitus institutum neque instauratum esse, sed divinitus; non ab hominibus, sed ab ipso auctore naturae Deo atque eiusdem naturae restitutore Christo Domino legibus esse communitum, confirmatum, elevatum; quae proinde leges nullis hominum placitis, nulli ne ipsorum quidem coniugum contrario convento obnoxiae esse possint [*cf. Gn 1:27s; 2:22s; Mt 19:3–9; Eph 5:23–33; Concilium Tridentinum: 1797–1816].

forearm youths against the dangers of sensuality by means purely natural, such as a foolhardy initiation and precautionary instruction for all indiscriminately, even in public; and, worse still, by exposing them at an early age to the occasions, in order to accustom them, so it is argued, and, as it were, to harden them against such dangers.

Such persons grievously err in refusing to recognize the inborn weakness of human nature and the law of which the apostle speaks, fighting against the law of the mind; also in ignoring the experience of facts, from which it is clear that, particularly in young people, evil practices are the effect not so much of ignorance of intellect as of weakness of a will exposed to dangerous occasions and unsupported by the means of grace.

In this extremely delicate matter, if, all things considered, some private instruction is found necessary and opportune, from those who hold from God the commission to teach and who have the grace of state, every precaution must be taken. Such precautions are well known in traditional Christian education....

False also and harmful to Christian education is the so-called method of “coeducation”....

The two sexes ..., in keeping with the wonderful designs of the Creator, are destined to complement each other in the family and in society precisely because of their differences, which therefore ought to be maintained and encouraged during their years of formation, with the necessary distinction and corresponding separation, according to age and circumstances. These principles, with due regard to time and place, must, in accordance with Christian prudence, be applied to all schools, particularly in the most delicate and decisive period of formation, that, namely, of adolescence; and in gymnastic exercises and sports....

Let it be repeated as an immutable and inviolable fundamental doctrine that matrimony was not instituted or restored by man but by God; not by man were the laws made to strengthen and confirm and elevate it, but by God, the Author of nature, and by Christ the Lord, by whom nature was redeemed; and hence these laws cannot be subject to any human decrees or to any contrary pact even of the spouses themselves [*cf. Gen 1:27f.; 2:22f.; Mt 19:3–9; Eph 5:23–33; Council of Trent 1797–1816].

At, quamquam matrimonium suapte natura divinitus est institutum, tamen humana quoque voluntas suas in eo partes habet easque nobilissimas; nam singulare quodque matrimonium, prout est coniugalis coniunctio inter hunc virum et hanc mulierem, non oritur nisi ex libero utriusque sponsi consensu: qui quidem liber voluntatis actus, quo utraque pars tradit et acceptat ius coniugii proprium, ad verum matrimonium constituendum tam necessarius est, ut nulla humana potestate suppleri valeat.

Haec tamen libertas eo tantum spectat, ut constet, utrum contrahentes re vera matrimonium inire et cum hac persona inire velint an non; libertati vero hominis matrimonii natura penitus subducitur, ita, ut, si quis semel matrimonium contraxerit, divinis eius legibus et essentialibus proprietatibus subiciatur. Nam Angelicus Doctor de fide et prole disserens, “haec, [542] inquit, in matrimonio ex ipsa pactione coniugali causantur, ita quod, si aliquid contrarium his exprimeretur in consensu, qui matrimonium facit, non esset verum matrimonium.”¹...

Exinde iam constat legitimam quidem auctoritatem iure pollere atque adeo cogi officio coercendi, impediendi, puniendi turpia coniugia, quae rationi ac naturae adversantur; sed cum de re agatur ipsam hominis naturam consequente, non minus certo constat ...: “In deligendo genere vitae non est dubium, quin in potestate sit arbitrioque singulorum alterutrum malle: aut Iesu Christi sectari de virginitate consilium, aut maritali se vincolo obligare. Ius coniugii naturale et primigenum homini adimere, causamve nuptiarum praecipuam, Dei auctoritate initio constitutam, quoquo modo circumscribere lex hominum nulla potest: ‘Crescite et multiplicamini’ [Gen 1:28].”¹

The Goods Proper to Christian Marriage

[543]...Quae vero quantaque sint haec veri matrimonii bona divinitus data dum exponere aggredimur, ... Nobis praeclarissimi Ecclesiae Doctoris [Augustini] verba occurrunt ...: “Haec omnia ... bona sunt, propter quae nuptiae bonae sunt: proles, fides, sacramentum.”¹

Quae tria capita qua ratione luculentissimam totius de christiano connubio doctrinae summam continere

Yet although matrimony is of its very nature of 3701
divine institution, the human will, too, enters into it and performs a most noble part. For each individual marriage, inasmuch as it is a conjugal union of a particular man and woman, arises only from the free consent of each of the spouses; and this free act of the will, by which each party hands over and accepts those rights proper to the state of marriage, is so necessary to constitute true marriage that it cannot be supplied by any human power.

This freedom, however, regards only the question whether the contracting parties really wish to enter upon matrimony or to marry this particular person; but the nature of matrimony is entirely independent of the free will of man, so that if one has once contracted matrimony, he is thereby subject to its divinely made laws and its essential properties. For the Angelic Doctor, writing on conjugal fidelity and offspring, says: “These things are so contained in matrimony by the marriage pact itself that, if anything to the contrary were expressed in the consent that makes the marriage, it would not be a true marriage.”¹...

From this it is clear that legitimately constituted 3702 authority has the right and, therefore, the duty to restrict, to prevent, and to punish those base unions that are opposed to reason and to nature; but since it is a matter that flows from human nature itself, no less certain is the teaching ...: “In choosing a state of life there is no doubt but that it is in the power and discretion of each one to prefer one or the other: either to embrace the counsel of virginity given by Jesus Christ or to bind himself in the bonds of matrimony. To take away from man the natural and primeval right of marriage, to circumscribe in any way the principal ends of marriage laid down in the beginning by God himself in the words ‘Increase and multiply’ [Gen 1:28], is beyond the power of any human law.”¹

... Now when We come to explain, Venerable 3703
Brethren, what are the goods that God has attached to true matrimony, ... there occur to Us the words of that illustrious Doctor of the Church [Augustine] ...: “These are all the goods of matrimony on account of which matrimony itself is a good: offspring, conjugal faith, and the sacrament.”¹

And how under these three heads is contained a splendid summary of the whole doctrine of Christian

*3701¹ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, suppl., q. 49, a. 3 (Editio Leonina 12:946).

*3702¹ Leo XIII, encyclical Rerum novarum, May 15, 1891 (AAS 23 [1890/1891]: 645 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11: 104).

*3703¹ Augustine, De bono coniugali 24, no. 32 (CSEL 41:227_{21f.} / PL 40:394D); similar to De Genesi ad litteram IX, 7, no. 12 (CSEL 28:275_{26f.} / PL 34:397D).

iure dicantur, ipse sanctus Doctor diserte declarat, cum ait: “In fide attenditur, ne praeter vinculum coniugale cum altero vel altera concumbatur; in prole, ut amanter suscipiatur, benigne nutriatur, religiose educetur; in sacramento autem, ut coniugium non separetur, et dimissus aut dimissa, nec causa prolis, alteri coniugatur. Haec est tamquam regula nuptiarum, qua vel naturae decoratur fecunditas vel incontinentiae regitur pravitas.”²

3704 [1. Bonum prolis.] Itaque primum inter matrimonii bona locum tenet proles. Et sane ipse humani generis Creator, qui pro sua benignitate hominibus in vita propaganda administris uti voluit, id docuit, cum in paradiso, matrimonium instituens, protoparentibus et per eos omnibus futuris coniugibus dixit: “Crescite et multiplicamini et replete terram” [Gn 1:28]. . . .

3705 [544] Christiani vero parentes intelligant praeterea, se non iam solum ad genus humanum in terra propagandum et conservandum, immo vero, non ad quoslibet veri Dei cultores educandos destinari, sed ad pariendam Ecclesiae Christi subolem, ad “cives Sanctorum et domesticos Dei” [Eph 2:19] procreandos, ut populus Dei et Salvatoris nostri cultui addictus in dies augeatur. Etsi enim christiani coniuges, quamvis ipsi sanctificati, sanctificationem in prolem transfundere non valent, immo naturalis generatio vitae facta est mortis via, qua originate peccatum transeat in prolem; aliquid tamen quodammodo participant de primaevo illo paradisi coniugio, cum eorum sit, propriam subolem Ecclesiae offerre, ut ab illa matre filiorum Dei fecundissima per [545] lavacrum baptismatis ad supernaturalem iustitiam regeneretur, et vivum Christi membrum, immortalis vitae particeps, atque aeternae gloriae, quam omnes toto pectore concupiscimus heres tandem fiat. . . .

Procreationis autem beneficio bonum prolis haud sane absolvitur, sed alterum accedat oportet, quod debita prolis educatione continetur. . . .

3706 [546] [2. Bonum fidei.] Alterum matrimonii bonum, quod diximus ab Augustino commemoratum, est bonum fidei, quae est mutua coniugum in contractu coniugali implendo fidelitas, ut, quod ex hoc contractu divina lege sancito alteri coniugi unice debetur, id neque ei denegetur neque cuivis permittatur; neque ipsi coniugi concedatur quod, utpote divinis iuribus ac legibus contrarium et marriage, the holy Doctor himself expressly declares when he says: “By conjugal faith it is provided that there should be no carnal intercourse outside the marriage bond with another man or woman; with regard to offspring, that children should be begotten of love, tenderly cared for, and educated in a religious atmosphere; finally, in its sacramental aspect, that the marriage bond should not be broken and that a husband or wife, if separated, should not be joined to another even for the sake of offspring. This we regard as the law of marriage by which the fruitfulness of nature is adorned and the evil of incontinence is restrained.”²

[1. The good of children.] Thus, among the goods of marriage, the child holds the first place. And, indeed, the Creator of the human race himself, who in his goodness wishes to use men as his helpers in the propagation of life, taught this when, instituting marriage in paradise, he said to our first parents, and through them to all future spouses: “Increase and multiply, and fill the earth” [Gen 1:28]. . . .

But Christian parents must also understand that they are destined not only to propagate and preserve the human race on earth, indeed not only to educate any kind of worshippers of the true God, but children who are to become members of the Church of Christ, to raise up “fellow citizens of the saints, and members of God’s household” [Eph 2:19], that the worshippers of God and our Savior may daily increase. For although Christian spouses, even if sanctified themselves, cannot transmit sanctification to their progeny; indeed, although the very natural process of generating life has become the way of death by which original sin is passed on to posterity, nevertheless, they share to some extent in the blessings of that primeval marriage of paradise, since it is theirs to offer their offspring to the Church in order that by this most fruitful Mother of the children of God they may be regenerated through the laver of baptism unto supernatural justice and finally be made living members of Christ, partakers of immortal life, and heirs of that eternal glory to which we all aspire from our inmost heart. . . .

The good of offspring, however, is not completed by the mere begetting of them, but something else must be added, namely, the proper education of the offspring. . . .

[2. The good of fidelity.] The second good of matrimony that We said was mentioned by St. Augustine is the blessing of conjugal honor that consists in the mutual fidelity of the spouses in fulfilling the marriage contract, so that what belongs to one of the parties by reason of this contract sanctioned by divine law may not be denied to him or permitted to any third person; nor a fide coniugali maxime alienum, concedi numquam potest.

*3703² Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram IX, 7, no. 12 (CSEL 28:275₂₇–276₆ / PL 34:397D).

Quapropter haec fides in primis postulat absolutam coniugii unitatem, quam in protoparentum matrimonio Creator ipse praestituit, cum illud noluerit esse nisi inter unum virum et mulierem unam. Et quamquam deinde hanc primaeavam legem supremus legislator Deus ad tempus aliquantum relaxavit, nullum tamen dubium est, quin illam [547] pristinam perfectamque unitatem ex integro restituerit omnemque dispensationem abrogaverit evangelica Lex, ut Christi verba et constans Ecclesiae sive docendi sive agendi modus palam ostendunt. . . .

Haec autem, quae a Sancto Augustino aptissime appellatur¹ “castitatis fides”, et faciliior et multo etiam iucundior ac nobilior efflorescet ex altero capite praestantissimo: ex coniugali scilicet amore, qui omnia coniugalis vitae officia pervadit et quemdam tenet in christiano coniugio principatum [548] nobilitatis. . . .

Caritatem igitur dicimus, non carnali tantum citiusque evanescente inclinatione innixam, neque in blandis solum verbis, sed etiam in intimo animi affectu positam atque,—siquidem “probatio dilectionis exhibitio est operis”,²—opere externo comprobata. Hoc autem opus in domestica societate non modo mutuum auxilium complectitur, verum etiam ad hoc extendatur oportet, immo hoc in primis intendat, ut coniuges inter se iuventur ad interiorem hominem plenius in dies conformandum perficiendumque; ita ut per mutuum vitae consortionem in virtutibus magis magisque in dies proficiant, et praecipue in vera erga Deum proximosque caritate crescant, in qua denique “universa Lex pendet et Prophetarum” [Mt 22:40]. . . .

Haec mutua coniugum interior conformatio, hoc assiduum sese invicem perficiendi studium, verissima quadam ratione, ut docet Catechismus Romanus,³ etiam primaria matrimonii causa et ratio dici potest, si tamen matrimo[549]nium non pressius ut institutum ad prolem rite procreandam educandamque, sed latius ut totius vitae communio, consuetudo, societas accipiatur. . . .

Firmata denique huius caritatis vinculo domestica societate, floreat in ea necesse est ille, qui ab Augustino vocatur ordo amoris. Qui quidem ordo et viri primatum in uxorem et liberos, et uxoris promptam nec invitam subiectionem obtemperacionemque complectitur, quam commendat Apostolus his verbis: “Mulieres viris suis subditae sint sicut Domino; quoniam vir caput est mulieris, sicut Christus caput est Ecclesiae” [Eph 5:22s].

may there be conceded to one of the parties anything that, being contrary to the rights and laws of God and entirely opposed to matrimonial faith, can never be conceded.

Wherefore, this fidelity demands in the first place the complete unity of matrimony that the Creator himself laid down in the beginning when he wished it to be not otherwise than between one man and one woman. And although afterward this primeval law was relaxed to some extent by God, the Supreme Legislator, there is no doubt that the law of the Gospel fully restored that original and perfect unity and abrogated all dispensations, as the words of Christ and the constant teaching and action of the Church show plainly. . . .

This (fidelity), however, which is most aptly called 3707 by St. Augustine the “fidelity of chastity”,¹ blooms more freely, more beautifully, and more nobly when it is rooted in that more excellent soil, the love of husband and wife that pervades all the duties of married life and holds pride of place in Christian marriage. . . .

The love, then, of which We are speaking is not that based on the passing lust of the moment, nor does it consist in pleasing words only, but in the deep attachment of the heart that is expressed in action, since “love is proved by deeds.”² This outward expression of love in the home demands not only mutual help but must go farther; it must have as its primary purpose that man and wife help each other day by day in forming and perfecting themselves in the interior life, so that through their partnership in life they may advance ever more and more in virtue and, above all, that they may grow in true love toward God and their neighbor, on which, indeed, “depend the whole law and the prophets” [Mt 22:40]. . . .

This mutual molding of husband and wife, this determined effort to perfect each other, can in a very real sense, as the Roman Catechism teaches,³ be said to be the chief reason and purpose of matrimony, provided matrimony be looked at, not in the restricted sense as instituted for the proper conception and education of the child, but more widely as the communion, intimacy, and partnership of the whole of life. . . .

Domestic society being confirmed, therefore, by this 3708 bond of love, there should flourish in it that order of love, as St. Augustine calls it. This order includes both the primacy of the husband with regard to the wife and children and the ready subiection of the wife and her willing obedience, which the apostle commends in these words: “Let women be subject to their husbands as to the Lord, because the husband is the head of the wife, and Christ is the head of the Church” [Eph 5:22f.].

*3707¹ Augustine, De bono coniugali 24, no. 32 (CSEL 41:227₁₅ / PL 40:394D).

² Cf. Gregory I the Great, In Evangelia homiliae, l. II, hom. 30 (on Jn 14:23–31), no. 1 (PL 76:1220).

³ Cf. Catechismus Romanus (1564), p. II, c. 8, q. 13.

3709 Haec autem obtemperatio non libertatem negat neque aufert, quae ad mulierem tam pro humanae personae praestantia, quam pro nobilissimis uxoris, matris, sociae muneribus pleno iure pertinet; neque obsecundare eam iubet quibuslibet viri optatis, ipsi forte rationi vel uxoris dignitati minus congruentibus; nec denique uxorem aequiparandam docet personis, quae in iure minores dicuntur, quibus ob maturioris iudicii defectum vel rerum humanarum imperitiam liberum suorum iurium exercitium concedi non solet; sed vetat exaggeratam illam licentiam, quae familiae bonum non curat, vetat in hoc familiae corpore cor separari a capite, cum maximo totius corporis detrimento et proximo ruinae periculo. Si enim vir est caput, mulier est cor, et sicut ille principatum tenet regiminis, haec amoris principatum sibi ut proprium vindicare potest et debet.

Haec dein uxoris viro suo obtemperatio, ad gradum et modum quod attinet, varia esse potest pro variis personarum, locorum, temporum condicionibus; immo si vir officio [550] suo defuerit, uxoris est vices eius in dirigenda familia supplere. At ipsam familiae structuram eiusque legem praecipuam, a Deo constitutam et firmatam, evertere aut tangere numquam et nusquam licet. [*Citantur hic Leonis XIII verba: “Vir est familiae princeps ... caritas esto perpetua moderatrix officii”: 3143.] ...

3710 [3. Bonum sacramenti.] Attamen tantorum beneficiorum summa completur et quasi cumulatur illo christiani coniugii bono, quod Augustini verbo nuncupavimus sacramentum, quo denotatur et vinculi indissolubilitas et contractus in efficax gratiae signum per Christum facta elatio atque consecratio.

Et primo quidem, indissolubilem foederis nuptialis firmitatem ipse Christus urget dicendo: “Quod Deus coniunxit, homo non separet” [Mt 19:6]; et: “Omnis, qui dimittit uxorem suam, et alteram ducit, moechatur: et qui dimissam a viro ducit, moechatur” [Lc 16:18].

[551] In hac autem indissolubilitate Sanctus Augustinus hoc quod vocat bonum sacramenti ponit apertis his verbis: “In sacramento autem [attenditur], ut coniugium non separetur, et dimissus aut dimissa, nec causa prolis, alteri coniungatur.”¹

This subjection, however, does not deny or take away the liberty that fully belongs to the woman both in view of her dignity as a human person and in view of her most noble office as wife and mother and companion; nor does it bid her obey her husband’s every request if not in harmony with right reason or with the dignity due to the wife; nor, in fine, does it imply that the wife should be put on a level with those persons who in law are called minors, to whom it is not customary to allow free exercise of their rights on account of their lack of mature judgment or of their ignorance of human affairs. But it forbids that exaggerated liberty which cares not for the good of the family; it forbids that in this body which is the family the heart be separated from the head to the great detriment of the whole body and the proximate danger of ruin. For if the man is the head, the woman is the heart, and as he occupies the chief place in ruling, so she may and ought to claim for herself the chief place in love.

Again, this subjection of wife to husband in its degree and manner may vary according to the different conditions of persons, place, and time. In fact, if the husband neglects his duty, it falls to the wife to take his place in directing the family. But the structure of the family and its fundamental law, established and confirmed by God, must always and everywhere be maintained intact. [*At this point the words of Leo XIII are cited: “The man is the ruler of the family ... let charity be the perpetual guide of this duty”: 3143.] ...

[3. The good of the sacrament.] But this accumulation of benefits is completed and, as it were, crowned by that good of Christian marriage which in the words of St. Augustine we have called the sacrament, by which is denoted both the indissolubility of the bond and the raising and hallowing of the contract by Christ himself, whereby he made it an efficacious sign of grace.

In the first place, Christ himself lays stress on the indissolubility and firmness of the marriage bond when he says: “What God has joined together let no man put asunder” [Mt 19:6], and: “Every one who divorces his wife and marries another commits adultery, and he who marries a woman divorced from her husband commits adultery” [Lk 16:18].

And St. Augustine clearly places what he calls the blessing of matrimony in this indissolubility when he says: “In the sacrament it is provided that the marriage bond should not be broken and that a husband or wife, if separated, should not be joined to another even for the sake of offspring.”¹

*3710 ¹ Augustine, De Genesi ad litteram IX, 7, no. 12 (CSEL 28:276₂₋₄ / PL 34:397D).

Atque haec inviolabilis firmitas, quamquam non eadem perfectissimaque mensura ad singula, ad omnia tamen vera coniugia pertinet: nam illud Domini: “Quod Deus coniunxit, homo non separet”, cum de protoparentum connubio, cuiusvis futuri coniugii prototypo, dictum sit, ad omnia prorsus vera matrimonia spectare necesse est. . . .

[552] ... Quod si exceptioni, etsi rarissimae, haec firmitas obnoxia videatur, ut in quibusdam coniugiis naturalibus solum inter infideles initis vel, si inter Christifideles, ratis illis quidem, sed nondum consummatis, ea exceptio non ex hominum voluntate pendet, neque potestatis cuiuslibet mere humanae, sed ex iure divino, cuius una custos atque interpretis est Ecclesia Christi.

Nulla tamen, neque ullam ob causam, facultas huiusmodi cadere umquam poterit in matrimonium christianum ratum atque consummatum. In eo enim, quemadmodum maritale foedus plene perficitur, ita maxima quoque ex Dei voluntate firmitas atque indissolubilitas, nulla hominum auctoritate relaxanda, elucet.

Huius autem divinae voluntatis intimam rationem si reverenter investigare velimus, ... facile eam inveniemus in mystica christiani connubii significatione, quae in consummato inter fideles matrimonio plene perfecteque habetur. Teste enim Apostolo christianorum connubium perfectissimam illam refert coniunctionem, quae Christum inter et Ecclesiam intercedit: “Sacramentum hoc magnum est, ego autem dico, in Christo et in Ecclesia” [Eph 5:32]: quae quidem coniunctio, quamdiu Christus vivet et Ecclesia per ipsum, nulla profecto separatione umquam dissolvi poterit. . . .

[554] ... Verum hoc sacramenti bono, praeter indissolubilem firmitatem, multo etiam celsiora emolumenta continentur, per ipsam sacramenti vocem aptissime designata: christianis enim hoc non inane et vacuum est nomen, cum Christus Dominus “sacramentorum institutor atque perfectior” [Concilium Tridentinum, sessio XXIV: *1799], suorum fidelium matrimonium ad verum et proprium Novae Legis Sacramentum provehendum, illud re vera effecerit peculiaris illius interioris gratiae signum et fontem, qua eius “naturalem illum amorem perficeret, et indissolubilem unitatem confirmaret, coniugesque sanctificaret” [ibid.].

Et quoniam Christus ipsum coniugalem inter fideles validum consensum signum gratiae constituit, ratio sacramenti cum christiano coniugio tam intime coniungitur, ut nullum inter baptizatos verum matrimonium esse possit, “quin sit eo ipso sacramentum”

And this inviolable stability, although not in the same perfect measure in every case, belongs to every true marriage, for the word of the Lord: “What God has joined together let no man put asunder”, must of necessity include all true marriages without exception, since it was spoken of the marriage of our first parents, the prototype of every future marriage. . . . 3711

... And if this stability seems to be open to exception, however rare the exception may be, as in the case of certain natural marriages between unbelievers or among Christians in the case of those marriages that though valid have not been consummated, that exception does not depend on the will of men or on that of any merely human power, but on divine law, of which the only guardian and interpreter is the Church of Christ. 3712

However, not even this power can ever affect for any cause whatsoever a Christian marriage that is valid and has been consummated, for as it is plain that here the marriage contract has its full completion, so, by the will of God, there is also the greatest firmness and indissolubility, which may not be destroyed by any human authority.

If we wish with all reverence to inquire into the intimate reason of this divine decree, ... we shall easily see it in the mystical signification of Christian marriage that is fully and perfectly verified in consummated marriage between Christians. For, as the apostle says, the marriage of Christians recalls that most perfect union which exists between Christ and the Church: “This is a great mystery, and I mean in reference to Christ and to the Church” [Eph 5:32], which union, as long as Christ shall live and the Church through him, can never be dissolved by any separation. . . .

... But in this good of the sacrament, besides the firmness and indissolubility, there are also much higher advantages, as the word “sacrament” itself very aptly indicates; for to Christians this is not a meaningless and empty name. Christ the Lord, the Institutor and “Perfectior” of the holy sacraments [Council of Trent, sess. 24: *1799], by raising the matrimony of his faithful to the dignity of a true sacrament of the New Law, made it a sign and source of that special internal grace by which “it perfects natural love, it confirms an indissoluble union, and it sanctifies both man and wife” [ibid.]. 3713

And since the valid matrimonial consent among the faithful was constituted by Christ as a sign of grace, the sacramental nature is so intimately bound up with Christian wedlock that there can be no true marriage between baptized persons “without it being by that very fact a sacrament.” . . .

3714 Hoc enim sacramentum, in iis, qui obicem, ut aiunt, non opponunt, non solum permanens vitae supernaturalis principium, gratiam scilicet sanctificantem, auget, sed etiam peculiaria addit dona, bonos animi motus, gratiae germina, [555] naturae vires augendo ac perficiendo, ut coniuges ... perficere valeant, quidquid ad statum coniugalem eiusque fines et officia pertinet; ius denique iis concedit ad actuale gratiae auxilium toties impetrandum, quotiescumque ad munera huius status adimplenda eo indigent.

Hence this sacrament not only increases sanctifying grace, the permanent principle of the supernatural life, in those who, as the expression is, place no obstacle in its way, but it also adds particular gifts, dispositions, seeds of grace, by elevating and perfecting the natural powers. By these gifts the parties are assisted ... in successfully putting into practice those things that pertain to the marriage state, its aims and duties, giving them, in fine, right to the actual assistance of grace, whensoever they need it for fulfilling the duties of their state.

The Abuse of Marriage

3715 [557] ... Praecipua [malorum] radix in eo est quod matrimonium non ab [558] auctore naturae institutum neque a Christo Domino in veri sacramenti dignitatem evectum, sed ab hominibus inventum vocitent. ...

... The principal source [of the evils] lies in this, that matrimony is repeatedly declared to be, not instituted by the Author of nature or raised by Christ the Lord to the dignity of a true sacrament, but invented by man. ...

[Hinc consecraria:] Leges, instituta ac mores, quibus connubium regatur, cum sola hominum voluntate sint parta, ei soli subesse, ideoque pro humano lubitu et humanarum rerum vicissitudinibus condi, immutari, abrogari et posse et debere, generativam autem vim, quippe quae in ipsa natura nitatur, et sacratiorem esse et latius patere quam matrimonium. ...

[From this, there are these consequences:] The laws, institutions, and customs by which wedlock is governed, since they take their origin solely from the will of man, are subject entirely to him and hence can and must be founded, changed, and abrogated according to human caprice and the shifting circumstances of human affairs; that the generative power that is grounded in nature itself is more sacred and has wider range than matrimony. ...

Hisce principiis innixi quidam eo devenerunt, ut nova effingerent coniunctionum genera ad praesentes hominum ac temporum rationes, ut opinantur, accommodata, quae totidem novas matrimonii species esse volunt: aliud ad tempus, aliud ad experimentum, aliud amicale quod plenam [559] matrimonii licentiam omniaque iura sibi vindicat, dempto tamen indissolubili vinculo et prole exclusa, nisi partes suam vitae communionem et consuetudinem in pleni iuris matrimonium deinde converterint. ...

Armed with these principles, some men go so far as to concoct new species of unions, suited, as they say, to the present temper of men and the times, which various new forms of matrimony they presume to label temporary, trial, and (a marriage of) friendship. These offer all the indulgence of matrimony and its rights without, however, the indissoluble bond and without offspring, unless later the parties alter their cohabitation into a matrimony in the full sense of the law. ...

3716 De prole sit sermo, quam multi molestum connubii onus vocare audent, quamque a coniugibus, non per honestam continentiam (etiam in matrimonio, utroque consentiente coniuge, permissam), sed vitiando naturae actum, studiose arcendam praecipiant. Quam quidem facinorosam licentiam alii sibi vindicant, quod prolis pertaesi solam sine onere voluptatem explere cupiunt, alii quod dicunt, se neque continentiam servare, neque ob suas vel matris vel rei familiaris difficultates prolem admittere posse.

First consideration is due to the offspring, which many have the boldness to call the disagreeable burden of matrimony and which they say is to be carefully avoided by married people, not through virtuous continence (which Christian law permits in matrimony when both parties consent), but by frustrating the marriage act. Some justify this criminal abuse on the ground that they are weary of children and wish to gratify their desires without their consequent burden. Others say that they cannot, on the one hand, remain continent, nor, on the other, can they have children because of the difficulties, whether on the part of the mother or on the part of family circumstances.

At nulla profecto ratio, ne gravissima quidem, efficere potest, ut, quod intrinsece est contra naturam, id cum natura congruens et honestum fiat. Cum autem actus coniugii suapte natura proli generandae sit destinatus, qui, in eo exercendo, naturali hac eum vi atque virtute de

But no reason, however grave, may be put forward by which anything intrinsically against nature may become conformable to nature and morally good. Since, therefore, the conjugal act is destined primarily by nature for the begetting of children, those who in exercising it industria destituunt, contra naturam agunt et turpe quid atque intrinsece inhonestum operantur.

Quare mirum non est, ipsas quoque Sacras Litteras testari, divinam Maiestatem summo prosequi odio hoc nefandum facinus illudque interdum morte punisse, ut memorat Sanctus Augustinus:¹ “Illicite namque et turpiter etiam cum legitima uxore concumbitur, ubi prolis conce[560]ptio devitatur. Quod faciebat Onan, filius Iudae, et occidit illum propter hoc Deus [cf. Gn 38:8–10]”.

Cum igitur quidam, a christiana doctrina iam inde ab initio tradita neque umquam intermissa manifesto recedentes, aliam nuper de hoc agendi modo doctrinam solemniter praedicandam censuerint, Ecclesia catholica, cui ipse Deus morum integritatem honestatemque docendam et defendendam commisit, in media hac morum ruina posita, ut nuptialis foederis castimoniam a turpi hac labe immunem servet, in signum legationis suae divinae, altam per os Nostrum extollit vocem atque denuo promulgat: quemlibet matrimonii usum, in quo exercendo, actus, de industria hominum, naturali sua vitae procreandae vi destituatur, Dei et naturae legem infringere, et eos, qui tale quid commiserint, gravis noxae labe commaculari.

Sacerdotes igitur, qui confessionibus audiendis dant operam, aliosque, qui curam animarum habent, pro suprema Nostra auctoritate et omnium animarum salutis cura, admonemus, ne circa gravissimam hanc Dei legem fideles sibi commissos errare sinant, et multo magis, ut ipsi se ab huiusmodi falsis opinionibus immunes custodiant, neve in iis ullo modo conniveant. . . .

[561] . . . Optime etiam novit sancta Ecclesia, non raro alterum ex coniugibus pati potius, quam patrare peccatum, cum ob gravem omnino causam perversionem recti ordinis permittit, quam ipse non vult, eumque ideo sine culpa esse, modo etiam tunc caritatis legem meminerit et alterum a peccando arcere et remove ne negligat. Neque contra naturae ordinem agere ii dicendi sunt coniuges, qui iure suo recta et naturali ratione utuntur, etsi ob naturales sive temporis sive quorundam defectuum causas nova inde vita oriri non possit.

Habentur enim tam in ipso matrimonio, quam in coniugalis iuris usu etiam secundarii fines, ut sunt mutuum adiutorium mutuusque fovendus amor et concupiscentiae sedatio, quos intendere coniuges minime vetantur, dummodo salva semper sit intrinseca illius actus natura ideoque eius ad primarium finem debita ordinatio. . . .

deliberately frustrate its natural power and purpose act against nature and commit a deed that is shameful and intrinsically vicious.

Small wonder, therefore, if Holy Scripture bears witness that the Divine Majesty regards with greatest detestation this horrible crime and at times has punished it with death. As St. Augustine notes: “Intercourse even with one’s legitimate wife is unlawful and wicked where the conception of the offspring is prevented. Onan, the son of Judah, did this and the Lord killed him for it” [cf. Gen 38:8–10].¹

Since, therefore, openly departing from the uninter- 3717
rupted Christian tradition, some recently have judged it possible solemnly to declare another doctrine regarding this question, the Catholic Church, to whom God has entrusted the defense of the integrity and purity of morals, standing erect in the midst of the moral ruin that surrounds her, in order that she may preserve the chastity of the nuptial union from being defiled by this foul stain, raises her voice in token of her divine ambassadorship and through Our mouth proclaims anew: Any use whatsoever of matrimony exercised in such a way that the act is deliberately frustrated in its natural power to generate life is an offense against the law of God and of nature, and those who indulge in such are branded with the guilt of a grave sin.

We admonish, therefore, priests who hear confessions and others who have the care of souls, in virtue of Our supreme authority and in Our solicitude for the salvation of souls, not to allow the faithful entrusted to them to err regarding this most grave law of God; much more, that they keep themselves immune from such false opinions, in no way conniving in them. . . .

. . . The holy Church knows well that not infrequently 3718
one of the parties is sinned against rather than sinning, when for a grave cause (that partner) reluctantly allows the perversion of the right order. In such a case, there is no sin, provided that, mindful of the law of charity, (the one partner) does not neglect to seek to dissuade and to deter the other from sin. Nor are those considered as acting against nature who in the married state use their right in the proper manner although on account of natural reasons either of time or of certain defects, new life cannot be brought forth.

For in matrimony as well as in the use of the matrimonial rights there are also secondary ends, such as mutual aid, the cultivating of mutual love, and the quieting of concupiscentia that husband and wife are not forbidden to consider so long as they are subordinated to the primary end and so long as the intrinsic nature of the act is preserved. . . .

*3716 ¹ Augustine, De adulterinis coniugiis ad Pollentium II, 12 (CSEL 41:396_{15–18} / PL 40 [1887]: 479B).

Cavendum omnino est, ne funestae externarum rerum condiciones multo funestiori errori occasionem praebeant. Nullae enim exurgere possunt difficultates, quae mandatorum Dei, actus, ex interiore natura sua malos, vetantium, obligationi derogare queant; in omnibus vero rerum adiunctis semper possunt coniuges, gratia Dei roborati, suo munere fideliter fungi et castitatem a turpi hac macula illi/562]batam in coniugio conservare [Provocatur ad Concilium Tridentinum, sessionem VI, c. 11 (*1536) et ad propositionem 1 Iansenii damnatam (*2001)]....

However, they should take care lest the calamitous state of their external affairs should be the occasion for a much more calamitous error. No difficulty can arise that justifies the putting aside of the law of God that forbids all acts intrinsically evil. There is no possible circumstance in which husband and wife cannot, strengthened by the grace of God, fulfill faithfully their duties and preserve in wedlock their chastity unspotted [reference is made to the Council of Trent, sess. 6, chap. 11 (*1536) and to the first condemned proposition of the Jansenists (*2001)]....

The Killing of a Fetus

3719 Aliud ... gravissimum commemorandum est facinus, quo vita prolis, in sinu materno reconditae, attentatur. Id autem permissum volunt alii et matris patrisve beneplacito relictum; alii tamen illicitum dicunt, nisi pergraves accedant causae, quas medicae, socialis, eugenicae indicationis nomine appellant.

Hi omnes quod ad poenales reipublicae leges attinet, quibus genitae necdum natae prolis peremptio prohibetur, exigunt, ut quam singuli, alii aliam, defendunt “indicationem”, eandem etiam leges publicae agnoscant et ab omni poena liberam declarent. Immo nec desunt qui postulent, ut ad has letiferas sectiones magistratus publici praebeant auxiliatrices manus....

But another very grave crime is to be noted ... which regards the taking of the life of the offspring hidden in the mother’s womb. Some wish it to be allowed and left to the will of the father or the mother; others say it is unlawful unless there are weighty reasons that they call by the name of medical, social, or eugenic indication.

Because this matter falls under the penal laws of the State by which the destruction of the offspring begotten but unborn is forbidden, these people demand that the indication, which in one form or another they defend, be recognized as such by the public law and in no way penalized. There are those, moreover, who ask that the public authorities provide aid for these death-dealing operations....

3720 Quod vero attinet ad indicationem medicam et therapeuticam—ut eorum verbis utamur—iam diximus, Venerabiles Fratres, quantopere Nos misereat matris, cui ex naturae officio gravia imminent sanitatis, immo ipsius vitae pericula: at quae possit umquam causa valere ad ullo [563] modo excusandam directam innocentis necem? De hac enim hoc loco agitur. Sive ea matri infertur sive proli, contra Dei praeceptum est vocemque naturae: “Non occides!” [Ex 20:13]. Res enim aequae sacrae utriusque vita, cuius opprimendae nulla esse umquam poterit ne publicae quidem auctoritati facultas.

As to the “medical and therapeutic indication” to which, using their own words, We have made reference, Venerable Brethren, however much We may pity the mother whose health and even life is gravely imperiled in the performance of the duty allotted to her by nature, nevertheless what could ever be a sufficient reason for excusing in any way the direct murder of the innocent? This is precisely what we are dealing with here. Whether inflicted upon the mother or upon the child, it is against the precept of God and the law of nature: “You shall not kill” [Ex 20:13]. The life of each is equally sacred, and no one has the power, not even the public authority, to destroy it.

Ineptissime autem haec contra innocentes repetitur e iure gladii, quod in solos reos valet; neque ullum viget hic cruentae defensionis ius contra iniustum aggressorem (nam quis innocentem parvulum iniustum aggressorem vocet?); neque ullum adest “extremae necessitatis ius” quod vocant, quodque usque ad innocentis directam occisionem pervenire possit.

It is of no use to appeal to the right of taking away life, for here it is a question of the innocent, whereas that right has regard only to the guilty; nor is there here question of defense by bloodshed against an unjust aggressor (for who would call an innocent child an unjust aggressor?); again, there is no question here of what is called the “law of extreme necessity” that could even extend to the direct killing of the innocent.

In utraque igitur et matris et prolis vita tuenda ac servanda probi expertique medici cum laude enituntur; contra, nobili medicorum nomine et laude indignissimos se ii probarent, quotquot alterutri, per speciem medicandi, vel falsa misericordia moti, ad mortem insidiarentur....

Upright and skillful doctors strive most praiseworthy to guard and preserve the lives of both mother and child; in contrast, those show themselves most unworthy of the noble medical profession who encompass the death of one or the other, through a pretense at practicing medicine or through motives of misguided pity....

Quae autem afferuntur pro sociali et eugenica indicatione, licitis honestisque modis et intra debitos limites, [564] earum quidem rerum ratio haberi potest et debet; at necessitatibus, quibus eae inniuntur, per occisionem innocentium providere velle absonum est praeceptoque divino contrarium, apostolicis etiam verbis promulgato: Non esse facienda mala, ut eveniant bona [cf. Rm 3:8].

What is asserted in favor of the social and eugenic “indication” may and must be accepted, provided lawful and upright methods are employed within the proper limits; but to wish to put forward reasons based upon them for the killing of the innocent is unthinkable and contrary to the divine precept promulgated in the words of the apostle: Evil is not to be done that good may come of it [cf. Rom 3:8]. 3721

The Conjugal Right and Sterilization

Sunt enim qui, de finibus eugenicis nimium solliciti, non solum salubria quaedam dent consilia ad futurae prolis valetudinem ac robor tutius procurandum—quod rectae rationi utique contrarium non est—sed cuilibet alii etiam altioris ordinis fini eugenicum anteponant, et coniugio auctoritate publica prohiberi velint eos omnes, ex quibus, secundum disciplinae suae normas et coniecturas, propter hereditariam transmissionem, mancā vitiosamque prolem generatum iri censent, etiamsi iidem sint ad matrimonium ineundum per se apti. Quin immo naturali illa facultate, ex lege, eos, vel invitos medicorum opera privari volunt; neque id ad cruentam sceleris commissi poenam publica auctoritate repetendam, vel ad futura *reorum*¹ crimina praecavenda, *sed*¹ contra omne ius et fas ea magistratibus civilibus arrogata facultate, quam numquam habuerunt nec legitime habere possunt.

For there are some who, oversolicitous for the cause of eugenics, not only give salutary counsel for more certainly procuring the strength and health of the future child—which, indeed, is not contrary to right reason—but put eugenics before aims of a higher order and by public authority wish to prevent from marrying all those who, even though naturally fit for marriage, according to the norms and conjectures of their investigations, would, in their opinion, through hereditary transmission, bring forth defective offspring. And more, they wish to legislate to deprive these of that natural faculty by medical action despite their unwillingness; and this they do not propose as an infliction of grave punishment under the authority of the State for a crime committed, not to prevent future crimes by guilty persons, but,¹ against every right and good, they wish the civil authority to arrogate to itself a power over a faculty that it never had and can never legitimately possess. 3722

Quicumque ita agunt, perperam dant oblivioni, sanctiorem esse familiam statu, hominesque in primis non terrae et tempori, sed caelo et aeternitati generari. Et fas profecto non est, homines, matrimonii ceteroqui capaces, quos, adhibita etiam omni cura et diligentia, nonnisi mancā genituros esse prolem conicitur, ob eam causam gravi culpa onerare, si coniugium contrahant, quamquam saepe matrimonium iis dissuadendum est.

Those who act in this way are at fault in losing sight of the fact that the family is more sacred than the State and that men are begotten, not for the earth and for time, but for heaven and eternity. Although often these individuals are to be dissuaded from entering into matrimony, certainly it is wrong to brand men with the stigma of crime because they contract marriage, on the ground that, despite the fact that they are in every respect capable of matrimony, they will give birth only to defective children, even though they use all care and diligence.

Publici vero magistratus in subditorum membra directam potestatem habent nullam; ipsam igitur corporis integritatem, ubi nulla intercesserit culpa nullaque adsit cruentae poenae causa, directo laedere et attingere nec eugenicis nec ullis aliis de causis possunt umquam. . . .

Public magistrates have no direct power over the bodies of their subjects; therefore, where no crime has taken place and there is no cause present for grave punishment, they can never directly harm or tamper with the integrity of the body, either for the reasons of eugenics or for any other reason. . . .

