either of workers alone or of workers and employers and should be structured in a way best calculated to safeguard the workers’ legitimate professional interest. And it is the natural right of the workers to work without hindrance, freely, and on their own initiative within these associations for the achievement of these ends.

Finally, both workers and employers should regulate their mutual relations in accordance with the principle of human solidarity and Christian brotherhood. Unrestricted competition in the liberal sense and the Marxist creed of class warfare are clearly contrary to Christian teaching and the nature of man.

[Pius XI with his encyclical Quadragesimo anno] confirmed the right and duty of the Catholic Church to work for an equitable solution of the many pressing problems weighing upon human society and calling for a joint effort by all the people. He reiterated the principles of the Leonine encyclical and stressed those directives which were applicable to modern conditions. In addition, he took the opportunity not only to clarify certain points of this teaching that had given rise to difficulties even in the minds of Catholics, but also to reformulate Christian social thought in the light of changed conditions.

The difficulties referred to principally concerned the Catholic’s attitude to private property, the wage system, and moderate socialism.

With regard to private property, Our predecessor reaffirmed its origin in natural law and enlarged upon its social aspect and the obligations of ownership.

As for the wage system, while rejecting the view that it is unjust of its very nature, the august pontiff condemned the inhuman and unjust way in which it is so often implemented and specified the terms and conditions to be observed if justice and equity are not to be violated.

In this connection, . . . it is advisable in the present circumstances that the wage contract be somewhat modified by applying to it elements taken from the contract of partnership, so that “wage earners and other employees participate in the ownership or the management or in some way share in the profits.”¹

Of special doctrinal and practical importance is his affirmation that “if the social and individual character iuste aestimari neque ad aequalitatem rependi posse, eius natura sociali et individuali posthabita.”² Quam ob rem, cum de dimetienda opificum mercede agitur, iustitia nimirum postulat ut, praeter ipsius opificis eiusque familiae necessitates, ex altera parte status respiciatur consociationum opibus gignendis, quibus opifices laborem impendant, ex altera generatim “publici boni oeconomici”³ ratio habeatur.

Prae se fert praeterea Antistes sacrorum Maximus communistarum, qui dicuntur, et christianorum placita inter se repugnare vehementer. Neque posse ullo pacto catholicis hominibus praecepta probari socialistarum, qui leniorem videantur profiteri sententiam; ex horum enim opinione effici primum ut, cum socialis vitae ordo occiduo hoc tempore finiatur, idem ad solius mortalis huius vitae commoda ordinetur; effici deinde ut, cum hominum convictus et societas ad externa bona pa[409]-rienda dumtaxat pertineat, humana idcirco libertas nimis imminuatur, vera socialis auctoritatis notione neglecta.

Non fugit tamen Pium XI, post datas, quadraginta ante annos, Leonianas Litteras illas, temporum rationem rerumque faciem esse funditus mutatas, idque, ut ex reliquis rebus, ita etiam ex hoc patere, quod libera competitorum aemulatio, ob insitam sibi ac veluti innatam vim, eo demum evaserit, ut seipsam fere dissolverit, et ingentes divitias ex iisdemque ortam dominandi immoderatam facultatem in paucorum congesserit manus, “qui plerumque non domini, sed depositae rei custodes tantum et administratores sint, eamque nutu suo arbitrioque regant”.¹

Quam ob causam ... “libero mercatui oeconomicus potentatus suffectus erat; lucri cupiditati proinde effrenata potentatus ambitio successerat; tota oeconomia horrendum in modum dura, immitis, atrox erat facta.”² Ex quo sane fiebat, ut vel reipublicae munera hominum opulentiorum emolumentis inservirent, atque ita congestae divitiae gentibus omnibus quodammodo imperarent.

Cui rerum inclinationi convenienter obsistendi causa, Summus ille Pontifex praecipuas has tradit normas: scilicet rerum oeconomicarum rationem ad moralis vitae rationem esse revocandam, itemque sive singulorum civium sive societatum utilitates cum universorum utilitatibus esse potissimum temperandas.

of work be overlooked, it can be neither justly valued nor equitably recompensed.”² In determining wages, therefore, justice demands that account be taken not only of the needs of the individual workers and their families, but also of the financial state of the business concern for which they work and of “the economic welfare of the whole people”.³

⟨Pope Pius XI⟩ further emphasized the fundamental 3939 opposition between Communism and Christianity and made it clear that no Catholic could subscribe even to moderate socialism. The reason is that socialism is founded on a doctrine of human society that is bounded by time and takes no account of any objective other than that of material well-being. Since, therefore, it proposes a form of social organization that aims solely at production, it places too severe a restraint on human liberty, at the same time flouting the true notion of social authority.

Pius XI was not unaware of the fact that in the forty 3940 years that had supervened since the publication of the Leonine encyclical the historical scene had altered considerably. It was clear, for example, that unregulated competition had succumbed to its own inherent tendencies to the point of practically destroying itself. It had given rise to a great accumulation of wealth and, in the process, concentrated a despotic economic power in the hands of a few, “who for the most part are not the owners, but only the trustees and directors of invested funds, which they administer at their own good pleasure”.¹

Hence, ... “economic domination has taken the place of the open market. Unbridled ambition for domination has succeeded the desire for gain; the whole economic regime has become hard, cruel, and relentless in frightful measure.”² As a consequence, even the public authority was becoming the tool of plutocracy, which was thus gaining a stranglehold on the entire world.

Pius XI saw the reestablishment of the economic world within the framework of the moral order and the subordination of individual and group interests to the interest of the common good as the principal remedies for these evils.

This ... he taught, necessitated an orderly reconstruction of society, with the establishment of economic and vocational bodies that would be autonomous and independent of the State. Public authority should resume suo non iniunxerit, sed sui sint iuris; ut deinde civitatum magistratus, suum redintegrantes munus, neutiquam neglegant communibus omnium utilitatibus prospicere; ut postremo, si hominum societatem universam spectemus, respublicae, mutuam inter se operam mutuaque consilia conferentes, bonum etiam populorum oeconomicum consecentur.

3941 Sed doctrinae capita, quae Pianarum Litterarum videntur esse propria, ad duo haec potissimum redigi possunt. Quorum [410] alterum prohibet omnino, ne in re oeconomica pro suprema lege habeantur aut singulorum consociatorumve hominum commoda aut effrenata competitorum aemulatio aut immodica opulentorum potestas aut reipublicae ambitiosus honor dominandive cupido aut huius generis alia.

Immo vero quaelibet in rebus oeconomicis incepta necesse est iustitia et caritate, tamquam principibus rei socialis legibus, gubernari.

Alterum vero, quod Litterarum Pii XI esse proprium censemus, praecipit, ut, institutis sive publicis sive liberis conditis, tam in singulis civitatibus quam inter nationes, sociali iustitia auspice, is iuris instauretur ordo, in quo, qui rebus oeconomicis operentur, suas ipsorum commoditates cum communibus omnium utilitatibus apte componere possint.

Social Doctrine of Pius XII

Quod pertinet ad primum, prae se fert Decessor Noster, cuiusvis hominis ius, externa nimirum bona ad victum cultumque suum referendi, pluris quidem faciendum esse quam alia quaecumque iura, quae in re oeconomica versentur, atque adeo pluris etiam quam ius privatim possidendi. Situm est certe quidem, quemadmodum Decessor Noster monet, ius possidendi bona privatim in ipsius iure naturae, sed, Creatore Deo sic volente, ius idem nullo pacto officere potest, “quominus corporea haec bona, a Deo utilitati omnium hominum creata, ad omnes aequa parte pertineant, perinde ut iustitia pariter et caritas postulant.”²

De labore autem Pius XII ea iterans quae in Leonianis Litteris insunt, docet eum loco officii simul et iuris esse habendum, quoad singulos homines; atque propterea eorundem in primis esse potestatis mutuas statuere rationes, quae laborem contingant; si autem iidem its duty of promoting the common good of all. Finally, there should be cooperation on a world scale for the economic welfare of all nations.

Thus Pius XI’s teaching in this encyclical can be summed up under two heads. First, he taught what the supreme criterion in economic matters ought not to be. It must not be the special interests of individuals or groups or unregulated competition, economic despotism, national prestige, or imperialism or any other aim of this sort.

On the contrary, all forms of economic enterprise must be governed by the principles of social justice and charity.

The second point that We consider basic in the encyclical is his teaching that man’s aim must be to achieve in social justice a national and international juridical order, with its network of public and private institutions, in which all economic activity can be conducted not merely for private gain but also in the interests of the common good.

... [Pius XII intended] “to give some further directive moral principles on three fundamental values of social and economic life. These three fundamental values, which are closely connected one with the other, mutually complementary, and dependent, are: the use of material goods, work, and the family.”¹

Concerning the use of material goods, Our predecessor declared that the right of every man to use these for his own sustenance is prior to every other economic right, even that of private property. The right to the private possession of material goods is admittedly a natural one; nevertheless, in the objective order established by God, the right to property cannot stand in the way of the axiomatic principle that “the goods that were created by God for all men should flow to all alike, according to the principles of justice and charity.”²

On the subject of work, Pius XII repeated the teaching of the Leonine encyclical, maintaining that a man’s work is at once his duty and his right. It is for individuals, therefore, to regulate their mutual relations where their work is concerned. If they cannot do so, or will not do

vel nolint vel nequeant hoc praestare, tum tantum “reipublicae esse, laborem partiri et aequè attribuere, modis finibusque servatis, quos communes verique nominis poscant utilitates”.³

Ad familiae vero causam Summus Pontifex transgressus, in medio ponit privatam bonorum externorum possessionem ad ipsius familiae vitam tuendam ac fovendam plurimum conferre; quippe quae “patrifamilias de ea germana libertate opportune polliceatur, qua is officiis satisfacere possit a Deo sibi mandatis, cumque commodis ipsius familiae coniunctis, quae vel ad corpus vel ad animum vel ad religionem attineant.”⁴

Ex quo cum ius etiam familiae nascatur de suis in alia demigrandi loca, admonet idem Decessor Noster civitatum moderatores, quae vel suos cives abire sinant vel alienos venientes [412] accipiant, “ne quid umquam admittant, quo mutua sinceraque earundem civitatum consensio imminuatur atque labefactetur”.⁵

Principle of Subsidiarity

Verum, ob causas a Decessoribus Nostris explanatas, hac in re praesens etiam accedat civilis potestatis opera necesse est, ut recte bonorum externorum incrementum provehatur, idque conducat ad socialis vitae progressum, atque ideo ad civium omnium utilitatem.

Haec autem reipublicae providentia, quae fovet, excitat, ordinat, supplet atque complet, illo subsidiarii officii principio innititur, quod Pius XI in Encyclicis Litteris “Quadragesimo anno” ita proponit: “Fixum tamen immotumque manet in philosophia sociali gravissimum illud principium ...: sicut quae a singularibus hominibus proprio Marte et propria industria possunt perfici, nefas est eisdem eripere et communitati demandare, ita quae a minoribus et inferioribus communitatibus effici praestarique possunt, ea ad maiorem et altiorem societatem advocare iniuria est simulque grave damnum et recti ordinis perturbatio; cum socialis quaevis opera vi naturae sua subsidium afferre membrum corporis socialis debeat, numquam vero eadem destrui et absorbere” [*3738].

so, then, and only then, does “it fall back on the State to intervene in the division and distribution of work, and this must be according to the form and measure that the common good properly understood demands”.³

In dealing with the family, the supreme pontiff affirmed that the private ownership of material goods has a great part to play in promoting the welfare of family life. It “secures for the father of a family the healthy liberty he needs in order to fulfill the duties assigned him by the Creator regarding the physical, spiritual, and religious welfare of the family.”⁴

It is in this that the right of families to migrate is rooted. And so Our predecessor, in speaking of migration, admonished both parties involved, namely, the country of departure and the country receiving the newcomers, to seek always “to eliminate as far as possible all obstacles to the birth and growth of real confidence” between the nations.⁵

... It should be stated at the outset that in the economic order first place must be given to the personal initiative of private citizens working either as individuals or in association with each other in various ways for the furtherance of common interests.

But—for reasons explained by Our predecessors—the civil power must also have a hand in the economy. It has to promote production in a way best calculated to achieve social progress and the well-being of all citizens.

And in this work of directing, stimulating, coordinating, supplying, and integrating, its guiding principle must be the principle of subsidiary function formulated by Pius XI in Quadragesimo anno: “This is a fundamental principle of social philosophy, unshaken and unchangeable.... Just as it is wrong to withdraw from the individual and commit to a community what private enterprise and industry can accomplish, so too it is an injustice, a grave evil, and a disturbance of right order for a larger and higher association to arrogate to itself functions that can be performed efficiently by smaller and lower societies. Of its very nature the true aim of all social activity should be to help members of the social body, but never to destroy or absorb them” [*3738].

... Hence the insistent demands on those in authority—since they are responsible for the common good—to ut multiplicem in rem oeconomicam impendant operam, eamque ampliorem quam antea ordinatioremque, utque instituta, officia, instrumenta, agendique rationes huic efficiendo proposito congruenter accommodent.

Norms for Just Remuneration

Sed in aequa laboris constituenda remuneratione haec etiam opus est perpendantur: quantum primum singuli ad bona oeconomica gignenda conferant; qui deinde sit fortunae status consociationum, quibus opifices operam suam tribuunt; quid tum poscant cuiusque civitatis utilitates, praesertim ad locandas universas operas quod attinet; quid postremo exigat commune cunctarum gentium bonum, hoc est plurium civitatum inter se consociatarum, natura et latitudine dissimilium.

Quas modo attigimus normas, manifestum est, eas omni tempore et ubique locorum valere; qua vero ratione ad peculiaria rerum adiuncta easdem accommodari oporteat, hoc certe statui nequit, nisi opum, quae praesto sunt, congrua ratio habeatur, quae nimirum opes penes varios populos copia et natura differre possunt et reapse differunt, atque etiam in eadem saepe natione pro mutatis temporibus immutantur.

Dum nostra hac aetate oeconomicae civitatum res tam prompte procedunt, ... opportunum ducimus de gravissimo iustitiae socialis praecepto omnes admonere, quod nominatim poscit, ut ad rei oeconomicae incrementa semper rei socialis incrementa simul adiungantur simul accommodentur; ita quidem, ut ex aucta divitiarum copia in republica omnes prorsus civium ordines aequa percipiant emolumenta.

3945 [420] ... Animadvertendum est, hodie in multis civitatibus rerum oeconomicarum rationem eiusmodi esse, ut societates bonis gignendis, quae vel magni vel medii ordinis sint, maximis auctibus propterea crescant, quod sibimetipsis ex redditibus suis numerent pecuniam increase the degree and scope of their activities in the economic sphere and to devise ways and means and set the necessary machinery in motion for the attainment of this end.

But however extensive and far-reaching the influence of the State on the economy may be, it must never be exerted to the extent of depriving the individual citizen of his freedom of action. It must rather augment his freedom while effectively guaranteeing the protection of his essential personal rights.

... [We therefore reaffirm] that the remuneration of work is not something that can be left to the laws of the marketplace; nor should it be a decision left to the will of the more powerful. It must be determined in accordance with justice and equity; which means that workers must be paid a wage that allows them to live a truly human life and to fulfill their family obligations in a worthy manner.

Other factors, too, enter into the assessment of a just wage: namely, the effective contribution that each individual makes to the economic effort, the financial state of the company for which he works, the requirements of the general good of the particular country—having regard especially to the repercussions on the overall employment of the working force in the country as a whole—and finally the requirements of the common good of the universal family of nations of every kind, both large and small.

The above principles are valid always and everywhere. So much is clear. But their degree of applicability to concrete cases cannot be determined without reference to the quantity and quality of available resources; and these can—and in fact do—vary from country to country and even, from time to time, within the same country.

In view of the rapid expansion of national economies, ... there is one very important social principle to which We would draw your attention. It is this: Economic progress must be accompanied by a corresponding social progress, so that all classes of citizens can participate in the increased productivity.

... We must notice in this connection the system of self-financing adopted in many countries by large or comparatively large firms. Because these companies are financing replacement and plant expansion out of their own profits, they grow at a very rapid rate. In such cases, ad suae industriae instrumenta renovanda ac perficienda. Quod ubi contingat, hoc statui posse putamus, ut hac de causa societates eadem nomen¹ aliquod a se solvendum opificibus agnoscant, si maxime eam mercedem ipsis persolvant, cuius modus modum salarii infimum non excedat.

In hoc rerum genere praeceptum illud observetur animo oportet a Decessore Nostro f. rec. Pio XI per Encyclicas Litteras “Quadragesimo anno” hisce verbis traditum: “falsum prorsus est sive uni rei sive uni operae quidquid ex earundem collata efficientia obtentum est adscribere; iniustumque omnino, alterutrum, alterius efficacitate negata, quidquid effectum est sibi arrogare.”²

Cui quidem iustitiae officio non uno modo, ut rerum usus docet, satis fit. Ceteris missis, hodie magnopere optandum est, ut, rationibus quae magis consentaneae videantur, opifices in partem possessionis sensim veniant suae cuiusque societatis; nam hodie magis etiam quam Decessoris Nostri diebus: [421] “omni vi ac contentione enitendum est, ut saltem in posterum partae rerum copiae aequa proportione coarcentur apud eos, qui opibus valent, satque ample profundantur in eos qui operam conferunt.”¹

At animadvertendum quoque est, aequationem mercedis cum redditibus ita definiri oportere, ut communis boni ratio habeatur sive civitatis sive consortionis hominum universae.

The Participation of Workers in the Structures of Production

... Ad iustitiae praecepta non modo conformanda est ratio, qua bona labore quaesita partiuntur, verum etiam earum re[422]rum condiciones, in quibus homines eadem efficiunt bona. Sita enim in ipsius hominis natura necessitas est, ut qui aliquid operando efficiat, eidem liceat et gerendarum rerum praestare rationem et seipsum operam dando perficere.

Ex quo consequitur, ut, si ad parandas opes tales rerum oeconomiarum disciplina et apparatus adhibeantur, quibus eorum, quotquot impendunt operam, vel dignitas humana in discrimen adducatur, vel praestandae rationis sensus debilitetur, vel sua sponte agendi facultas eripiatur, hunc idcirco oeconomiarum rerum ordinem ab iustitia alienum arbitremur; licet ponatur ingentem ex eo gigni bonorum copiam eorumque partitionem ad iustitiae aequitatisque conformari normas.

Nequit profecto in oeconomica disciplina una comprehensione definiri, quae nam rationes magis cum hominum dignitate congruant, quaeve in iisdem

We believe that the workers should be allocated shares¹ in the firms for which they work, especially when they are paid no more than a minimum wage.

We should recall here the principle enunciated by Pius XI in Quadragesimo anno: “It is entirely false to ascribe to the property alone or to the work alone whatever has been obtained through the combined effort of both, and it is wholly unjust for either, denying the efficacy of the other, to arrogate to itself whatever has been produced.”²

Experience suggests many ways in which the demands of justice can be satisfied. Not to mention other ways, it is especially desirable today that workers gradually come to share in the ownership of their company, by ways and in the manner that seem most suitable. For today, even more than in the time of Our predecessor, “every effort must be made that at least in future a just share only of the fruits of production be permitted to accumulate in the hands of the wealthy and that an ample sufficiency be supplied to the workers.”¹ 3946

But a further point needs emphasizing: Any adjustment between wages and profits must take into account the demands of the common good of the particular country and of the whole human family.

... Justice is to be observed not only in the distribution of wealth, but also in regard to the conditions in which men are engaged in producing this wealth. Every man has, of his very nature, a need to express himself in his work and thereby to perfect his own being. 3947

Consequently, if the whole structure and organization of an economic system is such as to compromise human dignity, to lessen a man’s sense of responsibility, or rob him of opportunity for exercising personal initiative, then such a system, We maintain, is altogether unjust—no matter how much wealth it produces or how justly and equitably such wealth is distributed.

It is not possible to give a concise definition of the kind of economic structure that is most consonant with man’s dignity and best calculated to develop in him a hominibus suscepti officii magis convenienter stimulent conscientiam. Nihilominus Decessor Noster f. rec. Pius XII has agendi normas opportune tradit: “Parvae vel mediae bonorum possessiones quae ad agricolas, ad artifices, ad mercatores et ad operis conductores pertineant, tutandae ac promovendae sunt; iidem praeterea in adiutrices coeant societates, ut commoda utilitatesque maximarum administrationum propria sibi capiant; ad has autem administrationes quod attinet, efficiendum est, ut pactiones operarum cum pactionibus societatis secundum aliqua temperentur.”¹

Nemo sane dubitat quin societas, quae hominis dignitati apprime consulat, tueri quidem debeat necessariam efficientemque sui regiminis unitatem; sed exinde nullo modo sequitur, ut qui in eam cotidie suam conferant operam, ii solummodo administratorum loco ducantur, ad iussa tacite exsequenda natorum, quibus optata sua rerumque usum interponere non liceat, sed inertes se gerere debeant, cum de ipsorum locanda moderandaque opera consilia sint capienda.

The Right of Ownership and Its Character

3949 [427] ... [Hodie homines pluris aestimant] reditus, qui ex labore vel ex iuribus cum labore coniunctis oriantur, quam reditus, qui ex pecuniarum capite vel ex iuribus cum hoc coniunctis existant.

Quod quidem plane congruit cum nativa laboris indole, qui, cum a persona humana proxime procedat, antefendus est externorum bonorum copiae, quae suapte natura instrumentorum loco habenda sunt; idque progredientis humanitatis indicium profecto est.

sense of responsibility. Pius XII, however, comes to our rescue with the following directive: “The small and average sized undertakings in agriculture, in the arts and crafts, in commerce and industry, should be safeguarded and fostered. Moreover, they should join together in cooperative associations to gain for themselves the benefits and advantages that usually can be gained only from large organizations. In the large concerns themselves there should be the possibility of moderating the contract of work by one of partnership.”¹

... We are convinced that employees are justified in wishing to participate in the activity of the industrial concern for which they work. It is not, of course, possible to lay down hard and fast rules regarding the manner of such participation, for this must depend upon prevailing conditions. ... But We have no doubt as to the need for giving workers an active part in the business of the company for which they work. ...

... [On this subject] Pius XII remarked, “the economic and social function that every man aspires to fulfill demands that the carrying on of the activity of each one is not completely subjected to the others.”¹

Obviously, any firm that is concerned for the human dignity of its workers must also maintain a necessary and efficient unity of direction. But it must not treat those employees who spend their days in service with the firm as though they were mere cogs in the machinery, denying them any opportunity of expressing their wishes or bringing their experience to bear on the work in hand and keeping them entirely passive in regard to decisions that regulate their activity.

... [Today many men value] proficiency in their trade or profession rather than the acquisition of private property. They think more highly of an income that derives from capital and the rights of capital.

And this is as it should be. Work, which is the immediate expression of a human personality, must always be rated higher than the possession of external goods that of their very nature are merely instrumental. This view of work is certainly an indication of an advance that has been made in our civilization.

[It is asked whether from now on there is a weakening of the principle concerning] ... man’s natural right to own private property, including productive goods.

Quod dubium inane prorsus est putandum. Siquidem ius privati dominii, etiam quod ad res attinet gignendis bonis tributas, per omne tempus valet, utpote quod in ipsa contineatur rerum natura, qua docemur singulares homines priores esse civili societate, atque adeo civilem societatem ad hominem tamquam ad terminum dirigi oportere.

Ceterum nequiquam privatis hominibus ius agendi cum libertate in re oeconomica agnoscitur, nisi ipsis pariter facultas permittitur libere deligendi adhibendique res ad illud ius exercendum necessarias. Praeterea rerum usus temporumque momenta testantur, ubi populorum regimina privatis hominibus etiam bonorum fructuosorum possessionem non agnoscunt, ibi aut violari aut omnino deleri, in praecipuis rebus, humanae libertatis usum; ex quo utique patet libertatis usum a dominii iure pariter tutelam pariter incitamentum repetere.

Hinc causa est quaerenda, cur coetus et consociationes in re sociali et politica versantes, qui libertatem cum iustitia in hominum consortione componere student quique fere ad hunc diem ius privatim possidendi res gignendis opibus aptas non ponebant, hodie iidem ... Placet igitur Nobis monitis uti, quae de hac re Decessor Noster f. rec. Pius XII dedit: "Ecclesia ius privati dominii tuendo, ad optimum spectat finem morale in re sociali; scilicet per se minime contendit praesentem rerum servare ordinem, quasi divinae voluntatis imperium in eo agnoscat; neque magis data opera opulentorum ac praedivum patrociniū suscipit, pauperum et egenorum iuribus neglectis.... Verum Ecclesiae propositum est, ut privatae possessionis institutum tale habeatur, quale et divinae sapientiae consilium et naturae lex iubeant."² Scilicet privata possessio humanae personae libertatis iura in tuto ponat oportet, simulque necessariam suam conferat operam ad rectum instaurandum societatis ordinem....

Attamen parum est statuere, ius esse homini a natura datum res ut suas privatim possidendi easque etiam quae ad bona gignenda valeant, nisi pariter omni contentione elaboretur, ut eiusdem iuris usus per omnes civium ordines propagetur.

Quemadmodum enim praeclare monet Decessor Noster f. rec. Pius XII, ex una parte ipsa humanae

There is no reason for such a doubt to persist. The right of private ownership of goods, including productive goods, has permanent validity. It is part of the natural order, which teaches that the individual is prior to society and society must be ordered to the good of the individual.

Moreover, it would be quite useless to insist on free and personal initiative in the economic field, while at the same time withdrawing man's right to dispose freely of the means indispensable to the achievement of such initiative. Further, history and experience testify that in those political regimes that do not recognize the rights of private ownership of goods, productive included, the exercise of freedom in almost every other direction is suppressed or stifled. This suggests, surely, that the exercise of freedom finds its guarantee and incentive in the right of ownership.

This explains why social and political movements 3950 for the harmonizing of justice and freedom in society, though until recently opposed to the private ownership of productive goods, are today reconsidering their position ... and are in fact now declaring themselves in favor of this right.¹

Accordingly, We make Our own the directive of Our predecessor Pius XII: "In defending the principle of private ownership, the Church is striving after an important ethico-social end. She does not intend merely to uphold the present condition of things as if it were an expression of the divine Will or to protect on principle the rich and plutocrats against the poor and indigent.... The Church aims rather at securing that the institution of private property be such as it should be according to the plan of the divine Wisdom and the dispositions of nature."² Hence private ownership must be considered as a guarantee of the essential freedom of the individual and at the same time an indispensable element in a true social order....

But it is not enough to assert that the right to own 3951 private property and the means of production is inherent in human nature. We must also insist on the extension of this right in practice to all classes of citizens.

As Our predecessor Pius XII so rightly affirmed: The dignity of the human person "normally demands the right

*3950 ¹ Such an approximation of the Church's view regarding the right to private property was expressed, for example, in the principle established by the German Socialist Party in the Congress of Godesberg of November 13–15, 1959 (Grundsatzprogramm, p. 15): "Private property in the means of production has the right to be defended and favored, insofar as it does not impede the development of a just social order. Productive middle and smaller-sized enterprises are to be strengthened, so that they can sustain commercial competition with larger enterprises."

personae dignitas “ad vivendum secundum rectas naturae normas necessario poscit ius externis bonis utendi; cui quidem iuri officium respondet sane gravissimum, quod requirit, ut, quantum fieri potest, omnibus copia detur privata bona possidendi”;¹ ex altera parte, ipsi labori insita nobilitas praeter alia postulat: “tutionem ac perfectionem illius socialis ordinis, qui omnibus cuiusvis classis civibus tutam, etsi modicam, bonorum possessionem permittat”....²

Manifestum omnino est, quae exposuimus, ea minime prohibere, quominus etiam civitates ceteraque publica instituta res possideant, quae ad opes parandas pertineant; si praesertim “tam magnum secum ferant potentatum, quantus privatis hominibus, salva re publica, permitti non possit”.³

Nostrae huius aetatis ea esse indoles videtur, ut ampliores usque bonorum possessiones tum civitati tum ceteris publicis institutis attribuantur.... Attamen hac etiam in re subsidiarii officii principium ... omnino servandum est; scilicet tum tantum licere civitatibus ac publicis institutis dominii sui fines amplificare, cum manifesta ac vera communis boni necessitas id postulat, depulso periculo, ne privatorum possessiones praeter modum extenuentur aut, quod deterius est, plane evertantur.

3952 [430] ... Sed Decessores Nostri illud etiam nullo non tempore docuerunt, in privati dominii iure penitus munus inesse sociale. Re enim vera, ex Dei Creatoris consilio, cunctorum bonorum copia omnium hominum vitae honeste degendae in primis attribuitur; quemadmodum praeclare monet Decessor Noster f. rec. Leo XIII in Encyclicis Litteris “Rerum novarum”, ubi haec legimus: “quarum rerum summa haec est: quicumque maiorem copiam bonorum Dei munere accepit, sive corporis et externa sint, sive animi, [eam] ob hanc causam accepisse, ut ad perfectionem sui pariterque, velut minister providentiae divinae, ad utilitates adhibeat ceterorum....”¹ to the use of the goods of the earth, to which corresponds the fundamental obligation of granting an opportunity to possess property to all if possible”.¹ This demand arises from the moral dignity of work. It also guarantees “the conservation and perfection of a social order that makes possible a secure, even if modest, property to all classes of people”....²

This, of course, is not to deny the lawfulness of State and public ownership of productive goods, especially those that “carry with them a power too great to be left to private individuals without injury to the community at large”.³

State and public ownership of property is very much on the increase today.... But here, too, the principle of subsidiary function must be observed.... The State and other agencies of public law must not extend their ownership beyond what is clearly required by considerations of the common good properly understood, and even then there must be safeguards. Otherwise, private ownership could be reduced beyond measure or, even worse, completely destroyed.

... Our predecessors have insisted time and again on the social function inherent in the right of private ownership, for it cannot be denied that in the plan of the Creator all of this world’s goods are primarily intended for the worthy support of the entire human race. Hence, as Leo XIII so wisely taught in Rerum novarum: “Whoever has received from the divine bounty a large share of temporal blessings, whether they be external and corporeal or gifts of the mind, has received them for the purpose of using them for the perfecting of his own nature and, at the same time, that he may employ them, as the steward of God’s providence, for the benefit of others....”¹

Artificial Insemination

3953 [447] ... Graviter pronuntiamus, hominis vitam tradi atque propagari opera familiae, in uno eodemque indissolubili nixae matrimonio, quod sacramenti dignitate, ad christianos quod attinet, auctum est. Quoniamque hominis vita aliis hominibus consulto et cogitate traditur, sequitur idcirco, ut hoc agatur ad Dei praescriptiones sanctissimas, firmissimas, inviolatas; quas scilicet nemo non agnoscere, non servare debet.

... We must solemnly proclaim that human life is transmitted by means of the family, and the family is based upon a marriage that is one and indissoluble and, with respect to Christians, raised to the dignity of a sacrament. The transmission of human life is the result of a personal and conscious act and, as such, is subject to the all-holy, inviolable, and immutable laws of God, which no man may ignore or disobey. He is not, therefore, permitted to use certain ways and means that are allowable in the propagation of plant and animal life.

Quocirca in hac re nemini omnium licet iis uti viis rationibusque, quibus vel arborum vel animantium vitam prorogare licet.

Etenim hominum vita pro sacra re est omnibus ducenda: quippe quae inde a suo exordio Creatoris actionem Dei postulet. Itaque qui ab his Dei constitutis discedit, non solum Dei ipsius laedit maiestatem, et sibi humanoque generi imprimit dedecus, sed etiam civitatis suae vires intimas debilitat.

Human life is sacred—all men must recognize that fact. From its very inception it reveals the creating hand of God. Those who violate his laws not only offend the divine majesty and degrade themselves and humanity, they also sap the vitality of the political community of which they are members.

3955–3997: Encyclical Pacem in terris, April 11, 1963

On December 10, 1948, the United Nations Organization proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (the text is found in the General Assembly of the United Nations, sess. 3, pt. 1, Official Records: resolutions, 71–77; cf. also the Yearbook of Human Rights of 1948 [Lake Success, N.Y.], published by the United Nations). Pope John XXIII described the declaration as “a step and an opening toward the establishment of a political and juridical order for all the people of the world” (gradum atque aditum ad iuridicalem politicamque ordinationem constituendam omnium populorum qui in mundo sunt; AAS 55 [1963]: 295). With this encyclical, human rights in their entirety are grounded and recognized in light of Christian principles for the first time by the Church’s Magisterium. The pope presented the encyclical to the members of the UN as a sign of solidarity. Cf. also the European Convention on Human Rights of November 4, 1950. The Order Established by God among Men Pacem in terris, quam homines universi cupidissime quovis tempore appetiverunt, condi confirmarique non posse constat, nisi ordine, quem Deus constituit sancte servato.

Nam ex doctrinarum processibus ac technicorum inventis plane discimus, simul in animantibus et in naturae viribus dominari ordinem mirificum, simul in homine eiusmodi inesse dignitatem, qua possit sive ordinem ipsum deprehendere sive instrumenta apta sibi parare, ad easdem occupandas vires et ad sua commoda transferendas.

Sed scientiarum progressionibus ac technicorum inventa primum omnium infinitam Dei magnitudinem ostendunt, qui et rerum universitatem et hominem ipsum creavit. Rerum, dici[258]mus, universitatem de nihilo fecit, in eamque sapientiae et bonitatis suae copiam profudit... Hominem item Deus “ad imaginem et similitudinem suam” [cf. Gn 1:26] creavit, intelligentia et libertate praeditum, dominumque constituit rerum universarum ... [allegatur Ps 8:5s].

Nunc autem cum optimo universitatis ordine mirum quantum pugnat tum singulorum hominum, tum populorum perturbatio; quasi si rationes, quibus inter se continentur, nonnisi vi regi queant.

Attamen in intimo homine mundi Creator ordinem impressit, quem eius conscientia et patefacit et magnopere servari iubet: “Qui ostendunt opus legis scriptum in cordibus suis, testimonium reddente illis conscientia ipsorum” [Rm 2:15]. Ceterum quemadmodum potest fieri secus? Etenim quaecumque fecit Deus, haec infinitam

Peace on earth—which man throughout the ages has so longed for and sought after—can never be established, never guaranteed, except by the diligent observance of the divinely established order.

That a marvelous order predominates in the world of living beings and in the forces of nature is the plain lesson that the progress of modern research and the discoveries of technology teach us. And it is part of the greatness of man that he can appreciate that order and devise the means for harnessing those forces for his own benefit.

But what emerges first and foremost from the progress of scientific knowledge and the inventions of technology is the infinite greatness of God himself, who created both man and the universe. Yes, out of nothing he made all things and filled them with the fullness of his own wisdom and goodness... Moreover, God created man “in his own image and likeness” [cf. Gen 1:26], endowed him with intelligence and freedom, and made him lord of creation ... [Ps 8:5f. is cited].

And yet there is a disunity among individuals and among nations that is in striking contrast to this perfect order in the universe. One would think that the relationships that bind men together could only be governed by force.

But the world’s Creator has stamped man’s inmost being with an order revealed to man by his conscience; and his conscience insists on his preserving it. Men “show that what the law requires is written on their hearts, while their conscience also bears witness” [Rom 2:15]. And how could it be otherwise? All created eius referunt sapientiam, referuntque eo clarius quo absolutiore eadem perfectione gaudent [cf. Ps 18:8–11].

Verum opinionis error praebet frequenter errorem quod multi censeant rationes, quae singulis hominibus cum sua cuiusque re publica intercedant, iisdem legibus, quibus vires et elementa mentis expertia universitatis, posse gubernari; cum huiusmodi leges, alius quidem generis, illinc dumtaxat petendae sint ubi Parens rerum omnium inscripsit, hoc est in hominis natura.

The Human Person as the Subject of Rights and Obligations

Quodsi humanae personae dignitatem ex veritatibus divinitus traditis intuemur, tunc fieri non potest quin eam being reflects the infinite wisdom of God. It reflects it all the more clearly, the higher it stands in the scale of perfection [cf. Ps 19:8–11].

But the mischief is often caused by erroneous opinions. Many people think that the laws that govern man's relations with the State are the same as those that regulate the blind, elemental forces of the universe. But it is not so; the laws that govern men are quite different. The Father of the universe has inscribed them in man's nature, and that is where we must look for them; there and nowhere else.

These laws clearly indicate how a man must behave toward his fellows in society and how the mutual relationships between the members of a State and its officials are to be conducted. They show, too, what principles must govern the relations between States; and finally, what should be the relations between individuals or States, on the one hand, and the worldwide community of nations, on the other. Men's common interests make it imperative that at long last a worldwide community of nations be established.

Any well-regulated and productive association of men in society demands the acceptance of one fundamental principle: that each individual man is truly a person. His is a nature, that is, endowed with intelligence and free will. As such he has rights and duties, which together flow as a direct consequence from his nature. These rights and duties are universal and inviolable and, therefore, altogether inalienable.¹

When, furthermore, we consider man's personal dignity from the standpoint of divine revelation, *3957¹ Cf. Pius XII, radio message of December 24, 1942 (AAS 35 [1943]: 9–24). Here already a number of fundamental rights are derived from the human person: "Whoever wishes the star of peace to rise and remain over society strives, for his part, to render to the human person the dignity bestowed upon him by God from the beginning; he opposes the excessive agglomeration of men as if they were a mass without a soul; [he opposes] their lack of solid principles and strong convictions; [he opposes] their superabundance of impulsive and sensual excitements and their fickleness; he supports, by every licit means, in every domain of life, social forms that make possible and guarantee complete personal responsibility, as much in the earthly order as in the eternal; he promotes the respect for and the practical actualization of the following fundamental rights of the person: the right to maintain and develop physical, intellectual, and moral life and, in particular, the right to a religious formation and education; the right to the private and public worship of God, which includes charitable religious action; the right, as a rule, to marriage and the achievement of its purpose; the right to conjugal and domestic society; the right to work as the indispensable means for the maintenance of family life; the right to the free choice of one's state in life, and, therefore, also to the priestly and religious state; the right to a use of material goods, conscious of one's duties and social limitations" (Chi vuole che la stella della pace spunti e si fermi sulla società, concorra da parte sua a ridonare alla persona umana la dignità concessale da Dio fin dal principio: si opponga all'eccessivo aggruppamento degli uomini, quasi come masse senz'anima; alla loro mancanza di solidi principi e di forti convinzioni; alla loro sovrabbondanza di eccitazioni istintive e sensibili, e alla loro volubilità; favorisca, con tutti i mezzi leciti, in tutti i campi della vita, forme sociali, in cui sia resa possibile et garantita una piena responsabilità personale, così quanto all'ordine terreno come quanto all'eterno; sostenga il rispetto e la pratica attuazione dei seguenti fondamentali diritti della persona: il diritto a mantenere e sviluppare la vita corporale, intellettuale e morale, e particolarmente il diritto ad una formazione ed educazione religiosa; il diritto al culto di Dio privato e pubblico, compresa l'azione caritativa religiosa; il diritto, in massima, al matrimonio e al conseguimento del suo scopo, il diritto alla società coniugale e domestica; il diritto alla libera scelta dello stato, quindi anche dello stato sacerdotale e religioso; il diritto ad un uso dei beni materiali, cosciente dei suoi doveri e delle limitazioni sociali: AAS 35 [1943]: 19). Cf. also John XXIII, address to the convention of the "Movimiento Laureati di Azione Cattolica" January 4, 1963 (AAS 55 [1963]: 89–91).

longe maiorem aestimemus; quippe homines sanguine Christi Iesu redempti sunt, superna gratia filii et amici Dei sunt facti, aeternae gloriae instituti heredes sunt.

inevitably our estimate of it is incomparably increased. Men have been ransomed by the blood of Jesus Christ. Grace has made them sons and friends of God and heirs to eternal glory.

The Fundamental Individual Rights of Man

Atque initio de hominis iuribus sermonem instituturi, animadvertimus hominem vitae habere ius, habere integritatis corporis, habere instrumentorum ad honestum vitae cultum aptorum: cuiusmodi praesertim sunt victus, vestimenta, do[260]mus, requies, medicorum curationes, necessaria denique ministeria a civitate impendenda in singulos. Ex quo sequitur, eo etiam iure hominem gaudere, ut sibi consulatur, si adversa corripiatur valetudine, si opere et labore debilitetur, si relinquatur in viduitate, si senio conficiatur, si vacare cogatur ab opere, si postremo sine ulla sua noxa rebus deturbetur ad victum utcumque necessariis.¹

Homo praeterea iure naturae postulat, ut in debito habeatur honore; ut bona existimatione afficiatur; ut libere possit veram inquirere, et, morali ordine communique omnium utilitate servatis, opinionem suam declarare, vulgare, et artem qualemcumque colere; ut denique ex veritate de publicis eventibus certior fiat.¹

Naturae simul iure cum homini in partem scientiarum venire liceat, ei idcirco necesse etiam est liceat sive ad praecipuas communesque disciplinas, sive ad technicorum artes, sive ad professiones institui, pro suae cuiusque civitatis in doctrinis progressibus. Ad haec contendendum est et elaborandum, ut homines possint, si sui ingenii vires id ferant, ad altiores studiorum ordines ascendere; ita quidem ut iidem, quoad fieri possit, in humana societate ad munera et officia emergant, tum suo ingenio consentanea, tum peritiae, quam ipsi sibi pepererint.¹

But first We must speak of man's rights. Man has the right to live. He has the right to bodily integrity and to the means necessary for the proper development of life, particularly food, clothing, shelter, medical care, rest, and, finally, the necessary social services. In consequence, he has the right to be looked after in the event of ill health; disability stemming from his work; widowhood; old age; enforced unemployment; or whenever through no fault of his own he is deprived of the means of livelihood.¹ 3958

Moreover, man has a natural right to be respected. He has a right to his good name. He has a right to freedom in investigating the truth, and—within the limits of the moral order and the common good—to freedom of speech and publication and to freedom to pursue whatever profession he may choose. He has the right, also, to be accurately informed about public events.¹ 3959

He has the natural right to share in the benefits of culture and, hence, to receive a good general education and a technical or professional training consistent with the degree of educational development in his own country. Furthermore, a system must be devised for affording gifted members of society the opportunity of engaging in more advanced studies, with a view to their occupying, as far as possible, positions of responsibility in society in keeping with their natural talent and acquired skill.¹ 3960

Also among man's rights is that of being able to worship God in accordance with the right dictates of his own conscience and to profess his religion both in private and in public.¹ 3961

*3959¹ Cf. Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 12, 19, 27; European Convention on Human Rights, art. 10 on freedom of expression (with limits in § 2).

*3960¹ Cf. Pius XII, radio message, December 24, 1942 (AAS 35 [1943]: 9–24); Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 26; European Convention on Human Rights, additional protocol, art. 2.

*3961¹ Cf. Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 18: "Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship, and observance." Also similar is the European Convention on Human Rights, art. 9, but with the addition of the following restriction: "The freedom to manifest one's religion or one's convictions cannot be the object of other restrictions than those that, foreseen by the law, constitute the necessary measures, in a democratic society, for public security, for the protection of order, health, or public morality, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others" (La liberté de manifester sa religion ou ses convictions ne peut faire l'objet d'autres restrictions que celles qui, prévues par la loi, constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité publique, à la protection de l'ordre, de la santé ou de la morale publiques, ou à la protection des droits et libertés d'autrui).

Etenim, quemadmodum praeclare docet Lactantius, “hac condicione gignimur, ut generanti nos Deo iusta et debita obsequia praebeamus, hunc solum noverimus, hunc sequamur. Hoc vinculo pietatis ob[261]stricti Deo et religati sumus, unde ipsa religio nomen accepit.”²

Qua de eadem re Decessor Noster imm. mem. Leo XIII haec asseverat: “Haec quidem vera, haec digna filiis Dei libertas, quae humanae dignitatem personae honestissime tuetur, est omni vi iniuriaque maior: eademque Ecclesiae semper optata ac praecipue cara. Huius generis libertatem sibi constanter vindicavere Apostoli, sanxere scriptis Apologetae, Martyres ingenti numero sanguine suo consecravere.”³

Quod ad familiam attinet, quae in matrimonio nititur, libere nimirum contracto, uno indissolubili, ipsam existimari opus est tamquam humanae societatis primum et naturale semen. Ex quo oritur, ut eidem sit diligentissime consulendum, cum in re oeconomica et sociali, tum in provincia doctrinarum et morum; quae scilicet omnia eo pertinent, ut familia firmetur et ad munus suum tenendum adiuvetur.

Sed cum huius generis iuribus ius certe coniungitur exigen[262]di, ut homo in eiusmodi condicionibus opus navet, quibus neque corporis vires debilitentur, neque morum labefactetur integritas, neque iustis adulescentium auctibus noceatur. Quod vero ad mulieres spectat, concedenda iisdem est facultas peragendi operis in talibus rerum adiunctis, quae sive cum uxorum sive cum matrum necessitatibus et officiis congruant.²

According to the clear teaching of Lactantius, “this is the very condition of our birth, that we render to the God who made us that just homage which is his due; that we acknowledge him alone as God and follow him. It is from this ligature of piety, which binds us and joins us to God, that religion derives its name.”²

Hence, too, Our predecessor of esteemed memory Pope Leo XIII declared that “true freedom, freedom worthy of the sons of God, is that freedom which most truly safeguards the dignity of the human person. It is stronger than any violence or injustice. Such is the freedom that has always been desired by the Church and that she holds most dear. It is the sort of freedom that the apostles resolutely claimed for themselves. The apologists defended it in their writings; thousands of martyrs consecrated it with their blood.”³

Human beings have also the right to choose for themselves the kind of life that appeals to them: whether it is to found a family—in the founding of which both the man and the woman enjoy equal rights and duties—or to embrace the priesthood or the religious life.¹

The family, founded upon marriage freely contracted, one and indissoluble, must be regarded as the natural, primary cell of human society. The interests of the family, therefore, must be taken very specially into consideration in social and economic affairs as well as in the spheres of faith and morals. For all of these have to do with strengthening the family and assisting it in the fulfillment of its mission.

Of course, the support and education of children is a right that belongs primarily to the parents.²

In the economic sphere, it is evident that a man has the inherent right not only to be given the opportunity to work, but also to be allowed the exercise of personal initiative in the work he does.¹

The conditions in which a man works form a necessary corollary to these rights. They must not be such as to weaken his physical or moral fiber or militate against the proper development of adolescents to manhood. Women must be accorded such conditions of work as are consistent with their needs and responsibilities as wives and mothers.²

Ab humanae personae dignitate ius quoque nascitur oeconomica factitandi negotia, convenienter cum reddendae rationis sensu.¹

Exinde et illud non est tacendum, operario mercedem deberi, ad iustitiae praecepta statutam; quae idcirco, pro administrationis facultatibus, operario eiusque familiae vitae genus permittat, cum hominis dignitate conveniens: Qua de re Decessor Noster fel. rec. Pius XII haec habet: “Cum officio operis faciendi, in natura posito, ius pariter naturale congruit; cuius vi homo poscere potest, ut ex impenso opere sibi suisque filiis necessaria ad vitam proveniant: tam penitus natura iubet hominis conservationem.”²

Ab hominis natura adhuc ducitur ius privatim bona possidendi, vel gignendis opibus apta; quod videlicet ius, uti alias professi sumus, “efficaciter ad humanae dignitatem personae tuendam, et ad liberam sui cuiusque muneris perfunctionem in omnibus navitatis campis adiuvat; quod postremo domestici convictus compaginem tranquillitatemque confirmat, non sine pacis et prosperitatis in re publica incremento.”¹

Ad ultimum et hoc opportune animadvertendum est, in privati dominii iure munus inesse sociale.²

Ex eo autem quod homines sunt natura sociabiles illud oritur, ut iure iidem possint et in unum locum se congregare, et [263] societatem cum aliis inire; ut initas societates ea induant forma, quam existiment ad propositum assequendum magis idoneam; ut in societatibus iisdem sua sponte suoque periculo agant, easque ad optatos exitus pervehant.¹

Atque, ut Nosmetipsi datis Litteris encyclicis “Mater et Magistra” magnopere monuimus, omnino opus est, ut bene multa collegia seu corpora interiecta condantur, ad finem paria, ad quem homo singulus non potest tendere efficienter. Haec enim collegia et corpora veluti instrumenta longe pernecessaria sunt habenda ad tuendam humanae personae dignitatem et libertatem, incolumi praestandae rationis sensu.²

Tum etiam homini cuilibet iure integrum esse debet in civitatis suae finibus vel tenere vel mutare locum;

A further consequence of man’s personal dignity is his right to engage in economic activities suited to his degree of responsibility.¹ 3964

The worker is likewise entitled to a wage that is determined in accordance with the precepts of justice. This needs stressing. The amount a worker receives must be sufficient, in proportion to available funds, to allow him and his family a standard of living consistent with human dignity. Pope Pius XII expressed it in these terms: “Nature imposes work upon man as a duty, and man has the corresponding natural right to demand that the work he does shall provide him with the means of livelihood for himself and his children. Such is nature’s categorical imperative for the preservation of man.”²

As a further consequence of man’s nature, he has the right to the private ownership of property, including that of productive goods. This, as We have said elsewhere, is “a right that constitutes so efficacious a means of asserting one’s personality and exercising responsibility in every field and an element of solidity and security for family life and of greater peace and prosperity in the State.”¹ 3965

Finally, it is opportune to point out that the right to own private property entails a social obligation as well.²

Men are by nature social, and, consequently, they have the right to meet together and to form associations with their fellows. They have the right to confer on such associations the type of organization they consider best calculated to achieve their objectives. They have also the right to exercise their own initiative and act on their own responsibility within these associations for the attainment of the desired results.¹ 3966

As We insisted in Our encyclical Mater et Magistra, the founding of a great many such intermediate groups or societies for the pursuit of aims that it is not within the competence of the individual to achieve efficiently is a matter of great urgency. Such groups and societies must be considered absolutely essential for the safeguarding of man’s personal freedom and dignity, while leaving intact a sense of responsibility.²

Again, every human being has the right to freedom of movement and of residence within the confines of 3967

quin etiam, si iustae id suadeant causae, eidem liceat necesse est, alias civitates petere in iisque domicilium suum collocare.¹ Neque ex eo quod quis certae cuiusdam reipublicae est civis, is ullo modo vetatur esse membrum humanae familiae, neque civis universalis illius societatis et coniunctionis omnium hominum communis.

Duties Imposed upon Men by the Natural Law

Itaque, ut nonnullis utamur exemplis, hominis ius in vitam cum illius cohaeret officio suae vitae conservandae; ius in dignum vitae genus cum officio decore vivendi; ius veritatem libere vestigandi cum officio veritatem altius latiusque in dies quaerendi.

Quibus probatis, consequens est etiam, ut in hominum consortione unius hominis naturali cuidam iuri officium aliorum hominum respondeat: officium videlicet ius illud agnoscendi et colendi. Nam quodvis praecipuum hominis ius vim auctoritatemque suam a naturali lege repetit, quae illud tribuit, et conveniens iniungit officium. Qui igitur, dum iura sua vindicant, officia sua vel omnino obliviscuntur, vel aequo minus praestant, iidem sunt cum iis veluti comparandi, qui altera manu aedem exstruunt, altera evertunt.

his own State. When there are just reasons in favor of it, he must be permitted to emigrate to other countries and take up residence there.¹ The fact that he is a citizen of a particular State does not deprive him of membership in the human family or of citizenship in that universal society, the common, worldwide fellowship of men.

Finally, man’s personal dignity involves his right to take an active part in public life and to make his own contribution to the common welfare of his fellow citizens. As Pope Pius XII said, “man as such, far from being an object or, as it were, an inert element in society, is rather its subject, its basis, and its purpose; and so must he be esteemed.”¹

As a human person he is entitled to the legal protection of his rights, and such protection must be effective, unbiased, and strictly just. To quote again Pope Pius XII: “In consequence of that juridical order willed by God, man has his own inalienable right to juridical security. To him is assigned a certain, well-defined sphere of law, immune from arbitrary attack.”¹

The natural rights of which We have so far been speaking are inextricably bound up with as many duties, all applying to one and the same person. These rights and duties derive their origin, their sustenance, and their indestructibility from the natural law, which in conferring the one imposes the other.

Thus, for example, the right to live involves the duty to preserve one’s life; the right to a decent standard of living, the duty to live in a becoming fashion; the right to be free to seek out the truth, the duty to devote oneself to an ever deeper and wider search for it.

Once this is admitted, it follows that in human society one man’s natural right gives rise to a corresponding duty in other men; the duty, that is, of recognizing and respecting that right. Every basic human right draws its authoritative force from the natural law, which confers it and attaches to it its respective duty. Hence, to claim one’s rights and ignore one’s duties, or only half fulfill them, is like building a house with one hand and tearing it down with the other.

Cum homines sint natura congregabiles, ii oportet alii cum aliis vivant, atque alii aliorum quaerant bonum. Hanc ob [265] causam recte compositus hominum convictus postulat, ut iidem pariter iura pariter officia mutuo fateantur et faciant. Ex quo etiam nascitur, ut quisque magno animo sociam praebeat operam ad eiusmodi civium consuetudinem parandam, in qua iura et officia diligentius usque et fructuosius colantur.

Cuius rei ut ponamus exemplum, non satis est hominis ius in necessaria vitae tribuere, nisi pro viribus elaboremus, ut eidem quae ad victum pertinent satis suppetant.

Huc accedit quod hominum societas, non modo ordinata esse debet, sed multos etiam ipsis utilitatis fructus afferre. Quod flagitat, ut ii quidem iura et officia mutuo agnoscant et exsequantur, at vero etiam, ut coniunctim omnes in plurimis inceptis intersint, quae huius aetatis civilis cultus vel sinat vel suadeat vel poscat.

Illud praeterea humanae dignitas personae exigit, ut in agendo homo proprio consilio et libertate fruatur. Quocirca, si de civium coniunctione agitur, est profecto cur ipse iura colat, officia servet, atque in innumeris operibus exercendis, aliis sociam tribuat operam, suo praesertim impulsu et consulto; ita scilicet ut suo quisque instituto, iudicio, officiique conscientia agat, iam non commotus coercitione vel sollicitatione extrinsecus plerumque adductis; quandoquidem, si qua hominum societas una ratione virium est instituta, ea nihil humani in se habere dicenda est, utpote in qua homines a libertate cohibeantur, qui contra ad vitae progressus, ad perfectionemque assequendam apte ipsi incitandi sunt.

At huius generis ordo—cuius principia cum ad omnes attinent, tum absoluta atque immutabilia sunt—a Deo vero, [267] et eo quidem personali atque humanam naturam transcendente, initium omnino repetit. Deus enim, cum sit veritas omnium prima, summumque bonum, tum vero fons est praealtus, unde vitam vere haurire hominum coniunctio potest, quae nimirum recte constituta sit et frugifera, ad hominumque dignitatem apta.¹

Quam ad rem illud S. Thomae Aquinatis pertinet: “Quod autem ratio humana sit regula voluntatis humanae, ex qua eius bonitas mensuretur, habet ex lege aeterna,

Since men are social by nature, they must live together and consult each other’s interests. That men should recognize and perform their respective rights and duties is imperative to a well-ordered society. But the result will be that each individual will make his wholehearted contribution to the creation of a civic order in which rights and duties are ever more diligently and more effectively observed. 3971

For example, it is useless to admit that a man has a right to the necessities of life unless we also do all in our power to supply him with means sufficient for his livelihood.

Hence society must not only be well ordered, it must also provide men with abundant resources. This postulates not only the mutual recognition and fulfillment of rights and duties, but also the involvement and collaboration of all men in the many enterprises that our present civilization makes possible, encourages, or, indeed, demands.

Man’s personal dignity requires besides that he enjoy freedom and be able to make up his own mind when he acts. In his association with his fellows, therefore, there is every reason why his recognition of rights, observance of duties, and many-sided collaboration with other men should be primarily a matter of his own personal decision. Each man should act on his own initiative, conviction, and sense of responsibility, not under the constant pressure of external coercion or enticement. There is nothing human about a society that is welded together by force. Far from encouraging, as it should, the attainment of man’s progress and perfection, it is merely an obstacle to his freedom. 3972

... Now the order that prevails in human society is wholly incorporeal in nature. Its foundation is truth, and it must be brought into effect by justice. It needs to be animated and perfected by men’s love for one another, and, while preserving freedom intact, it must make for an equilibrium in society that is increasingly more human in character. 3973

But such an order—universal, absolute, and immutable in its principles—finds its source in the true, personal, and transcendent God. He is the first truth, the sovereign good, and as such the deepest source from which human society, if it is to be properly constituted, creative, and worthy of man’s dignity, draws its genuine vitality.¹

This is what St. Thomas means when he says: “Human reason is the standard that measures the degree of goodness of the human will, and as such it derives quae est ratio divina.... Unde manifestum est, quod multo magis dependet bonitas voluntatis humanae a lege aeterna, quam a ratione humana.”² from the eternal law, which is divine reason.... Hence it is clear that the goodness of the human will depends much more on the eternal law than on human reason.”²

Characteristics of Contemporary Social Life

Quam ob rem in praesentia opifices, qui ubique sunt, illud vehementer exquirunt, ne umquam ducantur quasi quaedam res rationis et libertatis experts, qua alii arbitrio suo utantur, sed tamquam homines in quibuslibet humanae societatis partibus: hoc est in regione oeconomica et sociali, in re publica, in campo denique doctrinarum et disciplinarum.

Homines enim, qui ubique sunt gentium, vel in civium ordine liberae cuiusdam civitatis iam censentur, vel in eo est ut censeantur; neque ullius stirpis communitas alienae ditioni iam esse vult obnoxia. Nam nostro hoc tempore

In the first place, We notice a progressive improvement in the economic and social condition of workingmen. They began by claiming their rights principally in the economic and social spheres and then proceeded to lay claim to their political rights as well. Finally, they have turned their attention to acquiring the more cultural benefits of society.

Today, therefore, workingmen all over the world are loud in their demands that they shall in no circumstances be subjected to arbitrary treatment, as though devoid of intelligence and freedom. They insist on being treated as human beings, with a share in every sector of human society: in the socio-economic sphere, in government, and in the realm of learning and culture.

Secondly, the part that women are now playing in political life is everywhere evident. This is a development that is perhaps of swifter growth among Christian nations, but it is also happening extensively, if more slowly, among nations that are heirs to different traditions and imbued with a different culture. Women are gaining an increasing awareness of their natural dignity. Far from being content with a purely passive role or allowing themselves to be regarded as a kind of instrument, they are demanding both in domestic and in public life the rights and duties that belong to them as human persons.¹

Finally, We are confronted in this modern age with a form of society that is evolving on entirely new social and political lines. Since all peoples have either attained political independence or are on the way to attaining it, soon no nation will rule over another and none will be subject to an alien power.

Thus, all over the world men are either the citizens of an independent State or are shortly to become so; nor is any nation nowadays content to submit to foreign domination. The longstanding inferiority complex of *3973² Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae I–II, q. 19, a. 4; cf. a. 9 (Editio Leonina 6:144; cf. 149f.).

*3975¹ Cf. Universal Declaration of Human Rights, art. 21 (“Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country.... Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country”) in connection with art. 2 (“Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, or other status”). This formulation aroused opposition from certain peoples of the Orient. The Christian religion indeed stipulated the equality of woman and man within the confines of personal religious life (cf. Gal 3:28 on the baptized: “There is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus”) and in the family, in that it refrained from the subjugation of the woman under the man (cf. Leo XIII: “The rights of husbands and wives (were made) equal”: *3144). But the tendency to exclude women from all public office was not overcome until the last century (cf. Roman law: Digesta L 17, legal regulation 2). Worthy of note is the progress from Pius XI (encyclical Casti connubii: AAS 22 [1930]: 567f.) to Pius XII (address to the women delegates of the Christian associations of Italy, October 21, 1945: AAS 37 [1945]: 284–95), but especially that of John XXIII, who develops here what he emphasizes already in the principle established in *3968.

opiniones consenuerunt, tot saecula inhaerentes, ex quibus scilicet hinc aliae hominum classes inferiorem sibi locum accipiebant, illinc primas partes aliae postulabant, sive ob statum rerum oeconomicarum et socialium, sive ob sexum, sive ob suum cuiusque in civitate gradum.

Latissime e contrario ea opinio pervasit et obtinuit, omnes homines esse naturae dignitate inter se aequales.¹ Quam ob rem, saltem in ratione disciplinaeque, nullo modo probatur hominum discrimen, generis causa; quod quidem maximi momenti est et ponderis ad humanum convictum conflandum ex principiis, quae commemoravimus.

Quod si in homine aliquo conscientia nascitur suorum iurium, in eo etiam conscientia officiorum suorum necesse est nascatur: ita ut qui iura quaedam habeat, in eo pariter officium insit sua iura, tamquam suae dignitatis significationes, repositi; in reliquis vero officium insit iura eadem agnoscendi et colendi.

Atque cum civium disciplina ad iura officiaque informatur, tunc homines continuo res ad animum mentemque pertinentes deprehendunt, plane quid veritas sit, quid iustitia, quid caritas, quid libertas intellegunt, iidem iustitiam se huius[269]modi societatis esse membra.

Neque id satis; nam huius generis causis commoti homines ad verum Deum melius cognoscendum feruntur, nempe supra humanam naturam positum personaque praeditum. Quam ob rem rationes, quae iis cum Deo intercedunt, quasi fundamentum suae vitae existimant: id est vitae, quam vel intus in animo suo vivunt, vel cum reliquis hominibus consociaverunt.

The Necessity of Authority and Its Divine Origin

... Hominum societas neque bene composita neque bonorum fecunda esse potest, nisi ei adsint qui, auctoritate legitima decorati, instituta servant et, quantum est satis, in omnium commoda operam curamque impendant suam. Iidem vero auctoritatem omnem a Deo ducunt, uti S. Paulus hisce docet verbis: “Non est enim potestas, nisi a Deo” [Rm 13:1; cf. et 13:2–6].

Quam Apostoli sententiam S. Ioannes Chrysostomus explanans haec scribit: “Quid dicis? Omnisne princeps a Deo ordinatus est? Non hoc dico, inquit: neque enim de singulis principibus mihi nunc sermo est, sed de re ipsa. Nam quod principatus sint, et quod alii imperent, alii subiecti sint, neque omnia casu ac temere ferantur, divinae esse sapientiae dico.”¹ certain classes because of their economic and social status, sex, or position in the State, and the corresponding superiority complex of other classes, is rapidly becoming a thing of the past.

Today, on the contrary, the conviction is widespread 3977 that all men are equal in natural dignity;¹ and so, on the doctrinal and theoretical level, at least, no form of approval is being given to racial discrimination. All this is of supreme significance for the formation of a human society animated by the principles We have mentioned above.

For man’s awareness of his rights must inevitably lead him to the recognition of his duties. The possession of rights involves the duty of implementing those rights, for they are the expression of a man’s personal dignity. And the possession of rights also involves their recognition and respect by other people.

When society is formed on a basis of rights and duties, 3978 men have an immediate grasp of spiritual and intellectual values and have no difficulty in understanding what is meant by truth, justice, charity, and freedom. They become, moreover, conscious of being members of such a society.

And that is not all. Inspired by such principles, they attain to a better knowledge of the true God—a personal God transcending human nature. They recognize that their relationship with God forms the very foundation of their life—the interior life of the spirit and the life they live in the society of their fellows.

... Human society can be neither well ordered nor 3979 prosperous without the presence of those who, invested with legal authority, preserve its institutions and do all that is necessary to sponsor actively the interests of all its members. And they derive their authority from God, for, as St. Paul teaches, “there is no power but from God” [Rm 13:1; cf. also 13:2–6].

In his commentary on this passage, St. John Chrysostom writes: “What are you saying? Is every ruler appointed by God? No, that is not what I mean, he says, for I am not now talking about individual rulers, but about authority as such. My contention is that the existence of a ruling authority—the fact that some should command and others obey and that all things do not come about as the result of blind chance—this is a provision of divine wisdom.”¹

Enimvero, quoniam Deus homines sua natura sociabiles creavit, quoniamque nulla societas potest “consistere, nisi si aliquis omnibus praesit, efficaci similique movens singulos ad commune propositum impulsione, efficitur, civili hominum communitati necessariam esse auctoritatem, qua regatur: quae non secus ac societas, a natura propterea a Deo ipso oriatur auctore” [*3165].

God has created men social by nature, and a society cannot “hold together unless someone is in command to give effective direction and unity of purpose. Hence every civilized community must have a ruling authority, and this authority, no less than society itself, has its source in nature and consequently has God for its author” [*3165].

The Force of Governmental Authority

3980 Haud tamen auctoritas a cuiuslibet imperio vacua putanda est; immo cum eadem ex facilitate imperandi ad rectam rationem proficiscatur, illud sane cogitur, ut vim obligandi ex ordi[270]ne morum ipsa repetat, qui vicissim Deum tamquam principium et finem habet.

But it must not be imagined that authority knows no bounds. Since its starting point is the permission to govern in accordance with right reason, there is no escaping the conclusion that it derives its binding force from the moral order, which in turn has God as its origin and end.

Qua de causa Decessor Noster fel. rec. Pius XII haec monet: “Absolutus animantium ordo, et finis ipse hominis (hominem dicimus liberum, officiis obstrictum, iuribus inviolabilibus instructum, societatisque humanae originem et finem) civitatem quoque, quasi quandam communitatem necessariam, auctoritateque ornatam attingunt, qua sublata, neque esse neque vivere ipsa posset. . . . Qui rerum omnium ordo, quoniam iuxta rectam rationem et maxime iuxta christianam fidem initium non potest quin ducat a Deo, omnium nostrum Creatore, eodemque persona praedito, idcirco magistratus ex eo dignitatem accipiunt, quod Dei ipsius auctoritatem quodammodo participant.”¹

Hence, to quote Pope Pius XII, “The absolute order of living beings, and the very purpose of man—an autonomous being, the subject of duties and inviolable rights, and the origin and purpose of human society—have a direct bearing upon the State as a necessary community endowed with authority. Divest it of this authority, and it is nothing; it is lifeless. . . . But right reason and, above all, Christian faith make it clear that such an order can have no other origin but in God, a personal God, our Creator. Hence it is from him that State officials derive their dignity, for they share to some extent in the authority of God himself.”¹

Quocirca quae imperandi facultas sive in minis metuque poenarum, sive in praemiorum pollicitationibus posita unice vel praecipue est, nullo pacto ad commune omnium bonum quaerendum efficienter incitat; quod si forte fiat, id profecto cum hominum dignitate, qui libertatis rationisque sunt compotes et participes, haudquaquam sit consentaneum. Auctoritas enim cum maxime vi contineatur incorporali, propterea reipublicae curatores sese ad cuiusvis civis agendi conscientiam referre debent, hoc est ad officium, quo quisque obstringitur, in communes omnium utilitates promptam impendendi operam: Sed quoniam omnes homines in naturali dignitate sunt inter se pares, tum nemo valet alium ad aliquid intimis animi sensibus efficiendum cogere: quod quidem unus Deus potest, utpote qui unus arcana pectoris consilia scrutetur ac iudicet.

Hence, a regime that governs solely or mainly by means of threats and intimidation or promises of reward provides men with no effective incentive to work for the common good. And even if it did, it would certainly be offensive to the dignity of free and rational human beings. Authority is before all else an intangible force. For this reason the appeal of rulers should be to the individual conscience, to the duty that every man has of voluntarily contributing to the common good. But since all men are equal in natural dignity, no man has the capacity to force internal compliance on another. Only God can do that, for he alone scrutinizes and judges the secret counsels of the heart.

Qui igitur personam civitatis gerunt, tunc tantum homines ex animi conscientia obligare possunt, si eorum auctoritas cum Dei auctoritate coniungitur eiusque est particeps.²

Hence, representatives of the State have no power to bind men in conscience unless their own authority is tied to God’s authority and is a participation in it.²

Quandoquidem imperii facultas ex ordine rerum incorporalium exigitur atque a Deo manat, si forte rei publicae moderatores contra eundem ordinem atque adeo contra Dei voluntatem vel leges ferunt vel aliquid praecipiant, tunc neque latae leges neque datae facultates civium animos obstringere possunt; cum “oboedire oporteat Deo magis quam hominibus” [Act 5:29]; immo vero tunc auctoritas ipsa plane corrumpitur, et foeda sequitur iniuria, docente S. Thoma Aquinate: “. . . lex humana in tantum habet rationem legis, in quantum est secundum rationem rectam; et secundum hoc manifestum est quod a lege aeterna derivatur. In quantum vero a ratione recedit, sic dicitur lex iniqua, et sic non habet rationem legis, sed magis violentiae cuiusdam.”³

Atqui ex eo quod auctoritas a Deo nascitur, inde haudquaquam concluditur, nullam in hominibus inesse facultatem eos eligendi qui civitati praesint, et rerum publicarum formam statuendi, et describendi auctoritatis exercendae rationes et terminos. Ex quo est ut, quam doctrinam exposuimus, ea cum quolibet veri nominis populari civitatis regimine congruere possit.¹

The Manner of Attaining the Common Good

Sine dubio in bono communi insita ducenda sunt, quae sunt propria cuiusvis gentis singulatim;² sed haec bonum commune omni ex parte minime definiunt. Nam

The application of this principle likewise safeguards the dignity of citizens. Their obedience to civil authorities is never an obedience paid to them as men. It is in reality an act of homage paid to God, the provident Creator of the universe, who has decreed that men’s dealings with one another be regulated in accordance with that order which he himself has established. And we men do not demean ourselves in showing due reverence to God. On the contrary, we are lifted up and ennobled in spirit,¹ for “to serve God is to reign.”²

Governmental authority, therefore, is a postulate of the moral order and derives from God. Consequently, laws and decrees passed in contravention of the moral order and, hence, of the divine will can have no binding force in conscience, since “we must obey God rather than men” [Acts 5:29]. Indeed, the passing of such laws undermines the very nature of authority and results in shameful abuse. As St. Thomas teaches, “In regard to the second proposition, we maintain that human law has the rationale of law insofar as it is in accordance with right reason, and as such it obviously derives from eternal law. A law that is at variance with reason is to that extent unjust and has no longer the rationale of law. It is rather an act of violence.”³

The fact that authority comes from God does not mean that men have no power to choose those who are to rule the State or to decide upon the type of government they want and determine the procedure and limitations of rulers in the exercise of their authority. Hence the above teaching is consonant with any genuinely democratic form of government.¹

. . . The attainment of the common good is the sole reason for the existence of civil authorities. In working for the common good, therefore, the authorities must obviously respect its nature and at the same time adjust their legislation to meet the requirements of the given situation.¹

Among the essential elements of the common good, one must certainly include the various characteristics distinctive of each individual people.² But these by no

commune bonum, propterea quod cum humana natura penitus cohaeret, idcirco totum et in integro nequit consistere nisi, spectatis boni communis intima natura et effectione, semper humanae personae ratio habeatur.³

At vero iustitiae aequitatisque rationes illud aliquando poscere possunt, ut qui res publicas gerant, plus studii civibus humilioribus navent, quippe qui ad sua vindicanda iura et ad legitima commoda sua asserenda minus ipsi valeant....²

Quae sane principia definite concludere haec sententia videtur Nostrarum Litterarum encyclicarum “Mater et Magistra”, qua in medio posuimus, commune omnium bonum “summam complecti earum vitae socialis condicionum, quibus homines suam ipsorum perfectionem possent plenius atque expeditius consequi”....³

means constitute the whole of it. For the common good, since it is intimately bound up with human nature, can never exist fully and completely unless the human person is taken into account at all times. Thus, attention must be paid to the basic nature of the common good and what it is that brings it about.³

We must add, therefore, that it is in the nature of the common good that every single citizen has the right to share in it—although in different ways, depending on his tasks, merits, and circumstances. Hence, every civil authority must strive to promote the common good in the interest of all, without favoring any individual citizen or category of citizen. As Pope Leo XIII insisted: “The civil power must not be subservient to the advantage of any one individual, or of some few persons, inasmuch as it was established for the common good of all.”¹

Nevertheless, considerations of justice and equity can at times demand that those in power pay more attention to the weaker members of society, since these are at a disadvantage when it comes to defending their own rights and asserting their legitimate interests....²

These principles are clearly contained in that passage in Our encyclical Mater et Magistra where We emphasized that the common good “must take account of all those social conditions that favor the full development of human personality”....³

It is generally accepted today that the common good is best safeguarded when personal rights and duties are guaranteed. The chief concern of civil authorities must therefore be to ensure that these rights are recognized, respected, coordinated, defended, and promoted and that each individual is enabled to perform his duties more easily. For “to safeguard the inviolable rights of the human person and to facilitate the performance of his duties is the principal duty of every public authority.”¹

Thus any government that refused to recognize human rights or acted in violation of them would not only fail in its duty; its decrees would be wholly lacking in binding force.²

Definition and the Sources of Civil Rights and Duties

Postulatur deinde, ut, verbis adhibitis ad iuris doctrinam accommodatis, uniuscuiusque civitatis publica constitutio adornetur; qua scilicet definiatur quibus modis reipublicae rectores designentur, quo vinculo hi coniungi alii cum aliis debeant, quatenam eorum sint singulae dictiones, denique qua via rationeque ad agendum ipsi obstringantur.

Postulatur denique, ut in specie iuris et officii rationes describantur, quibus cives cum reipublicae moderatoribus contineantur; utque distincte decernatur praecipuum eorumdem esse munus, civium iura et munera agnoscere, colere, invicem componere, tueri, ad processum provehere.

Probari tamen eorum placitum nequit, qui profitentur, sive e singulorum hominum, sive e quarundam societatum voluntate, tamquam a primo et unico fonte, cum civium iura et officia oriri, tum publicae constitutionis obligandi vim manare, tum postremo civitatis principum imperandi potestatem proficisci.¹

... There is every indication at the present time that these aims and ideals are giving rise to various demands concerning the juridical organization of States. The first is this: that a clear and precisely worded charter of fundamental human rights be formulated and incorporated into the State's general constitutions. 3986

Secondly, each State must have a public constitution, couched in juridical terms, laying down clear rules relating to the designation of public officials, their reciprocal relations, spheres of competence, and prescribed methods of operation.

The final demand is that relations between citizens and public authorities be described in terms of rights and duties. It must be clearly laid down that the principal function of public authorities is to recognize, respect, coordinate, safeguard, and promote citizens' rights and duties.

We must, however, reject the view that the will of the individual or the group is the primary and only source of a citizen's rights and duties and of the binding force of political constitutions and the government's authority.¹ 3987

Overcoming Cultural Inequities

Similiter contingere potest, ut inter nationes aliae aliis praestent scientiarum incrementis, humanitatis cultu ac rationum oeconomicarum progressu. At tantum abest ut ob hanc excellentiam iis liceat iniuste dominari in alias, ut eadem maiorem conferre operam debeant ad communem populorum profectum.

Ac re vera nequeunt homines natura aliis superiores esse, cum omnes pari excellant naturali dignitate. Ex quo consequitur, civiles quoque communitates nihil inter se differre, si ipsarum dignitas a natura orta spectetur; singulae enim reipublicae cuiusdam corporis similitudinem gerunt, cuius membra sunt homines. Ceterum, ut usu cognitum habemus, iis omnibus rebus, quae ad sui nominis dignitatem quoquo modo attinent, populi tangi solent, nec immerito sane, quam maxime.

... As we know from experience, men frequently differ widely in knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and wealth, but that is no valid argument in favor of a system whereby those who are in a position of superiority impose their will arbitrarily on others. On the contrary, such men have a greater share in the common responsibility to help others to reach perfection by their mutual efforts. 3988

So, too, on the international level: some nations may have attained to a superior degree of scientific, cultural, and economic development. But that does not entitle them to exert unjust political domination over other nations. It means that they have to make a greater contribution to the common cause of social progress.

The fact is that no one can be by nature superior to his fellows, since all men are equally noble in natural dignity. And consequently there are no differences at all between political communities from the point of view of natural dignity. Each State is like a body, the members of which are human beings. And, as we know from experience, nations can be highly sensitive in matters in any way touching their dignity and honor, and with good reason.

The Rights of National Minorities

Hac in re aperte profitendum est, quidquid contra has gentes agatur ad coercendum stirpis vigorem atque incrementum, iustitiae officii graviter adversari; idque multo magis, si prava huiusmodi molimina ad ipsam gentis interneccionem spectent.

Immo vero iustitiae praeceptis apprime respondet, a reipublicae moderatoribus efficacem dari operam provehendis humanis condicionibus civium stirpis numero inferioris, nominatim quod attinet ad eorum linguam, ingenii cultum, avitas consuetudines, opera et incepta in re oeconomica...¹

... In regard to the matter [of resolving conflicts by peaceful means], there has emerged that political trend (which since the nineteenth century has become widespread throughout the world and has gained in strength) as a result of which men of similar ethnic background are anxious for political autonomy and unification into a single nation. For many reasons this cannot always be effected, and consequently minority peoples are often obliged to live within the territories of a nation of a different ethnic origin. This situation gives rise to serious problems.

It is quite clear that any attempt to check the vitality and growth of these ethnic minorities is a flagrant violation of justice; the more so if such perverse efforts are aimed at their very extinction.

Indeed, the best interests of justice are served by those public authorities who do all they can to improve the human conditions of the members of these minority groups, especially in what concerns their language, culture, ancient traditions, and their economic activity and enterprise...¹

... We must bear in mind that of its very nature civil authority exists, not to confine men within the frontiers of their own nations, but primarily to protect the common good of the State, which certainly cannot be divorced from the common good of the entire human family.

The Rights of Political Exiles

Iamvero inter humanae personae iura illud etiam recensendum est, licere cuique se in eam nationem conferre, ubi aptius se posse speret sibi atque suis necessariis prospicere. Quare rei publicae moderatorum officium est alienos venientes excipere, et, quantum suae communitatis sinit non fucatum bonum, eorum proposito favere, qui forte novae societati sese velint aggregare.

... For this reason, it is not irrelevant to draw the attention of the world to the fact that these refugees [namely, those removed for political motives] are persons and all their rights as persons must be recognized. Refugees cannot lose these rights simply because they are deprived of citizenship of their own States.

And among man's personal rights we must include his right to enter a country in which he hopes to be able to provide more fittingly for himself and his dependents. It is therefore the duty of State officials to accept such immigrants and—so far as the good of their own community, rightly understood, permits—to further the aims of those who may wish to become members of a new society.

The Necessity for Maintaining a World Authority

In hodiernis igitur humanae societatis adiunctis, tum rerum [293] publicarum constitutio ac forma, tum vis, qua in universis terrarum orbis nationibus pollet publica auctoritas, bono omnium populorum communi provehendo sunt impares habendae.

Iamvero, si diligenter perpendantur hinc intima boni communis ratio, illinc publicae auctoritatis natura atque perfectio, nemo est quin videat, inter utramque rem necessariam intercedere convenientiam. Etenim moralis ordo, quemadmodum publicam auctoritatem postulat ad bonum commune in civili societate promovendum, similiter requirit, ut eadem auctoritas id reapse efficere possit. Ex quo fit, ut civilia instituta—in quibus publica auctoritas vertitur, operatur suumque finem consequitur—tali forma ac tali efficacia sint praedita, ut ad commune bonum conducere valeant viis ac rationibus, quae variis rerum momentis apte respondeant.

Cum autem hodie commune omnium gentium bonum quaestiones proponat omnes contingentes populos, cumque huiusmodi quaestiones non nisi publica quaedam auctoritas explicare possit, cuius et potestas et forma et instrumenta aequa sint amplitudine, cuiusque actio tam late pateat quantum terrarum orbis: tum exinde sequitur, ut, ipso morali ordine cogente, publica quaedam generalis auctoritas constituenda sit.

Haec autem generalis auctoritas, cuius imperium ubique terrarum vim habeat, idoneisque instrumentis ad

... No era will ever succeed in destroying the unity of the human family, for it consists of men who are all equal by virtue of their natural dignity. Hence there will always be an imperative need—born of man's very nature—to promote in sufficient measure the universal common good; the good, that is, of the whole human family....

[In our day, on the one hand,] the universal common good gives rise to problems of the utmost gravity, complexity, and urgency—especially as regards the preservation of the security and peace of the whole world. On the other hand, the rulers of individual nations, being all on an equal footing, largely fail in their efforts to achieve this, however much they multiply their meetings and their endeavors to discover more fitting instruments of justice. And this is no reflection on their sincerity and enterprise. It is merely that their authority is not sufficiently influential.

We are thus driven to the conclusion that the shape and structure of political life in the modern world and the influence exercised by public authority in all the nations of the world are unequal to the task of promoting the common good of all peoples.

Now, if one considers carefully the inner significance of the common good, on the one hand, and the nature and function of public authority, on the other, one cannot fail to see that there is an intrinsic connection between them. Public authority, as the means of promoting the common good in civil society, is a postulate of the moral order. But the moral order likewise requires that this authority be effective in attaining its end. Hence the civil institutions in which such authority resides, becomes operative, and promotes its ends are endowed with a certain kind of structure and efficacy: a structure and efficacy that make such institutions capable of realizing the common good by ways and means adequate to the changing historical conditions.

Today the universal common good presents us with problems that are worldwide in their dimensions; problems, therefore, that cannot be solved except by a public authority with power, organization, and means coextensive with these problems and with a worldwide sphere of activity. Consequently, the moral order itself demands the establishment of some such general form of public authority.

But this general authority equipped with worldwide power and adequate means for achieving the universal commune bonum universale conducat, omnium utique populorum consensione condenda est, non vero vi imponenda. Quod ex eo nascitur, quod, cum huiusmodi auctoritas efficaciter munere suo perfungi debeat, idcirco aequabilis in omnes, a studio partium prorsus aliena, atque ad commune omnium gentium bonum intenta sit oportet.

Scilicet eiusdem auctoritatis universalis non est neque coercere neque ad se revocare acta quae sunt publicae potestatis propria aliarum civitatum. Ex contrario ea contendat opus est, ut in toto terrarum orbe eiusmodi rerum status condatur, in quo non solum publica cuiusque nationis potestas, sed [295] etiam singuli homines et interpositi coetus possint tutius sua munera obire, sua praestare officia, sua iura vindicare.¹

The Collaboration of Catholics with Men of Other Faiths in Social Affairs

common good cannot be imposed by force. It must be set up with the consent of all nations. If its work is to be effective, it must operate with fairness, absolute impartiality, and with dedication to the common good of all peoples.

... The common good of individual States is something that cannot be determined without reference to the human person, and the same is true of the common good of all States taken together. Hence the public authority of the world community must likewise have as its special aim the recognition, respect, safeguarding, and promotion of the rights of the human person. This can be done by direct action, if need be, or by the creation throughout the world of the sort of conditions in which rulers of individual States can more easily carry out their specific functions.

The same principle of subsidiarity that governs the relations between public authorities and individuals, families, and intermediate societies in a single State must also apply to the relations between the public authority of the world community and the public authorities of each political community. The special function of this universal authority must be to evaluate and find a solution to economic, social, political, and cultural problems that affect the universal common good. These are problems that, because of their extreme gravity, vastness, and urgency, must be considered too difficult for the rulers of individual States to solve with any degree of success.

But it is no part of the duty of universal authority to limit the sphere of action of the public authority of individual States or to arrogate any of their functions to itself. On the contrary, its essential purpose is to create world conditions in which the public authorities of each nation, its citizens, and intermediate groups can carry out their tasks, fulfill their duties, and claim their rights with greater security.¹

... [The realization of these doctrinal principles] frequently involves extensive cooperation between Catholics and those Christians who are separated from this Apostolic See. It even involves the cooperation of Catholics with men who may not be Christians but who nevertheless are reasonable men and men of natural moral integrity. "In such circumstances they must, of course, bear themselves as Catholics and do nothing

consilia descendant, e quibus aut religionis aut morum integritas aliquid detrimenti capiat. Pariter tamen se tales praebeant, qui et aliorum sententiam aequa perpendant benignitate, et omnia ad utilitates suas non referant, et parati sint ad ea cum fide coniunctisque viribus efficienda, quae vel suapte natura sint bona vel ad bonum conducibilia.”¹

Omnino errores ab iis qui opinione labuntur semper distinguere aequum est, quamvis de hominibus agatur, qui aut errore veritatis aut impari rerum cognitione capti sint, vel ad sacra vel ad optimam vitae actionem attinentium. Nam homo ad errorem lapsus iam non humanitate instructus esse desinit, neque suam umquam personae dignitatem amittit, cuius nempe ratio est semper habenda.

Praeterea in hominis natura numquam facultas perit et refragendi erroribus et viam ad veritatem quaerendi. Neque umquam hac in re providentissimi Dei auxilia hominem deficiunt. Ex quo fieri potest, ut, si quis hodie [300] vel fidei perspicuitate egeat vel in falsas discesserit sententias, possit postmodum, Dei collustratus lumine, veritatem amplecti. . . .

Inde deinceps par omnino est, a falsis philosophorum placitis de natura, de origine, de fine mundi et hominis plane incepta distinguere, quae sive res oeconomicas et sociales, sive ingenii cultum, sive civitatis temperationem contingunt, etiamsi incepta hoc genus ab illis placitis originem et incitamentum ducant; quoniam, dum formula disciplinae, postquam definite descripta est, iam non mutatur, incepta illa utpote quae in mutabilibus rerum condicionibus versentur, his non possunt quin sint admodum sane obnoxia. De reliquo quis eat infitias, in hisce inceptis, quatenus videlicet cum rectae rationis praeceptis congruant, et iustas hominis appetitiones referant, posse aliquid boni et probandi inesse?¹

Has ob causas cadere aliquando potest, ut quae congressiones de rerum usu antehac ad nullam partem utiles visae sint, nunc vero fructuosae aut iam re vera sint aut futurae prospiciantur. Sed diiudicare utrum eo perventum sit necne, . . . una docere potest prudentia, virtutum cunctarum moderatrix. . . .

Quare si res catholicorum hominum agitur, de huius exempli causis decernere ad eos viros potissimum pertinet, qui in civium communitate inque harum rerum to compromise religion and morality. Yet at the same time, they should show themselves animated by a spirit of understanding and unselfishness, ready to cooperate loyally in achieving objects that are good in themselves or conducive to good.”¹

It is always perfectly justifiable to distinguish between error as such and the person who falls into error—even in the case of men who err regarding the truth or are led astray as a result of their inadequate knowledge in matters either of religion or of the highest ethical standards. A man who has fallen into error does not cease to be a man. He never forfeits his personal dignity; and that is something that must always be taken into account.

Besides, there exists in man’s very nature an undying capacity to break through the barriers of error and seek the road to truth. God, in his great providence, is ever present with his aid. Today, maybe, a man lacks faith and turns aside into error; tomorrow, perhaps, illumined by God’s light, he may indeed embrace the truth. . . .

Again it is perfectly legitimate to make a clear distinction between a false philosophy of the nature, origin, and purpose of men and the world and economic, social, cultural, and political undertakings, even when such undertakings draw their origin and inspiration from that philosophy. True, the philosophic formula does not change once it has been set down in precise terms, but the undertakings clearly cannot avoid being influenced to a certain extent by the changing conditions in which they have to operate. Besides, who can deny the possible existence of good and commendable elements in these undertakings, elements that do indeed conform to the dictates of right reason and are an expression of man’s lawful aspirations?¹

It may sometimes happen, therefore, that meetings arranged for some practical end—though hitherto they were thought to be altogether useless—may in fact be fruitful at the present time or at least offer prospects of success. But whether or not the moment for such cooperation has arrived, . . . these are matters for prudence to decide, prudence, the guide of all the virtues. . . .

As far as Catholics are concerned, the decision rests primarily with those who take a leading part in the life of the community and in these specific fields. They must,

Second VATICAN Council (Twenty-First Ecumenical) October 11, 1962–December 8, 1965

Pius XI and his successor, Pius XII, had already undertaken preparations for the resumption of the First Vatican Council. On January 25, 1959, John XXIII informed seventeen cardinals of his intention to convene an ecumenical council. With the apostolic constitution Humanae salutis of December 25, 1961 (AAS 54 [1962]: 7–10 / CoDeDe 839–53), he announced the convocation for October 1962. The motu proprio Consilium of February 2, 1962 (AAS 54 [1962]: 65f.), established the opening of the council for October 11, 1962. Although the council itself did not define any dogma in matters of faith or morals, its documents have a dogmatic character nonetheless (cf. the Notificationes of November 16, 1964: AAS 57 [1965]: 72; *4350–4352). This is self-evident not only for the Dogmatic Constitution on the Church Lumen gentium (*4101–4179) and on Revelation Dei verbum (*4201–4235), but also for some parts of the remaining documents. Vatican II was a pastoral council that wished to lead to an aggiornamento (renewal) of the life of the Church. The program, formulated by Pope John XXIII in his first encyclical, Ad Petri Cathedram of June 29, 1959 (AAS 51 [1959]: 497–531), and by the council itself at the beginning of the constitution Sacrosanctum concilium (cf. * 4001), was: the deepening of the Christian life, the adaptation of ecclesiastical institutions to the needs of the times, the promotion of Christian unity, and the strengthening of the missionary vigor of the Church. In nine sessions, sixteen documents were issued (four constitutions, nine decrees, and three declarations).

Even before the opening of the council, there had been a worldwide endeavor toward reform of the Catholic liturgy. In the encyclical Mediator Dei of November 20, 1947 (*3840–3855), Pius XII had taken note of the concerns of the liturgical movement and had initiated a reform of the divine office and the Easter liturgy (cf. A. Bugnini, Documenta pontificia ad instaurationem liturgicam spectantia 1903–1953 [Rome, 1953], 1953–1959 [Rome, 1959]). The Instructio de musica sacra of September 3, 1958 (AAS 50 [1958]: 630–63) encouraged “active participation” by the faithful at the liturgy. The discussion of the schema drafted by the preparatory committee began on October 22, 1962. On March 4, 1964, Paul VI delegated the implementation of the constitution and of the liturgical reform connected with it to the “Consilium ad exsequendam Constitutionem de sacra Liturgia” (cf. AAS 56 [1964]: 993–96).

[97] 1. Sacrosanctum Concilium, cum sibi proponat vitam christianam inter fideles in dies augere; eas institutiones quae mutationibus obnoxiae sunt, ad nostrae aetatis necessitates melius accommodare; quidquid ad unionem omnium in Christum credentium conferre potest, fovere; et quidquid ad omnes in sinum Ecclesiae vocandos conducit, roborare; suum esse arbitratur peculiari ratione etiam instaurandam atque fovendam Liturgiam curare.

2. Liturgia enim, per quam, maxime in divino Eucharistiae Sacrificio, “opus nostrae Redemptionis exercetur”¹ summe eo confert ut fideles vivendo expriment et aliis manifestent mysterium Christi et genuinam [98] verae Ecclesiae naturam, cuius proprium est esse humanam simul ac divinam, visibilem invisibilibus praeditam, actione ferventem et contemplationi vacantem, in mundo praesentem et tamen peregrinam; et ita quidem ut in ea quod humanum est ordinetur ad divinum eique subordinetur, quod visibile ad invisibile, quod actionis ad contemplationem, et quod praesens ad futuram civitatem quam inquirimus.²

Unde cum Liturgia eos qui intus sunt cotidie aedificet in templum sanctum in Domino, in habitaculum Dei in Spiritu,³ usque ad mensuram aetatis plenitudinis Christi,⁴ miro modo simul vires eorum ad praedicandum Christum roborat, et sic Ecclesiam iis qui sunt foris ostendit ut signum levatum in nationes,⁵ sub quo filii Dei dispersi congregentur in unum⁶ quousque unum ovile fiat et unus pastor.⁷

3. Quare Sacrosanctum Concilium, de fovenda atque instauranda Liturgia quae sequuntur principia censet in mentem revocanda et practicas normas statuendas esse.

Inter haec principia et normas nonnulla habentur quae tum ad ritum romanum tum ad omnes alios ritus applicari possunt ac debent, licet normae practicae quae sequuntur solum ritum romanum spectare intellegendae sint, nisi agatur de iis quae ex ipsa rei natura alios quoque ritus afficiant.

INTRODUCTION

1. This sacred council has several aims in view: it desires to impart an ever-increasing vigor to the Christian life of the faithful; to adapt more suitably to the needs of our own times those institutions that are subject to change; to foster whatever can promote union among all who believe in Christ; to strengthen whatever can help to call the whole of mankind into the household of the Church. The council therefore sees particularly cogent reasons for undertaking the reform and promotion of the liturgy. 4001

2. For the liturgy, “through which the work of our redemption is accomplished”,¹ most of all in the divine sacrifice of the Eucharist, is the outstanding means whereby the faithful may express in their lives, and manifest to others, the mystery of Christ and the real nature of the true Church. It is of the essence of the Church that she be both human and divine, visible and yet endowed with the invisible, eager to act and yet intent on contemplation, present in this world and yet not at home in it; and she is all these things in such wise that in her the human is directed and subordinated to the divine, the visible likewise to the invisible, action to contemplation, and this present world to that city yet to come, which we seek.² 4002

While the liturgy daily builds up those who are within into a holy temple of the Lord, into a dwelling place for God in the Spirit,³ to the mature measure of the fullness of Christ,⁴ at the same time it marvelously strengthens their power to preach Christ and thus shows forth the Church to those who are outside as a sign lifted up among the nations⁵ under which the scattered children of God may be gathered together,⁶ until there is one sheepfold and one shepherd.⁷

3. Wherefore the sacred council judges that the following principles concerning the promotion and reform of the liturgy should be called to mind and that practical norms should be established. 4003

Among these principles and norms there are some that can and should be applied both to the Roman rite and also to all the other rites. The practical norms that follow, however, should be taken as applying only to the Roman rite, except for those that, in the very nature of things, affect other rites as well.

4004 4. Traditioni denique fideliter obsequens, Sacrosanctum Concilium declarat Sanctam Matrem Ecclesiam omnes ritus legitime agnitos aequo iure atque honore habere, eosque in posterum servari et omnimode foviri velle, atque optat ut, ubi opus sit, caute ex integro ad mentem sanae traditionis recognoscantur et novo vigore, pro hodiernis adiunctis et necessitatibus, donentur. CAPUT I

DE PRINCIPIIS GENERALIBUS AD SACRAM LITURGIAM
INSTAURANDAM ATQUE FOVENDAM*I. De sacrae Liturgiae natura eiusque momento in vita ecclesiae*

Hoc autem humanae Redemptionis et perfectae Dei glorificationis opus, cui divina magnalia in populo Veteris Testamenti praeluserant, adimplevit Christus Dominus, praecipue per suae beatae Passionis, ab inferis Resurrectionis et gloriosae Ascensionis paschale mysterium, quo “mortem nostram moriendo destruxit, et vitam resurgendo reparavit.”⁵ Nam de latere Christi in cruce dormientis ortum est totius Ecclesiae mirabile sacramentum.⁶ [100]

4006 6. Ideoque, sicut Christus missus est a Patre, ita et ipse Apostolos, repletos Spiritu Sancto, misit, non solum ut, praedicantes Evangelium omni creaturae,¹ annuntiarent Filium Dei morte sua et resurrectione nos a potestate satanae² et a morte liberasse et in regnum Patris transtulisse, sed etiam ut, quod annuntiabant, opus salutis per Sacrificium et Sacramenta, circa quae tota vita

4. Lastly, in faithful obedience to tradition, the sacred council declares that Holy Mother Church holds all lawfully acknowledged rites to be of equal right and dignity; that she wishes to preserve them in the future and to foster them in every way. The council also desires that, where necessary, the rites be examined carefully in the light of sound tradition and that they be given new vigor to meet the circumstances and needs of modern times.

CHAPTER I

GENERAL PRINCIPLES FOR THE RESTORATION AND PROMOTION OF THE SACRED LITURGY*I. The Nature of the Sacred Liturgy and Its Importance in the Church's Life*

5. God, who “wills that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth” [1 Tim 2:4], “who in many and various ways spoke in times past to the fathers by the prophets” [Heb 1:1], when the fullness of time had come sent his Son, the Word made flesh, anointed by the Holy Spirit, to preach the gospel to the poor, to heal the brokenhearted,¹ to be a “bodily and spiritual medicine”,² the Mediator between God and man.³ For his humanity, united with the person of the Word, was the instrument of our salvation. Therefore in Christ “the perfect achievement of our reconciliation came forth, and the fullness of divine worship was given to us.”⁴

The wonderful works of God among the people of the Old Testament were but a prelude to the work of Christ the Lord in redeeming mankind and giving perfect glory to God. He achieved his task principally by the paschal mystery of his blessed Passion, Resurrection from the dead, and glorious Ascension, whereby “dying, he destroyed our death and, rising, he restored our life.”⁵ For it was from the side of Christ as he slept the sleep of death upon the Cross that there came forth “the wondrous sacrament of the whole Church”.⁶

6. Just as Christ was sent by the Father, so also he sent the apostles, filled with the Holy Spirit. This he did that, by preaching the gospel to every creature,¹ they might proclaim that the Son of God, by his death and Resurrection, had freed us from the power of Satan² and from death and brought us into the kingdom of his Father. His purpose also was that they might accomplish liturgica vertit, exercerent. Sic per Baptismum homines paschali Christi mysterio inseruntur: commortui, consepulti, conresuscitati,³ spiritum accipiunt adoptionis filiorum, “in quo clamamus: Abba, Pater” [Rm 8:15], et ita fiunt veri adoratores, quos Pater quaerit.⁴

Similiter quotiescumque dominicam cenam manducant, mortem Domini annuntiant donec veniat.⁵ Idcirco, ipso die Pentecostes, quo Ecclesia mundo apparuit, “qui receperunt sermonem” Petri “baptizati sunt”. Et erant “perseverantes in doctrina Apostolorum et communicatione fractionis panis et orationibus ... collaudantes Deum et habentes gratiam ad omnem plebem” [Act 2:41-47].

Numquam exinde omisit Ecclesia quin in unum conveniret ad paschale mysterium celebrandum: legendo ea “in omnibus Scripturis quae de ipso erant” [Lc 24:27], Eucharistiam celebrando in qua “mortis eius victoria et triumphus repraesentatur”,⁶ et simul gratias agendo “Deo super inenarrabili dono” [2 Cor 9:15] in Christo Iesu, “in laudem gloriae eius” [Eph 1:12], per virtutem Spiritus Sancti.

7. Ad tantum vero opus perficiendum, Christus Ecclesiae suae semper adest, praesertim in actionibus liturgicis. Praesens adest in Missae Sacrificio cum in ministri persona, “idem nunc offerens sacerdotum ministerio, qui seipsum tunc in cruce obtulit”,¹ tum maxime sub speciebus [101] eucharisticis. Praesens adest virtute sua in Sacramentis, ita ut cum aliquis baptizat, Christus ipse baptizat.² Praesens adest in verbo suo, siquidem ipse loquitur dum sacrae Scripturae in Ecclesia leguntur. Praesens adest denique dum supplicat et psallit Ecclesia, ipse qui promisit: “Ubi sunt duo vel tres congregati in nomine meo, ibi sum in medio eorum” [Mt 18:20].

Reapse tanto in opere, quo Deus perfecte glorificatur, et homines sanctificantur, Christus Ecclesiam, sponsam suam dilectissimam, sibi semper consociat, quae Dominum suum invocat et per ipsum Aeterno Patri cultum tribuit.

Merito igitur Liturgia habetur veluti Iesu Christi sacerdotalis muneris exercitatio, in qua per signa

the work of salvation that they had proclaimed by means of sacrifice and sacraments, around which the entire liturgical life revolves. Thus by baptism men are plunged into the paschal mystery of Christ: they die with him, are buried with him, and rise with him;³ they receive the spirit of adoption as sons “in which we cry: Abba, Father” [Rom 8:15] and thus become true adorers whom the Father seeks.⁴

In like manner, as often as they eat the supper of the Lord, they proclaim the death of the Lord until he comes.⁵ For that reason, on the very day of Pentecost, when the Church appeared before the world, “those who received the word” of Peter “were baptized”. And “they continued steadfastly in the teaching of the apostles and in the communion of the breaking of bread and in prayers, ... praising God and being in favor with all the people” [Acts 2:41-47].

From that time onward, the Church has never failed to come together to celebrate the paschal mystery: reading those things “which were in all the scriptures concerning him” [Lk 24:27], celebrating the Eucharist in which “the victory and triumph of his death are again made present”,⁶ and at the same time giving thanks “to God for his unspeakable gift” [2 Cor 9:15] in Christ Jesus, “in praise of his glory” [Eph 1:12], through the power of the Holy Spirit.

7. To accomplish so great a work, Christ is always present in his Church, especially in her liturgical celebrations. He is present in the sacrifice of the Mass, not only in the person of his minister, “the same now offering, through the ministry of priests, who formerly offered himself on the Cross”,¹ but especially under the eucharistic species. By his power he is present in the sacraments, so that when a man baptizes it is really Christ himself who baptizes.² He is present in his Word, since it is he himself who speaks when the Holy Scriptures are read in the Church. He is present, lastly, when the Church prays and sings, for he promised: “Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them” [Mt 18:20].

Christ, indeed, always associates the Church with himself in this great work wherein God is perfectly glorified and men are sanctified. The Church is his beloved Bride who calls to her Lord and, through him, offers worship to the Eternal Father.

Rightly, then, the liturgy is considered as an exercise of the priestly office of Jesus Christ. In the liturgy the sensibilia significatur et modo singulis proprio efficitur sanctificatio hominis, et a mystico Iesu Christi Corpore, Capite nempe eiusque membris, integer cultus publicus exercetur.

Proinde omnis liturgica celebratio, utpote opus Christi sacerdotis, eiusque Corporis, quod est Ecclesia, est actio sacra praeclenter, cuius efficacitatem eodem titulo eodemque gradu nulla alia actio Ecclesiae adaequat.

4009 9. Sacra Liturgia non explet totam actionem Ecclesiae; nam antequam homines ad Liturgiam accedere possint, necesse est ut ad fidem [102] et conversionem vocentur: "Quomodo invocabunt in quem non crediderunt? Aut quomodo credent ei quem non audierunt? Quomodo autem audient sine praedicante? Quomodo vero praedicabunt nisi mittantur?" [Rm 10:14s].

Quare Ecclesia non credentibus praeconium salutis annuntiat, ut omnes homines solum Deum verum et quem misit Iesum Christum cognoscant et a viis suis convertantur, paenitentiam agentes.¹ Credentibus vero semper fidem et paenitentiam praedicare debet, eos praeterea debet ad Sacramenta disponere, docere servare omnia quaecumque mandavit Christus,² et allicere ad omnia opera caritatis, pietatis et apostolatus, quibus operibus manifestum fiat christifideles de hoc mundo quidem non esse, sed tamen esse lucem mundi eosdemque Patrem glorificare coram hominibus.

4010 10. Attamen Liturgia est culmen ad quod actio Ecclesiae tendit et simul fons unde omnis eius virtus emanat. Nam labores apostolici ad id ordinantur ut omnes, per fidem et Baptismum filii Dei facti, in unum conveniant, in medio Ecclesiae Deum laudent, Sacrificium participant et cenam dominicam manducant.

sanctification of the man is signified by signs perceptible to the senses and is effected in a way that corresponds with each of these signs; in the liturgy the whole public worship is performed by the Mystical Body of Jesus Christ, that is, by the Head and his members.

From this it follows that every liturgical celebration, because it is an action of Christ the priest and of his Body which is the Church, is a sacred action surpassing all others; no other action of the Church can equal its efficacy by the same title and to the same degree.

8. In the earthly liturgy we take part in a foretaste of that heavenly liturgy which is celebrated in the holy city of Jerusalem toward which we journey as pilgrims, where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God, a minister of the holies and of the true tabernacle;¹ we sing a hymn to the Lord's glory with all the warriors of the heavenly army; venerating the memory of the saints, we hope for some part and fellowship with them; we eagerly await the Savior, our Lord Jesus Christ, until he, our life, shall appear and we, too, will appear with him in glory.²

9. The sacred liturgy does not exhaust the entire activity of the Church. Before men can come to the liturgy, they must be called to faith and to conversion: "How then are they to call upon him in whom they have not yet believed? But how are they to believe him whom they have not heard? And how are they to hear if no one preaches? And how are men to preach unless they be sent?" [Rom 10:14-15].

Therefore, the Church announces the good tidings of salvation to those who do not believe, so that all men may know the true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent and may be converted from their ways, doing penance.¹ To believers also the Church must ever preach faith and penance, she must prepare them for the sacraments, teach them to observe all that Christ has commanded,² and invite them to all the works of charity, piety, and the apostolate. For all these works make it clear that Christ's faithful, though not of this world, are to be the light of the world and to glorify the Father before men.

10. Nevertheless, the liturgy is the summit toward which the activity of the Church is directed; at the same time it is the font from which all her power flows. For the aim and object of apostolic works is that all who are made sons of God by faith and baptism should come together to praise God in the midst of his Church, to take part in the sacrifice, and to eat the Lord's supper.

Vicissim, ipsa Liturgia impellit fideles ut “sacramentis paschalibus” satiati fiant “pietate concordēs”;¹ orat ut “vivendo teneant quod fide perceperunt”;² renovatio vero foederis Domini cum hominibus in Eucharistia fideles in urgentem caritatem Christi trahit et accendit. Ex Liturgia ergo, praecipue ex Eucharistia, ut e fonte, gratia in nos derivatur et maxima cum efficacia obtinetur illa in Christo hominum sanctificatio et Dei glorificatio, ad quam, uti ad finem, omnia alia Ecclesiae opera contendunt.

11. Ut haec tamen plena efficacia habeatur, necessarium est ut fideles cum recti animi dispositionibus ad sacram Liturgiam accedant, [103] mentem suam voci accommodent, et supernae gratiae cooperentur, ne eam in vacuum recipiant.¹ Ideo sacris pastoribus advigilandum est ut in actione liturgica non solum observentur leges ad validam et licitam celebrationem, sed ut fideles scienter, actuose et fructuose eandem participant.

13. Pia populi christiani exercitia, dummodo legibus et normis Ecclesiae conformia sint, valde commendantur, praesertim cum de mandato Apostolicae Sedis fiunt.

Speciali quoque dignitate gaudent sacra Ecclesiarum particularium exercitia, quae de mandato Episcoporum celebrantur, secundum consuetudines aut libros legitime approbatos.

The liturgy in its turn moves the faithful, filled with “the paschal sacraments”, to be “one in holiness”;¹ it prays that “they may hold fast in their lives to what they have grasped by their faith”;² the renewal in the Eucharist of the covenant between the Lord and man draws the faithful into the compelling love of Christ and sets them on fire. From the liturgy, therefore, and especially from the Eucharist, as from a font, grace is poured forth upon us; and the sanctification of men in Christ and the glorification of God, to which all other activities of the Church are directed as toward their end, is achieved in the most efficacious possible way.

11. But in order that the liturgy may be able to produce its full effects, it is necessary that the faithful come to it with proper dispositions, that their minds should be attuned to their voices, and that they should cooperate with divine grace lest they receive it in vain.¹ Pastors of souls must therefore realize that, when the liturgy is celebrated, something more is required than the mere observation of the laws governing valid and licit celebration; it is their duty also to ensure that the faithful take part fully aware of what they are doing, actively engaged in the rite, and enriched by its effects.

12. The spiritual life, however, is not limited solely to participation in the liturgy. The Christian is, indeed, called to pray with his brethren, but he must also enter into his chamber to pray to the Father in secret;¹ yet more, according to the teaching of the apostle, he should pray without ceasing.² We learn from the same apostle that we must always bear about in our body the dying of Jesus, so that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in our bodily frame.³ This is why we ask the Lord in the sacrifice of the Mass that, “receiving the offering of the spiritual victim”, he may fashion us for himself “as an eternal gift”.⁴

13. Popular devotions of the Christian people are to be highly commended, provided they accord with the laws and norms of the Church, above all when they are ordered by the Apostolic See.

Devotions proper to individual Churches also have a special dignity if they are undertaken by mandate of the bishops according to customs or books lawfully approved.

Ita vero, ratione habita temporum liturgicorum, eadem exercitia ordinentur oportet, ut sacrae Liturgiae congruant, ab ea quodammodo deriventur, ad eam populum manuducant, utpote quae natura sua iisdem longe antecellat. [104]

II. De liturgica institutione et de actuosa participatione prosequendis

4014 14. Valde cupit Mater Ecclesia ut fideles universi ad plenam illam, consciam atque actuosam liturgicarum celebrationum participationem ducantur, quae ab ipsius Liturgiae natura postulatur et ad quam populus christianus, “genus electum, regale sacerdotium, gens sancta, populus acquisitionis” [1 Pt 2:9; cf. 2:4s], vi Baptismatis ius habet et officium.

Quae totius populi plena et actuosa participatio, in instauranda et fovenda sacra Liturgia, summopere est attendenda: est enim primus, isque necessarius fons, e quo spiritum vere christianum fideles hauriant; et ideo in tota actione pastorali, per debitam institutionem, ab animarum pastoribus est sedulo adpetenda.

Sed quia, ut hoc evenire possit, nulla spes effulget nisi prius ipsi animarum pastores spiritu et virtute Liturgiae penitus imbuantur in eaque efficiantur magistri, ideo perneceesse est ut institutioni liturgicae cleri apprime consulatur. Quapropter Sacrosanctum Concilium ea quae sequuntur statuere decrevit.

4015 15. Magistri, qui sacrae Liturgiae disciplinae in seminariis, studiorum domibus religiosis et facultatibus theologicis docendae praeficiuntur, ad munus suum in institutis ad hoc speciali cura destinatis probe instituendi sunt.

4016 16. Disciplina de sacra Liturgia in seminariis et studiorum domibus religiosis inter disciplinas necessarias et potiores, in facultatibus autem theologicis inter disciplinas principales est habenda, et sub aspectu cum theologico et historico, tum spirituali, pastorali et iuridico tradenda. Curent insuper aliarum disciplinarum magistri, imprimis theologiae dogmaticae, sacrae Scripturae, theologiae spiritualis et pastoralis ita, ex intrinsecis exigentiis proprii uniuscuiusque obiecti, mysterium Christi [105] et historiam salutis excolere, ut exinde earum connexio cum Liturgia et unitas sacerdotalis institutionis aperte clarescant.

4017 17. Clerici, in seminariis domibusque religiosis, formationem vitae spiritualis liturgicam acquirant, cum apta manuductione qua sacros ritus intellegere

But these devotions should be so drawn up that they harmonize with the liturgical seasons, accord with the sacred liturgy, are in some fashion derived from it, and lead the people to it, since, in fact, the liturgy by its very nature far surpasses any of them.

II. The Promotion of Liturgical Instruction and Active Participation

14. Mother Church earnestly desires that all the faithful should be led to that fully conscious and active participation in liturgical celebrations which is demanded by the very nature of the liturgy. Such participation by the Christian people as “a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a redeemed people” [1 Pet 2:9; cf. 2:4–5], is their right and duty by reason of their baptism.

In the restoration and promotion of the sacred liturgy, this full and active participation by all the people is the aim to be considered before all else; for it is the primary and indispensable source from which the faithful are to derive the true Christian spirit; and therefore pastors of souls must zealously strive to achieve it, by means of the necessary instruction, in all their pastoral work.

Yet it would be futile to entertain any hopes of realizing this unless the pastors themselves, in the first place, become thoroughly imbued with the spirit and power of the liturgy and undertake to give instruction about it. A prime need, therefore, is that attention be directed, first of all, to the liturgical instruction of the clergy. Wherefore the sacred council has decided to enact as follows:

15. Professors who are appointed to teach liturgy in seminaries, religious houses of study, and theological faculties must be properly trained for their work in institutes that specialize in this subject.

16. The study of sacred liturgy is to be ranked among the compulsory and major courses in seminaries and religious houses of studies; in theological faculties, it is to rank among the principal courses. It is to be taught under its theological, historical, spiritual, pastoral, and juridical aspects. Moreover, other professors, while striving to expound the mystery of Christ and the history of salvation from the angle proper to each of their own subjects, must nevertheless do so in a way that will clearly bring out the connection between their subjects and the liturgy, as also the unity that underlies all priestly training. This consideration is especially important for professors of dogmatic, spiritual, and pastoral theology and for those of Holy Scripture.

17. In seminaries and houses of religious, clerics shall be given a liturgical formation in their spiritual life. For this they will need proper direction, so that they may et toto animo participare queant, tum ipsa sacrorum mysteriorum celebratione, necnon aliis pietatis exercitiis spiritu sacrae Liturgiae imbutis; pariter observantiam legum liturgicarum addiscant, ita ut vita in seminariis et religiosorum institutis liturgico spiritu penitus informetur.

18. Sacerdotes, sive saeculares sive religiosi, in vinea Domini iam operantes, omnibus mediis opportunis iuventur ut plenius semper quae in functionibus sacris agunt intellegant, vitam liturgicam vivant, eamque cum fidelibus sibi commissis communicent.

19. Liturgicam institutionem necnon actuosam fidelium participationem, internam et externam, iuxta ipsorum aetatem, condicionem, vitae genus et religiosae culturae gradum, animarum pastores sedulo ac patienter prosequantur, unum e praecipuis fidelis mysteriorum Dei dispensatoris muneribus absolventes; et gregem suum hac in re non verbo tantum, sed etiam exemplo ducant.

20. Transmissiones actionum sacrarum ope radio-phonica et televisifica, praesertim si agatur de Sacro faciendo, discrete ac decore fiant, ductu et sponsione personae idoneae, ad hoc munus ab Episcopis destinatae.

III. De sacrae liturgiae instauratione

21. Pia Mater Ecclesia, ut populus christianus in sacra Liturgia abundantiam gratiarum securius assequatur, ipsius Liturgiae generalem instaurationem sedulo curare cupit. Nam Liturgia constat parte immutabili, utpote divinitus instituta, et partibus mutationi obnoxiiis, quae [106] decursu temporum variare possunt vel etiam debent, si in eas forte irreperint quae minus bene ipsius Liturgiae intimae naturae respondeant, vel minus aptae factae sint.

Qua quidem instauratione, textus et ritus ita ordinari oportet, ut sancta, quae significant, clarius expriment, eaque populus christianus, in quantum fieri potest, facile percipere atque plena, actiosa et communitatis propria celebratione participare possit.

Quare Sacrosanctum Concilium generaliores has normas statuit.

A. Normae generales

22. § 1. Sacrae Liturgiae moderatio ab Ecclesiae auctoritate unice pendet: quae quidem est apud Apostolicam Sedem et, ad normam iuris, apud Episcopum.

be able to understand the sacred rites and take part in them wholeheartedly; and they will also need personally to celebrate the sacred mysteries as well as popular devotions that are imbued with the spirit of the liturgy. In addition they must learn how to observe the liturgical laws, so that life in seminaries and houses of religious may be thoroughly influenced by the spirit of the liturgy.

18. Priests, both secular and religious, who are already working in the Lord's vineyard are to be helped by every suitable means to understand ever more fully what it is that they are doing when they perform sacred rites; they are to be aided to live the liturgical life and to share it with the faithful entrusted to their care. 4018

19. With zeal and patience, pastors of souls must promote the liturgical instruction of the faithful and also their active participation in the liturgy both internally and externally, taking into account their age and condition, their way of life and standard of religious culture. By so doing, pastors will be fulfilling one of the chief duties of a faithful dispenser of the mysteries of God; and in this matter they must lead their flock not only in word but also by example. 4019

20. Transmissions of the sacred rites by radio and television shall be done with discretion and dignity, under the leadership and direction of a suitable person appointed for this office by the bishops. This is especially important when the service to be broadcast is the Mass. 4020

III. The Reform of the Sacred Liturgy

21. In order that the Christian people may more certainly derive an abundance of graces from the sacred liturgy, Holy Mother Church desires to undertake with great care a general restoration of the liturgy itself. For the liturgy is made up of immutable elements divinely instituted and of elements subject to change. These not only may but ought to be changed with the passage of time if they have suffered from the intrusion of anything out of harmony with the inner nature of the liturgy or have become unsuited to it. 4021

In this restoration, both texts and rites should be drawn up so that they express more clearly the holy things they signify; the Christian people, so far as possible, should be enabled to understand them with ease and to take part in them fully, actively, and as befits a community.

Wherefore, the sacred council establishes the following general norms:

A. General Norms

22. § 1. Regulation of the sacred liturgy depends solely on the authority of the Church, that is, on the Apostolic See and, as laws may determine, on the bishop. 4022

§ 2. Ex potestate a iure concessa, rei liturgicae moderatio inter limites statutos pertinet quoque ad competentes varii generis territoriales Episcoporum coetus legitime constitutos.

§ 3. Quapropter nemo omnino alius, etiamsi sit sacerdos, quidquam proprio Marte in Liturgia addat, demat, aut mutet.

Caveatur etiam, in quantum fieri potest, ne notabiles differentiae rituum inter finitimas regiones habeantur.

4024 24. Maximum est sacrae Scripturae momentum in Liturgia celebranda. Ex ea enim lectiones leguntur et in homilia explicantur, psalmi canuntur, atque ex eius afflatu instinctuque preces, orationes et carmina [107] liturgica effusa sunt, et ex ea significationem suam actiones et signa accipiunt. Unde ad procurandam sacrae Liturgiae instaurationem, progressum et aptationem, oportet ut promoveatur ille suavis et vivus sacrae Scripturae affectus, quem testatur venerabilis rituum cum orientalium tum occidentalium traditio.

4025 25. Libri liturgici quam primum recognoscantur, peritis adhibitis et Episcopis consultis ex diversis orbis regionibus.

B. Normae ex indole Liturgiae utpote actionis hierarchicae et communitatis propriae

4026 26. Actiones liturgicae non sunt actiones privatae, sed celebrationes Ecclesiae, quae est "unitatis sacramentum", scilicet plebs sancta sub Episcopis adunata et ordinata.¹

Quare ad universum Corpus Ecclesiae pertinent illudque manifestant et afficiunt; singula vero membra ipsius diverso modo, pro diversitate ordinum, munerum et actualis participationis attingunt.

§ 2. In virtue of power conceded by the law, the regulation of the liturgy within certain defined limits belongs also to various kinds of competent territorial bodies of bishops legitimately established.

§ 3. Therefore, no other person, even if he be a priest, may add, remove, or change anything in the liturgy on his own authority.

23. That sound tradition may be retained, and yet the way remain open to legitimate progress, careful investigation is always to be made into each part of the liturgy that is to be revised. This investigation should be theological, historical, and pastoral. Also the general laws governing the structure and meaning of the liturgy must be studied in conjunction with the experience derived from recent liturgical reforms and from the indults conceded to various places. Finally, there must be no innovations unless the good of the Church genuinely and certainly requires them; and care must be taken that any new forms adopted should in some way grow organically from forms already existing.

As far as possible, notable differences between the rites used in adjacent regions must be carefully avoided.

24. Sacred Scripture is of the greatest importance in the celebration of the liturgy. For it is from Scripture that lessons are read and explained in the homily and psalms are sung; the prayers, collects, and liturgical songs are scriptural in their inspiration and their force, and it is from the Scriptures that actions and signs derive their meaning. Thus to achieve the restoration, progress, and adaptation of the sacred liturgy, it is essential to promote that warm and living love for Scripture to which the venerable tradition of both Eastern and Western rites gives testimony.

25. The liturgical books are to be examined as soon as possible; experts are to be employed on the task, and bishops are to be consulted from various parts of the world.

B. Norms Drawn from the Hierarchic and Communal Nature of the Liturgy

26. Liturgical services are not private functions but are celebrations of the Church, which is the "sacrament of unity", namely, the holy people united and ordered under their bishops.¹

Therefore liturgical services pertain to the whole body of the Church; they manifest it and have effects upon it; but they concern the individual members of the Church in different ways, according to their differing rank, office, and actual participation.

27. Quoties ritus, iuxta propriam cuiusque naturam, secum ferunt celebrationem communem, cum frequentia et actiosa participatione fidelium, inculcetur hanc, in quantum fieri potest, esse praeferendam celebrationi eorundem singulari et quasi privatae.