Ceterum, quod ipsi privati homines in sui corporis membra dominatum alium non habeant, quam qui ad eorum naturales fines pertineat, nec possint ea destruere aut mutilare aut alia via ad naturales functiones se ineptos reddere, nisi quando bono totius corporis aliter

Furthermore, Christian doctrine establishes, and the light of human reason makes it most clear, that private individuals have no other power over the members of their bodies than that which pertains to their natural ends; and they are not free to destroy or mutilate their 3723 provideri nequeat, id christiana doctrina statuit atque ex ipso humanae rationis lumine omnino constat.

*3722 ¹ Thus according to the emendation in AAS 22 (1930): 604.

members or in any other way render themselves unfit for their natural functions, except when no other provision can be made for the good of the whole body.

Divorce

3724 [572] ... Neopaganismi fautores, tristi rerum usu nihil edocti, in sacram coniugii indissolubilitatem legesque eam iuvantes acrius in dies invehī pergunt, ac licere divortia decernendum esse contendunt, ut alia scilicet, eaque humanior, lex obsoletis legibus sufficiatur. ...

... The advocates of the neopaganism of today have learned nothing from the sad state of affairs, but instead, day by day, more and more vehemently, they continue by legislation to attack the indissolubility of the marriage bond, proclaiming that the lawfulness of divorce must be recognized and that the antiquated laws should give place to a new and more humane legislation. ...

[573] ... Verum, contra has quoque insanias omnes stat ... una lex Dei certissima, a Christo amplissime confirmata, nullis hominum decretis vel scitis populorum, nulla legumlatorum voluntate debilitanda: "Quod Deus coniunxit, homo non separet" [Mt 19:6].

... Opposed to all these reckless opinions ... stands the unalterable law of God, fully confirmed by Christ, a law that can never be deprived of its force by the decrees of men, the ideas of a people, or the will of any legislator: "What God has joined together let no man put asunder" [Mt 19:6].

Quod quidem si iniuria homo separaverit, irritum id prorsus fuerit; iure propterea ... Christus ipse asseveravit: "Omnis qui dimittit uxorem suam et alteram ducit, moechatur; et qui dimissam a viro ducit, moechatur" [Lc 16:18]. Et haec Christi verba quodcumque respiciunt matrimonium, etiam naturale tantum et legitimum; omni enim vero matrimonio convenit illa indissolubilitas, qua illud partium beneplacito et omni saeculari potestati, ad vinculi solutionem quod pertinet, est omnino subtractum.

And if any man, acting contrary to this law, shall have put asunder, his action is null and void, and the consequence remains ... as Christ himself has explicitly confirmed: "Every one who divorces his wife and marries another commits adultery, and he who marries a woman divorced from her husband commits adultery" [Lc 16:18]. Moreover, these words refer to every kind of marriage, even that which is natural and legitimate only; for, as has already been observed, that indissolubility by which the loosening of the bond is once and for all removed from the whim of the parties and from every secular power is a property of every true marriage.

3725–3744: Encyclical Quadragesimo anno, May 15, 1931

This encyclical calls to mind the fortieth anniversary of the encyclical Rerum novarum of Leo XIII (*3265–3271). It responds to the changing social conditions with a development of the social doctrine of the Church.

Ed.: AAS 23 (1931): 190–216.

The Authority of the Church in Social and Economic Matters

3725 [Ante quam explanetur doctrina socialis Ecclesiae] illud praestituendum est, ... ius officiumque Nobis inesse de rebus istis socialibus et oeconomicis suprema auctoritate iudicandi.¹ Profecto Ecclesiae non haec fuit demandata provincia, homines ad fluxam solum et caducam felicitatem dirigendi, sed ad aeternam; immo "terrenis hisce negotiis sine ratione se immiscere nefas putat Ecclesia."² Ast renuntiare nullatenus potest muneri sibi a Deo concredito, ut auctoritatem interponat suam non iis quidem, quae artis sunt, ad quae neque mediis aptis est instructa nec officio praedita, sed in iis omnibus, quae ad regulam morum referuntur. ...

[Before explaining the social teaching of the Church,] that principle so clearly established must be laid down at the outset here ... that there resides in Us the right and duty to pronounce with supreme authority upon social and economic matters.¹ Certainly the Church was not given the commission to guide men to an only fleeting and perishable happiness but to that which is eternal. Indeed, "the Church holds that it is unlawful for her to mix without cause in these temporal concerns."² However, she can in no wise renounce the duty God entrusted to her to interpose her authority, not of course in matters of a technical nature for which she is neither suitably equipped nor endowed by office, but in all things that are connected with the moral law. ...

*3725¹ Cf. encyclical Rerum novarum, no. 13 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 647 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:107).

² Pius XI, encyclical Ubi arcano, December 23, 1922 (AAS 14 [1922]: 698).

Nam, etsi oeconomica res et moralis disciplina in suo quaeque ambitu suis utuntur principiis, error tamen est, oeconomicum ordinem et moralem ita dissitos ac inter se alienos dicere, ut ex hoc ille nulla ratione pendeat.

Even though economics and moral science employ each its own principles in its own sphere, it is, nevertheless, an error to say that the economic and moral orders are so distinct from and alien to each other that the former depends in no way on the latter.

The Ownership or the Right of Property

[191] (Indoles et individualis et socialis.)¹ Primo igitur pro comperto et explorato habeatur, neque Leonem [XIII] neque eos, qui Ecclesia duce et magistra docuere, theologos, negasse umquam vel in dubium vocasse duplicem dominii rationem, quam individualem vocant et socialem, prout singulos respicit vel ad bonum spectat commune; sed semper uno ore affirmasse, a natura seu a Creatore ipso ius dominii privati hominibus esse tributum, cum ut sibi familiaeque singuli providere possint, tum ut, huius instituti ope, bona, quae Creator universae hominum familiae destinavit, huic fini vere inserviant, quae [192] omnia obtineri nullo modo possunt nisi certo et determinato ordine servato.

(Social and individual character.)¹ First, then, let it be considered as certain and established that neither Leo nor those theologians who have taught under the guidance and authority of the Church have ever denied or questioned the twofold character of ownership, called usually individual or social according as it regards either separate persons or the common good. For they have always unanimously maintained that nature, rather the Creator himself, has given man the right of private ownership, not only that individuals may be able to provide for themselves and their families, but also that the goods that the Creator destined for the entire family of mankind may through this institution truly serve this purpose. All this can be achieved in no wise except through the maintenance of a certain and definite order. 3726

Itaque duplex in quem impingi potest scopulus naviter cavendus est. Nam sicut ex negata vel extenuata iuris proprietatis indole sociali et publica in “individualismum” quem dicunt ruitur aut ad eum acceditur, ita privata ac individuali eiusdem iuris indole repulsa vel attenuata in “collectivismum” properetur vel saltem eiusdem placita attingantur necesse est. . . .

Accordingly, twin rocks of shipwreck must be carefully avoided. For, as one is wrecked upon, or comes close to, what is known as “individualism” by denying or minimizing the social and public character of the right of property, so by rejecting or minimizing the private and individual character of this same right, one inevitably runs into “collectivism”, or at least closely approaches its tenets. . . .

(Obligaciones dominio inhaerentes.) . . . Fundamenti instar praemittendum est, quod Leo XIII constituit, ius nempe proprietatis ab eius usu distingui [cf. *3267]. Etenim possessionum divisionem sancte servare neque proprii dominii limites excedendo alienum ius invadere iustitia illa iubet, quae commutativa audit; dominos autem re sua non uti nisi honeste, non huius est iustitiae, sed aliarum virtutum, quarum officia “lege agendo petere ius non est” [ibid.].

(Obligations inherent to ownership.) . . . There must be first laid down as foundation a principle established by Leo XIII: The right of property is distinct from its use [cf. *3267]. That justice called commutative commands sacred respect for the division of possessions and forbids invasion of others’ rights through the exceeding of the limits of one’s own property; but the duty of owners to use their property only in a right way does not come under this type of justice; rather it comes under other virtues, obligations of which “cannot be enforced by legal action” [ibid.]. 3727

Quare immerito pronuntiant quidam, dominium honestumque eius usum iisdem contineri limitibus; multoque magis a veritate abhorret, ipso abusu vel non-usu ius proprietatis perimi aut amitti. . . .

Therefore, they are in error who assert that ownership and its right use are limited by the same boundaries; and it is much farther still from the truth to hold that a right to property is destroyed or lost by reason of abuse or nonuse. . . .

[193] (Quid res publica possit.) Re vera hominibus hac in re non solum sui proprii commodi, sed etiam communis boni esse rationem habendam, ex ipsa dominii quam diximus indole individuali simul et

(The powers of the State with respect to ownership.) It follows from what We have termed the individual and at the same time social character of ownership that men must consider in this matter not only their own 3728

*3726 ¹ The titles in parentheses are from the marginal titles of the AAS edition.

sociali deducitur. Officia vero haec singillatim definire, ubi id necessitas postulerit neque ipsa lex naturalis praestiterit, eorum est, qui rei publicae praesunt. Quapropter quid, considerata boni communis vera necessitate, eis qui possident liceat, quid illicitum sit in suorum bonorum usu, publica auctoritas, lege naturali et divina semper praevalente, sciscere potest accuratius. Immo vero Leo XIII sapienter docuerat “industriæ hominum institutisque populorum esse a Deo permissam privatarum possessionum descriptionem.”¹...

Reipublicae tamen suo munere pro arbitrio fungi non licere in aperto est. Semper enim ipsum naturale ius et possidendi privatim et haereditate transmittendi bona intactum inviolatumque maneat oportet, quippe quod respublica auferre nequeat; “est enim homo quam res publica senior” [*3265], atque etiam “convictus domesticus et cogitatione et re prior quam civilis coniunctio.”²...

3729 [194] (Obligaciones circa redditus liberos.) Neque omnimodo hominis arbitrio redditus eius liberi relinquuntur; ii scilicet, quibus ad vitam convenienter atque decore sustentandam non eget: quin immo gravissimo divites teneri praecepto eleemosynae, beneficentiae, magnificentiae exercendae, sacra Scriptura sanctique Ecclesiae Patres apertissimis verbis assidue denuntiant.

Largiores autem impendere proventus, ut quaestuosae operae commoditas abunde fiat, modo ea opera ad bona vere utilia comparanda insumatur, illustre ac temporum necessitatibus apprime aptum opus virtutis magnificentiae esse censendum, ex Angelici Doctoris principiis argumentando colligimus.¹

3730 (Tituli domini acquirendi.) Acquiri autem dominium primitus et occupatione rei nullius et industria seu specificatione quam vocant, cum omnium temporum traditio, tum Leonis decessoris Nostri doctrina luculenter testantur. Neque enim ulla fit cuiquam iniuria, quidquid in contrarium nonnulli effutiant, cum res in medio posita, seu quae nullius sit, occupatur; industria vero, quae ab homine proprio nomine exercentur, cuiusque ope nova species aut augmentum rei accesserit, ea una est, quae hos fructus laboranti addicit.

advantage but also the common good. To define these duties in detail when necessity requires and the natural law has not done so is the function of those in charge of the State. Therefore, public authority, under the guiding light always of the natural and divine law, can determine more accurately upon consideration of the true requirements of the common good what is permitted and what is not permitted to owners in the use of their property. Moreover, Leo XIII wisely taught “that God has left the limits of private possessions to be fixed by the industry of men and institutions of peoples.”¹ ...

That the State is not permitted to discharge its duty arbitrarily is, however, clear. The natural right itself both of owning goods privately and of passing them on by inheritance ought always to remain intact and inviolate, since this, indeed, is a right that the State cannot take away: “For man is older than the State” [*3265], and also “the domestic household is antecedent, as well in idea as in fact, to the gathering of men into a community.”² ...

(Obligations with respect to free revenues.) Furthermore, a person’s superfluous income, that is, income he does not need to sustain life fittingly and with dignity, is not left wholly to his own free determination. Rather the Sacred Scriptures and the Fathers of the Church constantly declare in the most explicit language that the rich are bound by a very grave precept to practice almsgiving, beneficence, and munificence.

Expending larger incomes so that opportunity for gainful work may be abundant, provided, however, that this work is applied to producing really useful goods, ought to be considered, as we deduce from the principles of the Angelic Doctor, an outstanding exemplification of the virtue of munificence and one particularly suited to the needs of the times.¹

(Acquired claims of ownership.) That ownership is originally acquired both by occupancy of a thing not owned by any one and by labor, or, as is said, by specification, the tradition of all ages as well as the teaching of Our predecessor Leo clearly testifies. For, whatever some idly say to the contrary, no injury is done to any person when a thing is occupied that is available to all but belongs to no one; however, only that labor which a man performs in his own name and by virtue of which a new form or increase has been given to a thing grants him title to these fruits.

Capital and Labor

3731 Longe alia est ratio operae, quae aliis locata in re aliena exercetur. Cui quidem id maxime congruit, quod

Far different is the nature of work that is hired out to others and expended on the property of others. To

¹ *3728 Encyclical Rerum novarum, no. 7 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 644 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:102).

² Ibid., nos. 10, 13 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 646 / Acta [Rome] 11:105).

¹ *3729 Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae II-II, q. 134, particularly a. 3 (Editio Leonina 10:89–94).

“verissimum” esse Leo XIII inquit, “non aliunde nisi ex opificum labore gigni divitias civitatum.”¹...

[195] Hinc fit, ut nisi quis in re sua laborem exercent, cum opera alterius tum res alterius consociari debeant: neutra enim sine altera quidquam efficit....

[196] (Principium directivum iustae attributionis.) ... Utrique [classes sociales] praemoneri debuerunt decessoris Nostri sapientissimis verbis: “Utrumque inter privatos distributa, inservire omnium utilitati terra non cessat.”¹...

Quamobrem divitiae, quae per incrementa oeconomico-socialia iugiter amplificantur, singulis personis et hominum classibus ita attribuuntur oportet, ut salva sit illa, quam Leo XIII laudat, communis omnium utilitas seu, aliis verbis, ut immune servetur societatis universae commune bonum. Hac iustitiae socialis lege, altera classis alteram ab emolumentorum participatione excludere vetatur.

Non minus igitur illam violat locupletium classis, cum veluti curarum expertus in suis fortunis aequum rerum ordinem illum putat, quo sibi [197] totum, operario nihil obveniat, quam proletaria classis, cum propter laesam iustitiam vehementer incensa et in unum suum ius, cuius est conscia, male vindicandum nimis prona, omnia utpote suis manibus effecta sibi flagitat, ideoque dominium ac reditus seu proventus, qui labore non sint quaesiti, cuiuscumque generis ii sunt, aut cuiuscumque muneris in humano convictu vicem praestant, non aliam ob causam, nisi quia talia sunt, impugnat et abolere contendit.

Nec praetereundum est hac in re inepte aequae ac immerito a quibusdam Apostolum appellari dicentem: “Si quis non vult operari, nec manducet” [2 Th 3:10]; sententiam enim Apostolus fert in eos, qui ab opere abstinent, etsi laborare possunt et debent, monetque, tempore ac viribus sive corporis sive animi sedulo utendum neque alios gravandos, cum ipsi nobis providere possimus. Laborem autem unicum esse titulum recipiendi victum aut proventus haudquaquam Apostolus docet [cf. 2 Th 3:8–10].

A Just Recompense or Salary for Work

[199] (Salariatus non vi sua iniustus.) Ac primum quidem, qui operae conducendae locandaeque contractum vi sua iniustum ac proinde in eius locum societatis this, indeed, especially applies what Leo XIII says is “incontestible”, namely, that “the wealth of nations originates from no other source than from the labor of workers.”¹...

Hence it follows that unless a man is expending labor on his own property, the labor of one person and the property of another must be associated, for neither can produce anything without the other....

(Guiding principle of just distribution.) Both parties [the social classes] ought to have been forewarned by the wise words of Our predecessor: “However the earth may be apportioned among private owners, it does not cease to serve the common interests of all.”¹...

Therefore, the riches that economic-social developments constantly increase ought to be so distributed among individual persons and classes that the common advantage of all, which Leo XIII praised, will be safeguarded; in other words, that the common good of all society will be kept inviolate. By this law of social justice, one class is forbidden to exclude the other from sharing in the benefits.

Hence the class of the wealthy violates this law no less, when, as if free from care on account of its wealth, it thinks it the right order of things for it to get everything and the worker nothing, than does the non-owning working class when, angered deeply at outraged justice and too ready to assert wrongly the one right it is conscious of, it demands for itself everything as if produced by its own hands and attacks and seeks to abolish, therefore, all property and returns or incomes, of whatever kind they are or whatever the function they perform in human society, that have not been obtained by labor and for no other reason save that they are of such a nature.

And in this connection we must not pass over the unwarranted and unmerited appeal made by some to the apostle when he said: “If any man will not work neither let him eat” [2 Thess 3:10]. For the apostle is passing judgment on those who are unwilling to work, although they can and ought to, and he admonishes us that we ought diligently to use our time and energies of body and mind and not be a burden to others when we can provide for ourselves. But the apostle in no wise teaches that labor is the sole title to a living or an income [cf. 2 Thess 3:8–10].

(Working for wages is not unjust by nature.) First of all, those who declare that a contract of hiring and being hired is unjust of its own nature and, hence, a partnership

*3731¹ Encyclical Rerum novarum, no. 27 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 657 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:123).

*3732¹ Ibid., no. 7 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 644 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:102).

contractum sufficiens esse pronuntiant, absone profecto dicunt et prave calumniantur. Decessorem Nostrum, cuius Litterae Encyclicae “salarium” non solum recipiunt, sed in eo ad normas iustitiae regendo diutius versantur.¹

Hodiernis tamen humanae consortionis condicionibus consultius fore reputamus, si, quoad eius fieri possit, contractus operae per societatis contractum aliquantum temperetur.... Ita operarii officialesque consortes fiunt domini vel curationis, aut de lucris perceptis aliqua ratione participant.

3734 Mercedis vero iustam portionem non ex uno, sed ex pluribus nominibus esse aestimandam iam sapienter Leo XIII edixerat illis verbis: “Ut mercedis statuatur ex aequitate modus, causae sunt considerandae plures.”¹...

(Operae indoles et individualis et socialis.) ... Sicut domini, ita operae, eius praecipue quae alteri locatur, praeter personalem seu individualem, sociale[m] [200] quoque rationem esse considerandam liquidoprehenditur: nisi enim corpus vere sociale et organicum constet, nisi socialis et iuridicus ordo operae exercitum tueatur, nisi variae artes, quarum aliae ab aliis dependent, inter se conspirent ac mutuo compleant, nisi, quod maius est, consocientur ac quasi in unum convenient intellectus, res, opera, nequit fructus suos gignere efficientia hominum. Haec ergo nec iuste aestimari neque ad aequalitatem rependi poterit, eius natura sociali et individuali posthabita.

(Tria capita respicienda.) Ex hac autem duplici nota, quae operae humanae insita natura est, gravissima emanant consectaria, quibus salarium regi et determinari debet.

3735 (a. Operarii eiusque familiae sustentatio.) Ac primum quidem merces operario suppeditanda est, quae ad illius eiusque familiae sustentationem par sit.¹ Aequum sane est, reliquam quoque familiam pro viribus suis ad communem omnium sustentationem conferre, ut videre est in agrorum praesertim, sed etiam in multis artificum et minorum mercatorum familiis; ast nefas est, infantili aetate feminaeque debilitate abuti.

Domi potissimum vel in iis, quae domui adiacent, matresfamilias operam navent suam in domesticas curas incumbendo. Pessimus vero est abusus et omni conatu auferendus, quod matresfamilias ob patris salarii tenuitatem extra domesticos parietes quaestuosam artem contract must take its place are certainly in error and gravely misrepresent Our predecessor, whose encyclical not only accepts working for wages or “salaries” but deals at some length with its regulation in accordance with the rules of justice.¹

We consider it more advisable, however, in the present condition of human society that, so far as is possible, the work contract be somewhat modified by a partnership contract.... Workers and other employees thus become sharers in ownership or management or participate in some fashion in the profits received.

The just amount of pay, however, must be calculated, not on a single basis, but on several, as Leo XIII already wisely declared in these words: “To establish a rule of pay in accord with justice, many factors must be taken into account.”¹...

(Individual and social character of labor.) ... There is a social aspect also to be considered in addition to the personal or individual aspect. For man’s productive effort cannot yield its fruits unless a truly social and organic body exists, unless a social and juridical order watches over the exercise of work, unless the various occupations, being interdependent, cooperate with and mutually complete one another, and, what is still more important, unless mind, material things, and work combine and form, as it were, a single whole. Therefore, where the social and individual nature of work is neglected, it will be impossible to evaluate work justly and pay it according to justice.

(Three points to maintain.) Conclusions of the greatest importance follow from this twofold character that nature has impressed on human work, and it is in accordance with these that wages ought to be regulated and established.

(a. Sustenance of the worker and his family.) In the first place, the worker must be paid a wage sufficient to support him and his family.¹ That the rest of the family should also contribute to the common support, according to the capacity of each, is certainly right, as can be observed especially in the families of farmers, but also in the families of many craftsmen and small shopkeepers. But to abuse the years of childhood and the limited strength of women is grossly wrong.

Mothers, concentrating on household duties, should work primarily in the home or in its immediate vicinity. It is an intolerable abuse, and to be abolished at all cost, for mothers on account of the father’s low wage to be forced to engage in gainful occupations outside the home

*3733¹ On salary, cf. encyclical Rerum novarum, no. 34 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 661 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:129).

*3734¹ Ibid., no. 17 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 649 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:111).

*3735¹ Cf. Pius XI, encyclical Casti connubii, December 31, 1930 (AAS 22 [1930]: 587).

exercere coguntur, curis officiisque peculiaribus ac praesertim infantium institutione neglectis. . . .

[201] (b. Officinae condicio.) Officinae etiam eiusque susceptoris ratio habenda est in mercedis magnitudine statuenda; iniuste enim immodica salaria exquirentur, quae absque sui exitio atque ex eo consecutura operariorum calamitate, officina tolerare non potest. Quamquam si ob segnitiem vel ignaviam aut technici et oeconomici progressus incuriam minus lucrum facit, non haec iusta reputanda est causa mercedis operariis minuendae.

Quod si ipsi officinae non tanta vis pecuniae redit, quanta aequae mercedi operariis solvendae sit satis, quia aut oneribus iniustis opprimitur aut opus artificio partum minoris quam iustum est cogitur vendere, qui eam sic vexant, gravis piaculi rei sunt; iusta enim mercede hi privant operarios, qui necessitate adstricti, aequa minorem accipere compelluntur. . . .

(c. Communis boni necessitas.) Denique publico bono oeconomico mercedis magnitudo attemperanda est. Quantopere ad hoc commune bonum conferat, operarios officialesque, mercedis aliqua parte, quae necessariis sumptibus supersit, seposita, ad modicum censum paulatim pervenire, superius iam exposuimus; sed aliud praetereundum non est vix minoris momenti, nostrisque temporibus apprime necessarium, ut iis nempe, qui laborare et valent et volunt, laborandi opportunitas praebatur. . . .

[202] Alienum est igitur a iustitia sociali, ut proprii emolumenti gratia et posthabita boni communis ratione opificum salaria nimis deprimantur aut extollantur: eademque postulat, ut consiliorum et voluntatum consensione, quantum fieri potest, salaria ita regantur, ut quam plurimi operam locare convenientesque fructus ad vitae sustentationem percipere possint.

The Right Social Order

[203] Etsi verum est, . . . ob mutatas rerum condiciones multa nunc non nisi a magnis consociationibus posse praestari, quae superiore aetate a parvis etiam praebantur, fixum tamen immotumque manet in philosophia morali gravissimum illud principium: Sicut quae a singularibus hominibus proprio Marte et propria industria possunt perfici, nefas est eisdem eripere et communitati demandare, ita quae a minoribus et inferioribus communitatibus effici praestarique possunt, ea ad maiorem et altiorem societatem advocare iniuria est simulque grave damnum ac recti ordinis perturbatio; cum socialis quaevis opera vi naturae sua subsidium afferre to the neglect of their proper cares and duties, especially the training of children. . . .

(b. The condition of the business.) In determining the amount of the wage, the condition of a business and of the one carrying it on must also be taken into account; for it would be unjust to demand excessive wages that a business cannot stand without its ruin and consequent calamity to the workers. If, however, a business makes too little money because of lack of energy or lack of initiative or because of indifference to technical and economic progress, that must not be regarded a just reason for reducing the compensation of the workers.

But if the business in question is not making enough money to pay the workers an equitable wage because it is being crushed by unjust burdens or forced to sell its product at less than a just price, those who are thus the cause of the injury are guilty of grave wrong, for they deprive workers of their just wage and force them under the pinch of necessity to accept a wage less than fair. . . .

(c. The necessity of the common good.) Lastly, the amount of the pay must be adjusted to the public economic good. We have shown above how much it helps the common good for workers and other employees, by setting aside some part of their income that remains after necessary expenditures, to attain gradually to the possession of a moderate amount of wealth. But another point, scarcely less important and especially vital in our times, must not be overlooked: namely, that the opportunity to work be provided to those who are able and willing to work. . . .

Hence it is contrary to social justice when, for the sake of personal gain and without regard for the common good, wages and salaries are excessively lowered or raised; and this same social justice demands that wages and salaries be so managed, through agreement of plans and wills, insofar as can be done, as to offer to the greatest possible number the opportunity of getting work and obtaining suitable means of livelihood.

It is true . . . that on account of changed conditions many things that were done by small associations in former times cannot be done now save by large associations. Still, that most weighty principle, which cannot be set aside or changed, remains fixed and unshaken in social philosophy: Just as it is gravely wrong to take from individuals what they can accomplish by their own initiative and industry and give it to the community, so also it is an injustice and at the same time a grave evil and disturbance of right order to assign to a greater and higher association what lesser and subordinate organizations can do. For every social activity ought of its very nature membris corporis socialis debeat, numquam vero eadem destruere et absorbere....

3736

3737

3738

Quare sibi animo persuasum habeant, qui rerum potiuntur: quo perfectius, servato hoc “subsidiarii” officii principio, hierarchicus inter diversas consociationes ordo vigerit, eo praestantior fore socialem et auctoritatem et efficientiam eoque felicior laetiorque rei publicae statum.

3739 [204] (“Ordinum” mutua conspiratio, [“classium” oppositarum disceptatione superata].) ... In reficiendos igitur “ordines” ars politica socialis incumbat necesse est... Perfecta sanatio tum tantum efflorescet, cum oppositione illa e medio sublata socialis corporis membra bene instructa constituentur: “ordines” nimirum, quibus inserantur homines non pro munere, quod quis in mercatu laboris habeat, sed pro diversis partibus socialibus, quas singuli exercent. Natura enim duce fit, ut, ... qui in eadem artem vel professionem incumbunt,—sive oeconomica est sive alterius generis,—collegia seu corpora quaedam efficiant, adeo ut haec consortia iure proprio utentia a multis, sin minus essentialia societati civili, at saltem naturalia dici consueverint....

3740 [205] [Libertas coalitionis.] Iam vero, quemadmodum municipii incolae ad fines maxime varios consociationes condere solent, quibus nomen dandi aut secus unicuique est ampla potestas, ita qui in eadem arte versantur, consociationes pariter liberas alii cum aliis inibunt ad fines aliqua ratione cum ipsa arte exercenda connexos....

Satis habemus, id unum inculcare: liberam esse homini facultatem, non solum has consociationes condendi, quae iuris et ordinis sunt privati, sed etiam eam in iis “libere optandi disciplinam, easque leges, quae maxime conducere ad id, quod propositum est, iudicentur”.¹ Eadem affirmanda est libertas consociationes instituendi, quae singularum [206] artium limites excedant.

3741 (Directivum oeconomiae principium instaurandum.) Aliud praeterea est curandum, valde cum priore cohaerens. Quemadmodum unitas societatis humanae inniti non potest oppositione “classium”, ita rei oeconomicae rectus ordo non potest permitti libero virium certamini.

Liberum certamen, quamquam dum certis finibus contineatur, aequum sit et sane utile, rem oeconomicam dirigere plane nequit; id quod eventus satis superque comprobavit, postquam pravi individualistici spiritus placita executioni sunt mandata....

to furnish help to the members of the body social and never destroy and absorb them....

Therefore, those in power should be sure that the more perfectly a graduated order is kept among the various associations, in observance of the principle of “subsidiary function”, the stronger social authority and effectiveness will be, the happier and more prosperous the condition of the State.

(Cooperation of the various “professions” [with the overcoming of the competition of opposing “classes”].) ... The social policy of the State, therefore, must devote itself to the reestablishment of the industries and professions.... But a complete cure will not come until this opposition has been abolished and well-ordered members of the social body—industries and professions—are constituted in which men may have their place, not according to the position each has in the labor market, but according to the respective social functions that each performs. For under nature’s guidance it comes to pass that just as those who are joined together by ... the same industry or profession—whether in the economic or other field—form guilds or associations, so that many are wont to consider these self-governing organizations, if not essential, at least natural to civil society....

[Freedom of association.] Moreover, just as inhabitants of a town are wont to found associations with the widest diversity of purposes, which each is quite free to join or not, so those engaged in the same industry or profession will combine with one another into associations equally free for purposes connected in some manner with the pursuit of the calling itself....

We consider it enough to emphasize this one point: People are quite free not only to found such associations, which are a matter of private order and private right, but also in respect to them “freely to adopt the organization and the rules that they judge most appropriate to achieve their purpose”.¹ The same freedom must be asserted for founding associations that go beyond the boundaries of individual callings.

(Guiding principle of the economy.) Attention must be given also to another matter that is closely connected with the foregoing. Just as the unity of human society cannot be founded on an opposition of classes, so also the right ordering of economic life cannot be left to a free competition of forces.

While free competition is justified and certainly useful as long as it is kept within certain limits, it clearly cannot direct economic life—a truth that the outcome of the application in practice of the tenets of this evil individualistic spirit has more than sufficiently demonstrated....

¹ *3740 Cf. encyclical Rerum novarum, no. 42 (ASS 23 [1890/1891]: 667 / Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 11:138f.).

[Principii directivi] vices oeconomicus potentatus ... multo minus gerere potest, cum hic praeceps quaedam vis et potentia vehemens sit, quae ... regi non potest a se ipso. Altiora igitur et nobiliora exquirenda sunt, quibus hic potentatus severe integreque gubernetur: socialis nimirum iustitia et caritas socialis.

The role [of guiding principle] is one that the economic power ... can still less perform, since it is a headstrong power and a violent energy that ... needs to be strongly curbed and wisely ruled. But it cannot curb and rule itself. Loftier and nobler principles—social justice and social charity—must, therefore, be sought whereby this dictatorship may be governed firmly and fully.

Socialism

[215] Haec edicimus: sive ut doctrina, sive ut factum historicum, sive ut “actio” consideretur socialismus, si vere manet socialismus, etiam postquam veritati et iustitiae in his, quae diximus, concessit, componi cum Ecclesiae catholicae dogmatibus non potest: siquidem ipsam societatem fingit a christiana veritate quam maxime alienam.

We make this pronouncement: Whether considered as a doctrine or a historical fact or a “movement”, socialism, if it remains truly socialism, even after it has yielded to truth and justice on the points we have mentioned, cannot be reconciled with the teachings of the Catholic Church because its concept of society itself is utterly foreign to Christian truth. 3742

(Societatem atque hominis indolem socialem fingit alienissima a christiana veritate.) Nam secundum christianam doctrinam homo, sociali natura praeditus, in his terris collocatur, ut in societate et sub auctoritate a Deo ordinata [cf. Rm 13:1] vitam ducens, omnes suas facultates in laudem et gloriam Creatoris sui plene excolat evolvatque, atque artis aliusve vocationis suae munere fideliter fungendo temporalem simul et aeternam sibi comparet felicitatem. Socialismus autem, sublimis huius, cum hominis tum societatis, finis penitus ignarus et incuriosus, solius commodi causa humanam consortionem autumat esse institutam....

(The concept of society and the social character of man completely opposed to Christian truth.) For, according to Christian teaching, man, endowed with a social nature, is placed on this earth so that by leading a life in society and under an authority ordained by God [cf. Rom 13:1], he may fully cultivate and develop all his faculties unto the praise and glory of his Creator; and that by faithfully fulfilling the duties of his craft or other calling he may obtain for himself temporal and at the same time eternal happiness. Socialism, on the other hand, wholly ignoring and indifferent to this sublime end of both man and society, affirms that human association has been instituted for the sake of material advantage alone.... 3743

[216] (Catholicus et socialista pugnancia dicunt.) Quodsi socialismus, ut omnes errores, aliquid in se veritatis admisit (quod quidem Summi Pontifices numquam sunt inficiati), nititur tamen doctrina de humana societate, ipsi propria, a vero Christianismo absona. Socialismus religiosus, socialismus christianus pugnancia dicunt: nemo potest simul catholicus probus esse et veri nominis socialista....

(Catholic and socialist are contradictory.) If socialism, like all errors, contains some truth (which, moreover, the supreme pontiffs have never denied), it is based nevertheless on a theory of human society peculiar to itself and irreconcilable with true Christianity. Religious socialism and Christian socialism are contradictory terms; no one can be at the same time a good Catholic and a true socialist.... 3744

3748: Response of the Sacred Penitentiary, July 20, 1932

Ed.: F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 101f.

The Exclusive Use of Non-fertile Times

Qu.: An licita in se sit praxis coniugum, qui, cum ob iustas et graves causas prolem honesto modo evitare malint, ex mutuo consensu et motivo honesto a matrimonio utendo abstinent praeterquam diebus, quibus secundum quorundam recentiorum theoremata [scl. Ogino-Knaus] ob rationes naturales conceptio haberi non potest?

Question: Is the practice in itself permitted whereby spouses, preferring to avoid procreation for just and serious reasons in a moral manner, by mutual consent and a worthy motive, abstain from marital relations except on those days when, following the arguments of certain recent experts [namely, Ogino-Knaus], conception cannot happen because of natural reasons? 3748

Resp.: Provisum est per Resp. S. Paenitentiariae, 16. Iun. 1880 [*3148].

Response: It is already provided for by the Response of the Sacred Penitentiary of June 16, 1880 [*3148].

3750–3751: Response of the Biblical Commission, July 1, 1933

Ed.: AAS 25 (1933): 344 / EnchB nos. 513f.

The Interpretation of Psalm 16:10f., Matthew 16:26, and Luke 9:25

3750 Qu. 1: Utrum viro catholico fas sit, maxime data interpretatione authentica Principum Apostolorum [Act 2:24–33; 13:35–37], verba Psalmi 15:10–11: “Non derelinques animam meam in inferno, nec dabis sanctum tuum videre corruptionem. Notas mihi fecisti vias vitae”, sic interpretari, quasi auctor sacer non sit locutus de resurrectione Domini Nostri Iesu Christi?

Resp.: Negative.

3751 Qu. 2: Utrum asserere liceat verba Iesu Christi, quae leguntur apud S. Matthaeum 16:26: “Quid prodest homini, si mundum universum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum patiat? Aut quam dabit homo commutationem pro anima sua?”, et pariter ea, quae habentur apud S. Lucam 9:25: “Quid enim proficit homo, si lucretur universum mundum, se autem ipsum perdat et detrimentum sui faciat?”, sensu literali non respicere aeternam salutem animae, sed solum vitam temporalem hominis, non obstantibus ipsorum verborum tenore eorumque contextu, necnon unanimi interpretatione catholica?

Resp.: Negative.

Question 1: Especially considering the authentic interpretation of the prince of the apostles [Acts 2:24–33; 13:35–37], may a Catholic interpret the words of Psalm 16:10–11, “You will not leave my soul in the netherworld or let your holy one see corruption. You have made known to me the path of life”, as if the sacred author had not spoken of the Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Response: No.

Question 2: May one assert that the words of Jesus Christ that one reads in St. Matthew 16:26, “What will it profit a man, if he gains the whole world and forfeits his soul? Or what shall a man give in return for his soul?” and St. Luke 9:25, “What does it profit a man if he gains the whole world and loses or forfeits himself?” do not refer, in the literal sense, to the eternal salvation of the soul, but only to the temporal life of man, notwithstanding the meaning of the words themselves and their context, as also the unanimous interpretation of Catholics.

Response: No.

3755–3758: Encyclical Ad catholici sacerdotii, December 20, 1935

Ed.: AAS 28 (1936): 10–19.

The Effects of Priestly Ordination

3755 Minister Christi sacerdos: divini igitur Redemptoris quasi instrumentum est, ut mirabilem eius operam, quae superna efficacitate universum hominum convictum redintegrans, eum ad excellentiorem cultum traduxit, per tempora persequi valeat. Quin immo ipse, quod iure meritoque dicere sollemne habemus, “alter est Christus”, cum eius gerat personam secundum illud: “Sicut misit me Pater, et ego mitto vos” [Jo 20:21]...

3756 [15] ... Istiusmodi potestates, peculiari sacramento sacerdoti collatae, cum ex indelebili forma oriantur eius animo impressa, qua, illius instar, cuius sacerdotium participat, “sacerdos in aeternum” [Ps 109:4] factus est, non caducae sunt ac fluxae, sed stabiles atque perpetuae. Etiam si, ob humanam infirmitatem, in errores sit et in deonestamenta prolapsus, numquam tamen sacerdotalem hanc formam suo ex animo delere poterit.

Ac praeterea ... nova etiam peculiarique gratia, peculiarique ope adaugetur, per quas quidem—si modo divinitus efficienti caelestium donorum virtuti, adiutrici

The priest (is) the minister of Christ, an instrument, that is to say, in the hands of the Divine Redeemer. He continues the work of the redemption in all its world-embracing universality and divine efficacy, that work which wrought so marvelous a transformation in the world. Thus the priest, as is said with good reason, is indeed “another Christ”; for, in some way, he is himself a continuation of Christ: “As the Father has sent me, even so I send you” [Jn 20:21]...

... These august powers are conferred upon the priest in a special sacrament designed to this end: they are not merely passing or temporary in the priest, but are stable and perpetual, united as they are with the indelible character imprinted on his soul whereby he becomes “a priest for ever” [Ps 110:4], whereby he becomes like unto him in whose eternal priesthood he has been made a sharer. Even if, through human frailty, he has fallen into error and disgrace, nevertheless, he can never erase this priestly character from his soul.

But along with this ... the priest receives new and special grace with special helps. Thereby, if only he will loyally further, by his free and personal cooperation, the liberaque opera sua, fideliter obsecundaverit—digne profecto nec deiectus animo poterit arduis suscepti ministerii officii respondere....

divinely powerful action of the grace itself, he will be able worthily to fulfill all the duties, however arduous, of his lofty calling....

Liturgical Prayers

[18] ... Sacerdos denique, hac etiam in re Iesu Christi munus persequens, qui “erat pernoctans in oratione Dei” [Lc 6:12] et semper vivit ad interpellandum pro nobis [cf. Hbr 7:25], publicus ex officio exstat ad Deum pro nobis deprecator: eidem in mandatis est non modo proprium verumque altaris sacrificium Ecclesiae nomine caelesti Numini offerre, sed etiam “sacrificium laudis” [Ps 49:14] communesque preces; is nempe psalmis, supplicationibus et canticis, quae magna ex parte a sacris Litteris mutuatur, quotidie iterum atque iterum debitum Deo adorationis munus persolvit, atque necessarium eiusmodi impetrationis officium pro hominibus perficit....

Si vel privata supplicatio tam sollemnibus pollet magnisque a Iesu Christo datis pollicitationibus [cf. Mt 7:7–11; Mc 11:24; Lc 11:9–13], at preces, quae Ecclesiae [19] nomine, dilectae nempe Redemptoris sponsae, ex officio funduntur, maiore procul dubio vi virtuteque fruuntur.

... Finally, the priest, in another way, follows the example of Christ. Of him it is written that “all night he continued in prayer to God” [Lk 6:12] and “always lives to make intercession for us” [cf. Heb 7:25], and, like him, the priest is public and official intercessor for us before God; he has the duty and commission of offering to God in the name of the Church, over and above sacrifice strictly so-called, the “sacrifice of praise” [Ps 50:14], in public and official prayer; for several times each day with psalms, prayers, and hymns taken in great part from the inspired books, he pays to God this dutiful tribute of adoration and thus performs his necessary office of interceding for mankind.... 3757

If Jesus Christ made such magnificent and solemn promises even to private prayers [cf. Mt 7:7–11; Mk 11:24; Lc 11:9–13], how much stronger and more powerful must be that prayer which is said ex officio in the name of the Church, the beloved Spouse of the Savior? 3758

3760–3765: Response of the Holy Office, August 11, 1936

The response refers to the “Law for the Prevention of Offspring with Hereditary Diseases” issued by the National-Socialist government on July 14, 1933.

Ed.: Pastor Bonus 4 (Rome, 1940): 223f. / F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 115.

Sterilization

Expos.: ... Chirurgica operatio, qua sterilizatio obinetur, non quidem est “actio intrinsece mala quoad substantiam actus” et ideo licita esse potest, si quando ad salutem et sanitatem curandam est necessaria. Si autem ideo peragitur, ut prolis procreatio impediatur, est “actio intrinsece mala ex defectu iuris in agente”, cum neque homo privatus neque auctoritas publica directum in membra corporis dominium habeat quod eo usque extendatur.

Haec a Summo Pontifice explicitis verbis proposita doctrina ex integro ad legem sterilizationis, de qua agitur, applicanda est. Quod vero hac lege proles manca arcenda praescribatur ob finem mere eugenicum, vel potius ad praecavenda damna oeconomica aut talia alterius generis mala, ad rem id non facit, neque supplet defectum iuris in agente, propterea praescripta sterilizationis operatio dici debet et est intrinsece iniusta.

Explanation: ... A surgical operation through which sterilization results is not, of course, “an action intrinsically evil in respect to the substance of the act” and, therefore, can be licit if it is at any time necessary for establishing health and well-being. If, however, it is undertaken for the motive of impeding the procreation of children, it is “an intrinsically evil act from the absence of the right to do such a thing”, since neither a private person nor public authority has a direct dominion over the members of the body that extends to such a point. 3760

This teaching, set forth by the explicit words of the supreme pontiff, is to be applied completely to the law of sterilization under consideration. In truth, that through this law the prevention of handicapped offspring is mandated for a purely eugenic purpose or, rather, to prevent economic losses or similar ills of this kind changes nothing in the matter, nor does it make up for the absence of the right to do such a thing; for this reason, the above-mentioned operation of sterilization must be said to be and is intrinsically unjust. 3761

3762 Licet ergo finis legis qui est: procurare valetudinem et robur futurae proles, et arcere prolem mancam, improbandus non sit, reprobari debet ex integro legis obiectum, id est medium quod ad finem obtinendum praescribitur.