Quod valet praesertim pro Missae celebratione, salva semper natura publica et sociali cuiusvis Missae, et pro Sacramentorum administratione.

28. In celebrationibus liturgicis quisque, sive minister sive fidelis, munere suo fungens, solum et totum id agat, quod ad ipsum ex rei natura et normis liturgicis pertinet.

29. Etiam ministrantes, lectores, commentatores et ii qui ad scholam cantorum pertinent, vero ministerio liturgico funguntur. Propterea munus [108] suum tali sincera pietate et ordine exerceant, quae tantum ministerium decent quaeque populus Dei ab eis iure exigit.

Ideo oportet eos spiritu Liturgiae, suo cuiusque modo, sedulo imbui, et ad partes suas rite et ordinate obeundas institui.

30. Ad actuosam participationem promovendam, populi acclamationes, responsiones, psalmodia, antiphonae, cantica, necnon actiones seu gestus et corporis habitus foveantur. Sacrum quoque silentium suo tempore servetur.

31. In libris liturgicis recognoscendis, sedulo attendatur ut rubricae etiam partes fidelium praevideant.

32. In Liturgia, praeter distinctionem ex munere liturgico et Ordine sacro manantem, et praeter honores ad normam legum liturgicarum auctoritatibus civilibus debitos, nulla privatarum personarum aut condicionum, sive in caerimoniis, sive in exterioribus pompis, habeatur acceptio.

C. Normae ex indole didactica et pastorali Liturgiae

33. Etsi sacra Liturgia est praecipue cultus divinae maiestatis, magnam etiam continet populi fidelis eruditionem.¹ In Liturgia enim Deus ad populum suum loquitur; Christus adhuc Evangelium annuntiat. Populus vero Deo respondet tum cantibus tum oratione.

Immo, preces a sacerdote, qui coetui in persona Christi praest, ad Deum directae, nomine totius plebis sanctae et omnium circumstantium dicuntur. Signa tandem visibilia, quibus utitur sacra Liturgia ad res

27. It is to be stressed that whenever rites, according to their specific nature, make provision for communal celebration involving the presence and active participation of the faithful, this way of celebrating them is to be preferred, so far as possible, to a celebration that is individual and quasi-private.

This applies with special force to the celebration of Mass and the administration of the sacraments, even though every Mass has of itself a public and social nature.

28. In liturgical celebrations each person, minister or layman, who has an office to perform should do all of, but only, those parts that pertain to his office by the nature of the rite and the principles of liturgy.

29. Servers, lectors, commentators, and members of the choir also exercise a genuine liturgical function. They ought, therefore, to discharge their office with the sincere piety and decorum demanded by so exalted a ministry and rightly expected of them by God's people.

Consequently they must all be deeply imbued with the spirit of the liturgy, each in his own measure, and they must be trained to perform their functions in a correct and orderly manner.

30. To promote active participation, the people should be encouraged to take part by means of acclamations, responses, psalms, antiphons, and songs, as well as by actions, gestures, and bodily attitudes. And at the proper times all should observe a reverent silence.

31. The revision of the liturgical books must carefully attend to the provision of rubrics also for the people's parts.

32. The liturgy makes distinctions between persons according to their liturgical function and sacred orders, and there are liturgical laws providing for due honors to be given to civil authorities. Apart from these instances, no special honors are to be paid in the liturgy to any private persons or classes of persons, whether in the ceremonies or by external display.

C. Norms Based upon the Didactic and Pastoral Nature of the Liturgy

33. Although the sacred liturgy is above all things the worship of the divine Majesty, it likewise contains much instruction for the faithful.¹ For in the liturgy God speaks to his people and Christ is still proclaiming his gospel. And the people reply to God both by song and prayer.

Moreover, the prayers addressed to God by the priest who presides over the assembly in the person of Christ are said in the name of the entire holy people and of all present. And the visible signs used by the liturgy divinas invisibiles significandas, a Christo vel Ecclesia delecta sunt. Unde non solum quando leguntur ea “quae ad nostram doctrinam scripta sunt” [Rm 15:4], sed etiam dum Ecclesia vel orat vel canit vel agit, participantium fides alitur, mentes in Deum excitantur ut rationabile obsequium Ei praesentent, gratiamque Eius abundantius recipiant. [109]

Exinde in instauratione facienda generales normae quae sequuntur observari debent.

4034 34. Ritus nobili simplicitate fulgeant, sint brevitate perspicui et repetitiones inutiles evitent, sint fidelium captui accommodati, neque generatim multis indigeant explanationibus.

4035 35. Ut clare appareat in Liturgia ritum et verbum intime coniungi:

1) In celebrationibus sacris abundantior, varior et aptior lectio sacrae Scripturae instauretur.

2) Locus aptior sermonis, utpote partis actionis liturgicae, prout ritus patitur, etiam in rubricis notetur; et fidelissime ac rite adimpleatur ministerium praedicationis. Haec vero imprimis ex fonte sacrae Scripturae et Liturgiae hauriatur, quasi annuntiatio mirabilium Dei in historia salutis seu mysterio Christi, quod in nobis praesens semper adest et operatur, praesertim in celebrationibus liturgicis.

3) Etiam catechesis directius liturgica omnibus modis inculcetur; et in ipsis ritibus, si necessariae sint, breves admonitiones, a sacerdote vel competenti ministro, opportunioribus tantum momentis, praescriptis vel similibus verbis, dicendae, praevideantur.

4) Foveatur sacra Verbi Dei celebratio in solemniorum festorum pervigiliis, in aliquibus feriis Adventus et Quadragesimae, atque in dominicis et diebus festis, maxime in locis quae sacerdote carent: quo in casu celebrationem diaconus vel alius ab Episcopo delegatus dirigat.

4036 36. § 1. Linguae latinae usus, salvo particulari iure, in Ritibus latinis servetur.

to signify invisible divine things have been chosen by Christ or the Church. Thus not only when things are read “which were written for our instruction” [Rom 15:4], but also when the Church prays or sings or acts, the faith of those taking part is nourished and their minds are raised to God, so that they may offer him their rational service and more abundantly receive his grace.

Wherefore, in the reform of the liturgy, the following general norms should be observed:

34. The rites should be distinguished by a noble simplicity; they should be short, clear, and unencumbered by useless repetitions; they should be within the people’s powers of comprehension and normally should not require much explanation.

35. That the intimate connection between words and rites may be apparent in the liturgy:

1. In sacred celebrations there is to be more reading from Holy Scripture, and it is to be more varied and suitable.

2. Because the sermon is part of the liturgical service, the best place for it is to be indicated even in the rubrics, as far as the nature of the rite will allow; the ministry of preaching is to be fulfilled with exactitude and fidelity. The sermon, moreover, should draw its content mainly from scriptural and liturgical sources, and its character should be that of a proclamation of God’s wonderful works in the history of salvation, the mystery of Christ, ever made present and active within us, especially in the celebration of the liturgy.

3. Instruction that is more explicitly liturgical should also be given in a variety of ways; if necessary, short directives to be spoken by the priest or proper minister should be provided within the rites themselves. But they should occur only at the more suitable moments and be in prescribed or similar words.

4. Bible services should be encouraged, especially on the vigils of the more solemn feasts, on some weekdays in Advent and Lent, and on Sundays and feast days. They are particularly to be commended in places where no priest is available; when this is so, a deacon or some other person authorized by the bishop should preside over the celebration.

36. § 1. Particular law remaining in force, the use of the Latin language is to be preserved in the Latin rites.

§ 2. But since the use of the mother tongue, whether in the Mass, the administration of the sacraments, or other parts of the liturgy, frequently may be of great advantage to the people, the limits of its employment may be extended. This will apply in the first place to the readings and directives and to some of the prayers and chants, according to the regulations on this matter to be laid down separately in subsequent chapters.

§ 4. Conversio textus latini in linguam vernaculam in Liturgia adhibenda, a competenti auctoritate ecclesiastica territoriali, de qua supra, approbari debet.

D. Normae ad aptationem ingenio et traditionibus populorum perficiendam

37. Ecclesia, in iis quae fidem aut bonum totius communitatis non tangunt, rigidam unius tenoris formam ne in Liturgia quidem imponere cupit; quinimmo, variarum gentium populorumque animi ornamenta ac dotes colit et provehit; quidquid vero in populorum moribus indissolubili vinculo superstitionibus erroribusque non adstipulatur, benevole perpendit ac, si potest, sartum tectumque servat, immo quandoque in ipsam Liturgiam admittit, dummodo cum rationibus veri et authentici spiritus liturgici congruat.

38. Servata substantiali unitate ritus romani, legitimis varietatibus et aptationibus ad diversos coetus, regiones, populos, praesertim in Missionibus, locus relinquatur, etiam cum libri liturgici recognoscuntur; et hoc in structura rituum et in rubricis instituendis opportune prae oculis habeatur.

39. Intra limites in editionibus typicis librorum liturgicorum statutos, erit competentis auctoritatis ecclesiasticae territorialis, de qua in art. 22 § 2, aptationes definire, praesertim quoad administrationem Sacramentorum, quoad Sacramentalia, processiones, linguam liturgicam, musicam sacram et artes, iuxta tamen normas fundamentales quae hac in Constitutione habentur. [111]

40. Cum tamen variis in locis et adiunctis, profundior Liturgiae aptatio urgeat, et ideo difficilior evadat:

1) A competenti auctoritate ecclesiastica territoriali, de qua in art. 22 § 2, sedulo et prudenter consideretur quid, hoc in negotio, ex traditionibus ingenioque singulorum populorum opportune in cultum divinum admitti possit. Aptationes, quae utiles vel necessariae existimantur, Apostolicae Sedi proponantur, de ipsius consensu introducendae.

2) Ut autem aptatio cum necessaria circumspectione fiat, eidem auctoritati ecclesiasticae territoriali ab Apostolica Sede facultas tribuetur, si casus ferat, ut in

§ 3. These norms being observed, it is for the competent territorial ecclesiastical authority mentioned in art. 22, § 2, to decide whether, and to what extent, the vernacular language is to be used; their decrees are to be approved, that is, confirmed, by the Apostolic See. And, whenever it seems to be called for, this authority is to consult with bishops of neighboring regions that have the same language.

§ 4. Translations from the Latin text into the mother tongue intended for use in the liturgy must be approved by the competent territorial ecclesiastical authority mentioned above.

D. Norms for Adapting the Liturgy to the Culture and Traditions of Peoples

37. Even in the liturgy, the Church has no wish to impose a rigid uniformity in matters that do not implicate the faith or the good of the whole community; rather does she respect and foster the genius and talents of the various races and peoples. Anything in these peoples' way of life that is not indissolubly bound up with superstition and error she studies with sympathy and, if possible, preserves intact. Sometimes, in fact, she admits such things into the liturgy itself, so long as they harmonize with its true and authentic spirit. 4037

38. Provisions shall also be made, when revising the liturgical books, for legitimate variations and adaptations to different groups, regions, and peoples, especially in mission lands, provided that the substantial unity of the Roman rite is preserved; and this should be borne in mind when drawing up the rites and devising rubrics. 4038

39. Within the limits set by the typical editions of the liturgical books, it shall be for the competent territorial ecclesiastical authority mentioned in art. 22, § 2, to specify adaptations, especially in the case of the administration of the sacraments, the sacramentals, processions, liturgical language, sacred music, and the arts, but according to the fundamental norms laid down in this constitution. 4039

40. In some places and circumstances, however, an even more radical adaptation of the liturgy is needed, and this entails greater difficulties. Wherefore: 4040

1. The competent territorial ecclesiastical authority mentioned in art. 22, § 2, must, in this matter, carefully and prudently consider which elements from the traditions and culture of individual peoples might appropriately be admitted into divine worship. Adaptations that are judged to be useful or necessary should then be submitted to the Apostolic See, by whose consent they may be introduced.

2. To ensure that adaptations may be made with all the circumspection they demand, the Apostolic See will grant power to this same territorial ecclesiastical authority to quibusdam coetibus ad id aptis et per determinatum tempus necessaria praevia experimenta permittat et dirigat.

3) Quia leges liturgicae difficultates speciales, quoad aptationem, praesertim in Missionibus, secum ferre solent, in illis condendis praesto sint viri, in re de qua agitur, periti.

IV. De vita liturgica in dioecesi et in paroecia fovenda 4041 41. Episcopus ut sacerdos magnus sui gregis habendus est, a quo vita suorum fidelium in Christo quodammodo derivatur et pendet.

Quare omnes vitam liturgicam dioeceseos circa Episcopum, praesertim in ecclesia cathedrali, maximi faciant oportet: sibi persuasum habentes praecipuam manifestationem Ecclesiae haberi in plenaria et actuosa participatione totius plebis sanctae Dei in iisdem celebrationibus liturgicis, praesertim in eadem Eucharistia, in una oratione, ad unum altare cui praest Episcopus a suo presbyterio et ministris circumdatus.¹

Quare vita liturgica paroeciae eiusque relatio ad Episcopum in mente et praxi fidelium et cleri fovenda est; et adlaborandum ut sensus communitatis paroecialis, imprimis vero in communi celebratione Missae dominicalis, floreat.

V. De actione pastoralis liturgica promovenda

Quapropter, ad hanc actionem pastorem liturgicam ulterius in Ecclesia fovendam, Sacrosanctum Concilium decernit:

4044 44. A competenti auctoritate ecclesiastica territoriali, de qua in art. 22 § 2, expedit ut instituat Commissio liturgica, a viris in scientia liturgica, Musica, Arte sacra permit and to direct, as the case requires, the necessary preliminary experiments over a determined period of time among certain groups suited for the purpose.

3. Because liturgical laws often involve special difficulties with respect to adaptation, particularly in mission lands, men who are experts in these matters must be employed to formulate them.

IV. Promotion of Liturgical Life in Diocese and Parish

41. The bishop is to be considered as the high priest of his flock, from whom the life in Christ of his faithful is in some way derived and dependent.

Therefore, all should hold in great esteem the liturgical life of the diocese centered around the bishop, especially in his cathedral church; they must be convinced that the preeminent manifestation of the Church consists in the full active participation of all God's holy people in these liturgical celebrations, especially in the same Eucharist, in a single prayer, at one altar, at which there presides the bishop surrounded by his college of priests and by his ministers.¹

42. But because it is impossible for the bishop always and everywhere to preside over the whole flock in his Church, he cannot do other than establish lesser groupings of the faithful. Among these the parishes, set up locally under a pastor who takes the place of the bishop, are the most important: for in some manner they represent the visible Church constituted throughout the world.

And therefore the liturgical life of the parish and its relationship to the bishop must be fostered theoretically and practically among the faithful and clergy; efforts also must be made to encourage a sense of community within the parish, above all in the common celebration of the Sunday Mass.

V. Promotion of Pastoral-Liturgical Action

43. Zeal for the promotion and restoration of the liturgy is rightly held to be a sign of the providential dispositions of God in our time, as a movement of the Holy Spirit in his Church. It is today a distinguishing mark of the Church's life, indeed, of the whole tenor of contemporary religious thought and action.

So that this pastoral-liturgical action may become even more vigorous in the Church, the sacred council decrees:

44. It is desirable that the competent territorial ecclesiastical authority mentioned in art. 22, § 2, set up a liturgical commission, to be assisted by experts in ac re pastorali peritis iuvanda. Cui Commissioni, in quantum fieri potest, opem ferat quoddam Institutum Liturgiae Pastoralis, constans sodalibus, non exclusis, si res ita ferat, laicis in hac materia praestantibus. Ipsius Commissionis erit, ductu auctoritatis ecclesiasticae territorialis, de qua supra, et actionem pastoraalem liturgicam in sua ditione moderari, et studia atque necessaria experimenta promovere, quoties agatur de aptationibus Apostolicae Sedi proponendis.

45. Eadem ratione, in singulis dioecesibus Commissio de sacra Liturgia habeatur, ad actionem liturgicam, moderante Episcopo, promovendam.

Opportunum aliquando evadere potest ut plures dioecesees unam [113] Commissionem constituent, quae, collatis consiliis, rem liturgicam provehat.

46. Praeter Commissionem de sacra Liturgia, in quavis dioecesi constituentur, quantum fieri potest, etiam Commissiones de Musica sacra et de Arte sacra.

Necessarium est ut hae tres Commissiones consociatis viribus adlaborent; immo non raro congruum erit ut in unam Commissionem coalescant. . . .

Salvator noster, in Cena novissima, qua nocte tradebatur, Sacrificium Eucharisticum Corporis et Sanguinis sui instituit, quo Sacrificium Crucis in saecula, donec veniret, perpetuaret, atque adeo Ecclesiae dilectae Sponsae memoriale concrederet Mortis et Resurrectionis suae: sacramentum pietatis, signum unitatis, vinculum caritatis,¹ convivium paschale, in quo Christus sumitur, mens impletur gratia et futurae gloriae nobis pignus datur.²

48. Itaque Ecclesia sollicitas curas eo intendit ne christifideles huic fidei mysterio tamquam extranei vel muti spectatores intersint, sed per ritus et preces id bene intellegentes, sacram actionem conscie, pie et actuose participant, verbo Dei instituantur, mensa Corporis Domini reficiantur, gratias Deo agant, immaculatam hostiam, non tantum per sacerdotis manus, sed etiam una cum ipso offerentes, seipsos offerre discant, et de die in diem consummentur, Christo mediatore,¹ in unitatem cum Deo et inter se, ut sit tandem Deus omnia in omnibus.

liturgical science, sacred music, art, and pastoral practice. So far as possible the commission should be aided by some kind of Institute for Pastoral Liturgy, consisting of persons who are eminent in these matters and including laymen as circumstances suggest. Under the direction of the above-mentioned territorial ecclesiastical authority, the commission is to regulate pastoral-liturgical action throughout the territory and to promote studies and necessary experiments whenever there is question of adaptations to be proposed to the Apostolic See.

45. For the same reason, every diocese is to have a commission on the sacred liturgy under the direction of the bishop, for promoting the liturgical apostolate. 4045

Sometimes it may be expedient that several dioceses should form between them one single commission that will be able to promote the liturgy by common consultation.

46. Besides the commission on the sacred liturgy, every diocese, as far as possible, should have commissions for sacred music and sacred art. 4046

These three commissions must work in closest collaboration; indeed, it will often be best to fuse the three of them into one single commission.

THE MOST SACRED MYSTERY OF THE EUCHARIST

47. At the Last Supper, on the night when he was betrayed, our Savior instituted the eucharistic sacrifice of his Body and Blood. He did this in order to perpetuate the sacrifice of the Cross throughout the centuries until he should come again and so to entrust to his beloved spouse, the Church, a memorial of his death and Resurrection: a sacrament of love, a sign of unity, a bond of charity,¹ a paschal banquet in which Christ is eaten, the mind is filled with grace, and a pledge of future glory is given to us.²

48. The Church, therefore, earnestly desires that Christ's faithful, when present at this mystery of faith, should not be there as strangers or silent spectators; on the contrary, through a good understanding of the rites and prayers they should take part in the sacred action conscious of what they are doing, with devotion and full collaboration. They should be instructed by God's Word and be nourished at the table of the Lord's body; they should give thanks to God; by offering the Immaculate Victim, not only through the hands of the priest, but also with him, they should learn also to offer themselves; through Christ the Mediator,¹ they should be drawn day by day into ever more perfect union with God and with each other, so that finally God may be all in all. 4048

4101–4179: Public Session 5, November 21, 1964: Dogmatic Constitution on the Church Lumen gentium

Because of its premature end, the First Vatican Council was not able to complete its treatment of the prepared schema De ecclesia Christi and confined itself to defining the primacy and infallibility of the pope (cf. *3000° and 3050°). In view of some previous magisterial developments in ecclesiology (cf. *3800–3822), a first schema, prepared under the direction of Cardinal Ottaviani and S. Tromp, S.J., was rejected by the great majority of the council Fathers at the end of the first period.

The theological commission presented a revised schema that, after much lively discussion, resulted in a third and definitive draft. On November 16, 1964, some “Notifications” (Notificationes) were announced to the council Fathers by the Secretary General along with a “Preliminary Note of Explanation” (Nota explicativa praevia) that provided greater precision to the dogmatic obligation of the council’s affirmations and the “status” of the college of bishops (AAS 57 [1965]: 72–75; cf. *4350–4359). The authoritative regulations for the renewal of the permanent diaconate, alluded to in art. 29, were given by Paul VI in his moto proprio Sacrum diaconatus ordinem of June 18, 1967 (AAS 59 [1967]: 697–704).

DE ECCLESIAE MYSTERIO

Condiciones huius temporis huic Ecclesiae officio urgentiorem vim addunt, ut nempe homines cuncti, variis hodie vinculis socialibus, technicis, culturalibus arctius coniuncti, plenam etiam unitatem in Christo consequantur.

Credentes autem in Christum convocare statuit in sancta Ecclesia, quae iam ab origine mundi praefigurata, in historia populi Israel ac foedere antiquo mirabiliter praeparata,¹ in novissimis temporibus constituta, effuso Spiritu est manifestata, et in fine saeculorum gloriose consummabitur. Tunc autem, sicut apud sanctos Patres legitur, omnes iusti inde ab Adam, “ab Abel iusto usque

THE MYSTERY OF THE CHURCH

1. Christ is the Light of nations. Because this is so, this sacred synod gathered together in the Holy Spirit eagerly desires, by proclaiming the gospel to every creature [cf. Mk 16:15], to bring the light of Christ to all men, a light brightly visible on the countenance of the Church. Since the Church is in Christ like a sacrament or as a sign and instrument both of a very closely knit union with God and of the unity of the whole human race, it desires now to unfold more fully to the faithful of the Church and to the whole world its own inner nature and universal mission. This it intends to do following faithfully the teaching of previous councils.

The present-day conditions of the world add greater urgency to this work of the Church so that all men, joined more closely today by various social, technical, and cultural ties, might also attain fuller unity in Christ.

2. The eternal Father, by a free and hidden plan of his own wisdom and goodness, created the whole world. His plan was to raise men to a participation of the divine life. God the Father did not leave men, fallen in Adam, to themselves but ceaselessly offered helps to salvation, in view of Christ, the Redeemer, “who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature” [Col 1:15]. All the elect, before time began, the Father “foreknew and predestined to become conformed to the image of his Son, that he should be the firstborn among many brethren” [Rom 8:29].

He planned to assemble in the holy Church all those who would believe in Christ. Already from the beginning of the world the foreshadowing of the Church took place. It was prepared in a remarkable way throughout the history of the people of Israel and by means of the Old Covenant.¹ In the present era of time, the Church was constituted and, by the outpouring of the Spirit, was ad ultimum electum”² in Ecclesia universali apud Patrem congregabuntur.

3. Venit igitur Filius, missus a Patre, qui nos in Eo ante mundi constitutionem elegit ac in adoptionem filiorum praedestinavit, quia in Eo omnia instaurare sibi complacuit [cf. Eph 1:4s, 10]. Christus ideo, ut voluntatem Patris impleret, regnum caelorum in terris inauguravit nobisque Eius mysterium revelavit, atque oboedientia sua redemptionem effecit. Ecclesia, seu regnum Christi iam praesens in mysterio, ex virtute Dei in mundo visibiliter crescit. Quod exordium et incrementum significantur sanguine et aqua ex aperto latere Iesu crucifixi exeuntibus [cf. Io 19:34], ac praenuntiantur verbis Domini de morte sua in cruce: “Et Ego, si exaltatus fuero a terra, omnes traham ad Meipsum” [Io 12:32 gr.].

Quoties sacrificium crucis, quo “Pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus” [1 Cor 5:7], in altari celebratur, opus nostrae redemptionis exercetur. Simul sacramento panis eucharistici repraesentatur et efficitur unitas fidelium, qui unum corpus in Christo constituunt [cf. 1 Cor 10:17]. Omnes homines ad hanc vocantur unionem cum Christo, qui est lux mundi, a quo procedimus, per quem vivimus, ad quem tendimus.

4. Opere autem consummato, quod Pater Filio commisit in terra faciendum [cf. Io 17:4], missus est Spiritus Sanctus die Pentecostes, ut Ecclesiam iugiter sanctificaret, atque ita credentes per Christum in [7] uno Spiritu accessum haberent ad Patrem [cf. Eph 2:18]. Ipse est Spiritus vitae seu fons aquae salientis in vitam aeternam [cf. Io 4:14; 7:38s], per quem Pater homines, peccato mortuos, vivificat, donec eorum mortalia corpora in Christo resuscitet [cf. Rm 8:10s].

Spiritus in Ecclesia et in cordibus fidelium tamquam in templo habitat [cf. 1 Cor 3:16; 6:19], in eisque orat et testimonium adoptionis filiorum reddit [cf. Gal 4:6; Rm 8:15s, 26]. Ecclesiam, quam in omnem veritatem inducit [cf. Io 16:13] et in communione et ministracione unificat, diversis donis hierarchicis et charismaticis instruit ac dirigit, et fructibus suis adornat [cf. Eph 4:11s; 1 Cor 12:4; Gal 5:22]. Virtute Evangelii iuvenescere facit made manifest. At the end of time she will gloriously achieve completion, when, as is read in the Fathers, all the just, from Adam and “from Abel, the just one, to the last of the elect”² will be gathered together with the Father in the universal Church.

3. The Son, therefore, came, sent by the Father. It was in him, before the foundation of the world, that the Father chose us and predestined us to become adopted sons, for in him it pleased the Father to reestablish all things [cf. Eph 1:4f, 10]. To carry out the will of the Father, Christ inaugurated the kingdom of heaven on earth and revealed to us the mystery of that kingdom. By his obedience he brought about redemption. The Church, or, in other words, the kingdom of Christ now present in mystery, grows visibly through the power of God in the world. This inauguration and this growth are both symbolized by the blood and water that flowed from the open side of a crucified Jesus [cf. Jn 19:34] and are foretold in the words of the Lord referring to his death on the Cross: “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all things to myself” [Jn 12:32, Gk].

As often as the sacrifice of the Cross in which Christ our Passover was sacrificed is celebrated on the altar, the work of our redemption is carried on, and, in the sacrament of the eucharistic bread, the unity of all believers who form one body in Christ [cf. 1 Cor 10:17] is both expressed and brought about. All men are called to this union with Christ, who is the light of the world, from whom we go forth, through whom we live, and toward whom our whole life strains.

4. When the work that the Father gave the Son to do on earth [cf. Jn 17:4] was accomplished, the Holy Spirit was sent on the day of Pentecost in order that he might continually sanctify the Church, and, thus, all those who believe would have access through Christ in one Spirit to the Father [cf. Eph 2:18]. He is the Spirit of Life, a fountain of water springing up to life eternal [cf. Jn 4:14; 7:38f]. To men, dead in sin, the Father gives life through him, until, in Christ, he brings to life their mortal bodies [cf. Rom 8:10f].

The Spirit dwells in the Church and in the hearts of the faithful as in a temple [cf. 1 Cor 3:16; 6:19]. In them he prays on their behalf and bears witness to the fact that they are adopted sons [cf. Gal 4:6; Rom 8:15f, 27]. The Church, which the Spirit guides into all truth [cf. Jn 16:13] and which he unified in communion and in works of ministry, he both equips and directs with hierarchical and charismatic gifts and adorns with his fruits [cf.

Ecclesiam eamque perpetuo renovat et ad consummatam cum Sponso suo unionem perducit.¹ Nam Spiritus et Sponsa ad Dominum Iesum dicunt “Veni!” [cf. Apc 22:17].

Sic apparet universa Ecclesia sicuti “de unitate Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti plebs adunata”.²

- 4105 5. Ecclesiae sanctae mysterium in eiusdem fundatione manifestatur. Dominus enim Iesus Ecclesiae suae initium fecit praedicando faustum nuntium, adventum scilicet Regni Dei a saeculis in Scripturis promissi: “Quoniam impletum est tempus, et appropinquavit Regnum Dei” [Mc 1:15; cf. Mt 4:17]. Hoc vero Regnum in verbo, operibus et praesentia Christi hominibus elucescit. Verbum nempe Domini comparatur semini, quod in agro seminatur [Mc 4:14]: qui illud cum fide audiunt et Christi pusillo gregi [Lc 12:32] adnumerantur, Regnum ipsum susceperunt; propria dein virtute semen germinat et increscit usque ad tempus messis [cf. Mc 4:26–29].

Miracula etiam Iesu Regnum iam in terris pervenisse comprobant: “Si in digito Dei eiicio daemonia, profecto pervenit in vos Regnum Dei” [Lc 11:20; cf. Mt 12:28]. Ante omnia tamen Regnum manifestatur in ipsa Persona Christi, Filii Dei et Filii hominis, qui venit “ut ministraret, et daret animam suam redemptionem pro multis” [Mc 10:45].

- 4106 Cum autem Iesus, mortem crucis pro hominibus passus, resurrexerit, tamquam Dominus et Christus Sacerdosque in aeternum constitutus apparuit [cf. Act 2:36; Hbr 5:6; 7:17–21], atque Spiritum a Patre [8] promissum in discipulos suos effudit [cf. Act 2:33]. Unde Ecclesia, donis sui Fundatoris instructa fideliterque eiusdem praecepta caritatis, humilitatis et abnegationis servans, missionem accipit Regnum Christi et Dei annuntiandi et in omnibus gentibus instaurandi, huiusque Regni in terris germen et initium constituit. Ipsa interea, dum paulatim increscit, ad Regnum consummatum anhelat, ac totis viribus sperat et exoptat cum Rege suo in gloria coniungi.

- 4107 6. Sicut in Vetere Testamento revelatio Regni saepe sub figuris proponitur, ita nunc quoque variis imaginibus intima Ecclesiae natura nobis innotescit, quae sive a vita pastorali vel ab agricultura, sive ab aedificatione aut etiam a familia et sponsalibus desumptae, in libris Prophetarum praeparantur.

Eph 4:11f.; 1 Cor 12:4; Gal 5:22]. By the power of the Gospel, he makes the Church keep the freshness of youth. Uninterruptedly he renews her and leads her to perfect union with her Spouse.¹ The Spirit and the Bride both say to Jesus, the Lord, “Come!” [cf. Rev 22:17].

Thus, the Church has been seen as “a people made one with the unity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit”.²

5. The mystery of the holy Church is manifest in her very foundation. The Lord Jesus set her on her course by preaching the good news, that is, the coming of the kingdom of God, which, for centuries, had been promised in the Scriptures: “The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand” [Mk 1:15; cf. Mt 4:17]. In the word, in the works, and in the presence of Christ, this kingdom was clearly open to the view of men. The Word of the Lord is compared to a seed that is sown in a field [Mk 4:14]; those who hear the Word with faith and become part of the little flock of Christ [Lc 12:32] have received the kingdom itself. Then, by its own power the seed sprouts and grows until harvest time [cf. Mk 4:26–29].

The miracles of Jesus also confirm that the kingdom has already arrived on earth: “If I cast out devils by the finger of God, then the kingdom of God has come upon you” [Lc 11:20; cf. Mt 12:28]. Before all things, however, the kingdom is clearly visible in the very Person of Christ, the Son of God and the Son of Man, who came “to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many” [Mk 10:45].

When Jesus, who had suffered the death of the Cross for mankind, had risen, he appeared as the one constituted as Lord, Christ and eternal Priest [Acts 2:36; Heb 5:6; 7:17–21], and he poured out on his disciples the Spirit promised by the Father [cf. Acts 2:33]. From this source the Church, equipped with the gifts of her Founder and faithfully guarding his precepts of charity, humility, and self-sacrifice, receives the mission to proclaim and to spread among all peoples the kingdom of Christ and of God and to be, on earth, the initial budding forth of that kingdom. While she slowly grows, the Church strains toward the completed kingdom and, with all her strength, hopes and desires to be united in glory with her King.

6. In the old Testament the revelation of the kingdom is often conveyed by means of metaphors. In the same way the inner nature of the Church is now made known to us in different images taken either from tending sheep or cultivating the land, from building or even from family life and betrothals, the images receive preparatory shaping in the books of the prophets.

Est enim Ecclesia ovile, cuius ostium unicum et necessarium Christus est [Io 10:1-10]. Est etiam grex, cuius ipse Deus pastorem se fore praenuntiavit [cf. Is 40:11; Ez 34:11-22], et cuius oves, etsi a pastoribus humanis gubernantur, indesinenter tamen deducuntur et nutriuntur ab ipso Christo, bono Pastore Principeque pastorum [cf. Io 10:11; 1 Pt 5:4], qui vitam suam dedit pro ovibus [cf. Io 10:11-15].

Est Ecclesia agricultura seu ager Dei [1 Cor 3:9]. In illo agro crescit antiqua oliva, cuius radix sancta fuerunt Patriarchae, et in qua Iudaeorum et Gentium reconciliatio facta est et fiet [Rm 11:13-26]. Ipsa plantata est a caelesti Agricola tamquam vinea electa [Mt 21:33-43 par.; cf. Is 5:1-7]. Vitis vera Christus est, vitam et fecunditatem tribuens palmitibus, scilicet nobis, qui per Ecclesiam in ipso manemus, et sine quo nihil possumus facere [Io 15:1-5].

Saepius quoque Ecclesia dicitur aedificatio Dei [1 Cor 3:9]. Dominus ipse se comparavit lapidi, quem reprobaverunt aedificantes, sed qui factus est in caput anguli [Mt 21:42 par.; cf. Act 4:11; 1 Pt 2:7; Ps 117:22]. Super illud fundamentum Ecclesia ab Apostolis exstruitur [cf. 1 Cor 3:11], ab eoque firmitatem et cohaesionem accipit.

Quae constructio variis appellationibus decoratur: domus Dei [1 Tim 3:15], in qua nempe habitat eius familia, habitaculum Dei in Spiritu [Eph 2:19-22], tabernaculum Dei cum hominibus [Apc 21:3], et praesertim templum sanctum, quod in lapideis sanctuariis repraesentatum a Sanctis Patribus laudatur, et in Liturgia non immerito assimilatur Civitati sanctae, novae Ierusalem.¹ In ipsa enim tamquam lapides vivi [9] his in terris aedificamur [1 Pt 2:5]. Quam sanctam civitatem Ioannes contemplatur, in renovatione mundi descendentem de caelis a Deo, paratam sicut sponsam ornatam viro suo [Apc 21:1s].

Ecclesia etiam, “quae sursum est Ierusalem” et “mater nostra” appellatur [Gal 4:26; cf. Apc 12:17], describitur ut sponsa immaculata Agni immaculati [Apc 19:7; 21:2, 9; 22:17], quam Christus “dilexit, et seipsum tradidit pro ea, ut illam sanctificaret” [Eph 5:26], quam sibi foedere indissolubili sociavit et indesinenter “nutrit et fovet” [Eph 5:29], et quam mundatam sibi voluit coniunctam et in dilectione ac fidelitate subditam [cf. Eph 5:24], quam tandem bonis caelestibus in aeternum cumulavit, ut Dei

The Church is a sheepfold whose one and indispensable door is Christ [Jn 10:1-10]. It is a flock of which God himself foretold he would be the shepherd [cf. Is 40:11; Ezek 34:11-22] and whose sheep, although ruled by human shepherds, are nevertheless continuously led and nourished by Christ himself, the Good Shepherd and the Prince of the shepherds [cf. Jn 10:11; 1 Pt 5:4], who gave his life for the sheep [cf. Jn 10:11-15].

The Church is a piece of land to be cultivated, the tillage of God [1 Cor 3:9]. On that land the ancient olive tree grows whose holy roots were the prophets and in which the reconciliation of Jews and Gentiles has been brought about and will be brought about [Rom 11:13-26]. That land, like a choice vineyard, has been planted by the heavenly Husbandman [Mt 21:33-43 par.; cf. Is 5:1-7]. The true vine is Christ, who gives life and the power to bear abundant fruit to the branches, that is, to us, who through the Church remain in Christ, without whom we can do nothing [Jn 15:1-5].

Often the Church has also been called the building of God [1 Cor 3:9]. The Lord himself compared himself to the stone that the builders rejected but that was made into the cornerstone [Mt 21:42 par.; cf. Acts 4:11; 1 Pt 2:7; Ps 118:22]. On this foundation the Church is built by the apostles [cf. 1 Cor 3:11], and from it the Church receives durability and consolidation.

This edifice has many names to describe it: the house of God [1 Tim 3:15] in which dwells his family; the household of God in the Spirit [Eph 2:19-22]; the dwelling place of God among men [Rev 21:3]; and, especially, the holy temple. This temple, symbolized in places of worship built out of stone, is praised by the holy Fathers and, not without reason, is compared in the liturgy to the Holy City, the New Jerusalem.¹ As living stones, we here on earth are built into it [1 Pt 2:5]. John contemplates this holy city coming down from heaven at the renewal of the world as a bride made ready and adorned for her husband [Rev 21:1f].

The Church, further, “that Jerusalem which is above” is also called “our mother” [Gal 4:26; cf. Rev 12:17]. She is described as the spotless spouse of the spotless Lamb [Rev 19:7; 21:2, 9; 22:17], whom Christ “loved and for whom he delivered himself up that he might sanctify her” [Eph 5:26], whom he unites to himself by an unbreakable covenant, and whom he unceasingly “nourishes and cherishes” [Eph 5:29], and whom, once purified, he willed to be cleansed and joined to himself, subject et Christi erga nos caritatem, quae omnem scientiam superat, comprehendamus [cf. Eph 3:19].

Dum vero his in terris Ecclesia peregrinatur a Domino [cf. 2 Cor 5:6], tamquam exulem se habet, ita ut quae sursum sunt quaerat et sapiat, ubi Christus est in dextera Dei sedens, ubi vita Ecclesiae abscondita est cum Christo in Deo, donec cum Sponso suo appareat in gloria [cf. Col 3:1-4].

- 4112 7. Dei Filius, in natura humana Sibi unita, morte et resurrectione sua mortem superando, hominem redemit et in novam creaturam transformavit [cf. Gal 6:15; 2 Cor 5:17]. Communicando enim Spiritum suum, fratres suos, ex omnibus gentibus convocatos, tamquam corpus suum mystice constituit.

In corpore illo vita Christi in credentes diffunditur, qui Christo passo atque glorificato, per sacramenta arcano ac reali modo uniuntur.¹ Per baptismum enim Christo conformamur: “Etenim in uno Spiritu omnes nos in unum corpus baptizati sumus” [1 Cor 12:13]. Quo sacro ritu consociatio cum morte et resurrectione Christi repraesentatur et efficitur: “Consepulti enim sumus cum Illo per baptismum in mortem”; si autem “complantati facti sumus similitudini mortis Eius: simul et resurrectionis erimus” [Rm 6:4s]. In fractione panis eucharistici de Corpore Domini realiter participantes, ad communionem cum Eo ac inter nos elevamur. “Quoniam unus panis, unum corpus multi sumus, omnes, qui de uno pane participamus” [1 Cor 10:17]. Ita nos omnes [10] membra illius Corporis efficitur [cf. 1 Cor 12:27], “singuli autem alter alterius membra” [Rm 12:5].

- 4113 Sicut vero omnia corporis humani membra, licet multa sint, unum tamen corpus efformant, ita fideles in Christo [cf. 1 Cor 12:12]. Etiam in aedificatione corporis Christi diversitas viget membrorum et officiorum. Unus est Spiritus, qui varia sua dona, secundum divitias suas atque ministeriorum necessitates, ad Ecclesiae utilitatem dispertit [cf. 1 Cor 12:1-11].

Inter quae dona praestat gratia Apostolorum, quorum auctoritati ipse Spiritus etiam charismaticos subdit [cf. 1 Cor 14]. Idem Spiritus per se suaque virtute atque interna membrorum connexione corpus unificans, caritatem inter fideles producit et urget. Unde, si quid patitur unum membrum, compatiuntur omnia membra; sive si unum membrum honoratur, congaudent omnia membra [cf. 1 Cor 12:26].

to him in love and fidelity [cf. Eph 5:24], and whom, finally, he filled with heavenly gifts for all eternity, in order that we may know the love of God and of Christ for us, a love that surpasses all knowledge [cf. Eph 3:19].

The Church, while on earth she journeys in a foreign land away from the Lord [cf. 2 Cor 5:6], is like an exile. She seeks and experiences those things that are above, where Christ is seated at the right hand of God, where the life of the Church is hidden with Christ in God until she appears in glory with her Spouse [cf. Col 3:1-4].

7. In the human nature united to himself, the Son of God, by overcoming death through his own death and Resurrection, redeemed man and remolded him into a new creation [cf. Gal 6:15; 2 Cor 5:17]. By communicating his Spirit, Christ made his brothers, called together from all nations, mystically the components of his own Body.

In that Body the life of Christ is poured into the believers who, through the sacraments, are united in a hidden and real way to Christ who suffered and was glorified.¹ Through baptism we are formed in the likeness of Christ: “For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body” [1 Cor 12:13]. In this sacred rite a oneness with Christ’s death and Resurrection is both symbolized and brought about: “For we were buried with him by means of baptism into death”; and if “we have been united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall be so in the likeness of his resurrection also” [Rom 6:4f.]. Really partaking of the body of the Lord in the breaking of the eucharistic bread, we are taken up into communion with him and with one another. “Because the bread is one, we though many, are one body, all of us who partake of the one bread” [1 Cor 10:17]. In this way all of us are made members of his Body [cf. 1 Cor 12:27], “but severally members one of another” [Rom 12:5].

As all the members of the human body, though they are many, form one body, so also are the faithful in Christ [cf. 1 Cor 12:12]. Also, in the building up of Christ’s Body, various members and functions have their part to play. There is only one Spirit, who, according to his own richness and the needs of the ministries, gives his different gifts for the welfare of the Church [cf. 1 Cor 12:1-11].

What has a special place among these gifts is the grace of the apostles to whose authority the Spirit himself subjected even those who were endowed with charisms [cf. 1 Cor 14]. Giving the body unity through himself and through his power and inner joining of the members, this same Spirit produces and urges love among the believers. From all this it follows that if one member endures anything, all the members co-endure it, and if one member is honored, all the members together rejoice [cf. 1 Cor 12:26].

*4112 ¹ Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae III, q. 62, a. 5 ad 1 (Editio Leonina 12:27a).

Huius corporis Caput est Christus. Ipse est imago Dei invisibilis, in Eoque condita sunt universa. Ipse est ante omnes et omnia in Ipso constant. Ipse est caput corporis quod est Ecclesia. Ipse est principium, primogenitus ex mortuis, ut sit in omnibus primatum tenens [cf. Col 1:15–18]. Magnitudine virtutis suae caelestibus et terrestribus dominatur, et supereminenti perfectione et operatione sua totum corpus gloriae suae divitiis replet [cf. Eph 1:18–23].¹

Omnia membra Ei conformari oportet, donec Christus formetur in eis [cf. Gal 4:19]. Quapropter in vitae Eius mysteria adsumimur, cum Eo configurati, commortui et conresuscitati, donec cum Eo conregnemus [cf. Phil 3:21; 2 Tim 2:11; Eph 2:6; Col 2:12; etc.]. In terris adhuc peregrinantes, Eiusque vestigia in tribulatione et persecutione prementes, Eius passionibus tamquam corpus Capiti consociamur, Ei compatientes, ut cum Eo conglorificemur [cf. Rm 8:17].

Ex Eo “totum corpus, per nexus et coniunctiones subministratum et constructum, crescit in augmentum Dei” [cf. Col 2:19]. Ipse in corpore suo, scilicet Ecclesia, dona ministracionum iugiter disponit, quibus Ipsius virtute nobis invicem ad salutem servitia praestamus, ut veritatem facientes in caritate, crescamus in Illum per omnia, qui est Caput nostrum [cf. Eph 4:11–16 gr.].

Ut autem in Illo incessanter renovemur [cf. Eph 4:23], dedit nobis de Spiritu suo, qui unus et idem in Capite et in membris existens, totum corpus ita vivificat, unificat et movet, ut Eius officium a [11] sanctis Patribus comparari potuerit cum munere, quod principium vitae seu anima in corpore humano adimplet.¹

Christus vero diligit Ecclesiam ut sponsam suam, exemplar factus viri diligentis uxorem suam ut corpus suum [cf. Eph 5:25–28]; ipsa vero Ecclesia subiecta est Capiti suo [ib. 23s]. “Quia in Ipso inhabitat omnis plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter” [cf. Col 2:9], Ecclesiam, quae corpus et plenitudo Eius est, divinis suis donis replet [cf. Eph 1:22s], ut ipsa protendat et perveniat ad omnem plenitudinem Dei [cf. Eph 3:19].

The Head of this Body is Christ. He is the image of the invisible God, and in him all things came into being. He is before all creatures, and in him all things hold together. He is the Head of the Body which is the Church. He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, that in all things he might have the first place [cf. Col 1:15–18]. By the greatness of his power, he rules the things in heaven and the things on earth, and with his all-surpassing perfection and way of acting, he fills the whole Body with the riches of his glory [cf. Eph 1:18–23].¹

All the members ought to be molded in the likeness of him, until Christ be formed in them [cf. Gal 4:19]. For this reason we, who have been made to conform with him, who have died with him and risen with him, are taken up into the mysteries of his life, until we will reign together with him [cf. Phil 3:21; 2 Tim 2:11; Eph 2:6; Col 2:12, etc.]. On earth, still as pilgrims in a strange land, tracing in trial and in oppression the paths he trod, we are made one with his sufferings like the body is one with the head, suffering with him, that with him we may be glorified [cf. Rom 8:17].

From him “the whole body, supplied and built up by joints and ligaments, attains a growth that is of God [cf. Col 2:19]. He continually distributes in his Body, that is, in the Church, gifts of ministries in which, by his own power, we serve each other unto salvation so that, carrying out the truth in love, we might through all things grow unto him who is our Head [cf. Eph 4:11–16, Gk.].

In order that we might be unceasingly renewed in him [cf. Eph 4:23], he has shared with us his Spirit, who, existing as one and the same being in the Head and in the members, gives life to, unifies, and moves through the whole Body. This he does in such a way that his work could be compared by the holy Fathers with the function that the principle of life, that is, the soul, fulfills in the human body.¹

Christ loves the Church as his bride, having become the model of a man loving his wife as his body [cf. Eph 5:25–28]; the Church, indeed, is subject to her Head [cf. Eph 5:23f.]. “Because in him dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily” [cf. Col 2:9], he fills the Church, which is his Body and his fullness, with his divine gifts [cf. Eph 1:22f.], so that she may expand and reach all the fullness of God [cf. Eph 3:19].

Ideo ob non mediocrem analogiam incarnati Verbi mysterio assimilatur. Sicut enim natura assumpta Verbo divino ut vivum organum salutis, Ei indissolubiliter unitum, inservit, non dissimili modo socialis compago Ecclesiae Spiritui Christi, eam vivificanti, ad augmentum corporis inservit [cf. Eph 4:16].³

Haec Ecclesia, in hoc mundo ut societas constituta et ordinata, subsistit in Ecclesia catholica, a successore Petri et Episcopis in eius communione gubernata,² licet extra eius compaginem elementa plura sanctificationis et veritatis inveniantur, quae ut dona Ecclesiae Christi propria, ad unitatem catholicam impellunt.

4120 Sicut autem Christus opus redemptionis in paupertate et persecutione perfecit, ita Ecclesia ad eandem viam ingrediendam vocatur, ut fructus salutis hominibus communicet. Christus Iesus, “cum in forma Dei esset, ... semetipsum exinanivit, formam servi accipiens” [Phil 2:6] et propter nos “egenus factus est, cum esset dives” [2 Cor 8:9]: ita Ecclesia, licet ad missionem suam exsequendam humanis opibus indigeat, non ad gloriam terrestrem quaerendam erigitur, sed ad humilitatem et abnegationem etiam exemplo suo divulgandas.

8. Christ, the one Mediator, established and continually sustains here on earth his holy Church, the community of faith, hope, and charity, as an entity with visible delineation¹ through which he communicated truth and grace to all. But, the society structured with hierarchical organs and the Mystical Body of Christ are not to be considered as two realities, nor are the visible assembly and the spiritual community, nor the earthly Church and the Church enriched with heavenly things; rather they form one complex reality that coalesces from a divine and a human element.²

For this reason, by no weak analogy, it is compared to the mystery of the incarnate Word. As the assumed nature inseparably united to him serves the divine Word as a living organ of salvation, so, in a similar way, does the visible social structure of the Church serve the Spirit of Christ, who vivifies her, in the building up of the body [cf. Eph 4:16].³

This is the one Church of Christ that in the Creed is professed as one, holy, catholic, and apostolic,¹ which our Savior, after his Resurrection, commissioned Peter to shepherd [Jn 21:17] and him and the other apostles to extend and direct with authority [cf. Mt 28:18–20], which he erected for all ages as “the pillar and mainstay of the truth” [1 Tim 3:15].

This Church, constituted and organized in the world as a society, subsists in the Catholic Church, which is governed by the successor of Peter and by the bishops in communion with him,² although many elements of sanctification and of truth are found outside of her visible structure. These elements, as gifts belonging to the Church of Christ, are forces impelling toward catholic unity.

Just as Christ carried out the work of redemption in poverty and persecution, so the Church is called to follow the same route that she might communicate the fruits of salvation to men. Christ Jesus, “though he was by nature God ... emptied himself, taking the nature of a slave” [Phil 2:6], and “being rich, became poor” [2 Cor 8:9] for our sakes. Thus, the Church, although she needs human resources to carry out her mission, is not set up to seek earthly glory, but to proclaim, even by her own example, humility and self-sacrifice.

Christus a Patre missus est “evangelizare pauperibus, ... sanare contritos corde” [Lc 4:18], “quaerere et salvum facere quod perierat” [Lc 19:10]; similiter Ecclesia omnes infirmitate humana afflictos amore circumdat, imo in pauperibus et patientibus imaginem Fundatoris sui pauperis et patientis agnoscit, eorum inopiam sublevare satagit, et Christo in eis inservire intendit. Dum vero Christus, “sanctus, innocens, impollutus” [Hbr 7:26], peccatum non novit [2 Cor 5:21], sed sola delicta populi repropitiare venit [cf. Hbr 2:17], Ecclesia in proprio sinu peccatores complectens, sancta simul et semper purificanda, poenitentiam et renovationem continuo prosequitur.

DE POPULO DEI

9. In omni quidem tempore et in omni gente Deo acceptus est quicumque timet Eum et operatur iustitiam [cf. Act 10:35], Placuit tamen Deo homines non singulatim, quavis mutua connexione seclusa, [13] sanctificare et salvare, sed eos in populum constituere, qui in veritate Ipsum agnosceret Ipsique sancte serviret. Plebem igitur israeliticam Sibi in populum elegit, quocum foedus instituit et quem gradatim instruxit, Sese atque propositum voluntatis suae in eius historia manifestando eumque Sibi sanctificando.

Haec tamen omnia in praeparationem et figuram contigerunt foederis illius novi et perfecti, in Christo ferendi, et plenioris revelationis per Ipsum Dei Verbum carnem factum tradendae. “Ecce dies veniunt, dicit Dominus, et feriam domui Israel et domui Iuda foedus novum ... Dabo legem meam in visceribus eorum, et in corde eorum scribam eam, et ero eis in Deum, et ipsi erunt Mihi in populum ... Omnes enim cognoscent Me, a minimo usque ad maximum, ait Dominus” [Jer 31:31-34].

Quod foedus novum Christus instituit, novum scilicet testamentum in suo sanguine [cf. 1 Cor 11:25], ex Iudaeis

Christ was sent by the Father “to bring good news to the poor, to heal the contrite of heart” [Lk 4:18], “to seek and to save what was lost” [Lk 19:10]. Similarly, the Church encompasses with love all who are afflicted with human suffering and in the poor and afflicted sees the image of her poor and suffering Founder. She does all she can to relieve their need, and in them she strives to serve Christ. While Christ, holy, innocent, and undefiled [Hbr 7:26], knew nothing of sin [2 Cor 5:21], but came to expiate only the sins of the people [cf. Heb 2:17], the Church, embracing in her bosom sinners, at the same time holy and always in need of being purified, always follows the way of penance and renewal.

The Church, “like a stranger in a foreign land, presses forward amid the persecutions of the world and the consolations of God,¹ announcing the Cross and death of the Lord until he comes” [cf. 1 Cor 11:26]. By the power of the risen Lord, she is given strength that she might, in patience and in love, overcome her sorrows and her challenges, both within herself and from without, and that she might reveal to the world, faithfully though darkly, the mystery of her Lord until, in the end, it will be manifested in full light.

ON THE PEOPLE OF GOD

9. At all times and in every race God has given welcome to whosoever fears him and does what is right [Acts 10:35]. God, however, does not make men holy and save them merely as individuals, without bond or link between one another. Rather has it pleased him to bring men together as one people, a people that acknowledges him in truth and serves him in holiness. He therefore chose the race of Israel as a people unto himself. With it he set up a covenant. Step by step he taught and prepared this people, making known in its history both himself and the decree of his will and making it holy unto himself.

All these things, however, were done by way of preparation and as a figure of that new and perfect covenant which was to be ratified in Christ and of that fuller revelation which was to be given through the Word of God himself made flesh. “Behold the days shall come, says the Lord, and I will make a new covenant with the House of Israel, and with the house of Judah. ... I will give my law in their bowels, and I will write it in their heart, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. ... For all of them shall know me, from the least of them even to the greatest, says the Lord” [Jer 31:31-34].

Christ instituted this new covenant, the new testament, that is to say, in his Blood [cf. 1 Cor 11:25], calling ac gentibus plebem vocans, quae non secundum carnem sed in Spiritu ad unitatem coalesceret, essetque novus Populus Dei. Credentes enim in Christum, renati non ex semine corruptibili, sed incorruptibili per verbum Dei vivi [cf. 1 Pt 1:23], non ex carne sed ex aqua et Spiritu Sancto [cf. Io 3:5s], constituuntur tandem “genus electum, regale sacerdotium, gens sancta, populus acquisitionis . . . qui aliquando non populus, nunc autem populus Dei” [1 Pt 2:9s].

4123 Populus ille messianicus habet pro capite Christum, “qui traditus est propter delicta nostra et resurrexit propter iustificationem nostram” [Rm 4:25], et nunc nomen quod est super omne nomen adeptus, gloriose regnat in caelis. Habet pro conditione dignitatem libertatemque filiorum Dei, in quorum cordibus Spiritus Sanctus sicut in templo inhabitat. Habet pro lege mandatum novum diligendi sicut ipse Christus dilexit nos [cf. Io 13:34]. Habet tandem pro fine Regnum Dei, ab ipso Deo in terris inchoatum, ulterius dilatandum, donec in fine saeculorum ab Ipso etiam consummetur, cum Christus apparuerit, vita nostra [cf. Col 3:4], et “ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei” [Rm 8:21].

Itaque populus ille messianicus, quamvis universos homines actu non comprehendat, et non semel ut pusillus grex appareat, pro toto tamen genere humano firmissimum est germen unitatis, spei et salutis. A Christo in communionem vitae, caritatis et veritatis constitutus, ab Eo etiam ut instrumentum redemptionis omnium adsumitur, et tamquam lux mundi et sal terrae [cf. Mt 5:13-16], ad universum mundum emittitur.

4124 Sicut vero Israel secundum carnem, qui in deserto peregrinabatur, Dei Ecclesia iam appellatur [2 Esr 13:1; cf. Nm 20:4; Dt 23:1-8] [14], ita novus Israel qui in praesenti saeculo incedens, futuram eamque manentem civitatem inquirat [cf. Hbr 13:14], etiam Ecclesia Christi nuncupatur [cf. Mt 16:18], quippe quam Ipse sanguine suo acquisivit [cf. Act 20:28], suo Spiritu replevit, aptisque mediis unionis visibilis et socialis instruxit.

Deus congregationem eorum qui in Iesum, salutis auctorem et unitatis pacisque principium, credentes aspiciunt, convocavit et constituit Ecclesiam, ut sit universis et singulis sacramentum visibile huius salutiferae unitatis.¹ Ad universas regiones extendenda, in historiam hominum intrat, dum tamen simul tempora et fines populorum transcendit. Per tentationes vero et tribulationes procedens Ecclesia virtute gratiae Dei sibi a Domino promissae confortatur, ut in infirmitate carnis together a people made up of Jew and Gentile, making them one, not according to the flesh, but in the Spirit. This was to be the new people of God. For those who believe in Christ, who are reborn, not from a perishable, but from an imperishable seed through the word of the living God [cf. 1 Pet 1:23], not from the flesh, but from water and the Holy Spirit [cf. Jn 3:5f.], are finally established as “a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased people . . . who in times past were not a people, but are now the people of God” [1 Pet 2:9f.].

That messianic people has Christ for its head, “who was delivered up for our sins, and rose again for our justification” [Rm 4:25], and now, having won a name that is above all names, reigns in glory in heaven. The state of this people is that of the dignity and freedom of the sons of God, in whose hearts the Holy Spirit dwells as in his temple. Its law is the new commandment to love as Christ loved us [cf. Jn 13:34]. Its end is the kingdom of God, which has been begun by God himself on earth and which is to be further extended until it is brought to perfection by him at the end of time, when Christ, our life [cf. Col 3:4], shall appear and “creation itself will be delivered from its slavery to corruption into the freedom of the glory of the sons of God” [Rm 8:21].

So it is that that messianic people, although it does not actually include all men and at times may look like a small flock, is nonetheless a lasting and sure seed of unity, hope, and salvation for the whole human race. Established by Christ as a communion of life, charity, and truth, it is also used by him as an instrument for the redemption of all and is sent forth into the whole world as the light of the world and the salt of the earth [cf. Mt 5:13-16].

Israel according to the flesh, which wandered as an exile in the desert, was already called the Church of God [Neh 13:1; cf. Num 20:4; Deut 23:1-8]. So, likewise, the new Israel that while living in this present age goes in search of a future and abiding city [cf. Heb 13:14] is called the Church of Christ [cf. Mt 16:18]. For he has bought it for himself with his blood [cf. Acts 20:28], has filled it with his Spirit, and provided it with those means that befit it as a visible and social union.

God gathered together as one all those who in faith look upon Jesus as the author of salvation and the source of unity and peace and established them as the Church that for each and all she may be the visible sacrament of this saving unity.¹ While she transcends all limits of time and confines of race, the Church is destined to extend to all regions of the earth and so enters into the history of mankind. Moving forward through trial and tribulation, the Church is strengthened by the power of a perfecta fidelitate non deficiat, sed Domini sui digna sponsa remaneat, et sub actione Spiritus Sancti, seipsam renovare non desinat, donec per crucem perveniat ad lucem, quae nescit occasum.

10. Christus Dominus, Pontifex ex hominibus assumptus [cf. Hbr 5:1-5] novum populum “fecit regnum et sacerdotes Deo et Patri suo” [Apc 1:6; cf. 5:9s]. Baptizati enim, per regenerationem et Spiritus Sancti unctionem consecrantur in domum spiritualem et sacerdotium sanctum, ut per omnia opera hominis christiani spirituales offerant hostias, et virtutes annuntient Eius qui de tenebris eos vocavit in admirabile lumen suum [cf. 1 Pt 2:4-10]. Ideo universi discipuli Christi, in oratione perseverantes et collaudantes Deum [cf. Act 2:42-47], seipsos hostiam viventem, sanctam, Deo placentem exhibeant [cf. Rm 12:1], ubique terrarum de Christo testimonium perhibeant, atque poscentibus rationem reddant de ea, quae in eis est, spe vitae aeternae [cf. 1 Pt 3:15].

Sacerdotium autem commune fidelium et sacerdotium ministeriale seu hierarchicum, licet essentia et non gradu tantum differant, ad invicem tamen ordinantur; unum enim et alterum suo peculiari modo de uno Christi sacerdotio participant.¹ Sacerdos quidem ministerialis, potestate sacra qua gaudet, populum sacerdotalem efformat ac regit, sacrificium eucharisticum in persona Christi conficit illudque nomine totius populi Deo offert; fideles vero, vi regalis sui sacerdotii, in [15] oblationem Eucharistiae concurrunt,² illudque in sacramentis suscipiendis, in oratione et gratiarum actione, testimonio vitae sanctae, abnegatione et actuosa caritate exercent.