[His consideratis, S. Officium 15. Iulii 1936 Resp. dedit.]

3763 1) Sterilizatio, eum in finem facta, ut proles arceatur, est actio intrinsece mala ob defectum iuris in agente; quapropter ipsa lege naturae prohibetur, sive auctoritate privata sive auctoritate publica sit peragenda.

3764 2) ... “Lex ad praecavendam prolem transmissione hereditaria mancam” in quantum huiusmodi sterilizationem sive petendam sive exsequendam praescribit, est vero bono communi contraria, iniusta, neque ullam in conscientia gignere potest obligationem.

3765 3) Hanc legem approbare, commendare, auctoritative per sententiam iudicalem ad casum particularem applicare in ordine ad sterilizationem exsequendam, item approbare ... sterilizationem ipsam in ordine ad prolem praecavendam: est approbare ... rem intrinsece malam, ideoque est inhonestum et illicitum.

Therefore, even if the end of the law—which is to procure the well-being and strength of future offspring and to prevent offspring with defects—is not to be condemned, the object of the law, that is, the means prescribed for achieving the end, must be completely condemned.

[In consideration of these (remarks), on July 15, 1936, the Holy Office issued this response:]

1. Sterilization, done for the purpose of preventing offspring, is an intrinsically evil act from the absence of the right in the one who acts; wherefore, it is prohibited by the natural law itself whether it be carried out by private authority or by public authority.

2. ... “The law for the prevention of offspring with hereditary diseases”, inasmuch as it prescribes such a sterilization, whether it be requested or required, is contrary to the true common good, unjust, and incapable of producing any obligation in conscience.

3. To approve this law, to recommend it, or to apply it authoritatively by means of a juridical decision for the purpose of carrying out sterilization in a particular case, like approving ... sterilization itself for the purpose of preventing offspring, means approving ... something intrinsically evil ... and is, therefore, disgraceful and illicit.

3771–3774: Encyclical Divini Redemptoris, March 19, 1937

Ed.: AAS 29 (1937): 78–92.

The Rights of Individual Men and of States

3771 [Homini] spiritualis atque immortalis animus inest; idemque, quemadmodum persona est mirandis prorsus corporis mentisque dotibus a summo Creatore praedita, ita reapse “microcosmos” ex veterum scriptorum sententia ea de causa vocari potest, quod inanimarum immensitatem rerum longissime evincit ac superat. Non modo in hac mortali vita, sed in perpetuo etiam mansura supremus ei finis est unice Deus; et cum per sanctitatis effectricem gratiam ad filii Dei dignitatem evectus sit, in mystico Iesu Christi corpore cum divino regno coniungitur.

Quod consequens est, multiplicia ei impertiit caeleste numen ac varia munera: ut vitae corporisque integritatis iura; ut iura itidem cum res adipiscendi necessarias tum ad finem ultimum via rationeque contendendi sibi a Deo propositum; ut denique iura et ineundae societatis et privata bona possidendi et eorum fruendi usu.

Praeterea, ut maritalis coniugium, ita eius naturalis usus ex divina ordinatione oriuntur; itemque domesticus convictus constitutio [79] eiusque praecipua munera non ex humano arbitrio neque ex oeconomicis rationibus, sed a summo ipso omnium Creatore proficiscuntur....

[Man] has a spiritual and immortal soul. He is a person, marvelously endowed by his Creator with gifts of body and mind. He is a true “microcosm”, as the ancients said, a world in miniature, with a value far surpassing that of the vast inanimate cosmos. God alone is his last end, in this life and the next. By sanctifying grace he is raised to the dignity of a son of God and incorporated into the kingdom of God in the Mystical Body of Jesus Christ.

In consequence, he has been endowed by God with many and varied prerogatives: the right to life, to bodily integrity, to the necessary means of existence; the right to tend toward his ultimate goal in the path marked out for him by God; the right of association, and the right to possess and use property.

In addition, just as matrimony and the right to its natural use are of divine origin, so likewise are the constitution and fundamental prerogatives of the family fixed and determined by the Creator, not by human arbitration or economic factors....

At Deus pari modo hominem ad civilem consortionem natum conformatumque voluit, quam profecto sua ipsius natura postulat. Societas enim ex divini Creatoris consilio naturale praesidium est, quo quilibet civis possit ac debeat ad propositam sibi metam assequendam uti; quandoquidem Civitas homini, non homo Civitati existit.

Id tamen non ita intelligendum est, quemadmodum ob suam individualismi doctrinam Liberales quos vocant asseverant; qui quidem communitatem immoderatis singulorum commodis inservire iubent: se ita potius, ut omnes, ex eo quod cum societate composito ordine copulantur, terrenam possint per mutuam navitatis conspirationem veri nominis prosperitatem attingere; utque per humanum consortium privatae illae publicaeque animi dotes hominibus natura insitae floeant ac vigeant, quae temporarias peculiaresque utilitates exsuperant, divinamque praeferunt in civili ordinatione perfectionem, quod quidem in singulis hominibus contingere ullo modo nequit. Quod idcirco etiam homini inservit, ut hanc divinae perfectionis imaginem agnoscat acceptamque Creatori referat. . . .

Iamvero, quemadmodum homo officia illa repudiare non potest, quibus Dei iussu civili societati obstringitur, atque adeo publicae rei moderatores iure pollent, si idem obtemperacioni huic non legitime obsistit, eum ad officium persolvendum coërcendi; ita pari modo societas iis iuribus civem spoliare non potest a Creatore Deo eidem impertitis, quorum praestantiora [80] supra breviter attigimus, neque eorundem usum ex arbitrio impossibilem reddere. Quapropter e mentis nostrae ratione oritur eidemque consentaneum est, ut terrenaes res omnes homini usui utilitatique sint, ideoque per eum ad Creatorem referantur. . . .

Dum igitur Communistarum effata personam humanam ita extenuant, ut civium cum societate necessitudines praepostere subvertant, humana mens, contra, ac divina revelatio eam tam sublime extollunt.

Decessor Noster felicis recordationis Leo XIII de oeconomicis socialibusque rationibus deque operariorum causa . . . effectrices normas edidit;¹ quas Nos quidem . . . nostrorum temporum condicionibus necessitatibusque accommodavimus.² In quibus Litteris . . . de peculiari privatarum possessionum natura, ad singulos et ad societatem quod attinet, distincte definiteque et humani laboris iura dignitatemque designavimus et mutuas eorum auxilii adiumentique necessitudines, qui vel rem impertiunt vel dant operam, et mercedem denique, quae opificibus ex districta iustitia debetur, sibi suaeque familiae necessaria.

But God has likewise destined man for civil society according to the dictates of his very nature. In the plan of the Creator, society is a natural means that man can and must use to reach his destined end. Society is for man and not vice versa. 3772

This must not be understood in the sense of liberalistic individualism, which subordinates society to the selfish use of the individual; but only in the sense that by means of an organic union with society and by mutual collaboration the attainment of earthly happiness is placed within the reach of all. In a further sense, it is society that affords the opportunities for the development of all the individual and social gifts bestowed on human nature. These natural gifts have a value surpassing the immediate interests of the moment, for in society they reflect the divine perfection, which would not be true were man to live alone. But on final analysis, even in this latter function, society is made for man, that he may recognize this image of the divine perfection and refer what he has received back to the Creator. . . .

Man cannot be exempted from his divinely imposed obligations toward civil society, and the representatives of authority have the right to coerce him when he refuses without reason to do his duty. Society, on the other hand, cannot defraud man of his God-granted rights, the most important of which We have indicated above. Nor can society arbitrarily void these rights by making their use impossible. It is therefore according to the dictates of reason that ultimately all material things should be ordained to man as a person, that through his mediation they may find their way to the Creator. . . . 3773

While Communism impoverishes human personality by inverting the terms of the relation of man to society, to what lofty heights is man not elevated by reason and revelation!

Our predecessor of happy memory, Leo XII, set forth . . . the operative principles concerning the social-economic order as well as concerning the question of works;¹ now We have . . . adapted these (principles) to present needs and circumstances.² In this letter . . . , concerning the individual and social character of private property, We have explained clearly and definitely the right and dignity of labor, the relations of mutual aid and collaboration that should exist between those who possess capital and those who work, the salary due in strict justice to the worker for himself and for his family.

*3773 ¹ Cf. encyclical Rerum novarum, May 15, 1891 (cf. *3265–3271).

² Cf. encyclical Quadragesimo anno, May 15, 1931 (cf. * 3725–3744).

Social Justice

3774 [92] Verum enim vero, praeter iustitiam, quam commutativam vocant, socialis etiam iustitia colenda est, quae quidem ipsa officia postulat, quibus neque artifices neque heri se subducere possunt. Atqui socialis iustitiae est id omne ab singulis exigere, quod ad commune bonum necessarium sit.

Ut autem, ad quamlibet viventis corporis compagem quod attinet, in universum consultum non est, nisi singulis membris ea omnia tribuantur, quibus eadem indigeant ad suas partes explendas; ita, ad communitatis constitutionem temperationemque quod pertinet, totius societatis bono prospici non potest, nisi singulis membris, hominibus videlicet personae dignitate ornatis, illud omne impertiat, quod iisdem opus sit, ad sociale munus cuiusque suum exercendum.

Si igitur iustitiae sociali provisum fuerit, ex oeconomicis rebus uberes enascentur actuosae navitatis fructus, qui in tranquillitatis ordine maturescent, Civitatisque vim firmitudinemque ostendent; quemadmodum humani corporis valetudo ex imperturbata, plena fructuosaque eius opera dignoscitur.

Neque satis sociali iustitiae factum erit, nisi opifices et sibimet ipsis et familiae cuiusque suae victum tuta ratione ex accepta, rei consentanea, mercede praebere poterunt; nisi iisdem facultas dabitur modicam quamdam fortunam sibi comparandi, ad illud communis paupertatis ulcus vitandum, quod tam late diffunditur; nisi denique opportuna erunt in eorum commodum inita consilia, quibus iidem, per publica vel privata cautionis instituta, suae ipsorum senectuti, infirmitati operisque vacationi consulere queant.

In reality, besides commutative justice, there is also social justice with its own set obligations, from which neither employers nor workingmen can escape. Now it is of the very essence of social justice to demand from each individual all that is necessary for the common good.

But just as in the living organism it is impossible to provide for the good of the whole unless each single part and each individual member is given what it needs for the exercise of its proper functions, so it is impossible to care for the social organism and the good of society as a unit unless each single part and each individual member—that is to say, each individual man in the dignity of his human personality—is supplied with all that is necessary for the exercise of his social functions.

If social justice be satisfied, the result will be an intense activity in economic life as a whole, pursued in tranquility and order. This activity will be proof of the health of the social body, just as the health of the human body is recognized in the undisturbed regularity and perfect efficiency of the whole organism.

But social justice cannot be said to have been satisfied as long as workingmen are denied a salary that will enable them to secure proper sustenance for themselves and for their families; as long as they are denied the opportunity of acquiring a modest fortune and forestalling the plague of universal poverty; as long as they cannot make suitable provision through public or private insurance for old age, for periods of illness and unemployment.

3775–3776: Encyclical Firmissimam constantiam to the Bishops of the United States of Mexico, March 28, 1937

In this letter, Pius XI treats the oppression of the Church in Mexico and the Christian right to resistance. The pope already had taken a position against the persecution of the Church in Mexico in the encyclical Acerba animi anxietudo of September 29, 1932 (AAS 24 [1932]: 321–32).

Ed.: AAS 29 (1937): 196f.

Resistance against the Abuses of Civil Power

3775 Docuistis, Ecclesiam, etiam cum gravi suo incommodo, pacis atque ordinis faultricem esse, omnemque iniustam rebellionem vel violentiam contra constitutas potestates condemnare. Ceterum apud vos affirmatum quoque est, si quando potestates ipsae iustitiam ac veritatem manifeste impugnent, ita ut vel fundamenta auctoritatis evertant, non videri cur improbari debeant cives illi, qui in unum coalescant ad tuendos semet ipsos nationemque servandam, licita atque idonea auxilia adhibentes contra eos, qui imperio abutantur ad rem publicam labefactandam.

You have more than once recalled to your faithful that the Church protects peace and order, even at the cost of grave sacrifices and that she condemns every unjust insurrection or violence against constituted powers. On the other hand, among you it has also been said that, whenever these powers arise against justice and truth even to destroying the very foundations of authority, it is not to be seen how those citizens are to be condemned who unite to defend themselves and the nation, by licit and appropriate means, against those who make use of public power to bring it to ruin.

Quod si huius quaestionis solutio a singularibus rerum adiunctis necessario pendet, nonnulla tamen principia sunt in lumine collocanda:

1. Vindicationes eiusmodi rationem medii seu finis relativi habent, non finis ultimi atque absoluti. [197]

2. Eaedem, tamquam media, esse debent actiones licitae, neque intrinsece malae.

3. Cum ipsas ad finem idoneas et adaequatas esse oporteat, eatenus adhibendae sunt, quatenus ad propositum finem ex integro vel ex parte conducant, ita tamen, ut maiora damna communitati et iustitiae non afferant, quam ipsa damna resarcienda.

4. Usus vero talium mediorum et plenum civilium politicorumque iurium exercitium, cum causas quoque ordinis mere temporalis techniquae aut violentae defensionis complectantur, non attingunt directe munus Catholicae Actionis, licet ad eandem officium pertineat catholicos viros instruendi ad propria iura recte exercenda, eademque ex communis boni necessitate iustis modis vindicanda.

5. Clerus et Actio Catholica,—cum ob missionem pacis amorisque sibi concreditam omnes homines “in vinculo pacis” [Eph 4:3] devincire teneantur,—plurimum ad nationis prosperitatem conferre debent, tum civium classiumque coniunctionem maxime fovendo, tum obsecundando omnibus socialibus inceptis, quae a Christi doctrina moralique lege non discordent.

If the practical solution depends on concrete circumstances, We must, however, on Our part recall to you some general principles, always to be kept in mind, and they are:

1. That such acts of self-defense have the character of a means, or relative end, not that of an ultimate and absolute end.

2. That, as means, they must be licit actions and not intrinsically evil.

3. That, since they are to be means proportionate to the end, they must be used (only) in the measure in which they serve to obtain or render possible, in whole or in part, the end, and in such manner that they do not cause to the community greater damages than those they seek to repair.

4. That the use of such means and the full exercise of civic and political rights, since they also include matters of a purely material and technical order or violent defense, do not directly concern the task of Catholic Action, even if the duty is incumbent upon it to instruct Catholics to make just use of their rights and to defend them with all legitimate means according as the common good requires.

5. The clergy and Catholic Action, being, by their mission of peace and love, consecrated to uniting all men in “in the bond of peace” [Eph 4:3], must contribute to the utmost to the prosperity of the nation by, on the one hand, encouraging most insistently the union of citizens and classes and, on the other hand, promoting all social initiatives that are not opposed to the doctrine of Christ and the moral law.

PIUS XII: March 2, 1939—October 9, 1958

3780–3786: Encyclical Summi pontificatus, October 20, 1939

Ed.: AAS 31 (1939): 423–38.

The Natural Law

Compertum omnino est primum altiozemque malorum fontem, quibus hodierna afflicta civitas, ex eo scateret, quod universalis de morum probitate pernegetur ac reiiciatur norma, cum in privata singulorum vita, tum in ipsa re publica atque in mutuis necessitudinum rationibus, quae inter gentes nationesque intercedunt; ipsa videlicet naturalis lex detrectatione oblivioneque obruitur.

Haec naturalis lex veluti fundamento innititur Deo, omnipotenti omnium creatore ac patre, eodemque et supremo perfectissimoque legum latore et sapientissimo iustissimoque humanarum actionum vindice. Cum temere aeternum renuitur Numen, iam cuiuslibet honestatis

Before all else, it is certain that the radical and ultimate cause of the evils that We deplore in modern society is the denial and rejection of a universal norm of morality as well for individual and social life as for international relations; We mean the disregard, so common nowadays, and the forgetfulness of the natural law itself.

This natural law has its foundation in God, Almighty Creator and Father of all, supreme and absolute Lawgiver, all-wise and just Judge of human actions. When God is hated, every basis of morality is undermined; the voice of conscience is stilled or at any rate grows very faint, principium labat nutans, iamque naturae vox silet vel pedetemptim debilitatur, quae indoctos etiam ac vel eos edocet, qui nondum ad civilis cultus usum pervenerunt, quid fas sit, quid nefas, quid liceat quidque non liceat; eosque admonet se aliquando coram Supremo Iudice de bene maleque factis suis rationem reddituros.

that voice which teaches even to the illiterate and those not yet civilized what is good and what is bad, what lawful, what forbidden, and makes men feel themselves responsible for their actions to a Supreme Judge.

The Rights of the Nation and the Rights of People

3782 [431] ... Divina posthabita auctoritate eiusque legis imperio, id necessario consequitur, ut civilis potestas absolutissima nullique obnoxia iura usurpet, quae ad summum Creatorem unice pertinent, utque in eiusdem Creatoris locum suffecta, rem publicam vel civium communitatem efferat quasi supremam totius humanae vitae metam maximamque normam in iuris morumque ordine habendam; atque adeo omnes prohibeat quo[432]-minus ad naturalis rationis christianaque conscientiae praecepta refugiant...

... Once the authority of God and the sway of his law are denied in this way, the civil authority as an inevitable result tends to attribute to itself that absolute autonomy which belongs exclusively to the Supreme Maker. It puts itself in the place of the Almighty and elevates the State or group into the last end of life, the supreme criterion of the moral and juridical order, and therefore forbids every appeal to the principles of natural reason and of the Christian conscience...

[433] ... Eo igitur nobilissimo munere fungitur res publica, ut, in nationis vita, privata singulorum incepta et opera recognoscat, temperet atque promoveat, eaque ad commune omnium bonum convenienter dirigat, quod quidem non ex alicuius arbitrio neque solummodo a terrena civilis societatis prosperitate, veluti a primaria ratione sua definiatur, sed ex naturali potius hominis perfectione congruenter provehenda, ad quam civitas ipsa a supremo Creatore, quasi instrumentum atque praesidium, destinatur...

... Hence, it is the noble prerogative and function of the State to control, aid, and direct the private and individual activities of national life so that they converge harmoniously toward the common good. That good can neither be defined according to arbitrary ideas nor can it accept for its standard primarily the material prosperity of society, but rather it should be defined according to the harmonious development and the natural perfection of man. It is for this perfection that society is designed by the supreme Creator as a means and an aid...

3783 [437] ... Opinatio illa, Venerabiles Fratres, quae imperium paene infinitum rei publicae attribuit, non internae tantum nationum vitae et auctoribus componendis incrementis perniciosus error evadit, sed mutuis etiam populorum rationibus detrimentum affert; quandoquidem unitatem illam infringit, qua civitates universae inter se contineantur oportet, gentium iura vi firmitateque exiit, atque, viam sternens ad aliena violanda iura, pacate una simul tranquilleque vivere perdifficile reddit.

Venerable Brothers, ... the idea that credits the State with unlimited authority is not simply an error harmful to the internal life of nations, to their prosperity, and to the larger and well-ordered increase in their well-being, but likewise it injures the relations between peoples, for it breaks the unity of supranational society, robs the law of nations of its foundation and vigor, leads to violation of others' rights, and impedes agreement and peaceful intercourse.

3784 Etenim hominum genus, quamquam ex naturalis ordinis a Deo statuta lege in civium classes disponitur, itemque in nationes civitatesque, quae ad suam quod attinet interni regiminis temperationem, aliae ab aliis non pendent, mutuis tamen in iuridicali ac morali re vinculis obstringitur, et in universam magnamque coalescit populorum congregationem, quae ad assequendum omnium gentium bonum destinatur, ac peculiaribus regitur normis, quae et unitatem tutantur, et ad res quotidie magis prosperas dirigunt.

A disposition, in fact, of the divinely sanctioned natural order divides the human race into social groups, nations, or States that are mutually independent in organization and in the direction of their internal life. But for all that, the human race is bound together by reciprocal ties, moral and juridical, into a great commonwealth directed to the good of all nations and ruled by special laws that protect its unity and promote its prosperity.

3785 Iam vero nemo est qui non videat asseverata illa rei publicae iura, absolutissima nullique prorsus obnoxia, legi huic naturali et insitae omnino adversari, eademque funditus refellere; itemque patet eadem iura

Now no one can fail to see how the claim to absolute autonomy for the State stands in open opposition to this natural way that is inherent in man—indeed, denies it utterly—and therefore leaves the stability of illas legitime initas necessitudines, quibus nationes inter se coniunguntur, civitatis moderatorum [438] arbitrio permittere, ac praepedire quominus recta habeatur animorum omnium consensio ac mutua adiutricis operae collatio....

Ceterum ius gentium idcirco a divino iure vindicare, ut in rei publicae moderatorum arbitrio veluti fundamento unice innitatur, nihil aliud significat quam illud ipsum ex honoris sui suaeque firmitatis solio detrudere, idemque nimio concitatoque privati publicique commodi studio permittere, quod non alio contendit, nisi ut propria iura efferat, aliena deneget.

international relations at the mercy of the will of rulers, while it destroys the possibility of true union and fruitful collaboration directed to the general good....

But, on the other hand, to tear the law of nations from its anchor in divine law, to base it on the autonomous will of States, is to dethrone that very law and deprive it of its noblest and strongest qualities. Thus it would stand abandoned to the fatal drive of private interest and collective selfishness exclusively intent on the assertion of its own rights and ignoring those of others. 3786

3788: Decree of the Holy Office, February 21 (24), 1940

With this decree, direct sterilization, including that carried out for eugenic purposes, is prohibited. The decree of March 21, 1931 (AAS 23 [1931]: 118f.), which is cited here, states that sterilization “is to be totally rejected and regarded as false and condemned” (esse omnino improbandam et habendam pro falsa et damnata), making reference, in the process, to the encyclical Casti connubii of Pius XI (*3722). In his Allocution to Midwives of October 29, 1951, and at the International Symposium of Medical Genetics of September 7, 1953, Pius XII added the further specification that the general prohibition refers [also] to the sterilization of the innocent (AAS 43 [1951]: 843f.; 45 [1953]: 606).

Ed.: F. Hürth: TD ser. theol. 25, 2nd ed. (1953), 116 / AAS 32 (1940): 73.

Sterilization

Qu.: An licita sit directa sterilizatio sive perpetua sive temporanea, sive viri sive mulieris?

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 22. Febr.): Negative, et quidem prohiberi lege naturae, eamque, quod sterilizationem eugenicam attinet, Decreto 21. Mart. 1931 reprobata iam esse.

Question: Is direct sterilization of a man or a woman, whether perpetual or temporary, permitted? 3788

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on February 22): No, it is indeed prohibited by the natural law, and as for eugenic sterilization, it has already been condemned in the decree of March 21, 1931.

3790: Decree of the Holy Office, November 27 (December 2), 1940

Ed.: AAS 32 (1940): 553f.

The Direct Killing of the Innocent by the Order of Public Authority

Qu.: Num licitum sit, ex mandato auctoritatis publicae, directe occidere eos, qui, quamvis nullum crimen morte dignum commiserint, tamen ob defectus psychicos vel physicos nationi prodesse iam non valent eamque potius gravare eiusque vigori ac robori obstare censentur? [554]

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 1. Dec): Negative, cum sit iuri naturali ac divino positivo contrarium.

Question: Is it permitted, by the order of public authority, to kill directly those who, although they have committed no crime worthy of death, nevertheless, by reason of physical or psychological defect, are no longer useful to the nation and who, furthermore, are thought to be a burden and an obstacle to its vigor and strength? 3790

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on December 1): No, since it is contrary to the natural law and to divine positive law.

3792–3796: Letter of the Biblical Commission to the Italian Bishops, August 20, 1941

The priest Dolindo Ruotolo had anonymously presented his writing entitled Un gravissimo pericolo per la Chiesa e per le anime: Il sistema critico-scientifico nello studio e nell'interpretazione della Sacra Scrittura, le sue deviazioni funeste e le sue aberrazioni (A very serious danger for the Church and for souls: The critical-scientific system in the study and interpretation of Sacred Scripture, its drastic deviations and its aberrations) to the pope and the curia. As can be seen from the title, the author attacks the scientific study of Sacred Scripture. He contrasts it with the meditation on Scripture according to its “spiritual” sense, as he had practiced in a work published under the pseudonym Dain Cohenel: La sacra Scrittura: Psicologia, commento, meditazione (Sacred Scripture: Psychology, commentary, meditation) (placed on the Index on November 13, 1940). The secretary of the Biblical Commission, Jacques M. Vosté, O.P., argued in favor of exegetical science. The pope confirmed the letter on August 16, 1941.

Ed.: AAS 33 (1941): 466–69 / A. Vaccari, Lo studio della Sacra Scrittura: Lettere della Pontificia Commissio Biblica (Rome, 1943), 24–29 / EnchB nos. 524–27.

The Literal and Spiritual Sense of Sacred Scripture

3792 (1) L'anonimo benchè affermi pro forma che il senso letterale è la "base dell'interpretazione biblica",¹ di fatto preconizza una esegesi assolutamente soggettiva e allegorica... Ora se è proposizione di fede da tenersi per principio fondamentale, che la Sacra Scrittura contiene, oltre al senso letterale, un senso spirituale o tipico, come ci è insegnato dalla pratica di Nostro Signore e degli Apostoli, tuttavia non ogni sentenza o racconto contiene un senso tipico, e fu un eccesso grave della scuola alessandrina di voler trovare dappertutto un senso simbolico, anche a danno del senso letterale e storico.

Il senso spirituale o tipico, oltre che fondarsi sopra il senso letterale, deve provarsi sia dall'uso di Nostro Signore, degli Apostoli o degli scrittori ispirati, sia dall'uso tradizionale dei santi Padri e della Chiesa, specialmente nella sacra liturgia, perchè [467] "lex orandi, lex credendi" [cf. *246].

Un'applicazione più larga dei testi sacri potrà bensì giustificarsi collo scopo dell'edificazione in omilie ed in opere ascetiche; ma il senso risultante anche dalle accomodazioni più felici, quando non sia comprovato com'è detto sopra, non si può dire veramente e strettamente senso della Bibbia nè che fu da Dio ispirato all'agiografo.

3793 Invece l'anonimo, che non fa veruna di queste distinzioni elementari, vuole imporre le elucubrazioni della sua fantasia come senso della Bibbia, come "vere comunioni spirituali della sapienza del Signore",¹ e miscognoscendo la capitale importanza del senso letterale, calunnia gli esegeti cattolici di considerare "solo il senso letterale" e di considerarlo "a modo umano, prendendolo solo materialmente, per quello che suonano le parole."²...

Egli rigetta in tal modo la regola d'oro dei dottori della Chiesa, così chiaramente formulata dall'Aquinate: "Omnes sensus fundantur super unum, scilicet litteralem, ex quo solo potest trahi argumentum";³ regola che i Sommi Pontefici sancirono e consacrarono quando prescissero che, prima di tutto, si cerchi con ogni cura il senso letterale. Così p. e. Leone XIII ...: "Propterea cum studio perpendendi quid ipsa verba valeant, quid consecutio rerum velit, quid locorum similitudo aut talia

(1) The anonymous author, even though he affirms pro forma that the literal sense is the "basis for biblical interpretation",¹ in reality promotes a type of exegesis that is absolutely subjective and allegorical... Now, even though it is a proposition of faith to hold as a fundamental principle that Sacred Scripture contains a spiritual or typological sense over and above its literal sense, as we are taught by the practice of our Lord and of the apostles, nevertheless, not every sentence or story contains a typological sense. In fact, it was a serious exaggeration of the school of Alexandria to seek to find a symbolic sense everywhere, even at the expense of the literal and historical sense.

The typological or spiritual sense, besides being based on the literal sense, must also be corroborated either by the usage of our Lord, the apostles, or the inspired authors or by the traditional usage of the holy Fathers and of the Church, especially in the sacred liturgy, because "the rule of prayer (is) the rule of belief" [cf. *246].

A wider application of the sacred texts could indeed be justified for the purpose of edification in homilies and ascetical works, but the meaning that results from even the most felicitous accommodations, when not corroborated by what was said above, cannot truly and strictly be said to be the meaning of the Bible or that which God inspired in the sacred writer.

Instead, the anonymous author, who does not make any of these elementary distinctions, would like to impose the musings of his imagination as the meaning of the Bible, as "true spiritual communion from the wisdom of the Lord",¹ and, misunderstanding the capital importance of the literal sense, he calumniates Catholic exegetes for considering "only the literal sense" and for considering it "in a human manner, taking it only materially, according to how the words read".²...

In this way, he rejects the golden rule of the Doctors of the Church, so clearly formulated by Aquinas: "All the meanings are founded on one, that is, the literal, from which alone can an argument be drawn",³ a rule sanctioned and consecrated by the supreme pontiffs when they prescribed that, before all else, one should search carefully for the literal meaning. Thus, for example, Leo XIII ...: "While weighing the meaning of words, the connection of ideas, the parallelism of passages, *3792 ¹ D. Ruotolo, Un gravissimo pericolo 6.

*3793 ¹ Ibid., 45.

² Ibid., 11.

³ Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 1, a. 10 ad 1 (Editio Leonina 4:25b).

cetera, externa quoque appositae eruditionis illustratio societur”⁴ ... [Citatur et Augustini praeceptio *3284²].

Così pure Benedetto XV...: “Ipsa Scripturae verba per diligentem consideremus, ut certo constet, quidnam sacer scriptor dixerit”;⁵ dove ... raccomanda che gli esegeti “modeste temperateque e litterali sententia ad altiora exsurgant”.⁶

Ambedue finalmente i Sommi Pontefici ... insistono, con le stesse parole di S. Girolamo, sul dovere dell’esegeta: “commentatoris officium esse, non quid ipse velit, sed quid sentiat ille, quem interpretatur, exponere.”⁷

The Meaning of the Tridentine Decree on the Authority of the Vulgate

[468] (2) ... Il Concilio Tridentino, contro la confusione cagionata dalle nuove traduzioni in latino e in vernacolo allora propalate, volle sancito l’uso pubblico, nella Chiesa Occidentale, della versione latina comune giustificandolo dall’uso secolare fattone dalla Chiesa stessa, ma non pensò per nulla menomare l’autorità delle versioni antiche adoperate nelle Chiese Orientali, di quella segnatamente dei LXX usata dagli stessi Apostoli, e meno ancora l’autorità dei testi originali, e resistette ad una parte dei Padri, che volevano l’uso esclusivo della Volgata come sola autorevole.

Ora l’anonimo sentenza che in virtù del decreto Tridentino si possiede nella versione latina un testo dichiarato superiore a tutti gli altri, rimprovera agli esegeti di voler interpretare la Volgata coll’aiuto degli originali e delle altre versioni antiche. Per lui il decreto dà la “certezza del Sacro Testo”, così che la Chiesa non ha bisogno di “ancora ricercare l’autentica lettera di Dio”,¹ e ciò non soltanto in rebus fidei et morum, ma in tutti i rispetti (anche letterari, geografici, cronologici, ecc.)...

Ebbene tale pretesa non è soltanto contro il senso comune, il quale non accetterà mai che una versione possa essere superiore al testo originale, ma è anche contro la mente dei Padri del Concilio, quale appare dagli Atti; il Concilio anzi fu consapevole della necessità and the like, we should by all means make use of such illustrations as can be drawn from apposite erudition of an external sort; but this should be done with caution.”⁴ [The teaching of Augustine is also cited, *3284².]

So, too, Benedict XV ...: “We should very diligently examine the words of Scripture themselves in order to be completely certain about what the sacred writer has actually said”;⁵ whence ... he advises exegetes to move “with measure and discretion from the literal sense to more elevated interpretations”.⁶

Finally, both supreme pontiffs ... insist on the duties of exegetes with the same words of St. Jerome: “The duty of a commentator is not to expound on what he himself may desire, but rather on what (the author) he is interpreting thinks.”⁷

(2) ... The Council of Trent sought to sanction the public use in the Western Church of the common Latin translation, over against the confusion stirred up by new Latin and vernacular translations being disseminated at that time, justifying this by the centuries of its use by this same Church, but it did not intend in any way to diminish the authority of the ancient translations in use in the Oriental Churches, particularly that of the Septuagint used by the apostles themselves, and even less that of the original texts. The (council) resisted a party of the Fathers (of Trent) that wanted exclusive use of the Vulgate as the only authoritative version. 3794

Now the anonymous author, on the contrary, is of the opinion, in virtue of the Tridentine decree, that in the Latin translation we have a text that has been declared superior to all others, (and) he reproves exegetes for wishing to interpret the Vulgate with the assistance of the original and other ancient versions. For him, the decree gives the “certitude of the sacred text”, so that the Church has no need to “continue to search for the authentic Word of God”,¹ and not only in matters of faith and morals, but in all aspects (even literary, geographical, chronological, and so on)...

Such an assertion goes not only against common sense, which would never accept (the idea) that a translation could be superior to the original text, but it is also in contrast to the mind of the council Fathers, as can be seen in the (council) Acts; indeed, the council 3795

*3793 ⁴ Leo XIII, encyclical Providentissimus Deus (EnchB no. 108).

⁵ Benedict XV, encyclical Spiritus Paraclitus (EnchB no. 485).

⁶ Ibid., no. 486.

⁷ Jerome of Stridon, Epistula ad Pammachium 17, 7 (CSEL 54:381₇₋₉ [= letter 49] / PL 22 [1864]: 507 [= letter 48] / EnchB nos. 106, 487).

*3794 ¹ Un gravissimo pericolo 7.

di una revisione e correzione della Volgata medesima, e ne rimise l'esecuzione ai Sommi Pontefici, i quali la fecero, come fecero, secondo la mente dei più autorevoli collaboratori del Concilio stesso, un'edizione corretta dei LXX . . . , e poi ordinarono quella del Vecchio Testamento ebraico e del Nuovo Testamento greco. . . .

Ed è apertamente contro il precetto dell'Enciclica "Providentissimus": "Neque tamen non sua habenda erit ratio reliquarum versionum, quas christiana laudavit usurpavitque antiquitas, maxime codicum primigeniorum."¹

3796 Insomma il Concilio Tridentino dichiarò "autentica" la Volgata in [469] senso giuridico, cioè riguardo alla "vis probativa in rebus fidei et morum", ma non escluse affatto possibili divergenze dal testo originale e dalle antiche versioni. . . .

3800–3822: Encyclical Mystici corporis, June 29, 1943

This encyclical represents a milestone in the development of modern ecclesiology. Drawing upon biblical affirmations, it runs counter to a merely juridical understanding of the Church.

Ed.: AAS 35 (1943): 200–243.

The Members of the Church

3800 [200] Sicut in natura rerum non ex qualibet membrorum congerie constituitur corpus, sed organis, uti aiunt, instructum sit oportet seu membris, quae non eundem actum habeant ac sint apto ordine composita: ita Ecclesia ea maxime de causa corpus dicenda est, quod recta consentaneaque coalescit partium temperatione coagmentationeque, ac diversis est sibique invicem congruentibus membris instructa.

[Reference is made to the description of the Church in Romans 12:4f.]

3801 Minime autem reputandum est, hanc ordine digestam seu "organicam", ut aiunt, Ecclesiae corporis structuram solis hierarchiae gradibus absolvi ac definiri, vel, ut opposita sententia tenet, unice ex charismaticis constare; qui quidem donis prodigialibus instructi numquam sunt in Ecclesia defuturi. . . .

3802 [202] . . . In Ecclesiae autem membris reapse ii soli annumerandi sunt, qui regenerationis lavacrum receperunt veramque fidem profitentur, neque a Corporis compage semet ipsos misere separarunt, vel ob gravissima admissa a legitima auctoritate seiuncti sunt. "Etenim in uno Spiritu, ait Apostolus, omnes nos in unum Corpus baptizati sumus, sive Iudaei sive gentiles, sive [203] servi sive liberi" [1 Cor 12:13].

Sicut igitur in vero christifidelium coetu unum tantummodo habetur Corpus, unus Spiritus, unus was convinced of the need for a revision and correction of the Vulgate itself and entrusted its execution to the supreme pontiffs, who attended to it, as they provided a corrected edition of the Septuagint in accordance with the intentions of the most authoritative collaborators of the council itself . . . and then ordered one of the Hebrew Old Testament and of the Greek New Testament. . . .

And (the assertion of the anonymous author) is openly against the injunction of the encyclical Providentissimus: "At the same time, the other versions that Christian antiquity has approved should not be neglected, more especially the most ancient manuscripts."¹

In sum, the Council of Trent declared the Vulgate "authentic" in the juridical sense, that is, with regard to its "probative force in questions of faith and morals", but in fact it did not entirely exclude possible divergences from the original text and the ancient versions. . . .

As in nature a body is not formed by any haphazard grouping of members but must be constituted of organs, that is, of members, that have not the same function and are arranged in due order, so for this reason above all the Church is called a body: that she is constituted by the coalescence of structurally united parts and that she has a variety of members reciprocally dependent.

One must not think, however, that this ordered or "organic" structure of the body of the Church contains only hierarchical elements and with them is complete; or, as an opposite opinion holds, that she is composed only of those who enjoy charismatic gifts—though members gifted with miraculous powers will never be lacking in the Church. . . .

. . . Actually only those are to be included as members of the Church who have been baptized and profess the true faith and who have not been so unfortunate as to separate themselves from the unity of the Body or to have been excluded by legitimate authority for grave faults committed. "For by one Spirit", says the apostle, "we were all baptized into one body—Jews or Greeks, slave or free" [1 Cor 12:13].

As, therefore, in the true Christian community there is only one body, one Spirit, one Lord, and one baptism, *3795 ¹ EnchB no. 106.

Dominus et unum baptismus, sic haberi non potest nisi una fides [cf. Eph 4:5]; atque adeo qui Ecclesiam audire renuerit, iubente Domino habendus est ut ethnicus et publicanus [cf. Mt 18:17]. Quamobrem qui fide vel regimine invicem dividuntur, in uno eiusmodi Corpore, atque uno eius divino Spiritu vivere nequeunt.

Neque existimandum est, Ecclesiae corpus, idcirco quod Christi nomine insigniatur, hoc etiam terrenae peregrinationis tempore ex membris tantummodo sanctitate praestantibus constare, vel ex solo eorum coetu exsistere, qui a Deo sint ad sempiternam felicitatem praedestinati [cf. *1201, 1203, 1205s, 1221, 2408, 2463, 2472–2478]....

Siquidem non omne admissum etsi grave scelus eiusmodi est, ut—sicut schisma vel haeresis vel apostasia faciunt—suapte natura hominem ab Ecclesiae corpore separet. Neque ab iis omnis vita recedit, qui, licet caritatem divinamque gratiam peccando amiserint [cf. *1544, 1578, 1963s] atque adeo superni promeriti iam non capaces evaserint, fidem tamen christianamque spem retinent, ac caelesti luce collustrati intimis Spiritus Sancti suasionibus impulsioneque ad salutarem instigantur timorem et ad precandum sui lapsus paenitentium divinitus excitantur.

The Function of Bishops in the Mystical Body of Christ

[211] ... [Sicut universalis Ecclesia, ita et peculiares eius communitates, id est Ecclesiae Particulares] a Christo Iesu proprii uniuscuiusque episcopi voce potestateque reguntur. Quamobrem sacrorum antistites non solum eminentiora universalis Ecclesiae membra habendi sunt, ut qui singulari prorsus nexu iunguntur cum divino totius Corporis Capite, atque adeo iure vocantur “partes membrorum Domini primae”;¹ sed ad propriam cuiusque dioecesim quod spectat, utpote veri pastores assignatos sibi greges singuli singulos Christi nomine pascunt ac regunt [cf. *3061]; id tamen dum faciunt, [212] non plane sui iuris sunt, sed sub debita Romani Pontificis auctoritate positi, quamvis ordinaria iurisdictionis potestate fruuntur, immediate sibi ab eodem Pontifice Summo impertita. Quapropter ut Apostolorum ex divina institutione successores a populo venerandi sunt. ...

The Cooperation of the Members of the Mystical Body with the Head

Nec tamen putandum est, Christum Caput, cum tam sublimi in loco sit positum, opem non requirere Corporis. Etenim de mystico quoque hoc Corpore illud asseverandum est, quod Paulus de humana concretionem so there can be only one faith [cf. Eph 4:5]. And, therefore, if a man refuse to hear the Church, let him be considered—so the Lord commands—as a heathen and a publican [cf. Mt 18:17]. It follows that those who are divided in faith or government cannot be living in the unity of such a body, nor can they be living the life of its one divine Spirit.

Nor must one imagine that the Body of the Church, 3803 just because it bears the name of Christ, is made up during the days of its earthly pilgrimage only of members conspicuous for their holiness or that it consists only of those whom God has predestined to eternal happiness [cf. *1201, 1203, 1205f., 1221, 2408, 2463, 2472–2478]....

For not every sin, however grave it may be, is such as of its own nature to sever a man from the Body of the Church, as does schism or heresy or apostasy. Men may lose charity and divine grace through sin [cf. *1544, 1578, 1963f.], thus becoming incapable of supernatural merit, and yet not be deprived of all life if they hold fast to faith and Christian hope and if, illumined from above, they are spurred on by the interior promptings of the Holy Spirit to salutary fear and are moved to prayer and penance for their sins.

... [As the universal Church so also her individual 3804 communities, namely, the particular Churches] are ruled by Jesus Christ through the voice of their respective bishops. Consequently, bishops must be considered as the more illustrious members of the universal Church, for they are united by a very special bond to the divine Head of the whole Body and so are rightly called “principal parts of the members of the Lord”;¹ moreover, as far as his own diocese is concerned, each one as a true shepherd feeds the flock entrusted to him and rules it in the name of Christ [cf. *3061]. Yet in exercising this office they are not altogether independent, but are subordinate to the lawful authority of the Roman pontiff, although enjoying the ordinary power of jurisdiction that they receive directly from the same supreme pontiff. Therefore, bishops should be revered by the faithful as divinely appointed successors of the apostles. ...

Because Christ the Head holds such an eminent 3805 position, one must not think that he does not require the help of the Body. What Paul said of the human organism is to be applied likewise to the Mystical Body: “The head asseverat: “Non potest dicere ... caput pedibus: non estis mihi necessarii” [1 Cor 12:21]. Liquido utique patet, christifideles divini Redemptoris ope omnino egere, cum [213] ipse dixerit: “Sine me nihil potestis facere” [Jo 15:5], et cum ... omne mystici huius Corporis incrementum in aedificationem sui ex Christo Capite sit [cf. Eph 4:16; Col 2:19].

¹ *3804 Gregory I the Great, Moralia XIV, 35, § 43 (PL 75:1062B / M. Adriaen: CpChL 143A [1979]: 724₃₆).

Attamen hoc quoque retinendum est, quamvis mirandum prorsus videatur, Christum nempe requirere membra sua. Idque primo quidem, quatenus Iesu Christi persona a Summo geritur Pontifice, qui ne pastoralis officii onere obruatur, alios non paucos in sollicitudinis suae partes vocare debet, ac quotidie est totius compre- cantis Ecclesiae adiutorio relevandus.

Ac praeterea Servator noster, prout ipse per se non adspectabili modo Ecclesiam regit, a mystici vult sui Corporis membris adiuvari in exsequendo redemptionis opere. Quod tamen non ex eius indigentia debilitateque accidit, sed ex eo potius, quod ipsemet ad maiorem intemeratae suae Sponsae honorem rem ita disposuit. Dum enim, in cruce emoriens, immensum redemptionis thesaurum Ecclesiae suae, nihil ea conferente, dilargitus est, ubi de eiusmodi thesauro distribuendo agitur, id efficiendae sanctitatis opus non modo cum intaminata sua Sponsa communicat, sed ex eius etiam opera vult quodammodo oriri.

The Manner in Which Christ Lives in the Church

3806 [217] ... Corporis Christi nominatio non ex eo solum explicanda est, quod Christus mystici sui Corporis Caput est dicendus, [218] sed ex eo etiam, quod ita Ecclesiam sustinet et ita in Ecclesia quodammodo vivit, ut ipsa quasi altera Christi persona existat. ...

Nobilissima tamen eiusmodi appellatio non ita accipienda est, ac si ineffabile illud vinculum, quo Dei Filius concretam assumpsit humanam naturam, ad universam pertineat Ecclesiam [cf. *3816], sed in eo posita est, quod Servator noster bona maxime sibi propria ita cum Ecclesia sua communicat, ut haec secundum totam vitae suae rationem, tam adspectabilem quam arcanam, Christi imaginem quam perfectissime exprimat.

Nam per iuridicam, ut aiunt, missionem, qua divinus Redemptor Apostolos in mundum misit, sicut ipse missus erat a Patre [cf. Io 17:18; 20:21], ipse est, qui per Ecclesiam baptizat,¹ docet, regit, solvit, ligat, offert, sacrificat. Ea vero altiore donatione, interna ac sublimi prorsus, ... Christus Dominus Ecclesiam superna sua vita vivere iubet, totum eius Corpus divina virtute sua permeat, et singula membra secundum locum, quem in cannot say to the feet: I have no need of you” [cf. 1 Cor 12:21]. It is manifestly clear that the faithful need the help of the Divine Redeemer, for he has said: “Apart from me you can do nothing” [Jn 15:5], and ... according to the teaching of the apostle, every advance of this Mystical Body toward its perfection derives from Christ the Head [cf. Eph 4:16; Col 2:19].

Yet this, also, must be held, marvelous though it may seem: Christ has need of his members. First, because the person of Jesus Christ is represented by the supreme pontiff, who in turn must call on others to share much of his solicitude lest he be overwhelmed by the burden of his pastoral office and must be helped daily by the prayers of the Church.

Moreover as our Savior does not rule the Church directly in a visible manner, he wills to be helped by the members of his Body in carrying out the work of redemption. That is not because he is indigent and weak, but rather because he has so willed it for the greater honor of his spotless Spouse. Dying on the Cross, he left to his Church the immense treasury of the redemption, toward which she contributed nothing. But when those graces come to be distributed, not only does he share this work of sanctification with his Church, but he wills that in some way it be due to her action.

... This appellation of the Body of Christ is not to be explained solely by the fact that Christ must be called the Head of his Mystical Body, but also by the fact that he so sustains the Church, and so in a certain sense lives in the Church, that she is, as it were, another Christ. ...

Nevertheless, this most noble title of the Church must not be so understood as if that ineffable bond by which the Son of God assumed a definite human nature belongs to the universal Church [cf. *3816]; but it consists in this, that our Savior shares prerogatives peculiarly his own with the Church in such a way that she may portray, in her whole life, both exterior and interior, a most faithful image of Christ.

For in virtue of the juridical mission by which our Divine Redeemer sent his apostles into the world, as he had been sent by the Father [cf. Jn 17:18; 20:21], it is he who through the Church baptizes,¹ teaches, rules, looses, binds, offers, sacrifices. But in virtue of that higher, interior, and wholly sublime communication, ... Christ our Lord wills the Church to live his own supernatural life and by his divine power permeates his whole Body and

*3806 ¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa contra gentiles IV, 76 (Editio Leonina 15:241b₂₄).

Corpore occupant, eo fere modo alit ac sustentat, quo cohaerentes sibi palmites vitis nutrit facitque frugiferos.²

nourishes and sustains individual members according to the place they occupy in the body, in the same way as the vine nourishes and makes fruitful the branches that are joined to it.²

The Holy Spirit as the Soul of the Church

Quodsi divinum hoc, a Christo datum, vitae virtutisque principium attente consideramus, prout ipsum fontem constituit [219] cuiusvis doni gratiaeque creatae, facile intellegimus illud nihil aliud esse nisi Paraclitum Spiritum, qui a Patre Filioque procedit, quique peculiari modo “Spiritus Christi” seu “Spiritus Filii” dicitur [Rm 8:9; 2 Cor 3:17; Gal 4:6]....

Dum Christus solummodo hunc Spiritum non ad mensuram accepit [cf. Io 3:34], membris tamen mystici Corporis non nisi secundum mensuram donationis Christi ex ipsius Christi plenitudine impertitur [cf. Eph 1:8; 4:7]. Ac postquam Christus in Cruce clarificatus est, eius Spiritus cum Ecclesia uberrima effusione communicatur, ut ipsa eiusque singula membra magis in dies magisque Servatori nostro adsimulentur. Spiritus Christi est, qui nos adoptivos Dei filios effecit [cf. Rm 8:14–17; Gal 4:6s], ut aliquando “omnes revelata facie gloriam Domini speculantes, in eandem imaginem transformemur a claritate in claritatem” [2 Cor 3:18].

Huic autem Christi Spiritui tamquam non adspectabili principio id quoque attribuendum est, ut omnes Corporis partes tam inter sese, quam cum excelso Capite suo coniungantur, totus in Capite cum sit, totus in Corpore, totus in singulis membris; quibus pro diversis eorum muneribus atque officiis, pro maiore vel minore quo fruuntur spiritualis sanitatis gradu, diversis rationibus praesens est atque adsistit.

Ille est, qui caelesti vitae halitu in omnibus corporis partibus cuiusvis est habendus actionis vitalis ac reapse salutaris principium. Ille est, qui licet per se ipse in omnibus membris habeatur, in iisdemque divinitus agat, in inferioribus tamen etiam per superiorum ministerium [220] operatur; ille denique est, qui dum Ecclesiae nova semper in dies, sua afflante gratia, incrementa parit, membra tamen, a Corpore omnino abscissa, renuit sanctitatis gratia inhabitare.

Quam quidem Iesu Christi Spiritus praesentiam operationemque... Leo XIII Encyclicis Litteris “Divinum Illud” per haec verba presse nervoseque significavit: “Hoc affirmare sufficiat, quod cum Christus Caput sit Ecclesiae, Spiritus Sanctus sit eius anima.”¹

If we examine closely this divine principle of life and power given by Christ, insofar as it constitutes the very source of every gift and created grace, we easily perceive that it is nothing else than the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, who proceeds from the Father and the Son and who is called in a special way the “Spirit of Christ” or the “Spirit of the Son” [Rom 8:9; 2 Cor 3:17; Gal 4:6]....

While Christ alone received this Spirit without measure [cf. Jn 3:34], to the members of the Mystical Body he is imparted only according to the measure of the giving of Christ from Christ’s own fullness [cf. Eph 1:8; 4:7]. But after Christ’s glorification on the Cross, his Spirit is communicated to the Church in an abundant outpouring, so that she, and her individual members, may become daily more and more like our Savior. It is the Spirit of Christ that has made us adopted sons of God [cf. Rom 8:14–17; Gal 4:6f.] in order that one day “we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are being changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another” [2 Cor 3:18].

To this Spirit of Christ, also, as to an invisible principle, is to be ascribed the fact that all the parts of the Body are joined one with the other and with their exalted Head; for he is entire in the Head, entire in the Body, and entire in each of the members. To the members he is present and assists them in proportion to their various duties and offices and the greater or less degree of spiritual health that they enjoy.

It is he who, through his heavenly grace, is the principle of every supernatural act in all parts of the Body. It is he who, while he is personally present and divinely active in all the members, nevertheless in the inferior members acts also through the ministry of the higher members. Finally, while by his grace he provides for the continual growth of the Church, he yet refuses to dwell through sanctifying grace in those members that are wholly severed from the Body.

This presence and activity of the Spirit of Jesus Christ is tersely and vigorously described by... Leo XIII in his encyclical letter Divinum illud in these words: “Let it suffice to say that, as Christ is the Head of the Church, so is the Holy Spirit her soul.”¹

*3806² Cf. Leo XIII, encyclical Sapientiae christianae, January 10, 1890, and encyclical Satis cognitum, June 29, 1896 (ASS 22 1889/1890): 392; 28 [1895/1896]: 710).

*3808¹ ASS 29 (1896/1897): 650; *3328.

The Nature of the Mystical Body

3809 [221] ... Iam ... in sua luce ponere cupimus, Christi Corpus, quod est Ecclesia, mysticum esse appellandum... Non autem una de causa haec vox adhibenda est; quandoquidem per illam sociale Ecclesiae Corpus, cuius Christus Caput est ac moderator, internosci potest a physico eius Corpore, quod e Deipara Virgine natum nunc ad Patris dexteram sedet velisque eucharisticis delitescit; ac discerni potest, quod ob hodiernos errores maioris momenti est, a naturali quovis corpore sive physico sive, ut aiunt, morali.

3810 Dum enim in naturali corpore unitatis principium ita partes iungit, ut propria, quam vocant, subsistentia singulae prorsus careant, contra in mystico Corpore mutuae coniunctionis vis, etiamsi intima, membra ita inter se copulat, ut singula omnino fruuntur persona propria.

Accedit quod, si totius et singulorum membrorum mutuam inter se rationem consideramus, in physico quolibet viventi corpore totius concretionis emolumento membra singula universa postremum unice destinantur, dum socialis quaelibet hominum compages, si modo ultimum utilitatis finem inspicimus, ad omnium et uniuscuiusque membri profectum, utpote personae sunt, postremum ordinantur...

3811 Quodsi mysticum comparamus cum morali, ut aiunt, corpore, tum etiam animadvertendum est non leve quiddam interesse, sed aliquid summi momenti inter utrumque summaeque gravitatis. In hoc enim, quod morale vocant, nihil aliud est unitatis principium nisi finis communis communisque omnium in eundem finem per socialem auctoritatem conspiratio; dum in mystico de quo agimus Corpore conspirationi huic internum aliud adiungitur principium, quod tam in universa compage quam in singulis eius partibus reapse existens virtuteque pollens talis est excellentiae, ut ratione sui omnia unitatis vincula, quibus vel physicum vel morale corpus copuletur, in immensum prorsus evincat.

Hoc est ... aliquid non naturalis, sed superni ordinis, immo in semet ipso infinitum omnino atque increatum: Divinus nempe Spiritus, qui ... "unus et idem numero, totam Ecclesiam replet et unit".¹

... And now ... We wish to make clear why the Body of Christ, which is the Church, should be called mystical... There are, though, several reasons why this word should be used; for by it we may distinguish the Body of the Church, which is a Society whose Head and Ruler is Christ, from his physical Body, which, born of the Virgin Mother of God, now sits at the right hand of the Father and is hidden under the eucharistic veils; and, what is of greater importance in view of modern errors, (this word) enables us to distinguish it from any other body, whether in the physical or the moral order.

In a natural body, the principle of unity unites the parts in such a manner that each would be entirely lacking in its own individual subsistence; on the contrary, in the Mystical Body the mutual union, though intrinsic, links the members by a bond that leaves to each the complete enjoyment of his own personality.

Moreover, if we examine the relations existing between the several members and the whole body, in every physical, living body, all the different members are ultimately destined to the good of the whole alone; while if we look to its ultimate usefulness, every moral association of men is in the end directed to the advancement of all in general and of each single member in particular; for they are persons...

But if we compare a mystical body with a moral body, it is to be noted that the difference between them is not slight; rather, it is very considerable and very important. In the moral (body) the principle of union is nothing else than the common end and the common cooperation of all under the authority of society for the attainment of that end; whereas in the Mystical Body of which we are speaking, this collaboration is supplemented by another internal principle, which exists effectively in the whole and in each of its parts and whose excellence is such that of itself it is vastly superior to whatever bonds of union may be found in a physical or moral body.

This is ... something, not of the natural, but of the supernatural order; rather (it is) something in itself infinite, uncreated: the Spirit of God, who, ... "numerically one and the same, fills and unifies the whole Church".¹

The Knowledge of Christ's Soul

3812 [230] ... Eiusmodi vero amantissima cognitio, qua divinus Redemptor a primo Incarnationis suae momento nos persecutus est, studiosam quamlibet humanae mentis vim exsuperat; quandoquidem per beatam illam visionem, qua vixdum in Deiparae sinu exceptus,

... But this most loving knowledge of our Divine Redeemer, of which we were the object from the first moment of his Incarnation, exceeds all that the human intellect can hope to grasp. For hardly was he conceived in the womb of the Mother of God, when he began to fruebatur, omnia mystici Corporis membra continenter perpetuoque sibi praesentia habet, suoque complectitur salutifero amore....

¹ *3811 Thomas Aquinas, De veritate, q. 29, a. 4, corpus (Parma ed. [1859] 9:451a / R. Busa, Opera omnia 3 [1980], 183).

enjoy the beatific vision, and in that vision all the members of his Mystical Body were continually and unceasingly present to him, and he embraced them with his redeeming love....

The Church as the Fullness of Christ

[Christus in nobis est] per Spiritum suum, quem nobiscum communicat et per quem ita in nobis operatur, ut quaecumque a Spiritu Sancto in animis peraguntur, etiam a Christo ibi peracta dicantur oporteat....¹

[Christ is in us] through his Spirit, whom he gives to us and through whom he acts within us in such a way that all the divine activity of the Holy Spirit within our souls must also be attributed to Christ....¹ 3813

Ex eadem autem Spiritus Christi communicatione efficitur, ut ... Ecclesia veluti plenitudo constituatur et complementum Redemptoris, Christus vero quoad omnia in Ecclesia quodammodo adimpleatur.² Quibus quidem verbis ipsam attigimus rationem, cur [231] ... Caput mysticum quod Christus est, et Ecclesia, quae hisce in terris veluti alter Christus eius personam gerit, unum novum hominem constituent, quo in salutifero crucis opere perpetuando caelum et terra iunguntur: Christum dicimus Caput et Corpus, Christum totum....

Through this same communication of the Spirit of Christ ... the Church becomes, as it were, the filling out and the complement of the Redeemer, while Christ in a sense attains through the Church a fullness in all things.² Herein we find the reason why ... the mystical Head, which is Christ, and the Church, which here below as another Christ shows forth his person, constitute one new man, in whom heaven and earth are joined together in perpetuating the saving work of the Cross: Christ, We mean, the Head and the Body, the whole Christ....

The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit in Souls

Id omnibus commune et inconcussum esto, si a germana velint doctrina, a rectoque Ecclesiae magisterio non aberrare: omnem nempe reiiciendum esse mysticae huius coagmentationis modum, quo christifideles, quavis ratione, ita creaturarum rerum ordinem praetergrediantur, atque in divina perperam invadant, ut vel una sempiterni Numinis attributio de iisdem tamquam propria praedicari queat. Ac praeterea certissimum illud firma mente retineant, hisce in rebus omnia esse habenda Sanctissimae Trinitati communia, quatenus eadem Deum ut supremam efficientem causam respiciant.

But let all agree uncompromisingly on this, if they would not err from truth and from the orthodox teaching of the Church: to reject every kind of mystic union by which the faithful of Christ should in any way pass beyond the sphere of creatures and wrongly enter the divine, were it only to the extent of appropriating to themselves as their own but one single attribute of the eternal Godhead. And, moreover, let (all) hold this as certain truth, that all these activities are common to the most Blessed Trinity, insofar as they have God as supreme efficient cause. 3814

Animadvertant quoque necesse est, hac in causa de occulto mysterio agi, quod in hoc terrestri exsilio, velamine quolibet detectum, omnino introspicere, humanaque lingua significari numquam possit. Inhabitare quidem Divinae Personae dicuntur, quatenus in creatis animantibus intellectu praeditis imperscrutabili modo praesentes, ab iisdem per cognitionem et amorem [232] attingantur,¹ quadam tamen ratione omnem naturam transcendentem, ac penitus intima et singulari.

It must also be borne in mind that there is question here of a hidden mystery, which during this earthly exile can only be dimly seen through a veil and which no human words can express. The Divine Persons are said to indwell inasmuch as they are present to beings endowed with intelligence in a way that lies beyond human comprehension, and in a unique and very intimate manner that transcends all created nature, these creatures enter into relationship with them through knowledge and love.¹ 3815

Ad quam quidem intuendam ut parumper saltem accedamus, non illa via ac ratio neglegenda est, quam Vaticana Synodus [*sessio III, Constitutio de fide catholica, cap. 4; 3015] in id genus rebus valde commendat; quae quidem ad hauriendam lucem contendens, qua Dei

If we would attain, in some measure, to a clearer perception of this truth, let us not neglect the method strongly recommended by the [First] Vatican Council [*sess. 3, Constitution on the Catholic Faith, chap. 4; 3015] in similar cases, by which these mysteries are

*3813 ¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, In Eph., c. 2, lectio 5 (Parma ed. 13:463b).

² Ibid., c. 1, lectio 8 (Parma ed. 13:456ab).

*3815 ¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I, q. 43, a. 3 (Editio Leonina 4:447b).

arcana paullisper saltem internoscantur, id assequitur, mysteria eadem inter se comparans et cum supremo fine, quo dirigantur.

Opportune igitur sapientissimus decessor Noster felicis recordationis Leo XIII, cum de hac nostra cum Christo coniunctione deque Divino nos inhabitante Paraclito loqueretur, ad beatam illam visionem oculos convertit, qua aliquando in caelis haec eadem mystica copulatio consummationem suam perfectionemque consequetur. “Haec mira coniunctio, inquit, quae suo nomine inhabitatio dicitur, condicione tantum seu statu ab ea discrepat, qua caelites Deus beando complectitur.”² Qua quidem visione, modo prorsus ineffabili fas erit Patrem, Filium Divinumque Spiritum mentis oculis superno lumine auctis contemplari, divinarum Personarum processionibus aeternum per aevum proxime adsistere, ac simillimo illi gaudio beari, quo beata est sanctissima et indivisa Trinitas.

compared one with another and with the end to which they are directed, so that in the light that this comparison throws upon them we are able to discern, at least partially, the hidden things of God.

Therefore, Our most learned predecessor Leo XIII of happy memory, speaking of our union with Christ and with the Divine Paraclete who dwells within us and fixing his gaze on that blessed vision through which this mystical union will attain its confirmation and perfection in heaven, says: “This wonderful union, or indwelling properly so-called, differs from that by which God embraces and gives joy to the elect only by reason of our earthly state.”² In that celestial vision it will be granted to the eyes of the human mind strengthened by the light of glory to contemplate the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit in an utterly ineffable manner, to assist throughout eternity at the processions of the Divine Persons, and to rejoice with a happiness like that with which the holy and undivided Trinity is happy.

False Tendencies of the Spiritual Life

3816 [234] ... Non enim desunt, qui haud satis considerantes, Paulum apostolum translata tantummodo verborum significatione hac in re fuisse locutum, nec peculiare ac proprias corporis physici, moralis, mystici significationes, ut omnino oportet, distinguentes, perversum aliquod inducunt unitatis commentum; quandoquidem divinum Redemptorem et Ecclesiae membra in physicam unam personam coire et coalescere iubent,¹ et dum hominibus divina attribuunt, Christum Dominum erroribus humanaeque in malum proclivitate obnoxium faciunt.

A qua quidem doctrinae fallacia quemadmodum catholica fides sanctorumque Patrum praecepta prorsus abhorrent, ita pariter gentium Apostoli mens ac sententia omnino refugit, qui, quamvis Christum eiusque mysticum Corpus mira inter se coagmentatione coniungat, alterum tamen alteri, ut Sponsum Sponsae, opponit [cf. Eph 5:22s].

3817 Nec minus a veritate aberrat periculosus eorum error, qui ex arcana omnium nostrum cum Christo coniunctione insanam quandam, ut aiunt, quietismum deducere conantur; quo quidem spiritualis omnium Christianorum vita eorumque ad virtutem progressio Divini Spiritus actioni unice attribuuntur, ea nempe seclusa ac posthabita, quae a nobis eidem praestari debet, socia ac veluti adiutrice opera. Nemo profecto infitiamur

... For there are some who neglect the fact that the apostle Paul has used metaphorical language in speaking of this doctrine and, failing to distinguish as they should the precise and proper meaning of the terms the physical body, the social body, and the Mystical Body, arrive at a distorted idea of unity. They make the Divine Redeemer and the members of the Church coalesce in one physical person,¹ and while they bestow divine attributes on man, they make Christ the Lord subject to error and to human inclination to evil.

But Catholic faith and the writings of the holy Fathers reject such false teaching as impious and sacrilegious; and to the mind of the apostle of the Gentiles it is equally abhorrent, for although he brings Christ and his Mystical Body into a wonderfully intimate union, he nevertheless distinguishes one from the other as Bridegroom from Bride [cf. Eph 5:22f.].

No less far from the truth is the dangerous error of those who endeavor to deduce from the mysterious union of us all with Christ a certain unhealthy quietism. They would attribute the whole spiritual life of Christians and their progress in virtue exclusively to the action of the divine Spirit, setting aside and neglecting the collaboration that is due from us. No one, of course, can deny that the Holy Spirit of Jesus Christ is the one source potest Sanctum Iesu Christi Spiritum unum esse fontem, ex quo superna omnis vis in Ecclesiam in eiusque membra profluat. . . .

² Leo XIII, encyclical Divinum illud munus (ASS 29 [1896/1897]: 653; *3331).

¹ It deals with the system of “panchristianity” propagated in a German book that appeared around 1940. The Council of Basel in sess. 22 of October 15, 1435, had already condemned a similar error of Augustine of Rome (MaC 29: 109 / COeD, 3rd ed., 493).

Attamen, quod homines in sanctitatis operibus constanter perseverent, quod in gratia in virtuteque alacri animo proficiant, quod denique non modo ad christianae perfectionis apicem strenue contendant, sed ceteros quoque ad eam assequendam pro viribus excitent, haec omnia caelestis Spiritus operari non vult, nisi iidem homines quotidiana actuosaque navitate suas partes agant. “Non enim dormientibus”, ait Ambrosius, “divina beneficia, sed observantibus deferuntur.”¹

Namque, si in mortali [235] nostro corpore haud intermissa exercitatione membra roborantur ac vigescunt, multo profecto magis id contingit in sociali Iesu Christi Corpore, in quo singula membra propria cuiusque libertate, conscientia agendique ratione fruuntur. Quam ob rem, qui dixit: “Vivo autem, iam non ego: vivit vero in me Christus” [Gal 2:20], idem asseverare non dubitavit: “Gratia eius (hoc est Dei) in me vacua non fuit, sed abundantius illis omnibus laboravi; non ego autem, sed gratia Dei mecum” [1 Cor 15:10].

Omnino igitur perspicuum est fallacibus hisce doctrinis mysterium de quo agimus non in spiritualem christifidelium profectum, sed in eorum ruinam miserime verti.

Quod ex falsis etiam eorum placitis evenit, qui asseverant, non tanti esse faciendam frequentem admissorum venialium, ut aiunt, confessionem, cum praestet potius generalis illa confessio, quam singulis diebus Sponsa Christi cum filiis suis sibi in Domino coniunctis, per sacerdotes faciat ad altare Dei accessuros.

Pluribus utique modis . . . haec admissa expiari possunt; sed ad alacriorem quotidie per virtutis iter progressionem faciendam maxime commendatum volumus pium illum, non sine Spiritus Sancti instinctu ab Ecclesia inductum, crebrae confessionis usum, quo recta sui ipsius cognitio augetur, christiana crescit humilitas, morum eradicatur pravitas, spirituali neglegentiae torporique obsistitur, conscientia purificatur, roboratur voluntas, salutaris animorum moderatio procuratur atque ipsius sacramenti vi augetur gratia. . . .

[Redarguuntur praeterea ii,] qui precibus nostris omnem veri nominis impetrandi vim denegant vel qui in hominum mentes insinuare conantur, supplicationes ad Deum privatim admotas parvi esse faciendas, cum of whatever supernatural powers enters into the Church and her members. . . .

But that men should persevere constantly in their good works, that they should advance eagerly in grace and virtue, that they should strive earnestly to reach the heights of Christian perfection and at the same time to the best of their power should stimulate others to attain the same goal—all this the heavenly Spirit does not will to effect unless they contribute their daily share of zealous activity. “For divine favors are conferred not on those who sleep, but on those who watch”,¹ as St. Ambrose says.

For if in our mortal body the members are strengthened and grow through continued exercise, much more truly can this be said of the social Body of Jesus Christ, in which each individual member retains his own personal freedom, responsibility, and principles of conduct. For that reason he who said: “It is no longer I who live, but Christ who lives in me” [Gal 2:20] did not at the same time hesitate to assert: “His (God’s) grace toward me was not in vain. On the contrary, I worked harder than any of them, though it was not I, but the grace of God which is with me” [1 Cor 15:10].

It is perfectly clear, therefore, that in these false doctrines the mystery that we are considering is not directed to the spiritual advancement of the faithful but is turned to their deplorable ruin.

The same result follows from the opinions of those 3818 who assert that little importance should be given to the frequent confession of venial sins. Far more important, they say, is that general confession which the Spouse of Christ, surrounded by her children in the Lord, makes each day by the mouth of the priest as he approaches the altar of God.

It is true that venial sins may be expiated . . . in many ways that are to be highly commended. But to ensure more rapid progress day by day in the path of virtue, we will that the pious practice of frequent confession, which was introduced into the Church by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, should be earnestly advocated. By it genuine self-knowledge is increased, Christian humility grows, bad habits are corrected, spiritual neglect and tepidity are resisted, the conscience is purified, the will strengthened, a salutary self-control is attained, and grace is increased in virtue of the sacrament itself. . . .

[Also to be reproached are] others who deny any 3819 impetratory power to our prayers or who endeavor to insinuate into men’s minds the idea that prayers offered to God in private should be considered of little worth, publicae potius, Ecclesiae nomine [236] adhibitae, reapse valeant, quippe quae a mystico proficiscantur Iesu Christi Corpore....

*3817¹ Ambrose of Milan, Expositio evangelii secundam Lucam IV, no. 49 (on Lk 4:27; CpChL 14:123^{590f}. / CSEL 32/IV:162^{22f}. / PL 15 [1887]: 1711A).

- 3820 Non desunt postremo, qui dicunt supplicationes nostras non ad ipsam Iesu Christi personam, sed ad Deum potius vel ad aeternum Patrem per Christum esse dirigendas, cum Servator noster, prout mystici sui Corporis Caput, “mediator Dei et hominum” [1 Tim 2:5] solummodo sit habendus.

Attamen id non solum Ecclesiae menti adversatur Christianorumque consuetudini, sed veritati etiam offendit. Christus enim ... secundum utramque naturam una simul totius Ecclesiae est Caput; ac ceteroquin ipse sollemniter asseveravit: “Si quid petieritis me in nomine meo, hoc faciam” [Io 14:14]. Et quam[237]vis in eucharistico praesertim sacrificio—in quo Christus, cum sacerdos ipsem et hostia sit, conciliatoris munere peculiari modo fungitur—orationes ad aeternum Patrem per Unigenitum suum plerumque admoveantur, nihilo secius non raro ... ad divinum quoque Redemptorem preces adhibentur....

whereas public prayers that are made in the name of the Church are those that really matter, since they proceed from the Mystical Body of Christ....

Finally, there are those who assert that our prayers should be directed, not to the person of Jesus Christ, but rather to God or to the Eternal Father through Christ, since our Savior as Head of his Mystical Body is only “mediator between God and men” [1 Tim 2:5].

But this certainly is opposed not only to the mind of the Church and to Christian usage, but to truth. For Christ ... is Head of the universal Church as he exists at once in both of his natures; moreover, he himself has solemnly declared: “If you ask anything in my name, I will do it” [Jn 14:14]. For although prayers are very often directed to the Eternal Father through the only begotten Son, especially in the eucharistic sacrifice—in which Christ, at once Priest and Victim, exercises in a special manner the office of Mediator—nevertheless not infrequently ... prayers are addressed to the Divine Redeemer also....

The Salvation of Men outside the Visible Church

- 3821 [242][Invitantur ii,] qui ad adspectabilem non pertinent Catholicae Ecclesiae compagem, ut ... [243] ... ab eo statu se eripere studeant, in quo de sempiterna cuiusque propria salute securi esse non possunt; quandoquidem, etiamsi inscio quodam desiderio ac voto ad mysticum Redemptoris Corpus ordinentur, tot tamen tantisque caelestibus muneribus adiumentisque carent, quibus in Catholica solummodo Ecclesia frui licet. Ingrediantur igitur catholicam unitatem, et nobiscum omnes in una Iesu Christi Corporis compagine coniuncti, ad unum Caput in gloriosissimae dilectionis societate concurrant....¹

- 3822 At si cupimus non intermissam eiusmodi totius mystici Corporis comprecationem admoveri Deo, ut aberrantes omnes in unum Iesu Christi ovile quam primum ingrediantur, profitemur tamen, omnino necessarium esse, id sponte libenterque fieri, cum nemo credat nisi volens.¹ Quam ob rem si qui, non credentes, eo reapse compelluntur, ut Ecclesiae aedificium intrent, ut ad altare accedant sacramentaque suscipiant, ii procul dubio veri christifideles non fiunt;² fides enim, sine qua “impossible est placere Deo” [Hbr 11:6] liberrimum esse debet obsequium intellectus et voluntatis [cf. *3008].

Si igitur aliquando contingat, ut, contra constantem Apostolicae huius Sedis doctrinam [cf. *3176], ad amplexandam catholicam fidem aliquis adigatur invitus, id Nos facere non possumus quin, pro officii Nostri conscientia, reprobemus....

[Let those be invited] who do not belong to the visible Body of the Catholic Church ... to seek to withdraw from that state in which they cannot be sure of their salvation. For even though by an unconscious desire and longing they have a certain relationship with the Mystical Body of the Redeemer, they still remain deprived of those many heavenly gifts and helps that can only be enjoyed in the Catholic Church. Therefore, may they enter into Catholic unity and, joined with us in the one, organic Body of Jesus Christ, may they together with us run on to the one Head in the society of most glorious love....¹

Though we desire this unceasing prayer to rise to God from the whole Mystical Body in common, that all the straying sheep may hasten to enter the one fold of Jesus Christ, yet we recognize that this must be done of their own free will; for no one believes unless he wills to believe.¹ Hence they are most certainly not genuine Christians² who against their belief are forced to go into a church, to approach the altar, and to receive the sacraments; for the “faith without which it is impossible to please God” [cf. Heb 11:6] is an entirely free “submission of intellect and will” [cf. *3008].

Therefore, whenever it happens, despite the constant teaching of this Apostolic See [cf. *3176], that anyone is compelled to embrace the Catholic faith against his will, Our sense of duty demands that We condemn the act....

*3821¹ Cf. Gelasius I, letter 14, or tract II (PL 59:89C / Thiel 529).

*3822¹ Cf. Augustine, In evangelium Iohannis, tract. 26, 2 (on Jn 6:44; CpChL 36:260f. / PL 35:1607).

² Cf. ibid.

3825–3831: Encyclical Divino afflante Spiritu, September 30, 1943

After the painful controversies that preceded it, this encyclical affirms the theological suitability of the historical-critical investigation of Sacred Scripture. In this way, it provides modern exegesis with a legitimate home in the Catholic Church.

Ed.: AAS 35 (1943): 309–19 / EnchB nos. 549–53, 557–61, 564f.

The Authenticity of the Vulgate

Quod autem Vulgatam Tridentina Synodus [cf. *1506] esse voluit latinam conversionem, “qua omnes pro authentica uterentur”, id quidem, ut omnes norunt, latinam solummodo respicit Ecclesiam, eiusdemque publicum Scripturae usum, ac nequaquam, procul dubio, primigeniorum textuum auctoritatem et vim minuit. Neque enim de primigeniis textibus tunc agebatur, sed de latinis quae illa aetate circumferebantur conversionibus, inter quas idem Concilium illam iure praeferendam edixit, quae “longo tot saeculorum usu in ipsa Ecclesia probata est”.

Haec igitur praecellens Vulgatae auctoritas seu, ut aiunt, authenticia non ob criticas praesertim rationes a Concilio statuta est, sed ob illius potius legitimum in Ecclesiis usum, per tot saeculorum decursum habitum; quo quidem usu demonstratur eandem, prout intellexit et intellegit Ecclesia, in rebus fidei ac morum ab omni prorsus esse errore immunem; ita ut, ipsa Ecclesia testante et confirmante, in disputationibus, lectionibus concionibusque tuto ac sine errandi periculo proferri possit; atque adeo eiusmodi authenticia non primario nomine critica, sed iuridica potius vocatur.

Quapropter haec Vulgatae in rebus doctrinae auctoritas minime vetat—immo id hodie fere postulat—, quominus eadem haec doctrina ex primigeniis etiam textibus comprobetur et confirmetur, atque etiam quominus passim in auxilium iidem textus vocentur, quibus recta Sacrarum Litterarum significatio ubique magis in dies patefiat atque explanetur.

Ac ne id quidem Tridentini Concilii decreto prohibetur, quominus nempe ad christifidelium usum et bonum et ad faciliorem divini eloquii intelligentiam, conversiones in vulgatas linguas conficiantur, eaeque etiam ex ipsis primigeniis textibus, ut iam multis in regionibus, approbante Ecclesiae auctoritate, laudabiliter factum esse novimus.

The Literal and Spiritual Sense of Sacred Scripture

Linguarum antiquarum cognitione et criticae artis subsidiis egregie instructus, exegeta catholicus ad illud accedat munus, quod ex omnibus ei impositis summum est, ut nempe germanam ipsam Sacrorum Librorum sententiam reperiat atque exponat. Quo in opere exsequendo ante oculos habeant interpretes sibi illud omnium maximum curandum esse, ut clare dispiciant ac definiant, quis sit verborum biblicorum sensus,

... And if the Council of Trent [cf. *1506] wished “that all should use as authentic” the Vulgate Latin version, this, as all know, applies only to the Latin Church and to the public use of the same Scriptures; nor does it, doubtless, in any way diminish the authority and value of the original texts. For there was no question then of these texts, but of the Latin versions, which were in circulation at that time, and of these the same council rightly declared to be preferable that which “had been approved by its long-continued use for so many centuries in the Church”.

Hence this special authority or, as they say, authenticity of the Vulgate was not affirmed by the council particularly for critical reasons, but rather because of its legitimate use in the Churches throughout so many centuries; by which use indeed the same is shown, in the sense in which the Church has understood and understands it, to be free from any error whatsoever in matters of faith and morals; so that, as the Church herself testifies and affirms, it may be quoted safely and without fear of error in disputations, in lectures, and in preaching; and so its authenticity is not specified primarily as critical, but rather as iuridical.

Wherefore this authority of the Vulgate in matters of doctrine by no means prevents—indeed, rather, today it almost demands—either the corroboration and confirmation of this same doctrine by the original texts or the having recourse on any and every occasion to the aid of these same texts, by which the correct meaning of the Sacred Letters is everywhere daily made more clear and evident.

Nor is it forbidden by the decree of the Council of Trent to make translations into the common tongue, even directly from the original texts themselves, for the use and benefit of the faithful and for the better understanding of the divine word, as we know to have been already done in a laudable manner in many countries with the approval of the ecclesiastical authority.

Being thoroughly prepared by the knowledge of the ancient languages and by the aids afforded by the art of criticism, let the Catholic exegete undertake the task that is the greatest of all those imposed on him, that, namely, of discovering and expounding the genuine meaning of the Sacred Books. In the performance of this task, let the interpreters bear in mind that their foremost and greatest endeavor should be to discern and define quem litteralem vocant. Hanc litteralem verborum significationem omni cum diligentia per linguarum cognitionem iidem eruant, ope adhibita contextus, comparationisque cum assimilabilibus locis; quae quidem omnia in profanorum quoque scriptorum interpretatione in auxilium vocari solent, ut auctoris mens luculenter pateat.

Sacrarum autem Litterarum exegetae, memores de verbo divinitus inspirato heic agi, cuius custodia et interpretatio ab ipso Deo Ecclesiae commissa est, non minus diligenter rationem habeant explanationum et declarationum magisterii Ecclesiae, itemque explicationis a sanctis Patribus datae, atque etiam “analogiae fidei”, ut Leo XIII in Encyclicis Litteris “Providentissimus Deus” [*3283] sapientissime animadvertit.

... Non tantum ... eas res exponant, quae ad historiam, archaeologiam, philologiam, ad aliasque huiusmodi disciplinas spectent; sed, illis quidem opportune allatis, quantum ad exegesis conferre possint, ostendant potissimum, quae sit singulorum librorum vel textuum theologica doctrina de rebus fidei et morum, ita ut haec eorum explanatio non modo theologos doctores adiuvet ad fidei dogmata proponenda confirmandaque, sed sacerdotibus etiam adiumento sit ad doctrinam christianam coram populo enucleandam, ac fidelibus denique omnibus ad vitam sanctam homineque christiano dignam agenda adserviat.

3827 [311] Talem cum dederint interpretationem, imprimis, ut diximus, theologiam, efficaciter illos ad silentium redigent, qui, asseverantes se vix quidquam in biblicis commentariis invenire, quod mentem ad Deum extollat, animum enutriet, interiori vitam promoveat, ad spiritualem quandam et mysticam, ut aiunt, interpretationem confugiendum esse dictitant [cf. *3792–3796]....

3828 Non omnis sane spiritualis sensus a Sacra Scriptura excluditur. Quae enim in Vetere Testamento dicta vel facta sunt, ita a Deo sapientissime sunt ordinata atque disposita, ut praeterita spirituali modo ea praesignificarent, quae in novo gratiae foedere essent futura. Quare exegeta, sicut litteralem, ut aiunt, verborum significationem, quam hagiographus intenderit atque expresserit, reperire atque exponere debet, ita spiritualem etiam, dummodo rite constet illam a Deo fuisse datam. Deus enim solummodo spiritualem hanc significationem et novisse potuit, et nobis revelare.

Iamvero eiusmodi sensum in Sanctis Evangelii nobis indicat, nosque edocet divinus ipse Servator; hunc etiam, Magistri exemplum imitati, Apostoli loquendo scribendoque profitentur; hunc perpetuo tradita ab clearly that sense of the biblical words which is called literal. Aided by the context and by comparison with similar passages, let them therefore by means of their knowledge of languages search out with all diligence the literal meaning of the words; all these helps, indeed, are wont to be pressed into service in the explanation also of profane writers, so that the mind of the author may be made abundantly clear.

The commentators of the Sacred Letters, mindful of the fact that here there is question of a divinely inspired text, the care and interpretation of which have been confided to the Church by God himself, should no less diligently take into account the explanations and declarations of the teaching authority of the Church, as likewise the interpretation given by the holy Fathers and even “the analogy of faith”, as Leo XIII most wisely observed in the encyclical letter Providentissimus Deus [*3283].

... They should not limit themselves ... to expounding exclusively these matters that belong to the historical, archaeological, philological, and other auxiliary sciences, but, having duly referred to these, insofar as they may aid the exegesis, they should set forth in particular the theological doctrine in faith and morals of the individual books or texts so that their exposition may not only aid the professors of theology in their explanations and proofs of the dogmas of faith, but may also be of assistance to priests in their presentation of Christian doctrine to the people and, finally, may help all the faithful to lead a life that is holy and worthy of a Christian.

By making such an exposition, which is above all, as We have said, theological, they will efficaciously reduce to silence those who, affirming that they scarcely ever find anything in biblical commentaries to raise their hearts to God, to nourish their souls, or promote their interior life, repeatedly urge that we should have recourse to a certain spiritual and, as they say, mystical interpretation [cf. *3792–3796]....

Doubtless all spiritual sense is not excluded from the Sacred Scripture. For what was said and done in the Old Testament was ordained and disposed by God with such consummate wisdom that things past prefigured in a spiritual way those that were to come under the new dispensation of grace. Wherefore the exegete, just as he must search out and expound the literal meaning of the words intended and expressed by the sacred writer, so also must he do likewise for the spiritual sense, provided it is clearly intended by God. For God alone could have known this spiritual meaning and have revealed it to us.

Now the Divine Savior himself points out to us and teaches us this same sense in the Holy Gospel; the apostles also, following the example of the Master, profess it in their spoken and written words; the unchanging tradition

Ecclesia doctrina ostendit; hunc denique antiquissimus liturgiae usus declarat, ubicumque rite adhiberi potest notum illud pronuntiatum: Lex precandi lex credendi est [cf. *246: Legem credendi ...].

Hunc igitur spirituales sensum, a Deo ipso intentum et ordinatum, exegetae catholici ea diligentia patefaciant ac proponant, quam divini verbi dignitas exposcit; alias autem translata rerum significationes ne tamquam genuinum Sacrae Scripturae sensum proferant, religiose caveant.