11. Indoles sacra et organice exstructa communitatis sacerdotalis et per sacramenta et per virtutes ad actum deducitur. Fideles per baptismum in Ecclesia incorporati, ad cultum religionis christianae caractere deputantur et, in filios Dei regenerati, fidem quam a Deo per Ecclesiam acceperunt coram hominibus profiteri tenentur.¹

Sacramento confirmationis perfectius Ecclesiae vinculantur, speciali Spiritus Sancti robore ditantur, sique ad fidem tamquam veri testes Christi verbo

God’s grace, which was promised to her by the Lord, so that in the weakness of the flesh she may not waver from perfect fidelity but remain a bride worthy of her Lord and, moved by the Holy Spirit, may never cease to renew herself, until through the Cross she arrives at the light that knows no setting.

10. Christ the Lord, High Priest taken from among men [cf. Heb 5:1-5], made the new people “a kingdom and priests to God the Father” [Rev 1:6; cf. 5:9f.]. The baptized, by regeneration and the anointing of the Holy Spirit, are consecrated as a spiritual house and a holy priesthood, in order that through all those works that are those of the Christian man they may offer spiritual sacrifices and proclaim the power of him who has called them out of darkness into his marvelous light [cf. 1 Pet 2:4-10]. Therefore, all the disciples of Christ, persevering in prayer and praising God [cf. Acts 2:42-47], should present themselves as a living sacrifice, holy and pleasing to God [cf. Rom 12:1]. Everywhere on earth they must bear witness to Christ and give an answer to those who seek an account of that hope of eternal life which is in them [cf. 1 Pet 3:15].

Though they differ from one another in essence and not only in degree, the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial or hierarchical priesthood are nonetheless interrelated: each of them in its own special way is a participation in the one priesthood of Christ.¹ The ministerial priest, by the sacred power he enjoys, teaches and rules the priestly people; acting in the person of Christ, he makes present the eucharistic sacrifice and offers it to God in the name of all the people. But the faithful, in virtue of their royal priesthood, join in the offering of the Eucharist.² They likewise exercise that priesthood in receiving the sacraments, in prayer and thanksgiving, in the witness of a holy life, and by self-denial and active charity.

11. It is through the sacraments and the exercise of the virtues that the sacred nature and organic structure of the priestly community is brought into operation. Incorporated in the Church through baptism, the faithful are destined by the baptismal character for the worship of the Christian religion; reborn as sons of God, they must confess before men the faith they have received from God through the Church.¹

They are more perfectly bound to the Church by the sacrament of confirmation, and the Holy Spirit endows them with special strength so that they are more strictly

Sacra infirmorum unctione atque oratione presbyterorum Ecclesia tota aegrotantes Domino patienti et glorificato commendat, ut eos alleviet et salvet [cf. Iac 5:14–16], immo eos hortatur ut sese Christi passioni et morti libere sociantes [cf. Rm 8:17; Col 1:24; 2 Tim 2:11s; 1 Pt 4:13], ad bonum Populi Dei conferant.

Tandem coniuges christiani, virtute matrimonii sacramenti, quo mysterium unitatis et fecundi amoris inter Christum et Ecclesiam significant atque participant [cf. Eph 5:32], se invicem in vita coniugali necnon [16] prolis susceptione et educatione ad sanctitatem adiuvant, adeoque in suo vitae statu et ordine proprium suum in Populo Dei donum habent [cf. 1 Cor 7:7].¹ Ex hoc enim connubio procedit familia, in qua nascuntur novi societatis humanae cives, qui per Spiritus Sancti gratiam, ad Populum Dei saeculorum decursu perpetuandum, baptismo in filios Dei constituuntur. In hac velut Ecclesia domestica parentes verbo et exemplo sint pro filiis suis primi fidei praecones, et vocationem unicuique propriam, sacram vero peculiari cura, foveant oportet.

obliged to spread and defend the faith, both by word and by deed, as true witnesses of Christ.²

Taking part in the eucharistic sacrifice, which is the fount and apex of the whole Christian life, they offer the Divine Victim to God and offer themselves along with it.³ Thus both by reason of the offering and through Holy Communion, all take part in this liturgical service, not indeed, all in the same way, but each in that way which is proper to himself. Strengthened in Holy Communion by the body of Christ, they then manifest in a concrete way that unity of the people of God which is suitably signified and wondrously brought about by this most august sacrament.

Those who approach the sacrament of penance obtain pardon from the mercy of God for the offense committed against him and are at the same time reconciled with the Church, which they have wounded by their sins and which by charity, example, and prayer seeks their conversion.

By the sacred anointing of the sick and the prayer of her priests, the whole Church commends the sick to the suffering and glorified Lord, asking that he may lighten their suffering and save them [cf. James 5:14–16]; she exhorts them, moreover, to contribute to the welfare of the whole people of God by associating themselves freely with the Passion and death of Christ [cf. Rom 8:17; Col 1:24; 2 Tim 2:11f.; 1 Pet 4:13].

Those of the faithful who are consecrated by holy orders are appointed to feed the Church in Christ's name with the word and the grace of God.

Finally, Christian spouses, in virtue of the sacrament of matrimony, whereby they signify and partake of the mystery of that unity and fruitful love which exists between Christ and his Church [cf. Eph 5:32], help each other to attain to holiness in their married life and in the rearing and education of their children. By reason of their state and rank in life, they have their own special gift among the people of God [cf. 1 Cor 7:7].¹ From the wedlock of Christians there comes the family, in which new citizens of human society are born, who by the grace of the Holy Spirit received in baptism are made children of God, thus perpetuating the people of God through the centuries. The family is, so to speak, the domestic church. In it parents should, by their word and example, be the first preachers of the faith to their children; they should encourage them in the vocation that is proper to each of them, fostering with special care vocation to a sacred state.

Universitas fidelium, qui unctionem habent a Sancto [cf. 1 Io 2:20, 27], in credendo falli nequit, atque hanc suam peculiarem proprietatem mediante supernaturali sensu fidei totius populi manifestat, cum “ab Episcopis usque ad extremos laicos fideles”¹ universalem suum consensum de rebus fidei et morum exhibet. Illo enim sensu fidei, qui a Spiritu veritatis excitatur et sustentatur, Populus Dei sub ductu sacri magisterii, cui fideliter obsequens, iam non verbum hominum, sed vere accipit verbum Dei [cf. 1 Th 2:13], semel traditae sanctis fidei [cf. Iud 3], indefectibiliter adhaeret, recto iudicio in eam profundius penetrat eamque in vita plenius applicat.

Idem praeterea Spiritus Sanctus non tantum per sacramenta et ministeria Populum Dei sanctificat et ducit eumque virtutibus ornat, sed dona sua “dividens singulis prout vult” [1 Cor 12:11], inter omnis ordinis fideles distribuit gratias quoque speciales, quibus illos aptos et promptos reddit ad suscipienda varia opera vel officia, pro renovatione et ampliore aedificatione Ecclesiae proficua, secundum illud: “Unicuique datur manifestatio Spiritus ad utilitatem” [1 Cor 12:7]. Quae charismata, sive clarissima, sive etiam simpliciora et latius diffusa, cum sint necessitatibus Ecclesiae apprime accommodata et utilia, cum gratiarum [17] actione ac consolatione accipienda sunt.

Dona autem extraordinaria non sunt temere expetenda, neque praesumptuose ab eis sperandi sunt fructus operarum apostolicarum; sed iudicium de eorum genuinitate et ordinato exercitio ad eos pertinet, qui in Ecclesia praesunt, et quibus speciatim competit, non Spiritum extinguere, sed omnia probare et quod bonum est tenere [cf. 1 Th 5:12, 19-21].

13. Ad novum Populum Dei cuncti vocantur homines. Quapropter hic populus, unus et unicus manens, ad universum mundum et per omnia saecula est dilatandus, ut propositum adimpleatur voluntatis Dei, qui naturam

Fortified by so many and such powerful means of salvation, all the faithful, whatever their condition or state, are called by the Lord, each in his own way, to that perfect holiness whereby the Father himself is perfect. 4129

12. The holy people of God shares also in Christ's prophetic office; it spreads abroad a living witness to him, especially by means of a life of faith and charity and by offering to God a sacrifice of praise, the tribute of lips that give praise to his name [cf. Heb 13:15]. 4130

The entire body of the faithful, anointed as they are by the Holy One [cf. 1 Jn 2:20, 27], cannot err in matters of belief. They manifest this special property by means of the whole peoples' supernatural discernment in matters of faith when “from the bishops down to the last of the lay faithful”¹ they show universal agreement in matters of faith and morals. That discernment in matters of faith is aroused and sustained by the Spirit of truth. It is exercised under the guidance of the sacred teaching authority, in faithful and respectful obedience to which the people of God accepts that which is not just the word of men but truly the word of God [cf. 1 Thess 2:13]. Through it, the people of God adheres unwaveringly to the faith given once and for all to the saints [cf. Jude 3], penetrates it more deeply with right thinking, and applies it more fully in its life.

It is not only through the sacraments and the ministries of the Church that the Holy Spirit sanctifies and leads the people of God and enriches it with virtues, but, “allotting his gifts to everyone according as he wills” [1 Cor 12:11], he distributes special graces among the faithful of every rank. By these gifts he makes them fit and ready to undertake the various tasks and offices that contribute toward the renewal and building up of the Church, according to the words of the apostle: “The manifestation of the Spirit is given to everyone for profit” [1 Cor 12:7]. These charisms, whether they be the more outstanding or the more simple and widely diffused, are to be received with thanksgiving and consolation for they are perfectly suited to and useful for the needs of the Church. 4131

Extraordinary gifts, however, are not to be sought after rashly, nor are the fruits of apostolic labor to be presumptuously expected from their use; but judgment as to their genuineness and proper use belongs to those who are appointed leaders in the Church, to whose special competence it belongs, not indeed to extinguish the Spirit, but to test all things and hold fast to that which is good [cf. 1 Thess 5:12, 19-21].

13. All men are called to belong to the new people of God. Wherefore this people, while remaining one and only one, is to be spread throughout the whole world and must exist in all ages, so that the decree of God's 4132 humanam in initio condidit unam, filiosque suos, qui erant dispersi, in unum tandem congregare statuit [cf. Io 11:52]. Ad hoc enim misit Deus Filium suum, quem constituit heredem universorum [cf. Hbr 1:2], ut sit Magister, Rex et Sacerdos omnium, Caput novi et universalis populi filiorum Dei. Ad hoc tandem misit Deus Spiritum Filii sui, Dominum et Vivificantem, qui pro tota Ecclesia et singulis universisque credentibus principium est congregationis et unitatis in doctrina Apostolorum et communione, fractione panis et orationibus [cf. Act 2:42, gr.].

Cum autem Regnum Christi de hoc mundo non sit [cf. Io 18:36], ideo Ecclesia seu Populus Dei, hoc Regnum inducens, nihil bono temporali cuiusvis populi subtrahit, sed e contra facultates et copias moresque populorum, quantum bona sunt, fovet et assumit, assumendo vero purificat, roborat et elevat. Memor est enim se cum illo Rege colligere debere, Cui gentes in hereditatem datae sunt [cf. Ps 2:8], et in Cuius civitatem dona et munera adducunt [cf. Ps 71:10; Is 60:4-7; Apc 21:24]. Hic universalitatis character, qui Populum Dei condecorat, ipsius Domini donum est, quo catholica Ecclesia efficaciter et perpetuo tendit ad recapitulandam totam humanitatem cum omnibus bonis eius, sub Capite Christo, in unitate Spiritus Eius.²

Inde fit ut Populus Dei non tantum ex diversis populis congregetur, sed etiam in seipso ex variis ordinibus conflatur. Adest enim inter membra eius diversitas, sive secundum officia, dum aliqui sacro ministerio in bonum fratrum suorum funguntur, sive will may be fulfilled. In the beginning God made human nature one and decreed that all his children, scattered as they were, would finally be gathered together as one [cf. Jn 11:52]. It was for this purpose that God sent his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things [cf. Heb 1:2], that he might be teacher, king, and priest of all, the head of the new and universal people of the sons of God. For this, too, God sent the Spirit of his Son as Lord and Life-giver. He it is who brings together the whole Church and each and every one of those who believe and who is the wellspring of their unity in the teaching of the apostles and in fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers [cf. Acts 2:42, Gk.].

It follows that though there are many nations, there is but one people of God, which takes its citizens from every race, making them citizens of a kingdom that is of a heavenly rather than of an earthly nature. All the faithful, scattered though they be throughout the world, are in communion with each other in the Holy Spirit, and, so, he who dwells in Rome “knows that the people of India are his members”.¹

Since the kingdom of Christ is not of this world [cf. Jn 18:36], the Church or people of God in establishing that kingdom takes nothing away from the temporal welfare of any people. On the contrary, she fosters and takes to herself, insofar as they are good, the ability, riches, and customs in which the genius of each people expresses itself. Taking them to herself, she purifies, strengthens, elevates, and ennobles them. The Church in this is mindful that she must bring together the nations for that king to whom they were given as an inheritance [cf. Ps 2:8] and to whose city they bring gifts and offerings [cf. Ps 72:10; Is 60:4-7; Rev 21:24]. This characteristic of universality that adorns the people of God is a gift from the Lord himself. By reason of it, the Catholic Church strives constantly and with due effect to bring all humanity and all its possessions back to its source in Christ, with him as its head and united in his Spirit.²

In virtue of this catholicity, each individual part contributes through its special gifts to the good of the other parts and of the whole Church. Through the common sharing of gifts and through the common effort to attain fullness in unity, the whole and each of the parts receive increase. Not only, then, is the people of God made up of different peoples, but in its inner structure also it is composed of various ranks. This diversity among its members arises either by reason of their duties,

Inde etiam in ecclesiastica communione legitime adsunt Ecclesiae particulares, propriis traditionibus fruentes, integro manente primatu Petri Cathedrae, quae universo caritatis coetui praesidet,¹ legitimas varietates tuetur et simul invigilat ut particularia, nedum unitati noceant, ei potius inserviant.

Inde denique inter diversas Ecclesiae partes vincula intimae communionis quoad divitias spirituales, operarios apostolicos et temporalia subsidia. Ad communicandum enim bona vocantur membra Populi Dei, et de singulis etiam Ecclesiis valent verba Apostoli: “Unusquisque, sicut accepit gratiam, in alterutrum illam administrates, sicut boni dispensatores multiformis gratiae Dei” [1 Pt 4:10].

Ad hanc igitur catholicam Populi Dei unitatem, quae pacem universalem praesignat et promovet, omnes vocantur homines, ad eamque variis modis pertinent vel ordinantur sive fideles catholici, sive alii credentes in Christo, sive denique omnes universaliter homines, gratia Dei ad salutem vocati.

14. Ad fideles ergo catholicos imprimis Sancta Synodus animum vertit. Docet autem, Sacra Scriptura et Traditione innixa, Ecclesiam hanc peregrinantem necessariam esse ad salutem. Unus enim Christus est Mediator ac via salutis, qui in Corpore suo, quod est Ecclesia, praesens nobis fit; Ipse autem necessitatem fidei et baptismi expressis verbis inculcando [cf. Mk 16:16; Io 3:5], necessitatem Ecclesiae, in quam homines per baptismum tamquam per ianuam intrant, simul confirmavit. Quare illi homines salvari non possent, qui Ecclesiam Catholicam a Deo per Iesum Christum ut necessariam esse conditam non ignorantes, tamen vel in eam intrare, vel in eadem perseverare noluerint.

Illi plene Ecclesiae societati incorporantur, qui Spiritum Christi habentes, integram eius ordinationem omniaque media salutis in ea instituta accipiunt, et in eiusdem compage visibili cum Christo, eam per Summum Pontificem atque Episcopos regente, iunguntur, vinculis [19] nempe professionis fidei, sacramentorum et ecclesiastici regiminis ac communionis. Non salvatur tamen, licet Ecclesiae incorporetur, qui in caritate non as is the case with those who exercise the sacred ministry for the good of their brethren, or by reason of their condition and state of life, as is the case with those many who enter the religious state and, tending toward holiness by a narrower path, stimulate their brethren by their example.

Moreover, within the Church particular Churches hold a rightful place; these Churches retain their own traditions, without in any way opposing the primacy of the Chair of Peter, which presides over the whole assembly of charity¹ and protects legitimate differences, while at the same time assuring that such differences do not hinder unity but rather contribute toward it.

Between all the parts of the Church there remains a bond of close communion whereby they share spiritual riches, apostolic workers, and temporal resources. For the members of the people of God are called to share these goods in common, and of each of the Churches the words of the apostle hold good: “According to the gift that each has received, administer it to one another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God” [1 Pet 4:10].

All men are called to be part of this catholic unity of the people of God which in promoting universal peace presages it. And there belong to or are related to it in various ways the Catholic faithful, all who believe in Christ, and indeed the whole of mankind, for all men are called by the grace of God to salvation. 4135

14. This sacred council wishes to turn its attention firstly to the Catholic faithful. Basing itself upon Sacred Scripture and tradition, it teaches that the Church, now sojourning on earth as an exile, is necessary for salvation. Christ, present to us in his Body, which is the Church, is the one Mediator and the unique way of salvation. In explicit terms he himself affirmed the necessity of faith and baptism [cf. Mk 16:16; Jn 3:5] and thereby affirmed also the necessity of the Church, for through baptism as through a door men enter the Church. Whosoever, therefore, knowing that the Catholic Church was made necessary by God through Jesus Christ, would refuse to enter or to remain in her could not be saved. 4136

They are fully incorporated in the society of the Church who, possessing the Spirit of Christ, accept her entire system and all the means of salvation given to her and are united with her as part of her visible bodily structure and through her with Christ, who rules her through the supreme pontiff and the bishops. The bonds that bind men to the Church in a visible way are profession of faith, the sacraments, and ecclesiastical government and 4137

perseverans, in Ecclesiae sinu “corpore” quidem, sed non “corde” remanet.¹

Memores autem sint omnes Ecclesiae filii condicionem suam eximiam non propriis meritis, sed peculiari gratiae Christi esse adscribendam; cui si cogitatione, verbo et opere non respondent, nedum salventur, severius iudicabuntur.²

4139 15. Cum illis qui, baptizati, christiano nomine decorantur, integram autem fidem non profitentur vel unitatem communionis sub Successore Petri non servant, Ecclesia semetipsam novit plures ob rationes coniunctam.¹

Sunt enim multi, qui sacram Scripturam ut normam credendi et vivendi in honore habent sincerumque zelum religiosum ostendunt, amanter credunt in Deum Patrem omnipotentem et in Christum, Filium Dei Salvatorem,² baptismo signantur, quo Christo coniunguntur, imo et alia sacramenta in propriis Ecclesiis vel communitatibus ecclesiasticis agnoscunt et recipiunt. Plures inter illos et episcopatu gaudent, Sacram Eucharistiam celebrant necnon pietatem erga Deiparam Virginem fovent.³ Accedit orationum aliorumque beneficiorum spiritualium communio; imo vera quaedam in Spiritu Sancto coniunctio, quippe qui donis et gratis etiam in illis sua virtute sanctificante operatur, et quosdam illorum usque ad sanguinis effusionem roboravit.

Ita Spiritus in cunctis Christi discipulis desiderium actionemque suscitatur, ut omnes, modo a Christo statuto, in uno grege sub uno Pastore pacifice uniantur.⁴ [20] Quod ut obtineat, Ecclesia Mater precari, sperare et agere non desinit, filiosque ad purificationem et renovationem communionis. He is not saved, however, who, though part of the body of the Church, does not persevere in charity. He remains indeed in the bosom of the Church, but, as it were, only in a “bodily” manner and not “in his heart”.¹

All the Church’s children should remember that their exalted status is to be attributed, not to their own merits, but to the special grace of Christ. If they fail, moreover, to respond to that grace in thought, word, and deed, not only shall they not be saved, but they will be the more severely judged.²

Catechumens who, moved by the Holy Spirit, seek with explicit intention to be incorporated into the Church are by that very intention joined with her. With love and solicitude Mother Church already embraces them as her own.

15. The Church recognizes that in many ways she is linked with those who, being baptized, are honored with the name of Christian, though they do not profess the faith in its entirety or do not preserve unity of communion with the successor of Peter.¹

For there are many who honor Sacred Scripture, taking it as a norm of belief and a pattern of life, and who show a sincere zeal. They lovingly believe in God the Father Almighty and in Christ, the Son of God and Savior.² They are consecrated by baptism, in which they are united with Christ. They also recognize and accept other sacraments within their own Churches or Ecclesiastical Communities. Many of them rejoice in the episcopate, celebrate the Holy Eucharist, and cultivate devotion toward the Virgin Mother of God.³ They also share with us in prayer and other spiritual benefits. Likewise, we can say that in some real way they are joined with us in the Holy Spirit, for to them, too, he gives his gifts and graces whereby he is operative among them with his sanctifying power. Some, indeed, he has strengthened to the extent of the shedding of their blood.

In all of Christ’s disciples the Spirit arouses the desire to be peacefully united, in the manner determined by Christ, as one flock under one shepherd, and he prompts them to pursue this end.⁴ Mother Church never ceases to pray, hope, and work that this may come about. She Sed propositum salutis et eos amplectitur, qui Creatorem agnoscunt, inter quos imprimis Musulmanos, qui fidem Abrahae se tenere profitentes, nobiscum Deum adorant unicum, misericordem, homines die novissimo iudicaturum.

Neque ab aliis, qui in umbris et imaginibus Deum ignotum quaerunt, ab huiusmodi Deus ipse longe est, cum det omnibus vitam et inspirationem et omnia [cf. Act 17:25–28], et Salvator velit omnes homines salvos fieri [cf. 1 Tim 2:4]. Qui enim Evangelium Christi Eiusque Ecclesiam sine culpa ignorantes, Deum tamen sincero corde quaerunt, Eiusque voluntatem per conscientiae dictamen agnitam, operibus adimplere, sub gratiae influxu, conantur, aeternam salutem consequi possunt.²

exhorts her children to purification and renewal so that the sign of Christ may shine more brightly over the face of the earth.

16. Finally, those who have not yet received the gospel are related in various ways to the people of God.¹

In the first place, we must recall the people to whom the testament and the promises were given and from whom Christ was born according to the flesh [cf. Rom 9:4f]. On account of their fathers, this people remains most dear to God, for God does not repent of the gifts he makes or of the calls he issues [cf. Rom 11:28f].

But the plan of salvation also includes those who acknowledge the Creator. In the first place among these there are the Muslims, who, professing to hold the faith of Abraham, along with us adore the one and merciful God, who on the Last Day will judge mankind.

Nor is God far distant from those who in shadows and images seek the unknown God, for it is he who gives to all men life and breath and all things [cf. Acts 17:25–28] and as Savior wills that all men be saved [cf. 1 Tim 2:4]. Those also can attain to salvation who through no fault of their own do not know the gospel of Christ or his Church, yet sincerely seek God and moved by grace strive by their deeds to do his will as it is known to them through the dictates of conscience.²

Nor does divine providence deny the helps necessary for salvation to those who, without blame on their part, have not yet arrived at an explicit knowledge of God and with his grace strive to live a good life. Whatever good or truth is found among them is looked upon by the Church as a preparation for the gospel.³ She knows that it is given by him who enlightens all men so that they may finally have life.

But often men, deceived by the Evil One, have become vain in their reasonings and have exchanged the truth of God for a lie, serving the creature rather than the Creator [cf. Rom 1:21, 25]. Or some there are who, living and dying in this world without God, are exposed to final despair. Wherefore, to promote the glory of God and procure the salvation of all of these, and mindful of the command of the Lord, “Preach the gospel to every creature” [Mk 16:16], the Church fosters the missions with care and attention.

17. As the Son was sent by the Father [cf. Jn 20:21], so he too sent the apostles, saying: “Go, therefore, make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And behold I am with you all days even to the

A Spiritu Sancto enim ad cooperandum compellitur, ut propositum Dei, qui Christum principium salutis pro universo mundo constituit, effectu compleatur. Praedicando Evangelium, Ecclesia audientes ad fidem confessionemque fidei allicit, ad baptismum disponit, a servitute erroris eripit, eosque Christo incorporat, ut per caritatem in illum usque ad plenitudinem crescant. Opera autem sua efficit ut quicquid boni in corde menteque hominum vel in propriis ritibus et culturis populorum seminatam invenitur, non tantum non pereat, sed sanetur, elevetur et consummetur ad gloriam Dei, confusionem daemonis et beatitudinem hominis.

Cuilibet discipulo Christi onus fidei disseminandae pro parte sua incumbit.¹ Sed si quilibet credentes baptizare potest, sacerdotis tamen est aedificationem Corporis sacrificio eucharistico perficere, adimplendo verba Dei per prophetam: “Ab ortu solis usque ad occasum magnum est nomen meum in gentibus, et in omni loco sacrificatur et offertur nomini meo oblatio munda” [Mal 1:11].²

Ita autem simul orat et laborat Ecclesia, ut in Populum Dei, Corpus Domini et Templum Spiritus Sancti, totius mundi transeat plenitudo, et in Christo, omnium Capite, reddatur universorum Creatori ac Patri omnis honor et gloria.

consummationem of the world” [Mt 28:18-20]. The Church has received this solemn mandate of Christ to proclaim the saving truth from the apostles and must carry it out to the very ends of the earth [cf. Acts 1:8]. Wherefore she makes the words of the apostle her own: “Woe to me, if I do not preach the Gospel” [1 Cor 9:16] and continues unceasingly to send heralds of the gospel until such time as the infant churches are fully established and can themselves continue the work of evangelizing.

For the Church is compelled by the Holy Spirit to do her part that God’s plan may be fully realized, whereby he has constituted Christ as the source of salvation for the whole world. By the proclamation of the gospel, she prepares her hearers to receive and profess the faith. She gives them the dispositions necessary for baptism, snatches them from the slavery of error and of idols, and incorporates them in Christ so that through charity they may grow up into full maturity in Christ. Through her work, whatever good is in the minds and hearts of men, whatever good lies latent in the religious practices and cultures of diverse peoples, is not only saved from destruction but is also cleansed, raised up, and perfected unto the glory of God, the confusion of the devil, and the happiness of man.

The obligation of spreading the faith is imposed on every disciple of Christ, according to his state.¹ Although, however, all the faithful can baptize, the priest alone can complete the building up of the Body in the eucharistic sacrifice. Thus are fulfilled the words of God, spoken through his prophet: “From the rising of the sun until the going down thereof my name is great among the Gentiles, and in every place a clean oblation is sacrificed and offered up in my name” [Mal 1:11].²

In this way the Church both prays and labors in order that the entire world may become the people of God, the Body of the Lord, and the Temple of the Holy Spirit and that in Christ, the Head of all, all honor and glory may be rendered to the Creator and Father of the Universe.

THE HIERARCHICAL STRUCTURE OF THE CHURCH AND IN PARTICULAR THE EPISCOPATE

18. For the nurturing and constant growth of the people of God, Christ the Lord instituted in his Church a variety of ministries, which work for the good of the whole body. For those ministers, who are endowed with Haec Sacrosancta Synodus, Concilii Vaticani primi vestigia premens, cum eo docet et declarat Iesum Christum Pastorem aeternum sanctam aedificasse Ecclesiam, missis Apostolis sicut Ipse missus erat a Patre [cf. Io 20:21]; quorum successores, videlicet Episcopos, in Ecclesia sua usque ad consummationem saeculi pastores esse voluit. Ut vero Episcopatus ipse unus et indivisus esset, beatum Petrum ceteris Apostolis praeposuit in ipsoque instituit perpetuum ac visibile unitatis fidei et communionis principium et fundamentum.¹ Quam doctrinam de institutione, perpetuitate, vi ac ratione sacri Primatus Romani Pontificis deque eius infallibili Magisterio, Sacra Synodus cunctis fidelibus firmiter credendam rursus proponit, et in eodem incepto pergens, doctrinam de Episcopis, successoribus Apostolorum, qui cum successore Petri, Christi Vicario² ac totius Ecclesiae visibili Capite, domum Dei viventis regunt, coram omnibus profiteri et declarare constituit.

19. Dominus Iesus, precibus ad Patrem fuis, vocans ad Se quos voluit Ipse, duodecim constituit ut essent cum Illo et ut mitteret eos praedicare Regnum Dei [cf. Mt 3:13–19; Mt 10:1–42]; quos Apostolos [cf. Lc 6:13] ad modum collegii seu coetus stabilis instituit, cui ex iisdem electum Petrum praefecit [cf. Io 21:15–17]. Eos ad filios Israel primum et ad omnes gentes misit [cf. Rm 1:16], ut suae participes potestatis, omnes populos discipulos Ipsius facerent, eosque sanctificarent et gubernarent [cf. Mt 28:16–20; Mt 16:15; Lc 24:45–48; Io 20:21–23], sicque Ecclesiam propagarent, eamque sub ductu Domini ministrando pascere, omnibus diebus usque ad consummationem saeculi [cf. Mt 28:20]. In qua missione die Pentecostes plene confirmati sunt [cf. Act 2:1–26] secundum promissum Domini: “Accipietis virtutem supervenientis Spiritus Sancti in vos, et eritis Mihi testes in Ierusalem, et in omni Iudaea et Samaria, et usque ad ultimum terrae” [cf. Act 1:8]. Apostoli autem praedicando ubique Evangelium [cf. Mt 16:20], ab audientibus Spiritu Sancto operante acceptum, Ecclesiam congregant universalem, quam Dominus in Apostolis condidit [23] et supra beatum Petrum, eorum principem, aedificavit, sacred power, serve their brethren, so that all who are of the people of God, and therefore enjoy a true Christian dignity, working toward a common goal freely and in an orderly way, may arrive at salvation.

This sacred council, following closely in the footsteps of the First Vatican Council, with that council teaches and declares that Jesus Christ, the eternal Shepherd, established his holy Church, having sent forth the apostles as he himself had been sent by the Father [cf. Jn 20:21]; and he willed that their successors, namely the bishops, should be shepherds in his Church even to the consummation of the world. And in order that the episcopate itself might be one and undivided, he placed blessed Peter over the other apostles and instituted in him a permanent and visible source and foundation of unity of faith and communion.¹ And all this teaching about the institution, the perpetuity, the meaning, and reason for the sacred primacy of the Roman pontiff and of his infallible Magisterium, this sacred council again proposes to be firmly believed by all the faithful. Continuing in that same undertaking, this council is resolved to declare and proclaim before all men the doctrine concerning bishops, the successors of the apostles, who together with the successor of Peter, the vicar of Christ,² the visible head of the whole Church, govern the house of the living God.

19. The Lord Jesus, after praying to the Father, calling 4143 to himself those whom he desired, appointed twelve to be with him and whom he would send to preach the kingdom of God [cf. Mt 3:13–19; Mt 10:1–42]; and these apostles [cf. Lc 6:13] he formed after the manner of a college or a stable group, over which he placed Peter chosen from among them [cf. Jn 21:15–17]. He sent them first to the children of Israel and then to all nations [cf. Rom 1:16], so that as sharers in his power they might make all peoples his disciples and sanctify and govern them [cf. Mt 28:16–20; Mt 16:15; Lc 24:45–48; Jn 20:21–23] and thus spread his Church and, by ministering to her under the guidance of the Lord, direct her all days even to the consummation of the world [cf. Mt 28:20]. And in this mission they were fully confirmed on the day of Pentecost [cf. Acts 2:1–26] in accordance with the Lord’s promise: “You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit comes upon you, and you shall be witnesses for me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and in Samaria, and even to the very ends of the earth” [cf. Acts 1:8]. And the apostles, by preaching the gospel everywhere [cf. Mt 16:20], and it being accepted by their hearers under the influence of the Holy Spirit, gather together the universal Church, which the Lord established on the apostles and built upon blessed Peter, their chief, Christ Jesus himself being the supreme cornerstone [cf. Rev 21:14; Mt 16:18; Eph 2:20].¹

Non solum enim varios adiutores in ministerio habuerunt,¹ sed ut missio ipsis concredita post eorum mortem continuaretur, cooperatoribus suis immediatis, quasi per modum testamenti, demandaverunt munus perficiendi et confirmandi opus ab ipsis inceptum,² commendantes illis ut attenderent universo gregi, in quo Spiritus Sanctus eos posuit pascere Ecclesiam Dei [cf. Act 20:28]. Constituerunt itaque huius modi viros ac deinceps ordinationem dederunt, ut cum decessissent, ministerium eorum alii viri probati exciperent.³ Inter varia illa ministeria quae inde a primis temporibus in Ecclesia exercentur, teste traditione, praecipuum locum tenet munus illorum qui, in episcopatum constituti, per successionem ab initio decurrentem,⁴ apostolici seminis traduces habent.⁵ Ita, ut testatur S. Irenaeus, per eos qui ab Apostolis instituti sunt Episcopi et successores eorum usque ad nos, traditio apostolica in toto mundo manifestatur⁶ et custoditur.⁷

Episcopi igitur communitatis ministerium cum adiutoribus [24] presbyteris et diaconis susceperunt,⁸ loco Dei praesidentes gregi,⁹ cuius sunt pastores, ut doctrinae magistri, sacri cultus sacerdotes, gubernationis ministri.¹⁰ Sicut autem permanet munus a Domino singulariter

20. That divine mission, entrusted by Christ to the apostles, will last until the end of the world [cf. Mt 28:20], since the gospel they are to teach is for all time the source of all life for the Church. And for this reason the apostles, appointed as rulers in this society, took care to appoint successors.

For they not only had helpers in their ministry,¹ but also, in order that the mission assigned to them might continue after their death, they passed on to their immediate co-operators, as it were, in the form of a testament, the duty of confirming and finishing the work begun by themselves,² recommending to them that they attend to the whole flock in which the Holy Spirit placed them to shepherd the Church of God [cf. Acts 20:28]. They therefore appointed such men and gave them the order that, when they should have died, other approved men would take up their ministry.³ Among those various ministries that, according to tradition, were exercised in the Church from the earliest times, the chief place belongs to the office of those who, appointed to the episcopate, by a succession running from the beginning,⁴ are passers-on of the apostolic seed.⁵ Thus, as St. Irenaeus testifies, through those who were appointed bishops by the apostles, and through their successors down to our own time, the apostolic tradition is manifested⁶ and preserved.⁷

Bishops, therefore, with their helpers, the priests and deacons, have taken up the service of the community,⁸ presiding in place of God over the flock,⁹ whose shepherds they are, as teachers for doctrine, priests for sacred worship, and ministers for governing.¹⁰ And just

Petro, primo Apostolorum, concessum et successoribus eius transmittendum, ita permanet munus apostolorum pascendi Ecclesiam, ab ordine sacro Episcoporum iugiter exercendum.¹¹ Proinde docet Sacra Synodus Episcopos ex divina Institutione in locum Apostolorum successisse,¹² tamquam Ecclesiae pastores, quos qui audit, Christum audit, qui vero spernit, Christum spernit et Eum qui Christum misit [cf. Lc 10:16].¹³

21. In Episcopis igitur, quibus presbyteri assistunt, adest in medio credentium Dominus Iesus Christus, Pontifex Summus. Sedens enim ad dexteram Dei Patris, non deest a suorum congregatione pontificum,¹ sed imprimis per eorum eximium servitium verum Dei omnibus gentibus praedicat et credentibus sacramenta fidei continuo administrat, eorum paterno munere [cf. 1 Cor 4:15] nova membra Corpori suo regeneratione superna incorporat, eorum denique sapientia et prudentia Populum Novi Testamenti in sua ad aeternam beatitudinem peregrinatione dirigit et ordinat. Hi pastores ad pascendum dominicum gregem electi, ministri Christi sunt et dispensatores mysteriorum Dei [cf. 1 Cor 4:1], quibus concredita est testificatio Evangelii gratiae Dei [cf. Rm 15:16; Act 20:24], atque ministratio Spiritus et iustitiae in gloria [cf. 2 Cor 3:8s].

Ad tanta munera explenda, Apostoli speciali effusione supervenientis Spiritus Sancti a Christo ditati sunt [cf. Act 1:8; 2:4; Io 20:22s], et ipsi adiutoribus suis per impositionem manuum donum spirituale [25] tradiderunt [cf. 1 Tim 4:14; 2 Tim 1:6s], quod usque ad nos in episcopali consecratione transmissum est.² Docet autem Sancta Synodus episcopali consecratione plenitudinem conferri sacramenti Ordinis, quae nimirum et liturgica Ecclesiae consuetudine et voce Sanctorum Patrum summum sacerdotium, sacri ministerii summa nuncupatur.³ Episcopalis autem consecratio, cum munere sanctificandi, munera quoque confert docendi as the office granted individually to Peter, the first among the apostles, is permanent and is to be transmitted to his successors, so also the apostles' office of nurturing the Church is permanent and is to be exercised without interruption by the sacred order of bishops.¹¹ Therefore, the sacred council teaches that bishops by divine institution have succeeded to the place of the apostles,¹² as shepherds of the Church, and he who hears them hears Christ, and he who rejects them rejects Christ and him who sent Christ [cf. Lk 10:16].¹³

21. In the bishops, therefore, for whom priests are assistants, our Lord Jesus Christ, the Supreme High Priest, is present in the midst of those who believe. For, sitting at the right hand of God the Father, he is not absent from the gathering of his high priests,¹ but above all through their excellent service he is preaching the Word of God to all nations and constantly administering the sacraments of faith to those who believe; by their paternal functioning [cf. 1 Cor 4:15], he incorporates new members in his Body by a heavenly regeneration; and finally, by their wisdom and prudence, he directs and guides the people of the New Testament in their pilgrimage toward eternal happiness. These pastors, chosen to shepherd the Lord's flock of the elect, are servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God [cf. 1 Cor 4:1], to whom has been assigned the bearing of witness to the gospel of the grace of God [cf. Rom 15:16; Acts 20:24] and the ministration of the Spirit and of justice in glory [cf. 2 Cor 3:8f].

For the discharging of such great duties, the apostles were enriched by Christ with a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit coming upon them [cf. Acts 1:8; 2:4; Jn 20:22f.], and they passed on this spiritual gift to their helpers by the imposition of hands [cf. 1 Tim 4:14; 2 Tim 1:6f.], and it has been transmitted down to us in episcopal consecration.² And the sacred council teaches that by episcopal consecration the fullness of the sacrament of orders is conferred, that fullness of power, namely, which both in the Church's liturgical practice and in the language of the Fathers of the Church is called the high priesthood, the supreme power of the sacred ministry.³ et regendi, quae tamen natura sua non nisi in hierarchica communione cum Collegii Capite et membris exerceri possunt. Ex traditione enim, quae praesertim liturgicis ritibus et Ecclesiae tum Orientis tum Occidentis usu declaratur, perspicuum est manuum impositione et verbis consecrationis gratiam Spiritus Sancti ita conferri⁴ et sacrum characterem ita imprimi,⁵ ut Episcopi, eminenti ac adspectabili modo, ipsius Christi Magistri, Pastoris et Pontificis partes sustineant et in Eius persona agant.⁶ Episcoporum est per sacramentum Ordinis novos electos in corpus episcopale assumere.

Collegium autem seu corpus Episcoporum auctoritatem non habet, nisi simul cum Pontifice Romano,

But episcopal consecration, together with the office of sanctifying, also confers the office of teaching and of governing, which, however, of its very nature, can be exercised only in hierarchical communion with the head and the members of the college. For from the tradition, which is expressed especially in liturgical rites and in the practice of the Church both of the East and of the West, it is clear that, by means of the imposition of hands and the words of consecration, the grace of the Holy Spirit is so conferred,⁴ and the sacred character so impressed,⁵ that bishops in an eminent and visible way sustain the roles of Christ himself as Teacher, Shepherd, and High Priest and that they act in his person.⁶ Therefore it pertains to the bishops to admit newly elected members into the episcopal body by means of the sacrament of orders.

22. Just as in the Gospel, the Lord so disposing, St. Peter and the other apostles constitute one apostolic college, so in a similar way the Roman pontiff, the successor of Peter, and the bishops, the successors of the apostles, are joined together. Indeed, the very ancient practice whereby bishops duly established in all parts of the world were in communion with one another and with the bishop of Rome in a bond of unity, charity, and peace,¹ and also the councils assembled together,² in which more profound issues were settled in common,³ the opinion of the many having been prudently considered,⁴ both of these factors are already an indication of the collegiate character and aspect of the episcopal order; and the ecumenical councils held in the course of centuries are also manifest proof of that same character. And it is intimated also in the practice, introduced in ancient times, of summoning several bishops to take part in the elevation of the newly elected to the ministry of the high priesthood. Hence, one is constituted a member of the episcopal body in virtue of sacramental consecration and hierarchical communion with the head and members of the body.

But the college or body of bishops has no authority unless it is understood together with the Roman pontiff, successore Petri, ut capite eius intellegatur, huiusque integre manente potestate Primatus in omnes sive Pastores sive fideles. Romanus enim Pontifex habet in Ecclesiam, vi muneris sui, Vicarii scilicet Christi et totius Ecclesiae Pastoris, plenam, supremam et universalem potestatem, quam semper libere exercere valet. Ordo autem Episcoporum, qui collegio Apostolorum in magisterio et regimine pastorali succedit, immo in quo corpus apostolicum continuo perseverat, una cum Capite suo Romano Pontifice, et numquam sine hoc Capite subiectum quoque supremae ac plenae potestatis in universam Ecclesiam existit,⁵ quae quidem potestas nonnisi consentiente Romano Pontifice exerceri potest. Dominus unum Simonem ut petram et clavigerum Ecclesiae posuit [cf. Mt 16:18–19], eumque Pastorem totius sui gregis constituit [cf. Io 21:15–19]; illud autem ligandi ac solvendi munus, quod Petro datum est [Mt 16:19], collegio quoque Apostolorum, suo Capiti coniuncto, tributum esse constat [Mt 18:18; 28:16–20].⁶ Collegium hoc quatenus ex multis compositum, varietatem et universalitatem Populi Dei, quatenus vero sub uno capite collectum unitatem gregis Christi exprimit. In ipso, Episcopi, primatum et principatum Capitis sui fideliter servant, propria potestate in bonum [27] fidelium suorum, immo totius Ecclesiae funguntur, Spiritu Sancto organicam structuram eiusque concordiam continenter roborante. Suprema in universam Ecclesiam potestas, qua istud Collegium pollet, sollemni modo in Concilio Oecumenico exercetur. Concilium Oecumenicum numquam datur, quod a Successore Petri non sit ut tale confirmatum vel saltem receptum; et Romani Pontificis praerogativa est haec Concilia convocare, iisdem praesidere et eadem confirmare. Eadem potestas collegialis una cum Papa exerceri potest ab Episcopis in orbe terrarum degentibus, dummodo Caput Collegii eos ad actionem collegialem vocet, vel saltem Episcoporum dispersorum unitam actionem approbet vel libere recipiat, ita ut verus actus collegialis efficiatur.

the successor of Peter as its head. The pope's power of primacy over all, both pastors and faithful, remains whole and intact. In virtue of his office, that is, as vicar of Christ and pastor of the whole Church, the Roman pontiff has full, supreme, and universal power over the Church. And he is always free to exercise this power. The order of bishops, which succeeds to the college of apostles and gives this apostolic body continued existence, is also the subject of supreme and full power over the universal Church, provided we understand this body together with its head, the Roman pontiff, and never without this head.⁵ This power can be exercised only with the consent of the Roman pontiff. For our Lord placed Simon alone as the rock and the bearer of the keys of the Church [cf. Mt 16:18–19] and made him shepherd of the whole flock [cf. Jn 21:15–19]; it is evident, however, that the power of binding and loosing, which was given to Peter [Mt 16:19], was granted also to the college of apostles, joined with its head [cf. Mt 18:18; 28:16–20].⁶ This college, insofar as it is composed of many, expresses the variety and universality of the people of God, but insofar as it is assembled under one head, it expresses the unity of the flock of Christ. In it, the bishops, faithfully recognizing the primacy and preeminence of their head, exercise their own authority for the good of their own faithful, and indeed of the whole Church, the Holy Spirit supporting its organic structure and harmony with moderation. The supreme power in the universal Church, which this college enjoys, is exercised in a solemn way in an ecumenical council. A council is never ecumenical unless it is confirmed or at least accepted as such by the successor of Peter; and it is the prerogative of the Roman pontiff to convoke these councils, to preside over them, and to confirm them. This same collegiate power can be exercised together with the pope by the bishops living in all parts of the world, provided that the head of the college calls them to collegiate action, or at least approves of or freely accepts the united action of the scattered bishops, so that it is thereby made a collegiate act.

23. This collegial union is apparent also in the mutual 4147 relations of the individual bishops with particular Churches and with the universal Church. The Roman pontiff, as the successor of Peter, is the perpetual and visible principle and foundation for the unity of the multiplicity of both the bishops and the faithful.¹ The individual bishops, however, are the visible principle particularibus,² ad imaginem Ecclesiae universalis formatis, in quibus et ex quibus una et unica Ecclesia catholica existit.³ Qua de causa singuli Episcopi suam Ecclesiam, omnes autem simul cum Papa totam Ecclesiam repraesentant in vinculo pacis, amoris et unitatis.

Singuli Episcopi, qui particularibus Ecclesiis praeficiuntur, regimen suum pastorale super portionem Populi Dei sibi commissam, non super alias Ecclesias neque super Ecclesiam universalem exercent. Sed qua membra Collegii episcopalis et legitimi Apostolorum successores singuli ea sollicitudine pro universa Ecclesia ex Christi institutione et praecepto tenentur,⁴ quae, etiamsi per actum iurisdictionis non exercentur, summopere tamen confert ad Ecclesiae universalis emolumentum. Debent enim omnes Episcopi promovere et tueri unitatem fidei et disciplinam cunctae Ecclesiae communem, fideles edocere ad amorem totius Corporis mystici Christi, praesertim membrorum pauperum, [28] dolentium et eorum qui persecutionem patiuntur propter iustitiam [cf. Mt 5:10], tandem promovere omnem actuositatem quae toti Ecclesiae communis est, praesertim ut fides incrementum capiat et lux plenae veritatis omnibus hominibus oriatur. Ceterum hoc sanctum est quod, bene regendo propriam Ecclesiam ut portionem Ecclesiae universalis, ipsi efficaciter conferunt ad bonum totius mystici Corporis, quod est etiam corpus Ecclesiarum.⁵

Cura Evangelium ubique terrarum annuntiandi ad corpus Pastorum pertinet, quibus omnibus in commune Christus mandatum dedit imponendo commune officium, ut iam Papa Coelestinus Patribus Ephesini Concilii commendavit.⁶ Unde singuli Episcopi, quantum propria eorum perfunctio muneris sinit, in laborum societate venire tenentur inter se et cum successore Petri, cui grande munus christiani nominis propagandi singulari modo demandatum est.⁷ Quare missionibus tum messis operarios, tum etiam auxilia spiritualia et materialia, tam per se directe, quam suscitando fidelium ardentem cooperationem, suppeditare omnibus viribus debent. Episcopi denique, in universali caritatis societate, and foundation of unity in their particular Churches,² fashioned after the model of the universal Church, in and from which Churches the one and only Catholic Church comes into being.³ For this reason the individual bishops represent each his own Church, but all of them together and with the pope represent the entire Church in the bond of peace, love, and unity.

The individual bishops, who are placed in charge of particular Churches, exercise their pastoral government over the portion of the people of God committed to their care, and not over other Churches or over the universal Church. But each of them, as a member of the episcopal college and legitimate successor of the apostles, is obliged by Christ's institution and command to be solicitous for the whole Church,⁴ and this solicitude, though it is not exercised by an act of jurisdiction, contributes greatly to the advantage of the universal Church. For it is the duty of all bishops to promote and to safeguard the unity of faith and the discipline common to the whole Church, to instruct the faithful to love for the whole Mystical Body of Christ, especially for its poor and sorrowing members and for those who are suffering persecution for justice's sake [cf. Mt 5:10], and finally to promote every activity that is of interest to the whole Church, especially that the faith may take increase and the light of full truth appear to all men. And this also is important, that by governing well their own Church as a portion of the universal Church, they themselves are effectively contributing to the welfare of the whole Mystical Body, which is also the body of the Churches.⁵

The task of proclaiming the gospel everywhere on earth pertains to the body of pastors, to all of whom in common Christ gave his command, thereby imposing upon them a common duty, as Pope Celestine in his time recommended to the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus.⁶ From this it follows that the individual bishops, insofar as their own discharge of their duty permits, are obliged to enter into a community of work among themselves and with the successor of Peter, upon whom was imposed in a special way the great duty of spreading the Christian name.⁷ With all their energy, therefore, they must supply to the missions both workers for the harvest and also spiritual and material aid, both directly and on their own fratrum adiutorium aliis Ecclesiis, praesertim finitimis et egentioribus, secundum venerandum antiquitatis exemplum, libenter praebeant.

Divina autem Providentia factum est ut variae variis in locis ab Apostolis eorumque successoribus institutae Ecclesiae decursu temporum in plures coaluerint coetus, organice coniunctos, qui, salva fidei unitate et unica divina constitutione universalis Ecclesiae, gaudent propria disciplina, proprio liturgico usu, theologico spiritualeque patrimonio. Inter quas aliquae, notatim antiquae Patriarchales Ecclesiae, veluti matricēs fidei, alias pepererunt quasi filias, quibuscum arctiore vinculo caritatis in vita sacramentali atque in mutua iurium et officiorum reverentia ad nostra usque tempora connectuntur.⁸ Quae Ecclesiarum localium in unum conspirans varietas indivisae Ecclesiae catholicitatem luculentius demonstrat. Simili ratione Coetus Episcopales hodie multiplicem atque fecundam opem conferre possunt, ut collegialis affectus ad concretam applicationem perducatur.

24. Episcopi, utpote Apostolorum successores, a Domino, cui omnis potestas in caelo et in terra data est, missionem accipiunt docendi omnes gentes et praedicandi Evangelium omni creaturae, ut homines universi, per fidem, baptismum et adimpletionem mandatorum salutem consequantur [cf. Mt 28:18; Mc 16:15s; Act 26:17s]. Ad hanc missionem implendam, Christus Dominus Spiritum Sanctum promisit Apostolis et die Pentecostes e caelo misit, cuius virtute testes Eidem essent usque ad ultimum terrae, coram gentibus et populis et regibus [cf. Act 1:8; 2:1–13; 9:15]. Munus autem illud, quod Dominus pastoribus populi sui commisit, verum est servitium quod in sacris Litteris “diakonia” seu ministerium significanter nuncupatur [Act 1:17, 25; 21:19; Rm 11:13; 1 Tim 1:12].

Episcoporum autem missio canonica fieri potest per legitimas consuetudines, a suprema et universali potestate Ecclesiae non revocatas, vel per leges ab eadem auctoritate latas aut agnitas, vel directe per ipsum Successorem Petri; quo renuente seu communionem Apostolicam denegante, Episcopi in officium assumi nequeunt.¹

account, as well as by arousing the ardent cooperation of the faithful. And finally, the bishops, in a universal fellowship of charity, should gladly extend their fraternal aid to other Churches, especially to neighboring and more needy dioceses in accordance with the venerable example of antiquity.

By divine providence it has come about that various Churches, established in various places by the apostles and their successors, have in the course of time coalesced into several groups, organically united, which, preserving the unity of faith and the unique divine constitution of the universal Church, enjoy their own discipline, their own liturgical usage, and their own theological and spiritual heritage. Some of these Churches, notably the ancient patriarchal Churches, as parent-stocks of the faith, so to speak, have begotten others as daughter Churches, with which they are connected down to our own time by a close bond of charity in their sacramental life and in their mutual respect for their rights and duties.⁸ This variety of local Churches with one common aspiration is splendid evidence of the catholicity of the undivided Church. In like manner, the episcopal bodies of today are in a position to render a manifold and fruitful assistance, so that this collegiate feeling may be put into practical application.

24. Bishops, as successors of the apostles, receive from the Lord, to whom was given all power in heaven and on earth, the mission to teach all nations and to preach the gospel to every creature, so that all men may attain to salvation by faith, baptism, and the fulfillment of the commandments [cf. Mt 28:18; Mk 16:15f.; Acts 26:17f.]. To fulfill this mission, Christ the Lord promised the Holy Spirit to the apostles and on Pentecost day sent the Spirit from heaven, by whose power they would be witnesses to him before the nations and peoples and kings even to the ends of the earth [cf. Acts 1:8; 2:1–13; 9:15]. And that duty, which the Lord committed to the shepherds of his people, is a true service, which in sacred literature is significantly called diakonia, or ministry [cf. Acts 1:17, 25; 21:19; Rom 11:13; 1 Tim 1:12].

The canonical mission of bishops can come about by legitimate customs that have not been revoked by the supreme and universal authority of the Church or by laws made or recognized by that authority or directly through the successor of Peter himself; and if the latter refuses or denies apostolic communion, such bishops cannot assume any office.¹

Licet singuli praesules infallibilitatis praerogativa non polleant, quando tamen, etiam per orbem dispersi, sed communionis nexum inter se et cum Successore Petri servantes, authentice res fidei et morum docentes in unam sententiam tamquam definitive tenendam conveniunt, doctrinam Christi infallibiliter enuntiant.² Quod adhuc manifestius habetur quando, in Concilio Oecumenico coadunati, pro universa Ecclesia fidei et morum doctores et iudices sunt, quorum definitionibus fidei obsequio est adhaerendum.³

Haec autem infallibilitas, qua Divinus Redemptor Ecclesiam suam in definienda doctrina de fide vel moribus instructam esse voluit, tantum patet quantum divinae Revelationis patet depositum, sancte custodiendum et fideliter exponendum. Qua quidem infallibilitate Romanus Pontifex, Collegii Episcoporum Caput vi muneris sui gaudet, quando, ut supremus omnium christifidelium pastor et doctor, qui fratres suos in fide confirmat [cf. Lc 22:32], doctrinam de fide vel moribus

25. Among the principal duties of bishops, the preaching of the gospel occupies an eminent place.¹ For bishops are preachers of the faith, who lead new disciples to Christ, and they are authentic teachers, that is, teachers endowed with the authority of Christ, who preach to the people committed to them the faith they must believe and put into practice and by the light of the Holy Spirit illustrate that faith. They bring forth from the treasury of revelation new things and old [cf. Mt 13:52], making it bear fruit and vigilantly warding off any errors that threaten their flock [cf. 2 Tim 4:1-4]. Bishops, teaching in communion with the Roman pontiff, are to be respected by all as witnesses to divine and Catholic truth. In matters of faith and morals, the bishops speak in the name of Christ, and the faithful are to accept their teaching and adhere to it with a religious assent. This religious submission of mind and will must be shown in a special way to the authentic Magisterium of the Roman pontiff, even when he is not speaking ex cathedra; that is, it must be shown in such a way that his supreme Magisterium is acknowledged with reverence and that the judgments made by him are sincerely adhered to, according to his manifest mind and will. His mind and will in the matter may be principally known either from the character of the documents, from his frequent repetition of the same doctrine, or from his manner of speaking.

Although the individual bishops do not enjoy the prerogative of infallibility, they nevertheless proclaim Christ's doctrine infallibly whenever, even though dispersed throughout the world, but still maintaining the bond of communion among themselves and with the successor of Peter, and authentically teaching matters of faith and morals, they are in agreement on one position as definitively to be held.² This is even more clearly verified when, gathered together in an ecumenical council, they are teachers and judges of faith and morals for the universal Church, whose definitions must be adhered to with the submission of faith.³

And this infallibility with which the Divine Redeemer willed his Church to be endowed in defining doctrine of faith and morals extends as far as the deposit of revelation extends, which must be religiously guarded and faithfully expounded. And this is the infallibility that the Roman pontiff, the head of the college of bishops, enjoys in virtue of his office, when, as the supreme shepherd and teacher of all the faithful, who confirms his brethren in their faith [cf. Lk 22:32], by a definitive definitivo actu proclamat.⁴ Quare definitiones eius ex sese, et non ex consensu Ecclesiae, irreformabiles merito dicuntur, quippe quae sub assistentia Spiritus Sancti, ipsi in beato Petro promissa, prolatae sint, ideoque nulla indigeant aliorum approbatione, nec ullam ad aliud iudicium appellationem patiantur. Tunc enim Romanus Pontifex non ut persona privata sententiam profert, sed ut universalis Ecclesiae magister supremus, in quo charisma infallibilitatis ipsius Ecclesiae singulariter inest, doctrinam fidei catholicae exponit vel tuetur.⁵ Infallibilitas Ecclesiae promissa in corpore Episcoporum quoque inest, quando supremum magisterium cum Petri Successore exercet. Istis autem [31] definitionibus assensus Ecclesiae nunquam deesse potest propter actionem eiusdem Spiritus Sancti, qua universus Christi grex in unitate fidei servatur et proficit.⁶

Cum autem sive Romanus Pontifex sive Corpus Episcoporum cum eo sententiam definiunt, eam proferunt secundum ipsam Revelationem, cui omnes stare et conformari tenentur et quae scripta vel tradita per legitimam Episcoporum successionem et imprimis ipsius Romani Pontificis cura integre transmittitur, atque praevalente Spiritu veritatis in Ecclesia sancte servatur et fideliter exponitur.¹ Ad quam rite indagandam et apte enuntiandam, Romanus Pontifex et Episcopi, pro officio suo et rei gravitate, per media apta, sedulo operam navant;² novam vero revelationem publicam tamquam ad divinum fidei depositum pertinentem non accipiunt.³

act he proclaims a doctrine of faith or morals.⁴ And therefore his definitions, of themselves, and not from the consent of the Church, are justly styled irreformable, since they are pronounced with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, promised to him in blessed Peter, and therefore they need no approval of others, nor do they allow an appeal to any other judgment. For then the Roman pontiff is not pronouncing judgment as a private person; but, rather, as the supreme teacher of the universal Church, in whom the charism of infallibility of the Church herself is individually present, he is expounding or defending a doctrine of Catholic faith.⁵ The infallibility promised to the Church resides also in the body of bishops when that body exercises the supreme Magisterium with the successor of Peter. To these definitions the assent of the Church can never be wanting, on account of the activity of that same Holy Spirit, by which the whole flock of Christ is preserved and progresses in unity of faith.⁶

But when either the Roman pontiff or the body of 4150 bishops together with him defines a judgment, they pronounce it in accordance with revelation itself, which all are obliged to abide by and be in conformity with, that is, the revelation that as written or orally handed down is transmitted in its entirety through the legitimate succession of bishops and especially in care of the Roman pontiff himself, and which under the guiding light of the Spirit of truth is religiously preserved and faithfully expounded in the Church.¹ The Roman pontiff and the bishops, in view of their office and the importance of the matter, by fitting means diligently strive to inquire properly into that revelation and to give apt expression to its contents;² but a new public revelation they do not accept as pertaining to the divine deposit of faith.³

26. A bishop marked with the fullness of the sacrament 4151 of orders, is “the steward of the grace of the supreme priesthood”,¹ especially in the Eucharist, which he offers or causes to be offered,² and by which the Church continually lives and grows. This Church of Christ is truly present in all legitimate local congregations of the faithful that, united with their pastors, are themselves called churches in the New Testament.³ For in their locality these are the new people called by God, in the Holy Spirit and in much fullness [cf. 1 Thess 1:5]. In them

fideles et celebratur mysterium Coenae Domini, “ut per escam et sanguinem Domini corporis fraternitas cuncta copuletur”.⁴ In quavis altaris communitate, sub Episcopi ‘sacro ministerio,’⁵ exhibetur symbolum illius caritatis et “unitatis Corporis mystici, sine qua non potest salus”.⁶ In his communitatibus, licet saepe exiguis et pauperibus, vel in dispersione degentibus, praesens est Christus, cuius virtute consociatur una, sancta, catholica et apostolica Ecclesia.⁷ [32] Etenim “non aliud agit participatio corporis et sanguinis Christi, quam ut in id quod sumimus transeamus.”⁸

Omnis autem legitima Eucharistiae celebratio dirigitur ab Episcopo, cui officium commissum est cultum christianae religionis Divinae Maiestati deferendi atque administrandi secundum praecepta Domini et Ecclesiae leges, eius particulari iudicio ulterius pro dioecesi determinatas.