The Literary Genres in Sacred Scripture

[314] ... Interpres igitur omni cum cura, ac nulla quam recentiores pervestigaciones attulerint luce neglecta dispicere enitatur, quae propria fuerit sacri scriptoris indoles ac vitae condicio, qua floruerit aetate, quos fontes adhibuerit sive scriptos sive ore traditos, quibusque sit usus formis dicendi. Sic enim satius cognoscere poterit, quis hagiographus fuerit, quidque scribendo significare voluerit. Neque enim quemquam latet summam interpretandi normam eam esse, qua perspicitur et definiatur quid scriptor dicere intenderit...¹

Quisnam autem sit literalis sensus, in veterum orientalium auctorum verbis et scriptis saepenumero non ita in aperto est ut apud nostrae aetatis scriptores... [315] ... Veteres enim Orientales, ut quod in mente haberent exprimerent, non semper iisdem formis iisdemque dicendi modis utebantur, quibus nos hodie, sed illis potius, qui apud suorum temporum et locorum homines usu erant recepti. Hi quinam fuerint, exegeta non quasi in antecessum statuere potest, sed accurata tantummodo antiquarum Orientis litterarum pervestigatione...

Haec eadem pervestigatio id quoque iam lucide comprobavit, israeliticum populum inter ceteras Orientis veteres nationes in historia rite scribenda, tam ob antiquitatem, quam ob fidelem rerum gestarum relationem singulariter praestitisse; quod quidem ex divinae inspirationis charismate atque ex peculiari historiae biblicae fine, qui ad religionem pertinet, profecto eruitur.

Nihilominus etiam apud Sacros Scriptores, sicut apud ceteros antiquos, certas quasdam inveniri exponendi narrandique artes, certos quasdam idiotismos, linguis praesertim semiticis proprios, approximationes quae dicuntur, ac certos loquendi modos hyperbolicos, immo interdum etiam paradoxa, quibus res menti firmius imprimantur, nemo sane miretur, qui de inspiratione biblica recte sentiat. A Libris enim Sacris nulla aliena est illarum loquendi rationum, quibus apud veteres of the Church approves it; and, finally, the most ancient usage of the liturgy proclaims it, wherever the well-known principle may be rightly applied: “The rule of prayer is the rule of faith” [cf. *246; The rule of believing ...].

Let Catholic exegetes then disclose and expound this spiritual significance, intended and ordained by God, with that care which the dignity of the divine word demands; but let them scrupulously refrain from proposing as the genuine meaning of Sacred Scripture other figurative senses.

... Let the interpreter, then, with all care and without neglecting any light derived from recent research, endeavor to determine the peculiar character and circumstances of the sacred writer, the age in which he lived, the sources written or oral to which he had recourse, and the forms of expression he employed. Thus can he the better understand who was the inspired author and what he wishes to express by his writings. There is no one, indeed, but knows that the supreme rule of interpretation is to discover and define what the writer intended to express...¹ 3829

What is the literal sense of a passage is not always as obvious in the speeches and writings of the ancient authors of the East as it is in the works of our own time... For the ancient peoples of the East, in order to express their ideas, did not always employ those forms or kinds of speech that we use today; but they rather employed those used by the men of their times and countries. What those exactly were the commentator cannot determine, as it were, in advance, but only after a careful examination of the ancient literature of the East... 3830

The same inquiry has also shown the special preeminence of the people of Israel among all the other ancient nations of the East in their mode of compiling history, both by reason of its antiquity and by reason of the faithful record of the events; qualities that may well be attributed to the gift of divine inspiration and to the peculiar religious purpose of biblical history.

Nevertheless, no one who has a correct idea of biblical inspiration will be surprised to find even in the sacred writers, as in other ancient authors, certain fixed ways of expounding and narrating, certain definite idioms, especially of a kind peculiar to the Semitic tongues, so-called approximations, and certain hyperbolic modes of expression, indeed, at times, even paradoxical, which help to impress the ideas more deeply on the mind. For of the modes of expression that, among ancient peoples, *3829¹ Cited in Athanasius of Alexandria, Contra Arianos I, 54 (PG 26:123).

gentes, praesertim apud Orientales, humanus sermo ad sententiam exprimendam uti solebat, ea tamen condicione, ut adhibitum dicendi genus Dei sanctitati et veritati haudquaquam repugnet, quemadmodum, pro sagacitate sua, iam ipse Angelicus Doctor hisce verbis animadvertit: “In Scriptura divina tra[316]duntur nobis per modum, quo homines solent uti.”¹

... Non raro enim, ... cum sacros Auctores ab historiae fide aberrasse, aut res minus accurate rettulisse obiurgando nonnulli iactant, nulla alia de re agi comperitur, nisi de suetis illis nativis antiquorum dicendi narrandique modis, qui in mutuo hominum inter se commercio passim adhiberi solebant, ac reapse licito communique more adhibebantur....

and especially those of the East, human language used to express its thought, none is excluded from the Sacred Books, provided the way of speaking adopted in no wise contradicts the holiness and truth of God, as, with his customary wisdom, the Angelic Doctor already observed in these words: “In Scripture divine things are presented to us in the manner that is in common use among men.”¹

... Not infrequently ... when some persons reproachfully charge the sacred writers with some historical error or inaccuracy in the recording of facts, on closer examination it turns out to be nothing else than those customary modes of expression and narration peculiar to the ancients, which used to be employed in the mutual dealings of social life and which in fact were sanctioned by common usage....

The Freedom of Scientific Biblical Research

3831 [317] Nostri igitur rerum biblicarum cultores in hanc quoque rem animum debita diligentia intendant neque quidquam omittant, quod novitatis attulerint cum archaeologia tum antiqua rerum gestarum historia priscarumque litterarum scientia quodque aptum sit, quo melius veterum scriptorum mens eorumque ratiocinandi, narrandi scribendique modus, forma et ars cognoscatur.... Omnis enim humana cognitio etiamsi non sacra ut suam habet quasi insitam dignitatem et excellentiam—quippe quae sit quaedam finita participatio infinitae cognitionis Dei—ita novam altioreque dignitatem et quasi consecrationem assequitur, cum ad res ipsas divinas clariore luce collustrandas adhibetur....

[319] ... Catholicus interpret actuoso fortique suae disciplinae amore actus ac sanctae matri Ecclesiae sincere devotus neutiquam retineri debet, quominus difficiles quaestiones hucusque nondum enodatas iteram atque iterum aggrediatur ... , ut ... certis quoque profanarum disciplinarum conclusionibus debito modo satisfaciatur.

Horum autem strenuorum in vinea Domini operariorum conatus non solummodo aequo iustoque animo, sed summa etiam cum caritate iudicandos esse ceteri omnes Ecclesiae filii meminerint; qui quidem ab illo haud satis prudenti studio abhorreere debent, quo quidquid novum est, ob hoc ipsum censetur esse impugnandum aut in suspicionem adducendum. Illud enim imprimis ante oculos habeant, in normis ac legibus ab Ecclesia datis de fidei morumque doctrina agi; atque inter multa illa, quae in sacris libris, legalibus, historicis, sapientialibus et prophetis proponuntur, pauca tantum esse, quorum sensus ab Ecclesiae auctoritate declaratus sit, neque plura ea esse, de quibus unanimes sanctorum Patrum sit sententia.

Let those who cultivate biblical studies turn their attention with all due diligence toward this point, and let them neglect none of those discoveries, whether in the domain of archaeology or in ancient history or literature, that serve to make better known the mentality of the ancient writers as well as their manner and art of reasoning, narrating, and writing.... For all human knowledge, even the nonsacred, has indeed its own proper dignity and excellence, being a finite participation of the infinite knowledge of God, but it acquires a new and higher dignity and, as it were, a consecration when it is employed to cast a brighter light upon the things of God....

There is no reason why the Catholic commentator, inspired by an active and ardent love of his subject and sincerely devoted to Holy Mother Church, should in any way be deterred from grappling again and again with these difficult problems, hitherto unsolved, ... in order ... to provide a satisfactory solution to the indubitable conclusions of the profane sciences.

Let all the other sons of the Church bear in mind that the efforts of these resolute laborers in the vineyard of the Lord should be judged not only with equity and justice, but also with the greatest charity; all, moreover, should abhor that intemperate zeal which imagines that whatever is new should for that very reason be opposed or suspected. Let them bear in mind, above all, that in the rules and laws promulgated by the Church there is question of doctrine regarding faith and morals; and that in the immense matter contained in the Sacred Books—legislative, historical, sapiential, and prophetic—there are but few texts whose sense has been defined by the authority of the Church, nor are those more numerous about which the teaching of the holy Fathers is unanimous.

*3830¹ Thomas Aquinas, In Heb., c. 1, lect. 4 (Parma ed. 13:678a).

Multa igitur remanent, eaque gravissima, in quibus edisserendis et explanandis catholicorum interpretum acumen et ingenium libere exerceri potest ac debet, ut ad omnium utilitatem, ad maiorem in dies doctrinae sacrae profectum et ad Ecclesiae defensionem et honorem ex suo quisque viritum conferat.

There remain, therefore, many things, and of the greatest importance, in the discussion and exposition of which the skill and genius of Catholic commentators may and ought to be freely exercised, so that each may contribute his part to the advantage of all, to the continued progress of the sacred doctrine and to the defense and honor of the Church.

3832–3837: Instruction of the Sacred Penitentiary, March 25, 1944

Ed.: AAS 36 (1944): 155f.

General Absolution

[Ad dubia removenda quoad facultatem] impertiendi in quibusdam rerum adiunctis absolutionem sacramentalem generali formula seu communi absolutione, sine praevia peccatorum confessione a singulis Christi fidelibus peracta, S. Paenitentiarum [declarat]:

[In order to remove doubts about the faculty] to impart in certain situations sacramental absolution with a general formula or with a common absolution, without a preceding confession of sins being made by individual members of the Christian faithful, the Sacred Penitentiary [declares]: 3832

1. Sacerdotes, licet ad confessiones sacramentales excipiendas adprobati non sint, facultate fruuntur absolventi generali modo atque una simul:

1. Priests, even if they are not authorized to hear sacramental confessions, enjoy the faculty to absolve (the following) in a general and simultaneous way: 3833

a) Milites imminenti aut commisso proelio, prout in mortis periculo constitutos, quando, sive prae militum multitudine sive prae temporis angustia, singuli audiri nequeunt. Si tamen rerum adiuncta eiusmodi sint, ut vel moraliter impossibile vel admodum difficile videatur, milites absolvere imminenti aut commisso proelio, tunc licet eos absolvere statim ac necessarium iudicabitur.

a. Soldiers, in combat that is imminent or already begun, insofar as they are in danger of death, when, either because of the great number of soldiers or the restriction of time, they cannot be heard individually. If, nevertheless, the circumstances may be such that it seems morally impossible or extremely difficult to absolve the soldiers in combat that is imminent or already begun, then it is permitted and considered necessary to absolve them immediately.

b) Cives et milites instante mortis periculo, durantibus hostilibus incursionibus.

b. Civilians and soldiers in immediate danger of death during hostile attacks.

2. Praeter casus, in quibus agitur de mortis periculo, non licet sacramentaliter absolvere plures una simul, aut singulos dimidiate tantum confessos, ratione tantum magni concursus paenitentium, qualis verbi gratia potest contingere in die magnae alicuius festivitatis aut indulgentiae (cf. prop. 59 ex damnatis ab Innocentio XI die 2 Martii 1679 [*2159]): licet vero, si accedat alia gravis omnino et urgens necessitas, gravitati praecepti divini integritatis confessionis proportionata, verbi gratia si paenitentes—secus nulla sua culpa—diu gratia sacramentali et sacra communione carere cogantur... [156]

2. Outside of cases that involve the danger of death, it is not permitted to absolve sacramentally multiple persons at the same time or individuals who have only half confessed because of a great influx of penitents, as, for example, could happen on the day of some great festival or indulgence (cf. proposition 59 of (the propositions) censured by Innocent XI on March 2, 1679 [*2159]); it is, however, permitted, if there may occur some other very grave and urgent necessity, in proportion to the gravity of the divine precept of the integrity of confession, for example, if the penitents—without any fault on their part—would be forced to be deprived for a long time of sacramental grace and holy communion... 3834

4. [Inter alia, paenitentes monendi sunt] omnino necesse esse, ut qui absolutionem turmatim acceperint, in primo deinceps suscipiendo paenitentiae sacramento, gravia singula peccata sua rite confiteantur, quae non antea confessi fuerint.

4. [Among other things, penitents need to be admonished] that it is absolutely necessary that those who have received communal absolution should, in the first subsequent reception of the sacrament of penance, confess, according to form, all individual mortal sins that were not previously confessed. 3835

- 3836 5. Sacerdotes aperte fideles doceant, eos graviter prohiberi, ne quamvis sibi conscius sint culpae mortalis, nondum in confessione recte accusatae et remissae, et obligatio integre lethalia peccata confitendi urgeat ex lege sive divina sive ecclesiastica, de industria declinent huic obligationi satisfacere, occasionem expectantes, qua absolutio turmatim detur.
- 3837 7. Si tempus suppetat, haec absolutio sueta atque integra formula in plurali numero impertienda est; secus vero haec brevior formula adhiberi potest: "Ego vos absolvo ab omnibus censuris et peccatis in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti."
5. Let priests clearly teach the faithful that it is gravely prohibited to them, when they are aware of mortal sin not yet properly acknowledged and remitted in confession, and the obligation, based on divine and ecclesiastical law, requires mortal sins to be confessed completely, to refuse on purpose to satisfy this obligation by awaiting the occasion when communal absolution will be given.
7. If there is sufficient time, this absolution should be imparted with the usual and complete formula (putting it) in the plural; otherwise, however, the following shorter formula can be used: "I absolve you from all censures and sins in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

3838: Decree of the Holy Office, March 29 (April 1), 1944

Cf. Pius XI, encyclical Casti connubii (*3707), which refers to the Roman Catechism (Catechismus Romanus Concilii Tridentini) II, 8, 13. For later development on the doctrine of the ends of marriage, see the encyclical Humanae vitae (AAS 60 [1968]: 486–92; *4470–4479) and the apostolic exhortation Familiaris consortio (AAS 74 [1982]: 92–149; *4700–4716).

Ed.: AAS 36 (1944): 103.

The Ends of Marriage

- 3838 Expos.: [In nonnullis scriptis asseritur] finem primarium matrimonii non esse prolis generationem, vel fines secundarios non esse fini primario subordinatos, sed ab eo independentes.
- Hisce in elucubrationibus primarius coniugii finis alius ab aliis designatur, ut ex. gr.: coniugium per omnimodam vitae actionisque communionem complementum ac personalis perfectio; coniugium mutuus amor atque unio fovenda ac perficienda per psychicam et somaticam propriae personae traditionem; et huiusmodi alia plura.
- In iisdem scriptis interdum verbis in documentis Ecclesiae occurrentibus (uti sunt v. gr. finis, primarius, secundarius) sensus tribuitur, qui cum his vocibus, secundum communem theologorum usum, non congruit.
- Qu.*: An admitti possit quorundam recentiorum sententia, qui vel negant finem primarium matrimonii esse prolis generationem et educationem, vel docent fines secundarios fini primario non esse essentialiter subordinatos, sed esse aequae principales et independentes?
- Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 30. Mart.)*: Negative.
- Exposition*: [In certain writings it is asserted] that the primary end of matrimony is not the generation of offspring or that the secondary ends are not subordinate to the primary end but are independent of it.
- In these works, the primary end of marriage is designated differently by the various (writers), as for example: the completion and personal perfection of the spouses through a complete mutual fellowship of life and action; mutual love and the fostering and perfection of the union of the spouses by the psychic and bodily surrender of one's own person; and many other such things.
- In the same writings a sense is sometimes attributed to words occurring in documents of the Church (as, for example, primary, secondary end) that does not agree with these concepts according to the common usage by theologians.
- Question*: Can the opinion of certain modern (authors) be admitted who either deny that the primary end of matrimony is the generation and raising of offspring or teach that the secondary ends are not essentially subordinate to the primary end but are equally paramount and independent?
- Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on March 30)*: No.

3839: Decree of the Holy Office, July 19 (21), 1944

Around 1810, the priest Manuel de Lacunza y Dfaz had written, under the pseudonym of Juan Josofat Ben-Ezra, the work Venida del Mesías en gloria y majestad, which was prohibited by the Holy Office on September 6, 1824. He held to a moderate form of millenarianism (or chiliasm). Against this doctrine, emerging once more in the twentieth century, the Holy Office, in a letter to Archbishop José M. Caro Rodríguez of Santiago, Chile, of July 11, 1941 (PerRMor 31 [1942]: 167), came to a decision corresponding to the following decree.

Ed.: AAS 36 (1944): 212.

Millenarianism (Chiliasm)

Qu.: Quid sentiendum de systemate Millenarismi mitigati, docentis scilicet Christum Dominum ante finale iudicium, sive praevia sive non praevia plurium iustorum resurrectione, visibiliter in hanc terram regnandi causa esse venturum.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 20. Iul.): Systema Millenarismi mitigati tuto doceri non posse.

Question: What must be thought of the system of mitigated millenarianism that plainly teaches that Christ the Lord before the final judgment, whether or not preceded by the resurrection of the many just, will come visibly to rule over this world? 3839

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on July 20): The system of mitigated millenarianism cannot be taught safely.

3840–3855: Encyclical Mediator Dei, November 20, 1947

The encyclical offers, for the first time, an exposition by the Magisterium on the nature of the liturgy. It incorporates the most important insights of the liturgical movement of the late nineteenth century and thus prepares the way for the liturgical renewal brought about by the Second Vatican Council.

Ed.: AAS 39 (1947): 528–80.

The Essential Elements of the Liturgy

In omni actione liturgica una cum Ecclesia praesens adest divinus eius Conditor; praesens adest Christus in augusto altaris sacrificio, cum in administris sui persona, tum maxime sub eucharisticis speciebus; praesens adest in sacramentis virtute sua, quam in eadem transfundit utpote efficiendae sanctitatis instrumenta; praesens adest denique in Deo admotis laudibus ac supplicationibus, secundum illud: “Ubi enim sunt duo vel tres congregati in nomine meo, ibi sum in medio eorum” [Mt 18:20].

Sacra igitur Liturgia cultum publicum constituit, quem Redemptor noster, Ecclesiae Caput, caelesti Patri habet, quemque christifidelium societas Conditori suo et per ipsum aeterno Patri tribuit; utque omnia breviter perstringamus, integrum constituit publicum cultum [529] mystici Iesu Christi Corporis, Capitis nempe membrorumque eius....

[530]... Universus autem, quem Ecclesia Deo adhibet, cultus, ut externus, ita internus esse debet. Externus quidem; nam id natura postulat hominis, qui ex animo corporeque constat ...; ac divinus cultus non tantum ad singulos pertinet, sed ad humanam etiam consortionem, atque adeo [531] socialis sit oportet, quod profecto esse nequit, nisi in religionis etiam rebus externa habeantur vincula externaque significationes. Id denique Mystici Corporis unitatem peculiari modo patefacit....

At praecipuum divini cultus elementum internum esse debet: oportet enim semper in Christo vivere eidemque se totum dedere, ut in eo, cum eo et per eum debita caelesti Patri attribatur gloria....

[532] ... Quamobrem a vera ac germana sacrae Liturgiae notione ac sententia omnino ii aberrant, qui eam utpote divini cultus partem iudicent externam

Along with the Church, therefore, her Divine Founder is present at every liturgical function: Christ is present at the august sacrifice of the altar both in the person of his minister and above all under the eucharistic species. He is present in the sacraments, infusing into them the power that makes them ready instruments of sanctification. He is present, finally, in prayer of praise and petition we direct to God, as it is written: “Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them” [Mt 18:20]. 3840

The sacred liturgy is, consequently, the public worship that our Redeemer as Head of the Church renders to the Father as well as the worship that the community of the faithful renders to its Founder and, through him, to the heavenly Father. It is, in short, the worship rendered by the Mystical Body of Christ in the entirety of its Head and members.... 3841

... The worship rendered by the Church to God must be, in its entirety, interior as well as exterior. It is exterior because the nature of man as a composite of body and soul requires it to be so ...; and the worship of God, being the concern not merely of individuals but of the whole community of mankind, must therefore be social as well. This obviously it cannot be unless religious activity is also organized and manifested outwardly. Exterior worship, finally, reveals and emphasizes the unity of the Mystical Body.... 3842

But the chief element of divine worship must be interior. For we must always live in Christ and give ourselves to him completely, so that in him, with him, and through him the heavenly Father may be duly glorified....

... It is an error, consequently, and a mistake to think of the sacred liturgy as merely the outward or visible part of divine worship or as an ornamental ceremonial. 3843

solummodo ac sensibus obiectam, vel quasi decorum quemdam caerimoniarum apparatus; nec minus ii aberrant, qui eam veluti meram legum praeceptorumque summam reputent, quibus ecclesiastica hierarchia iubeat sacros instrui ordinarique ritus. . . .

No less erroneous is the notion that it consists solely in a list of laws and prescriptions according to which the ecclesiastical hierarchy orders the sacred rites to be performed. . . .

The Efficacy of Liturgical Actions in the Order of Grace

3844 Efficacitas, si de eucharistico sacrificio ac de sacramentis agitur, ex opere operato potius ac primo loco oritur. Si vero vel actionem illam consideramus intaminatae Iesu Christi Sponsae, qua eadem precibus sacrisque caerimoniis eucharisticum adornat sacrificium et sacramenta, vel si de “sacramentalibus” ac de ceteris ritibus agitur, quae ab ecclesiastica instituta sunt hierarchia, tum efficacitas habetur potius ex opere operantis Ecclesiae, quatenus ea sancta est atque arctissime cum suo Capite coniuncta operatur.

This efficacy, where there is question of the eucharistic sacrifice and the sacraments, derives first of all and principally from the act itself. But if one considers the part that the Immaculate Spouse of Jesus Christ takes in the action, embellishing the sacrifice and sacraments with prayer and sacred ceremonies, or if one refers to the “sacramentals” and the other rites instituted by the hierarchy of the Church, then its effectiveness is due rather to the action of the Church, inasmuch as she is holy and acts always in closest union with her Head.

3845 Quam ad rem cupimus, Venerabiles Fratres, ut animum intendatis vestrum ad novas illas cogitandi iudicandique rationes de christiana pietate, quam “obiectivam” vocant; quae quidem rationes, dum mystici Corporis mysterium itemque veracem gratiae actionem sanctitatis effectricem divinosque sacramentorum et eucharistici sacrificii actus in perspicuo po[533]nere conantur, eo tamen contendere videntur, ut “subiectivam” seu “personalem” quam dicunt pietatem vel imminuant vel omnino praetermittant.

In this connection, Venerable Brethren, We desire to direct your attention to certain recent theories touching a so-called “objective” piety. While these theories attempt, it is true, to throw light on the mystery of the Mystical Body, on the effective reality of sanctifying grace, on the action of God in the sacraments and in the Mass, it is nonetheless apparent that they tend to belittle, or pass over in silence, what they call “subjective”, or “personal”, piety.

. . . Christus [per sacramenta et per sacrificium suum] nullo non tempore humanum genus expiat Deoque consecrat. Ea igitur “obiectiva”, quae dicitur, virtute pollent, quae reapse animos nostros divinae Iesu Christi vitae facit participes. Ideo non ex nostra, sed ex divina virtute eis effectrix illa vis inest, quae membrorum pietatem cum Capitis pietate coniungit eandemque quodammodo reddit totius communitatis actionem.

. . . Christ [through the sacraments and through his sacrifice] is constantly atoning for the sins of mankind, constantly consecrating it to God. They then possess that “objective” power to make us really and personally sharers in the divine life of Jesus Christ. Not from any ability of our own, but by the power of God are they endowed with the capacity to unite the piety of members with that of the Head and to make this, in a sense, the action of the whole community.

Quibus ex acutis argumentis nonnulli concludunt, christiana omnis pietas in mystici Corporis Christi mysterio consistat oportere, nulla habita “personali” seu “subiectiva” ut aiunt ratione, atque adeo cetera religionis opera negligenda reputant, quae cum sacra Liturgia arcte non devinciuntur et extra cultum publicum absolvantur.

From these profound considerations some are led to conclude that all Christian piety must be centered in the mystery of the Mystical Body of Christ, with no regard for what is “personal” or “subjective”, as they would have it. As a result they feel that all other religious exercises not directly connected with the sacred liturgy and performed outside public worship should be omitted.

Quas tamen circa duplicis pietatis genera conclusiones, quamvis optima sint quae supra proponuntur principia, fallaces omnino esse, insidiosas ac perniciosissimas nemo est qui non videat.

But though the principles set forth above are excellent, it must be plain to everyone that the conclusions drawn from them respecting two sorts of piety are false, insidious, and quite pernicious.

Utique retinendum est sacramenta altarisque sacrificium intimam habere in semet ipsis virtutem, utpote quae sint ipsius Christi actiones . . . ; verumtamen ut eadem debitam efficaciam habeant, opus est prorsus, ut rectae animi nostri dispositiones accedant. . . .

Very truly, the sacraments and the sacrifice of the altar, being Christ’s own actions, must be held to be capable in themselves . . . ; but if they are to produce their proper effect, it is absolutely necessary that our hearts be properly disposed to receive them. . . .

[537] ... In spirituali igitur vita nulla intercedere potest discrepantia vel repugnantia inter divinam illam actionem, quae ad perpetuandam redemptionem nostram gratiam in animos infundit, ac sociam laboriosamque hominis operam, quae donum Dei vacuum non reddat oportet [cf. 2 Cor 6:1]; itemque inter externi sacramentorum ritus efficacitatem, quae ex opere operato oritur, atque eorum bene merentem actum, qui eadem impertiunt vel suscipiunt, quem quidem actum opus operantis vocamus; ac pari modo publicas supplicationes inter privatasque preces; inter rectam agendi rationem supernarumque contemplationem rerum; inter vitam asceticam ac Liturgiae pietatem; ac denique inter ecclesiasticae hierarchiae iurisdictionem legitimumque magisterium ac potestatem illam, quae proprie sacerdotalis dicitur, quaeque in sacro exercetur ministerio....

Procul dubio liturgica precatio, cum publica sit inclitae Iesu Christi Sponsae supplicatio, privatis precibus potiore excellentia praestat.¹ Quae tamen potior excellentia neutiquam significat duo haec precandi genera inter se discrepare vel repugnare. Uno enim eodemque cum sint studio animata, una simul etiam confluent ac componuntur secundum illud “omnia et in omnibus Christus” [Col 3:11], ad idemque contendunt propositum, donec in nobis formetur Christus [cf. Gal 4:19].

The Nature of the Eucharistic Sacrifice

[547] ... Christianae religionis caput ac veluti centrum sanctissimae Eucharistiae mysterium est, quam olim Summus Sacerdos Christus instituit, quamque per suos administratos perpetuo in Ecclesia renovari iubet....

[548] ... Altaris sacrificium non mera est ac simplex Iesu Christi cruciatuum ac mortis commemoratio, sed vera ac propria sacrificatio, qua quidem per incruentam immolationem Summus Sacerdos id agit, quod iam in cruce fecit, semet ipsum aeterno Patri hostiam offerens acceptissimam....

Dissimilis tamen ratio est, qua Christus offertur. In cruce enim totum semet ipsum suosque Deo obtulit dolores; victimae vero immolatio per cruentam mortem libera voluntate obitam effecta est. In ara autem, ob gloriosum humanae naturae suae statum, “mors illi ultra non dominabitur” [Rm 6:9], ideoque sanguinis effusio haud possibilis est; verumtamen ex divinae sapientiae consilio Redemptoris nostri sacrificatio per externa signa, quae sunt mortis indices, mirando quodam modo ostenditur. Siquidem per panis “transsubstantiationem”

... In the spiritual life, consequently, there can be no opposition between the action of God, who pours forth his grace into men’s hearts so that the work of the redemption may always abide, and the tireless collaboration of man, who must not render vain the gift of God [cf. 2 Cor 6:1]. No more can the efficacy of the external administration of the sacraments, which comes from the rite itself, be opposed to the meritorious action of their ministers or recipients, which we call the agent’s action. Similarly, no conflict exists between public prayer and prayers in private, between morality and contemplation, between the ascetical life and devotion to the liturgy. Finally, there is no opposition between the jurisdiction and teaching office of the ecclesiastical hierarchy and the specifically priestly power exercised in the sacred ministry....

Unquestionably, liturgical prayer, being the public supplication of the illustrious Spouse of Jesus Christ, is superior in excellence to private prayers.¹ But this superior worth does not at all imply contrast or incompatibility between these two kinds of prayer. For both merge harmoniously in the single spirit that animates them, “Christ is all, and in all” [Col 3:11]. Both tend to the same objective: until Christ be formed in us [cf. Gal 4:19].

... The mystery of the most Holy Eucharist that Christ, the High Priest, instituted and which he commands to be continually renewed in the Church by his ministers is the culmination and center, as it were, of the Christian religion....

The august sacrifice of the altar, then, is no mere empty commemoration of the Passion and death of Jesus Christ, but a true and proper act of sacrifice, whereby the High Priest by an unbloody immolation offers himself as a most acceptable victim to the Eternal Father, as he did upon the Cross....

The manner, however, in which Christ is offered is different. On the Cross he completely offered himself and all his sufferings to God, and the immolation of the victim was brought about by the bloody death, which he underwent of his free will. But on the altar, by reason of the glorified state of his human nature, “death no longer has dominion over him” [Rom 6:9], and so the shedding of his blood is impossible; still, according to the plan of divine wisdom, the sacrifice of our Redeemer is shown forth in an admirable manner by external signs that are

3846

3847

3848

*3846 ¹ Cf. Pius XI, encyclical Ad catholici Sacerdotii, December 20, 1935 (AAS 28 [1936]: 18f.).

in corpus vnique in sanguinem Christi, ut eius corpus reapse praesens habetur, ita eius cruor: eucharisticae autem species, sub quibus adest, cruentam corporis et sanguinis separationem figurant.

Itaque memorialis demonstratio eius mortis, [549] quae reapse in Calvariae loco accidit, in singulis altaris sacrificiis iteratur, quandoquidem per distinctos indices Christus Iesus in statu victimae significatur atque ostenditur.

The Priesthood of the Faithful

3849 [552] ... Expediit ... christifideles omnes animadvertant, summo sibi officio esse summaeque dignitati, eucharisticum participare sacrificium.... [553] Tamen ... non idcirco sacerdotali etiam potestate fruuntur....

3850 [Falsus conceptus sacerdotii fidelium:] Sunt enim, Venerabiles Fratres, qui ... doceant [cf. *1767], in Novo Testamento sacerdotii nomine id solummodo venire, quod ad omnes spectet, qui sacri fontis lavacro expiati fuerint; itemque praeceptum illud, quo Iesus Christus in novissima cena id Apostolis commiserat faciendum, quod ipse fecerat, ad cunctam directo pertinere christifidelium Ecclesiam; atque exinde, deinceps tantum, hierarchicum consecutum esse sacerdotium.

Quapropter populum autumant vera perfrui sacerdotali potestate, sacerdotem autem solummodo agere ex delegato a communitate munere. Quamobrem Eucharisticum Sacrificium veri nominis “concelebrationem” existimant, ac reputant expedire potius ut sacerdotes una cum populo adstantes “concelebrent”, quam ut privatim Sacrificium offerant absente populo.

[Contra haec] in memoriam revocandum esse ducimus, sacerdotem nempe idcirco tantum populi vices agere, quia personam gerit Domini nostri Iesu Christi, quatenus membrorum omnium Caput est, pro iisdemque semet ipsum offert, ideoque ad altare accedere ut ministrum Christi, Christo inferiorem, superiorem autem populo.¹

Populum contra, quippe [554] qui nulla ratione divini Redemptoris personam sustineat neque conciliator sit inter seipsum et Deum, nullo modo iure sacerdotali frui posse.

Quae quidem fidei certitudine constant; at praeterea christifideles etiam divinam offerre hostiam, diversa tamen ratione, dicendi sunt.

the symbols of his death. For by the “transubstantiation” of bread into the body of Christ and of wine into his blood, his body and blood are both really present: now the eucharistic species under which he is present symbolize the actual separation of his body and blood.

Thus the commemorative representation of his death, which actually took place on Calvary, is repeated in every sacrifice of the altar, since Jesus Christ is symbolically shown by separate symbols to be in a state of victimhood.

... It is, therefore, desirable ... that all the faithful should be aware that to participate in the eucharistic sacrifice is their chief duty and supreme dignity.... Nevertheless,... it does not mean that, because of this, they also are endowed with priestly power....

[The false concept of the priesthood of the faithful:] For there are today, Venerable Brethren, those who ... teach [cf. *1767] that in the New Testament by the word “priesthood” is meant only that priesthood which applies to all who have been baptized; and these hold that the command by which Christ gave power to his apostles at the Last Supper to do what he himself had done applies directly to the entire Christian Church and that thence, and thence only, arises the hierarchical priesthood.

Hence they assert that the people are possessed of a true priestly power, while the priest acts only in virtue of an office committed to him by the community. Wherefore, they look on the eucharistic sacrifice as a “concelebration”, in the literal meaning of that term, and consider it more fitting that priests should “concelebrate” with the people present than that they should offer the sacrifice privately when the people are absent.

[Against these errors] it necessary to recall that the priest acts for the people only because he represents Jesus Christ, who is Head of all his members and offers himself in their stead. Hence, he goes to the altar as the minister of Christ, inferior to Christ but superior to the people.¹

The people, on the other hand, since they in no sense represent the Divine Redeemer and are not the conciliator between themselves and God, can in no way possess the sacerdotal power.

All this has the certitude of faith. However, it must also be said that the faithful do offer the divine Victim, though in a different sense.

*3850 ¹ Cf. Robert Bellarmine, Controversiae de sacramento Eucharistiae VI (= De sacrificio Missae II), 4 (ed. J. Fèvre, Opera omnia 4 [Paris, 1873], 373a).

[Verus conceptus sacerdotii fidelium.] ... “Non solum ... offerunt sacerdotes, sed et universi fideles: nam quod specialiter adimpletur ministerio sacerdotum, hoc universaliter agitur voto fidelium.”¹ Ac ... [Robertus Bellarminus.] “Sacrificium” inquit “in persona Christi principaliter offertur. Itaque ista oblatio, consecrationem subsequens, est quaedam testificatio, quod tota Ecclesia consentiat in oblationem a Christo factam, et simul cum illo offerat.”²

Eucharistici quoque Sacrificii ritus ac preces haud minus clare significant atque ostendunt victimae oblationem una cum populo a sacerdotibus fieri....

[555] Nec mirum est christifideles ad huiusmodi dignitatem elevari. Baptismatis enim lavacro, generali titulo christiani in mystico Corpore membra efficiuntur Christi sacerdotis, et “characterem” qui eorum in animo quasi insculpitur, ad cultum divinum deputantur; atque adeo ipsius Christi sacerdotium pro sua condicione participant....

At est etiam intima ratio, cur christiani omnes, ii praesertim qui altari adsunt, offerre dicantur.

Qua in re gravissima ne perniciosus oriatur error, offerendi vocem propriae significationis terminis circumscribamus oportet. Incruenta enim illa immolatio, qua consecrationis verbis prolatis Christus in statu victimae super altare praesens redditur, ab ipso solo sacerdote perficitur, prout Christi personam sustinet, non vero prout christifidelium personam gerit. At idcirco quod sacerdos divinam victimam altari superponit, eandem Deo Patri qua oblationem defert ad gloriam Sanctissimae Trinitatis et in bonum totius Ecclesiae.

Hanc autem restricti nominis oblationem christifideles suo modo duplicique ratione participant: quia nempe non tantum per sacerdotis manus, sed etiam una cum ipso quodammodo Sacrificium [556] offerunt: qua quidem participatione, populi quoque oblatio ad ipsum liturgicum refertur cultum.

[Redarguuntur dein tamquam “superlationes traiectionesque” opiniones eorum, qui] illa omnino sacrificia reprobant, quae privatim ac non adstante

[The true concept of the priesthood of the faithful.] ... “Not only ... do the priests offer the sacrifice, but also all the faithful: for what the priest does personally by virtue of his ministry, the faithful do collectively by virtue of their intention.”¹ And ... [Robert Bellarmine.] “The sacrifice”, he says, “is principally offered in the person of Christ. Thus the oblation that follows the consecration is a sort of attestation that the whole Church consents in the oblation made by Christ and offers it along with him.”²

Moreover, the rites and prayers of the eucharistic sacrifice signify and show no less clearly that the oblation of the Victim is made by the priests in company with the people....

Nor is it to be wondered at that the faithful should be raised to this dignity. By the waters of baptism, as by common right, Christians are made members of the Mystical Body of Christ the Priest, and by the “character” that is imprinted on their souls, they are appointed to give worship to God. Thus they participate, according to their condition, in the priesthood of Christ himself....

But there is also a more profound reason why all Christians, especially those who are present at Mass, are said to offer the sacrifice. 3852

In this most important subject it is necessary, in order to avoid giving rise to a dangerous error, that we define the exact meaning of the word “offer”. The unbloody immolation at the words of consecration, when Christ is made present upon the altar in the state of a victim, is performed by the priest and by him alone, as the representative of Christ and not as the representative of the faithful. But it is because the priest places the divine Victim upon the altar that he offers it to God the Father as an oblation for the glory of the Blessed Trinity and for the good of the whole Church.

Now the faithful participate in the oblation, understood in this limited sense, after their own fashion and in a twofold manner, namely, because they offer the sacrifice not only by the hands of the priest, but also, to a certain extent, in union with him. It is by reason of this participation that the offering made by the people is also included in liturgical worship.

[We deplore, then, as] “exaggerations and over-statements” [the opinions of those who] disapprove altogether of those Masses that are offered privately 3853

*3851 ¹ Innocent III, De sacro Altaris mysterio III, 6 (PL 217:845D).

² Robert Bellarmine, Controversiae de sacramento Eucharistiae V (= De sacrificio Missae I), 27 (ed. J. Fèvre, Opera omnia 4 [Paris, 1873], 366a).

populo offerantur ... [item quae eodem tempore pluribus in altaribus offerantur.]

[557] Perperam hac in re ad sociale eucharistici sacrificii indolem provocatur. Quotiescumque enim sacerdos id renovat, quod divinus Redemptor in novissima cena peregit, reapse sacrificium consummatur: quod quidem sacrificium semper et ubique itemque necessario ac suapte natura publico et sociali munere fruitur; quandoquidem is, qui illud immolat, et Christi et christifidelium, cuius divinus Redemptor est Caput, nomine agit, atque illud Deo offert pro Ecclesia sancta catholica, ac pro vivis et defunctis.

and without any congregation ... [as well as those that are celebrated at several altars at the same time].

They are mistaken in appealing in this matter to the social character of the eucharistic sacrifice, for as often as a priest repeats what the Divine Redeemer did at the Last Supper, the sacrifice is really completed. Moreover, this sacrifice, necessarily and of its very nature, has always and everywhere the character of a public and social act, inasmuch as he who offers it acts in the name of Christ and of the faithful, whose Head is the Divine Redeemer, and he offers it to God for the holy Catholic Church and for the living and the dead.

Holy Communion as the Integration of the Eucharistic Sacrifice

3854 [562] ... Augustum altaris sacrificium divinae dapis communione concluditur. Attamen, ut omnes norunt, ad eius sacrificii integritatem habendam requiritur solummodo, ut sacerdos caelesti pabulo reficiatur, non autem, ut populus etiam—quod ceteroquin summopere optandum est—ad sacram synaxim accedat.

[*Recoluntur errores in hac re iam reiecti;*¹ refelluntur deinde asserentes] [563] ... heic agi non de sacrificio solummodo, sed de sacrificio ac cena fraternae communitatis, atque sacram synaxim ponant, communiter actam, quasi totius celebrationis culmen.

Etenim etiam atque etiam animadvertendum est, eucharisticum sacrificium suapte natura incruentam esse divinae victimae immolationem, quae quidem mystico modo ex sacrarum specierum separatione patet, ex earumque oblatione aeterno Patri peracta. Sacra autem synaxis ad idem integrandum ad idemque augusti sacramenti communione participandum pertinet; dumque administro sacrificanti omnino necessaria est, christifidelibus est tantummodo enixe commendanda.

... The august sacrifice of the altar is concluded with communion or the partaking of the divine feast. But, as all know, the integrity of the sacrifice requires only that the priest partake of the heavenly food. Although it is most desirable that the people should also approach the holy table, this is not required for the integrity of the sacrifice.

[*The errors already rejected in this regard are recalled;*¹ then refuted are those who assert] ... that here there is question, not of a sacrifice merely, but of a sacrifice and a supper or brotherly union and consider the general communion of all present as the culminating point of the whole celebration.

Now it cannot be overemphasized that the eucharistic sacrifice of its very nature is the unbloody immolation of the divine Victim, which is made manifest in a mystical manner by the separation of the sacred species and by their oblation to the Eternal Father. Holy communion pertains to the integrity of the Mass and to the partaking of the august sacrament; but while it is obligatory for the priest who says the Mass, it is only something earnestly recommended to the faithful.

The Presence of Christ in the Mysteries of the Church

3855 [580] ... Liturgicus annus ... non frigida atque iners earum rerum repraesentatio est, quae ad praeterita tempora pertinent, vel simplex ac nuda superioris aetatis rerum recordatio. Sed potius est Christus ipse, qui in sua Ecclesia perseverat, quique immensae misericordiae suae iter pergit, quod quidem in hac mortali vita, cum pertransiit benefaciendo [cf. Act 10:38], ipse pientissimo eo consilio incepit, ut hominum animi mysteria sua attingerent ac per eadem quodammodo viverent; quae profecto mysteria non incerto ac subobscurio eo

... Hence, the liturgical year ... is not a cold and lifeless representation of the events of the past or a simple and bare record of a former age. It is rather Christ himself who is ever living in his Church. Here he continues that journey of immense mercy that he lovingly began in his mortal life, going about doing good [cf. Acts 10:38] with the design of bringing men to know his mysteries and in a way live by them. These mysteries are ever present and active, not in a vague and uncertain way as some modern writers

*3854 ¹ Cf. Benedict XIV, encyclical Certiores effecti, November 13, 1742, § 1 (Bullarium [Mechelen, 1826] 1:429f.); Council of Trent, sess. 22, can. 8 (*1758).

modo, quo recentiores quidam scriptores effutiunt,¹ sed quo modo catholica doctrina nos docet, praesentia continenter adsunt atque operantur; quandoquidem, ex Ecclesiae Doctorum sententia, et eximia sunt christianae perfectionis exempla, et divinae gratiae sunt fontes ob merita deprecationesque Christi, et effectu suo in nobis perdurant, cum singula secundum indolem cuiusque suam salutis nostrae causa suo modo existant.

hold,¹ but in the way that Catholic doctrine teaches us. According to the Doctors of the Church, they are shining examples of Christian perfection as well as sources of divine grace due to the merit and prayers of Christ; they still influence us because each mystery brings its own special grace for our salvation.

3857–3861: Apostolic Constitution Sacramentum Ordinis, November 30, 1947

Ed.: AAS 40 (1948): 5–7.

The Matter and Form of the Sacrament of Orders

1. Sacramentum Ordinis a Christo Domino institutum, quo traditur spiritualis potestas et confertur gratia ad rite obeunda munia ecclesiastica, unum esse idemque pro universa Ecclesia, catholica fides profitetur....

Neque his a Christo Domino institutis Sacramentis Ecclesia saeculorum cursu alia Sacramenta substituit vel substituere potuit, cum, ut Concilium Tridentinum [cf. *1601, 1728] docet, septem Novae Legis Sacramenta sint omnia a Iesu Christo Domino Nostro instituta et Ecclesiae nulla competat potestas in “substantiam Sacramentorum”, idest in ea quae, testibus divinae revelationis fontibus, ipse Christus Dominus in signo sacramentali servanda statuit.... [6]

3. Constat autem inter omnes Sacramenta Novae Legis, utpote signa sensibilia atque gratiae invisibilis efficientia, debere gratiam et significare quam efficiunt et efficere quam significant. Iamvero effectus, qui sacra Diaconatus, Presbyteratus et Episcopatus Ordinatione produci ideoque significari debent, potestas scilicet et gratia, in omnibus Ecclesiae universalis diversorum temporum et regionum ritibus sufficienter significati inveniuntur manuum impositione et verbis eam determinantibus.

Insuper nemo est qui ignoret Ecclesiam Romanam semper validas habuisse Ordinationes graeco ritu collatas absque instrumentorum traditione, ita ut in ipso Concilio Florentino, in quo Graecorum cum Ecclesia Romana unio peracta est, minime Graecis impositum sit, ut ritum Ordinationis mutarent vel illi instrumentorum traditionem insererent: immo voluit Ecclesia ut in ipsa Urbe Graeci secundum proprium ritum ordinarentur. Quibus colligitur,

1. The sacrament of orders instituted by Christ the Lord, by which spiritual power is transmitted and grace is conferred to perform ecclesiastical duties properly, the Catholic faith professes to be one and the same for the universal Church....

And, in the course of the ages, the Church has not and could not substitute other sacraments for these sacraments instituted by Christ the Lord, since, as the Council of Trent [cf. *1601, 1728] teaches, the seven sacraments of the New Law have all been instituted by Jesus Christ, our Lord, and the Church has no power over the “substance of the sacraments”, that is, over those things that, with the sources of divine revelation as witnesses, Christ the Lord himself decreed to be preserved in a sacramental sign....

3. Everyone knows, however, that the sacraments of the New Law, as sensible and efficient signs of invisible grace, owe and signify the grace that they effect and effect the grace that they signify. Now, the effects that should be produced and thus signified by the sacred ordination of the diaconate, presbyterate, and episcopate, namely, power and grace, are found to have been sufficiently signified in all the rites of the universal Church of different times and regions by the imposition of hands and by the words that determine this.

Furthermore, there is no one who does not know that the Roman Church always considered valid the ordinations conferred in the Greek rite, without the handing over of the instruments, so that at the Council of Florence, in which the union of the Greeks with the Church of Rome was accomplished, it was not imposed on the Greeks that they change the rite of ordination, or that they insert in it the handing over of the instruments; rather, etiam secundum mentem ipsius Concilii Florentini [cf. *1326], traditionem instrumentorum non ex ipsius Domini Nostri Iesu Christi voluntate ad substantiam et ad validitatem huius Sacramenti requiri. Quod si ex Ecclesiae voluntate et praescripto eadem aliquando fuerit necessaria ad valorem quoque, omnes norunt Ecclesiam quod statuit etiam mutare et abrogare valere.

¹ *3855 By these words, he is clearly alluding to certain representations of the “theology of mysteries” concerning the presence of Christ in the Church’s worship and the liturgical year. Cf. also the letter of the secretary of the Holy Office to the archbishop of Salzburg of November 25, 1948 (Klerusblatt [Salzburg], December 25, 1948), in which he explains that, with this encyclical, there is no approval of the doctrine of those “who teach that in liturgical worship the mysteries are not present historically, but mystically and sacramentally, though still really” (qui docent, mysteria in cultu liturgico praesentia esse non historice, sed mystice ac sacramentaliter, tamen realiter).

- 3859 4. Quae cum ita sint, divino lumine invocato, suprema Nostra Apostolica Auctoritate et certa scientia declaramus et, quatenus opus sit, decernimus et disponimus: Sacrorum Ordinum Diaconatus, Presbyteratus et Episcopatus materiam eamque unam esse manuum impositionem; formam vero itemque unam esse verba applicationem huius materiae determinantia, quibus univoce significantur effectus sacramentales—scilicet potestas Ordinis et gratia Spiritus Sancti—, quaeque ab Ecclesia qua talia accipiuntur et usurpantur.

Hinc consequitur ut declarem, sicut revera ad omnem controversiam auferendam et ad conscientiarum anxietatibus viam praeccludendam Apostolica Nostra Auctoritate declaramus, et, si umquam aliter legitime dispositum fuerit, statuimus instrumentorum traditionem saltem in posterum non esse necessariam ad Sacrorum Diaconatus, Presbyteratus et Episcopatus Ordinum validitatem.

- 3860 5. De materia autem et forma in uniuscuiusque Ordinis collatione, eadem suprema Nostra Apostolica auctoritate, quae sequuntur decernimus et constituimus:

In Ordinatione Diaconali materia est Episcopi manus impositio quae in ritu istius Ordinationis una occurrit. Forma autem constat verbis “Praefationis” quorum haec sunt essentialia ideoque ad valorem requisita: “Emitte in eum, quaesumus, Domine, Spiritum Sanctum, quo in opus ministerii tui fideliter exsequendi septiformis gratiae tuae munere roboretur.”

In Ordinatione Presbyterali materia est Episcopi prima manuum impositio quae silentio fit, non autem eiusdem impositionis per manus dexteræ extensionem continuatio, nec ultima cui coniunguntur verba: “Accipe Spiritum Sanctum: quorum remiseras peccata, etcetera.” Forma [7] autem constat verbis “Praefationis” quorum haec sunt essentialia ideoque ad valorem requisita: “Da, quaesumus, omnipotens Pater, in hunc famulum tuum Presbyterii dignitatem; innova in visceribus eius spiritum sanctitatis, ut acceptum a Te, Deus, secundi meriti the Church wished that even in the City (Rome) Greeks would be ordained according to their own rite. From all this it is gathered that according to the mind of the same Council of Florence [cf. *1326], the handing over of the instruments is not required for the substance and validity of this sacrament, according to the will of our Lord Jesus Christ himself. But if, by the will and prescription of the Church, the same (handing over of the instruments) was at some time held as necessary even for validity, all know that the Church can also change and abrogate what she has established.

4. Since these things are so, having invoked the divine light, by virtue of Our supreme apostolic authority, We declare with sure knowledge, and, as far as it may be necessary, we determine and ordain: the matter of the holy orders of the diaconate, priesthood, and episcopate is the laying on of hands alone, and the sole form is the words determining the application of the matter, words by which the effects of the sacrament—that is, the power of order and the grace of the Holy Spirit—are unequivocally signified and, for that reason, are accepted and used by the Church.

Hence it follows that in order to do away with all controversy and prevent anxieties of conscience, by Our apostolic authority We declare, and if other provisions have been legitimately made in the past at any time, We now determine that, at least in the future, the handing over of the instruments is not necessary for the validity of the holy orders of the diaconate, the priesthood, and the episcopate.

5. But regarding the matter and form in the conferring of every order, by Our same supreme apostolic authority We decree and establish the following:

In the ordination of deacons, the matter is the imposition of the bishop’s hand, which occurs once in the rite of that ordination. But the form consists of the words of the “Preface”, of which the following are essential and so required for validity: “Send forth upon him, we beseech, O Lord, the Holy Spirit, by which for the work of faithfully performing your ministry he may be strengthened by the gift of Thy sevenfold grace.”

In the ordination of priests, the matter is the first imposition of the bishop’s hands, which is done in silence, but not the continuation of the same imposition by an extension of the right hand or the last, to which these words are joined: “Receive the Holy Spirit: whose sins you shall forgive, etc.” But the form consists of the words of the “Preface”, of which the following are essential and so required for validity: “Bestow, we beseech, almighty Father, upon this Thy servant the dignity of the priesthood; renew in his heart the spirit of munus obtineat censuramque morum exemplo suae conversationis insinuet.”

Denique in Ordinatione seu Consecratione Episcopali materia est manuum impositio quae ab Episcopo consecratore fit. Forma autem constat verbis “Praefationis”, quorum haec sunt essentialia ideoque ad valorem requisita: “Comple in Sacerdote tuo ministerii tui summam, et ornamentis totius glorificationis instructum caelestis unguenti rore sanctifica.”...

6. Ne vero dubitandi praebeatur occasio, praecipimus ut impositio manuum in quolibet Ordine conferendo caput Ordinandi physice tangendo fiat, quamvis etiam tactus moralis ad Sacramentum valide conficiendum sufficiat....

Huius Nostrae Constitutionis dispositiones vim retroactivam non habent.

holiness, so that he may hold the office of the second order received from Thee, God, and through the example of his conduct promote right morals.”

Finally, in the episcopal ordination or consecration the matter is the imposition of the hands by the consecrating bishop. But the form consists of the words of the “Preface”, of which the following are essential and thus required for validity: “Fulfill in Thy priest the perfection of Thy ministry, and sanctify with the dew of heavenly ointment him who is adorned with the ornaments of all glorification.”...

6. That no occasion for doubt may be offered, We 3861 command that in any conferring of any orders the imposition of hands be made by physically touching the head of the one to be ordained, although even the moral touch suffices for performing a sacrament validly....

The disposition of this Our Constitution does not have retroactive force.

3862–3864: Letter of the Secretary of the Biblical Commission to Cardinal Suhard, Archbishop of Paris, January 16, 1948

Ed.: AAS 40 (1948): 45–47 / EnchB nos. 578–581.

Critical Questions of the Pentateuch

[45] La Commission Pontificale Biblique ... désire y [au sentiment de filiale confiance] correspondre par un effort sincère de promouvoir les études bibliques en leur assurant, dans les limites de l’enseignement traditionnel de l’Église, la plus entière liberté. Cette liberté a été affirmée en termes explicites par l’Encyclique [Pii XII] ... “Divino afflante Spiritu” en ces termes: “L’exégète catholique ...” [citatur francogallice textus *3831].

[46] ... Qu’on veuille bien comprendre et interpréter, à la lumière de cette recommandation du Souverain Pontife, les trois réponses officielles données jadis par la Commission Biblique à propos des questions susmentionnées, à savoir le 23 juin 1905 sur les récits qui n’auraient d’historique que l’apparence dans les livres historiques de la Sainte Écriture [*3373], le 27 juin 1906 sur l’authenticité mosaïque du Pentateuque [*3394–3397], et le 30 juin 1909 sur le caractère historique des trois premiers chapitres de la Genèse [*3512–3519], et l’on concédera que ces réponses ne s’opposent nullement à un examen ultérieur vraiment scientifique de ces problèmes d’après les résultats acquis pendant ces quarante dernières années. En conséquence, la Commission Biblique ne croit pas qu’il y a lieu de promulguer, du moins pour le moment, de nouveaux décrets à propos de ces questions.

En ce qui concerne la composition du Pentateuque, dans le décret susmentionné du 27 juin 1906 la

The Pontifical Biblical Commission ... wishes to 3862 correspond [to the sense of filial confidence] by a sincere effort to promote biblical studies, while safeguarding for them the greatest freedom within the limits of the traditional teaching of the Church. This freedom has been explicitly affirmed by the encyclical [of Pius XII] ... Divino afflante Spiritu, in the following terms: “The Catholic exegete ...” [the text of *3831 is cited in French].

... If one would rightly understand and interpret in the light of this recommendation of the sovereign pontiff the three official answers previously given by the Biblical Commission regarding the above-named questions, namely, that of June 23, 1905, on the narratives in the historical books of Holy Scripture that have only the appearance of being historical [*3373], that of June 27, 1906, on the Mosaic authenticity of the Pentateuch [*3394–3397], and that of June 30, 1909, on the historical character of the first three chapters of Genesis [*3512–3519], one will readily grant that these answers are in no way opposed to further and truly scientific examination of these problems in accordance with the results obtained during these last forty years. Consequently, the Biblical Commission believes that there is no need, at least for the moment, to promulgate any new decrees regarding these questions.

In what concerns the composition of the Pentateuch, 3863 in the above-named decree of June 27, 1906, the Commission Biblique reconnaissait déjà que l'on pouvait affirmer que Moïse, "pour composer son ouvrage, s'est servi de documents écrits ou de traditions orales" et admettre aussi des modifications et additions postérieures à Moïse [*3396s]. Il n'est plus personne aujourd'hui qui mette en doute l'existence de ces sources et n'admette un accroissement progressif des lois mosaïques dû aux conditions sociales et religieuses des temps postérieurs, progression qui se manifeste aussi dans les récits historiques.

Cependant, même dans le camp des exégètes non-catholiques, des opinions très divergentes sont professées aujourd'hui touchant la nature et le nombre de ces documents, leur dénomination et leur date. Il ne manque même pas d'auteurs, en différents pays, qui pour des raisons purement critiques et historiques, sans aucune intention apologetique, rejettent résolument les théories les plus en vogue jusqu'ici et cherchent l'explication de certaines particularités rédactionnelles du Pentateuque, non pas tant dans la diversité des documents supposés, que dans la psychologie spéciale, dans les procédés particuliers, mieux connus aujourd'hui, de la pensée et de l'expression des anciens Orientaux, ou encore dans le genre littéraire différent postulé par la diversité des matières.

C'est pourquoi nous invitons les savants catholiques à étudier ces problèmes sans parti-pris, à la lumière d'une saine critique et des résultats des autres sciences intéressées dans ces matières, et une telle étude établira sans doute la grande part et la profonde influence de Moïse comme auteur et comme législateur.

3864 La question des formes littéraires des onze premiers chapitres de la Genèse est bien plus obscure et complexe. Ces formes littéraires ne répondent à aucune de nos catégories classiques et ne peuvent pas être jugées à la lumière des genres littéraires grécolatins ou modernes. On ne peut donc en nier ni affirmer l'historicité en bloc sans leur appliquer indûment les normes d'un genre littéraire sous lequel ils ne peuvent pas être classés. Si l'on s'accorde à ne pas voir dans ces chapitres de l'histoire au sens classique et moderne, on doit avouer aussi que les données scientifiques actuelles ne permettent pas de donner une solution positive à tous les problèmes qu'ils posent.

Le premier devoir qui incombe ici à l'exégèse scientifique consiste tout d'abord dans l'étude attentive de tous les problèmes littéraires, scientifiques, historiques, culturels et religieux connexes avec ces chapitres; il faudrait ensuite examiner de près les procédés littéraires des anciens peuples orientaux, leur psychologie, leur manière de s'exprimer et leur notion même de la vérité historique; il faudrait, en un mot, rassembler sans

Biblical Commission already recognized that it may be affirmed that Moses "in order to compose his work, made use of written documents or oral traditions" and that modifications and additions after the time of Moses (may) also (be) acknowledged [*3396f.]. There is no one today who doubts the existence of these sources or does not admit a progressive development of the Mosaic laws due to social and religious conditions of later times, a development that is also manifest in the historical narratives.

Even, however, within the field of non-Catholic exegetes, very divergent opinions are professed today concerning the nature and number of these documents, their denomination, and date. There are, indeed, not a few authors in different countries who, for purely critical and historical reasons and with no apologetic intention, resolutely set aside the theories most in vogue until now and who look for the elucidation of certain redactional peculiarities of the Pentateuch, not so much in the diversity of the supposed documents as in the special psychology, the particular processes of thought and expression, better known today, of the early Oriental peoples, or again in the different literary style demanded by the diversity of subject matter.

Therefore, we invite Catholic scholars to study these problems, without prepossession, in the light of sound criticism and of the findings of other sciences connected with the subject matter. Such study will doubtless establish the great part and deep influence (exercised) by Moses both as author and lawgiver.

The question of the literary forms of the first eleven chapters of Genesis is far more obscure and complex. These literary forms correspond to none of our classical categories and cannot be judged in the light of Greco-Latin or modern literary genres. One can, therefore, neither deny nor affirm their historicity, taken as a whole, without unduly applying to them the canons of a literary genre within which it is impossible to classify them. If one agrees not to recognize in these chapters history in the classical and modern sense, one must also admit that the current scientific data do not allow giving a positive solution to all the problems they pose.

The first duty here incumbent upon scientific exegesis consists above all in the attentive study of all the literary, scientific, historical, cultural, and religious problems connected with these chapters; one should then examine closely the literary processes of the early Oriental peoples, their psychology, their way of expressing themselves, and their very notion of historical truth; in a word, one should collate without prejudice all the material from the préjugés tout le matériel des sciences paléontologique et historique, épigraphique et littéraire. C'est ainsi seulement, qu'on peut espérer voir plus clair dans la vraie nature de certains récits des premiers chapitres de la Genèse.

Déclarer a priori que leurs récits ne contiennent pas de l'histoire au sens moderne du mot, laisserait facilement entendre qu'ils n'en contiennent en aucun sens, tandis qu'ils relatent en un langage simple et figuré, adapté aux intelligences d'une humanité moins développée, les vérités fondamentales présumées à l'économie du salut, en même temps que la description populaire des origines du genre humain et du peuple élu.

palaeontological and historical, epigraphic, and literary sciences. Only thus can we hope to look more clearly into the true nature of certain narratives in the first chapters of Genesis.

To declare a priori that their narratives contain no history in the modern sense of the term would easily convey the idea that they contain no <history> in any sense, whereas they relate in simple and figurative language, adapted to the understanding of a less developed people, the fundamental truths presupposed for the economy of salvation as well as the popular description of the origin of the human race and of the chosen people.

3865: Decree of the Holy Office, June 28 (July 1), 1949

Ed.: AAS 41 (1949): 334.

Decree against Communism

Qu.: 1. Utrum licitum sit, partibus communistarum nomen dare vel eidem favorem praestare [cf. *3930].

2. Utrum licitum sit edere, propagare vel legere libros, periodica, diaria vel folia, quae doctrinae vel actioni communistarum patrocinantur, vel in eis scribere;

3. Utrum christifideles, qui actus, de quibus in n. 1 et 2, scienter et libere posuerint, ad sacramenta admitti possint;

4. Utrum christifideles, qui communistarum doctrinam materialisticam et antichristianam profitentur, et in primis qui eam defendunt vel propagant, ipso facto, tamquam apostatae a fide catholica, incurrant in excommunicationem speciali modo Sedi Apostolicae reservatam.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 30. Iun.): Ad 1. Negative: Communismus enim est materialisticus et antichristianus; communistarum autem duces, etsi verbis quandoque profitentur se religionem non oppugnare, re tamen, sive doctrina sive actione, Deo veraeque religioni et Ecclesiae Christi sese infensos esse ostendunt.

Ad 2. Negative: Prohibentur enim ipso iure (cf. CIC, can. 1399).

Ad 3. Negative, secundum ordinaria principia de sacramentis denegandis iis, qui non sunt dispositi.

Ad 4. Affirmative.

Questions: 1. Is it permitted to join the Communist Party or to provide support to it [cf. *3930]? 3865

2. Is it permitted to publish, distribute, or read books, journals, newspapers, or tracts that defend the doctrines or the action of the Communists or to write in these?

3. May members of the Christian faithful be admitted to the sacraments who have knowingly and freely engaged in the acts <mentioned> in numbers 1 and 2?

4. Do members of the Christian faithful who profess the materialistic and anti-Christian doctrine of the Communists, and especially those who defend or propagate it, by that very fact incur the excommunication reserved in a special manner to the Apostolic See?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on June 30): To 1: No: Communism, in fact, is materialistic and anti-Christian; the leaders of Communism, though they sometimes declare in words that they do not fight against religion, nevertheless, in reality, whether in action or in doctrine, show themselves to be hostile to God, to the true religion, and to the Church of Christ.

To 2: No: These are prohibited in fact by the law itself (cf. CIC [1917], can. 1399).

To 3: No, according to the ordinary principles that pertain to the exclusion from the sacraments of those who are not properly disposed.

To 4: Yes.

3866-3873: Letter of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Boston, August 8, 1949

This letter is directed against the members of St. Benedict's Center and Boston College who held to a rigorist interpretation of the phrase "Outside the Church, there is no salvation" (Extra Ecclesiam nulla salus; cf. *802, n. 1): namely, all men are excluded from eternal salvation except for Catholics and catechumens. One of the rigorists, Leonard Feeney, was excommunicated on February 4, 1953.

Ed.: AmER 127 (October 1952): 308-10.

The Necessity of the Church for Salvation

3866 ... Inter ea autem, quae semper Ecclesia praedicavit et praedicare numquam desinet illud quoque infallibile effatum continetur, quo edocemur “extra Ecclesiam nullam esse salutem.”

Est tamen hoc dogma intelligendum eo sensu, quo id intelligit Ecclesia ipsa. Non enim privatis iudiciis explicanda dedit Salvator noster ea, quae in fidei deposito continentur, sed ecclesiastico magisterio.

3867 Et primum quidem Ecclesia docet, hac in re agi de severissimo praecepto Iesu Christi. Ipse enim expressis verbis Apostolis suis imposuit, ut docerent omnes gentes, servare omnia quae ipse mandaverat. Inter mandata autem Christi non minimum locum illud occupat, quo baptismo iubemur incorporari in Corpus mysticum Christi, quod est Ecclesia, et adhaerere Christo eiusque vicario, per quem ipse in terra modo visibili gubernat Ecclesiam. Quare nemo salvabitur, qui sciens Ecclesiam a Christo divinitus fuisse institutam, tamen Ecclesiae sese subiicere renuit vel Romano Pontifici, Christi in terris vicario, denegat oboedientiam.

3868 Neque enim in praecepto tantummodo dedit Salvator, ut omnes gentes intrarent Ecclesiam, sed statuit quoque Ecclesiam medium esse salutis, sine quo nemo intrare valeat regnum gloriae caelestis.

3869 Infinita sua misericordia Deus voluit, ut illorum auxiliorum salutis, quae divina sola institutione, non vero intrinseca necessitate, ad finem ultimum ordinantur, tunc quoque certis in adiunctis effectus ad salutem necessarij obtineri valeant, ubi voto solummodo vel desiderio adhibeantur. Quod in sacrosancto Tridentino Concilio claris verbis enuntiatum videmus tum de sacramento regenerationis tum de sacramento poenitentiae [*1524, 1543].

3870 Idem autem suo modo dici debet de Ecclesia, quatenus generale ipsa auxilium salutis est. Quandoquidem ut quis aeternam obtineat salutem, non semper exigitur, ut reapse Ecclesiae tamquam membrum incorporaretur, sed id saltem requiritur, ut eidem voto et desiderio adhaereat.

Hoc tamen votum non semper explicitum sit oportet, prout accidit in catechumenis, sed ubi homo invincibili ignorantia laborat, Deus quoque implicitum votum acceptat, tali nomine nuncupatum, quia illud in ea bona animae dispositione continetur, qua homo voluntatem suam Dei voluntati conformem velit.

... Now, among those things that the Church has always preached and will never cease to preach is contained also that infallible statement by which we are taught that “outside the Church there is no salvation.”

However, this dogma must be understood in that sense in which the Church herself understands it. For, it was not to private judgments that our Savior gave for explanation those things that are contained in the deposit of faith, but to the teaching authority of the Church.

Now, in the first place, the Church teaches that in this matter there is question of a most strict command of Jesus Christ. For he explicitly enjoined on his apostles to teach all nations to observe everything that he himself had commanded. Now, among the commandments of Christ, that one holds not the least place by which we are told to be incorporated by baptism into the Mystical Body of Christ, which is the Church, and to remain united to Christ and to his vicar, through whom he himself in a visible manner governs the Church on earth. Therefore, no one will be saved who, knowing the Church to have been divinely established by Christ, nevertheless refuses to submit to the Church or withholds obedience from the Roman pontiff, the vicar of Christ on earth.

Not only did the Savior command that all nations should enter the Church, but he also decreed the Church to be the means of salvation, without which no one can enter the kingdom of heavenly glory.

In his infinite mercy God has willed that the effects, necessary for one to be saved, of those helps to salvation that are directed toward man’s final end, not by intrinsic necessity, but only by divine institution, can also be obtained in certain circumstances when (those helps) are employed only through desire and longing. This we see clearly stated in the sacred Council of Trent, both in reference to the sacrament of regeneration and in reference to the sacrament of penance [*1524, 1543].

The same in its own degree must be asserted of the Church, insofar as she is the general help to salvation. Since, in order that one may obtain eternal salvation, it is not always required that he be incorporated into the Church actually as a member, but it is necessary that at least he be united to her by desire and longing.

However, this desire need not always be explicit, as it is in catechumens; but when a person suffers from invincible ignorance, God accepts also an implicit desire, so called because it is included in that good disposition of soul whereby a person wishes his will to be conformed to the will of God.

Quae clare docentur in [Pii XII Litteris encyclicis] ... de mystico Iesu Christi Corpore. In iisdem enim Summus Pontifex nitide distinguit inter eos, qui re Ecclesiae tamquam membra incorporantur, atque eos, qui voto tantummodo Ecclesiae adhaerent... "In Ecclesiae autem membris reapse ii soli adnumerandi sunt, qui regenerationis lavacrum receperunt veramque fidem profitentur neque a Corporis compage semet ipsos misere separaverunt vel, ob gravissima admissa, a legitima auctoritate seiuncti sunt" [*3802].

Circa finem autem earundem Litterarum encyclicarum, amantissimo animo eos ad unitatem invitans, qui ad Ecclesiae catholicae compagem non pertinent, illos commemorat, "qui inscio quodam desiderio ac voto ad Mysticum Redemptoris Corpus ordinentur", quos minime a salute aeterna excludit, ex altera tamen parte in tali statu versari asserit, "in quo de sempiterna cuiusque propria salute securi esse non possunt ... quandoquidem tot tantisque caelestibus muneribus adiumentis carent, quibus in catholica solummodo Ecclesia frui licet" [*3821].

Quibus verbis providentibus tam eos reprobat, qui omnes solo voto implicito Ecclesiae adhaerentes a salute aeterna excludunt, quam eos, qui falso asserunt, homines in omni religione aequaliter salvari posse [cf. *2865].

Neque etiam putandum est, quodcumque votum Ecclesiae ingrediendae sufficere, ut homo salvetur. Requiritur enim, ut votum, quo quis ad Ecclesiam ordinetur, perfecta caritate informetur; nec votum implicitum effectum habere potest, nisi homo fidem habeat supernaturalem.

[*Hebrews 11:6 and the Council of Trent, sess. 6, chap. 8: 1532 are then cited.]

Ex praedictis clarum igitur est, ea quae in commentario "From the Housetops", fasc. III, tamquam genuina Ecclesiae catholicae doctrina proponuntur,¹ ab eadem longe distare et esse valde nociva tam iis qui intra quam iis qui foris sunt...

Itaque intelligi non potest, quomodo Institutum "St. Benedict Center" sibi cohaereat, quod, cum se scholam catholicam profiteatur ac talem haberi velit, re tamen vera praescriptis can. 1381 et 1382 Cod. Iur. Can. non conformetur, idemque fons existat discordiarum et rebellionis contra auctoritatem ecclesiasticam et turbationis multarum conscientiarum causa. Item non intelligitur, quomodo religiosus vir, scl. P. Feeney, se "defensorem fidei" exhibeat simulque impugnare

This is clearly taught in the [encyclical letter of Pius XII] ... on the Mystical Body of Jesus Christ. For in this letter the sovereign pontiff clearly distinguishes between those who are actually incorporated into the Church as members and those who are united to the Church only by desire.... "Only those are actually to be counted as members of the Church who have received the bath of regeneration and profess the true faith and who have not been so unfortunate as to separate themselves from the structure of the Body or been excluded by legitimate authority for grave faults" [*3802].

Toward the end of this same encyclical letter, however, when most affectionately inviting to unity those who do not belong to the body of the Catholic Church, he mentions those who "are related to the Mystical Body of the Redeemer by a certain unconscious yearning and desire", and these he by no means excludes from eternal salvation, but who, on the other hand, as he states, are in a condition "in which they cannot be sure of their own eternal salvation" since "they are deprived of so many and such great heavenly gifts (and) helps that can only be enjoyed in the Catholic Church" [*3821].

With these wise words he condemns both those who exclude from eternal salvation all united to the Church only by implicit desire and those who falsely assert that men can be saved equally well in every religion [cf. *2865].

Nor must it be thought that any kind of desire of entering the Church suffices for one to be saved. It is necessary that the desire by which one is related to the Church be animated by perfect charity. The implicit desire can produce no effect unless a person has supernatural faith.

From what has been said it is evident that what is presented in the periodical From the Housetops, fascicle 3, as the genuine teaching of the Catholic Church¹ is very far from being such and is very harmful both to those within the Church and to those without...

Hence, one cannot understand how the St. Benedict Center can be consistent with itself, since although it claims to be a Catholic school and wishes to be accounted such, it does not in reality conform to the prescriptions of canons 1381 and 1382 of the Code of Canon Law [1917] and is a source of discord and rebellion against ecclesiastical authority and is the cause of the disturbance of many consciences. Furthermore, it is beyond understanding how a member of a religious non dubitet catecheticam institutionem a legitimis auctoritatibus propositam....

*3873¹ This refers to an article by R. Karam, "Reply to a Liberal", in From the Housetops 3, the journal of the St. Benedict's Center Institute.

institute, namely, Father Feeney, can present himself as a “defender of the faith” and at the same time does not hesitate to attack the catechetical instruction proposed by lawful authorities....

3873a: Discourse to the Fourth International Congress of Catholic Physicians, September 29, 1949

Ed.: AAS 41 (1949): 559f.

Artificial Insemination

3873a 1. La pratique de cette fécondation artificielle, dès lors qu’il s’agit de l’homme, ne peut être considérée ni exclusivement, ni même principalement, du point de vue biologique et médical, en laissant de côté celui de la morale et du droit.

2. La fécondation artificielle, hors du mariage, est à condamner purement et simplement comme immorale.

Telle est en effet la loi naturelle et la loi divine positive, que la procréation d’une nouvelle vie ne peut être le fruit que du mariage. Le mariage seul sauvegarde la dignité des époux (principalement de la femme dans le cas présent), leur bien personnel. De soi, seul il pourvoit au bien et à l’éducation de l’enfant.

Par conséquent, sur la condamnation d’une fécondation artificielle hors de l’union conjugale, aucune divergence d’opinions n’est possible entre catholiques. L’enfant conçu dans ces conditions serait, par le fait même, illégitime.

3. La fécondation artificielle dans le mariage, mais produite par l’élément actif d’un tiers, est également immorale et, comme telle, à réprouver sans appel.

Seuls les époux ont un droit réciproque sur leur corps pour engendrer une vie nouvelle, droit exclusif, inaccessibles, inaliénables. Et cela doit être, en considération aussi de l’enfant. A quiconque donne la vie à un petit être, la nature impose, en vertu même de ce lien, la charge de sa conservation et de son éducation. Mais entre l’époux légitime et l’enfant, fruit de l’élément actif d’un tiers (l’époux fût-il consentant), il n’existe aucun lien d’origine, aucun lien moral et juridique de procréation conjugale.

4. Quant à la licéité de la fécondation artificielle dans le mariage, qu’il Nous suffise, pour l’instant, de rappeler ces principes de droit naturel: le simple fait que le résultat auquel on vise est atteint par cette voie, ne justifie pas l’emploi du moyen lui-même; ni le désir en soi très légitime chez les époux, d’avoir un enfant, ne suffit à prouver la légitimité du recours à la fécondation artificielle, qui réaliserait ce désir.

Il serait faux de penser que la possibilité de recourir à ce moyen pourrait rendre valide le mariage entre personnes incapables à le contracter du fait de l’impedimentum

1. The practice of artificial insemination, insofar as it concerns man, cannot be considered exclusively, or even principally, from the biological and medical point of view, disregarding that of morality and law.

2. Artificial insemination outside of marriage is to be condemned purely and simply as immoral.

In fact, natural law and positive divine law (demand) that the procreation of new life be the fruit of marriage alone. Only marriage guards the dignity of the spouses (principally of the wife, in the present case) (and) their personal good. Only (marriage) of itself provides for the good and education of the child.

Therefore, there can be no divergence of opinion among Catholics about condemning artificial insemination outside the conjugal union. The child conceived in these conditions would be by the very fact illegitimate.

3. Artificial insemination that is effected within marriage but by an active element of a third party is in the same way immoral and, as such, is to be irrevocably condemned.

Only spouses have a reciprocal right over their bodies to procreate new life, an exclusive, non-transferable, inalienable right. And that must be so in consideration of the child as well. For upon whoever gives life to a little being, nature by the very force of this relationship imposes the obligation of both protecting and educating him. Between the legitimate husband and the child procreated by the active element of the third party (even if the husband should consent), however, no bond of origin or any moral and juridical bond of matrimonial procreation exists.

4. As for the permissibility of artificial insemination within marriage, let it suffice for the present for Us to call to mind the principles of the natural law; the mere fact that the end that is intended is achieved in this way does not justify the use of the means itself; nor is the desire of spouses (in itself very legitimate) to have a child sufficient to prove the legitimacy of recourse to artificial insemination, by which this desire might be fulfilled.

It would be wrong to believe that marriage between persons incapable of contracting it because of the “impedimentum impotentiae” (impediment of impotentiae. —D'autre part, il est superflu d'observer que l'élément actif ne peut jamais être procuré licitement par des actes contre nature.

Bien que l'on ne puisse a priori exclure de nouvelles méthodes, pour le seul motif de leur nouveauté, néanmoins, en ce qui touche la fécondation artificielle, non seulement il y a lieu d'être extrêmement réservé, mais il faut absolument l'écartier. En parlant ainsi, on ne proscrit pas nécessairement l'emploi de certains moyens artificiels destinés uniquement soit à faciliter l'acte naturel, soit à faire atteindre sa fin à l'acte naturel normalement accompli.

3874: Response of the Holy Office, December 28, 1949

Ed.: AAS 41 (1949): 650.

The Intention of the Minister of the Sacraments

Qu.: Utrum, in diiudicandis causis matrimonialibus, baptismus in sectis Discipulorum Christi, Presbyterianorum, Congregationalistarum, Baptistarum, Methodistarum collatus, posita necessaria materia et forma, praesumendus sit invalidus ob defectum requisitae in ministro intentionis faciendi quod facit Ecclesia vel quod Christus instituit, an vero praesumendus sit validus, nisi in casu particulari contrarium probetur.

Resp.: Negative ad primam partem; affirmative ad secundam.

impotence) could be rendered valid by the use of this means. —On the other hand, it goes without saying that the active element can never be procured licitly by acts that are contrary to nature.

Although new methods cannot be excluded a priori merely because they are new, nevertheless, as far as artificial insemination is concerned, not only is there need of the greatest circumspection, but it must be absolutely avoided. By these words we do not necessarily forbid the use of certain artificial means that are destined only either to render the natural act easier or to bring it about that the natural act performed in a normal way might attain its end.

Question: In judging matrimonial cases, is baptism conferred in the sects of the Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Methodists, when the necessary matter and form have been used, presumed invalid because of the lack of the required intention in the minister of doing what the Church does or what Christ instituted; or is it presumed valid when in a particular case it is not proven to the contrary? 3874

Response: No to the first part; yes to the second.

3875–3899: Encyclical Humani generis, August 12, 1950

The encyclical treats new developments and dangers in theology.

Ed.: AAS 42 (1950): 561–77; text with corrections in AAS 42 (1950): 960.

The Knowledge of God

Licet humana ratio, simpliciter loquendo, veram et certam cognitionem unius Dei personalis, mundum providentia sua tuentis ac gubernantis, necnon naturalis legis a Creatore nostris animis inditae, suis naturalibus viribus ac lumine assequi revera possit, nihilominus non pauca obstant, quominus eadem ratio hac sua nativa facultate efficaciter fructuoseque utatur.

Quae enim ad Deum pertinent et ad rationes spectant, quae inter homines Deumque intercedunt, veritates sunt rerum sensibilium ordinem omnino [562] transcendentis, quae, cum in vitae actionem inducuntur eamque informant, sui devotionem suique abnegationem postulant. Humanus autem intellectus in talibus veritatibus acquirendis difficultate laborat tum ob sensuum imaginationisque impulsus, tum ob pravos

For though, absolutely speaking, human reason by its own natural force and light can arrive at a true and certain knowledge of the one personal God, who by his providence watches over and governs the world, and also of the natural law, which the Creator has written in our hearts, still there are not a few obstacles to prevent reason from making efficient and fruitful use of its natural ability. 3875

The truths that have to do with God and the relations between God and men completely surpass the sensible order and demand self-surrender and self-abnegation in order to be put into practice and to influence practical life. Now the human intellect, in gaining the knowledge of such truths, is hampered both by the activity of the senses and the imagination and by evil passions arising from original sin. Hence men easily persuade themselves cupiditates ex peccato originali ortas. Quo fit ut homines in rebus huiusmodi libenter sibi suadeant esse falsa vel saltem dubia, quae ipsi nolint esse vera.

- 3876 Quapropter divina “revelatio” moraliter necessaria dicenda est, ut ea, quae in rebus religionis et morum rationi per se impervia non sunt, in praesenti quoque humani generis condicionem, ab omnibus expedite, firma certitudine et nullo admixto errore cognosci possint [*3005].

Quin immo mens humana difficultates interdum pati potest etiam in certo iudicio “credibilitatis” efformando circa catholicam fidem, quamvis tam multa ac mira signa externa divinitus disposita sint quibus vel solo naturali rationis lumine divina christianae religionis origo certo probari possit. Homo enim sive praeiudicatis ductus opinionibus, sive cupidinibus ac mala voluntate instigatus, non modo externorum signorum evidentiæ, quae prostat, sed etiam supernis afflatibus, quos Deus in animos ingerit nostros, renuere ac resistere potest.

in such matters that what they do not wish to believe is false or at least doubtful.

It is for this reason that divine “revelation” must be considered morally necessary so that those religious and moral truths that are not of their nature beyond the reach of reason in the present condition of the human race may be known by all men readily with a firm certainty and with freedom from all error [*3005].

Furthermore, the human intelligence sometimes experiences difficulties in forming a judgment about the credibility of the Catholic faith, notwithstanding the many wonderful external signs God has given, which are sufficient to prove with certitude by the natural light of reason alone the divine origin of the Christian religion. For man can, whether from prejudice or passion or bad faith, refuse and resist not only the evidence of the external proofs that are available, but also the impulses of actual grace.

Dangerous Tendencies of Contemporary Philosophy

- 3877 Sunt qui evolutionis, ut aiunt, systema ... absque prudentia ac discretione admissum ad omnium rerum originem pertinere contendunt, atque audacter indulgeant opinioni monisticae ac pantheisticae mundi universi continuaevolutioni obnoxii. Qua quidem opinione fautores communismi libenter fruuntur ut suum “materialismum dialecticum” efficacius propugnent et evehant, omni notione theistica ex animis avulsa.

Some imprudently and indiscreetly hold that evolution explains the origin of all things ... and audaciously support the monistic and pantheistic opinion that the world is in continual evolution. Communists gladly subscribe to this opinion so that, when the souls of men have been deprived of every idea of a personal God, they may the more efficaciously defend and propagate their “dialectical materialism”.

- 3878 [563] Huiusmodi evolutionis commenta, quibus omne, quod absolutum, firmum, immutabile est, repudiatur, viam straverunt novae aberranti philosophiae, quae cum “idealismo”, “immanentismo” ac “pragmatismo” contendens, “existentialismi” nomen nacta est, utpote quae, immutabilibus rerum essentiis posthabitis, de singulorum “existentiis” tantum sollicita sit.

Such fictitious tenets of evolution that repudiate all that is absolute, firm, and immutable have paved the way for the new erroneous philosophy that, rivaling “idealism”, “immanentism”, and “pragmatism”, has assumed the name of “existentialism”, since it concerns itself only with the existence of individual things and neglects all consideration of their immutable essences.

Accedit falsus quidam “historicismus”, qui solis humanae vitae eventibus inhaerens, cuiusvis veritatis legisque absolutae fundamenta subvertit, cum ad res philosophicas tum ad christiana etiam dogmata quod attinet....

There is also a certain historicism, which, attributing value only to the events of man’s life, overthrows the foundation of all truth and absolute law, both on the level of philosophical speculations and especially the Christian dogmas....

The Apologetic Method

- 3879 Iamvero theologis ac philosophis catholicis, quibus grave incumbit munus divinam humanamque veritatem tuendi animisque inserendi hominum, has opiniones plus minusve e recto itinere aberrantes neque ignorare neque neglegere licet. Quin immo ipsi easdem opiniones perspectas habeant oportet, tum quia morbi non apte curantur nisi rite praecogniti fuerint, tum quia nonnumquam in falsis ipsis commentis aliquid veritatis

Now Catholic theologians and philosophers, whose grave duty it is to defend natural and supernatural truth and instill it in the hearts of men, cannot afford to ignore or neglect these more or less erroneous opinions. Rather they must come to understand these same theories well, both because diseases are not properly treated unless they are rightly diagnosed and because sometimes even in these false theories a certain amount of truth is latet, tum denique quia eadem animam provocant ad quasdam [564] veritates, sive philosophicas sive theologicas, sollertius perscrutandas ac perpendendas. . . .