Ita Episcopi, orando pro populo et laborando, de plenitudine sanctitatis Christi multiformiter et abundanter effundunt. Per ministerium verbi virtutem Dei credentibus in salutem communicant [cf. Rm 1:16], et per sacramenta, quorum regularem et fructuosam distributionem auctoritate sua ordinant,⁹ fideles sanctificant. Ipsi regunt collationem baptismi, quo regalis sacerdotii Christi participatio conceditur. Ipsi sunt ministri originarii confirmationis, dispensatores sacrorum ordinum et moderatores disciplinae poenitentialis, atque populos suos, ut in liturgia et praesertim in sacro Missae sacrificio partes suas fide et reverentia impleant, sollicitè exhortantur et instruunt. Eis denique quibus praesunt exemplo conversationis suae proficere debent, mores suos ab omni malo temperantes et quantum poterint, Domino adiuvante, ad bonum commutando, ut ad vitam, una cum grege sibi credito, perveniant sempiternam.¹⁰

the faithful are gathered together by the preaching of the gospel of Christ, and the mystery of the Lord’s Supper is celebrated, that by the food and blood of the Lord’s body the whole brotherhood may be joined together.⁴ In any community of the altar, under the sacred ministry of the bishop,⁵ there is exhibited a symbol of that charity and “unity of the Mystical Body, without which there can be no salvation”.⁶ In these communities, though frequently small and poor, or living in the diaspora, Christ is present, and in virtue of his presence there is brought together the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church.⁷ For “the partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ does nothing other than make us be transformed into that which we consume.”⁸

Every legitimate celebration of the Eucharist is regulated by the bishop, to whom is committed the office of offering the worship of Christian religion to the Divine Majesty and of administering it in accordance with the Lord’s commandments and the Church’s laws, as further defined by his particular judgment for his diocese.

Bishops thus, by praying and laboring for the people, make outpourings in many ways and in great abundance from the fullness of Christ’s holiness. By the ministry of the Word, they communicate God’s power to those who believe unto salvation [cf. Rom 1:16], and through the sacraments, the regular and fruitful distribution of which they regulate by their authority,⁹ they sanctify the faithful. They direct the conferring of baptism, by which a sharing in the kingly priesthood of Christ is granted. They are the original ministers of confirmation, dispensers of sacred orders, and the moderators of penitential discipline, and they earnestly exhort and instruct their people to carry out with faith and reverence their part in the liturgy and especially in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. And lastly, by the example of their way of life they must be an influence for good to those over whom they preside, refraining from all evil and, as far as they are able with God’s help, exchanging evil for good, so that together with the flock committed to their care they may arrive at eternal life.¹⁰

27. Bishops, as vicars and ambassadors of Christ, govern the particular Churches entrusted to them¹ by their counsel, exhortations, example, and even by their authority and sacred power, which indeed they use only for the edification of their flock in truth and holiness, remembering that he who is greater should become as the lesser and he who is the chief become as the servant [cf. Lk 22:26f.]. This power, which they personally exercise in Christ's name, is proper, ordinary, and immediate, although its exercise is ultimately regulated by the supreme authority of the Church and can be circumscribed by certain limits, for the advantage of the Church or of the faithful. In virtue of this power, bishops have the sacred right and the duty before the Lord to make laws for their subjects, to pass judgment on them, and to moderate everything pertaining to the ordering of worship and the apostolate.

The pastoral office or the habitual and daily care of their sheep is entrusted to them completely; nor are they to be regarded as vicars of the Roman pontiffs, for they exercise an authority that is proper to them and are quite correctly called "prelates", heads of the people whom they govern.² Their power, therefore, is not destroyed by the supreme and universal power, but on the contrary it is affirmed, strengthened, and vindicated by it,³ since the Holy Spirit unfailingly preserves the form of government established by Christ the Lord in his Church.

A bishop, since he is sent by the Father to govern his family, must keep before his eyes the example of the Good Shepherd, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister [cf. Mt 20:28; Mk 10:45] and to lay down his life for his sheep [cf. Jn 10:11]. Being taken from among men, and himself beset with weakness, he is able to have compassion on the ignorant and erring [cf. Heb 5:1f.]. Let him not refuse to listen to his subjects, whom he cherishes as his true sons and exhorts to cooperate readily with him. As having one day to render an account for their souls [cf. Heb 13:17], he takes care of them by his prayer, preaching, and all the works of charity, and not only of them but also of those who are not yet of the one flock, who also are commended to him in the Lord. Since, like Paul the apostle, he is debtor to all men, let him be ready to preach the gospel to all [cf. Rom 1:14f.] and to urge his faithful to apostolic and missionary activity. But the faithful must cling to their bishop, as the Church does to Christ, and Jesus Christ to the Father, so that all may be of one mind through unity⁴ and abound to the glory of God [cf. 2 Cor 4:15].

consecration and his mission.¹ They have legitimately handed on to different individuals in the Church various degrees of participation in this ministry. Thus the divinely established ecclesiastical ministry is exercised on different levels by those who from antiquity have been called bishops, priests, and deacons.² Priests, although they do not possess the highest degree of the priesthood, and although they are dependent on the bishops in the exercise of their power, nevertheless they are united with the bishops in sacerdotal dignity.³ By the power of the sacrament of orders,⁴ in the image of Christ the eternal High Priest [cf. Heb 5:1-10; 7:24; 9:11-28], they are consecrated to preach the gospel and shepherd the faithful and to celebrate divine worship, so that they are true priests of the New Testament.⁵ Partakers of the function of Christ the sole Mediator [cf. 1 Tim 2:5], on their level of ministry, they announce the divine Word to all. They exercise their sacred function especially in the eucharistic worship or the celebration of the Mass, by which, acting in the person of Christ⁶ and proclaiming his Mystery, they unite the prayers of the faithful with the sacrifice of their Head and renew and apply⁷ in the Sacrifice of the Mass until the coming of the Lord [cf. 1 Cor 11:26] the only sacrifice of the New Testament, namely, that of Christ offering himself once for all a spotless Victim to the Father [cf. Heb 9:11-28]. For the sick and the sinners among the faithful, they exercise in the highest degree the ministry of alleviation and reconciliation, and they present the needs and the prayers of the faithful to God the Father [cf. Heb 5:1-4]. Exercising within the limits of their authority the function of Christ as Shepherd and Head,⁸ they gather together God's family as a brotherhood all of one mind⁹ and lead them in the Spirit, through Christ, to God the Father. In the midst of the flock they adore him in spirit and in truth [cf. Jn 4:24]. Finally, they labor in word and doctrine [cf. 1 Tim 5:17], believing what they have read and meditated upon in the law of God, teaching what they have believed, and putting in practice in their own lives what they have taught.¹⁰

Presbyteri, ordinis Episcopalis providi cooperatores¹ eiusque adiutorium et organum, ad Populo Dei inserviendum vocati, unum presbyterium² cum suo Episcopo constituunt, diversis quidem officiis mancipatum. In singulis localibus fidelium congregationibus Episcopum, quocum fidenti et magno animo consociantur, quodammodo praesentem reddunt eiusque munera et sollicitudinem pro parte suscipiunt et cura cotidiana exercent. Qui sub auctoritate Episcopi portionem gregis dominici sibi addictam sanctificant et regunt, Ecclesiam universalem in suo loco visibilem faciunt et in aedificando toto corpore Christi [cf. Eph 4:12] validam opem afferunt. Ad bonum autem filiorum Dei semper intenti operam suam ad opus pastorale totius dioeceseos, immo totius Ecclesiae conferre studeant. Propter hanc in sacerdotio et missione participationem Presbyteri Episcopum vere ut patrem suum agnoscant eique reverenter oboediant. Episcopus vero Sacerdotes cooperatores suos ut filios et amicos consideret, sicut Christus discipulos suos iam non servos, sed amicos vocat [cf. Io 15:15]. Corpori igitur Episcoporum, ratione Ordinis et ministerii, omnes Sacerdotes, tum dioecesani tum religiosi coaptantur et bono totius Ecclesiae pro sua vocatione et gratia inserviunt.

Vi communis sacrae ordinationis et missionis Presbyteri omnes inter se intima fraternitate nectuntur, quae sponte ac libenter sese manifestet in mutuo auxilio, tam spirituali quam materiali, tam pastorali quam personali, in conventibus et communionem vitae, laboris et caritatis.

Fidelium vero, quos spiritualiter baptisate et doctrina genuerunt [cf. 1 Cor 4:15; 1 Pt 1:23], curam tamquam patres in Christo agant. Forma facti gregis ex animo [1 Pt 5:3] suae communitati locali ita praesint et inserviant, ut ista digne vocari possit illo nomine, quo unus et totus Populus Dei insignitur, Ecclesiae scilicet Dei [cf. 1 Cor 1:2; 2 Cor 1:1; et passim]. Memores sint se sua cotidiana conversatione et sollicitudine fidelibus et infidelibus, catholicis et non catholicis, faciem ministerii vere sacerdotalis et pastoralis exhibere, omnibusque testimonium veritatis et vitae reddere debere, et ut boni pastores illos quoque quaerere [cf. Lc 15:4-7], qui baptizati quidem in Ecclesia catholica a praxi sacramentorum, vel imo a fide defecerunt.

Quia genus humanum hodie magis magisque in unitatem civilem, [36] oeconomicam et socialem coalescit, eo magis oportet ut Sacerdotes, coniuncta

Priests, prudent cooperators with the episcopal order,¹ its aid and instrument, called to serve the people of God, constitute one priesthood² with their bishop although bound by a diversity of duties. Associated with their bishop in a spirit of trust and generosity, they make him present in a certain sense in the individual local congregations and take upon themselves, as far as they are able, his duties and the burden of his care and discharge them with a daily interest. And as they sanctify and govern under the bishop's authority that part of the Lord's flock entrusted to them, they make the universal Church visible in their own locality and bring an efficacious assistance to the building up of the whole body of Christ [cf. Eph 4:12]. Intent always upon the welfare of God's children, they must strive to lend their effort to the pastoral work of the whole diocese, and even of the entire Church. On account of this sharing in their priesthood and mission, let priests sincerely look upon the bishop as their father and reverently obey him. And let the bishop regard his priests as his coworkers and as sons and friends, just as Christ called his disciples now not servants but friends [cf. Jn 15:15]. All priests, both diocesan and religious, by reason of orders and ministry, fit into this body of bishops and priests and serve the good of the whole Church according to their vocation and the grace given to them.

In virtue of their common sacred ordination and mission, all priests are bound together in intimate brotherhood, which naturally and freely manifests itself in mutual aid, spiritual as well as material, pastoral as well as personal, in their meetings and in communion of life, labor, and charity.

Let them, as fathers in Christ, take care of the faithful whom they have begotten by baptism and their teaching [cf. 1 Cor 4:15; 1 Pet 1:23]. Becoming from the heart a pattern to the flock [1 Pet 5:3], let them so lead and serve their local community that it may worthily be called by that name, by which the one and entire people of God is signed, namely, the Church of God [cf. 1 Cor 1:2; 2 Cor 1:1; and passim]. Let them remember that by their daily life and interests they are showing the face of a truly sacerdotal and pastoral ministry to the faithful and the infidel, to Catholics and non-Catholics, and that to all they bear witness to the truth and life and, as good shepherds, go after those also [cf. Lk 15:4-7] who though baptized in the Catholic Church have fallen away from the use of the sacraments or even from the faith.

Because the human race today is joining more and more into a civic, economic, and social unity, it is that much the more necessary that priests, by combined effort cura et ope sub ductu Episcoporum et Summi Pontificis, omnem rationem dispersionis elidant, ut in unitatem familiae Dei totum genus humanum adducatur.

Cum vero haec munera, ad vitam Ecclesiae summpere necessaria, in disciplina Ecclesiae latinae hodie vigenti in pluribus regionibus adimpleri difficulter possint, diaconatus in futurum tamquam proprius ac permanens gradus hierarchiae restitui poterit. Ad competentes autem varii generis territoriales Episcoporum coetus, approbante ipso Summo Pontifice, spectat decernere, utrum et ubinam pro cura animarum huiusmodi Diaconos institui opportunum sit. De consensu Romani Pontificis hic Diaconatus viris maturioris aetatis etiam in matrimonio viventibus conferri poterit, necnon iuvenibus idoneis, pro quibus tamen lex coelibatus firma remanere debet. [37]

DE LAICIS

4156 30. Sancta Synodus, muneribus Hierarchiae declaratis, libenter animum advertit statui illorum christifidelium qui laici nuncupantur. Quodsi omnia quae de Populo Dei dicta sunt, ad laicos, religiosos et clericos aequaliter diriguntur, laicis tamen, viris et mulieribus, ratione condicionis et missionis, quaedam particulariter pertinent, and aid, under the leadership of the bishops and the supreme pontiff, wipe out every kind of separateness, so that the whole human race may be brought into the unity of the family of God.

29. At a lower level of the hierarchy are deacons, upon whom hands are imposed “not unto the priesthood, but unto a ministry of service”.¹ For strengthened by sacramental grace, in communion with the bishop and his group of priests, they serve in the diaconate of the liturgy, of the Word, and of charity to the people of God. It is the duty of the deacon, according as it shall have been assigned to him by competent authority, to administer baptism solemnly, to be custodian and dispenser of the Eucharist, to assist at and bless marriages in the name of the Church, to bring Viaticum to the dying, to read the Sacred Scripture to the faithful, to instruct and exhort the people, to preside over the worship and prayer of the faithful, to administer sacramentals, to officiate at funeral and burial services. Dedicated to duties of charity and of administration, let deacons be mindful of the admonition of Blessed Polycarp: “Be merciful, diligent, walking according to the truth of the Lord, who became the servant of all.”²

Since these duties, so very necessary to the life of the Church, can be fulfilled only with difficulty in many regions in accordance with the discipline of the Latin Church as it exists today, the diaconate can in the future be restored as a proper and permanent rank of the hierarchy. It pertains to the competent territorial bodies of bishops, of one kind or another, with the approval of the supreme pontiff, to decide whether and where it is opportune for such deacons to be established for the care of souls. With the consent of the Roman pontiff, this diaconate can, in the future, be conferred upon men of more mature age, even upon those living in the married state. It may also be conferred upon suitable young men, for whom the law of celibacy must remain intact.

THE LAITY

30. Having set forth the functions of the hierarchy, the sacred council gladly turns its attention to the state of those faithful called the laity. Everything that has been said above concerning the people of God is intended for the laity, religious, and clergy alike. But there are certain things that pertain in a special way to the laity, both men quorum fundamenta ob specialia rerum adiuncta nostri temporis magis expendenda sunt. Pastores enim sacri probe norunt quantum laici ad bonum totius Ecclesiae conferant. Sciunt enim Pastores se a Christo non esse institutos, ut totam missionem salvificam Ecclesiae versus mundum in se solos suscipiant, sed praeclarum munus suum esse ita pascere fideles eorumque ministraciones et charismata ita recognoscere, ut cuncti suo modo ad commune opus unanimiter cooperentur. Oportet enim, ut omnes “veritatem facientes in caritate, crescamus in Illo per omnia, qui est caput Christus: ex quo totum corpus compactum et connexum per omnem iuncturam subministracionis, secundum operationem in mensuram uniuscuiusque membri, augmentum corporis facit in aedificationem sui in caritate” [Eph 4:15s].

Laicis indoles saecularis propria et peculiaris est. Membra enim ordinis sacri, quamquam aliquando in saecularibus versari possunt, etiam saecularem professionem exercendo, ratione suae particularis vocationis praecipue et ex professo ad sacrum ministerium ordinantur, dum religiosi suo statu praeclarum et eximium testimonium reddunt, mundum transfigurari Deoque offerri non posse sine spiritu beatitudinum. Laicorum est, ex vocatione propria, res temporales gerendo et secundum Deum ordinando, regnum Dei quaerere. In saeculo vivunt, scilicet in omnibus et singulis mundi officiis et operibus et in ordinariis vitae familiaris et socialis condicionibus, quibus eorum existentia quasi contextitur. Ibi a Deo vocantur, ut suum proprium munus exercendo, spiritu evangelico ducti, fermenti instar ad mundi sanctificationem velut ab [38] intra conferant, sicque praeprimis testimonio vitae suae, fide, spe et caritate fulgentes, Christum aliis manifestent. Ad illos ergo peculiari modo spectat res temporales omnes, quibus arcte coniunguntur, ita illuminare et ordinare, ut secundum Christum iugiter fiant et crescant et sint in laudem Creatoris et Redemptoris.

and women, by reason of their condition and mission. Due to the special circumstances of our time, the foundations of this doctrine must be more thoroughly examined. For their pastors know how much the laity contribute to the welfare of the entire Church. They also know that they were not ordained by Christ to take upon themselves alone the entire salvific mission of the Church toward the world. On the contrary, they understand that it is their noble duty to shepherd the faithful and to examine their ministries and charisms, so that all according to their proper roles may cooperate in this common undertaking with one mind. For we must all “practice the truth in love, and so grow up in all things in him who is head, Christ. For from him the whole body, being closely joined and knit together through every joint of the system, according to the functioning in due measure of each single part, derives its increase to the building up of itself in love” [Eph 4:15f].

31. The term laity is here understood to mean all the faithful except those in holy orders and those in the state of religious life specially approved by the Church. These faithful are by baptism made one body with Christ and are constituted among the people of God; they are in their own way made sharers in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly functions of Christ; and they carry out for their own part the mission of the whole Christian people in the Church and in the world. 4157

What specifically characterizes the laity is their secular nature. It is true that those in holy orders can at times be engaged in secular activities and even have a secular profession. But they are by reason of their particular vocation especially and professedly ordained to the sacred ministry. Similarly, by their state in life, religious give splendid and striking testimony that the world cannot be transformed and offered to God without the spirit of the beatitudes. But the laity, by their very vocation, seek the kingdom of God by engaging in temporal affairs and by ordering them according to the plan of God. They live in the world, that is, in each and in all of the secular professions and occupations. They live in the ordinary circumstances of family and social life, from which the very web of their existence is woven. They are called there by God that by exercising their proper function and led by the spirit of the gospel they may work for the sanctification of the world from within as a leaven. In this way they may make Christ known to others, especially by the testimony of a life resplendent in faith, hope, and charity. Therefore, since they are tightly bound up in all types of temporal affairs, it is their special task to order and to throw light upon these affairs in such a way that they may come into being and then continually increase according to Christ to the praise of the Creator and the Redeemer.

4158 32. Ecclesia sancta, ex divina institutione, mira varietate ordinatur et regitur. "Sicut enim in uno corpore multa membra habemus, omnia autem membra non eundem actum habent: ita multi unum corpus sumus in Christo, singuli autem alter alterius membra" [Rm 12:4-5].

Unus est ergo Populus Dei electus: "unus Dominus, una fides, unum baptisma" [Eph 4:5]; communis dignitas membrorum ex eorum in Christo regeneratione, communis filiorum gratia, communis ad perfectionem vocatio, una salus, una spes indivisaeque caritas. Nulla igitur in Christo et in Ecclesia inaequalitas, spectata stirpe vel natione, condicione sociali vel sexu, quia "non est Iudaeus neque Graecus: non est servus neque liber: non est masculus neque femina. Omnes enim vos 'unus' estis in Christo Iesu" [Gal 3:28; cf. Col 3:11].

Si igitur in Ecclesia non omnes eadem via incedunt, omnes tamen ad sanctitatem vocantur et coaequalem sortiti sunt fidem in iustitia Dei [cf. 2 Pt 1:1]. Etsi quidam ex voluntate Christi ut doctores, mysteriorum dispensatores et pastores pro aliis constituuntur, vera tamen inter omnes viget aequalitas quoad dignitatem et actionem cunctis fidelibus communem circa aedificationem Corporis Christi. Distinctio enim quam Dominus posuit inter sacros ministros et reliquum Populum Dei, secumfert coniunctionem, cum Pastores et alii fideles inter se communi necessitudine devinciantur; Ecclesiae Pastores, exemplum Dei secuti, sibi invicem aliisque fidelibus ministrent, hi autem alacriter Pastoribus et doctoribus sociam operam praestent. Sic in varietate omnes testimonium perhibent de mirabili unitate in Corpore Christi: ipsa enim diversitas gratiarum, ministratorum et operationum filios Dei in unum colligit, quia "haec omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus" [1 Cor 12:11].

Laici igitur sicut ex divina dignatione fratrem habent Christum, qui cum sit Dominus omnium, venit tamen non ministrari sed ministrare [cf. Mt 20:28], ita etiam fratres habent eos, qui in sacro ministerio positi, auctoritate Christi docendo et sanctificando et regendo familiam Dei ita pascunt, ut mandatum novum caritatis ab omnibus impleatur. Quocirca pulcherrime dicit S. Augustinus: "Ubi me terret [39] quod vobis sum, ibi me consolatur quod vobiscum sum. Vobis enim sum episcopus, vobiscum sum christianus. Illud est nomen officii, hoc gratiae; illud periculi est, hoc salutis."¹

32. By divine institution, the Holy Church is ordered and governed with a wonderful diversity. "For just as in one body we have many members, yet all the members have not the same function, so we, the many, are one body in Christ, but severally members one of another" [Rom 12:4-5].

Therefore, the chosen people of God is one: "one Lord, one faith, one baptism" [Eph 4:5]; sharing a common dignity as members from their regeneration in Christ, having the same filial grace and the same vocation to perfection; possessing in common one salvation, one hope, and one undivided charity. There is, therefore, in Christ and in the Church no inequality on the basis of race or nationality, social condition or sex, because "there is neither Jew nor Greek: there is neither slave nor free: there is neither male nor female. For you are all 'one' in Christ Jesus" [Gal 3:28; cf. Col 3:11].

If, therefore, in the Church everyone does not proceed by the same path, nevertheless all are called to sanctity and have received an equal privilege of faith through the justice of God [cf. 2 Pet 1:1]. And if by the will of Christ some are made teachers, pastors, and dispensers of mysteries on behalf of others, yet all share a true equality with regard to the dignity and to the activity common to all the faithful for the building up of the body of Christ. For the distinction that the Lord made between sacred ministers and the rest of the people of God bears within it a certain union, since pastors and the other faithful are bound to each other by a mutual need. Pastors of the Church, following the example of the Lord, should minister to one another and to the other faithful. These in their turn should enthusiastically lend their joint assistance to their pastors and teachers. Thus, in their diversity all bear witness to the wonderful unity in the body of Christ. This very diversity of graces, ministries, and works gathers the children of God into one, because "all these things are the work of one and the same Spirit" [1 Cor 12:11].

Therefore, from divine choice the laity have Christ for their brother who, though he is the Lord of all, came not to be served but to serve [cf. Mt 20:28]. They also have for their brothers those in the sacred ministry who by teaching, by sanctifying, and by ruling with the authority of Christ feed the family of God so that the new commandment of charity may be fulfilled by all. St. Augustine puts this very beautifully when he says: "What I am for you terrifies me; what I am with you consoles me. For you I am a bishop; but with you I am a Christian. The former is a duty; the latter a grace. The former is a danger; the latter, salvation."¹

33. Laici in Populo Dei congregati et in uno Corpore Christi sub uno capite constituti, quicumque sunt, vocantur, ut tamquam viva membra ad Ecclesiae incrementum eiusque iugem sanctificationem vires suas omnes, beneficio Creatoris et gratia Redemptoris acceptas, conferant.

Apostolatus autem laicorum est participatio ipsius salvificae missionis Ecclesiae, ad quem apostolatum omnes ab ipso Domino per baptismum et confirmationem deputantur. Sacramentis autem, praesertim sacra Eucharistia, communicatur et aliter illa caritas erga Deum et homines, quae anima est totius apostolatus. Laici autem speciatim ad hoc vocantur, ut praesentem et actuosam reddant Ecclesiam in eis locis et rerum adiunctis, ubi ipsa non nisi per eos sal terrae evadere potest.¹ Sic omnis laicus, ex ipsis donis sibi collatis, testis simul et vivum instrumentum missionis ipsius Ecclesiae existit “secundum mensuram donationis Christi” [Eph 4:7].

Praeter hunc apostolatum, qui ad omnes omnino christifideles spectat, laici insuper diversis modis ad cooperationem magis immediatam cum apostolatus Hierarchiae vocari possunt,² ad modum illorum virorum ac mulierum, qui Paulum apostolum in Evangelio adiuvabant, multum in Domino laborantes [cf. Phil 4:3; Rm 16:3-23]. Praeterea aptitudine gaudent, ut ad quaedam munera ecclesiastica, ad finem spirituales exercenda, ab Hierarchia adsumantur.

Omnibus igitur laicis onus praeclarum incumbit adlaborandi, ut divinum salutis propositum ad universos homines omnium temporum et ubique terrarum magis magisque pertingat. Via proinde eisdem undequaque pateat, ut pro suis viribus temporumque necessitatibus opus salutare Ecclesiae naviter et ipsi participant.

34. Supremus et aeternus Sacerdos Christus Iesus, cum etiam per laicos suum testimonium suumque servitium continuare velit, eos suo Spiritu vivificat indesinenterque impellit ad omne opus bonum et perfectum. [40]

Illis enim, quos vitae et missioni suae intime coniungit, etiam sui muneris sacerdotalis partem tribuit ad cultum spirituales exercendum, ut glorificetur Deus et salventur homines. Qua de causa laici, utpote Christo dicati et Spiritu Sancto uncti, mirabiliter vocantur et instruuntur, ut uberiores semper fructus Spiritus in ipsis producantur. Omnia enim eorum opera, preces et incepta apostolica, conversatio coniugalitatis et familiaris, labor quotidianus,

33. The laity are gathered together in the people of God and make up the one body of Christ under one head. Whoever they are they are called upon, as living members, to expend all their energy for the growth of the Church and her continuous sanctification, since this very energy is a gift of the Creator and a blessing of the Redeemer.

The lay apostolate, however, is a participation in the salvific mission of the Church herself. Through their baptism and confirmation all are commissioned to that apostolate by the Lord himself. Moreover, by the sacraments, especially Holy Eucharist, that charity toward God and man which is the soul of the apostolate is communicated and nourished. Now the laity are called in a special way to make the Church present and operative in those places and circumstances where only through them can she become the salt of the earth.¹ Thus every layman, in virtue of the very gifts bestowed upon him, is at the same time a witness and a living instrument of the mission of the Church herself “according to the measure of Christ’s bestowal” [Eph 4:7].

Besides this apostolate that certainly pertains to all Christians, the laity can also be called in various ways to a more direct form of cooperation in the apostolate of the hierarchy.² This was the way certain men and women assisted Paul the apostle in the gospel, laboring much in the Lord [cf. Phil 4:3; Rom 16:3-23]. Further, they have the capacity to assume from the hierarchy certain ecclesiastical functions, which are to be performed for a spiritual purpose.

Upon all the laity, therefore, rests the noble duty of working to extend the divine plan of salvation to all men of each epoch and in every land. Consequently, may every opportunity be given them so that, according to their abilities and the needs of the times, they may zealously participate in the saving work of the Church.

34. The supreme and eternal Priest, Christ Jesus, since he wills to continue his witness and service also through the laity, vivifies them in this Spirit and increasingly urges them on to every good and perfect work.

For besides intimately linking them to his life and his mission, he also gives them a sharing in his priestly function of offering spiritual worship for the glory of God and the salvation of men. For this reason the laity, dedicated to Christ and anointed by the Holy Spirit, are marvelously called and wonderfully prepared so that ever more abundant fruits of the Spirit may be produced in them. For all their works, prayers, and apostolic animi corporisque relaxatio, si in Spiritu peragantur, imo molestiae vitae si patienter sustineantur, fiunt spirituales hostiae, acceptabiles Deo per Iesum Christum [cf. 1 Pt 2:5], quae in Eucharistiae celebratione, cum dominici Corporis oblatione, Patri piissime offeruntur. Sic et laici, qua adoratores ubique sancte agentes, ipsum mundum Deo consecrant.

4161 35. Christus, Propheta magnus, qui testimonio vitae et verbi virtute Regnum proclamavit Patris, usque ad plenam manifestationem gloriae suum munus propheticum adimplet, non solum per Hierarchiam, quae nomine et potestate Eius docet, sed etiam per laicos, quos ideo et testes constituit et sensu fidei et gratia verbi instruit [cf. Act 2:17s; Apc 19:10], ut virtus Evangelii in vita quotidiana, familiari et sociali eluceat. Ipsi se praebent ut filios repromissionis, si fortes in fide et spe praesens momentum redimunt [cf. Eph 5:16; Col 4:5] et futuram gloriam per patientiam expectant [cf. Rm 8:25]. Hanc autem spem non in animi interioritate abscondant, sed conversione continua et colluctatione “adversus mundi rectores tenebrarum harum, contra spiritualia nequitiae” [Eph 6:12] etiam per vitae saecularis structuras expriment.

Sicut sacramenta Novae Legis, quibus vita et apostolatus fidelium alitur, caelum novum et terram novam [cf. Apc 21:1] praefigurant, ita laici evadunt validi praecones fidei sperandarum rerum [cf. Hbr 11:1], si cum vita ex fide professionem fidei inhaesitanter coniungunt. Haec evangelizatio, nuntium Christi scilicet et testimonio vitae et verbo prolatum, notam quamdam specificam et peculiarem efficacitatem acquirit ex hoc, quod in communibus condicionibus saeculi completer.

Quo in munere magni pretii apparet ille status vitae, qui speciali sacramento sanctificatur, scilicet vita matrimonialis et familiaris. Ibi exercitium et schola praeclara apostolatus laicorum habetur, ubi religio christiana totam vitae institutionem pervadit et in dies magis transformatur. Ibi coniuges propriam habent vocationem, ut sibi invicem et filiis sint testes fidei et amoris Christi. Familia christiana tum praesentes [41] virtutes Regni Dei tum spem vitae beatae alta voce proclamat. Ita exemplo et testimonio suo arguit mundum de peccato et eos qui veritatem quaerunt illuminat.

endeavors, their ordinary married and family life, their daily occupations, their physical and mental relaxation, if carried out in the Spirit, and even the hardships of life, if patiently borne—all these become “spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ” [cf. 1 Pet 2:5]. Together with the offering of the Lord’s body, they are most fittingly offered in the celebration of the Eucharist. Thus, as those everywhere who adore in holy activity, the laity consecrate the world itself to God.

35. Christ, the great Prophet, who proclaimed the kingdom of his Father both by the testimony of his life and the power of his words, continually fulfills his prophetic office until the complete manifestation of glory. He does this not only through the hierarchy, who teach in his name and with his authority, but also through the laity, whom he made his witnesses and to whom he gave understanding of the faith (sensu fidei) and an attractiveness in speech [cf. Acts 2:17f.; Rev 19:10], so that the power of the gospel might shine forth in their daily social and family life. They conduct themselves as children of the promise, and thus strong in faith and in hope they make the most of the present [cf. Eph 5:16; Col 4:5] and with patience await the glory that is to come [cf. Rom 8:25]. Let them not, then, hide this hope in the depths of their hearts, but even in the program of their secular life let them express it by a continual conversion and by wrestling “against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual forces of wickedness” [Eph 6:12].

Just as the sacraments of the New Law, by which the life and the apostolate of the faithful are nourished, prefigure a new heaven and a new earth [cf. Rev 21:1], so too the laity go forth as powerful proclaimers of a faith in things to be hoped for [cf. Heb 11:1] when they courageously join to their profession of faith a life springing from faith. This evangelization, that is, this announcing of Christ by a living testimony as well as by the spoken word, takes on a specific quality and a special force in that it is carried out in the ordinary surroundings of the world.

In connection with the prophetic function, that state of life which is sanctified by a special sacrament is obviously of great importance, namely, married and family life. For where Christianity pervades the entire mode of family life, and gradually transforms it, one will find there both the practice and an excellent school of the lay apostolate. In such a home, husbands and wives find their proper vocation in being witnesses of the faith and love of Christ to one another and to their children. The Christian family loudly proclaims both the present virtues of the kingdom of God and the hope of a blessed life to come. Thus, by its example and its witness, it accuses the world of sin and enlightens those who seek the truth.

Proinde laici, etiam quando curis temporalibus occupantur, pretiosam actionem ad evangelizandum mundum exercere possunt et debent. Quodsi quidam eorum, deficientibus sacris ministris, vel iisdem in regimine persecutionis impeditis, quaedam officia sacra pro facultate suppleant; et si plures quidem ex eis totas vires suas in opere apostolico impendant: universos tamen oportet ad dilatationem et incrementum Regni Christi in mundo cooperari. Quapropter laici sollerter in profundiore cognitionem veritatis revelatae incumbant, et instanter a Deo sapientiae donum impetrent.

36. Christus, factus oboediens usque ad mortem et propter hoc a Patre exaltatus [cf. Phil 2:8s], in gloriam regni sui intravit. Cui omnia subiciuntur, donec Ipse se cunctaque creata Patri subiciat, ut sit Deus omnia in omnibus [cf. 1 Cor 15:27s]. Quam potestatem discipulis communicavit, ut et illi in regali libertate constituantur et sui abnegatione vitae sancta regnum peccati in seipsis devincant [cf. Rm 6:12], immo ut Christo etiam in aliis servientes, fratres suos ad Regem, cui servire regnare est, humilitate et patientia perducant. Dominus enim regnum suum etiam per laicos fideles dilatare cupit, regnum scilicet veritatis et vitae, regnum sanctitatis et gratiae, regnum iustitiae, amoris et pacis;¹ in quo regno ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei [cf. Rm 8:21]. Magna sane promissio, magnumque mandatum discipulis datur: “Omnia enim vestra sunt, vos autem Christi, Christus autem Dei” [1 Cor 3:23].

Fideles igitur totius creaturae intimam naturam, valorem et ordinationem in laudem Dei agnoscere, et per opera etiam saecularia se invicem ad sanctiorem vitam adiuvari debent, ita ut mundus spiritu Christi imbuatur atque in iustitia, caritate et pace finem suum efficacius attingat. In quo officio universaliter adimplendo laici praecipuum locum obtinent. Sua igitur in profanis disciplinis competentia suaque activitate, gratia Christi intrinsecus elevata, valide conferant operam, ut bona creata secundum Creatoris ordinationem Eiusque Verbi illuminationem humano labore, arte technica, civili cultura ad utilitatem omnium prorsus hominum excolantur, aptiusque inter illos [42] distribuantur, et suo modo ad universalem progressum in humana et christiana libertate conducant. Ita Christus per Ecclesiae membra totam societatem humanam suo salutari lumine magis magisque illuminabit.

Consequently, even when preoccupied with temporal cares, the laity can and must perform a work of great value for the evangelization of the world. For even if some of them have to fulfill their religious duties on their own, when there are no sacred ministers or in times of persecution; and even if many of them devote all their energies to apostolic work; still it remains for each one of them to cooperate in the external spread and the dynamic growth of the kingdom of Christ in the world. Therefore, let the laity devotedly strive to acquire a more profound grasp of revealed truth, and let them insistently beg of God the gift of wisdom.

36. Christ, becoming obedient even unto death and because of this exalted by the Father [cf. Phil 2:8f.], entered into the glory of his kingdom. To him all things are made subject until he subjects himself and all created things to the Father that God may be all in all [cf. 1 Cor 15:27f.]. Now Christ has communicated this royal power to his disciples that they might be constituted in royal freedom and that by self-denial and a holy life they might conquer the reign of sin in themselves [cf. Rom 6:12]. Further, he has shared this power so that serving Christ in their fellow men they might by humility and patience lead their brethren to that King for whom to serve is to reign. But the Lord wishes to spread his kingdom also by means of the laity, namely, a kingdom of truth and life, a kingdom of holiness and grace, a kingdom of justice, love, and peace.¹ In this kingdom creation itself will be delivered from its slavery to corruption into the freedom of the glory of the sons of God [cf. Rom 8:21]. Clearly, then, a great promise and a great trust is committed to the disciples: “All things are yours, and you are Christ’s, and Christ is God’s” [1 Cor 3:23].

The faithful, therefore, must learn the deepest meaning and the value of all creation as well as its role in the harmonious praise of God. They must assist each other to live holier lives even in their daily occupations. In this way the world may be permeated by the spirit of Christ and it may more effectively fulfill its purpose in justice, charity, and peace. The laity have the principal role in the overall fulfillment of this duty. Therefore, by their competence in secular training and by their activity, elevated from within by the grace of Christ, let them vigorously contribute their effort, so that created goods may be perfected by human labor, technical skill, and civic culture for the benefit of all men according to the design of the Creator and the light of his Word. May the goods of this world be more equitably distributed among all men, and may they in their own way be conducive to universal progress in human and Christian freedom. In this manner, through the members of the Church, will Christ progressively illumine the whole of human society with his saving light.

Laici praeterea, collatis quoque viribus, instituta et condiciones mundi, si qua mores ad peccatum incitant, ita sanent, ut haec omnia ad iustitiae normas conformentur et virtutum exercitio potius faveant quam obsint. Ita agendo culturam operaque humana valore morali imbuent. Hoc modo simul ager mundi melius pro semine verbi divini paratur, et Ecclesiae latius patent portae, quibus praeconium pacis in mundum introeat.

Propter ipsam oeconomiam salutis, fideles discant sedulo distinguere inter iura et officia quae eis incumbunt, quatenus Ecclesiae aggregantur, et ea quae eis competunt, ut sunt humanae societatis membra. Utraque inter se harmonice consociare satagent, memores se, in quavis re temporali, christiana conscientia duci debere, cum nulla humana activitas, ne in rebus temporalibus quidem, Dei imperio subtrahi possit. Nostro autem tempore maxime oportet ut distinctio haec simul et harmonia quam clarissime in modo agendi fidelium elucescant, ut missio Ecclesiae particularibus mundi hodierni condicionibus plenius respondere valeat. Sicut enim agnoscendum est terrenam civitatem, saecularibus curis iure addictam propriis regi principiis, ita infausta doctrina, quae societatem, nulla habita religionis ratione, exstruere contendit et libertatem religiosam civium impugnat et eruit, merito reicitur.²

Moreover, let the laity also by their combined efforts remedy the customs and conditions of the world, if they are an inducement to sin, so that they all may be conformed to the norms of justice and may favor the practice of virtue rather than hinder it. By so doing they will imbue culture and human activity with genuine moral values; they will better prepare the field of the world for the seed of the Word of God; and at the same time they will open wider the doors of the Church by which the message of peace may enter the world.

Because of the very economy of salvation, the faithful should learn how to distinguish carefully between those rights and duties that are theirs as members of the Church and those that they have as members of human society. Let them strive to reconcile the two, remembering that in every temporal affair they must be guided by a Christian conscience, since even in secular business there is no human activity which can be withdrawn from God's dominion. In our own time, however, it is most urgent that this distinction and also this harmony should shine forth more clearly than ever in the lives of the faithful, so that the mission of the Church may correspond more fully to the special conditions of the world today. For it must be admitted that the temporal sphere is governed by its own principles, since it is rightly concerned with the interests of this world. But that ominous doctrine which attempts to build a society with no regard whatever for religion, and which attacks and destroys the religious liberty of its citizens, is rightly to be rejected.²

37. The laity have the right, as do all Christians, to receive in abundance from their spiritual shepherds the spiritual goods of the Church, especially the assistance of the Word of God and of the sacraments.¹ They should openly reveal to them their needs and desires with that freedom and confidence which is fitting for children of God and brothers in Christ. They are, by reason of the knowledge, competence, or outstanding ability that they may enjoy, permitted and sometimes even obliged to express their opinion on those things that concern the good of the Church.² When occasions arise, let this be done through the organs erected by the Church for this purpose. Let it always be done in truth, in courage, and in prudence, with reverence and charity toward those who by reason of their sacred office represent the person of Christ.

The laity should, as all Christians, promptly accept in Christian obedience decisions of their spiritual shepherds, since they are representatives of Christ as well as teachers and rulers in the Church. Let them follow the example of Christ, who by his obedience even unto death opened to all men the blessed way of the liberty of the children of God. Nor should they omit to pray for those placed over them, for they keep watch as having to render an account of their souls, so that they may do this with joy and not with grief [cf. Heb 13:17].

Let the spiritual shepherds recognize and promote the dignity as well as the responsibility of the laity in the Church. Let them willingly employ their prudent advice. Let them confidently assign duties to them in the service of the Church, allowing them freedom and room for action. Further, let them encourage lay people so that they may undertake tasks on their own initiative. Attentively in Christ, let them consider with fatherly love the projects, suggestions, and desires proposed by the laity.³ However, let the shepherds respectfully acknowledge that just freedom which belongs to everyone in this earthly city.

A great many wonderful things are to be hoped for from this familiar dialogue between the laity and their spiritual leaders: in the laity, a strengthened sense of personal responsibility; a renewed enthusiasm; a more ready application of their talents to the projects of their spiritual leaders. The latter, on the other hand, aided by the experience of the laity, can more clearly and more incisively come to decisions regarding both spiritual and temporal matters. In this way, the whole Church, strengthened by each one of her members, may more effectively fulfill her mission for the life of the world.

38. Each individual layman must stand before the world as a witness to the Resurrection and life of the Lord Jesus and a symbol of the living God. All the laity as a community and each one according to his ability must nourish the world with spiritual fruits [cf. Gal 5:22]. They must diffuse in the world that spirit which animates the poor, the meek, the peacemakers—whom the Lord in the Gospel proclaimed as blessed [cf. Mt 5:3-9]. In a word, “Christians must be to the world what the soul is to the body.”¹ 4164

THE UNIVERSAL CALL TO HOLINESS IN THE CHURCH

39. The Church, whose mystery is being set forth by this sacred synod, is believed to be indefectibly holy. Indeed, Christ, the Son of God, who with the Father and the Spirit is praised as “uniquely holy”,¹ loved the 4165

Seipsum tradens pro ea, ut illam sanctificaret [cf. Eph 5:25s], eamque Sibi ut corpus suum coniunxit atque Spiritus Sancti dono cumulavit, ad gloriam Dei. Ideo in Ecclesia omnes, sive ad Hierarchiam pertinent sive ab ea pascuntur, ad sanctitatem vocantur, iuxta illud Apostoli: “Haec est enim voluntas Dei, sanctificatio vestra” [1 Th 4:3; cf. Eph 1:4]. Haec autem Ecclesiae sanctitas in gratiae fructibus quos Spiritus in fidelibus producit, incessanter manifestatur et manifestari debet; multiformiter exprimitur apud singulos, qui in suo vitae ordine ad perfectionem caritatis, aedificantes alios, tendunt; proprio quodam modo apparet in praxi consiliorum, quae evangelica appellari consueverunt. Quae consiliorum praxis, Spiritu Sancto impellente, a multis christianis assumpta, sive privatim sive in conditione vel statu in Ecclesia sancitis, praeclarum in mundo fert, et ferre oportet, eiusdem sanctitatis testimonium et exemplum.

Church as his bride, delivering himself up for her. He did this that he might sanctify her [cf. Eph 5:25f.]. He united her to himself as his own body and brought her to perfection by the gift of the Holy Spirit for God’s glory. Therefore in the Church, everyone, whether belonging to the hierarchy or being cared for by it, is called to holiness, according to the saying of the apostle: “For this is the will of God, your sanctification” [1 Thess 4:3; cf. Eph 1:4]. However, this holiness of the Church is unceasingly manifested, and must be manifested, in the fruits of grace that the Spirit produces in the faithful; it is expressed in many ways in individuals, who in their walk of life tend toward the perfection of charity, thus causing the edification of others; in a very special way this (holiness) appears in the practice of the counsels, customarily called “evangelical”. This practice of the counsels, under the impulsion of the Holy Spirit, undertaken by many Christians, either privately or in a Church-approved condition or state of life, gives and must give in the world an outstanding witness and example of this same holiness.

40. The Lord Jesus, the divine Teacher and Model of all perfection, preached holiness of life to each and every one of his disciples of every condition. He himself stands as the author and consummator of this holiness of life: “Be you therefore perfect, even as your heavenly Father is perfect” [Mt 5:48].¹ Indeed, he sent the Holy Spirit upon all men that he might move them inwardly to love God with their whole heart and their whole soul, with all their mind and all their strength [cf. Mt 12:30] and that they might love each other as Christ loves them [cf. Jn 13:34; 15:12]. The followers of Christ are called by God, not because of their works, but according to his own purpose and grace. They are justified in the Lord Jesus, because in the baptism of faith they truly become sons of God and sharers in the Divine Nature. In this way they are really made holy. Then too, by God’s gift, they must hold on to and complete in their lives this holiness they have received. They are warned by the apostle to live “as becomes saints” [Eph 5:3] and to put on “as God’s chosen ones, holy and beloved, a heart of mercy, kindness, humility, meekness, patience” [Col 3:12] and to possess the fruit of the Spirit in holiness [cf. Gal 5:22; Rom 6:22]. Since truly we all offend in many things [cf. Jas 3:2], we all need God’s mercies continually, and we all must daily pray: “Forgive us our debts” [Mt 6:12].²

Thus it is evident to everyone that all the faithful of Christ, of whatever rank or status, are called to the fullness of the Christian life and to the perfection of charity;³ by this holiness as such a more human manner of living is promoted in this earthly society. In order that the faithful may reach this perfection, they must use their strength accordingly as they have received it, as a gift from Christ. They must follow in his footsteps and conform themselves to his image, seeking the will of the Father in all things. They must devote themselves with all their being to the glory of God and the service of their neighbor. In this way, the holiness of the people of God will grow into an abundant harvest of good, as is admirably shown by the life of so many saints in Church history....

RELIGIOUS

43. The evangelical counsels of chastity dedicated to God, poverty, and obedience are based upon the words and examples of the Lord. They were further commanded by the apostles and Fathers of the Church as well as by the doctors and pastors of souls. The counsels are a divine gift, which the Church received from her Lord and which she always safeguards with the help of his grace. Church authority has the duty, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, to interpret these evangelical counsels, to regulate their practice, and finally to build on them stable forms of living. Thus it has come about that, as if on a tree that has grown in the field of the Lord, various forms of solidarity and community life as well as various religious families have branched out in a marvelous and multiple way from this divinely given seed. Such a multiple and miraculous growth augments both the progress of the members of these various religious families themselves and the welfare of the entire body of Christ.¹ These religious families give their members the support of a more firm stability in their way of life and a proven doctrine of acquiring perfection. They further offer their members the support of fraternal association in the militia of Christ and of liberty strengthened by obedience. Thus these religious are able to fulfill tranquilly and observe faithfully their religious profession and so spiritually rejoicing make progress on the road of charity.²

From the point of view of the divine and hierarchical structure of the Church, the religious state of life is not an intermediate state between the clerical and lay states. But, rather, the faithful of Christ are called by God from

4168 48. Ecclesia, ad quam in Christo Iesu vocamur omnes et in qua per gratiam Dei sanctitatem acquirimus, nonnisi in gloria caelesti consummabitur, quando adveniet tempus restitutionis omnium [cf. Act 3:21] atque cum genere humano universus quoque mundus, qui intime cum homine coniungitur et per eum ad finem suum accedit, perfecte in Christo instaurabitur [cf. Eph 1:10; Col 1:20; 2 Pt 3:10–13].

Christus quidem exaltatus a terra omnes traxit ad Seipsum [cf. Io 12:32 gr.]; resurgens ex mortuis [cf. Rm 6:9] Spiritum suum vivificantem in discipulos immisit et per eum Corpus suum quod est Ecclesia ut universale salutis sacramentum constituit; sedens ad dexteram Patris continuo operatur in mundo ut homines ad Ecclesiam perducatur arctiusque per eam Sibi coniungat ac proprio Corpore et Sanguine illos nutriendo gloriosae vitae suae faciat esse participes. Restitutio ergo quam promissam expectamus, iam inceptit in Christo, provehitur in missione Spiritus Sancti et per Eum pergit in Ecclesia in qua per fidem de sensu quoque vitae nostrae temporalis edocemur, dum opus a Patre nobis in mundo commissum cum spe futurorum bonorum ad finem perducimus et salutem nostram operamur [cf. Phil 2:12].

Iam ergo fines saeculorum ad nos pervenerunt [cf. 1 Cor 10:11] et renovatio mundi irrevocabiliter est constituta atque in hoc saeculo reali quodam modo anticipatur: etenim Ecclesia iam in terris vera sanctitate licet imperfecta insignitur. Donec tamen fuerint novi caeli et nova terra, in quibus iustitia habitat [cf. 2 Pt 3:13], Ecclesia peregrinans, in suis sacramentis et institutionibus, quae ad hoc aevum pertinent, portat figuram huius saeculi quae praeterit et ipsa inter creaturas degit quae ingemiscunt et parturiunt usque adhuc et expectant revelationem filiorum Dei [cf. Rm 8:19–22].

Coniuncti ergo Christo in Ecclesia et signati Spiritu Sancto “qui est [54] pignus hereditatis nostrae” [Eph 1:14], vere filii Dei nominamur et sumus [cf. 1 Io 3:1], sed nondum apparuimus cum Christo in gloria [cf. Kol

CHAPTER VII

THE ESCHATOLOGICAL NATURE OF THE PILGRIM CHURCH AND HER UNION WITH THE CHURCH IN HEAVEN

48. The Church, to which we are all called in Christ Jesus and in which we acquire sanctity through the grace of God, will attain her full perfection only in the glory of heaven, when there will come the time of the restoration of all things [cf. Act 3:21]. At that time the human race as well as the entire world, which is intimately related to man and attains to its end through him, will be perfectly reestablished in Christ [cf. Eph 1:10; Col 1:20; 2 Pet 3:10–13].

Christ, having been lifted up from the earth, has drawn all to himself [cf. Jn 12:32, Gk.]. Rising from the dead [cf. Rom 6:9], he sent his life-giving Spirit upon his disciples and through him has established his Body which is the Church as the universal sacrament of salvation. Sitting at the right hand of the Father, he is continually active in the world that he might lead men to the Church and through her join them to himself and that he might make them partakers of his glorious life by nourishing them with his own Body and Blood. Therefore, the promised restoration that we are awaiting has already begun in Christ, is carried forward in the mission of the Holy Spirit, and through him continues in the Church in which we learn the meaning of our terrestrial life through our faith, while we perform with hope in the future the work committed to us in this world by the Father and thus work out our salvation [cf. Phil 2:12].

Already the final age of the world has come upon us [cf. 1 Cor 10:11], and the renovation of the world is irrevocably decreed and is already anticipated in some kind of a real way; for the Church already on this earth is signed with a sanctity that is real although imperfect. However, until there shall be new heavens and a new earth in which justice dwells [cf. 2 Pet 3:13], the pilgrim Church in her sacraments and institutions, which pertain to this present time, has the appearance of this world that is passing, and she herself dwells among creatures who groan and travail in pain until now and await the revelation of the sons of God [cf. Rom 8:19–22].

Joined with Christ in the Church and signed with the Holy Spirit, “who is the pledge of our inheritance” [Eph 1:14], truly we are called and we are sons of God [cf. 1 Jn 3:1], but we have not yet appeared with Christ in glory

*4167³ Cf. CIC/1917, can. 487, 488, 4^o; Pius XII, address Annus sacer, December 8, 1950 (AAS 43 [1951]: 27); apostolic constitution Provida mater, February 2, 1947 (AAS 39 [1947]: 120–24).

3:4], in qua similes Deo erimus, quoniam videbimus Eum sicuti est [cf. 1 Io 3:2]. Itaque “dum sumus in corpore, peregrinamur a Domino” [2 Cor 5:6] et primitias Spiritus habentes intra nos gemimus [cf. Rm 8:23] et cupimus esse cum Christo [cf. Phil 1:23]. Eadem autem caritate urgemur ut magis vivamus Ei, qui pro nobis mortuus est et resurrexit [cf. 2 Cor 5:15]. Contendimus ergo in omnibus placere Domino [cf. 2 Cor 5:9] et induimus armaturam Dei, ut possimus stare adversus insidias diaboli et resistere in die malo [cf. Eph 6:11–13]. Cum vero nesciamus diem neque horam, monente Domino, constanter vigilemus oportet ut, expleto unico terrestri nostrae vitae cursu [cf. Hbr 9:27], cum Ipso ad nuptias intrare et cum benedictis connumerari mereamur [cf. Mt 25:31–46], neque sicut servi mali et pigri [cf. Mt 25:26] iubeamur discedere in ignem aeternum [cf. Mt 25:41], in tenebras exteriores ubi “erit fletus et stridor dentium” [Mt 22:13; 25:30]. Etenim, antequam cum Christo glorioso regemus, omnes nos manifestabimur “ante tribunal Christi, ut referat unusquisque propria corporis, prout gessit sive bonum sive malum” [2 Cor 5:10] et in fine mundi “procedent qui bona fecerunt in resurrectionem vitae, qui vero mala egerunt in resurrectionem iudicii” [1 Io 5:29; cf. Mt 25:46]. Existimantes proinde quod “non sunt condignae passione huius temporis ad futuram gloriam quae revelabitur in nobis” [Rm 8:18; cf. 2 Tim 2:11s], fortes in fide expectamus “beatam spem et adventum gloriae magni Dei et Salvatoris nostri Iesu Christi” [Tit 2:13], “qui reformabit corpus humilitatis nostrae configuratum corpori claritatis suae” [Phil 3:21] et qui veniet “glorificari in sanctis suis, et admirabilis fieri in omnibus qui crediderunt” [2 Th 1:10].

49. Donec ergo Dominus venerit in maiestate sua et omnes Angeli cum eo [cf. Mt 25:31] et, destructa morte, Illi subiecta fuerint omnia [cf. 1 Cor 15:26s], alii e discipulis Eius in terris peregrinantur, alii hac vita functi purificantur, alii vero glorificantur intuentes “clare ipsum Deum trinum et unum, sicuti est”;¹ omnes tamen, gradu quidem modoque diverso, in eadem Dei et proximi caritate communicamus et eundem hymnum gloriae Deo nostro canimus. Universi enim [55] qui Christi sunt, Spiritum Eius habentes, in unam Ecclesiam coalescunt et invicem coherant in Ipso [cf. Eph 4:16]. Viatorum igitur unio cum fratribus qui in pace Christi dormierunt, minime intermittitur, immo secundum perennem Ecclesiae fidem, spiritualium bonorum communicatione

[cf. Col 3:4], in which we shall be like to God, since we shall see him as he is [cf. 1 Jn 3:2]. And therefore “while we are in the body, we are exiled from the Lord” [2 Cor 5:6], and having the first-fruits of the Spirit, we groan within ourselves [cf. Rom 8:23], and we desire to be with Christ [cf. Phil 1:23]. By that same charity, however, we are urged to live more for him, who died for us and rose again [cf. 2 Cor 5:15]. We strive therefore to please God in all things [cf. 2 Cor 5:9], and we put on the armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil and resist in the evil day [cf. Eph 6:11–13]. Since, however, we know not the day or the hour, on our Lord’s advice we must be constantly vigilant so that, having finished the course of our earthly life [cf. Heb 9:27], we may merit to enter into the marriage feast with him and to be numbered among the blessed [cf. Mt 25:31–46] and that we may not be ordered to go into eternal fire [cf. Mt 25:41] like the wicked and slothful servant [cf. Mt 25:26], into the exterior darkness where “there will be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth” [Mt 22:13; 25:30]. For before we reign with Christ in glory, all of us will be made manifest “before the tribunal of Christ, so that each one may receive what he has won through the body, according to his works, whether good or evil” [2 Cor 5:10], and at the end of the world “they who have done good shall come forth unto resurrection of life; but those who have done evil unto resurrection of judgment” [1 Jn 5:29; cf. Mt 25:46]. Reckoning, therefore, that “the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory to come that will be revealed in us” [Rm 8:18; cf. 2 Tim 2:11f.], strong in faith we look for the “blessed hope and the glorious coming of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ” [Tit 2:13], “who will refashion the body of our lowliness, conforming it to the body of his glory” [Phil 3:21] and who will come “to be glorified in his saints and to be marveled at in all those who have believed” [2 Thess 1:10].

49. Until the Lord shall come in his majesty, and all the angels with him [cf. Mt 25:31], and, death being destroyed, all things are subject to him [cf. 1 Cor 15:26f.], some of his disciples are exiles on earth, some having died are being purified, and others are in glory beholding “clearly God himself triune and one, as he is”;¹ but all in various ways and degrees are in communion in the same charity of God and neighbor, and all sing the same hymn of glory to our God. For all who are in Christ, having his Spirit, form one Church and cleave together in him [cf. Eph 4:16]. Therefore the union of the wayfarers with the brethren who have gone to sleep in the peace of Christ is not in the least weakened or interrupted but, on the contrary, according to the perpetual faith of the roboratur.² Ex eo enim quod caelites intimius cum Christo uniuntur, totam Ecclesiam in sanctitatem firmiter consolidant, cultum, quem ipsa hic in terris Deo exhibet, nobilitant ac multipliciter ad ampliorem eius aedificationem contribuunt [cf. 1 Cor 12:12-27].³ Nam in patriam recepti et praesentes ad Dominum [cf. 2 Cor 5:8], per Ipsum, cum Ipso et in Ipso non desinunt apud Patrem pro nobis intercedere,⁴ exhibentes merita quae per unum Mediatorem Dei et hominum, Christum Iesum [cf. 1 Tim 2:5] in terris sunt adepti, Domino in omnibus servientes et adimplentes ea quae desunt passionum Christi in carne sua pro Corpore Eius quod est Ecclesia [cf. Col 1:24].⁵ Eorum proinde fraterna sollicitudine infirmitas nostra plurimum iuvatur.

Dum enim illorum conspicimus vitam qui Christum fideliter sunt secuti, nova ratione ad futuram Civitatem inquirendam [cf. Hbr 13:14; 11:10] incitatur simulque tutissimam edocemur viam qua inter mundanas varietates,

Church, is strengthened by communication of spiritual goods.² For by reason of the fact that those in heaven are more closely united with Christ, they establish the whole Church more firmly in holiness, lend nobility to the worship that the Church offers to God here on earth, and in many ways contribute to her greater edification [cf. 1 Cor 12:12-27].³ For after they have been received into their heavenly home and are present to the Lord [cf. 2 Cor 5:8], through him and with him and in him they do not cease to intercede with the Father for us,⁴ showing forth the merits they won on earth through the one Mediator between God and man [cf. 1 Tim 2:5], serving God in all things and filling up in their flesh those things that are lacking of the sufferings of Christ for his Body which is the Church [cf. Col 1:24].⁵ Thus by their brotherly interest our weakness is greatly strengthened.

50. Fully conscious of this communion of the whole Mystical Body of Jesus Christ, the pilgrim Church from the very first ages of the Christian religion has cultivated with great piety the memory of the dead¹ and, “because it is a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins” [2 Mac 12:46], also offers suffrages for them. The Church has always believed that the apostles and Christ’s martyrs who gave the supreme witness of faith and charity by the shedding of their blood are closely joined with us in Christ, and she has always venerated them with special devotion, together with the Blessed Virgin Mary and the holy angels.² The Church has piously implored the aid of their intercession. To these were soon added also those who had more closely imitated Christ’s virginity and poverty,³ and finally others whom the outstanding practice of the Christian virtues⁴ and the divine charisms recommended to the pious devotion and imitation of the faithful.⁵

When we look at the lives of those who have faithfully followed Christ, we are inspired with a new reason for seeking the City that is to come [cf. Heb 13:14; 11:10], and at the same time we are shown a most safe path by secundum statum ac condicionem unicuique propriam, ad perfectam cum Christo unionem seu sanctitatem pervenire poterimus.⁶ In vita eorum qui, humanitatis nostrae consortes, ad imaginem tamen Christi perfectius transformantur [cf. 2 Cor 3:18], Deus praesentiam vultumque suum hominibus vivide manifestat. In eis Ipse nos alloquitur, signumque nobis praebet Regni sui,⁷ ad quod tantam habentes impositam nubem testium [cf. Hbr 12:1], talemque contestationem veritatis Evangelii, potenter attrahimur.

Nec tamen solius exempli titulo caelorum memoriam colimus, sed magis adhuc ut totius Ecclesiae unio in Spiritu roboretur per fraternae caritatis exercitium [cf. Eph 4:1-6]. Nam sicut christiana inter viatores communio propinquius nos ad Christum adducit, ita consortium cum Sanctis nos Christo coniungit, a quo tamquam a Fonte et Capite omnis gratia et ipsius Populi Dei vita promanat.⁸ Summopere ergo decet ut hos Iesu Christi amicos et coheredes, fratres quoque nostros et benefactores eximios diligamus, debitas pro ipsis Deo rependamus gratias,⁹ “suppliciter eos invocemus et ob beneficia impetranda a Deo per Filium eius Iesum Christum, Dominum nostrum, qui solus noster Redemptor et Salvator est, ad eorum orationes, opem auxiliumque confugiamus”.¹⁰ Omne enim genuinum amoris testimonium caelitis a nobis exhibitum, suapte natura tendit ac terminatur ad Christum qui [57] est “corona Sanctorum omnium”¹¹ et per Ipsum ad Deum qui est mirabilis in Sanctis suis et in ipsis magnificatur.¹² which among the vicissitudes of this world, in keeping with the state in life and condition proper to each of us, we will be able to arrive at perfect union with Christ, that is, perfect holiness.⁶ In the lives of those who, sharing in our humanity, are however more perfectly transformed into the image of Christ [cf. 2 Cor 3:18], God vividly manifests his presence and his face to men. He speaks to us in them and gives us a sign of his kingdom,⁷ to which we are strongly drawn, having so great a cloud of witnesses over us [cf. Heb 12:1] and such a witness to the truth of the gospel.

Nor is it by the title of example only that we cherish the memory of those in heaven, but still more in order that the union of the whole Church may be strengthened in the Spirit by the practice of fraternal charity [cf. Eph 4:1-6]. For just as Christian communion among wayfarers brings us closer to Christ, so our companionship with the saints joins us to Christ, from whom as from its Fountain and Head issue every grace and the very life of the people of God.⁸ It is supremely fitting, therefore, that we love those friends and coheirs of Jesus Christ, who are also our brothers and extraordinary benefactors, that we render due thanks to God for them⁹ and “suppliantly invoke them and have recourse to their prayers, their power, and help in obtaining benefits from God through his Son, Jesus Christ, who is our Redeemer and Savior”.¹⁰ For every genuine testimony of love shown by us to those in heaven by its very nature tends toward and terminates in Christ, who is the “crown of all saints”,¹¹ and, through him, in God who is wonderful in his saints and is magnified in them.¹²

Our union with the Church in heaven is put into effect in its noblest manner especially in the sacred liturgy, wherein the power of the Holy Spirit acts upon us through sacramental signs. Then, with combined rejoicing, we celebrate together the praise of the divine majesty,¹³ then all those from every tribe and tongue and people and nation [cf. Rev 5:9] who have been redeemed by the blood of Christ and gathered together into one Church with one song of praise magnify the one and triune God. Celebrating the eucharistic sacrifice, therefore, we are most closely united to the Church in heaven in communion with and venerating the memory first of all of the glorious ever virgin Mary, of Blessed Joseph, the blessed apostles and martyrs, and all the saints.¹⁴

Simul autem pro pastorali sua sollicitudine omnes ad quos spectat hortatur, ut si qui abusus, excessus vel defectus hic illicve irrepserint, eos arcere aut corrigere satagant ac omnia ad pleniorum Christi et Dei laudem instaurent. Doceant ergo fideles authenticum Sanctorum cultum non tam in actuum exteriorum multiplicitate quam potius in intensitate amoris nostri actuosi consistere, quo, ad maius nostrum et Ecclesiae bonum, Sanctorum quaerimus “et conversatione exemplum et communionem consortium et intercessione subsidium”.⁴ Ex altera vero parte instruant fideles nostram cum caelitis conversationem, dummodo haec in pleniore fidei luce concipiatur, nequaquam extenuare latreuticum cultum, Deo Patri per Christum in Spiritu tributum, sed illum e contra impensius ditare.⁵ [58]

Nam omnes qui filii Dei sumus et unam familiam in Christo constituimus [cf. Hbr 3:6], dum in mutua caritate et una Sanctissimae Trinitatis laude invicem communicamus, intimae Ecclesiae vocationi correspondemus et consummatae gloriae liturgiam praegustando participamus.⁶ Quando enim Christus apparebit et gloriosa mortuorum resurrectio erit, claritas Dei illuminabit caelestem Civitatem et eius lucerna erit Agnus [cf. Apc 21:24]. Tunc tota Ecclesia sanctorum in summa caritatis beatitudine adorabit Deum et “Agnem qui occisus est” [Apc 5:12], una voce proclamans: “Sedenti in throno, et Agno: benedictio, et honor, et gloria, et potestas in saecula saeculorum” [Apc 5:13s].

DE BEATA MARIA VIRGINE DEIPARA IN MYSTERIO CHRISTI ET ECCLESIAE

4172 52. Benignissimus et sapientissimus Deus, mundi redemptionem complere volens, “ubi venit plenitudo

51. This sacred council accepts with great devotion this venerable faith of our ancestors regarding this vital fellowship with our brethren who are in heavenly glory or who having died are still being purified; and it proposes again the decrees of the Second Council of Nicaea,¹ the Council of Florence,² and the Council of Trent.³ And at the same time, in conformity with our own pastoral interests, we urge all concerned, if any abuses, excesses, or defects have crept in here or there, to do what is in their power to remove or correct them and to restore all things to a fuller praise of Christ and of God. Let them, therefore, teach the faithful that the authentic cult of the saints consists, not so much in the multiplying of external acts, but rather in the greater intensity of our love, whereby, for our own greater good and that of the whole Church, we seek from the saints “example in their way of life, fellowship in their communion, and aid by their intercession”.⁴ On the other hand, let them teach the faithful that our communion with those in heaven, provided that it is understood in the fuller light of faith according to its genuine nature, in no way weakens but, conversely, more thoroughly enriches the latreutic worship we give to God the Father, through Christ, in the Spirit.⁵

For all of us, who are sons of God and constitute one family in Christ [cf. Heb 3:6] as long as we remain in communion with one another in mutual charity and in one praise of the most holy Trinity, are corresponding with the intimate vocation of the Church and partaking in foretaste the liturgy of consummate glory.⁶ For when Christ shall appear and the glorious resurrection of the dead will take place, the glory of God will light up the heavenly City and the Lamb will be the lamp thereof [cf. Rev 21:24]. Then the whole Church of the saints in the supreme happiness of charity will adore God and “the Lamb who was slain” [Rev 5:12], proclaiming with one voice: “To him who sits upon the throne, and to the Lamb, blessing and honor and glory and dominion forever and ever” [Rev 5:13f.].

THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY, MOTHER OF GOD, IN THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

temporis, misit Filium suum, factum ex muliere, ... ut adoptionem filiorum reciperemus” [Gal 4:4s]. “Qui propter nos homines et propter nostram salutem descendit de caelis et incarnatus est de Spiritu Sancto ex Maria Virgine.”¹ Quod salutis divinum mysterium nobis revelatur et continuatur in Ecclesia, quam Dominus ut corpus suum constituit, et in qua fideles Christo Capiti adhaerentes atque cum omnibus sanctis Eius communicantes, memoriam etiam venerentur oportet “in primis gloriosae semper Virginis Mariae, Genitricis Dei et Domini nostri Iesu Christi”.²

53. Virgo enim Maria, quae Angelo nuntiante Verbum Dei corde et corpore suscepit et Vitam mundo protulit, ut vera Mater Dei ac Redemptoris agnoscitur et honoratur. Intuitu meritorum Filii sui sublimiore modo redempta Eique arcto et indissolubili vinculo unita, hoc summo munere ac dignitate ditatur ut sit Genitrix Dei Filii, ideoque [59] praedilecta filia Patris necnon sacrarium Spiritus Sancti, quo eximiae gratiae dono omnibus aliis creaturis, caelestibus et terrestribus, longe antecellit. Simul autem cum omnibus hominibus salvandis in stirpe Adam invenitur coniuncta, immo “plane mater membrorum (Christi), ... quia cooperata est caritate ut fideles in Ecclesia nascerentur, quae illius Capitis membra sunt”.¹ Quapropter etiam ut supereminens prorsusque singulare membrum Ecclesiae necnon eius in fide et caritate typus et exemplar spectatissimum salutatur eamque Catholica Ecclesia, a Spiritu Sancto edocta, filialis pietatis affectu tamquam matrem amatissimam prosequitur.

time came, God sent his Son, born of a woman, ... that we might receive the adoption of sons” [Gal 4:4f.]. “He for us men, and for our salvation, came down from heaven and was incarnate by the Holy Spirit from the Virgin Mary.”¹ This divine mystery of salvation is revealed to us and continued in the Church, which the Lord established as his body. Joined to Christ the Head and in the unity of fellowship with all his saints, the faithful must in the first place reverence the memory “of the glorious ever Virgin Mary, Mother of our God and Lord Jesus Christ”.²

53. The Virgin Mary, who at the message of the angel received the Word of God in her heart and in her body and gave Life to the world, is acknowledged and honored as being truly the Mother of God and Mother of the Redeemer. Redeemed in an exalted manner by reason of the merits of her Son and united to him by a close and indissoluble tie, she is endowed with the high office and dignity of being the Mother of the Son of God, by which account she is also the beloved daughter of the Father and the temple of the Holy Spirit. Because of this gift of sublime grace, she far surpasses all creatures, both in heaven and on earth. At the same time, however, because she belongs to the offspring of Adam, she is one with all those who are to be saved. She is “the mother of the members of Christ ... having cooperated by charity that faithful might be born in the Church, who are members of that Head”.¹ Wherefore she is hailed as a preeminent and singular member of the Church and as her type and her excellent exemplar in faith and charity. The Catholic Church, taught by the Holy Spirit, honors her with filial affection and piety as a most beloved mother.

54. Wherefore this holy synod, in expounding the doctrine on the Church, in which the Divine Redeemer works salvation, intends to describe with diligence both the role of the Blessed Virgin in the mystery of the incarnate Word and the Mystical Body and the duties of redeemed mankind toward the Mother of God, who is Mother of Christ and Mother of men, particularly of the faithful. It does not, however, have it in mind to give a complete doctrine on Mary, nor does it wish to decide those questions that the work of theologians has not yet fully clarified. Those opinions, therefore, may be retained in their own right that are freely propounded in Catholic schools concerning her, who occupies a place in the Church that is the highest after Christ and yet very close to us.¹...

II. De munere B. virginis in oeconomia salutis

III. De Beata virgine et ecclesia

61. Beata Virgo, ab aeterno una cum divini Verbi incarnatione tamquam Mater Dei praedestinata, divinae Providentiae consilio, his in terris exstitit alma divini Redemptoris Mater, singulariter prae aliis generosa socia, et humilis ancilla Domini. Christum concipiens, generans, alens, in templo Patri sistens, Filioque suo in cruce morienti compatiens, operi Salvatoris singulari prorsus modo cooperata est, oboedientia, fide, spe et flagrante caritate, ad vitam animarum supernaturalem restaurandam. Quam ob causam mater nobis in ordine gratiae exstitit.

II. The Role of the Blessed Mother in the Economy of Salvation

59. But since it has pleased God not to manifest solemnly the mystery of the salvation of the human race before he would pour forth the Spirit promised by Christ, we see the apostles before the day of Pentecost “persevering with one mind in prayer with the women and Mary the Mother of Jesus, and with his brethren” [Acts 1:14] and Mary by her prayers imploring the gift of the Spirit, who had already overshadowed her in the Annunciation. Finally, the Immaculate Virgin, preserved free from all guilt of original sin,¹ on the completion of her earthly sojourn, was taken up body and soul into heavenly glory² and exalted by the Lord as Queen of the universe, that she might be the more fully conformed to her Son, the Lord of lords [cf. Rev 19:16] and the conqueror of sin and death.³

III. On the Blessed Virgin and the Church

60. There is but one Mediator, as we know from the words of the apostle, “for there is one God and one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself as redemption for all” [1 Tim 2:5f.]. The maternal duty of Mary toward men in no wise obscures or diminishes this unique mediation of Christ but rather shows his power. For all the salvific influence of the Blessed Virgin on men originates, not from some inner necessity, but from the divine pleasure. It flows forth from the superabundance of the merits of Christ, rests on his mediation, depends entirely on it, and draws all its power from it. In no way does it impede, but rather does it foster the immediate union of the faithful with Christ.

61. Predestined from eternity to be the Mother of God by that decree of divine providence which also determined the Incarnation of the Word, the Blessed Virgin was in this earth the virgin Mother of the Redeemer and, above all others and in a singular way, the generous associate and humble handmaid of the Lord. She conceived, brought forth, and nourished Christ. She presented him to the Father in the temple and was united with him by compassion as he died on the Cross. In this singular way she cooperated by her obedience, faith, hope, and burning charity in the work of the Savior in giving back supernatural life to souls. Wherefore she is our mother in the order of grace.

Nulla enim creatura cum Verbo incarnato ac Redemptore connumerari umquam potest; sed sicut sacerdotium Christi variis modis tum a ministris tum a fidei populo participatur, et sicut una bonitas Dei in creaturis modis diversis realiter diffunditur, ita etiam unica mediatio Redemptoris non excludit, sed suscitatur variam apud creaturas participatam ex unico fonte cooperationem.

Tale autem munus subordinatum Mariae Ecclesia profiteri non dubitat, iugiter experitur et fidelium cordi commendat, ut hoc materno fulti praesidio Mediatori ac Salvatore intimius adhaereant. [64]

63. Beata autem Virgo divinae maternitatis dono et munere, quo cum Filio Redemptore unitur, suisque singularibus gratiis et muneribus, etiam cum Ecclesia intime coniungitur: Deipara est Ecclesiae typus, ut iam docebat S. Ambrosius, in ordine scilicet fidei, caritatis et perfectae cum Christo unionis.⁴ In mysterio enim Ecclesiae, quae et ipsa iure mater vocatur et virgo, Beata Virgo Maria praecessit, eminenter et singulariter tum virginis tum matris exemplar praebens.⁵ Credens enim et oboediens, ipsum Filium Patris in terris genuit, et quidem viri nescia, Spiritu Sancto obumbrata, tamquam nova Heva, non serpenti antiquo, sed Dei nuntio praestans fidem, nullo dubio adulteratam. Filium autem peperit, quem Deus posuit primogenitum in multis fratribus

62. This maternity of Mary in the order of grace began with the consent that she gave in faith at the Annunciation and that she sustained without wavering beneath the Cross and lasts until the eternal fulfillment of all the elect. Taken up to heaven, she did not lay aside this salvific duty, but by her constant intercession continued to bring us the gifts of eternal salvation.¹ By her maternal charity, she cares for the brethren of her Son, who still journey on earth surrounded by dangers and difficulties, until they are led into the happiness of their true home. Therefore the Blessed Virgin is invoked by the Church under the titles of Advocate, Auxiliatrix, Adjutrix, and Mediatrix.² This, however, is to be so understood that it neither takes away from nor adds anything to the dignity and efficaciousness of Christ the one Mediator.³

For no creature could ever be counted as equal with the incarnate Word and Redeemer. Just as the priesthood of Christ is shared in various ways both by the ministers and by the faithful, and as the one goodness of God is really communicated in different ways to his creatures, so also the unique mediation of the Redeemer does not exclude but rather gives rise to a manifold cooperation that is but a sharing in this one source.

The Church does not hesitate to profess this subordinate role of Mary. She knows it through unfailing experience of it and commends it to the hearts of the faithful, so that encouraged by this maternal help they may the more intimately adhere to the Mediator and Redeemer.

63. By reason of the gift and role of divine maternity, by which she is united with her Son, the Redeemer, and with his singular graces and functions, the Blessed Virgin is also intimately united with the Church. As St. Ambrose taught, the Mother of God is a type of the Church in the order of faith, charity, and perfect union with Christ.⁴ For in the mystery of the Church, which is herself rightly called mother and virgin, the Blessed Virgin stands out in eminent and singular fashion as exemplar of both virgin and mother.⁵ By her belief and obedience, not knowing man but overshadowed by the Holy Spirit, as the new Eve she brought forth on earth the very Son of the Father, showing an undefiled faith, not in the word of the ancient serpent, but in that of God's messenger. The Son whom

65. Dum autem Ecclesia in Beatissima Virgine ad perfectionem iam pertingit, qua sine macula et ruga existit [cf. Eph 5:27], christifideles adhuc nituntur, ut devincentes peccatum in sanctitate crescant; ideoque oculos suos ad Mariam attollunt, quae toti electorum communitati tamquam exemplar virtutum praeferret. Ecclesia de Ea pie recogitans Eamque in lumine Verbi hominis facti contemplans, in summum incarnationis mysterium venerabunda penitus intrat, Sponsoque suo magis magisque conformatur. Maria enim, quae, in historiam salutis intime ingressa, maxima fidei placita in se quodammodo unit et reverberat, dum praedicatur et colitur, ad Filium suum Eiusque sacrificium atque [65] ad amorem Patris credentes advocat. Ecclesia vero, gloriam Christi prosequens, praeclaro suo Typo similior efficitur, continuo progrediens in fide, spe et caritate, ac divinam voluntatem in omnibus quaerens et obsequens. Unde etiam in opere suo apostolico Ecclesia ad Eam merito respicit, quae genuit Christum, ideo de Spiritu Sancto conceptum et de Virgine natum, ut per Ecclesiam in cordibus quoque fidelium nascatur et crescat. Quae Virgo in sua vita exemplum exstitit materni illius affectus, quo cuncti in missione apostolica Ecclesiae cooperantes ad regenerandos homines animentur oportet. . . .

V. Maria, signum certae spei et solatii peregrinanti populo Dei she brought forth is he whom God placed as the first-born among many brethren [cf. Rom 8:29], namely, the faithful, in whose birth and education she cooperates with a maternal love.

64. The Church, indeed, contemplating her hidden sanctity, imitating her charity, and faithfully fulfilling the Father's will, by receiving the Word of God in faith becomes herself a mother. By her preaching she brings forth to a new and immortal life the sons who are born to her in baptism, conceived of the Holy Spirit, and born of God. She herself is a virgin, who keeps the faith given to her by her Spouse whole and entire. Imitating the Mother of her Lord, and by the power of the Holy Spirit, she keeps with virginal purity an entire faith, a firm hope, and a sincere charity.¹

65. But while in the most holy Virgin the Church has already reached that perfection whereby she is without spot or wrinkle, the followers of Christ still strive to increase in holiness by conquering sin [cf. Eph 5:27]. And so they turn their eyes to Mary, who shines forth to the whole community of the elect as the model of virtues. Piously meditating on her and contemplating her in the light of the Word made man, the Church with reverence enters more intimately into the great mystery of the Incarnation and becomes more and more like her Spouse. For Mary, who since her entry into salvation history unites in herself and reechoes the greatest teachings of the faith as she is proclaimed and venerated, calls the faithful to her Son and his sacrifice and to the love of the Father. Seeking after the glory of Christ, the Church becomes more like her exalted Type and continually progresses in faith, hope, and charity, seeking and doing the will of God in all things. Hence the Church, in her apostolic work also, justly looks to her, who, conceived of the Holy Spirit, brought forth Christ, who was born of the Virgin that through the Church he may be born and may increase in the hearts of the faithful also. The Virgin in her own life lived an example of that maternal love, by which it behooves that all should be animated who cooperate in the apostolic mission of the Church for the regeneration of men. . . .

V. Mary, the Sign of Created Hope and Solace to the Pilgrim People of God

68. In the interim, just as the Mother of Jesus, glorified in body and soul in heaven, is the image and beginning of the Church as she is to be perfected in the world to come, so too does she shine forth on earth, until the day of the Lord shall come [cf. 2 Pet 3:10], as a sign of sure hope and solace to the people of God during its sojourn on earth.

Sacrosanctae huic Synodo magnum affert gaudium et solatium, etiam inter fratres seiunctos non deesse, qui Matri Domini ac Salvatoris debitum afferunt honorem, speciatim apud Orientates, qui ad cultum Deiparae semper Virginis fervido impulso ac devoto animo concurrunt.¹ Universi christifideles supplicationes instantes ad Matrem Dei et Matrem hominum effundant, ut Ipsa, quae primitiis Ecclesiae precibus suis adstitit, nunc quoque in caelo super omnes Beatos et Angelos exaltata, in omnium Sanctorum Communionem apud Filium suum intercedat, donec cunctae familiae populorum, sive quae christiano [67] nomine decorantur, sive quae Salvatorem suum adhuc ignorant, cum pace et concordia in unum Populum Dei feliciter congregentur, ad gloriam Sanctissimae et individuae Trinitatis.

69. It gives great joy and comfort to this holy and general synod that even among the separated brethren there are some who give due honor to the Mother of our Lord and Savior, especially among the Orientals, who with devout mind and fervent impulse give honor to the Mother of God, ever virgin.¹ The entire body of the faithful pours forth instant supplications to the Mother of God and Mother of men that she, who aided the beginnings of the Church by her prayers, may now, exalted as she is above all the angels and saints, intercede before her Son in the fellowship of all the saints, until all families of people, whether they are honored with the title of Christian or whether they still do not know the Savior, may be happily gathered together in peace and harmony into one people of God, for the glory of the Most Holy and Undivided Trinity.

4180–4183: Public Session 5, November 21, 1964: Decree on the Eastern Catholic Churches Orientalium Ecclesiarum

This decree, contested in what pertains to the Orthodox Churches, concerns the Uniate Eastern Churches. It thus treats the sixteen Churches of the oriental Rite that, since the union of the Maronites in the year 1181 and the union Council of Ferrara/Florence (1438/1439), are in full communion with the Apostolic See. Representatives of all the major Eastern Catholic Churches participated in drawing up this decree. It was based on fourteen shorter drafts as well as parts of the schema on the unity of the Church Ut omnes unum sint drawn up by the Commission for the Oriental Churches (cf. *4185°).

De spirituali ecclesiarum orientalium patrimonio servando

5. . . . [Sancta Synodus] sollemniter declarat, Ecclesias Orientis sicut et Occidentis iure pollere et officio teneri se secundum proprias disciplinas peculiare regendi, utpote quae veneranda antiquitate commenduntur, moribus suorum fidelium magis sint congruae atque ad bonum animarum consulendum aptiores videantur.

Preservation of the Spiritual Heritage of the Eastern Churches

5. . . . [The sacred council] solemnly declares that the Churches of the East, as much as those of the West, have a full right and are in duty bound to rule themselves, each in accordance with her own established disciplines, since all these are praiseworthy by reason of their venerable antiquity, more harmonious with the character of their faithful, and more suited to the promotion of the good of souls. 4180

De conversatione cum fratribus ecclesiarum seiunctarum

Relations with the Brethren of the Separated Churches

26. Common participation in worship that harms the unity of the Church or involves formal acceptance of error or the danger of aberration in the faith, of scandal and indifferentism, is forbidden by divine law.¹ On the other hand, pastoral experience shows clearly that, as regards our Eastern brethren, there should be taken into consideration the different cases of individuals, where neither the unity of the Church is hurt nor the dangers that must be avoided are present, but where the needs of the salvation of souls and their spiritual good are impelling motives. For that reason the Catholic Church has always adopted and now adopts rather a mild policy, 4181

praebens, per participationem in sacramentis aliisque in functionibus et rebus sacris.

His attentis, Sancta Synodus, “ne impedimento propter sententiae severitatem simus iis qui salvantur”² et ad magis fovendam unionem cum Ecclesiis Orientalibus a nobis seiunctis, sequentem agendi rationem statuit.

4183 28. Item, positis iisdem principiis, communicatio in sacris functionibus, rebus et locis inter catholicos et fratres seiunctos orientales iusta de causa permittitur.¹

offering to all the means of salvation and an example of charity among Christians, through participation in the sacraments and in other sacred functions and things.

With this in mind, “lest because of the harshness of our judgment we be an obstacle to those seeking salvation”² and in order more and more to promote union with the Eastern Churches separated from us, the sacred council lays down the following policy:

27. Without prejudice to the principles noted earlier, Eastern Christians who are in fact separated in good faith from the Catholic Church, if they ask of their own accord and have the right dispositions, may be admitted to the sacraments of penance, the Eucharist, and the anointing of the sick. Further, Catholics may ask for these same sacraments from those non-Catholic ministers whose churches possess valid sacraments, as often as necessity or a genuine spiritual benefit recommends such a course and access to a Catholic priest is physically or morally impossible.¹

28. Further, given the same principles, common participation by Catholics with their Eastern separated brethren in sacred functions, things, and places is allowed for a just cause.¹

4185–4194: Public Session 5, November 21, 1964: Decree on Ecumenism Unitatis redintegratio

The foundation for this decree was formed by the schema on the unity of the Church Ut omnes unum sint, drawn up by the Commission for the Oriental Churches. In conformity with a resolution of the council of December 1, 1962, the sketch on ecumenism worked out by the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity and chapter 11 of the first schema of the Constitution on the Church (De oecumenismo) were also joined to it. The original chapters 4 and 5 of the schema Ut omnes unum sint (on the relation with non-Christian religions and on religious liberty) were at first placed in an appendix of the decree, and eventually they became conciliar declarations on their own (Nostra aetate and Dignitatis humanae; cf. *4195–4199, 4240–4245). After the schema had been voted on in detail, nineteen amendments were introduced to the text by the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity, at the request of Paul VI, so that in the final vote a broader agreement could be reached. The decree opened the way, in Rome and Constantinople, for the simultaneous retraction of the mutual anathemas imposed by the Eastern and Western Churches in 1054 (sess. 9, December 7, 1965; cf. *4430–4435).

PROOEMIUM

4185 1. Unitatis redintegratio inter universos Christianos promovenda unum est ex praecipuis Sacrae Oecumenicae Synodi Vaticanae Secundae propositis. Una enim atque unica a Christo Domino condita est Ecclesia, plures tamen christianae Communiones sese ut Iesu Christi veram haereditatem hominibus proponunt; discipulos quidem Domini omnes se esse profitentur at diversa sentiunt et per diversas ambulantes vias, ac si Christus Ipse divisus sit.¹ Quae sane divisio et aperte voluntati Christi

INTRODUCTION

1. The restoration of unity among all Christians is one of the principal concerns of the Sacred Ecumenical Second Vatican Council. Christ the Lord founded one Church and one Church only. However, many Christian communions present themselves to men as the true inheritors of Jesus Christ; all indeed profess to be followers of the Lord but differ in mind and go their different ways, as if Christ himself were divided.¹ Such division openly contradicts the will of Christ, scandalizes

*4181² Basil the Great, Epistula canonica ad Amphiloichium (PG 32:669B).

*4182¹ As a basis for this mitigation, there is considered: (1) the validity of the sacraments; (2) a good faith and disposition; (3) the necessity of eternal salvation; (4) the absence of one’s own priest; (5) the exclusion of dangers to be avoided and of any formal adhesion to error.

*4183¹ This concerns the above-mentioned extra-sacramental “communicatio in sacris”. It is the council that grants this concession, while maintaining that which should be maintained.

*4185¹ Cf. 1 Cor 1:13.

contradicit et scandalo est mundo atque sanctissimae causae praedicandi Evangelium omni creaturae affert detrimentum.

Dominus vero saeculorum, qui propositum gratiae suae erga nos peccatores sapienter et patienter prosequitur, novissime in Christianos inter se disiunctos animi compunctionem et desiderium unitatis abundantius effundere incepit. Qua gratia permulti ubique homines permoti sunt atque inter fratres quoque nostros seiunctos amplior in dies motus, Spiritus Sancti foveante gratia, exortus est ad omnium Christianorum unitatem restaurandam.

Hunc autem unitatis motum, oecumenicum nuncupatum, participant qui Deum Trinum invocant atque Iesum confitentur Dominum et Salvatorem, nec modo singuli seiunctim, sed etiam in coetibus congregati, in quibus Evangelium audierunt quosque singuli Ecclesiam dicunt esse suam et Dei. Fere omnes tamen, etsi diverso modo, ad Ecclesiam Dei unam et visibilem adspirant, quae sit vere universalis [91] et ad universum mundum missa ut mundus ad Evangelium convertatur et sic salvus fiat ad gloriam Dei....

DE CATHOLICIS OECUMENISMI PRINCIPIIS

2. ... [92] Iesus Christus per Apostolorum eorumque successorum, nempe episcoporum cum Petri successore capite, fidelem Evangelii praedicationem sacramentorumque administrationem, et per gubernationem in dilectione, Spiritu Sancto operante, populum suum crescere vult eiusque communionem perficit in unitate: in confessione unius fidei, in divini cultus communi celebratione, necnon in familiae Dei fraterna concordia....

Qui autem nunc in talibus Communitatibus nascuntur et fide Christi imbuuntur, de separationis peccato argui nequeunt, eosque fraterna reverentia et dilectione amplectitur Ecclesia catholica. Hi enim qui in Christum credunt et baptismum rite receperunt, in quadam cum Ecclesia catholica communione, etsi non perfecta, constituuntur.

But the Lord of Ages wisely and patiently follows out the plan of grace on our behalf, sinners that we are. In recent times more than ever before, he has been rousing divided Christians to remorse over their divisions and to a longing for unity. Everywhere large numbers have felt the impulse of this grace, and among our separated brethren also there increases from day to day the movement, fostered by the grace of the Holy Spirit, for the restoration of unity among all Christians. 4186

This movement toward unity is called "ecumenical". Those belong to it who invoke the triune God and confess Jesus as Lord and Savior, doing this not merely as individuals but also as corporate bodies. For almost everyone regards the body in which he has heard the gospel as his Church and, indeed, God's Church. All, however, though in different ways, long for the one visible Church of God, a Church truly universal and sent forth into the world that the world may be converted to the gospel and so be saved, to the glory of God....

CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES ON ECUMENISM

2. ... Jesus Christ, then, willed that the apostles and their successors—the bishops with Peter's successor at their head—should preach the gospel faithfully, administer the sacraments, and rule the Church in love. It is thus, under the action of the Holy Spirit, that Christ wills his people to increase, and he perfects his people's fellowship in unity: in their confessing the one faith, celebrating divine worship in common, and keeping the fraternal harmony of the family of God.... 4187

3. Even in the beginnings of this one and only Church of God there arose certain rifts,¹ which the apostle strongly condemned.² But in subsequent centuries much more serious dissensions made their appearance, and quite large Communities came to be separated from full communion with the Catholic Church—for which, often enough, men of both sides were to blame. 4188

The children who are born into these Communities and who grow up believing in Christ cannot be accused of the sin involved in the separation, and the Catholic Church embraces them as brothers with respect and affection. For men who believe in Christ and have been truly baptized are in a certain communion with the Catholic Church even though this communion is imperfect.

² Cf. 1 Cor 1:11-13; 11:22.

Profecto, ob discrepantias variis modis vigentes inter eos et Ecclesiam catholicam tum in re doctrinali et quandoque etiam disciplinari tum circa structuram Ecclesiae, plenae ecclesiasticae communioni opponuntur impedimenta non pauca, quandoque graviora, ad quae superanda tendit motus oecumenicus. Nihilominus, iustificati ex fide in baptisate, Christo incorporantur,³ ideoque christiano nomine iure decorantur et a filiis Ecclesiae catholicae ut fratres in Domino merito agnoscuntur.⁴

Non paucae etiam christianae religionis actiones sacrae apud fratres a nobis seiunctos peraguntur, quae variis modis secundum diversam condicionem uniuscuiusque Ecclesiae vel Communitatis procul dubio vitam gratiae reapse generare possunt atque aptae dicendae sunt quae ingressum in salutis communionem pandant.

Proinde ipsae Ecclesiae¹ et Communitates seiunctae, etsi defectus illas pati credimus, nequaquam in mysterio salutis significatione et pondere exutae sunt. Iis enim Spiritus Christi uti non renuit tamquam salutis mediis, quorum virtus derivatur ab ipsa plenitudine gratiae et veritatis quae Ecclesiae catholicae concredita est.

4190 Attamen fratres a nobis seiuncti, sive singuli sive Communitates et Ecclesiae eorum, unitate illa non fruuntur, quam Iesus Christus iis [94] omnibus dilargiri voluit quos in unum corpus et in novitatem vitae regeneravit et convivificavit, quamque Sacrae Scripturae et veneranda Ecclesiae Traditio profitentur. Per solam enim catholicam Christi Ecclesiam, quae generale auxilium salutis est, omnis salutarium mediorum plenitudo attingi potest. Uni nempe Collegio apostolico cui Petrus praeesit credimus Dominum commisisse omnia bona Foederis Novi, ad constituendum unum Christi corpus in terris, cui plene incorporantur oportet

The differences that exist in varying degrees between them and the Catholic Church—whether in doctrine and sometimes in discipline or concerning the structure of the Church—do indeed create many obstacles, sometimes serious ones, to full ecclesiastical communion. The ecumenical movement is striving to overcome these obstacles. But even in spite of them, it remains true that all who have been justified by faith in baptism are incorporated into Christ³ and have a right to be called Christian and so are correctly accepted as brothers by the children of the Catholic Church.⁴

Moreover, some and even very many of the significant elements and endowments that together go to build up and give life to the Church herself can exist outside the visible boundaries of the Catholic Church: the written Word of God; the life of grace; faith, hope, and charity, with the other interior gifts of the Holy Spirit, and visible elements, too. All of these, which come from Christ and lead back to Christ, belong by right to the one Church of Christ.

The brethren divided from us also use many liturgical actions of the Christian religion. These most certainly can truly engender a life of grace in ways that vary according to the condition of each Church or Community. These liturgical actions must be regarded as capable of giving access to the community of salvation.

It follows that the separated Churches¹ and Communities as such, though we believe them to be deficient in some respects, have been by no means deprived of significance and importance in the mystery of salvation. For the Spirit of Christ has not refrained from using them as means of salvation that derive their efficacy from the very fullness of grace and truth entrusted to the Catholic Church.

Nevertheless, our separated brethren, whether considered as individuals or as Communities and Churches, are not blessed with that unity which Jesus Christ wished to bestow on all those who through him were born again into one body and with him quickened to newness of life—that unity which the Holy Scriptures and the ancient tradition of the Church proclaim. For it is only through Christ's Catholic Church, which is "the all-embracing means of salvation", that the fullness of the means of salvation can be attained. We believe that our Lord entrusted all the blessings of the New Covenant to the apostolic college alone, of which Peter is the head, in order to establish the one body of Christ on earth to which all should be fully incorporated who belong in any way to the people of God. This people of God, though still in its members liable to sin, is ever growing in Christ during its pilgrimage on earth and is guided by God's gentle wisdom, according to his hidden designs, until it shall happily arrive at the fullness of eternal glory in the heavenly Jerusalem.

Simul fides catholica et profundius et rectius explicanda est, modo et sermone qui etiam a fratribus seiunctis possit vere comprehendi.

Insuper in dialogo oecumenico theologi catholici, doctrinae Ecclesiae inhaerentes, una cum fratribus seiunctis investigationem peragentes de divinis mysteriis, cum veritatis amore, caritate et humilitate progredi debent. In comparandis doctrinis meminerint existere ordinem seu "hierarchiam" veritatum doctrinae catholicae, cum diversus sit earum nexus cum fundamento fidei christiana. Sic via sternetur qua per fraternam hanc aemulationem omnes incitentur ad profundiorum cognitionem et clariorem manifestationem investigabilium divitiarum Christi.¹

CAPUT III DE ECCLESIIS ET DE COMMUNITATIBUS ECCLESIALIBUS A SEDE APOSTOLICA ROMANA SEIUNCTIS

I. De Ecclesiarum Orientalium peculiari consideratione

14. Ecclesiae Orientis et Occidentis per non pauca saecula suam propriam viam, fraterna tamen communione fidei et vitae sacramentalis coniunctae,

CHAPTER II THE PRACTICE OF ECUMENISM

5. The attainment of union is the concern of the whole Church, faithful and shepherds alike. This concern extends to everyone, according to his talent, whether it be exercised in his daily Christian life or in his theological and historical research. This concern itself reveals already to some extent the bond of brotherhood between all Christians, and it helps toward that full and perfect unity which God in his kindness wills. . . . 4191

11. The way and method in which the Catholic faith is expressed should never become an obstacle to dialogue with our brethren. It is, of course, essential that the doctrine should be clearly presented in its entirety. Nothing is so foreign to the spirit of ecumenism as a false irenicism, in which the purity of Catholic doctrine suffers loss and its genuine and certain meaning is clouded. 4192

At the same time, the Catholic faith must be explained more profoundly and precisely, in such a way and in such terms as our separated brethren can also really understand.

Moreover, in ecumenical dialogue, Catholic theologians standing fast by the teaching of the Church and investigating the divine mysteries with the separated brethren must proceed with love for the truth, with charity, and with humility. When comparing doctrines with one another, they should remember that in Catholic doctrine there exists a "hierarchy" of truths, since they vary in their relation to the foundation of the Christian faith. Thus the way will be opened by which through fraternal rivalry all will be stirred to a deeper understanding and a clearer presentation of the unfathomable riches of Christ.¹

CHAPTER III CHURCHES AND ECCLESIAL COMMUNITIES SEPARATED FROM THE ROMAN APOSTOLIC SEE

I. The Special Consideration of the Eastern Churches

14. For many centuries the Church of the East and that of the West each followed their separate ways though linked in a brotherly union of faith and sacramental life; 4193

secutae sunt, Sede Romana moderante communi consensu, si dissensiones circa fidem vel disciplinam inter eas orientur....

15. ... Cum autem illae Ecclesiae, quamvis seiunctae, vera sacramenta habeant, praecipue vero, vi successionis apostolicae, Sacerdotium et Eucharistiam, quibus arctissima necessitudine adhuc nobiscum coniunguntur, quaedam communicatio in sacris, datis opportunis circumstantiis et approbante auctoritate ecclesiastica, non solum possibilis est sed etiam suadetur....

Haec Sancta Synodus, gratias agens Deo quod multi orientales Ecclesiae catholicae filii, qui hoc patrimonium custodiunt et illud purius pleniusque vivere cupiunt, iam cum fratribus traditionem occidentalem colentibus in plena communione vivunt, declarat, totum hoc patrimonium spirituale ac liturgicum, disciplinare ac theologicum in diversis suis traditionibus ad plenam catholicitatem et apostolicitatem Ecclesiae pertinere.

18. His omnibus bene perspectis, haec Sacrosancta Synodus renovat id quod a Sacris praeteritis Conciliis nec non a Romanis Pontificibus declaratum est, nempe ad communionem et unitatem restaurandam vel servandam opus esse "nihil ultra imponere ... oneris quam ... necessaria" [Act 15,28]. Vehementer etiam exoptat ut ad eam paulatim consequendam omnes conatus exinde intendant in variis institutis et formis vitae Ecclesiae....

the Roman See by common consent acted as guide when disagreements arose between them over matters of faith or discipline....

15. ... These Churches, although separated from us, yet possess true sacraments and above all, by apostolic succession, the priesthood and the Eucharist, whereby they are linked with us in closest intimacy. Therefore some worship in common, given suitable circumstances and the approval of Church authority, is not only possible but to be encouraged....

16. Already from the earliest times the Eastern Churches followed their own forms of ecclesiastical law and custom, which were sanctioned by the approval of the Fathers of the Church, of synods, and even of ecumenical councils. Far from being an obstacle to the Church's unity, a certain diversity of customs and observances only adds to her splendor and is of great help in carrying out her mission, as has already been stated. To remove, then, all shadow of doubt, this holy council declares that the Churches of the East, while remembering the necessary unity of the whole Church, have the power to govern themselves according to the disciplines proper to them, since these are better suited to the character of their faithful and more for the good of their souls. The perfect observance of this traditional principle, not always indeed carried out in practice, is one of the essential prerequisites for any restoration of unity.

17. What has just been said about the lawful variety that can exist in the Church must also be taken to apply to the differences in theological expression of doctrine....

All this heritage of spirituality and liturgy, of discipline and theology, in its various traditions, this holy synod declares to belong to the full Catholic and apostolic character of the Church. We thank God that many Eastern children of the Catholic Church, who preserve this heritage and wish to express it more faithfully and completely in their lives, are already living in full communion with their brethren who follow the tradition of the West.

18. After taking all these factors into consideration, this sacred council repeats the declaration of previous councils and Roman pontiffs that for the restoration or the maintenance of unity and communion it is necessary "to impose no burden beyond what is essential" [Acts 15:28]. It is the council's urgent desire that, in the various organizations and living activities of the Church, every effort should be made toward the gradual realization of this unity....

4195-4199: Public Session 7, October 28, 1965: Declaration on the Relation of the Church to Non-Christian Religions Nostra aetate

The council originally had intended a particular document on the relation of the Church with the Jews. Through the direct initiative of John XXIII, the first schema had been drafted by the Secretariat for Christian Unity under Cardinal A. Bea and was presented to the central commission in June 1962. However, it had to be withdrawn because of the massive protests of the Arab world. After its insertion into chapter 4 of the schema of the Decree on Ecumenism failed, the draft, together with a text on religious liberty, was transferred to an appendix as “Declaratio altera”. Out of this, in November 1964, emerged the fourth and definitive version, in which the Church not only recognized the Jewish path to salvation but also the experiences, values, and truths in the non-Christian religions.

1. Nostra aetate, in qua genus humanum in dies arctius unitur et necessitudines inter varios populos augentur, Ecclesia attentius considerat quae sit sua habitudo ad religiones non-christianas. In suo munere unitatem et caritatem inter homines, immo et inter gentes, fovendi, ea imprimis hic considerat quae hominibus sunt communia et ad mutuuum consortium ducunt.

Una enim communitas sunt omnes gentes, unam habent originem, cum Deus omne genus hominum inhabitare fecerit super universam faciem terrae,¹ unum etiam habent finem ultimum, Deum, cuius providentia ac bonitatis testimonium et consilia salutis ad omnes se extendunt,² donec uniantur electi in Civitate Sancta, quam claritas Dei illuminabit, ubi gentes ambulabunt in lumine eius.³...

2. Iam ab antiquo usque ad tempus hodiernum apud diversas gentes invenitur quaedam perceptio illius arcae virtutis, quae cursui rerum et eventibus vitae humanae praesens est, immo aliquando agnitio [741] Summi Numinis vel etiam Patris. Quae perceptio atque agnitio vitam earum intimo sensu religioso penetrant. Religiones vero cum progressu culturae connexae subtilioribus notionibus et lingua magis excolta ad easdem quaestiones respondere satagunt. Ita in Hinduismo homines mysterium divinum scrutantur et exprimentur inexhausta fecunditate mythorum et acutis conatibus philosophiae, atque liberationem quaerunt ab angustiis nostrae condicionis vel per formas vitae asceticae vel per profundam meditationem vel per refugium ad Deum cum amore et confidentia. In Buddhismo secundum varias eius formas radicalis insufficientia mundi huius mutabilis agnoscitur et via docetur qua homines, animo devoto et confidente, sive statum perfectae liberationis acquirere, sive, vel propriis conatibus vel superiore auxilio innixi, ad summam illuminationem pertingere valeant. Sic ceterae quoque religiones, quae per totum mundum inveniuntur, inquietudini cordis hominum variis modis occurrere nituntur proponendo vias, doctrinas scilicet ac praecepta vitae, necnon ritus sacros.

Ecclesia catholica nihil eorum, quae in his religionibus vera et sancta sunt, reicit. Sincera cum observantia

1. In our time, when day by day mankind is being drawn closer together and the ties between different peoples are becoming stronger, the Church examines more closely her relationship to non-Christian religions. In her task of promoting unity and love among men, indeed among nations, she considers above all in this declaration what men have in common and what draws them to fellowship.

One is the community of all peoples, one their origin, for God made the whole human race to live over the face of the earth.¹ One also is their final goal, God. His providence, his manifestations of goodness, his saving design extend to all men,² until that time when the elect will be united in the Holy City, the city ablaze with the glory of God, where the nations will walk in his light.³ ...

2. From ancient times down to the present, there is found among various peoples a certain perception of that hidden power which hovers over the course of things and over the events of human history; at times some indeed have come to the recognition of a Supreme Being or even of a Father. This perception and recognition penetrate their lives with a profound religious sense. Religions, however, that are bound up with an advanced culture have struggled to answer the same questions by means of more refined concepts and a more developed language. Thus in Hinduism, men contemplate the divine mystery and express it through an inexhaustible abundance of myths and through searching philosophical inquiry. They seek freedom from the anguish of our human condition either through ascetical practices or profound meditation or a flight to God with love and trust. Again, Buddhism, in its various forms, realizes the radical insufficiency of this changeable world; it teaches a way by which men, in a devout and confident spirit, may be able either to acquire the state of perfect liberation or attain, by their own efforts or through higher help, supreme illumination. Likewise, other religions found everywhere try to counter the restlessness of the human heart, each in its own manner, by proposing “ways”, comprising teachings, rules of life, and sacred rites.

The Catholic Church rejects nothing that is true and holy in these religions. She regards with sincere reverence considerat illos modos agendi et vivendi, illa praecepta et doctrinas, quae, quamvis ab iis quae ipsa tenet et proponit in multis discrepent, haud raro referunt tamen radium illius Veritatis, quae illuminat omnes homines. Annuntiat vero et annuntiare tenetur indesinenter Christum, qui est “via, veritas et vita” [Jo 14:6], in quo homines plenitudinem vitae religiosae inveniunt, in quo Deus omnia Sibi reconciliavit.¹

Filios suos igitur hortatur, ut cum prudentia et caritate per colloquia et collaborationem cum asseclis aliarum religionum, fidem et vitam christianam testantes, illa bona spiritualia et moralia necnon illos valores socioculturales, quae apud eos inveniuntur, agnoscant, servent et promoveant.

- 4197 3. Ecclesia cum aestimatione quoque Muslimos respicit qui unicum Deum adorant, viventem et subsistentem, misericordem et omnipotentem, Creatorem caeli et terrae,¹ homines allocutum, cuius occultis etiam decretis toto animo se submittere student, sicut Deo se submitit Abraham ad quem fides islamica libenter sese refert. Iesum, quem quidem ut Deum non agnoscunt, ut prophetam tamen venerantur, [742] matremque eius virginalem honorant Mariam et aliquando eam devote etiam invocant. Diem insuper iudicii expectant cum Deus omnes homines resuscitatos remunerabit. Exinde vitam moralem aestimant et Deum maxime in oratione, elemosynis et ieiunio colunt.

Quodsi in decursu saeculorum inter Christianos et Muslimos non paucae dissensiones et inimicitiae exortae sint, Sacrosancta Synodus omnes exhortatur, ut, praeterita obliviscentes, se ad comprehensionem mutuam sincere exercent et pro omnibus hominibus iustitiam sociale, bona moralia necnon pacem et libertatem communiter tueantur et promoveant.

- 4198 4. Mysterium Ecclesiae perscrutans, Sacra haec Synodus meminit vinculi, quo populus Novi Testamenti cum stirpe Abrahae spiritualiter coniunctus est.

Ecclesia enim Christi agnoscit fidei et electionis suae initia iam apud Patriarchas, Moysen et Prophetas, iuxta salutare Dei mysterium, inveniri. Confitetur omnes Christifideles, Abrahae filios secundum fidem,¹ in eiusdem Patriarchae vocatione includi et salutem Ecclesiae in populi electi exitu de terra servitutis mystice praesignari. Quare nequit Ecclesia oblivisci se per populum illum, quocum Deus ex ineffabili misericordia sua Antiquum Foedus inire dignatus est, revelationem those ways of conduct and of life, those precepts and teachings that, though differing in many aspects from the ones she holds and sets forth, nonetheless often reflect a ray of that Truth which enlightens all men. Indeed, she proclaims, and ever must proclaim, Christ “the way, the truth, and the life” [Jn 14:6], in whom men may find the fullness of religious life, in whom God has reconciled all things to himself.¹

The Church, therefore, exhorts her sons, that through dialogue and collaboration with the followers of other religions, carried out with prudence and love and in witness to the Christian faith and life, they recognize, preserve, and promote the good things, spiritual and moral, as well as the socio-cultural values found among these men.

3. The Church regards with esteem also the Muslims. They adore the one God, living and subsisting in himself; merciful and all-powerful, the Creator of heaven and earth,¹ who has spoken to men; they take pains to submit wholeheartedly to even his inscrutable decrees, just as Abraham, with whom the faith of Islam takes pleasure in linking itself, submitted to God. Though they do not acknowledge Jesus as God, they revere him as a prophet. They also honor Mary, his virgin Mother; at times they even call on her with devotion. In addition, they await the day of judgment when God will render their deserts to all those who have been raised up from the dead. Finally, they value the moral life and worship God especially through prayer, almsgiving, and fasting.

Since in the course of centuries not a few quarrels and hostilities have arisen between Christians and Muslims, this sacred synod urges all to forget the past and to work sincerely for mutual understanding and to preserve as well as to promote together for the benefit of all mankind social justice and moral welfare, as well as peace and freedom.

4. As the sacred synod searches into the mystery of the Church, it remembers the bond that spiritually ties the people of the New Covenant to Abraham’s stock.

Thus the Church of Christ acknowledges that, according to God’s saving design, the beginnings of her faith and her election are found already among the patriarchs, Moses, and the prophets. She professes that all who believe in Christ—Abraham’s sons according to faith¹—are included in the same patriarch’s call and, likewise, that the salvation of the Church is mysteriously foreshadowed by the chosen people’s exodus from the land of bondage. The Church, therefore, cannot forget that she received the revelation of the Old Testament through the people with whom God in his inexpressible mercy concluded the Ancient Covenant. Nor can she forget that she draws sustenance from the root of that well-cultivated olive tree onto which have been grafted the wild shoots, the Gentiles.² Indeed, the Church believes that by his Cross Christ, our Peace, reconciled Jews and Gentiles, making both one in himself.³...

As Holy Scripture testifies, Jerusalem did not recognize the time of her visitation,⁴ nor did the Jews in large number accept the gospel; indeed, not a few opposed its spreading.⁵ Nevertheless, God holds the Jews most dear for the sake of their Fathers; he does not repent of the gifts he makes or of the calls he issues—such is the witness of the apostle.⁶ In company with the prophets and the same apostle, the Church awaits that day, known to God alone, on which all peoples will address the Lord in a single voice and “serve him shoulder to shoulder” (Zeph 3:9).⁷...

True, the Jewish authorities and those who followed their lead pressed for the death of Christ;⁸ still, what happened in his Passion cannot be charged against all the Jews, without distinction, then alive, or against the Jews of today. Although the Church is the new people of God, the Jews should not be presented as rejected or accursed by God, as if this followed from the Holy Scriptures....

Furthermore, in her rejection of every persecution against any man, the Church, mindful of the patrimony she shares with the Jews and moved not by political reasons but by the gospel’s spiritual love, decries hatred, persecutions, and displays of anti-Semitism directed against Jews at any time and by anyone....

5. We cannot truly call on God, the Father of all, if we refuse to treat in a brotherly way any man, created as he is in the image of God. Man’s relation to God the Father and his relation to men his brothers are so linked together that Scripture says: “He who does not love does not know God” [1 Jn 4:8].

No foundation, therefore, remains for any theory or practice that leads to discrimination between man and man or people and people, so far as their human dignity and the rights flowing from it are concerned.

The Church reprobates, as foreign to the mind of Christ, any discrimination against men or harassment of them because of their race, color, condition of life, or religion....

4201–4235: Public Session 8, November 18, 1965: Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation, Dei Verbum

Three spheres of problems led to the Constitution on Divine Revelation: the clarification of the understanding of tradition and the sufficiency of Scripture, the new formulation of the concept of inspiration made necessary by the historical-critical method, and the reception of the preconciliar biblical movement. The schema De fontibus revelationis, which was presented by the preparatory theological commission and amounted essentially to a canonization of Roman Scholastic theology, met with strong opposition from the council Fathers. By means of a vote on November 14, 1962, which was disputed as to its form, a majority emerged against the continuation of the discussion, but it fell short of the two-thirds majority needed for a rejection. Thereupon, Pope John XXIII removed the text from the agenda and appointed a new “mixed commission”, which was to develop a schema De divina revelatione. This commission drew up the new text in the spring of 1963. A revised version, which evolved from the suggested changes, was presented to the council in late September 1964. The result of the discussions was another version that was once more the subject of deliberation.

PROOEMIUM

4201 1. Dei verbum religiose audiens et fidenter proclamans, Sacrosancta Synodus verbis S. Ioannis obsequitur dicentis: “Adnuntiamus vobis vitam aeternam, quae erat apud Patrem et apparuit nobis: quod vidimus et audivimus adnuntiamus vobis, ut et vos societatem habeatis nobiscum, et societas nostra sit cum Patre et cum Filio eius Iesu Christo” [1 Io 1:2s]. Propterea, Concilium Tridentini et Vaticani I inhaerens vestigiis, genuinam de divina revelatione ac de eius transmissione doctrinam proponere intendit, ut salutis praeconio mundus universus audiendo credat, credendo speret, sperando amet.¹ [818]

DE IPSA REVELATIONE

4202 2. Placuit Deo in sua bonitate et sapientia Seipsum revelare et notum facere sacramentum voluntatis suae [cf. Eph 1:9], quo homines per Christum, Verbum carnem factum, in Spiritu Sancto accessum habent ad Patrem et divinae naturae consortes efficiuntur [cf. Eph 2:18; 2 Pt 1:4]. Hac itaque revelatione Deus invisibilis [cf. Col 1:15; 1 Tim 1:17] ex abundantia caritatis suae homines tamquam amicos alloquitur [cf. Ex 33:11; Io 15:14s] et cum eis conversatur [cf. Bar 3:38], ut eos ad societatem Secum invitet in eamque suscipiat.

Haec revelationis oeconomia fit gestis verbisque intrinsece inter se connexis, ita ut opera, in historia salutis a Deo patrata, doctrinam et res verbis significatas manifestent ac corroborent, verba autem opera proclamant et mysterium in eis contentum elucident. Intima autem per hanc revelationem tam de Deo quam de hominis salute veritas nobis in Christo illucescit, qui mediator simul et plenitudo totius revelationis existit.¹

PREFACE

1. Hearing the Word of God with reverence and proclaiming it with faith, the sacred synod takes its direction from these words of St. John: “We announce to you the eternal life which dwelt with the Father and was made visible to us. What we have seen and heard we announce to you, so that you may have fellowship with us and our common fellowship be with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ” [1 Jn 1:2–3]. Therefore, following in the footsteps of the Council of Trent and of the First Vatican Council, this present council wishes to set forth authentic doctrine on divine revelation and how it is handed on, so that by hearing the message of salvation the whole world may believe, by believing it may hope, and by hoping it may love.¹

REVELATION ITSELF

2. In his goodness and wisdom, God chose to reveal himself and to make known to us the hidden purpose of his will [cf. Eph 1:9] by which through Christ, the Word made flesh, man might in the Holy Spirit have access to the Father and come to share in the Divine Nature [cf. Eph 2:18; 2 Pet 1:4]. Through this revelation, therefore, the invisible God [cf. Col 1:15; 1 Tim 1:17] out of the abundance of his love speaks to men as friends [cf. Ex 33:11; Jn 15:14–15] and lives among them [cf. Bar 3:38], so that he may invite and take them into fellowship with himself.

This plan of revelation is realized by deeds and words having an inner unity: the deeds wrought by God in the history of salvation manifest and confirm the teaching and realities signified by the words, while the words proclaim the deeds and clarify the mystery contained in them. By this revelation, then, the deepest truth about God and the salvation of man shines out for our sake in Christ, who is both the mediator and the fullness of all revelation.¹

3. Deus, per Verbum omnia creans [cf. Io 1:3] et conservans, in rebus creatis perenne sui testimonium hominibus praebet [cf. Rm 1:19s] et, viam salutis supernae aperire intendens, insuper protoparentibus inde ab initio Semetipsum manifestavit. Post eorum autem lapsum eos, redemptione promissa, in spem salutis erexit [cf. Gn 3:15] et sine intermissione generis humani curam egit, ut omnibus qui secundum patientiam boni operis salutem quaerunt, vitam aeternam daret [cf. Rm 2:6s].

Suo autem tempore Abraham vocavit, ut faceret eum in gentem magnam [cf. Gn 12:2s], quam post Patriarchas per Moysen et Prophetas erudit ad Se solum Deum vivum et verum, providum Patrem et iudicem iustum agnoscendum, et ad promissum Salvatorem expectandum, atque ita per saecula viam Evangelio praeparavit.

Quapropter Ipse, quem qui videt, videt et Patrem [cf. Io 14:9], tota Sui ipsius praesentia ac manifestatione, verbis et operibus, signis et miraculis, praesertim autem morte sua et gloriosa ex mortuis resurrectione, misso tandem Spiritu veritatis, revelationem complendo perficit ac testimonio divino confirmat, Deum nempe nobiscum esse ad nos ex peccati mortisque tenebris liberandos et in aeternam vitam resuscitandos.

Oeconomia ergo christiana, utpote foedus novum et definitivum, numquam praeribit, et nulla iam nova revelatio publica expectanda est ante gloriosam manifestationem Domini nostri Iesu Christi [cf. 1 Tim 6:14; Tit 2:13].

5. Deo revelanti praestanda est oboeditio fidei [cf. Rm 16:26; coll. Rm 1:5; 2 Cor 10:5s], qua homo se totum libere Deo committit “plenum revelanti Deo intellectus et voluntatis obsequium” praestando¹ et voluntarie revelationi ab Eo datae assentiendo.

3. God, who through the Word creates all things [cf. Jn 1:3] and keeps them in existence, gives men an enduring witness to himself in created realities [cf. Rom 1:19–20]. Planning to make known the way of heavenly salvation, he went farther and from the start manifested himself to our first parents. Then after their fall, his promise of redemption aroused in them the hope of being saved [cf. Gen 3:15], and from that time on he ceaselessly kept the human race in his care, in order to give eternal life to those who perseveringly do good in search of salvation [cf. Rom 2:6–7].

Then, at the time he had appointed, he called Abraham in order to make of him a great nation [cf. Gen 12:2f]. Through the patriarchs, and after them through Moses and the prophets, he taught this people to acknowledge himself the one living and true God, provident father and just judge, and to wait for the Savior promised by him and in this manner prepared the way for the gospel down through the centuries.

4. Then, after speaking in many and varied ways through the prophets, “now at last in these days God has spoken to us in his Son” [Heb 1:1–2]. For he sent his Son, the eternal Word, who enlightens all men, so that he might dwell among men and tell them of the innermost being of God [cf. Jn 1:1–18]. Jesus Christ, therefore, the Word made flesh, was sent as “a man to men”.¹ He “speaks the words of God” [Jn 3:34] and completes the work of salvation that his Father gave him to do [cf. Jn 5:36; 17:4].

To see Jesus is to see his Father [Jn 14:9]. For this reason Jesus perfected revelation by fulfilling it through his whole work of making himself present and manifesting himself: through his words and deeds, his signs and wonders, but especially through his death and glorious Resurrection from the dead and final sending of the Spirit of truth. Moreover he confirmed with divine testimony what revelation proclaimed, that God is with us to free us from the darkness of sin and death and to raise us up to life eternal.

The Christian dispensation, therefore, as the new and definitive covenant, will never pass away, and we now await no further new public revelation before the glorious manifestation of our Lord Jesus Christ [cf. 1 Tim 6:14; Tit 2:13].

5. “The obedience of faith” [Rom 16:26; cf. 1:5; 2 Cor 10:5–6] “is to be given to God who reveals, an obedience by which man commits his whole self freely to God, offering the full submission of intellect and will to God who reveals”¹ and freely assenting to the truth revealed by him.

Quae fides ut praebeatur, opus est praeviente et adiuvante gratia Dei et internis Spiritus Sancti auxiliis, qui cor moveat et in Deum convertat, mentis oculos aperiat, et det “omnibus suavitatem in consentiendo et credendo veritati”.² Quo vero profundior usque evadat revelationis intelligentia, idem Spiritus Sanctus fidem iugiter per dona sua perficit.