Et quemadmodum olim fuerunt, qui rogarent num translaticia Ecclesiae apologetica ratio obstaculum constitueret potius quam auxilium ad animos Christo lucrandos, ita hodie non desunt qui eo usque procedere audeant ut serio quaestionem moveant num theologia eiusque methodus, quales in scholis ecclesiastica approbante auctoritate vigent, non modo perficiendae, verum etiam omnino reformandae sint, ut regnum Christi quocumque terrarum, inter homines cuiusvis culturae vel cuiusvis opinionis religiosae efficacius propagetur.

Quodsi iidem ad nihil aliud intenderent quam ad disciplinam ecclesiasticam eiusque methodum hodiernis condicionibus ac necessitatibus, nova quadam inducta ratione, aptius accom[565]modandas, nulla fere esset causa timendi; at vero imprudenti aestuantes “irenismo”, nonnulli veluti obices ad fraternam unitatem restaurandam ea putare videntur, quae ipsis legibus ac principiis a Christo datis innituntur itemque institutis ab eo conditis, vel quae munimina ac fulcimina exstant integritatis fidei. . . .

Preserving Theological Terminology

Quod autem ad theologiam spectat, quorundam consilium est dogmatum significationem quam maxime extenuare; ipsumque dogma a loquendi ratione in Ecclesia iamdiu recepta et a philosophicis notionibus penes catholicos doctores vigentibus liberare, ut in catholica exponenda doctrina ad Sacrae Scripturae sanctorumque Patrum dicendi modum redeatur.

Spem ipsi fovant fore ut dogma elementis denudatum, quae extrinsecus a divina revelatione esse dicunt, fructuose comparetur cum eorum opinionibus dogmaticis qui ab Ecclesiae unitate seiuncti sint, utque hac via pedetemptim perveniatur ad assimilanda sibi invicem dogma catholicum et placita dissidentium.

Accedit quod, catholica doctrina ad hanc redacta condicionem, viam sterni autumant, qua, hodiernis necessitatibus satis[566]faciendo, hodiernae etiam philosophiae notionibus dogma exprimi possit, sive “immanentismi” sive “idealismi” sive “existentialismi” aliusve systematis.

Quod idcirco etiam fieri posse ac debere audaciores quidam affirmant, quia fidei mysteria numquam notionibus adaequate veris significari posse contendunt, sed tantum notionibus “approximativis”, ut aiunt, ac semper mutabilibus, quibus veritas aliquatenus quidem indicetur, sed necessario quoque deformetur. Quapropter contained and, finally, because these theories provoke more subtle discussion and evaluation of philosophical and theological truths. . . .

And as in former times some questioned whether the traditional apologetics of the Church did not constitute an obstacle rather than a help to the winning of souls for Christ, so today some are presumptive enough to question seriously whether theology and theological methods, such as with the approval of ecclesiastical authority are found in our schools, should not only be perfected, but also completely reformed, in order to promote the more efficacious propagation of the kingdom of Christ everywhere throughout the world among men of every culture and religious opinion. 3880

Now if these only aimed at adapting ecclesiastical teaching and methods to modern conditions and requirements, through the introduction of some new explanations, there would be scarcely any reason for alarm. But some through enthusiasm for an imprudent “eirenism” seem to consider as an obstacle to the restoration of fraternal union things founded on the laws and principles given by Christ and likewise on institutions founded by him or that are the defense and support of the integrity of the faith. . . .

In theology some want to reduce to a minimum the meaning of dogmas and to free dogma itself from terminology long established in the Church and from philosophical concepts held by Catholic teachers, to bring about a return in the explanation of Catholic doctrine to the way of speaking used in Holy Scripture and by the Fathers of the Church. 3881

They cherish the hope that when dogma is stripped of the elements they hold to be extrinsic to divine revelation, it will compare advantageously with the dogmatic opinions of those who are separated from the unity of the Church and that in this way they will gradually arrive at a mutual assimilation of Catholic dogma with the tenets of the dissidents.

Moreover, they assert that when Catholic doctrine has been reduced to this condition, a way will be found to satisfy modern needs that will permit of dogma being expressed also by the concepts of modern philosophy, whether of “immanentism” or “idealism” or “existentialism” or any other system. 3882

Some more audaciously affirm that this can and must be done, because they hold that the mysteries of faith are never expressed by truly adequate concepts but only by approximate and ever changeable notions, in which the truth is to some extent expressed but is necessarily distorted. Wherefore they do not consider it absurd, but non absurdum esse putant, sed necesse omnino esse ut theologia pro variis philosophiis, quibus decursu temporum tamquam suis utitur instrumentis, novas antiquis substituat notiones, ita ut diversis quidem modis, ac vel etiam aliqua ratione oppositis, idem tamen, ut aiunt, valentibus, easdem divinas veritates humanitus reddat.

Addunt etiam historiam dogmatum consistere in reddendis variis sibi succedentibus formis, quas veritas revelata induerit, secundum diversas doctrinas et opinioniones quae saeculorum decursu ortae fuerint.

3883 Patet autem ex iis, quae diximus, huiusmodi molimina non tantum ducere ad “relativismum” dogmaticum, quem vocant, sed illum iam reapse continere; cui quidem despectus doctrinae communiter traditae eorumque vocabulorum, quibus eadem significatur, satis superque favet.

Nemo sane est qui non videat huiusmodi notionum vocabula cum in scholis tum ab ipsius Ecclesiae Magisterio adhibita, perfici et perpoliri posse; ac notum praeterea est Ecclesiam in iisdem vocibus adhibendis non semper constantem fuisse. Liquet etiam Ecclesiam non cuilibet systemati philosophico, brevi temporis spatio vigenti, devinciri posse: sed ea quae communi consensu a catholicis doctoribus composita per plura saecula fuere ad aliquam dogmatis intelligentiam attingendam, tam caduco fundamento procul dubio non nituntur. Nituntur enim principiis ac notionibus ex vera rerum creaturarum cognitione deductis; in quibus quidem deducendis cognitionibus humanae menti veritas divinitus revelata, quasi stella, per Ecclesiam illuxit.

Quare mirum non est aliquas huiusmodi notiones a Conciliis Oecumenicis non solum adhibitas, sed etiam sancitas esse, ita ut ab eis discedere nefas sit. . . .

Despectus autem vocabulorum ac notionum quibus theologi scholastici uti solent, sponte ducit ad enervandam theologiam, ut aiunt speculativam, quam, cum ratione theologica innitatur, vera certitudine carere existimant. . . .

The Authority of the Ecclesiastical Magisterium

3884 Magisterium ab ipsis tamquam progressionis sufflumen ac scientiae obex exhibetur, ab acatholicis vero quibusdam iam veluti iniustum frenum consideratur quo excultiores aliqui theologi a disciplina sua innovanda detineantur. Et quamquam hoc sacrum Magisterium, in rebus fidei et morum, cuilibet theologo proxima et universalis veritatis norma esse debet, utpote cui Christus Dominus totum depositum fidei—Sacras nempe Litteras altogether necessary, that theology should substitute new concepts in place of the old ones in keeping with the various philosophies that in the course of time it uses as its instruments, so that it should give human expression to divine truths in various ways that are even somewhat opposed, but still equivalent, as they say.

They add that the history of dogmas consists in the reporting of the various forms in which revealed truth has been clothed, forms that have succeeded one another in accordance with the different teachings and opinions that have arisen over the course of the centuries.

It is evident from what We have already said, that such efforts not only lead to what they call dogmatic “relativism” but that they actually contain it. The contempt of doctrine commonly taught and of the terms in which it is expressed strongly favors it.

Everyone is aware that the terminology employed in the schools and even that used by the Teaching Authority of the Church itself is capable of being perfected and polished; and we know also that the Church herself has not always used the same terms in the same way. It is also manifest that the Church cannot be bound to every system of philosophy that has existed for a short space of time. Nevertheless, the things that have been composed through common effort by Catholic teachers over the course of the centuries to bring about some understanding of dogma are certainly not based on any such weak foundation. These things are based on principles and notions deduced from a true knowledge of created things. In the process of deducing, this knowledge, like a star, gave enlightenment to the human mind through the Church.

Hence it is not astonishing that some of these notions have not only been used by the ecumenical councils but even been sanctioned by them, so that it is wrong to depart from them. . . .

The contempt for terms and notions habitually used by scholastic theologians leads of itself to the weakening of what they call speculative theology, a discipline these men consider devoid of true certitude because it is based on theological reasoning. . . .

This Teaching Authority is represented by them as a hindrance to progress and an obstacle in the way of science. Some non-Catholics consider it as an unjust restraint preventing some more qualified theologians from reforming their subject. And although this sacred office of teacher in matters of faith and morals must be the proximate and universal criterion of truth for all theologians, since to it has been entrusted by Christ ac divinam “traditionem” et custodiendum et tuendum et interpretandum concredidit, attamen officium, quo fideles tenentur illos quoque fugere errores, qui ad haeresim plus minusve accedant, ideoque “etiam constitutiones et decreta servare, quibus pravae huiusmodi opiniones a Sancta Sede proscripae et prohibitae sunt”,¹ nonnunquam ita ignoratur ac si non habeatur. . . .

[568] . . . Neque putandum est, ea quae in Encyclicis Litteris proponuntur, assensum per se non postulare, cum in iis Pontifices supremam sui Magisterii potestatem non exercent. Magisterio enim ordinario haec docentur, de quo illud etiam valet: “Qui vos audit, me audit” [Lc 10:16]; ac plerumque quae in Encyclicis Litteris proponuntur et inculcantur, iam aliunde ad doctrinam catholicam pertinent.

Quodsi Summi Pontifices in actis suis de re hactenus controversa data opera sententiam ferunt, omnibus patet rem illam, secundum mentem ac voluntatem eorumdem Pontificum, quaestionem liberae inter theologos disceptationis iam haberi non posse.

The Use and Abuse of the Sources of Revelation

Verum quoque est, theologis semper redeundum esse ad divinae revelationis fontes: eorum enim est indicare qua ratione ea quae a vivo Magisterio docentur, in Sacris Litteris et in divina “traditione”, sive explicitae, sive implicitae inveniantur. Accedit quod uterque doctrinae divinitus revelatae fons tot tantosque continet thesaurus veritatis, ut numquam reapse exhauriatur. Quapropter sacrorum fontium studio sacrae disciplinae semper iuvenescunt; dum contra speculatio, quae ulteriorem sacri depositi inquisitionem neglegit, ut experiundo novi[569]mus, sterilis evadit.

Sed hac de causa theologia etiam positiva, quam dicunt, scientiae dumtaxat historicae aequari nequit. Una enim cum sacris eiusmodi fontibus Deus Ecclesiae suae Magisterium vivum dedit, ad ea quoque illustranda et enucleanda, quae in fidei deposito nonnisi obscure ac velut implicitae continentur.

Quod quidem depositum nec singulis christifidelibus nec ipsis theologis divinus Redemptor concredidit authentice interpretandum, sed soli Ecclesiae Magisterio. Si autem hoc suum munus Ecclesia exercet, sicut saeculorum decursu saepenumero factum est, sive ordinario sive extraordinario eiusdem muneris exercitio, patet omnino falsam esse methodum, qua ex obscuris clara explicantur, quin immo contrarium omnes sequi ordinem necesse esse. Quare Decessor Noster imm.

our Lord the whole deposit of faith—Sacred Scripture and divine tradition—to be preserved, guarded, and interpreted, still the duty that is incumbent on the faithful to flee also those errors that more or less approach heresy, and accordingly “to keep also the constitutions and decrees by which such evil opinions are proscribed and forbidden by the Holy See”,¹ is sometimes as little known as if it did not exist. . . .

. . . Nor must it be thought that what is expounded 3885 in encyclical letters does not of itself demand consent, since in writing such letters the popes do not exercise the supreme power of their Teaching Authority. For these matters are taught with the ordinary teaching authority, of which it is true to say: “He who hears you hears me” [Lk 10:16], and generally what is expounded and inculcated in encyclical letters already for other reasons appertains to Catholic doctrine.

But if the supreme pontiffs in their official documents purposely pass judgment on a matter up to that time under dispute, it is obvious that that matter, according to the mind and will of the pontiffs, cannot be any longer considered a question open to discussion among theologians.

It is also true that theologians must always return to the sources of divine revelation: for it belongs to them 3886 to point out how the doctrine of the living Teaching Authority is to be found either explicitly or implicitly in the Scriptures and in tradition. Besides, each source of divinely revealed doctrine contains so many rich treasures of truth that they can really never be exhausted. Hence it is that theology through the study of its sacred sources remains ever fresh; on the other hand, speculation that neglects a deeper search into the deposit of faith proves sterile, as We know from experience.

But for this reason even positive theology cannot be on a par with merely historical science. For, together with the sources of positive theology, God has given to his Church a living Teaching Authority to elucidate and explain what is contained in the deposit of faith only obscurely and implicitly.

This deposit of faith our Divine Redeemer has given for authentic interpretation, not to each of the faithful, not even to theologians, but only to the Teaching Authority of the Church. But if the Church does exercise this function of teaching, as she often has through the centuries, either in the ordinary or in the extraordinary way, it is clear how false is a procedure that would attempt to explain what is clear by means of what is obscure. Indeed, the very opposite procedure must be mem. Pius IX, docens nobilissimum theologiae munus illud esse, quod ostendat quomodo ab Ecclesia definita doctrina contineatur in fontibus, non absque gravi causa illa addidit verba: “eo ipso sensu, quo definita est”.¹...

*3884¹ Cf. *3045.

3887 Plura etiam a nonnullis proponuntur vel mentibus instillantur in detrimentum divinae auctoritatis Sacrae Scripturae. Etenim sensum definitionis Concilii Vaticani de Deo Sacrae Scripturae auctore audacter quidam pervertunt; atque sententiam, iam pluries reprobata, renovant, secundum quam Sacrarum Litterarum immunitas errorum ad ea solummodo, quae de Deo ac de rebus moralibus et religiosis traduntur, pertineat. Immo perperam loquuntur de sensu humano Sacrorum Librorum sub quo sensus eorum divinus lateat, quem solum infallibilem declarant.

In Sacra Scriptura interpretanda nullam haberi volunt rationem analogiae fidei ac “traditionis” Ecclesiae; ita ut Sanctorum Patrum et sacri Magisterii doctrina quasi ad trutinam Sacrae Scripturae, ratione mere humana ab exegetis explicatae, sit revocanda, potius quam eadem Sacra Scriptura exponenda sit ad mentem Ecclesiae, quae a Christo Domino totius depositi veritatis divinitus revelatae custos ac interpres constituta est.

3888 [570] Ac praeterea sensus litteralis Sacrae Scripturae eiusque expositio a tot tantisque exegetis, vigilante Ecclesia, elaborata, ex commenticiis eorum placitis, novae cedere debent exegesi, quam symbolicam ac spiritualem appellant; et qua Sacra Biblia Veteris Testamenti, quae hodie in Ecclesia tamquam fons clausus lateant, tandem aliquando omnibus aperiantur. Hac ratione asseverant difficultates omnes evanescere, quibus ii tantummodo praepediantur, qui sensui litterali Scripturarum adhaereant.

3889 Quae quidem omnia quam aliena sint a principiis ac normis hermeneuticis a decessoribus Nostris fel. rec. Leone XIII in Encyclicis Litteris “Providentissimus”, et a Benedicto XV in Enc. Litt. “Spiritus Paraclitus”, itemque a Nobis ipsis in Enc. Litt. “Divino afflante Spiritu” rite statutis nemo est qui non videat.

The Consequences of the New Theological Tendencies

3890 Ac mirum non est huiusmodi novitates, ad omnes fere theologiae partes quod attinet, iam venenosos peperisse fructus. In dubium revocatur humanam rationem, absque divinae “revelationis” divinaeque gratiae auxilio, argumentis ex creatis rebus deductis demonstrare posse Deum personalem existere; negatur mundum initium habuisse, atque contenditur creationem mundi used. Hence Our predecessor of immortal memory, Pius IX, teaching that the most noble office of theology is to show how a doctrine defined by the Church is contained in the sources of revelation, added these words, and with very good reason: “in that sense in which it has been defined by the Church”.¹...

For some go so far as to pervert the sense of the Vatican Council’s definition that God is the author of Holy Scripture, and they put forward again the opinion, already often condemned, that asserts that immunity from error extends only to those parts of the Bible that treat of God or of moral and religious matters. They even wrongly speak of a human sense of the Scriptures, beneath which a divine sense, which they say is the only infallible meaning, lies hidden.

In interpreting Scripture, they will take no account of the analogy of faith and the tradition of the Church. Thus they judge the doctrine of the Fathers and of the Teaching Church by the norm of Holy Scripture, interpreted by the purely human reason of exegetes, instead of explaining Holy Scripture according to the mind of the Church that Christ our Lord has appointed guardian and interpreter of the whole deposit of divinely revealed truth.

Further, according to their fictitious opinions, the literal sense of Holy Scripture and its explanation, carefully worked out under the Church’s vigilance by so many great exegetes, should yield now to a new exegesis, which they are pleased to call symbolic or spiritual. By means of this new exegesis of the Old Testament, which today in the Church is a sealed book, would finally be thrown open to all the faithful. By this method, they say, all difficulties vanish, difficulties that hinder only those who adhere to the literal meaning of the Scriptures.

Everyone sees how foreign all this is to the principles and norms of interpretation rightly fixed by Our predecessors of happy memory Leo XIII, in his encyclical Providentissimus Deus, and Benedict XV, in the encyclical Spiritus Paraclitus, as also by Ourselves in the encyclical Divino afflante Spiritu.

It is not surprising that novelties of this kind have already borne their deadly fruit in almost all branches of theology. It is now doubted that human reason, without divine revelation and the help of divine grace, can, by arguments drawn from the created universe, prove the existence of a personal God; it is denied that the world had a beginning; it is argued that the creation of the necessariam esse, cum ex necessaria liberalitate divini amoris procedat; aeterna et infallibilis liberarum actionum hominum praescientia Deo item denegatur; quae quidem Vaticani Concilii declarationibus adversantur [*3001–3003].

*3886¹ Pius IX, letter Inter gravissimas, October 26, 1870 (Pius IX, Acta 1/V:260).

Quaestio etiam a nonnullis agitur num Angeli creaturae personales sint; numque materia a spiritu essentialiter differat.

Alii veram “gratuitatem” ordinis supernaturalis corrumpunt, cum autem Deum entia intellectu praedita condere non posse, quin eadem ad beatificam visionem ordinet et vocet.

Nec satis; nam peccati originalis notio, definitionibus Tridentinis posthabitis, pervertitur, unaque simul peccati in universum, prout est Dei offensa, itemque satisfactionis a Christo pro nobis exhibitae.

Nec desunt qui contendunt transsubstantiationis do[571]ctrinam, utpote antiquata notione philosophica substantiae innixam, ita emendam esse ut realis Christi praesentia in Ss. Eucharistia ad quemdam symbolismum reducatur, quatenus consecratae species, nonnisi signa efficacia sint spiritualis praesentiae Christi eiusque intimae coniunctionis cum fidelibus membris in Corpore mystico....

world is necessary, since it proceeds from the necessary liberality of divine love; it is denied that God has eternal and infallible foreknowledge of the free actions of men—all this in contradiction to the decrees of the Vatican Council [*3001–3003].

Some also question whether angels are personal beings and whether matter and spirit differ essentially. 3891

Others destroy the gratuity of the supernatural order, since God, they say, cannot create intellectual beings without ordering and calling them to the beatific vision.

Nor is this all. Disregarding the Council of Trent, some pervert the very concept of original sin, along with the (concept) of sin in general, as an offense against God as well as the (idea) of satisfaction performed for us by Christ.

Some even say that the doctrine of transubstantiation, based on an antiquated philosophic notion of substance, should be so modified that the real presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist be reduced to a kind of symbolism, whereby the consecrated species would be merely efficacious signs of the spiritual presence of Christ and of his intimate union with the faithful members of his Mystical Body....

The Principles of Sound Philosophy

In comperto est quanti Ecclesia humanam rationem faciat, quod pertinet ad existentiam unius Dei personalis certo demonstrandam, itemque ad ipsius christianae fidei fundamenta signis divinis invicte comprobanda; parique modo ad legem, quam Creator animis hominum indidit, rite exprimendam; ac denique ad aliquam mysteriorum intellegentiam assequendam eamque fructuosissimam.¹

Hoc tamen munus ratio tum solum apte ac tuto absolvere poterit, cum debito modo exulta fuerit; nempe cum fuerit sana illa philosophia imbuta, quae veluti patrimonium iamdudum exstat a superioribus christianis aetatibus traditum, atque adeo altioris etiam ordinis auctoritatem habet, quia ipsum Magisterium Ecclesiae, eius principia ac praecipua asserta, a viris magni ingenii paulatim patefacta ac defi[572]nita, ad ipsius divinae “revelationis” trutinam vocavit. Quae quidem philosophia in Ecclesia agnita ac recepta, et verum sincerumque cognitionis humanae valorem tuetur, et metaphysica inconcussa principia—rationis nempe sufficientis, causalitatis, et finalitatis—ac demum certae et immutabilis veritatis assecutionem.

It is well known how highly the Church regards human reason, for it falls to reason to demonstrate with certainty the existence of God, personal and one; to prove beyond doubt from divine signs the very foundations of the Christian faith; to express properly the law that the Creator has imprinted in the hearts of men; and, finally, to attain to some notion, indeed, a very fruitful notion, of mysteries.¹ 3892

But reason can perform these functions safely and well only when properly trained, that is, when imbued with that sound philosophy which has long been, as it were, a patrimony handed down by earlier Christian ages and which, moreover, possesses an authority of an even higher order, since the Teaching Authority of the Church, in the light of divine revelation itself, has weighed its fundamental tenets, which have been elaborated and defined little by little by men of great genius. For this philosophy, acknowledged and accepted by the Church, safeguards the genuine validity of human knowledge, the unshakable metaphysical principles of sufficient reason, causality, and finality, and, finally, the mind’s ability to attain certain and unchangeable truth.

*3892 ¹ Cf. Vatican Council I, sess. 3, chap. 4 (*3016).

3893 In hac philosophia plura sane exponuntur, quibus res fidei et morum neque directe nec indirecte attinguntur, quaeque propterea Ecclesia liberae peritorum disceptationi permittit; at quoad alia plura, praesertim quoad principia assertaque praecipua, quae supra memoravimus, eadem libertas non viget.

Etiam in huiusmodi essentialibus quaestionibus, philosophiam quidem aptiore ac ditiore veste induere licet, efficacioribus dictionibus communire, quibusdam scholarum adminiculis minus aptis exuere, sanis quoque quibusdam elementis progredientis humanae lucubrationis caute locupletare; numquam tamen eam subvertere fas est, vel falsis principiis contaminare, vel quasi magnum quidem, sed obsoletum existimare monumentum. Non enim veritas omnisque eius philosophica declaratio in dies mutari possunt, cum potissimum agatur de principiis humanae menti per se notis, vel de sentiis illis, quae tum saeculorum sapientia, tum etiam divinae “revelationis” consensu ac fulcimine inniuntur....

3894 [573] Quae si bene perspecta fuerint, facile patebit cur Ecclesia exigit ut futuri sacerdotes philosophicis disciplinis instruantur “ad Angelici Doctoris rationem, doctrinam et principia”, quandoquidem plurimum saeculorum experientia probe noscit Aquinatis methodum ac rationem sive in tironibus erudiendis, sive in absconditis veritatibus pervestigandis, singulari praestantia eminere....

Hac de causa quam maxime deplorandum est, philosophiam in Ecclesia receptam ac agnitam hodie a nonnullis despectui haberi, ita ut antiquata quoad formam, rationalistica, ut aiunt, quoad cogitandi processum, impudenter renuntietur. Dicitant enim, hanc nostram philosophiam perperam opinionem tueri, metaphysicam absolute veram existere posse; dum contra asseverant, res, praesertim transcendentis, non aptius exprimi posse quam disparatis doctrinis, quae sese mutuo compleant, quamvis sibi invicem quodammodo opponantur.

The Application of the Positive Sciences to Religion

3895 [575] ... Non pauci expostulant ut catholica religio earumdem disciplinarum quam plurimum rationem habeat. Quod sane laude dignum est ubi de factis agitur reapse demonstratis; caute tamen accipiendum est ubi potius de “hypothesisibus” sit quaestio, etsi aliquo modo humana scientia innixis, quibus doctrina attingitur in Sacris Litteris vel in “traditione” contenta. Quosdi tales coniecturales opiniones doctrinae a Deo revelatae directe vel indirecte adversentur, tum huiusmodi postulatum nullo modo admitti potest.

3896 Quamobrem Ecclesiae Magisterium non prohibet quominus “evolutionismi” doctrina, quatenus nempe de humani corporis origine inquit ex iam existente ac

Of course this philosophy deals with much that neither directly nor indirectly touches faith or morals and that, consequently, the Church leaves to the free discussion of experts. But this does not hold for many other things, especially those principles and fundamental tenets to which We have just referred.

However, even in these fundamental questions, we may clothe our philosophy in a more convenient and richer dress, make it more vigorous with a more effective terminology, divest it of certain scholastic aids found less useful, prudently enrich it with the fruits of progress of the human mind. But never may we overthrow it or contaminate it with false principles or regard it as a great but obsolete relic. For truth and its philosophic expression cannot change from day to day, least of all where there is question of self-evident principles of the human mind or of those propositions that are supported by the wisdom of the ages and by divine revelation....

If one considers all this well, he will easily see why the Church demands that future priests be instructed in philosophy “according to the method, doctrine, and principles of the Angelic Doctor”, since, as we well know from the experience of centuries, the method of Aquinas is singularly preeminent both for teaching students and for bringing truth to light....

How deplorable it is, then, that this philosophy, received and honored by the Church, is scorned by some, who shamelessly call it outmoded in form and rationalistic, as they say, in its method of thought. They say that this philosophy upholds the erroneous notion that there can be a metaphysics that is absolutely true; whereas in fact, they say, reality, especially transcendent reality, cannot better be expressed than by disparate teachings, which mutually complete each other, although they are in a way mutually opposed.

... In fact, not a few insistently demand that the Catholic religion take these sciences into account as much as possible. This certainly would be praiseworthy in the case of clearly proved facts; but caution must be used when there is rather question of hypotheses, having some sort of scientific foundation, in which the doctrine contained in Sacred Scripture or in tradition is involved. If such conjectural opinions are directly or indirectly opposed to the doctrine revealed by God, then the demand that they be recognized can in no way be admitted.

For these reasons the Teaching Authority of the Church does not forbid that, in conformity with the present state of human sciences and sacred theology, vivente materia oriundi—animas enim a Deo immediate creari catholica fides nos retinere iubet—pro hodierno humanarum disciplinarum et sacrae theologiae statu, investigationibus ac disputationibus peritorum in utroque campo hominum pertractetur, ita qui[576]dem ut rationes utriusque opinionis, faventium nempe, vel obstantium, debita cum gravitate, moderatione ac temperantia perpendantur ac diiudicentur; dummodo omnes parati sint ad Ecclesiae iudicio obtemperandum, cui a Christo munus demandatum est et Sacras Scripturas authentice interpretandi et fidei dogmata tuendi.¹

Hanc tamen disceptandi libertatem nonnulli temerario ausu transgrediuntur, cum ita sese gerant quasi si ipsa humani corporis origo ex iam existente ac vivente materia per indicia hucusque reperta ac per ratiocinia ex iisdem indiciiis deducta, iam certa omnino sit ac demonstrata; atque ex divinae revelationis fontibus nihil habeatur, quod in hac re maximam moderationem et cautelam exigit.

Cum vero de alia coniecturali opinione agitur, videlicet de polygenismo, quem vocant, tum Ecclesiae filii eiusmodi libertate minime fruuntur. Non enim christifideles eam sententiam amplecti possunt, quam qui retinent asseverant vel post Adam hisce in terris veros homines exstitisse, qui non ab eodem prouti omnium protoparente, naturali generatione originem duxerint, vel Adam significare multitudinem quamdam protoparentum; cum nequaquam appareat quomodo huiusmodi sententia componi queat cum iis quae fontes revelatae veritatis et acta Magisterii Ecclesiae proponunt de peccato originali, quod procedit ex peccato vere commisso ab uno Adamo, quodque generatione in omnes transfusum, inest unicuique proprium [cf. Rm 5:12–19; *1511–1514].

Quemadmodum autem in biologicis et anthropologicis disciplinis, ita etiam in historicis sunt qui limites et cautelas ab Ecclesia statuta audacter transgrediuntur. Ac peculiari modo deploranda est quaedam nimio liberior libros historicos Veteris Testamenti interpretandi ratio, cuius fautores Epistolam haud ita multo ante a Pontificio Consilio de re biblica Archiepiscopo Parisiensi datam ad suam defendendam causam immerito referunt [*3862–3864]. Haec enim Epistula aperte monet undecim priora ca[577]pita Geneseos, quamvis cum historicae compositionis rationibus proprie non convenient, quibus eximii rerum gestarum scriptores graeci et latini, vel nostrae aetatis periti usi fuerint, nihilominus quodam vero sensu, exegetis amplius investigando ac research and discussions, on the part of men experienced in both fields, take place with regard to the doctrine of evolution, insofar as it inquires into the origin of the human body as coming from preexistent and living matter—for the Catholic faith obliges us to hold that souls are immediately created by God. However, this must be done in such a way that the reasons for both opinions, that is, those favorable and those unfavorable to evolution, be weighed and judged with the necessary seriousness, moderation, and measure, and provided that all are prepared to submit to the judgment of the Church, to whom Christ has given the mission of interpreting authentically the Sacred Scriptures and of defending the dogmas of faith.¹

Some, however, rashly transgress this liberty of discussion when they act as if the origin of the human body from preexisting and living matter were already completely certain and proved by the facts that have been discovered up to now and by reasoning on those facts and as if there were nothing in the sources of divine revelation that demands the greatest moderation and caution in this question.

When, however, there is question of another 3897 conjectural opinion, namely polygenism, the children of the Church by no means enjoy such liberty. For the faithful cannot embrace that opinion which maintains that either after Adam there existed on this earth true men who did not take their origin through natural generation from him as from the first parent of all or that Adam represents a certain number of first parents. Now it is no way apparent how such an opinion can be reconciled with that which the sources of revealed truth and the documents of the Teaching Authority of the Church propose with regard to original sin, which proceeds from a sin actually committed by an individual Adam and which, through generation, is passed on to all and is in everyone as his own [cf. Rom 5:12–19; *1511–1514].

Just as in the biological and anthropological sciences, 3898 so also in the historical sciences there are those who boldly transgress the limits and safeguards established by the Church. In a particular way must be deplored a certain too free interpretation of the historical books of the Old Testament. Those who favor this system, in order to defend their cause, wrongly refer to the letter that was sent not long ago to the archbishop of Paris by the Pontifical Commission on Biblical Studies [*3862–3864]. This letter, in fact, clearly points out that the first eleven chapters of Genesis, although properly speaking not conforming to the historical method used by the best Greek and Latin writers or by competent authors of our time, do nevertheless pertain to history in a true sense, determinando, ad genus historiae pertinere; eademque capita, oratione simplici ac figurata mentique populi parum exculti accomodata, tum praecipuas veritates referre, quibus aeterna nostra procuranda salus innitur, tum etiam popularem descriptionem originis generis humani populique electi.

*3896¹ Cf. Pius XII, address to the Academy of Sciences, November 30, 1941 (AAS 33 [1941]: 506).

Si quid autem hagiographi antiqui ex narrationibus popularibus hauserint (quod quidem concedi potest), numquam obliviscendum est eos ita egisse divinae inspirationis afflatu adiutos, quo in seligendis ac diiudicandis documentis illis ab omni errore immunes praemuniebantur.

3899 Quae autem ex popularibus narrationibus in Sacris Litteris recepta sunt, ea cum mythologiis aliisve id genus minime aequanda sunt, quae magis ex effusa imaginatione procedunt quam ex illo veritatis ac simplicitatis studio, quod in Sacris Libris Veteris etiam Testamenti adeo elucet ut hagiographi nostri antiquos profanos scriptores aperte praecellere dicendi sint.

which, however, must be further studied and determined by exegetes; the same chapters (the letter points out), in simple and figurative language adapted to the mentality of a people but little cultured, both state the principal truths that are fundamental for our salvation and also give a popular description of the origin of the human race and the chosen people.

If, however, the ancient sacred writers have taken anything from popular narrations (and this may be conceded), it must never be forgotten that they did so with the help of divine inspiration, through which they were rendered immune from any error in selecting and evaluating those documents.

Therefore, whatever of the popular narrations have been inserted into the Sacred Scriptures must in no way be considered on a par with myths or other such things, which are more the product of an extravagant imagination than of that striving for truth and simplicity which in the Sacred Books, also of the Old Testament, is so apparent that our ancient sacred writers must be admitted to be clearly superior to the ancient profane writers.

3900–3904: Apostolic Constitution Munificentissimus Deus, November 1, 1950

The constitution contains the dogma of the Assumption of Mary into heaven proclaimed by Pius XII on November 1, 1950. The dogmatic proclamation was preceded by a survey of the worldwide episcopate. Cf. the letter of Pius XII Deiparae virginis of May 1, 1946 (AAS 42 [1950]: 782f.). Since the second half of the nineteenth century, requests for the dogmatic definition had been presented. At the First Vatican Council, 204 council Fathers had advocated defining the Assumption of Mary into heaven. In the first half of the twentieth century, this movement had gained strength. Cf. W. Hentrich and R. Walter von Moos, Petitiones de Assumptione corpora B. V. Mariae in caelum definienda ad S. Sedem delatae, propositae sec. ordinem hierarchicum, dogmaticum, geographicum, chronologicum, ad consensum Ecclesiae manifestandum, 2 vols. (Vatican, 1942).

Ed.: AAS 42 (1950): 767–70.

Definition of the Assumption of Mary into Heaven

3900 Haec omnia Sanctorum Patrum ac theologorum argumenta considerationesque Sacris Litteris tamquam ultimo fundamento nituntur; quae quidem almam Dei Matrem nobis veluti [768] ante oculos proponunt divino Filio suo coniunctissimam, eiusque semper participantem sortem. Quamobrem quasi impossibile videtur eam cernere, quae Christum concepit, peperit, suo lacte aluit, eumque inter ulnas habuit pectorique obstrinxit suo, ab eodem post terrestrem hanc vitam, etsi non anima, corpore tamen separatam.

Cum Redemptor noster Mariae Filius sit, haud poterat profecto, utpote divinae legis observator perfectissimus, praeter Aeternum Patrem, Matrem quoque suam dilectissimam non honorare. Atqui, cum eam posset tam magno honore exornare, ut eam a sepulcri corruptione servaret incolumem, id reapse fecisse credendum est.

3901 Maxime autem illud memorandum est, inde a saeculo II, Mariam Virginem a Sanctis Patribus veluti novam Hevam proponi novo Aadae, etsi subiectam, arctissime

All these proofs and considerations of the holy Fathers and the theologians are based upon the Sacred Writings as their ultimate foundation. These set the loving Mother of God, as it were, before our very eyes as most intimately joined to her divine Son and as always sharing his lot. Consequently, it seems impossible to think of her, the one who conceived Christ, brought him forth, nursed him with her milk, held him in her arms, and clasped him to her breast, as being apart from him in body, even though not in soul, after this earthly life.

Since our Redeemer is the Son of Mary, he could not do otherwise, as the perfect observer of God's law, than to honor, not only his eternal Father, but also his most beloved Mother. And, since it was within his power to grant her this great honor, to preserve her from the corruption of the tomb, we must believe that he really acted in this way.

We must remember especially that, since the second century, the Virgin Mary has been designated by the holy Fathers as the new Eve, who, although subject to coniunctam in certamine illo adversus inferorum hostem, quod, quemadmodum in protoevangelio [Gn 3:15] praesignificatur, ad plenissimam deveniturum erat victoriam de peccato ac de morte, quae semper in gentium Apostoli scriptis inter se copulantur [Rm 5 et 6; 1 Cor 15:21–26, 54–57].

Quamobrem, sicut gloriosa Christi anastasis essentialis pars fuit ac postremum huius victoriae tropaeum, ita Beatae Virginis commune cum Filio suo certamen virginei corporis “glorificatione” concludendum erat; ut enim idem Apostolus ait, “cum ... mortale hoc induerit immortalitatem, tunc fiet sermo, qui scriptus est: absorpta est mors in victoria” [1 Cor 15:54].

Idcirco augusta Dei Mater, Iesu Christo, inde ab omni aeternitate, “uno eodemque decreto”¹ praedestinationis, arcano modo coniuncta, immaculata in suo conceptu, in divina maternitate sua integerrima virgo, generosa Divini Redemptoris socia, qui plenum de peccato eiusque consecrariis deportavit triumphum, id tandem assecuta est, quasi supremam suorum privilegiorum coronam, ut a sepulcri corruptione servaretur immunis, utque, quemadmodum iam Filius suus, devicta morte, corpore [769] et anima ad supernam Caeli gloriam eveheretur, ubi Regina refulgeret ad eiusdem sui Filii dexteram, immortalis saeculorum Regis [cf. 1 Tim 1:17]....

[770] ... Quapropter ... ad Omnipotentis Dei gloriam, qui peculiarem benevolentiam suam Mariae Virgini dilargitus est, ad sui Filii honorem, immortalis saeculorum Regis ac peccati mortisque victoris, ad eiusdem augustae Matris augendam gloriam et ad totius Ecclesiae gaudium exultationemque, auctoritate Domini Nostri Iesu Christi, Beatorum Apostolorum Petri et Pauli ac Nostra pronuntiamus, declaramus et definimus divinitus revelatum dogma esse: Immaculatam Deiparam semper Virginem Mariam, expleto terrestri vitae cursu, fuisse corpore et anima ad caelestem gloriam assumptam.

Quamobrem, si quis, quod Deus avertat, id vel negare, vel in dubium vocare voluntarie ausus fuerit, quod a Nobis definitum est, noverit se a divina ac catholica fide prorsus defecisse.

3905: Encyclical Sempiternus Rex, September 8, 1951

The encyclical was published on the 1500th anniversary of the Council of Chalcedon.
Ed.: AAS 43 (1951): 638.

the new Adam, is most intimately associated with him in that struggle against the infernal foe which, as foretold in the protoevangelium [Gen 3:15], would finally result in that most complete victory over the sin and death that are always mentioned together in the writings of the apostle of the Gentiles [Rom 5 and 6; 1 Cor 15:21–26, 54–57].

Consequently, just as the glorious Resurrection of Christ was an essential part and the final sign of this victory, so that struggle which was common to the Blessed Virgin and her divine Son should be brought to a close by the glorification of her virginal body, for the same apostle says: “When ... the mortal puts on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory” [1 Cor 15:54].

Hence the revered Mother of God, from all eternity joined in a hidden way with Jesus Christ “in one and the same decree”¹ of predestination, immaculate in her conception, a most perfect virgin in her divine motherhood, the noble associate of the Divine Redeemer, who has won a complete triumph over sin and its consequences, finally obtained, as the supreme culmination of her privileges, that she should be preserved free from the corruption of the tomb and that, like her own Son, having overcome death, she might be taken up body and soul to the glory of heaven where, as Queen, she sits in splendor at the right hand of her Son, the immortal King of the Ages [cf. 1 Tim 1:17]....

For this reason ... to the glory of Almighty God, who has lavished his special affection upon the Virgin Mary, for the honor of her Son, the immortal King of the Ages and the Victor over sin and death, for the increase of the glory of that same august Mother, and for the joy and exultation of the entire Church; by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and by Our (own authority), We pronounce, declare, and define it to be a divinely revealed dogma: that the Immaculate Mother of God, the ever Virgin Mary, having completed the course of her earthly life, was assumed body and soul into heavenly glory.

Hence, if anyone, which God forbid, should dare willfully to deny or to call into doubt that which We have defined, let him know that he has fallen away completely from the divine and Catholic faith.

*3902¹ Pius IX, encyclical Ineffabilis Deus, December 8, 1854 (Pius IX, Acta 1/1:599).

The Character of Christ's Humanity

3905 Quamvis nihil prohibeat quominus humanitas Christi, etiam psychologica via ac ratione, altius investigetur, tamen in arduis huius generis studiis non desunt qui plus aequo vetera linquant, ut nova astruant et auctoritate ac definitione Chalcedonensis Concilii perperam utantur, ut a se elucubrata suffulciant.

Hi humanae Christi naturae statum et condicionem ita provehunt ut eadem reputari videatur subiectum quoddam sui iuris, quasi in ipsius Verbi persona non subsistat. At Chalcedonense Concilium, Ephesino prorsus congruens, lucide assertit utramque Redemptoris nostri naturam “in unam personam atque subsistentiam” convenire vetatque duo in Christo poni individua, ita ut aliquis “homo assumptus”, integrae autonomiae compos, penes Verbum collocetur.

While there is no reason why the humanity of Christ should not be studied more deeply also from a psychological point of view, there are, nevertheless, some who, in their arduous pursuit, desert the ancient teachings more than is right and make an erroneous use of the authority of the definition of Chalcedon to support their new ideas.

These emphasize the state and condition of Christ's human nature to such an extent as to make it seem something existing in its own right and not as subsisting in the Word itself. But the Council of Chalcedon, in full accord with that of Ephesus, clearly asserts that both natures are united in “one Person and subsistence” and rules out the placing of two individuals in Christ, as if some one man, completely autonomous in himself, had been taken up and placed by the side of the Word.

3907: Monitum of the Holy Office, June 30, 1952

Ed.: AAS 44 (1952): 546.

Sexual Intercourse while Avoiding Orgasm

3907 Gravi cum sollicitudine Apostolica Sedes animadvertit non paucos scriptores his ultimis temporibus, de vita coniugali agentes, passim palam et minute ad singula eam spectantia inverecunde descendere; praeterea nonnullos actum quemdam, amplexum reservatum nuncupatum, describere, laudare et suadere.

Ne in re tanti momenti, quae matrimonii sanctitatem et animarum salutem respicit, munere suo deficiat, ... Congregatio S. Officii, de expresso mandato ... Pii XII, omnes praedictos scriptores graviter monet, ut ab huiusmodi agendi ratione desistant. ...

Sacerdotes autem, in cura animarum et in conscientiiis dirigendis, numquam, sive sponte sive interrogati, ita loqui praesumant, quasi ex parte legis christianae contra “amplexum reservatum” nihil esset obiiciendum.