4206 6. Divina revelatione Deus Seipsum atque aeterna voluntatis suae decreta circa hominum salutem manifestare ac communicare voluit, “ad participanda scilicet bona divina, quae humanae mentis intelligentiam omnino superant”.¹

Confitetur Sacra Synodus, “Deum, rerum omnium principium et finem, naturali humanae rationis lumine e rebus creatis certo cognosci posse” [cf. Rm 1:20]; eius vero revelationi tribuendum esse docet, [820] “ut ea, quae in rebus divinis humanae rationi per se impervia non sunt, in praesenti quoque generis humani conditione ab omnibus expedite, firma certitudine et nullo admixto errore cognosci possint”.²

DE DIVINAE REVELATIONIS TRANSMISSIONE

4207 7. Quae Deus ad salutem cunctarum gentium revelaverat, eadem benignissime disposuit ut in aevum integra permanerent omnibusque generationibus transmitterentur. Ideo Christus Dominus, in quo summi Dei tota revelatio consummatur [cf. 2 Cor 1:20; 3:16–4:6], mandatum dedit Apostolis ut Evangelium, quod promissum ante per Prophetas Ipse adimplevit et proprio ore promulgavit, tamquam fontem omnis et salutaris veritatis et morum disciplinae omnibus praedicarent,¹ eis dona divina communicantes.

To make this act of faith, the grace of God and the interior help of the Holy Spirit must precede and assist, moving the heart and turning it to God, opening the eyes of the mind and giving “joy and ease to everyone in assenting to the truth and believing it”.² To bring about an ever deeper understanding of revelation, the same Holy Spirit constantly brings faith to completion by his gifts.

6. Through divine revelation, God chose to show forth and communicate himself and the eternal decisions of his will regarding the salvation of men. That is to say, he chose to share with them those divine treasures that totally transcend the understanding of the human mind.¹

As a sacred synod has affirmed, God, the beginning and end of all things, can be known with certainty from created reality by the light of human reason [cf. Rom 1:20]; but it teaches that it is through his revelation that those religious truths which are by their nature accessible to human reason can be known by all men with ease, with solid certitude, and with no trace of error, even in this present state of the human race.²

HANDING ON DIVINE REVELATION

7. In his gracious goodness, God has seen to it that what he had revealed for the salvation of all nations would abide perpetually in its full integrity and be handed on to all generations. Therefore Christ the Lord, in whom the full revelation of the supreme God is brought to completion [cf. Cor 1:20; 3:13–4:6], commissioned the apostles to preach to all men that gospel which is the source of all saving truth and moral teaching¹ and to impart to them heavenly gifts. This gospel had been promised in former times through the prophets, and Christ himself had fulfilled it and promulgated it with his lips.

This commission was faithfully fulfilled by the apostles, who, by their oral preaching, by example, and by observances, handed on what they had received from the lips of Christ, from living with him, and from what he did or what they had learned through the prompting of the Holy Spirit. The commission was fulfilled, too, by those apostles and apostolic men who under the inspiration of the same Holy Spirit committed the message of salvation to writing.²

Ut autem Evangelium integrum et vivum iugiter in Ecclesia servaretur, Apostoli successores reliquerunt Episcopos, ipsis “suum ipsorum locum magisterii tradentes”.¹ Haec igitur Sacra Traditio et Sacra utriusque Testamenti Scriptura veluti speculum sunt in quo Ecclesia in terris peregrinans contemplatur Deum, a quo omnia accipit, usquedum ad Eum videndum facie ad faciem sicuti est perducat [cf. 1 Io 3:2].

8. Itaque praedicatio apostolica, quae in inspiratis libris speciali modo exprimitur, continua successione usque ad consummationem temporum conservari debebat.

Unde Apostoli, tradentes quod et ipsi acceperunt, fideles monent ut teneant traditiones quas sive per sermonem sive per epistolam didicerint [cf. 2 Th 2:15], utque pro semel sibi tradita fide decertent [821] [cf. Iud 3].¹ Quod vero ab Apostolis traditum est, ea omnia complectitur quae ad Populi Dei vitam sancte ducendam fidemque augendam conferunt, sicque Ecclesia, in sua doctrina, vita et cultu, perpetuat cunctisque generationibus transmittit omne quod ipsa est, omne quod credit.

Haec quae est ab Apostolis Traditio sub assistentia Spiritus Sancti in Ecclesia proficit:¹ crescit enim tam rerum quam verborum traditorum perceptio, tum ex contemplatione et studio credentium qui ea conferunt in corde suo [cf. Lc 2:19, 51], tum ex intima spiritualium rerum quam experiuntur intelligentia, tum ex praeconio eorum qui cum episcopatus successione charisma veritatis certum acceperunt. Ecclesia scilicet, volventibus saeculis, ad plenitudinem divinae veritatis iugiter tendit, donec in ipsa consummentur verba Dei.

Sanctorum Patrum dicta huius Traditionis vivificam testificantur praesentiam, cuius divitiae in praxim vitamque credentis et orantis Ecclesiae transfunduntur. Per eandem Traditionem integer Sacrorum Librorum canon Ecclesiae innotescit, ipsaeque Sacrae Litterae in ea penitus intelliguntur et indesinenter actuosae redduntur; sicque Deus, qui olim locutus est, sine intermissione cum dilecti Filii sui Sponsa colloquitur, et Spiritus Sanctus, per quem viva vox Evangelii in Ecclesia, et per ipsam in mundo resonat, credentes in omnem veritatem inducit, verbumque Christi in eis abundanter inhabitare facit [cf. Col 3:16].

But in order to keep the gospel forever whole and alive within the Church, the apostles left bishops as their successors, “handing over” to them “the authority to teach in their own place”.¹ This sacred tradition, therefore, and Sacred Scripture of both the Old and New Testaments are like a mirror in which the pilgrim Church on earth looks at God, from whom she has received everything, until she is brought finally to see him as he is, face to face [cf. 1 Jn 3:2].

8. And so the apostolic preaching, which is expressed in a special way in the inspired books, was to be preserved by an unending succession of preachers until the end of time.

Therefore the apostles, handing on what they themselves had received, warn the faithful to hold fast to the traditions they have learned either by word of mouth or by letter [cf. 2 Thess 2:15] and to fight in defense of the faith handed on once and for all [cf. Jude 1:3].¹ Now what was handed on by the apostles includes everything that contributes toward the holiness of life and increase in faith of the people of God; and so the Church, in her teaching, life, and worship, perpetuates and hands on to all generations all that she herself is, all that she believes.

This tradition that comes from the apostles develops in the Church with the help of the Holy Spirit.¹ For there is a growth in the understanding of the realities and the words that have been handed down. This happens through the contemplation and study made by believers, who treasure these things in their hearts [cf. Lk 2:19, 51], through a penetrating understanding of the spiritual realities they experience, and through the preaching of those who have received through episcopal succession the sure gift of truth. For as the centuries succeed one another, the Church constantly moves forward toward the fullness of divine truth until the words of God reach their complete fulfillment in her.

The words of the holy Fathers witness to the presence of this living tradition, whose wealth is poured into the practice and life of the believing and praying Church. Through the same tradition the Church’s full canon of the sacred books is known, and the sacred writings themselves are more profoundly understood and unceasingly made active in her; and thus God, who spoke of old, uninterruptedly converses with the Bride of his beloved Son; and the Holy Spirit, through whom the living voice of the gospel resounds in the Church and, through her, in the world, leads unto all truth those who believe and makes the word of Christ dwell abundantly in them [cf. Col 3:16].

4212 9. Sacra Traditio ergo et Sacra Scriptura arcte inter se connectuntur atque communicant. Nam ambae, ex eadem divina scaturigine promanantes, in unum quodammodo coalescunt et in eundem finem tendunt. Etenim Sacra Scriptura est locutio Dei quatenus divino afflante Spiritu scripto consignatur; Sacra autem Traditio verbum Dei, a Christo Domino et a Spiritu Sancto Apostolis concreditum, successoribus eorum integre transmittit, ut illud, praelucente Spiritu veritatis, praeconio suo fideliter servent, exponant atque diffundant; quo fit ut Ecclesia certitudinem suam de omnibus revelatis non per solam Sacram Scripturam hauriat. Quapropter utraque pari pietatis affectu ac reverentia suscipienda et veneranda est.¹ [822]

Patet igitur Sacram Traditionem, Sacram Scripturam et Ecclesiae Magisterium, iuxta sapientissimum Dei consilium, ita inter se connecti et consociari, ut unum sine aliis non consistat, omniaque simul, singula suo modo sub actione unius Spiritus Sancti, ad animarum salutem efficaciter conferant.

9. Hence there exists a close connection and communication between sacred tradition and Sacred Scripture. For both of them, flowing from the same divine wellspring, in a certain way merge into a unity and tend toward the same end. For Sacred Scripture is the Word of God inasmuch as it is consigned to writing under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, while sacred tradition takes the Word of God entrusted by Christ the Lord and the Holy Spirit to the apostles and hands it on to their successors in its full purity, so that led by the light of the Spirit of truth, they may in proclaiming it preserve this Word of God faithfully, explain it, and make it more widely known. Consequently, it is not from Sacred Scripture alone that the Church draws her certainty about everything that has been revealed. Therefore both sacred tradition and Sacred Scripture are to be accepted and venerated with the same sense of loyalty and reverence.¹

10. Sacred tradition and Sacred Scripture form one sacred deposit of the Word of God, committed to the Church. Holding fast to this deposit, the entire holy people united with their shepherds remain always steadfast in the teaching of the apostles, in the common life, in the breaking of the bread, and in prayers [cf. Acts 2:42, Gk.], so that holding to, practicing, and professing the heritage of the faith, it becomes on the part of the bishops and faithful a single common effort.¹

But the task of authentically interpreting the Word of God, whether written or handed on,¹ has been entrusted exclusively to the living teaching office of the Church,² whose authority is exercised in the name of Jesus Christ. This teaching office is not above the Word of God, but serves it, teaching only what has been handed on, listening to it devoutly, guarding it scrupulously, and explaining it faithfully in accord with a divine commission and with the help of the Holy Spirit. It draws from this one deposit of faith everything that it presents for belief as divinely revealed.

It is clear, therefore, that sacred tradition, Sacred Scripture, and the teaching authority of the Church, in accord with God's most wise design, are so linked and joined together that one cannot stand without the others and that all together and each in its own way under the action of the one Holy Spirit contribute effectively to the salvation of souls.

CAPUT III
DE SACRAE SCRIPTURAE DIVINA INSPIRATIONE
ET DE EIUS INTERPRETATIONE

11. Divinitus revelata, quae in Sacra Scriptura litteris continentur et prostant, Spiritu Sancto afflante consignata sunt. Libros enim integros tam Veteris quam Novi Testamenti, cum omnibus eorum partibus, sancta Mater Ecclesia ex apostolica fide pro sacris et canonicis habet, propterea quod, Spiritu Sancto inspirante conscripti [cf. Io 20:31; 2 Tim 3:16; 2 Pt 1:19–21; 3:15s], Deum habent auctorem, atque ut [823] tales ipsi Ecclesiae traditi sunt.¹ In sacris vero libris conficiendis Deus homines elegit, quos facultatibus ac viribus suis utentes adhibuit,² ut Ipso in illis et per illos agente,³ ea omnia eaque sola, quae Ipse vellet, ut veri auctores scripto traderent.⁴

Cum ergo omne id, quod auctores inspirati seu hagiographi asserunt, retineri debeat assertum a Spiritu Sancto, inde Scripturae libri veritatem, quam Deus nostrae salutis causa Litteris Sacris consignari voluit, firmiter, fideliter et sine errore docere profitendi sunt.¹ Itaque “omnis Scriptura divinitus inspirata et utilis ad docendum, ad arguendum, ad corpiendum, ad erudiendum in iustitia: ut perfectus sit homo Dei, ad omne opus bonum instructus” [2 Tim 3:16s gr.].

Ad hagiographorum intentionem eruendam inter alia etiam genera litteraria respicienda sunt.

Aliter enim atque aliter veritas in textibus vario modo historicis, vel propheticis, vel poeticis, vel in aliis dicendi generibus proponitur et exprimitur.

CHAPTER III
SACRED SCRIPTURE, ITS INSPIRATION AND DIVINE INTERPRETATION

11. Those divinely revealed realities that are contained and presented in Sacred Scripture have been committed to writing under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. For Holy Mother Church, relying on the belief of the apostles [cf. Jn 20:31; 2 Tim 3:16; 2 Pet 1:19–20, 3:15–16], holds that the books of both the Old and New Testaments in their entirety, with all their parts, are sacred and canonical because written under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, have God as their author, and have been handed on as such to the Church herself.¹ In composing the sacred books, God chose men, and while employed by him² they made use of their powers and abilities, so that with him acting in them and through them,³ they, as true authors, consigned to writing everything and only those things that he wanted.⁴

Therefore, since everything asserted by the inspired authors or sacred writers must be held to be asserted by the Holy Spirit, it follows that the books of Scripture must be acknowledged as teaching solidly, faithfully, and without error that truth which God, for the sake of our salvation, wanted put into sacred writings.¹ Therefore “all Scripture is divinely inspired and has its use for teaching the truth and refuting error, for reformation of manners and discipline in right living, so that the man who belongs to God may be efficient and equipped for good work of every kind” [2 Tim 3:16–17, Gk.].

12. However, since God speaks in Sacred Scripture through men in human fashion,¹ the interpreter of Sacred Scripture, in order to see clearly what God wanted to communicate to us, should carefully investigate what meaning the sacred writers really intended and what God wanted to manifest by means of their words.

To search out the intention of the sacred writers, attention should be given, among other things, to “literary forms”.

For truth is set forth and expressed differently in texts that are variously historical, prophetic, poetic, or of other forms of discourse.

4218 Oportet porro ut interpres sensum inquirat, quem in determinatis adiunctis hagiographus, pro sui temporis et suae culturae condicione, ope generum litterariorum illo tempore adhibitorum exprimere [824] intenderit et expresserit.¹

Ad recte enim intelligendum id quod sacer auctor scripto asserere voluerit, rite attendendum est tum ad suetos illos nativos sentiendi, dicendi, narrandive modos, qui temporibus hagiographi vigeant, tum ad illos qui illo aevo in mutuo hominum commercio passim adhiberi solebant.²

Exegetarum autem est secundum has regulas adlaborare ad Sacrae Scripturae sensum penitus intelligendum et exponendum, ut quasi praeparato studio, iudicium Ecclesiae maturetur. Cuncta enim haec, de ratione interpretandi Scripturam, Ecclesiae iudicio ultime subsunt, quae verbi Dei servandi et interpretandi divino fungitur mandato et ministerio.²

4220 13. In Sacra Scriptura ergo manifestatur, salva semper Dei veritate et sanctitate, aeternae Sapientiae admirabilis condescensio, “ut discamus ineffabilem Dei benignitatem, et quanta sermonis attemperatione usus sit, nostrae naturae providentiam et curam habens”.¹ Dei enim verba, humanis linguis expressa, humano sermoni assimilia facta sunt, sicut olim Aeterni Patris Verbum, humanae infirmitatis assumpta carne, hominibus simile factum est.

The interpreter must investigate what meaning the sacred writer intended to express and actually expressed in particular circumstances by using contemporary literary forms in accordance with the situation of his own time and culture.¹

For the correct understanding of what the sacred author wanted to assert, due attention must be paid to the customary and characteristic styles of feeling, speaking, and narrating that prevailed at the time of the sacred writer and to the patterns men normally employed at that period in their everyday dealings with one another.²

But, since Holy Scripture must be read and interpreted in the sacred spirit in which it was written,¹ no less serious attention must be given to the content and unity of the whole of Scripture if the meaning of the sacred texts is to be correctly worked out. The living tradition of the whole Church must be taken into account along with the harmony that exists between elements of the faith.

It is the task of exegetes to work according to these rules toward a better understanding and explanation of the meaning of Sacred Scripture, so that through preparatory study the judgment of the Church may mature. For all of what has been said about the way of interpreting Scripture is subject finally to the judgment of the Church, which carries out the divine commission and ministry of guarding and interpreting the Word of God.²

13. In Sacred Scripture, therefore, while the truth and holiness of God always remain intact, the marvelous “condescension” of eternal wisdom is clearly shown, “that we may learn the gentle kindness of God, which words cannot express, and how far he has gone in adapting his language with thoughtful concern for our weak human nature”.¹ For the words of God, expressed in human language, have been made like human discourse, just as the Word of the eternal Father, when he took to himself the flesh of human weakness, was in every way made like men.

plebe Israel per Moysen [cf. Ex 24:8] inito, populo sibi acquisito [825] ita Se tamquam unicum Deum verum et vivum verbis ac gestis revelavit, ut Israel, quae divinae essent cum hominibus viae experiretur, easque, ipso Deo per os Prophetarum loquente, penitius et clarius in dies intelligeret atque latius in gentes exhiberet [cf. Ps 21:28s; 95:1–3; Is 2:1–4; Ier 3:17]. Oeconomia autem salutis ab auctoribus sacris praenuntiata, enarrata atque explicata, ut verum Dei verbum in libris Veteris Testamenti exstat; quapropter hi libri divinitus inspirati perennem valorem servant: “Quaecumque enim scripta sunt, ad nostram doctrinam scripta sunt, ut per patientiam et consolationem Scripturarum spem habeamus” [Rm 15:4].

15. Veteris Testamenti oeconomia ad hoc potissimum disposita erat, ut Christi universorum redemptoris Regnique Messianici adventum praepararet, prophetice nuntiaret [cf. Lc 24:44; Io 5:39; 1 Pt 1:10] et variis typis significaret [cf. 1 Cor 10:11].

Veteris autem Testamenti libri, pro condicione humani generis ante tempora instauratae a Christo salutis, Dei et hominis cognitionem ac modos quibus Deus iustus et misericors cum hominibus agit, omnibus manifestant. Qui libri, quamvis etiam imperfecta et temporaria contineant, veram tamen paedagogiam divinam demonstrant.¹ Unde iidem libri, qui vivum sensum Dei expriment, in quibus sublimes de Deo doctrinae ac salutaris de vita hominis sapientia mirabilesque precum thesauri reconduntur, in quibus tandem latet mysterium salutis nostrae, a Christifidelibus devote accipiendi sunt.

covenant with Abraham [cf. Gen 15:18] and, through Moses, with the people of Israel [cf. Ex 24:8]. To this people that he had acquired for himself, he so manifested himself through words and deeds as the one true and living God that Israel came to know by experience the ways of God with men. Then too, when God himself spoke to them through the mouth of the prophets, Israel daily gained a deeper and clearer understanding of his ways and made them more widely known among the nations [cf. Ps 22:28–29; 96:1–3; Is 2:1–4; Jer 3:17]. The plan of salvation foretold by the sacred authors, recounted, and explained by them is found as the true Word of God in the books of the Old Testament: these books, therefore, written under divine inspiration, remain permanently valuable. “For all that was written for our instruction, so that by steadfastness and the encouragement of the Scriptures we might have hope” [Rom 15:4].

15. The principal purpose to which the plan of the Old Covenant was directed was to prepare for the coming of Christ, the Redeemer of all, and of the messianic kingdom, to announce this coming by prophecy [cf. Lk 24:44; Jn 5:39; 1 Pet 1:10], and to indicate its meaning through various types [cf. 1 Cor 10:11]. 4222

Now the books of the Old Testament, in accordance with the state of mankind before the time of salvation established by Christ, reveal to all men the knowledge of God and of man and the ways in which God, just and merciful, deals with men. These books, though they also contain some things that are incomplete and temporary, nevertheless show us true divine pedagogy.¹ These same books, then, give expression to a lively sense of God, contain a store of sublime teachings about God, sound wisdom about human life, and a wonderful treasury of prayers, and in them the mystery of our salvation is present in a hidden way. Christians should receive them with reverence.

16. God, the inspirer and author of both Testaments, wisely arranged that the New Testament be hidden in the Old and the Old be made manifest in the New.¹ For, though Christ established the New Covenant in his blood [cf. Lc 22:20; 1 Cor 11:25], still the books of the Old Testament with all their parts, caught up into the proclamation of the gospel,² acquire and show forth their full meaning in the New Testament [cf. Mt 5:17; Lc 24:27; Rom 16:25–26; 2 Cor 14:16] and in turn shed light on it and explain it. 4223

Exaltatus a terra omnes ad Seipsum trahit [cf. Io 12:32 gr.]. Ipse qui solus verba vitae aeternae habet [cf. Io 6:68].

Hoc autem mysterium aliis generationibus non est patefactum, sicut nunc revelatum est sanctis Apostolis Eius et Prophetis in Spiritu Sancto [cf. Eph 3:4-6 gr.], ut Evangelium praedicarent, fidem in Iesum Christum ac Dominum excitarent et Ecclesiam congregarent. Quarum rerum scripta Novi Testamenti exstant testimonium perenne atque divinum.

Quattuor Evangelia originem apostolicam habere Ecclesia semper et ubique tenuit ac tenet. Quae enim Apostoli ex mandato Christi praedicaverunt, postea divino afflante Spiritu, in scriptis, ipsi et apostolici viri nobis tradiderunt, fidei fundamentum, quadriforme nempe Evangelium, secundum Matthaeum, Marcum, Lucam et Ioannem.¹

Apostoli quidem post ascensionem Domini, illa quae Ipse dixerat et fecerat, auditoribus ea pleniore intelligentia tradiderunt, qua ipsi, eventibus gloriosis Christi instructi et lumine [827] Spiritus veritatis¹ edocti, fruebantur.²

CHAPTER V
THE NEW TESTAMENT

17. The Word God, which is the power of God for the salvation of all who believe [cf. Rom 1:16], is set forth and shows its power in a most excellent way in the writings of the New Testament. For when the fullness of time arrived [cf. Gal 4:4], the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us in his fullness of grace and truth [cf. Jn 1:14]. Christ established the kingdom of God on earth, manifested his Father and himself by deeds and words, and completed his work by his death, Resurrection, and glorious Ascension and by the sending of the Holy Spirit. Having been lifted up from the earth, he draws all men to himself [cf. Jn 12:32, Gk.], he who alone has the words of eternal life [cf. Jn 6:68].

This mystery had not been manifested to other generations as it was now revealed to his holy apostles and prophets in the Holy Spirit [cf. Eph 3:4-6, Gk.], so that they might preach the gospel, stir up faith in Jesus, Christ and Lord, and gather together the Church. Now the writings of the New Testament stand as a perpetual and divine witness to these realities.

18. It is common knowledge that among all the Scriptures, even those of the New Testament, the Gospels have a special preeminence, and rightly so, for they are the principal witness for the life and teaching of the incarnate Word, our Savior.

The Church has always and everywhere held and continues to hold that the four Gospels are of apostolic origin. For what the apostles preached in fulfillment of the commission of Christ, afterward they themselves and apostolic men, under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, handed on to us in writing: the foundation of faith, namely, the fourfold Gospel, according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.¹

19. Holy Mother Church has firmly and with absolute constancy held, and continues to hold, that the four Gospels just named, whose historical character the Church unhesitatingly asserts, faithfully hand on what Jesus Christ, while living among men, really did and taught for their eternal salvation until the day he was taken up into heaven [cf. Acts 1:1f].

Indeed, after the Ascension of the Lord, the apostles handed on to their hearers what he had said and done. This they did with that clearer understanding which they enjoyed¹ after they had been instructed by the glorious events of Christ's life and taught by the light of the Spirit of truth.²

Auctores autem sacri quattuor Evangelia conscripserunt, quaedam e multis aut ore aut iam scripto traditis seligentes, quaedam in synthesim redigentes, vel statui ecclesiarum attendendo explanantes, formam denique praeconii retinentes, ita semper ut vera et sincera de Iesu nobiscum communicarent.³ Illa enim intentione scripserunt, sive ex sua propria memoria et recordatione, sive ex testimonio illorum “qui ab initio ipsi viderunt et ministri fuerunt sermonis”, ut cognoscamus eorum verborum de quibus eruditi sumus, “veritatem” [cf. Lc 1:2–4].

20. Novi Testamenti canon praeter quattuor Evangelia etiam epistulas sancti Pauli aliaque scripta apostolica Spiritu Sancto inspirante exarata continet, quibus, ex sapienti Dei consilio, ea quae sunt de Christo Domino confirmantur, genuina Eius doctrina magis magisque declaratur, salutifera virtus divini operis Christi praedicatur, Ecclesiae initia ac admirabilis diffusio narrantur eiusque consummatio gloriosa praenuntiatur.

Apostolis enim suis Dominus Iesus sicut promiserat affuit [cf. Mt 28:20] et iis Paraclitum Spiritum misit, qui eos in plenitudinem veritatis induceret [cf. Io 16:13].

CAPUT VI

DE SACRA SCRIPTURA IN VITA ECCLESIAE

21. Divinas Scripturas sicut et ipsum Corpus dominicum semper venerata est Ecclesia, cum, maxime in sacra Liturgia, non desinat ex mensa tam verbi Dei quam Corporis Christi panem vitae sumere atque fidelibus porrigere. Eas una cum Sacra Traditione semper ut supremam fidei suae regulam habuit et habet, cum a Deo inspiratae et semel pro semper litteris consignatae, verbum ipsius Dei immutabiliter impertiant, atque in verbis Prophetarum Apostolorumque vocem Spiritus Sancti personare faciant.

Omnis ergo praedicatio ecclesiastica sicut ipsa religio christiana Sacra Scriptura nutriatur et regatur oportet. In sacris enim libris Pater qui in caelis est filiis suis peramanter occurrit et cum eis [828] sermonem confert; tanta autem verbo Dei vis ac virtus inest, ut Ecclesiae sustentaculum ac vigor, et Ecclesiae filiis fidei robur, animae cibus, vitae spiritualis fons purus et perennis exstet. Unde de Sacra Scriptura excellenter valent dicta: “Vivus est enim sermo Dei et efficax” [Hbr 4:12], “qui potens est aedificare et dare hereditatem in sanctificationis omnibus” [Act 20:32; cf. 1 Th 2:13].

The sacred authors wrote the four Gospels, selecting some things from the many that had been handed on by word of mouth or in writing, reducing some of them to a synthesis, explaining some things in view of the situation of their churches, and preserving the form of proclamation but always in such fashion that they told us the honest truth about Jesus.³ For their intention in writing was that either from their own memory and recollections or from the witness of those who “themselves from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the Word” we might know “the truth” concerning those matters about which we have been instructed [cf. Lk 1:2–4].

20. Besides the four Gospels, the canon of the New Testament also contains the epistles of St. Paul and other apostolic writings, composed under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, by which, according to the wise plan of God, those matters that concern Christ the Lord are confirmed, his true teaching is more and more fully stated, the saving power of the divine work of Christ is preached, the story is told of the beginnings of the Church and her marvelous growth, and her glorious fulfillment is foretold.

For the Lord Jesus was with his apostles as he had promised [cf. Mt 28:20] and sent them the advocate Spirit who would lead them into the fullness of truth [cf. Jn 16:13].

CHAPTER VI

SACRED SCRIPTURE IN THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH

21. The Church has always venerated the divine Scriptures just as she venerates the body of the Lord, since, especially in the sacred liturgy, she unceasingly receives and offers to the faithful the bread of life from the table both of God’s Word and of Christ’s Body. She has always maintained them, and continues to do so, together with sacred tradition, as the supreme rule of faith, since, as inspired by God and committed once and for all to writing, they impart the Word of God himself without change and make the voice of the Holy Spirit resound in the words of the prophets and apostles.

Therefore, like the Christian religion itself, all the preaching of the Church must be nourished and regulated by Sacred Scripture. For in the sacred books, the Father who is in heaven meets his children with great love and speaks with them; and the force and power in the Word of God is so great that it stands as the support and energy of the Church, the strength of faith for her sons, the food of the soul, the pure and everlasting source of spiritual life. Consequently, these words are perfectly applicable to Sacred Scripture: “For the word of God is living and active” [Heb 4:12], and “it has power to build you up and give you your heritage among all those who are sanctified” [Acts 20:32; cf. 1 Thess 2:13].

Cum autem verbum Dei omnibus temporibus praesto esse debeat, Ecclesia materna sollicitudine curat, ut aptae ac rectae exarentur in varias linguas versiones, praesertim ex primigeniis Sacrorum Librorum textibus. Quae si, data opportunitate et annuente Ecclesiae auctoritate, conficiantur communi etiam cum fratribus seiunctis nisu, ab omnibus christianis adhiberi poterunt.

Exegetae autem catholici, alique Sacrae Theologiae cultores, collatis sedulo viribus, operam dent oportet, ut sub vigilantia Sacri Magisterii, aptis subsidiis divinas Litteras ita investigent et proponant, ut quam plurimi divini verbi administri possint plebi Dei Scripturarum pabulum fructuose suppeditare, quod mentem illuminet, firmet voluntates, hominum corda ad Dei amorem accendat.¹ Sacra Synodus Ecclesiae filiis, biblicarum rerum cultoribus, animum addit, ut opus feliciter susceptum, renovatis in dies viribus, omni studio secundum sensum Ecclesiae exsequi pergant.²

22. Easy access to Sacred Scripture should be provided for all the Christian faithful. That is why the Church from the very beginning accepted as her own that very ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament which is called the Septuagint; and she has always given a place of honor to other Eastern translations and Latin ones, especially the Latin translation known as the Vulgate.

But since the Word of God should be accessible at all times, the Church by her authority and with maternal concern sees to it that suitable and correct translations are made into different languages, especially from the original texts of the sacred books. And should the opportunity arise and the Church authorities approve, if these translations are produced in cooperation with the separated brethren as well, all Christians will be able to use them.

23. The Bride of the incarnate Word, the Church taught by the Holy Spirit, is concerned to move ahead toward a deeper understanding of the Sacred Scriptures so that she may increasingly feed her sons with the divine words. Therefore, she also encourages the study of the holy Fathers of both East and West and of sacred liturgies.

Catholic exegetes, then, and other students of sacred theology, working diligently together and using appropriate means, should devote their energies, under the watchful care of the sacred teaching office of the Church, to an exploration and exposition of the divine writings. This should be so done that as many ministers of the divine Word as possible will be able effectively to provide the nourishment of the Scriptures for the people of God, to enlighten their minds, strengthen their wills, and set men's hearts on fire with the love of God.¹ The sacred synod encourages the sons of the Church and biblical scholars to continue energetically, following the mind of the Church, with the work they have so well begun, with a constant renewal of vigor.²

24. Sacred theology rests on the written Word of God, together with sacred tradition, as its primary and perpetual foundation. By scrutinizing in the light of faith all truth stored up in the mystery of Christ, theology is most powerfully strengthened and constantly rejuvenated by that Word. For the Sacred Scriptures contain the Word of God and, since they are inspired, really are the Word of God; and so the study of the sacred page is, as it were, the soul of sacred theology.¹

Eodem autem Scripturae verbo etiam ministerium verbi, pastoralis nempe praedicatio, catechesis omnisque instructio christiana, in qua homilia liturgica eximium locum habeat oportet, salubriter nutritur sancteque virescit.

Pariter Sancta Synodus christifideles omnes, praesertim sodales religiosos, vehementer peculiariterque exhortatur, ut frequenti divinarum Scripturarum lectione “eminentem scientiam Iesu Christi” [Phil 3:8] ediscant. “Ignoratio enim Scripturarum ignoratio Christi est.”² Libenter igitur ad sacrum textum ipsum accedant, sive per sacram Liturgiam divinis eloquiis confertam, sive per piam lectionem, sive per institutiones ad id aptas aliaque subsidia, quae approbantibus et curantibus Pastoribus Ecclesiae ubique nostro tempore laudabiliter diffunduntur. Meminerint autem orationem concomitari debere Sacrae Scripturae lectionem, ut fiat colloquium inter Deum et hominem; nam “illum alloquimur, cum oramus; illum audimus, cum divina legimus oracula.”³

Sacris autem Antistitibus, “apud quos est apostolica doctrina”,¹ fideles sibi commissos ad rectum divinatorum librorum usum, praesertim Novi Testamenti et imprimis Evangeliorum, opportune instituere competit per sacrorum textuum versiones, quae necessariis et vere sufficientibus [830] explicationibus instructae sint, ut tuto ac utiliter Ecclesiae filii cum Scripturis Sacris conversentur earumque spiritu imbuantur.

Insuper editiones Sacrae Scripturae, aptis instructae adnotationibus, ad usum etiam non-christianorum eorundemque conditionibus accommodatae, conficiantur, quas quoquomodo sive animarum Pastores sive Christiani cuiuscumque status spargere sapienter curent.

By the same word of Scripture the ministry of the Word also, that is, pastoral preaching, catechetics, and all Christian instruction, in which the liturgical homily must hold the foremost place, is nourished in a healthy way and flourishes in a holy way.

25. Therefore, all the clergy must hold fast to the Sacred Scriptures through diligent sacred reading and careful study, especially the priests of Christ and others, such as deacons and catechists, who are legitimately active in the ministry of the Word. This is to be done so that none of them will become “an empty preacher of the Word of God outwardly, who is not a listener to it inwardly”,¹ since they must share the abundant wealth of the divine Word with the faithful committed to them, especially in the sacred liturgy. 4232

The sacred synod also earnestly and especially urges all the Christian faithful, especially religious, to learn by frequent reading of the divine Scriptures the “excellent knowledge of Jesus Christ” [Phil 3:8]. “For ignorance of the Scriptures is ignorance of Christ.”² Therefore, they should gladly put themselves in touch with the sacred text itself, whether it be through the liturgy, rich in the divine Word, through devotional reading, or through instructions suitable for the purpose and other aids that, in our time, with approval and active support of the shepherds of the Church, are commendably spread everywhere. And let them remember that prayer should accompany the reading of Sacred Scripture, so that God and man may talk together; for “we speak to him when we pray; we hear him when we read the divine saying.”³

It devolves on sacred bishops “who have the apostolic teaching”¹ to give the faithful entrusted to them suitable instruction in the right use of the divine books, especially the New Testament and above all the Gospels. This can be done through translations of the sacred texts that are to be provided with the necessary and really adequate explanations so that the children of the Church may safely and profitably become conversant with the Sacred Scriptures and be penetrated with their spirit. 4233

Furthermore, editions of the Sacred Scriptures, provided with suitable footnotes, should be prepared also for the use of non-Christians and adapted to their situation. Both pastors of souls and Christians generally should see to the wise distribution of these in one way or another. 4234

4235 26. Ita ergo lectione et studio Sacrorum Librorum “sermo Dei currat et clarificetur” [2 Th 3:1], thesaurusque revelationis, Ecclesiae concreditus, magis magisque corda hominum impleat. Sicut ex assidua frequentatione mysterii Eucharistici Ecclesiae vita incrementum suscipit, ita novum spiritualis vitae impulsus sperare licet ex adaucta veneratione verbi Dei, quod “manet in aeternum” [Is 40:8; cf. 1 Pt 1:23–25].

26. In this way, therefore, through the reading and study of the sacred books, “the Word of God may spread rapidly and be glorified” [2 Thess 3:1] and the treasure of revelation, entrusted to the Church, may more and more fill the hearts of men. Just as the life of the Church is strengthened through more frequent celebration of the eucharistic mystery, similarly we may hope for a new stimulus for the life of the Spirit from a growing reverence for the Word of God, which “lasts forever” [Is 40:8; cf. 1 Pet 1:23–25].

The object of the declaration is “the right of the person and the community to social and civil liberty in matters of religion” (ius personae et communitatum ad libertatem socialem et civilem in re religiosa [subtitle]), not the question of the truth of the Christian religion, the relation of the individual with God, or liberty in the Church. Initially drafted by the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity as chapter 5 of the schema on ecumenism, the text was at first placed as a “Declaratio prior” (cf. *4185^o) in an appendix before it was separated and, after six successive revisions, became a declaration on its own.

I. Libertatis religiosae ratio generalis

I. The General Principle of Religious Freedom

4240 2. Haec Vaticana Synodus declarat personam humanam ius habere ad libertatem religiosam. Huiusmodi libertas in eo consistit, quod omnes homines debent immunes esse a coërcitione ex parte sive singulorum sive coetuum socialium et cuiusvis potestatis humanae, et ita quidem ut in re religiosa neque aliquis cogatur ad agendum contra suam conscientiam neque impediatur, quominus iuxta suam conscientiam agat privatim et publice, vel solus vel aliis consociatus, intra debitos limites.

2. This Vatican Council declares that the human person has a right to religious freedom. This freedom means that all men are to be immune from coercion on the part of individuals or of social groups and of any human power, in such wise that no one is to be forced to act in a manner contrary to his own beliefs, whether privately or publicly, whether alone or in association with others, within due limits.

Insuper declarat ius ad libertatem religiosam esse revera fundatum in ipsa dignitate [931] personae humanae, qualis et verbo Dei revelato et ipsa ratione cognoscitur.¹ Hoc ius personae humanae ad libertatem religiosam in iuridica societatis ordinatione ita est agnoscendum, ut ius civile evadat.

The council further declares that the right to religious freedom has its foundation in the very dignity of the human person as this dignity is known through the revealed Word of God and by reason itself.¹ This right of the human person to religious freedom is to be recognized in the constitutional law whereby society is governed, and thus it is to become a civil right.

It is in accordance with their dignity as persons—that is, beings endowed with reason and free will and therefore privileged to bear personal responsibility—that all men should be at once impelled by nature and also bound by a moral obligation to seek the truth, especially religious truth. They are also bound to adhere to the truth, once it is known, and to order their whole lives in accord with the demands of truth

Huic autem obligationi satisfacere homines, modo suae propriae naturae consentaneo, non possunt nisi libertate psychologica simul atque immunitate a coërcitione externa fruuntur. Non ergo in subiectiva

However, men cannot discharge these obligations in a manner in keeping with their own nature unless they enjoy immunity from external coercion as well as psychological freedom. Therefore, the right to religious freedom has personae dispositione, sed in ipsa eius natura ius ad libertatem religiosam fundatur. Quamobrem ius ad hanc immunitatem perseverat etiam in iis qui obligationi quaerendi veritatem eique adhaerendi non satisfaciunt; eiusque exercitium impediri nequit dummodo iustus ordo publicus servetur.

3. Quae clarius adhuc patent consideranti supremam humanae vitae normam esse ipsam legem divinam, aeternam, obiectivam atque universalem, qua Deus consilio sapientiae et dilectionis suae mundum universum viasque communitatis humanae ordinat, dirigit, gubernat. Huius suae legis Deus hominem participem reddit, ita ut homo, providentia divina suaviter disponente, veritatem incommutabilem magis magisque agnoscere possit.¹ Quapropter unusquisque officium ideoque et ius habet veritatem in re religiosa quaerendi ut sibi, mediis adhibitis idoneis, recta et vera conscientiae iudicia prudenter efformet. . . .

His igitur communitatibus, dummodo iustae exigentiae ordinis publici non violentur, iure debetur immunitas, ut secundum proprias normas sese regant, Numen supremum cultu publico honorent, membra sua in vita religiosa exercenda adiuvent et doctrina sustentent atque eas institutiones promoveant, in quibus membra cooperentur ad vitam propriam secundum sua principia religiosa ordinandam. . . .

II. Libertas religiosa sub luce Revelationis

[936] 10. Caput est ex praecipuis doctrinae catholicae, in verbo Dei contentum et a Patribus constanter praedicatum,¹ hominem debere Deo voluntarie respondere credendo; invitum proinde neminem esse cogendum ad its foundation, not in the subjective disposition of the person, but in his very nature. In consequence, the right to this immunity continues to exist even in those who do not live up to their obligation of seeking the truth and adhering to it, and the exercise of this right is not to be impeded, provided that just public order be observed.

3. Further light is shed on the subject if one considers that the highest norm of human life is the divine law—eternal, objective, and universal—whereby God orders, directs, and governs the entire universe and all the ways of the human community by a plan conceived in wisdom and love. Man has been made by God to participate in this law, with the result that, under the gentle disposition of divine providence, he can come to perceive ever more fully the truth that is unchanging.¹ Wherefore every man has the duty, and therefore the right, to seek the truth in matters religious in order that he may with prudence form for himself right and true judgments of conscience, under use of all suitable means. . . . 4242

4. The freedom or immunity from coercion in matters religious that is the endowment of persons as individuals is also to be recognized as their right when they act in community. Religious communities are a requirement of the social nature both of man and of religion itself. 4243

Provided the just demands of public order are observed, religious communities rightfully claim freedom in order that they may govern themselves according to their own norms, honor the Supreme Being in public worship, assist their members in the practice of the religious life, strengthen them by instruction, and promote institutions in which they may join together for the purpose of ordering their own lives in accordance with their religious principles. . . .

II. Religious Freedom in the Light of Revelation

9. The declaration of this Vatican Council on the right of man to religious freedom has its foundation in the dignity of the person, whose exigencies have come to be more fully known to human reason through centuries of experience. What is more, this doctrine of freedom has roots in divine revelation, and for this reason Christians are bound to respect it all the more conscientiously. . . . 4244

10. It is one of the major tenets of Catholic doctrine that man's response to God in faith must be free: no one, therefore, is to be forced to embrace the Christian faith against his own will.¹ This doctrine is contained in the 4245

amplectendam fidem.² Etenim actus fidei ipsa sua natura voluntarius est, cum homo, a Christo Salvatore redemptus et in adoptionem filiorum per Iesum Christum vocatus,³ Deo Sese revelanti adhaerere non possit, nisi Patre eum trahente⁴ rationabile liberumque Deo praestiterit fidei obsequium.

Indoli ergo fidei plene consonum est ut, in re religiosa, quodvis genus coercitionis ex parte hominum excludatur. Ac proinde ratio libertatis religiosae haud parum confert ad illum rerum statum fovendum, in quo homines expedite possint invitari ad fidem christianam, illam sponte amplecti atque eam in tota vitae ratione actuose confiteri.

Word of God, and it was constantly proclaimed by the Fathers of the Church.² The act of faith is of its very nature a free act. Man, redeemed by Christ the Savior and through Christ Jesus called to be God's adopted son,³ cannot give his adherence to God revealing himself unless, under the drawing of the Father,⁴ he offers to God the reasonable and free submission of faith.

It is therefore completely in accord with the nature of faith that in matters religious every manner of coercion on the part of men should be excluded. In consequence, the principle of religious freedom makes no small contribution to the creation of an environment in which men can without hindrance be invited to the Christian faith, embrace it of their own free will, and profess it effectively in their whole manner of life.

4301–4345: Public Session 9, December 7, 1965: Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World Gaudium et spes

One of the fundamental concerns of John XXIII was the opening of the Church to the world (cf. the apostolic constitution of convocation Humanae salutis, December 25, 1961: AAS 54 [1962]: 7–10). In a discourse on September 11, 1962, the pope made the distinction between the concerns of the Church ad intra and ad extra (Civiltà Cattolica III [1962]: 522f.). This distinction, following the intervention of Cardinal Suenens (Mechelen) on December 4, 1963, would determine the constitution's basic structure. The constitution is called "pastoral" "because, while supported by doctrinal principles, it intends to express the relation of the Church to the world and to men of today" (Pastoralis autem dicitur Constitutio ex eo quod, principiis doctrinalibus innixa, habitudinem Ecclesiae ad mundum et ad homines hodiernos exprimere intendit [explanatory note added to the title]). The constitution is the result of a total of eight textual drafts. The titles of the numbered sections are a part of the conciliar text in accordance with a vote on that point.

PROOEMIUM

4301 1. (De intima coniunctione Ecclesiae cum tota familia gentium.) Gaudium et spes, luctus et angor hominum huius temporis, pauperum praesertim et quorumvis afflictorum, gaudium sunt et spes, luctus et angor etiam Christi discipulorum, nihilque vere humanum invenitur, [1026] quod in corde eorum non resonet. Ipsorum enim communitas ex hominibus coalescit, qui, in Christo coadunati, a Spiritu Sancto diriguntur in sua ad Regnum Patris peregrinatione et nuntium salutis omnibus proponendum acceperunt. Quapropter ipsa cum genere humano eiusque historia se revera intime coniunctam experitur.

PREFACE

1. (The solidarity of the Church with the entire human family.) The joys and the hopes, the griefs and the anxieties of the men of this age, especially those who are poor or in any way afflicted, these are the joys and hopes, the griefs and anxieties of the followers of Christ. Indeed, nothing genuinely human fails to raise an echo in their hearts. For theirs is a community composed of men. United in Christ, they are led by the Holy Spirit in their journey to the kingdom of their Father, and they have welcomed the news of salvation, which is meant for every man. That is why this community realizes that it is truly linked with mankind and its history by the deepest of bonds.

2. (Ad quosnam Concilium sermonem dirigat.) Ideo Concilium Vaticanum Secundum, mysterio Ecclesiae penitus investigato, iam non ad solos Ecclesiae filios omnesque Christi nomen invocantes, sed ad universos homines incunctanter sermonem convertit, omnibus exponere cupiens quomodo Ecclesiae praesentiam ac navitatem in mundo hodierno concipiat.

Mundum igitur hominum prae oculis habet seu universam familiam humanam cum universitate rerum inter quas vivit; mundum, theatrum historiae generis humani, eiusque industria, cladibus ac victoriis signatum; mundum, quem christifideles credunt ex amore Creatoris conditum et conservatum, sub peccati quidem servitute positum, sed a Christo crucifixo et resurgente, fracta potestate Maligni, liberatum, ut secundum propositum Dei transformetur et ad consummationem perveniat.

3. (De ministerio homini praebendo.) Nostris autem diebus, genus humanum, de propriis inventis propriaque potentia admiratione commotum, saepe tamen anxias agitatur quaestiones de hodierna mundi evolutione, de loco et munere hominis in orbe universo, de sui individualis et collectivi conaminis sensu, denique de ultimo rerum hominumque fine.

Quapropter Concilium, fidem universi populi Dei, a Christo congregati, testificans et exponens, ipsius coniunctionem, observantiam ac dilectionem erga totam hominum familiam, cui inseritur, eloquentius demonstrare non valet quam instituendo cum ea de variis illis problematibus colloquium, lumen afferendo ex Evangelio depromptum, atque humano generi salutare vires suppeditando, quas ipsa Ecclesia, Spiritu Sancto ducente, a Fundatore suo accipit. Hominis enim persona salvanda est humanae societatis instauranda. Homo igitur, et quidem unus ac totus, cum corpore et anima, corde et conscientia, mente et voluntate, totius nostrae explanationis cardo erit.

Ideo Sacra Synodus, altissimam vocationem hominis profitens et [1027] divinum quoddam semen in eo insertum asseverans, generi humano sinceram cooperationem Ecclesiae offert ad instituendam eam omnium fraternitatem quae huic vocationi respondeat. Nulla ambitione terrestri movetur Ecclesia, sed unum tantum intendit: nempe, Spiritus Paracliti ductu, opus ipsius continuare Christi, qui in mundum venit ut testimonium perhiberet veritati,¹ ut salvaret, non ut iudicaret, ut ministraret, non ut sibi ministraretur.²

2. (Those addressed by the council.) Hence this Second Vatican Council, having probed more profoundly into the mystery of the Church, now addresses itself without hesitation, not only to the sons of the Church and to all who invoke the name of Christ, but to the whole of humanity. For the council yearns to explain to everyone how it conceives of the presence and activity of the Church in the world of today.

Therefore, the council focuses its attention on the world of men, the whole human family along with the sum of those realities in the midst of which it lives; that world which is the theater of man's history and the heir of his energies, his tragedies, and his triumphs; that world which the Christian sees as created and sustained by its Maker's love, fallen indeed into the bondage of sin, yet emancipated now by Christ, who was crucified and rose again to break the stranglehold of the Evil One, so that the world might be fashioned anew according to God's design and reach its fulfillment.

3. (At the service of mankind.) Though mankind is stricken with wonder at its own discoveries and its power, it often raises anxious questions about the current trend of the world, about the place and role of man in the universe, about the meaning of its individual and collective strivings, and about the ultimate destiny of reality and of humanity.

Hence, giving witness and voice to the faith of the whole people of God gathered together by Christ, this council can provide no more eloquent proof of its solidarity with, as well as its respect and love for, the entire human family with which it is bound up than by engaging with it in conversation about these various problems. The council brings to mankind the light kindled from the gospel and puts at its disposal those saving resources that the Church herself, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, receives from her Founder. For the human person deserves to be preserved; human society deserves to be renewed. Hence the focal point of our total presentation will be man himself, whole and entire, body and soul, heart and conscience, mind and will.

Therefore, this sacred synod, proclaiming the noble destiny of man and championing the Godlike seed that has been sown in him, offers to mankind the honest assistance of the Church in fostering that brotherhood of all men which corresponds to this destiny of theirs. Inspired by no earthly ambition, the Church seeks but a solitary goal: to carry forward the work of Christ under the lead of the Paraclete Spirit. And Christ entered this world to give witness to the truth,¹ to rescue and not to sit in judgment, to serve and not to be served.²

De hominis condicione in mundo hodierno

4. (De spe et angore.) Ad tale munus exsequendum, per omne tempus Ecclesiae officium incumbit signa temporum perscrutandi et sub Evangelii luce interpretandi; ita ut, modo unicuique generationi accommodato ad perennes hominum interrogationes de sensu vitae praesentis et futurae deque earum mutua relatione respondere possit. Oportet itaque ut mundus in quo vivimus necnon eius expectationes, appetitiones et indoles saepe dramatica cognoscantur et intelligantur. Quaedam autem principales mundi hodierni notae sequenti modo delineari possunt.

Hodie genus humanum in nova historiae suae aetate versatur in qua profundae et celeres mutationes ad universum orbem gradatim extenduntur. Ab hominis intelligentia et creativa industria excitatae, in ipsum hominem recidunt, in eius iudicia et desideria individualia et collectiva, in eius modum cogitandi et agendi tum circa res tum circa homines. Ita iam de vera sociali et culturali transformatione loqui possumus, quae etiam in vitam religiosam redundat.

Ut in quavis accretionis crisi contingit, haec transformatio non leves secumfert difficultates. Ita, dum homo potentiam suam tam late extendit, eam tamen non semper ad suum servitium redigere valet. Proprii animi intimiora altius penetrare satagens, saepe de seipso magis incertus apparet. Leges vitae socialis pedetemptim clarius detegens, de directione ei imprimenda anceps haeret.

Numquam genus humanum tantis divitiis, facultatibus et potentia [1028] oeconomica abundavit, et tamen adhuc ingens pars incolarum orbis fame et egestate torquetur atque innumeri litterarum ignorantia plane laborant. Numquam homines tam acutum ut hodie sensum libertatis habuerunt, dum nova interea genera socialis et psychicae servitutis exsurgunt.

Dum mundus suam unitatem necnon singulorum ab invicem dependentiam in necessaria solidaritate tam vivide persentit, viribus tamen inter se pugnantibus gravissime in opposita distrahitur; etenim acres dissensiones politicae, sociales, oeconomicae, raciales et ideologicae adhuc perseverant, nec periculum deest belli omnia usque ad ima destructuri.

Dum idearum communicatio augetur, verba ipsa quibus magni momenti conceptus exprimuntur sensus sat diversos in distinctis ideologiis induunt. Tandem sedulo perfectior quaeritur temporalis ordinatio, quin spirituale incrementum pariter progrediatur.

Introductory Statement
The Situation of Men in the Modern World

4. (Hope and anguish.) To carry out such a task, the Church has always had the duty of scrutinizing the signs of the times and of interpreting them in the light of the gospel. Thus, in language intelligible to each generation, she can respond to the perennial questions that men ask about this present life and the life to come and about the relationship of the one to the other. We must therefore recognize and understand the world in which we live, its explanations, its longings, and its often dramatic characteristics. Some of the main features of the modern world can be sketched as follows.

Today, the human race is involved in a new stage of history. Profound and rapid changes are spreading by degrees around the whole world. Triggered by the intelligence and creative energies of man, these changes recoil upon him, upon his decisions and desires, both individual and collective, and upon his manner of thinking and acting with respect to things and to people. Hence we can already speak of a true cultural and social transformation, one that has repercussions on man's religious life as well.

As happens in any crisis of growth, this transformation has brought serious difficulties in its wake. Thus while man extends his power in every direction, he does not always succeed in subjecting it to his own welfare. Striving to probe more profoundly into the deeper recesses of his own mind, he frequently appears more unsure of himself. Gradually and more precisely he lays bare the laws of society, only to be paralyzed by uncertainty about the direction to give it.

Never has the human race enjoyed such an abundance of wealth, resources, and economic power, and yet a huge proportion of the world's citizens are still tormented by hunger and poverty, while countless numbers suffer from total illiteracy. Never before has man had so keen an understanding of freedom, yet at the same time new forms of social and psychological slavery make their appearance.

Although the world of today has a very vivid awareness of its unity and of how one man depends on another in needful solidarity, it is most grievously turned into opposing camps by conflicting forces. For political, social, economic, racial, and ideological disputes still continue bitterly and, with them, the peril of a war that would reduce everything to ashes.

True, there is a growing exchange of ideas, but the very words by which key concepts are expressed take on quite different meanings in diverse ideological systems. Finally, man painstakingly searches for a better world, without a corresponding spiritual advancement.

Tot implexis condicionibus affecti, plurimi coeivi nostri impediuntur quominus valores perennes vere dignoscant et simul cum noviter inventis rite componant; exinde, inter spem et angorem agitati, de praesenti rerum cursu sese interrogantes, inquietudine premuntur. Qui rerum cursus homines ad respondendum provocat, immo et constringit.

5. (De profunde mutatis condicionibus.) Hodierna animorum commotio et in vitae condicionibus immutatio cum ampliori rerum transmutatione connectuntur, qua efficitur ut in mentibus efformandis scientiae mathematicae et naturales vel de ipso homine tractantes, in ordine vero agendi technicae artes ex illis scientiis profluentes, crescens pondus acquirant. Haec mens scientifica rationem culturalem modosque cogitandi aliter quam antea fingit. Technicae artes eo progrediuntur ut faciem terrae transforment et iam spatium ultraterrestre subigere conentur.

Super tempora quoque humanus intellectus dominium suum quodammodo dilatat: in praeteritum ope cognitionis historicae, in futurum arte prospectiva et planificatione. Progredientes scientiae biologicae, psychologicae et sociales non solum homini ad meliorem sui cognitionem opem ferunt, sed ipsum etiam adiuvant ut, technicis methodis adhibitis, in vitam societatum directe influxum exercent. Insimul genus humanum de proprio demographico incremento iam praeviendo et ordinando magis magisque cogitat. [1029]

Ipsa historia tam rapido cursu acceleratur ut singuli eam vix prosequi valeant. Consortionis humanae sors una efficitur et non amplius inter varias velut historias dispergitur. Ita genus humanum a notione magis statica ordinis rerum ad notionem magis dynamicam atque evolutivam transit, unde quam maxima nascitur problematum nova complexio, quae ad novas analyses et syntheses provocat.

6. (Mutationes in ordine sociali.) Eo ipso communitates locales traditionales, uti sunt familiae patriarchales, "clans", tribus, pagi, varii coetus et consortionis socialis necessitudines, pleniores in dies immutationes experiuntur.

Typus industrialis societatis paulatim diffunditur, quasdam nationes ad oeconomicam opulentiam adducens, et notiones et condiciones vitae socialis a saeculis constitutas penitus transformans. Similiter vitae urbanae cultus ac studium augentur sive per urbium earumque incolarum augmentum, sive per motum quo vita urbana ad ruricolos dilatatur.

Nova et aptiora communicationis socialis instrumenta ad eventus cognoscendos et ad modos cogitandi et

Influenced by such a variety of complexities, many of our contemporaries are kept from accurately identifying permanent values and adjusting them properly to fresh discoveries. As a result, buffeted between hope and anxiety and pressing one another with questions about the present course of events, they are burdened down with uneasiness. This same course of events leads men to look for answers; indeed, it forces them to do so.

5. (The profound changes of conditions.) Today's spiritual agitation and the changing conditions of life are part of a broader and deeper revolution. As a result of the latter, intellectual formation is ever increasingly based on the mathematical and natural sciences and on those dealing with man himself, while in the practical order the technology that stems from these sciences takes on mounting importance. This scientific spirit has a new kind of impact on the cultural sphere and on modes of thought. Technology is now transforming the face of the earth and is already trying to master outer space. 4305

To a certain extent, the human intellect is also broadening its dominion over time: over the past, by means of historical knowledge; over the future, by the art of projecting and by planning. Advances in biology, psychology, and the social sciences not only bring men hope of improved self-knowledge; in conjunction with technical methods, they are helping men exert direct influence on the life of social groups. At the same time, the human race is giving steadily increasing thought to forecasting and regulating its own population growth.

History itself speeds along on so rapid a course that an individual person can scarcely keep abreast of it. The destiny of the human community has become all of a piece, where once the various groups of men had a kind of private history of their own. Thus, the human race has passed from a rather static concept of reality to a more dynamic, evolutionary one. In consequence, there has arisen a new series of problems, a series as numerous as can be, calling for efforts of analysis and synthesis.

6. (Changes in the social order.) By this very circumstance, the traditional local communities, such as families, clans, tribes, villages, various groups and associations stemming from social contacts, experience more thorough changes every day. 4306

The industrial type of society is gradually being spread, leading some nations to economic affluence and radically transforming ideas and social conditions established for centuries. Likewise, the cult and pursuit of city living has grown, either because of a multiplication of cities and their inhabitants or by a transplantation of city life to rural settings.

New and more efficient media of social communication are contributing to the knowledge of events; by setting sentiendi quam citissime latissimeque diffundendos conferunt, plures connexas repercussiones excitando.

Nec parvipendendum est quot homines, ex variis causis, ad migrandum inducti, vitae suae rationem immutent.

Sic necessitudines hominis cum similibus suis indesinenter multiplicantur ac simul ipsa socializatio novas necessitudines inducit, quin tamen congruentem personae maturationem et relationes vere personales (personalizationem) semper promoveat.

Huiusmodi quidem evolutio clarius apparet in nationibus quae commodis progressus oeconomici et technici iam gaudent, sed populos quoque movet adhuc ad progressionem nitentes qui, pro suis regionibus, beneficia industrializationis et urbanizationis obtinere cupiunt. Qui populi, praesertim antiquioribus traditionibus addicti, simul motum experiuntur ad maturius magisque personale libertatis exercitium.

Instituta vero, leges atque modi cogitandi et sentiendi a maioribus tradita non semper statui rerum hodierno bene aptari videntur; inde gravis perturbatio in modo et in ipsis agendi normis.

Ipsam denique vitam religiosam novae condiciones afficiunt. Ex una parte acrior diiudicandi facultas eam a magico mundi conceptu et a superstitionibus adhuc vagantibus purificat atque magis personalem et actuosam adhaesionem fidei in dies exigit; quo fit ut non pauci ad vividiorum Dei sensum accedant.

Ex altera vero parte crebriores turbae a religione practice discedunt. Secus ac transactis temporibus, Deum religionemve negare, aut ab iisdem abstrahere, non amplius quid insolitum et individuale sunt: hodie enim non raro quasi exigentia progressus scientifici vel cuiusdam novi humanismi exhibentur. Haec omnia in pluribus regionibus non tantum in philosophorum placitis exprimuntur, sed latissime litteras, artes, scientiarum humanarum et historiae interpretationem, ipsasque leges civiles afficiunt ita ut exinde multi perturbentur.

off chain reactions, they are giving the swiftest and widest possible circulation to styles of thought and feeling.

It is also noteworthy how many men are being induced to migrate on various counts and are thereby changing their manner of life.

Thus a man's ties with his fellows are constantly being multiplied, and at the same time socialization brings further ties, without, however, always promoting appropriate personal development and truly personal relationships (personalization).

This kind of evolution can be seen more clearly in those nations that already enjoy the conveniences of economic and technological progress, though it is also astir among peoples still striving for such progress and eager to secure for themselves the advantages of an industrialized and urbanized society. These peoples, especially those among them who are attached to older traditions, are simultaneously undergoing a movement toward more mature and personal exercise of liberty.

7. (Psychological, moral, and religious changes.) A change in attitudes and in human structures frequently calls accepted values into question, especially among young people, who have grown impatient on more than one occasion and, indeed, become rebels in their distress. Aware of their own influence in the life of society, they want a part in it sooner. This frequently causes parents and educators to experience greater difficulties day by day in discharging their tasks.