With serious concern the Apostolic See notes that in recent times, a considerable number of authors, in treating the conjugal life, everywhere openly and in detail, go immodestly into every single aspect; and some, moreover, describe, approve, and recommend a certain act called amplexus reservatus.

So as not to fail in duty in a matter as important as the sanctity of marriage and the salvation of souls, ... the Congregation of the Holy Office, by the express order ... of Pius XII, seriously warns all of the above-mentioned authors to desist from such a mode of conduct. ...

Priests, moreover, in the care of souls and in the directing of consciences, may never, whether on their own initiative or when they are questioned, presume to speak as if there is no objection to “amplexus reservatus” on the part of the Christian law.

3908–3910: Encyclical Fulgens corona, September 8, 1953

With the encyclical a “Marian year” was announced to remember the definition of the Immaculate Conception of Mary (1854).

Ed.: AAS 45 (1953): 581f.

The Redemption of the Blessed Virgin Mary

3908 Si incensissimum suavissimumque consideramus amorem, quo Deus Matrem Filii sui unigeniti procul dubio prosecutus est ac prosequitur, qua ratione vel solummodo arbitrari possumus eam fuisse, etsi brevissimo temporis spatio, peccato obnoxiam divinae gratiae privatam?

And again, if we consider the matter with attention, and especially if we consider the burning and sweet love that Almighty God without doubt had, and has, for the Mother of his only begotten Son, for what reason can we even think that she was, even for the briefest moment of time, subject to sin and destitute of divine grace?

Poterat certe Deus, Redemptoris meritorum intuitu, hoc praeclarissimo privilegio eam donare; id igitur factum non esse ne opinari quidem possumus. Decebat siquidem Redemptoris Matrem talem esse, ut exstaret, quantum fieri posset, ipso digna; atqui digna non fuisset, si hereditaria labe infecta, etsi primo tantum conceptionis suae momento, teterrimae fuisset Satanae dominationi subiecta.

Neque asseverari potest hac de causa minui redemptionem Christi, quasi iam non ad universam pertineat Adami subolem; atque adeo aliquid de ipsius divini Redemptoris munere ac dignitate detrahi.

Etenim si rem funditus diligenterque perspicimus, facile cernimus Christum Dominum perfectissimo quodam modo divinam Matrem suam revera redemisse, cum, ipsius meritorum intuitu, eadem a Deo praeservata esset a quavis hereditaria peccati labe immunis. Quamobrem infinita Iesu Christi dignitas eiusque universalis redemptionis munus hoc doctrinae capite non extenuatur vel remittitur, sed augetur quam maxime.

Immerito igitur acatholici et novatores non pauci hac etiam de causa nostram reprehendunt atque improbant erga Deiparam Virginem pietatem, quasi nos aliquid ex cultu uni Deo ac Iesu Christo debito subducamus; cum contra, quidquid honoris venerationisque caelesti Matri nostrae tribuimus, id procul dubio in divini eius Filii decus redundet, non modo quod ex ipso [582] omnes gratiae omniaque dona, vel excelsa, ut e primo fonte oriuntur, sed etiam quod “gloria filiorum patres eorum” [Prv 17:6].

3911–3912: Encyclical Sacra virginitas, March 25, 1954

Ed.: AAS 46 (1954): 175f.

The Value of Marriage and Virginity

Recentius autem eorum sententiam maerenti animo reprobavimus, qui eo usque procedunt ut coniugium asseverant unum [176] esse, quod naturale personae humanae incrementum debitamque perfectionem tueri possit.¹ Nonnulli enim affirmant divinam gratiam, a matrimonii sacramento ex opere operato impertitam, ita coniugii usum sanctum reddere, ut instrumentum evadat ad singulos animos cum Deo coniungendos efficacius quam virginitas ipsa, quandoquidem matrimonium christianum, non autem virginitas, sacramentum est.

Quam quidem doctrinam utpote falsam ac detrimetosam denuntiamus. Utique enim hoc Almighty God could certainly, by virtue of the merits of the Redeemer, bestow on her this singular privilege; that therefore he did not do so, we cannot even suppose. It was fitting that Jesus Christ should have such a mother as would be worthy of him as far as possible; and she would not have been worthy if, contaminated by the hereditary stain even for the first moment only of her conception, she had been subject to the abominable power of Satan.

Nor can it be asserted that the redemption by Christ 3909 was on this account lessened, as if it did not extend to the whole race of Adam, and that therefore something was taken away from the office and dignity of the Divine Redeemer.

For if we carefully and thoroughly consider the matter, we easily perceive that Christ the Lord in a certain most perfect manner really redeemed his Mother, since it was by virtue of his merits that she was preserved by God immune from all stain of original sin. Wherefore, the infinite dignity of Jesus Christ and his office of universal redemption is not diminished or lowered by this tenet of doctrine; rather it is greatly increased.

Non-Catholics and reformers are therefore mistaken 3910 when because of this pretext they find fault with, or disapprove of, our devotion to the Virgin Mother of God, as if it took something from the worship due to God alone and to Jesus Christ. The contrary is true, because any honor and veneration that we may give to our heavenly Mother undoubtedly redounds to the glory of her Divine Son, not only because all graces and all gifts, even the highest, flow from him as from their primary source, but also because “The glory of sons is their fathers” [Prov 17:6].

We have recently with sorrow censured the opinion 3911 of those who contend that marriage is the only means of assuring the natural development and perfection of the human personality.¹ For there are those who maintain that the grace of the sacrament, conferred ex opere operato, renders the use of marriage so holy as to be a fitter instrument than virginity for uniting souls with God; for marriage is a sacrament, but not virginity.

We denounce this doctrine as a dangerous error. Certainly, the sacrament grants the married couple sacramentum divinam sponsis impertit gratiam ad coniugale officium sancte obeundum; utique mutui amoris nexus confirmat, quibus iidem una invicem continentur; verumtamen non ad id institutum est ut coniugii usum veluti instrumentum reddat per se magis aptum ad sponsorum animos caritatis vinculo cum Deo ipso coniungendos [cf. *3838]. Nonne potius Apostolus Paulus coniugibus ius agnoscit a matrimonii usu se abstinendi ad tempus, ut vacent orationi [cf. 1 Cor 7:5], idcirco quia eiusmodi abstinencia liberio rem reddit animum, qui velit caelestibus rebus Deique supplicationibus se dedere?

*3911 ¹ Cf. Pius XII, address to the major superiors of religious orders and institutes, September 15, 1952 (AAS 44 [1952]: 824).

3912 Deinde asseverari non potest—ut quidam faciunt—“mutuum adiutorium”, quod sponsi in christianis nuptiis quaerunt, opem esse perfectiorem quam solitudinem, ut aiunt, cordis virginum et caelibum, ad propriam sanctitatem assequendam. Nam, quamquam ii omnes, qui perfectae castitatis institutum amplexi sunt, humano huiusmodi amore se abdicaverunt, nihilo secius hac de causa affirmari non potest eos ob hanc eandem privationem suam reddidisse humanam personam quasi imminutam ac despoliatam. Ii enim a caelestium ipso munerum Datore spirituale aliquid accipiunt, quod quidem illud in immensum exsuperat “mutuum adiutorium”, a coniugibus sibi invicem impertitum.

3913–3917: Encyclical Ad caeli Reginam, October 11, 1954

With this encyclical, Pius XII introduced the Feast of the Queenship of Mary.

Ed.: AAS 46 (1954): 633–36.

The Royal Dignity of the Blessed Virgin Mary

3913 Praecipuum, quo regalis Mariae dignitas innititur, principium procul dubio est divina eius maternitas. Quandoquidem enim in Sacris Litteris de Filio, quem Virgo concipiet, haec sententia legitur: “Filius Altissimi vocabitur, et dabit illi Dominus Deus sedem David patris eius et regnabit in domo Iacob in aeternum et regni eius non erit finis” [Lc 1:32s], ac praeterea Maria “mater Domini” [Lc 1:43] nuncupatur, inde facile eruitur, ipsam quoque esse reginam, quippe quae Filium genuerit, qui eodem momento quo conceptus est, propter hypostaticam humanae naturae cum Verbo unionem, rex, etiam ut homo, erat et rerum omnium Dominus.

Itaque iure meritoque S. Iohannes Damascenus haec scribere potuit: “Vere omnis creaturae Domina facta est, cum Creatoris Mater exstitit”;¹ parique modo affirmari potest, primum qui regium Mariae munus caelesti ore nuntiavit, ipsum fuisse Gabrielem archangelum.

grace to accomplish in a holy manner the duties of their married state, and it strengthens the bonds of mutual affection that unite them; but the purpose of its institution was not to make the employment of marriage the means, most suitable in itself, for uniting the souls of the husband and wife with God by the bonds of charity [cf. *3838]. Rather, does not the apostle Paul admit that they have the right of abstaining for a time from the use of marriage, so that they may be more free for prayer [cf. 1 Cor 7:5] precisely because such abstinence gives greater freedom to the soul that wishes to give itself over to spiritual thoughts and prayer to God?

Finally, it may not be asserted, as some do, that the “mutual help” that is sought in Christian marriage is a more effective aid in striving for personal sanctity than the solitude of the heart, as they term it, of virgins and celibates. For although all those who have embraced a life of perfect chastity have deprived themselves of the expression of human love permitted in the married state, nonetheless it cannot thereby be affirmed that because of this privation they have diminished and despoiled the human personality. For they receive from the Giver of heavenly gifts something spiritual that far exceeds that “mutual help” which husband and wife confer on each other.

According to ancient tradition and the sacred liturgy, the main principle on which the royal dignity of Mary rests is without doubt her Divine Motherhood. In Holy Writ, concerning the Son whom Mary will conceive, we read this sentence: “He . . . will be called the Son of the most High; and the Lord God will give to him the throne of his father David, and he will reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there will be no end” [Lk 1:32–33], and in addition Mary is called “the mother of my Lord” [Lk 1:43]; from this it is easily concluded that she is a Queen, since she bore a son who, at the very moment of his conception, because of the hypostatic union of the human nature with the Word, was also as man King and Lord of all things.

So with complete justice St. John Damascene could write: “When she became Mother of the Creator, she truly became Queen of every creature”;¹ likewise, it can be said that the heavenly voice of the Archangel Gabriel was the first to proclaim Mary’s royal office.

¹ *3913¹ John Damascene, De fide orthodoxa IV, 14 (PG 94:1158B–1159A / B. Kotter: PTS 12 [Schriften 2]: 200^{50–52}).

Attamen beatissima Virgo Maria non tantum ob divinam suam maternitatem Regina est dicenda, sed etiam, quia ex Dei voluntate in aeternae salutis nostrae opere eximias habuit partes. “Quid possit iucundius nobis suaviusque ad cogitandum accidere . . . quam Christum nobis iure non tantum nativo, sed etiam acqui[634]sito, scilicet redemptionis imperare?” [*3676]. . .

Iamvero in hoc perficiendo redemptionis opere beatissima Virgo Maria profecto fuit cum Christo intime consociata. . . Etenim, “sicut Christus eo quod nos redemit, speciali titulo Dominus est ac Rex noster, ita et beata Virgo, propter singularem modum, quo ad nostram redemptionem concurrat, et substantiam suam ministrando, et illum pro nobis voluntarie offerendo, nostramque salutem singulariter desiderando, petendo, procurando.”¹

Quibus ex rationibus huiusmodi argumentum eruitur: si Maria, in spirituali procuranda salute, cum Iesu Christo, ipsius salutis principio, ex Dei placito sociata fuit, et quidem simili quodam modo, quo Heva fuit cum Adam, mortis principio, consociata, ita ut asseverari possit, nostrae salutis opus secundum quandam “recapitulationem”¹ peractum fuisse, in qua genus [635] humanum, sicut per virginem morti adstrictum fuit, ita per virginem salvatur; si praeterea asseverari itidem potest, hanc gloriosissimam Dominam ideo fuisse Christi matrem delectam, “ut redimendi generis humani consors efficeretur”,² et si reapse “ipsa fuit, quae vel propriae vel hereditariae labis expers, arctissime semper cum Filio suo coniuncta, eundem in Golgotha, una cum maternorum iurium maternique amoris sui holocausto, nova veluti Heva, pro omnibus Adae filiis, miserando eius lapsu foedatis, aeterno Patri obtulit”,³ inde procul dubio concludere licet, quemadmodum Christus, novus Adam, non tantum quia Dei Filius est, Rex dici debet, sed etiam, quia Redemptor noster est, ita quodam analogiae modo, beatissimam Virginem esse Reginam non tantummodo, quia mater Dei est, verum etiam, quod nova veluti Heva cum novo Adam consociata fuit.

Iamvero plena, propria et absoluta significatione, unus Iesus Christus, Deus et homo, Rex est; attamen Maria

But the Blessed Virgin Mary should be called Queen, 3914 not only because of her Divine Motherhood, but also because God has willed her to have an exceptional role in the work of our eternal salvation. “What more joyful, what sweeter thought can we have than that Christ is our King not only by natural right, but also by an acquired right: that which he won by the redemption?” [*3676]. . .

Now, in the accomplishing of this work of redemption, the Blessed Virgin Mary was most closely associated with Christ. . . For “just as Christ, because he redeemed us, is our Lord and King by a special title, so the Blessed Virgin also (is our Queen), on account of the unique manner in which she assisted in our redemption, by giving of her own substance, by freely offering him for us, by her singular desire and petition for, and active interest in, our salvation.”¹

From these considerations, the proof develops on 3915 these lines: If Mary, in taking an active part in the work of salvation, was, by God’s design, associated with Jesus Christ, the source of salvation itself, in a manner comparable to that in which Eve was associated with Adam, the source of death, so that it may be stated that the work of our salvation was accomplished by a kind of “recapitulation”,¹ in which a virgin was instrumental in the salvation of the human race, just as a virgin had been closely associated with its death; if, moreover, it can likewise be stated that this glorious Lady had been chosen Mother of Christ “in order that she might become a partner in the redemption of the human race”;² and if, in truth, “it was she who, free of the stain of actual and original sin and ever most closely bound to her Son, on Golgotha offered that Son to the Eternal Father together with the complete sacrifice of her maternal rights and maternal love, like a new Eve, for all the sons of Adam, stained as they were by his lamentable fall”,³ then it may be legitimately concluded that as Christ, the new Adam, must be called a king not merely because he is Son of God, but also because he is our Redeemer, so, analogously, the Most Blessed Virgin is queen not only because she is Mother of God, but also because, as the new Eve, she was associated with the new Adam.

Certainly, in the full and strict meaning of the term, 3916 only Jesus Christ, the God-Man, is King; but Mary, too, *3914 ¹ Francisco Suárez, S.J., Commentarii et disputationes in III. partem D. Thomae, disp. XXII, sec. 2 (Opera omnia, ed. C. Berton, 19 [Paris, 1860], 327a).

*3915 ¹ Irenaeus of Lyon, Adversus haereses V, 19, no. 1 (ed. W. W. Harvey [Cambridge, 1857], 2:375 / PG 7:1175B / SC 153 [1969]: 248₃).

² Pius XI, letter Auspicatus profecto (AAS 25 [1933]: 80).

³ Pius XII, encyclical Mystici corporis (AAS 35 [1943]: 247).

quoque, quamvis temperato modo et analogiae ratione, utpote Christi Dei mater, socia in divini Redemptoris opera, et in eius cum hostibus pugna in eiusque super omnes adepta victoria, regalem participat dignitatem.

Ex hac enim cum Christo Rege coniunctione splendorem celsitudinemque attingit, qua creaturarum rerum omnium excellentiam exsuperat; ex hac cum Christo coniunctione regalis facultas oritur, qua ipsa potest divini Redemptoris regni dispensare thesauros; ex hac denique cum Christo coniunctione materni eius patrocini apud Filium et Patrem elicitur exhausta numquam efficacia.

3917 Nullum igitur dubium est, Mariam sanctissimam dignitate sua super omnes res creatas excellere itemque super omnes post Filium suum obtinere primatum. . . .

[636] ... Ad hunc excellentissimum intellegendum dignitatis gradum, quem Deiparens super creata omnia adepta est, considerare iuvat, sanctam Dei Genetricem iam in primo temporis momento quo concepta fuit, tali gratiarum abundantia repletam fuisse, ut Sanctorum omnium gratiam superaret. . . .

Praeterea beata Virgo non solummodo supremum, post Christum, excellentiae ac perfectionis gradum obtinuit, verum etiam aliquam illius efficacitatis participationem, qua eius Filius ac Redemptor noster in mentes et in voluntates hominum regnare iure meritoque dicitur.

as Mother of the divine Christ, as his associate in the redemption, in his struggle with his enemies and his final victory over them, has a share, though in a limited and analogous way, in his royal dignity.

For from her union with Christ she attains a radiant eminence transcending that of any other creature; from her union with Christ she receives the royal right to dispose of the treasures of the Divine Redeemer's kingdom; from her union with Christ, finally, is derived the inexhaustible efficacy of her maternal intercession before the Son and his Father.

Hence it cannot be doubted that Mary most Holy is far above all other creatures in dignity and, after her Son, possesses primacy over all. . . .

. . . In order to understand better this sublime dignity of the Mother of God over all creatures, let us recall that the holy Mother of God was, at the very moment of her Immaculate Conception, so filled with grace as to surpass the grace of all the saints. . . .

Besides, the Blessed Virgin possessed, after Christ, not only the highest degree of excellence and perfection, but also a share in that influence by which he, her Son and our Redeemer, is rightly said to reign over the minds and wills of men.

3917a: Decree of the Holy Office, April 2, 1955

This decree on the hidden pessary (sterilet, diaphragm) is directed to some North American bishops.

Ed.: The Clergy Review 21 (Ranchi [India]: St. Mary's Theological College, Kurseong, 1957): 26 / The Priest (Huntington [Ind., USA], 1956): 760. Not published in AAS.

Contraception

3917a The Sacred Congregation particularly raises its voice utterly to condemn and reject as intrinsically evil the application of pessaries (sterilet, diaphragm) by married couples in the exercise of their marital rights.

Furthermore, Ordinaries shall not permit the faithful to be told or taught that no serious objection may be made according to the principles of Christian law, if a husband cooperates materially only with his wife who uses such a device.

Confessors and spiritual directors who hold the contrary and thus guide the consciences of the faithful are straying far from the paths of truth and moral righteousness.

3918–3921: Instruction of the Holy Office, February 2, 1956

On this point, cf.: the discourses of Pius XII of March 23 and April 18, 1952 (AAS 44 [1952]: 270–78; 413–19).

Ed.: AAS 48 (1956): 144f. / PerRMor 45 (1956): 137–39.

Situation Ethics

3918 Contra doctrinam moralem eiusque applicationem in Ecclesia catholica traditam multis in regionibus etiam to inter catholicos spargi coepit systema ethicum, quod

Contrary to the moral doctrine and its application that is traditional in the Catholic Church, there has begun to be spread abroad in many regions even among Catholics plerumque nomine cuiusdam “Ethicae situationis” venit....

Auctores, qui hoc systema sequuntur, decisivam et ultimam agendi normam statuunt non esse ordinem obiectivum rectum, naturae lege determinatum et ex hac lege certo cognitum, sed intimum aliquod mentis uniuscuiusque individui iudicium ac lumen, quo ei in concreta situatione posito innotescit quid sibi agendum sit.

Haec igitur hominis ultima decisio secundum eos non est, sicut ethica obiectiva apud auctores maioris momenti tradita docet, legis obiectivae ad particularem casum applicatio, attentis simul ac ponderatis secundum regulas prudentiae particularibus “situationis” adiunctis, sed immediatum illud internum lumen et iudicium. Hoc iudicium saltem multis in rebus ultimam nulla norma obiectiva extra hominem posita atque ab eius persuasione subiectiva independente, quoad suam obiectivam rectitudinem ac veritatem est mensuratum neque mensurandum neque mensurabile, sed sibi ipsi plene sufficit.

Secundum hos auctores “naturae humanae” conceptus traditionalis non sufficit, sed recurrendum est ad conceptum naturae humanae “existentis”, qui quoad plurima non habet valorem obiectivum absolutum, sed relativum tantum ideoque mutabilem, exceptis fortasse illis paucis elementis atque principiis, quae ad humanam naturam metaphysicam (absolutam [145] et immutabilem) spectant.

Eiusdem valoris tantum relativi est traditionalis conceptus “legis naturae”. Perplura autem, quae hodie circumferuntur tamquam legis naturae postulata absoluta, nituntur secundum eorum opinionem et doctrinam in dicto conceptu naturae existentis, ideoque non sunt nisi relativa et mutabilia atque omni semper situationi adaptari queunt.

Acceptis atque ad rem deductis his principiis dicunt atque docent homines in sua quisque conscientia non imprimis secundum leges obiectivas, sed mediante lumine illo interno individuali secundum intuitionem personalem iudicantes, quid ipsis in praesenti situatione agendum sit, a multis conflictibus ethicis aliter insolubilibus praeservari vel facile liberari.

Multa, quae in huius “Ethicae situationis” systemate statuuntur, rei veritati sanaeque rationis dictamini contraria sunt, relativismi et modernismi vestigia produnt, a doctrina catholica per saecula tradita longe aberrant.

an ethical system that generally goes by the name of a certain “situation ethics”....

The authors who follow this system hold that the decisive and ultimate norm of conduct is not the objective right order, determined by the law of nature and known with certainty from that law, but a certain intimate judgment and light of the mind of each individual, by means of which, in the concrete situation in which he is placed, he learns what he ought to do.

And so, according to them, this ultimate decision a man makes is not, as the objective ethics handed down by authors of great weight teaches, the application of the objective law to a particular case, which at the same time takes into account and weighs according to the rules of prudence the particular circumstances of the “situation”, but that immediate, internal light and judgment. Ultimately, at least in many matters, this judgment is not measured, must not and cannot be measured, as regards its objective rectitude and truth, by any objective norm situated outside man and independent of his subjective persuasion but is entirely self-sufficient.

According to these authors, the traditional concept of “human nature” does not suffice; but recourse must be had to the concept of “existent” human nature, which in many respects does not have absolute objective value, but only a relative and, therefore, changeable value, except, perhaps, for those few factors and principles that pertain to metaphysical (absolute and unchangeable) human nature. 3919

Of the same merely relative value is the traditional concept of the “law of nature”. Thus, many things that are commonly considered today as absolute postulates of the natural law, according to their opinion and doctrine, rest upon the aforesaid concept of existent nature and are, therefore, but relative and changeable; they can always be adapted to every situation.

Having accepted these principles and put them into practice, they assert and teach that men are preserved or easily liberated from many otherwise insoluble ethical conflicts when each one judges in his own conscience, not primarily according to objective laws, but by means of that internal, individual light based on personal intuition, what he must do in a concrete situation. 3920

Many of the things set forth in this system of “situation ethics” contradict the truth of the matter and the dictates of sound reason, betray traces of relativism and modernism, and wander far from the Catholic doctrine handed down through the centuries. 3921

3922–3926: Encyclical Haurietis aquas, May 15, 1956

Ed.: AAS 48 (1956): 316–52.

The Motive and Foundation for Devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus

3922 [Constat] causam illam, qua Ecclesia cultum latriaie tribuit, Divini Redemptoris Cordi, ... duplicem esse: Altera nempe, quae ad cetera quoque pertinet sacrosancta Iesu Christi corporis membra, eo principio innititur, quo novimus eius Cor, utpote nobilissimam humanae naturae partem, divini Verbi personae hypostaticae coniungi; ideoque ei tribuendum esse eundem adorationis cultum, quo Ecclesia personam ipsius Filii Dei incarnati honorat. ...

Altero vero, quae peculiari modo ad divini Redemptoris Cor pertinet ac peculiari itidem ratione postulat latriaie cultum eidem tribuendum, ex eo oritur quod Cor eius, magis quam cetera omnia eius corporis membra, immensae eius caritatis erga hominum genus naturalis index seu symbolus est. “Inest [317] in sacro Corde ... symbolum atque expressa imago infinitae Iesu Christi caritatis, quae movet ipsa nos ad amandum mutuo.”¹ ...

3923 [323] [Christus] reapse humanam naturam, individuum, integram et perfectam, quae in purissimo Mariae Virginis sinu ex Spiritu Sancti virtute concepta est, divinae personae suae coniunxit. Nihil igitur ei defuit humanae naturae, quam sibi Dei Verbum copulavit; eam ipse profecto assumpsit nullo modo imminutam, nullo modo immutatam ad spiritualia et ad corporea quod attinet: hoc est intelligentia ac voluntate ditatam ceterisque internis externisque cognoscendi facultatibus, itemque sensuum appetitu omnibusque naturalibus impulsioibus [allegantur documenta *293, 301, 355].

Quapropter cum nullo modo dubitari possit Iesum Christum [324] verum adeptum esse corpus omnibus qui eidem proprii sunt affectibus pollens, in quibus quidem ceteris omnibus amor praestat, nullum pari modo dubium esse potest eum physico nostroque simili corde praeditum fuisse, cum sine excellentissimo hoc corporis membro hominum vita, ad affectus etiam quod attinet, haberi non possit. ...

3924 [327] Quamobrem iure meritoque Incarnati Verbi Cor praecipuus consideratur index et symbolus triplicis illius amoris, quo divinus Redemptor aeternum Patrem hominesque universos continenter amat. Symbolus nempe est divini illius amoris, quem cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto communicat, sed qui tamen in ipso tantum, utpote

[It is well known that] the reasons why the Church gives the highest form of worship to the Heart of the divine Redeemer ... are two in number. The first, which applies also to the other sacred members of the Body of Jesus Christ, rests on that principle whereby we recognize that his Heart, the noblest part of human nature, is hypostatically united to the Person of the divine Word. Consequently, there must be paid to it that worship of adoration with which the Church honors the Person of the incarnate Son of God himself. ...

The other reason, which refers in a particular manner to the Heart of the divine Redeemer and likewise demands in a special way that the highest form of worship be paid to it, arises from the fact that his Heart, more than all the other members of his body, is the natural sign and symbol of his boundless love for the human race. “There is in the Sacred Heart ... the symbol and express image of the infinite love of Jesus Christ that moves us to love in return.”¹ ...

[Christ] united to his Divine Person a truly human nature, individual, whole, and perfect, which was conceived in the most pure womb of the Virgin Mary by the power of the Holy Spirit. Nothing, then, was wanting to the human nature that the Word of God united to himself. Consequently he assumed it in no diminished way, in no different sense in what concerns the spiritual and the corporeal: that is, it was endowed with intellect and will and the other internal and external faculties of perception and, likewise, with the desires and all the natural impulses of the senses [documents *293, 301, and 355 are cited].

Hence, since there can be no doubt that Jesus Christ received a true body and had all the affections proper to the same, among which love surpassed all the rest, it is likewise beyond doubt that he was endowed with a physical heart like ours; for without this noblest part of the body the ordinary emotions of human life are impossible. ...

For these reasons, the Heart of the incarnate Word is deservedly and rightly considered the chief sign and symbol of that threefold love with which the divine Redeemer unceasingly loves his eternal Father and all mankind. It is a symbol of that divine love which he shares with the Father and the Holy Spirit but which he, in Verbo, quod caro factum est, per caducum et fragile humanum corpus nobis manifestatur....

¹ *3922 Leo XIII, encyclical Annum sacrum, May 25, 1899 (Leo XIII, Acta [Rome] 19:76; *3353).

Symbolus praeterea est incensissimae illius caritatis, quae, eius in animum infusa, humanam ditat Christi [328] voluntatem, et cuius actus duplici scientia perfectissima collustratur et dirigitur, hoc est beata et indita vel infusa.¹

Ac denique—idque modo magis naturali ac directo—sensibilis quoque affectus symbolus est, cum Iesu Christi corpus, in sinu Virginis Mariae Spiritus Sancti opera formatum, sentiendi percipiendique vi polleat perfectissima, magis utique quam cetera omnia hominum corpora.²...

[343] ... Itaque a re corporali, quae est Cor Christi Iesu, eiusque naturali significatione, nobis licet ... ascendere non solum ad contemplandum eius amorem qui sensibus percipiatur, sed altius etiam ad considerandum et adorandum celsissimum amorem infusum; ac denique ... ad meditandum et adorandum amorem divinum Verbi incarnati; quandoquidem e fide, qua credimus utramque naturam, huma[344]nam ac divinam, in persona Christi esse unitam, mente concipere possumus necessitudines illas arctissimas, quae inter sensibilem amorem physici Cordis Iesu intercedunt, et duplicem amorem, spiritualem quidem, humanum scilicet ac divinum. Hi enim amores non tantum una simul existentes dicendi sunt in adorabili persona divini Redemptoris, sed etiam inter se naturali nexu coniuncti, quatenus divino humanus sensibilisque subiiciuntur, atque illius analogicam similitudinem referunt.

Non autem contendimus Cor Iesu ita esse intellegendum, ut in eo habeatur et adoretur imago formalis quae dicitur, seu signum perfectum et absolutum eius amoris divini, cum intima huius essentia nullo modo adaequari possit quavis creata imagine; sed christifidelis, Cor Iesu excolens, una cum Ecclesia signum adorat et quasi vestigium caritatis divinae....

Necesse est ergo, ut in hoc doctrinae capite tanti momenti tantaeque prudentiae unusquisque animo semper teneat veritatem naturalis symboli, quo physicum Cor Iesu ad personam Verbi refertur, totam niti in veritate primaria hypostaticae unionis; si quis autem verum esse hoc negaverit, falsas opiniones, ab Ecclesia non semel reiectas, restauret, utpote quae uni personae in Christo, utraque tamen natura distincta manente et integra, adversentur.

the Word made flesh, alone manifests through a weak and perishable body....

It is, besides, the symbol of that burning love which, infused into his soul, enriches the human will of Christ and enlightens and governs its acts by the most perfect knowledge derived both from the beatific vision and that which is directly infused.¹

And finally—and this in a more natural and direct way—it is the symbol also of sensible love, since the body of Jesus Christ, formed by the Holy Spirit in the womb of the Virgin Mary, possesses full powers of feelings and perception, in fact, more so than any other human body.²...

... Thus, from something corporeal such as the Heart of Jesus Christ with its natural meaning, it is both lawful and fitting for us ... to mount not only to its love as perceived by the senses but also higher, to a consideration and adoration of the infused heavenly love; and finally ... to reflection on, and adoration of, the divine love of the Word Incarnate. We do so since, in accordance with the faith by which we believe that both natures—the human and the divine—are united in the Person of Christ, we can grasp in our minds those most intimate ties that unite the love of feeling of the physical Heart of Jesus with that twofold spiritual love, namely, the human and the divine love. For these loves must be spoken of not only as existing side by side in the adorable Person of the divine Redeemer but also as being linked together by a natural bond insofar as the human love, including that of the feelings, is subject to the divine and, in due proportion, provides us with an image of the latter.

We do not pretend, however, that we must contemplate and adore in the Heart of Jesus what is called the formal image, that is to say, the perfect and absolute symbol of his divine love, for no created image is capable of adequately expressing the essence of this love. But a Christian in paying honor along with the Church to the Heart of Jesus is adoring the symbol and, as it were, the visible sign of the divine charity....

It is therefore essential, at this point, in a doctrine of such importance and requiring such prudence, that each one constantly hold that the truth of the natural symbol by which the physical Heart of Jesus is related to the Person of the Word entirely depends upon the fundamental truth of the hypostatic union. Should anyone declare this to be untrue, he would be reviving false opinions, more than once condemned by the Church, for they are opposed to the oneness of the Person of Christ even though the two natures are each complete and distinct.

*3924 ¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 9, a. 1–3 (Editio Leonina 11:138–42).

² Cf. ibid., III, q. 33, a. 2 ad 3; q. 36, a. 6 (Editio Leonina 11:342, 443).

The Motherhood of the Blessed Virgin Mary

3926 [352] ... Curent christifideles, ut eidem [cultui Cordis Iesu] cultus etiam erga Immaculatum Dei Genitricis Cor arcte copuletur. Cum enim ex Dei voluntate in humanae redemptionis peragendo opere Beatissima Virgo Maria cum Christo fuerit indivulse coniuncta, adeo ut ex Iesu Christi caritate eiusque cruciatibus cum amore doloribusque ipsius Matris intime consociatis sit nostra salus profecta, congruit omnino, ut a christiano populo, quippe qui a Christo per Mariam divinam vitam sit adeptus, post debita erga Sacratissimum Cor Iesu exhibita obsequia, etiam Cordi amantissimo caelestis Matris adiuncta pietatis, amoris, grati expiantisque animi studia praestentur.

... Let the faithful see to it that to this devotion [to the Heart of Jesus] the Immaculate Heart of the Mother of God is closely joined. For, by God's will, in carrying out the work of human redemption the Blessed Virgin Mary was inseparably linked with Christ in such a manner that our salvation sprang from the love and the sufferings of Jesus Christ to which the love and sorrows of his Mother were intimately united. It is, then, entirely fitting that the Christian people—who received the divine life from Christ through Mary—after they have paid their debt of honor to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, should also offer to the most loving Heart of their heavenly Mother the corresponding acts of piety, affection, gratitude, and expiation.

3928: Decree of the Holy Office, March 8 (May 23), 1957

Cf. the discourse of Pius XII to the International Pastoral-Liturgical Congress, September 22, 1956 (AAS 48 [1956]: 716–25).
Ed.: AAS 49 (1957): 370.

The Validity of Concelebration

3928 Qu.: An plures sacerdotes valide Missae sacrificium concelebrent, si unus tantum eorum verba “Hoc est corpus meum” et “Hic est sanguis meus” super panem et vinum proferat, ceteri vero verba Domini non proferant, sed, celebrante sciente et consentiente, intentionem habeant et manifestent sua faciendi verba et actiones eiusdem.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 18. Mart.): Negative; nam ex institutione Christi ille solus valide celebrat, qui verba consecratoria pronuntiat.

Question: May multiple priests validly concelebrate the sacrifice of the Mass if only one of them pronounces the words: “This is my body” and “This is my blood” over the bread and wine, while the others do not pronounce the words of the Lord but, with the knowledge and consent of the celebrant, possess and manifest the intention of doing his words and actions?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on March 18): No; for, according to the institution of Christ, only the one who pronounces the words of consecration celebrates validly.

JOHN XXIII: October 28, 1958–June 3, 19633930: Response of the Holy Office, March 25 (April 4), 1959

Ed.: AAS 51 (1959): 271f.

Election of Representatives Who Support Communism

3930 Qu.: Utrum catholicis civibus in eligendis populi oratoribus liceat suffragium dare iis partibus vel candidatis, qui, etsi principia catholicae doctrinae opposita non profiteantur, immo etiam christianum nomen sibi assumant, re tamen communistis sociantur et sua agendi ratione iisdem favent.

Resp. (confirmata a Summo Pontifice, 2. Apr.): Negative, ad normam Decreti S. Officii 1. Iul. 1949, n. 1 [*3865].

Question: Is it permitted for Catholic citizens, in the election of public representatives, to vote for those parties or candidates who, even if they do not profess principles contrary to Catholic doctrine and, indeed, also claim for themselves the name Christian, nevertheless, in reality, associate themselves with the Communists and support them with their course of action?

Response (confirmed by the supreme pontiff on April 2): No, according to the directive of the Decree of the Holy Office of July 1, 1949, no. 1 [*3865].

3935–3953: Encyclical Mater et Magistra, May 15, 1961

This encyclical, written in connection with the seventieth anniversary of Rerum novarum, summarizes the social doctrine of the preceding popes and develops it in light of the new social situation after World War II. For the first time, the problems of underdeveloped countries as well as the question of a common good of mankind are considered. Because of difficulties in translating the text from the original Italian, the publication was delayed until July 14. While only the Latin text of the encyclical is authentic, for linguistic reasons, it is unavoidable to have recourse to the Italian text, which was published together with the Latin text in L'Osservatore Romano, July 15, 1961.

Ed.: AAS 53 (1961): 405–47.

Synthesis of the Social Doctrine of Leo XIII

[405] ... Leo XIII ... initio de labore docet, hunc nullo modo posse pro merce quapiam duci, utpote qui ab humana persona proxime procedat. Nam cum ex eo, veluti ab unico capite, plerique hominum sumant suum victum cultumque, eius idcirco modus non ex mercatorum more pendendus est, sed verius ex iustitiae et aequitatis legibus; quod nisi fit, conficitur porro ut de [406] locando opere pactionibus, quamvis libere initis utrimque, iustitia prorsus laedatur [cf. *3270].

Accedit quod a natura in singulos proficiscitur ius bona privatim possidendi, ne iis quidem deductis quae instrumenti loco sunt; quod ius delere nequaquam integrum est reipublicae. Verum quia in privato bonorum dominio naturaliter sociale inest munus, ob eam causam qui istiusmodi fruatur iure, is necesse est, non solum cum suo ipsius commodo, sed cum aliorum etiam utilitate fruatur.

Quod autem ad rempublicam attinet, cuius finis est, ut, in terrestrium bonorum genere, communi omnium utilitati prospiciat, res civium oeconomicas ea nullo pacto potest negligere; immo vero opportune curare debet praesens, ut primum ex iisdem ea gignatur bonorum copia, “quorum usus est necessarius ad actum virtutis”;¹ ut deinde iura vindicentur civium universorum, in primis scilicet tenuiorum, cuiusmodi opifices sunt, mulieres puerique. Neque civitati fas est umquam se ex officio exuere, quo iubetur operariorum rationes in melius data opera mutare.

Ad haec, reipublicae partes sunt prospicere, ut simul de locandis operis pactiones ad iustitiae aequitatisque normam conflentur; ut simul, ubi impendantur operae, ibi ne labefactetur, neque quantum ad corpus, neque quantum ad animam, humanae personae dignitas. Quam ad causam in Leonianis Litteris summa exponuntur iusti verique elementa de humani convictus rationibus, quae nostro hoc tempore civitates aliter atque aliter ad suas traduxerunt leges, quaeque—ut ... Pius XI ... declarat—non parum contulerunt ad condendam atque provehendam novam illam iuris disciplinae partem, quam ‘Laboris Ius’ appellat.

In iisdem praeterea Litteris ius a natura datum esse operariis affirmatur, non tantum ut corporati in societates coeant, sive ex solis opificibus, sive ex

... Leo XIII ... on the matter of work teaches first of all that it must be regarded, not merely as a commodity, but as a specifically human activity. In the majority of cases a man’s work is his sole means of livelihood. Its remuneration, therefore, cannot be made to depend on the state of the market. It must be determined by the laws of justice and equity. Any other procedure would be a clear violation of justice, even supposing the contract of work to have been freely entered into by both parties [cf. *3270].

Secondly, private ownership of property, including that of productive goods, is a natural right that the State cannot suppress. But it naturally entails a social obligation as well. It is a right that must be exercised not only for one’s own personal benefit but also for the benefit of others.

As for the State, its whole raison d’être is the realization of the common good in the temporal order. It cannot, therefore, hold aloof from economic matters. On the contrary, it must do all in its power to promote the production of a sufficient supply of material goods, “the use of which is necessary for the practice of virtue”.¹ It has also the duty to protect the rights of all its people and particularly of its weaker members, the workers, women, and children. It can never be right for the State to shirk its obligation of working actively for the betterment of the condition of the workingman.

It is furthermore the duty of the State to ensure that terms of employment are regulated in accordance with justice and equity and to safeguard the human dignity of workers by making sure that they are not required to work in an environment that may prove harmful to their material and spiritual interests. It was for this reason that the Leonine encyclical enunciated those general principles of rightness and equity that have been assimilated into the social legislation of many a modern State and that, as ... Pope Pius XI ... declared, have made no small contribution to the rise and development of that new branch of jurisprudence called “labor law”.

Furthermore, in the same encyclical, [Leo XIII] defended the worker’s natural right to enter into association with his fellows. Such associations may consist opificum et dominorum ordinibus conflatas, easdemque in illam formam redigant quam opinentur magis suae artis rationibus idoneam, sed ut etiam ipsi opifices in societatibus, quas diximus, ita se, nemine prae [407] cludente, libere ac sua sponte movere possint, prouti suae utilitates ferant.

*3936¹ Thomas Aquinas, De regimine principum I, 15 (Parma ed. 16 [1865]: 238a / R. Busa, Opera 3 [1980], 600 [= I, 16]).

Postremum operarii operumque conductores, in mutuis componendis rationibus, sese gerant ad principia humanae coniunctionis, atque ad christianae fraternaeque necessitudinis normam: quandoquidem sive immoderata ea aemulatio, quam liberales, qui vocantur, praedicant, sive alterius ordinis in alterum, pro marxianis placitis, dimicatio, non minus a christiana doctrina quam ab hominum ipsorum natura sunt sane alienissimae.

Synthesis of the Social Doctrine of Pius XI

3938 [Pius XI Litteris encyclicis “Quadragesimo anno”] tum catholicae Ecclesiae iuris et officii esse confirmat, in id praecipuam conferre operam ut de re sociali causae gravissimae, ut oportet, expeditantur, quae tantopere civium coniunctionem sollicitant, tum deinde tradita in Leonianis Litteris principia et praeceptiones temporum condicionibus apta inculcando conservat; tum denique, per huiusmodi occasionem, non tantum aliquot doctrinae capita declarat, in quibus vel catholici homines haerebant, sed docet etiam qua ratione principia praeceptionesque eadem, quoad socialium rerum ordinem, sint ad mutatum temporum statum componenda.

[408] Eo enim tempore subdubitabant nonnulli quid vere de privata possessione, quid de manu mercede opificibus tribuenda, quid postremo de temperata quadam socialismi ratione catholicis esset sentiendum.

Quod nunc ad primum attinet, iterum pronuntiat Decessor ille Noster privatae possessionis ius ab ipsa oriri natura; quin etiam socialem eiusdem privati domini rationem et munus enucleat atque illustrat.

De altera autem causa, postquam augustus Pontifex sententiam eorum movit, qui salarii disciplinam opinarentur esse natura ipsa iniustam, simul queritur quod eadem non semel constituta vel inhumane vel iniuste sit; simul accurate monet quae rationes quaeve condiciones sint servandae, ne a iustitia neve ab aequitate hac in re discedatur.

In quo rerum genere . . . in praesenti expedit, pactiones operariorum cum pactionibus societatis secundum aliqua temperari; ita nempe, ut “operarii officialesque consortes fiant domini vel curationis, aut de lucris perceptis aliqua ratione participant.”¹