The institutions, laws, and modes of thinking and feeling as handed down from previous generations do not always seem to be well adapted to the contemporary state of affairs; hence arises an upheaval in the manner and even the norms of behavior.

Finally, these new conditions have their impact on religion. On the one hand, a more critical ability to distinguish religion from a magical view of the world and from the superstitions that still circulate purifies it and exacts day by day a more personal and explicit adherence to faith. As a result, many persons are achieving a more vivid sense of God.

On the other hand, growing numbers of people are abandoning religion in practice. Unlike former days, the denial of God or of religion, or the abandonment of them, is no longer an unusual and individual occurrence. For today it is not rare for such things to be presented as requirements of scientific progress or of a certain new humanism. In numerous places these views are not only voiced in the teachings of philosophers, but on every side they influence literature, the arts, the interpretation of the humanities and of history, and civil laws themselves. As a consequence, many people are shaken.

8. (De inaequalitatibus in mundo hodierno.) Tam rapida rerum mutatio inordinate saepe progrediens, immo et ipsa discrepantiarum in mundo vigentium acrior conscientia, contradictiones et inaequilibria gignunt vel augent.

In ipsa persona frequentius oritur inaequilibrium inter modernum intellectum practicum et theoreticam cogitandi rationem, quae summam cognitionum suarum neque sibi subigere neque in syntheses apte ordinare valet.

Oritur pariter inaequilibrium inter sollicitudinem efficientiae practicae et exigentias conscientiae moralis, necnon multoties inter condiciones vitae collectivae et requisita cogitationis personalis, immo et contemplationis.

Oritur tandem inaequilibrium inter activitatis humanae specializationem et universalem rerum visionem.

In familia autem discrepantiae oriuntur, sive ex prementibus condicionibus demographicis, oeconomicis et socialibus, sive ex difficultatibus inter generationes quae sibi subsequuntur exsurgentibus, sive ex novis necessitudinibus socialibus inter viros ac mulieres. [1031]

Magnae oriuntur etiam discrepantiae inter stirpes, immo inter varii generis societatis ordines; inter nationes opulentas et minus valentes egentesque; denique, inter instituta internationalia, ex pacis desiderio populorum exorta, et ambitionem propriae ideologiae disseminandae nec non cupiditates collectivae in nationibus aliisque coetibus existentes.

Inde mutuae diffidentiae et inimicitiae, conflictationes et aerumnae, quarum ipse homo simul causa est et victima.

9. (De appetitionibus universalioribus generis humani.) Interea crescit persuasio genus humanum non tantum imperium suum super res creatas in dies magis roborare posse ac debere; sed insuper eius esse ordinem politicum, socialem et oeconomicum statuere qui in dies melius homini inserviat et singulos ac coetus adiuvet ad dignitatem sibi propriam affirmandam et excolendam.

Hinc plurimi acerrime exigunt illa bona quibus, per iniustitiam vel non aequam distributionem, orbatos se esse vivida conscientia iudicant. Nationes in via progressus sicut illae recenter sui iuris factae, bona civilizationis hodiernae non tantum in campo politico sed etiam oeconomico participare et libere partibus suis in mundo fungi cupiunt, dum tamen in dies augetur earumdem distantia simul ac persaepe dependentia etiam oeconomica ab aliis ditioribus nationibus citius progredientibus. Populi fame pressi populos opulentiores interpellant. Mulieres sibi vindicant, ubi eam nondum

8. (Inequalities in the world today.) This development coming so rapidly and often in a disorderly fashion, combined with keener awareness itself of the inequalities in the world, beget or intensify contradictions and imbalances. 4308

Within the individual person there develops rather frequently an imbalance between an intellect that is modern in practical matters and a theoretical system of thought that can neither master the sum total of its ideas nor arrange them adequately into a synthesis.

Likewise, an imbalance arises between a concern for practicality and efficiency and the demands of moral conscience; also very often between the conditions of collective existence and the requisites of personal thought, and even of contemplation.

At length there develops an imbalance between specialized human activity and a comprehensive view of reality.

As for the family, discord results from population, economic, and social pressures or from difficulties that arise between succeeding generations or from new social relationships between men and women.

Differences crop up, too, between races and between various kinds of social orders; between wealthy nations and those that are less influential or are needy; finally, between international institutions born of the popular desire for peace and the ambition to propagate one's own ideology, as well as collective greed existing in nations or other groups.

What results is mutual distrust, enmities, conflicts, and hardships. Of such is man at once the cause and the victim.

9. (The more universal aspirations of mankind.) 4309
Meanwhile, the conviction grows not only that humanity can and should increasingly consolidate its control over creation, but, even more, that it devolves on humanity to establish a political, social, and economic order that will growingly serve man and help individuals as well as groups to affirm and develop the dignity proper to them.

As a result, many persons are quite aggressively demanding those benefits of which with vivid awareness they judge themselves to be deprived either through injustice or unequal distribution. Nations on the road to progress, like those recently made independent, desire to participate in the goods of modern civilization, not only in the political field but also economically, and to play their part freely on the world scene. Still, they continually fall behind while very often their economic and other dependence on wealthier nations advances more rapidly. People hounded by hunger call upon those sunt consecutae, paritatem de iure et de facto cum viris. Opifices et ricolae non solum victui necessaria comparare, sed laborando dotes suae personae excolere, immo in ordinanda vita oeconomica, sociali, politica et culturali suas partes agere volunt. Nunc primum in historia humana universi populi iam persuasum sibi habent culturae beneficia reapse ad cunctos extendi posse ac debere.

Sub omnibus autem istis exigentiis latet profundior et universalior appetitio: personae scilicet atque coetus plenam atque liberam vitam, homine dignam, sitiunt, omnia quae hodiernus mundus eis tam abundanter praebere potest proprio servitio subicientes. Nationes praeterea in dies fortius enituntur ut universalem quandam communitatem assequantur. [1032]

Quae cum ita sint, mundus hodiernus simul potentem ac debilem se exhibet, capacem optima vel pessima patrandi, dum ipsi ad libertatem aut servitutem, ad progressum aut regressum, ad fraternitatem aut odium prostat via. Praeterea, homo conscius fit ipsius esse recte dirigere vires, quas ipse suscitavit et quae eum opprimere aut ei servire possunt. Unde seipsum interrogat.

Plurimi sane, quorum vita materialismo practico inficitur, a clara huiusmodi dramatici status perceptione avertuntur, vel autem, miseria oppressi, impediuntur quominus illum considerent. Multi in interpretatione rerum multifarie proposita quietem se invenire existimant. Quidam vero a solo conatu humano veram plenamque generis humani liberationem exspectant, sibi que persuasum habent futurum regnum hominis super terram omnia vota cordis eius expleturum esse. Nec desunt qui, de sensu vitae desperantes, audaciam laudant eorum qui, existentiam humanam omnis significationem propriae expertem existimantes, ei totam significationem ex solo proprio ingenio conferre nituntur.

better off. Where they have not yet won it, women claim for themselves an equity with men before the law and in fact. Laborers and farmers seek not only to provide for the necessities of life, but to develop the gifts of their personality by their labors and, indeed, to take part in regulating economic, social, political, and cultural life. Now, for the first time in human history all people are convinced that the benefits of culture ought to be and actually can be extended to everyone.

Still, beneath all these demands lies a deeper and more widespread longing: persons and societies thirst for a full and free life worthy of man; one in which they can subject to their own welfare all that the modern world can offer them so abundantly. In addition, nations try harder every day to bring about a kind of universal community.

Since all these things are so, the modern world shows itself at once powerful and weak, capable of the noblest deeds or the foulest; before it lies the path to freedom or to slavery, to progress or retreat, to brotherhood or hatred. Moreover, man is becoming aware that it is his responsibility to guide aright the forces that he has unleashed and that can enslave him or minister to him. That is why he is putting questions to himself.

10. (The deeper questions of mankind.) The truth is that the imbalances under which the modern world labors are linked with that more basic imbalance that is rooted in the heart of man. For in man himself many elements wrestle with one another. Thus, on the one hand, as a creature he experiences his limitations in a multitude of ways; on the other, he feels himself to be boundless in his desires and summoned to a higher life. Pulled by manifold attractions, he is constantly forced to choose among them and renounce some. Indeed, as a weak and sinful being, he often does what he would not and fails to do what he would.¹ Hence he suffers from internal divisions, and from these flow so many and such great discords in society.

No doubt many whose lives are infected with a practical materialism are blinded against any sharp insight into this kind of dramatic situation; or else, weighed down by unhappiness, they are prevented from giving the matter any thought. Thinking they have found serenity in an interpretation of reality everywhere proposed these days, many look forward to a genuine and total emancipation of humanity wrought solely by human effort; they are convinced that the future rule of man over the earth will satisfy every desire of his heart. Nor are there lacking men who despair of any meaning to life and praise the boldness of those who think that human existence is devoid of any inherent significance and strive to confer a total meaning on it by their own ingenuity alone.

Attamen, coram hodierna mundi evolutione, in dies numerosiores fiunt qui quaestiones maxime fundamentales vel ponunt vel nova acuitate sentiunt: quid est homo? Quinam est sensus doloris, mali, mortis, quae, quamquam tantus progressus factus est, subsistere pergunt? Ad quid victoriae illae tanto pretio acquisitae? Quid societati homo afferre, quid ab ea exspectare potest? Quid post vitam hanc terrestrem subsequetur? [1033]

Credit autem Ecclesia Christum, pro omnibus mortuum et resuscitatum,² homini lucem et vires per Spiritum suum praebere ut ille summae suae vocationi respondere possit; nec aliud nomen sub caelo datum esse hominibus, in quo oporteat eos salvos fieri.³ Similiter credit clavem, centrum et finem totius humanae historiae in Domino ac Magistro suo inveniri. Affirmat insuper Ecclesia omnibus mutationibus multa subesse quae non mutantur, quaeque fundamentum suum ultimum in Christo habent, qui est heri, hodie, Ipse et in saecula.⁴

Sub lumine ergo Christi, Imaginis Dei invisibilis, Primogeniti omnis creaturae,⁵ Concilium, ad mysterium hominis illustrandum atque ad cooperandum in solutionem praecipuarum quaestionum nostri temporis inveniendam, omnes alloqui intendit.

Pars I

De Ecclesia et vocatione hominis

11. (Impulsionibus Spiritus respondendum.) Populus Dei, fide motus, qua credit se a Spiritu Domini duci qui replet orbem terrarum, in eventibus, exigentiis atque optatis, quorum una cum ceteris nostrae aetatis hominibus partem habet, quaenam in illis sint vera signa praesentiae vel consilii Dei, discernere satagit. Fides enim omnia novo lumine illustrat et divinum propositum de integra hominis vocatione manifestat, ideoque ad solutiones plene humanas mentem dirigit.

Concilium imprimis illos valores, qui hodie maxime aestimantur, sub hoc lumine diiudicare et ad fontem suum divinum referre intendit. Hi enim valores, prout ex hominis ingenio eidem divinitus collato procedunt, valde boni sunt; sed ex corruptione humani cordis a sua debita ordinatione non raro detorquentur, ita ut purificatione indigeant.

Nevertheless, in the face of the modern development of the world, the number constantly swells of the people who raise the most basic questions or recognize them with a new sharpness: What is man? What is this sense of sorrow, of evil, of death, that continues to exist despite so much progress? What purpose have these victories purchased at so high a cost? What can man offer to society; what can he expect from it? What follows this earthly life?

The Church firmly believes that Christ, who died and was raised up for all,² can through his Spirit offer man the light and the strength to measure up to his supreme destiny. Nor has any other name under heaven been given to men by which they may be saved.³ She likewise holds that in her most benign Lord and Master can be found the key, the focal point, and the goal of man as well as of all human history. The Church also maintains that beneath all changes there are many realities that do not change and that have their ultimate foundation in Christ, who is the same yesterday and today, yes, and forever.⁴

Hence under the light of Christ, the image of the unseen God, the firstborn of every creature,⁵ the council wishes to speak to all men in order to shed light on the mystery of man and to cooperate in finding the solution to the outstanding problems of our time.

Part I

The Church and Man's Calling

11. (Responding to the Promptings of the Spirit.) The people of God believes that it is led by the Lord's Spirit, who fills the earth. Motivated by this faith, it labors to decipher authentic signs of God's presence and purpose in the happenings, needs, and desires in which this people has a part along with other men of our age. For faith throws a new light on everything, manifests God's design for man's total vocation, and thus directs the mind to solutions that are fully human. 4311

This council, first of all, wishes to assess in this light those values that are most highly prized today and to relate them to their divine source. Insofar as they stem from endowments conferred by God on man, these values are exceedingly good. Yet they are often wrenched from their rightful function by the taint in man's heart and, hence, stand in need of purification.

What does the Church think of man? What needs to be recommended for the upbuilding of contemporary society? What is the ultimate significance of human navitatis in universo mundo? Ad has quaestiones responsio [1034] exspectatur. Exinde luculentius apparebit populum Dei et genus humanum, cui ille inseritur, servitium sibi mutuo praestare, ita ut Ecclesiae missio religiosam et ex hoc ipso summe humanam se exhibeat.

CAPUT I

DE HUMANA PERSONAE DIGNITATE

Quid est autem homo? Multas opiniones de seipso protulit et profert, varias et etiam contrarias, quibus saepe vel se tamquam absolutam regulam exaltat vel usque ad desperationem deprimit, exinde anceps et anxius. Quas quidem difficultates Ecclesia persentiens, a Deo revelante instructa eisdem responsum afferre potest, quo vera hominis condicio delineetur, explanentur eius infirmitates, simulque eius dignitas et vocatio recte agnoscere possint.

Sacrae enim Litterae docent hominem “ad imaginem Dei” creatum esse, capacem suum Creatorem cognoscendi et amandi, ab eo tamquam dominum super omnes creaturas terrenas constitutum,¹ ut eas regeret, eisque uteretur, glorificans Deum.² “Quid est homo quod memor es eius? aut filius hominis, quoniam visitas eum? Minuisti eum paulo minus ab angelis, gloria et honore coronasti eum, et constituisti eum super opera manuum tuarum. Omnia subiecisti sub pedibus eius” [Ps 8:5-7].

At Deus non creavit hominem solum: nam inde a primordiis “masculum et feminam creavit eos” [Gn 1:27], quorum consociatio primam formam efficit communionis personarum. Homo etenim ex intima sua natura ens sociale est, atque sine relationibus cum aliis nec vivere nec suas dotes expandere potest.

Deus igitur, sicut iterum in sacra Pagina legimus, vidit “cuncta quae fecerat, ut erant valde bona” [Gn 1:31].

4313 13. (De peccato.) In iustitia a Deo constitutus, homo tamen, suadente Maligno, inde ab exordio historiae, libertate sua abusus est, seipsum [1035] contra Deum erigens et finem suum extra Deum attingere cupiens. Cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt, sed obscuratum est insipientes cor eorum et servierunt creaturae potius quam Creatori.¹ Quod Revelatione divina activity throughout the world? People are waiting for an answer to these questions. From the answers it will be increasingly clear that the people of God and the human race in whose midst it lives render service to each other. Thus the mission of the Church will show its religious and, by that very fact, its supremely human character.

CHAPTER I

THE DIGNITY OF THE HUMAN PERSON

12. (Man as the image of God.) According to the almost unanimous opinion of believers and unbelievers alike, all things on earth should be related to man as their center and crown.

But what is man? About himself he has expressed, and continues to express, many divergent and even contradictory opinions. In these he often exalts himself as the absolute measure of all things or debases himself to the point of despair. The result is doubt and anxiety. The Church certainly understands these problems. Instructed by God's revelation, she can offer solutions to them, so that man's true situation can be portrayed and his defects explained, while at the same time his dignity and destiny are justly acknowledged.

For Sacred Scripture teaches that man was created “in the image of God”, is capable of knowing and loving his Creator, and was appointed by him as master of all earthly creatures,¹ that he might subdue them and use them to God's glory.² “What is man that you should care for him? You have made him little less than the angels, and crowned him with glory and honor. You have given him rule over the works of your hands, putting all things under his feet” [Ps 8:5-7].

But God did not create man as a solitary, for from the beginning “male and female he created them” [Gen 1:27]. Their companionship produces the primary form of interpersonal communion. For by his innermost nature man is a social being, and unless he relates himself to others he can neither live nor develop his potential.

Therefore, as we read elsewhere in Holy Scripture, God saw “all that he had made, and it was very good” [Gen 1:31].

13. (Sin.) Although he was made by God in a state of holiness, from the very onset of his history man abused his liberty, at the urging of the Evil One. Man set himself against God and sought to attain his goal apart from God. Although they knew God, they did not glorify him as God, but their senseless minds were darkened, and they served the creature rather than the Creator.¹ What divine nobis innotescit, cum ipsa experientia concordat. Nam homo, cor suum inspiciens, etiam ad malum inclinatum se comperit et in multiplicibus malis demersum, quae a bono suo Creatore provenire non possunt. Deum tamquam principium suum saepe agnoscere renuens, etiam debitum ordinem ad finem suum ultimum, simul ac totam suam sive erga seipsum sive erga alios homines et omnes res creatas ordinationem disruptit.

Ideo in seipso divisus est homo. Quapropter tota vita hominum, sive singularis sive collectiva, ut luctationem et quidem dramaticam se exhibet inter bonum et malum, inter lucem et tenebras. Immo incapacem se invenit homo per seipsum mali impugnationes efficaciter debellandi, ita ut unusquisque se quasi catenis vinctum sentiat. At ipse Dominus venit ut hominem liberaret et confortaret, eum interius renovans ac principem huius mundi [cf. Io 12:31] foras eiiciens qui eum in servitute peccati retinebat.² Peccatum autem minuit ipsum hominem, a plenitudine consequenda eum repellens.

In lumine huius Revelationis simul sublimis vocatio et profunda miseria, quas homines experiuntur, rationem suam ultimam inveniunt.

14. (De hominis constitutione.) Corpore et anima unus, homo per ipsam suam corporalem condicionem elementa mundi materialis in se colligit, ita ut, per ipsum, fastigium suum attingant et ad liberam Creatoris laudem vocem attollant.¹ Vitam ergo corporalem homini despiciere non licet, sed e contra ipse corpus suum, utpote a Deo creatum et ultima die resuscitandum, bonum et honore dignum habere tenetur. Peccato tamen vulnerato, corporis rebelliones experitur. Ipsa igitur dignitas hominis postulat ut Deum glorificet in corpore suo,² neve illud pravus cordis sui inclinationibus inservire sinat. [1036] revelation makes known to us agrees with experience. Examining his heart, man finds that he has inclinations toward evil, too, and is engulfed by manifold ills that cannot come from his good Creator. Often refusing to acknowledge God as his beginning, man has disrupted also his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself and others and all created things.

Therefore man is split within himself. As a result, all of human life, whether individual or collective, shows itself to be a dramatic struggle between good and evil, between light and darkness. Indeed, man finds that by himself he is incapable of battling the assaults of evil successfully, so that everyone feels as though he is bound by chains. But the Lord himself came to free and strengthen man, renewing him inwardly and casting out that "prince of this world" [Jn 12:31] who held him in the bondage of sin.² For sin has diminished man, blocking his path to fulfillment.

The call to grandeur and the depths of misery, both of which are a part of human experience, find their ultimate and simultaneous explanation in the light of this revelation.

14. (The essential nature of man.) Though made 4314 of body and soul, man is one. Through his bodily composition he gathers to himself the elements of the material world; thus they reach their crown through him and, through him, raise their voice in free praise of the Creator.¹ For this reason man is not allowed to despise his bodily life; rather he is obliged to regard his body as good and honorable since God has created it and will raise it up on the last day. Nevertheless, wounded by sin, man experiences rebellious stirrings in his body. But the very dignity of man postulates that man glorify God in his body² and forbid it to serve the evil inclinations of his heart.

Now, man is not wrong when he regards himself as superior to bodily concerns and as more than a speck of nature or a nameless constituent of the city of man. For by his interior qualities he outstrips the whole sum of mere things. He plunges into the depths of reality whenever he enters into his own heart; God, who probes the heart,³ awaits him there; there he discerns his proper destiny beneath the eyes of God. Thus, when he recognizes in himself a spiritual and immortal soul, he is not being mocked by a fantasy born only of physical or social influences, but is rather laying hold of the deep truth of the matter.

4315 15. (De dignitate intellectus, de veritate et de sapientia.) Recte iudicat homo, divinae mentis lumen participans, se intellectu suo universitatem rerum superare. Ingenium suum per saecula impigre exercendo ipse in scientiis empiricis, artibus technicis et liberalibus sane profecit. Nostris autem temporibus in mundo materiali praesertim investigando et sibi subiiciendo egregios obtinuit successus. Semper tamen profundiore veritatem quaesivit et invenit. Intelligentia enim non ad sola phaenomena coarctatur, sed realitatem intelligibilem cum vera certitudine adipisci valet, etiamsi, ex sequela peccati, ex parte obscuratur et debilitatur.

Humanae tandem personae intellectualis natura per sapientiam perficitur et perficienda est, quae mentem hominis ad vera bonaque inquirenda ac diligenda suaviter attrahit, et qua imbutus homo per visibilia ad invisibilia adducitur.

Aetas autem nostra, magis quam saecula anteacta, tali sapientia indiget ut humaniora fiant quaecumque nova ab homine deteguntur. Periclitatur enim sors futura mundi nisi sapientiores suscitantur homines. Insuper notandum est plures nationes, bonis quidem oeconomicis pauperiores, sapientia vero ditiores, ceteris eximium emolumentum praestare posse.

Spiritus Sancti dono, homo ad mysterium consilii divini contemplandum et sapiendum fide accedit.¹ [1037]

Conscientia modo mirabili illa lex innotescit, quae in Dei et proximi dilectione adimpletur.³ Fidelitate erga conscientiam christiani cum ceteris hominibus coniunguntur ad veritatem inquirendam et tot problemata moralia, quae tam in vita singulorum quam in sociali consortione exsurgunt, in veritate solvenda.

Quo magis ergo conscientia recta praevalet, eo magis personae et coetus a caeco arbitrio recedunt et normis obiectivis moralitatis conformari satagunt. Non raro tamen evenit ex ignorantia invincibili conscientiam errare, quin inde suam dignitatem amittat. Quod autem

15. (The dignity of the intellect, of truth, and of wisdom.) Man judges rightly that by his intellect he surpasses the material universe, for he shares in the light of the divine mind. By relentlessly employing his talents through the ages, he has indeed made progress in the practical sciences and in technology and the liberal arts. In our times he has won superlative victories, especially in his probing of the material world and in subjecting it to himself. Still he has always searched for more penetrating truths and finds them. For his intelligence is not confined to observable data alone but can with genuine certitude attain to reality itself as knowable, though in consequence of sin that certitude is partly obscured and weakened.

The intellectual nature of the human person is perfected by wisdom and needs to be, for wisdom gently attracts the mind of man to a quest and a love for what is true and good. Steeped in wisdom, man passes through visible realities to those that are unseen.

Our era needs such wisdom more than bygone ages if the discoveries made by man are to be further humanized. For the future of the world stands in peril unless wiser men are forthcoming. It should also be pointed out that many nations, poorer in economic goods, are quite rich in wisdom and can offer noteworthy advantages to others.

It is, finally, through the gift of the Holy Spirit that man comes by faith to the contemplation and appreciation of the divine plan.¹

16. (The dignity of moral conscience.) In the depths of his conscience, man detects a law that he does not impose upon himself but that holds him to obedience. Always summoning him to love good and avoid evil, the voice of conscience when necessary speaks to his heart: Do this, shun that. For man has in his heart a law written by God; to obey it is the very dignity of man; according to it he will be judged.¹ Conscience is the most secret core and sanctuary of a man. There he is alone with God, whose voice echoes in his depths.²

In a wonderful manner conscience reveals that law which is fulfilled by love of God and neighbor.³ In fidelity to conscience, Christians are joined with the rest of men in the search for truth and for the genuine solution to the numerous moral problems that arise in the life of individuals from social relationships.

Hence, the more a right conscience holds sway, the more persons and groups turn aside from blind choice and strive to be guided by the objective norms of morality. Conscience frequently errs from invincible ignorance without losing its dignity. The same cannot be said for a dici nequit cum homo de vero ac bono inquirendo parum curat, et conscientia ex peccati consuetudine paulatim fere obcaecatur.

17. (De praestantia libertatis.) At nonnisi libere homo ad bonum se convertere potest, quam libertatem coaevi nostri magni faciunt ardentemque prosequuntur: et recte sane. Saepe tamen eam pravo modo fovent, tamquam licentiam quidquid faciendi dummodo delectet, etiam malum. Vera autem libertas eximium est divinae imaginis in homine signum. Voluit enim Deus hominem relinquere in manu consilii sui,¹ ita ut Creatorem suum sponte quaerat et libere ad plenam et beatam perfectionem ei inhaerendo perveniat. Dignitas igitur hominis requirit ut secundum consciam et liberam electionem agat; personaliter scilicet ab intra motus et inductus, et non sub caeco impulsu interno vel sub mera externa coactione.

Talem vero dignitatem obtinet homo cum, sese ab omni passionum captivitate liberans, finem suum in boni libera [1038] electione persequitur et apta subsidia efficaciter ac sollerti industria sibi procurat. Quam ordinationem ad Deum libertas hominis, a peccato vulnerata, nonnisi gratia Dei adiuvante, plene actuosam efficere potest. Unicuique autem ante tribunal Dei propriae vitae ratio reddenda erit, prout ipse sive bonum sive malum gesserit.²

18. (De mysterio mortis.) Coram morte aenigma condicionis humanae maximum evadit. Non tantum cruciatur homo dolore et corporis dissolutione progrediente, sed etiam, immo magis, perpetuae extinctionis timore. Recte autem instinctu cordis sui iudicat, cum totalem ruinam et definitivum exitum suae personae abhorret et respuit. Semen aeternitatis quod in se gerit, ad solam materiam cum irreductibile sit, contra mortem insurgit. Omnia technicae artis molimina, licet perutilia, anxietatem hominis sedare non valent: prorogata enim biologica longaevitae illi ulterioris vitae desiderio satisfacere nequit, quod cordi eius ineluctabiliter inest.

Dum coram morte omnis imaginatio deficit, Ecclesia tamen, Revelatione divina edocta, hominem ad beatum finem, ultra terrestres miseriae limites, a Deo creatum esse affirmat. Mors insuper corporalis, a qua homo si non peccasset subtractus fuisset,¹ fides christiana docet fore ut vincatur, cum homo in salutem, culpa sua perditam, ab omnipotente et miserante Salvatore restituatur. Deus enim hominem vocavit et vocat ut Ei in perpetua incorruptibilis vitae divinae communionem tota sua natura adhaereat. Quam victoriam Christus, hominem a morte man who cares but little for truth and goodness or for a conscience that by degrees grows practically sightless as a result of habitual sin.

17. (The excellence of freedom.) Only in freedom can man direct himself toward goodness. Our contemporaries make much of this freedom and pursue it eagerly; and rightly to be sure. Often, however, they foster it perversely as a license for doing whatever pleases them, even if it is evil. For its part, authentic freedom is an exceptional sign of the divine image within man. For God has willed that man remain "under the control of his own decisions",¹ so that he can seek his Creator spontaneously and come freely to utter and blissful perfection through loyalty to him. Hence man's dignity demands that he act according to a knowing and free choice that is personally motivated and prompted from within, not under blind internal impulse or by mere external pressure.

Man achieves such dignity when, emancipating himself from all captivity to passion, he pursues his goal in a spontaneous choice of what is good and procures for himself, through effective and skillful action, apt helps to that end. Since man's freedom has been damaged by sin, only by the aid of God's grace can he bring such a relationship with God into full flower. Before the judgment seat of God, each man must render an account of his own life, whether he has done good or evil.²

18. (The mystery of death.) It is in the face of death that the riddle of human existence grows most acute. Man is tormented not only by pain and by the advancing deterioration of his body, but even more so by a dread of perpetual extinction. He rightly follows the intuition of his heart when he abhors and repudiates the utter ruin and total disappearance of his own person. He rebels against death because he bears in himself an eternal seed that cannot be reduced to sheer matter. All the endeavors of technology, though useful in the extreme, cannot calm his anxiety; for prolongation of biological life is unable to satisfy that desire for higher life which is inescapably lodged in his breast.

Although the mystery of death utterly beggars the imagination, the Church has been taught by divine revelation and firmly teaches that man has been created by God for a blissful purpose beyond the reach of earthly misery. In addition, that bodily death from which man would have been immune had he not sinned¹ will be vanquished, according to the Christian faith, when man who was ruined by his own doing is restored to wholeness by an almighty and merciful Savior. For God has called man and still calls him so that with his entire being he

Cuicumque igitur recogitanti homini, fides, cum solidis argumentis oblata, in eius anxietate de sorte futura responsum offert; simulque facultatem praebet cum dilectis fratribus iam morte praereptis in Christo communicandi, spem conferens eos veram vitam apud Deum adeptos esse.

Voce atheismi phaenomena inter se valde diversa designantur. Dum enim a quibusdam Deus expresse negatur, alii censent hominem nihil omnino de Eo asserere posse; alii vero quaestionem de Deo tali methodo examini subiiciunt, ut illa sensu carere videatur.

Multi, scientiarum positivarum limites indebite praetergressi, aut omnia hac sola scientifica ratione explicari contendunt aut e contra nullam omnino veritatem absolutam iam admittunt. Quidam hominem tantopere exaltant, ut fides in Deum quasi enervis fiat, magis proclives, ut videntur, ad affirmationem hominis quam ad Dei negationem. Alii Deum sibi ita effingunt, ut illud figmentum, quod repudiant, nullo modo Deus sit Evangelii. Alii quaestiones de Deo ne aggrediuntur quidem, quippe qui inquietudinem religiosam non experiri videantur nec percipiunt quare de religione iam sibi curandum sit.

Atheismus praeterea non raro oritur sive ex violenta contra malum in mundo protestatione, sive ex nota ipsius absoluti quibusdam humanis bonis indebite adiudicata, ita ut ista iam loco Dei habeantur. Ipsa civilizatio hodierna, non ex se, sed utpote nimis rebus terrestribus intricata accessum ad Deum saepe difficiliorem reddere potest.

Sane qui voluntarie Deum a corde suo arcere et quaestiones religiosas devitare conantur, dictamen conscientiae suae non secuti, culpaе expertes non might be joined to him in an endless sharing of a divine life beyond all corruption. Christ won this victory when he rose to life, for by his death he freed man from death.²

Hence to every thoughtful man a solidly established faith provides the answer to his anxiety about what the future holds for him. At the same time, faith gives him the power to be united in Christ with his loved ones who have already been snatched away by death; faith arouses the hope that they have found true life with God.

19. (The forms and causes of atheism.) The root reason for human dignity lies in man's call to communion with God. From the very circumstance of his origin, man is already invited to converse with God. For man would not exist were he not created by God's love and constantly preserved by it; and he cannot live fully according to truth unless he freely acknowledges that love and devotes himself to his Creator. Still, many of our contemporaries have never recognized this intimate and vital link with God or have explicitly rejected it. Thus atheism must be accounted among the most serious problems of this age and is deserving of closer examination.

The word atheism is applied to phenomena that are quite distinct from one another. For while God is expressly denied by some, others believe that man can assert absolutely nothing about him. Still others use such a method to scrutinize the question of God as to make it seem devoid of meaning.

Many, unduly transgressing the limits of the positive sciences, contend that everything can be explained by this kind of scientific reasoning alone, or, by contrast, they altogether disallow that there is any absolute truth. Some laud man so extravagantly that their faith in God lapses into a kind of anemia, though they seem more inclined to affirm man than to deny God. Again some form for themselves such a fallacious idea of God that when they repudiate this figment they are by no means rejecting the God of the gospel. Some never get to the point of raising questions about God, since they seem to experience no religious stirrings, nor do they see why they should trouble themselves about religion.

Moreover, atheism results not rarely from a violent protest against the evil in this world or from the absolute character with which certain human values are unduly invested and which thereby already accords them the stature of God. Modern civilization itself often complicates the approach to God, not for any essential reason, but because it is so heavily engrossed in earthly affairs.

Undeniably, those who willfully shut out God from their hearts and try to dodge religious questions are not following the dictates of their consciences and, hence,

sunt; attamen et ipsi credentes quamdam de hoc responsabilitatem saepe ferunt. Atheismus enim, integre consideratus, non est quid originarium, sed potius ex diversis causis oritur, inter quas adnumeratur etiam reactio critica contra religiones et quidem, in nonnullis regionibus, praesertim contra religionem christianam. Quapropter in hac atheismi genesi partem non parvam habere possunt credentes, quatenus neglecta fidei educatione, vel fallaci doctrinae expositione, vel etiam vitae suae religiosae, moralis ac socialis defectibus, Dei et religionis genuinum vultum potius velare quam revelare dicendi sint. [1040]

20. (De atheismo systematico.) Atheismus modernus formam etiam systematicam saepe praebet, quae, praeter alias causas, optatum autonomiae hominis eo usque perducit ut contra qualemcumque a Deo dependentiam difficultatem suscitet. Qui talem atheismum profitentur, libertatem in eo esse contendunt quod homo sibi ipse sit finis, propriae suae historiae solus artifex et demiurgus: quod componi non posse autumant cum agnitione Domini, omnium rerum auctoris et finis, vel saltem talem affirmationem plane superfluum reddere. Cui doctrinae favere potest sensus potentiae quern hodiernus progressus technicus homini confert.

Inter formas hodierni atheismi illa non praetermittenda est, quae liberationem hominis praesertim ex eius liberatione oeconomica et sociali expectat. Huic autem liberationi religionem natura sua obstare contendit, quatenus, in futuram fallacemque vitam spem hominis erigens, ipsum a civitatis terrestri aedificatione deterret. Unde fautores talis doctrinae, ubi ad regimen reipublicae accedunt, religionem vehementer oppugnant, atheismum diffundentes etiam adhibitis, praesertim in iuvenum educatione, illis pressionis mediis, quibus potestas publica pollet.

are not free of blame; yet believers themselves frequently bear some responsibility for this situation. For, taken as a whole, atheism is not a spontaneous development but stems from a variety of causes, including a critical reaction against religious beliefs and, in some places, against the Christian religion in particular. Hence believers can have more than a little to do with the birth of atheism. To the extent that they neglect their own training in the faith or teach erroneous doctrine or are deficient in their religious, moral, or social life, they must be said to conceal rather than reveal the authentic face of God and religion.

20. (Systematic atheism.) Modern atheism often takes 4320 on a systematic expression that, in addition to other causes, stretches the desires for human independence to such a point that it poses difficulties against any kind of dependence on God. Those who profess atheism of this sort maintain that it gives man freedom to be an end unto himself, the sole artisan and creator of his own history. They claim that this freedom cannot be reconciled with the affirmation of a Lord who is author and purpose of all things, or at least that this freedom makes such an affirmation altogether superfluous. Favoring this doctrine can be the sense of power that modern technical progress generates in man.

Not to be overlooked among the forms of modern atheism is that which anticipates the liberation of man especially through his economic and social emancipation. This form argues that by its nature religion thwarts this liberation by arousing man's hope for a deceptive future life, thereby diverting him from the constructing of the earthly city. Consequently, when the proponents of this doctrine gain governmental power, they vigorously fight against religion and promote atheism by using, especially in the education of youth, those means of pressure that public power has at its disposal.

21. (The attitude of the Church toward atheism.) 4321 In her loyal devotion to God and men, the Church has already repudiated¹ and cannot cease repudiating, sorrowfully but as firmly as possible, those poisonous doctrines and actions that contradict reason and the common experience of humanity and dethrone man from his native excellence.

Still, she strives to detect in the atheistic mind the hidden causes for the denial of God; conscious of how weighty are the questions that atheism raises and motivated by love for all men, she believes these questions ought to be examined seriously and more profoundly.

*4321¹ Cf. Pius XI, encyclical Divini Redemptoris, March 19, 1937 (AAS 29 [1937]: 65–106); Pius XII, encyclical Ad Apostolorum Principis, June 29, 1958 (AAS 50 [1958]: 601–14); John XXIII, encyclical Mater et Magistra, May 15, 1961 (AAS 53 [1961]: 451–53); Paul VI, encyclical Ecclesiam suam, August 6, 1964 (AAS 56 [1964]: 651–53).

Tenet Ecclesia agnitionem Dei dignitati hominis nequaquam opponi, cum huiusmodi dignitas in ipso Deo fundetur et perficiatur: homo enim [1041] a Deo creante intelligens ac liber in societate constituitur; sed praesertim ad ipsam Dei communionem ut filius vocatur et ad Ipsius felicitatem participandam.

Docet praeterea per spem eschatologicam momentum munerum terrestrium non minui, sed potius eorum adimpletionem novis motivis fulciri. Deficientibus e contra fundamento divino et spe vitae aeternae, hominis dignitas gravissime laeditur, ut saepe hodie constat, atque vitae et mortis, culpa et doloris aenigmata sine solutione manent, ita ut homines in desperationem non raro deiiciantur.

Omnis homo interea sibi ipsi remanet quaestio insoluta, subobscura percepta. Nemo enim quibusdam momentis, praecipue in maioribus vitae eventibus, praefatam interrogationem omnino effugere valet. Cui quaestioni solus Deus plene et omni certitudine responsum affert, qui ad altiorem cogitationem et humiliorem inquisitionem hominem vocat.

Remedium autem atheismo afferendum, cum a doctrina apte exposita, tum ab integra Ecclesiae eiusque membrorum vita exspectandum est. Ecclesiae enim est Deum Patrem eiusque Filium incarnatum praesentem et quasi visibilem reddere, ductu Spiritus Sancti sese indesinenter renovando et purificando.²

Id imprimis obtinetur testimonio fidei vivae et maturae, ad hoc scilicet educatae ut difficultates lucide perspicere valeat easque superare. Huius fidei testimonium praeclarum plurimi martyres reddiderunt et reddunt. Quae fides suam fecunditatem manifestare debet, credentium integram vitam, etiam profanam, penetrando, eosque ad iustitiam et amorem, praesertim erga egentes, movendo. Ad praesentiam Dei manifestandam maxime denique confert caritas fraterna fidelium, qui spiritu unanimes collaborant fidei Evangelii,³ et signum unitatis se exhibent.

Ecclesia vero, etiamsi atheismum omnino reiicit, sincere tamen profitetur homines omnes, credentes et non credentes, ad hunc mundum, in quo communiter vivunt, recte aedificandum opem conferre debere: quod certe fieri non potest sine sincero et prudenti colloquio. Conqueritur igitur de discrimine inter credentes et non credentes, quod quidam civitatum rectores, personae humanae iura fundamentalia non agnoscentes, iniuste inducunt. Pro credentibus vero actuosam libertatem [1042] expostulat ut in hoc mundo etiam Dei templum extruere sinantur. Atheos autem humaniter invitat ut Evangelium Christi corde aperto considerent.

The Church holds that the recognition of God is in no way hostile to man's dignity, since this dignity is rooted and perfected in God. For man was made an intelligent and free member of society by God who created him; but even more important, he is called as a son to communion with God himself and participation in his happiness.

She further teaches that a hope related to the end of time does not diminish the importance of intervening duties but rather undergirds the fulfillment of them with fresh incentives. By contrast, when a divine instruction and the hope of life eternal are wanting, man's dignity is most grievously lacerated, as current events often attest; riddles of life and death, of guilt and of grief, go unsolved with the frequent result that men succumb to despair.

Meanwhile every man remains to himself an unsolved puzzle, however obscurely he may perceive it. For on certain occasions no one can entirely escape the kind of self-questioning mentioned earlier, especially when life's major events take place. To this questioning only God fully and most certainly provides an answer as he summons man to higher knowledge and humbler probing.

The remedy that must be applied to atheism, however, is to be sought in a proper presentation of the Church's teaching as well as in the integral life of the Church and her members. For it is the function of the Church, led by the Holy Spirit, who renews and purifies her ceaselessly,² to make God the Father and his incarnate Son present and in a sense visible.

This result is achieved chiefly by the witness of a living and mature faith, namely, one trained to see difficulties clearly and to master them. Many martyrs have given luminous witness to this faith and continue to do so. This faith needs to prove its fruitfulness by penetrating the believer's entire life, including its worldly dimensions, and by activating him toward justice and love, especially regarding the needy. What most reveals God's presence, however, is the brotherly charity of the faithful who are united in spirit as they work together for the faith of the gospel³ and who prove themselves a sign of unity.

While rejecting atheism, root and branch, the Church sincerely professes that all men, believers and unbelievers alike, ought to work for the rightful betterment of this world in which all alike live; such an ideal cannot be realized, however, apart from sincere and prudent dialogue. Hence the Church protests against the distinction that some State authorities make between believers and unbelievers, with prejudice to the fundamental rights of the human person. The Church calls for the active liberty of believers to build up in this world God's temple, too. She courteously invites atheists to examine the gospel of Christ with an open mind.

Apprime etenim novit Ecclesia nuntium suum cum secretissimis humani cordis desideriis concordare, cum vocationis humanae dignitatem vindicat, illis qui iam de altiore sua sorte desperant spem restituens. Nuntium eius, nedum hominem minuat, lucem, vitam et libertatem ad eius profectum fundit; atque praeter illud nihil cordi hominis satisfacere valet: "Fecisti nos ad Te", Domine, "et inquietum est cor nostrum, donec requiescat in Te."⁴

Qui est "imago Dei invisibilis" [Col 1:15],² Ipse est homo perfectus, qui Adae filiis similitudinem divinam, inde a primo peccato deformatam, restituit. Cum in Eo natura humana assumpta, non preempta sit,³ eo ipso etiam in nobis ad sublimem dignitatem evecta est. Ipse enim, Filius Dei, incarnatione sua cum omni homine quodammodo Se univit. Humanis manibus opus fecit, humana mente cogitavit, humana voluntate egit,⁴ humano corde dilexit. Natus de Maria [1043] Virgine, vere unus ex nostris factus est, in omnibus nobis similis excepto peccato.⁵

Agnus innocens, sanguine suo libere effuso, vitam nobis meruit, in Ipsoque Deus nos Sibi et inter nos reconciliavit⁶ et a servitute diaboli ac peccati eripuit, ita ut unusquisque nostrum cum Apostolo dicere possit: Filius Dei "dilexit me et tradidit semetipsum pro me" [Gal 2:20]. Pro nobis patiendo non solummodo exemplum praebeuit ut sequamur vestigia Eius,⁷ sed et viam instauravit, quam dum sequimur, vita et mors sanctificantur novumque sensum accipiunt.

Above all the Church knows that her message is in harmony with the most secret desires of the human heart when she champions the dignity of the human vocation, restoring hope to those who have already despaired of anything higher than their present lot. Far from diminishing man, her message brings to his development light, life, and freedom. Apart from this message, nothing will avail to fill up the heart of man: "You have made us for yourself", O Lord, "and our hearts are restless till they rest in you."⁴

22. (Christ, the new man.) The truth is that only in the mystery of the incarnate Word does the mystery of man take on light. For Adam, the first man, was a figure of him who was to come,¹ namely, Christ the Lord. Christ, the final Adam, by the revelation of the mystery of the Father and his love, fully reveals man to man himself and makes his supreme calling clear. It is not surprising, then, that in him all the aforementioned truths find their root and attain their crown.

He who is "the image of the invisible God" [Col 1:15]² is himself the perfect man. To the sons of Adam he restored the divine likeness that had been disfigured from the first sin onward. Since human nature as he assumed it was not annulled,³ by that very fact it has been raised up to an eminent dignity in our respect, too. For by his Incarnation the Son of God has united himself in some fashion with every man. He worked with human hands; he thought with a human mind, acted by human choice,⁴ and loved with a human heart. Born of the Virgin Mary, he has truly been made one of us, like us in all things except sin.⁵

As an innocent lamb he merited for us life by the free shedding of his own blood. In him God reconciled us⁶ to himself and among ourselves; from bondage to the devil and sin he delivered us, so that each one of us can say with the apostle: The Son of God "loved me and gave himself up for me" [Gal 2:20]. By suffering for us, he not only provided us with an example for our imitation,⁷ he blazed a trail, and if we follow it, life and death are made holy and take on a new meaning.

Christianus autem homo, conformis imagini Filii factus qui est Primogenitus in multis fratribus,⁸ “primitias Spiritus” [Rm 8:23] accipit, quibus capax fit legem novam amoris adimplendi.⁹ Per hunc Spiritum, qui est “pignus hereditatis” [Eph 1:14], totus homo interius restauratur, usque ad “redemptionem corporis” [Rm 8:23]: “Si Spiritus Eius, qui suscitavit Iesum a mortuis, habitat in vobis: qui suscitavit Iesum Christum a mortuis, vivificabit et mortalia corpora vestra, propter inhabitantem Spiritum eius in vobis” [Rm 8:11].¹⁰

Christianum certe urgent necessitas et officium contra malum per multas tribulationes certandi necnon mortem patiendi; sed mysterio paschali consociatus, Christi mortis configuratus, ad resurrectionem spe roboratus occurret.¹¹

Quod non tantum pro christifidelibus valet, sed et pro omnibus hominibus bonae voluntatis in quorum corde gratia invisibili modo operatur.¹² Cum enim pro omnibus mortuus sit Christus¹³ cumque vocatio hominis ultima revera una sit, scilicet divina, tenere debemus Spiritum Sanctum cunctis possibilitatem offerre ut, modo Deo cognito, huic paschali mysterio consocietur. Tale et tantum est hominis mysterium, quod per Revelationem christianam credentibus illucescit. Per Christum et in Christo, igitur, illuminatur aenigma doloris et mortis, quod extra Eius Evangelium nos obruit. Christus resurrexit, morte sua mortem destruens, vitamque nobis largitus est¹⁴ ut, filii in Filio, clamemus in Spiritu: Abba, Pater!¹⁵

DE HOMINUM COMMUNITATE

4323 23. (Quid Concilium intendat.) Inter praecipuos mundi hodierni aspectus, mutuarum inter homines necessitudinum multiplicatio adnumeratur, ad quam evolendam hodierni technici progressus plurimum conferunt. Tamen fraternum hominum colloquium non in istis progressibus, sed profundius in personarum communitate perficitur, quae mutuam reverentiam erga plenam earum dignitatem spiritualem exigit. Ad hanc vero communionem inter personas promovendam, Revelatio christiana magnum subsidium affert, simulque ad altiorem vitae socialis legum intelligentiam nos

The Christian man, conformed to the likeness of that Son who is the firstborn of many brothers,⁸ received “the first-fruits of the Spirit” [Rom 8:23] by which he becomes capable of discharging the new law of love.⁹ Through this Spirit, who is “the pledge of our inheritance” [Eph 1:14], the whole man is renewed from within, even to the achievement of “the redemption of the body” [Rom 8:23]: “If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, then he who raised Jesus Christ from the dead will also bring to life your mortal bodies because of his Spirit who dwells in you” [Rom 8:11].¹⁰

Pressing upon the Christian, to be sure, are the need and the duty to battle against evil through manifold tribulations and even to suffer death. But, linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, he will hasten forward to resurrection in the strength that comes from hope.¹¹

All this holds true not only for Christians, but for all men of goodwill in whose hearts grace works in an unseen way.¹² For, since Christ died for all men,¹³ and since the ultimate vocation of man is in fact one and divine, we ought to believe that the Holy Spirit in a manner known only to God offers to every man the possibility of being associated with this paschal mystery.

Such is the mystery of man, and it is a great one, as seen by believers in the light of Christian revelation. Through Christ and in Christ, the riddles of sorrow and death grow meaningful. Apart from his gospel, they overwhelm us. Christ has risen, destroying death by his death; he has lavished life upon us¹⁴ so that, as sons in the Son, we can cry out in the Spirit: Abba, Father!¹⁵

THE COMMUNITY OF MANKIND

23. (What the council intends.) One of the salient features of the modern world is the growing interdependence of men one on the other, a development promoted chiefly by modern technical advances. Nevertheless, brotherly dialogue among men reaches its perfection, not on the level of technical progress, but on the deeper level of interpersonal relationships. These demand a mutual respect for the full spiritual dignity of the person. Christian revelation contributes greatly to the promotion of this communion between persons and, at the same time, leads us to a deeper understanding of the perducit quas Creator in natura spirituali ac morali hominis inscripsit.

Quoniam autem recentiora Ecclesiae Magisterii documenta christianam de societate humana doctrinam fusius exposuerunt,¹ Concilium quasdam tantum principaliores veritates in memoriam revocat earumque fundamenta sub luce Revelationis exponit. Deinde in quaedam consecraria insistit quae nostris diebus maioris sunt momenti.

24. (De indole communitaria vocationis humanae in consilio Dei.) Deus, qui paternam curam omnium habet, voluit ut cuncti homines unam efficerent familiam fraternoque animo se invicem tractarent. Omnes [1045] enim creati ad imaginem Dei, qui fecit “ex uno omne genus hominum inhabitare super universam faciem terrae” [Act 17:26], ad unum eumdemque finem, id est ad Deum ipsum, vocantur.

Quapropter dilectio Dei et proximi primum et maximum mandatum est. A Sacra autem Scriptura docemur Dei amorem a proximi amore seiungi non posse: “... si quod est aliud mandatum, in hoc verbo instauratur: Diliges proximum tuum sicut teipsum ... Plenitudo ergo legis est dilectio” [Rm 13:9s; cf. 1 Io 4:20]. Quod vero hominibus magis in dies ab invicem dependentibus atque mundo magis in dies unificato maximi comprobatur esse momenti.

Immo Dominus Iesus, quando Patrem orat ut “omnes unum sint ... , sicut et nos unum sumus” [Io 17:21s], prospectus praebens humanae rationi impervios, aliquam similitudinem innuit inter unionem personarum divinarum et unionem filiorum Dei in veritate et caritate. Haec similitudo manifestat hominem, qui in terris sola creatura est quam Deus propter seipsam voluerit, plene seipsum invenire non posse nisi per sincerum sui ipsius donum.¹

laws of social life that the Creator has written into man’s moral and spiritual nature.

Since rather recent documents of the Church’s teaching authority have dealt at considerable length with Christian doctrine about human society,¹ this council is merely going to call to mind some of the more basic truths, treating their foundations under the light of revelation. Then it will dwell more at length on certain of their implications having special significance for our day.

24. (The communitarian nature of man’s vocation in the design of God.) God, who has fatherly concern for everyone, has willed that all men should constitute one family and treat one another in a spirit of brotherhood. For having been created in the image of God, who “from one man has created the whole human race and made them live all over the face of the earth” [Acts 17:26], all men are called to one and the same goal, namely, God himself. 4324

For this reason, love for God and neighbor is the first and greatest commandment. Sacred Scripture, however, teaches us that the love of God cannot be separated from love of neighbor: “If there is any other commandment, it is summed up in this saying: You shall love your neighbor as yourself... Love therefore is the fulfillment of the law” [Rom 13:9–10; cf. 1 Jn 4:20]. To men growing daily more dependent on one another, and to a world becoming more unified every day, this truth proves to be of paramount importance.

Indeed, the Lord Jesus, when he prayed to the Father, “that all may be one ... as we are one” [Jn 17:21–22], opened up vistas closed to human reason, for he implied a certain likeness between the union of the Divine Persons and the union of God’s sons in truth and charity. This likeness reveals that man, who is the only creature on earth that God willed for its own sake, cannot fully find himself except through a sincere gift of himself.¹

25. (The interdependence of the human person and human society.) Man’s social nature makes it evident that the progress of the human person and the advance of society itself hinge on one another. For the beginning, the subject, and the goal of all social institutions is and must be the human person, which for his part and by his very nature stands completely in need of social life.¹ Since this social life is not something added on to man, through his dealings with others, through reciprocal services, and through fraternal dialogue, he develops all his gifts and is able to rise to his destiny. 4325

Ex socialibus vinculis, quae homini excolendo necessaria sunt, alia, uti familia et communitas politica, intimae eius naturae immediatius congruunt; alia potius ex eius libera voluntate procedunt. Nostra hac aetate, variis de causis, mutuae necessitudines et interdependentiae in dies multiplicantur; unde diversa oriuntur consociationes et instituta sive publici sive privati iuris. Hoc autem factum, quod socializatio nuncupatur, licet periculis sane non careat, multa tamen secum [1046] emolumenta affert ad confirmandas et augendas humanae personae qualitates eiusque iura tuenda.²

Sed si personae humanae ad suam vocationem adimplendam, etiam religiosam, ex hac vita sociali multum accipiunt, negari tamen nequit homines ex adiunctis socialibus in quibus vivunt et, inde ab infantia, immerguntur, saepe a bono faciendo averti et ad malum impelli. Certum est perturbationes, tam frequenter in ordine sociali occurrentes, ex ipsa formarum oeconomicarum, politicarum et socialium tensione pro parte provenire. Sed penitus ex hominum superbia et egoismo oriuntur, quae etiam ambitum socialem pervertunt. Ubi autem ordo rerum sequelis peccati afficitur, homo, proclivis ad malum natus, nova deinde ad peccatum incitamenta invenit, quae, sine strenuis gratia adiuvante conatibus, superari nequeunt.

Simul vero conscientia crescit eximiae dignitatis quae personae humanae competit, cum ipsa rebus omnibus praestet, et eius iura officiaque universalis sint atque inviolabilia. Oportet ergo ut ea omnia homini pervia reddantur, quibus ad vitam vere humanam gerendam indiget, ut sunt victus, vestitus, habitatio, ius ad statum vitae libere eligendum et ad familiam condendam, ad educationem, ad laborem, ad bonam famam, ad reverentiam, ad congruam informationem, ad agendum iuxta rectam suae conscientiae normam, ad vitae privatae

Among those social ties that man needs for his development, some, like the family and political community, relate with greater immediacy to his innermost nature; others originate rather from his free decision. In our era, for various reasons, reciprocal ties and mutual dependencies increase day by day and give rise to a variety of associations and organizations, both public and private. This development, which is called socialization, while certainly not without its dangers, brings with it many advantages with respect to consolidating and increasing the qualities of the human person and safeguarding his rights.²

But if by this social life the human person is greatly aided in responding to his destiny, even in its religious dimensions, it cannot be denied that men are often diverted from doing good and spurred toward and by the social circumstances in which they live and are immersed from their birth. To be sure, the disturbances that so frequently occur in the social order result in part from the natural tensions of economic, political, and social forms. But at a deeper level they flow from man's pride and selfishness, which contaminate even the social sphere. When the structure of affairs is flawed by the consequences of sin, man, already born with a bent toward evil, finds there new inducements to sin, which cannot be overcome without strenuous efforts and the assistance of grace.

26. (The promotion of the common good.) Every day human interdependence grows more tightly drawn and spreads by degrees over the whole world. As a result, the common good, that is, the sum of those conditions of social life that allow social groups and their individual members relatively thorough and ready access to their own fulfillment, today takes on an increasingly universal complexion and consequently involves rights and duties with respect to the whole human race. Every social group must take account of the needs and legitimate aspirations of other groups and even of the general welfare of the entire human family.¹

At the same time, however, there is a growing awareness of the exalted dignity proper to the human person, since he stands above all things, and his rights and duties are universal and inviolable. Therefore, there must be made available to all men everything necessary for leading a life truly human, such as food, clothing, and shelter; the right to choose a state of life freely and to found a family, the right to education, to employment, to a good reputation, to respect, to appropriate information, to activity in accord with the upright norm of one's own protectionem atque ad iustam libertatem etiam in re religiosa.

Ordo socialis igitur eiusque progressus in bonum personarum [1047] indesinenter cedere debent, siquidem rerum ordinatio ordini personarum subiicienda est et non e converso, ipso Domino id innuente cum dixerit sabbatum propter hominem factum esse et non hominem propter sabbatum.²

Ordo ille in dies evolendus, in veritate fundandus, in iustitia aedificandus, amore vivificandus est; in libertate autem aequilibrium in dies humanius invenire debet.³ Ad haec autem implenda mentis renovatio atque amplae societatis immutationes inducendae sunt.

Spiritus Dei, qui mirabili providentia temporum cursum dirigit et faciem terrae renovat, huic evolutioni adest. Evangelicum autem fermentum in corde hominis irrefrenabilem dignitatis exigentiam excitavit atque excitat.

Nostris praesertim diebus urget obligatio nosmetipsos cuiuslibet omnino hominis proximos efficiendi et illi occurrenti actuose inserviendi, sive sit senex ab omnibus derelictus, sive alienigena operarius iniuste despectus, sive exsul, sive infans ex illegitima unione natus, immerito patiens propter peccatum a se non commissum, vel esuriens qui conscientiam nostram interpellat Domini vocem revocans: “Quamdiu fecistis uni ex his fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis” [Mt 25:40].

Quaecumque insuper ipsi vitae adversantur, ut cuiusvis generis homicidia, genocidia, abortus, euthanasia et ipsum voluntarium suicidium; quaecumque humanae personae integritatem violant, ut mutilationes, tormenta corpori mentive inflictis, conatus ipsos animos coërcendi; quaecumque humanam dignitatem offendunt, ut infrahumanae vivendi condiciones, arbitrarie incarcerationes, deportationes, servitus, prostitutio, mercatus mulierum et iuvenum; condiciones quoque laboris [1048] ignominiosae, quibus operarii ut mera quaestus instrumenta, non ut liberae et responsables personae tractantur: haec omnia et alia huiusmodi conscience, to protection of privacy and rightful freedom, even in matters religious.

Hence, the social order and its development must invariably work to the benefit of the human person, since the order of things must be subordinate to the order of persons, and not contrariwise, as the Lord indicated when he said that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.²

This social order requires constant improvement. It must be founded on truth, built on justice, and animated by love; in freedom it should grow every day toward a more humane balance.³ An improvement in attitudes and abundant changes in society will have to take place if these objectives are to be gained.

God's Spirit, who with a marvelous providence directs the unfolding of time and renews the face of the earth, is not absent from this development. The ferment of the gospel, too, has aroused and continues to arouse in man's heart the irresistible requirements of his dignity.

27. (Reverence toward the human person.) Coming down to practical and particularly urgent consequences, this council lays stress on reverence for man; everyone must consider his every neighbor without exception as another self, taking into account first of all his life and the means necessary to living it with dignity,¹ so as not to imitate the rich man who had no concern for the poor man Lazarus.²

In our times a special obligation binds us to make ourselves the neighbor of every person without exception and of actively helping him when he comes across our path, whether he be an old person abandoned by all, a foreign laborer unjustly looked down upon, a refugee, a child born of an unlawful union and wrongly suffering for a sin he did not commit, or a hungry person who disturbs our conscience by recalling the voice of the Lord, “As long as you did it for one of these the least of my brethren, you did it for me” [Mt 25:40].

Furthermore, whatever is opposed to life itself, such as any type of murder, genocide, abortion, euthanasia, or willful self-destruction, whatever violates the integrity of the human person, such as mutilation, torments inflicted on body or mind, attempts to coerce the will itself; whatever insults human dignity, such as subhuman living conditions, arbitrary imprisonment, deportation, slavery, prostitution, the selling of women and children; as well as disgraceful working conditions, where men are treated as mere tools for profit, rather than as free and responsible persons; all these things and others of their like are infamies indeed. They poison human society, probra quidem sunt, ac dum civilizationem humanam inficiunt, magis eos inquinant qui sic se gerunt, quam eos qui iniuriam patiuntur et Creatoris honori maxime contradicunt.

- 4328 28. (De reverentia et amore erga adversarios.) Ad illos etiam qui in rebus socialibus, politicis vel etiam religiosis aliter ac nos sentiunt aut faciunt, reverentia et caritas extendi debent; quo magis quidem humanitate et caritate modos sentiendi eorum intimius comprehendemus, eo facilius cum ipsis colloquium inire poterimus.

Haec sane caritas et benignitas nequaquam indifferentes erga veritatem et bonum nos reddere debent. Immo caritas ipsa discipulos Christi urget ad veritatem salutarem omnibus hominibus annuntiandam. Sed distinguere oportet inter errorem, semper reiциendum, et errantem, qui dignitatem personae iugiter servat, etiam ubi falsis minusve accuratis notionibus religiosus inquinatur.¹ Deus solus iudex est et scrutator cordium: unde nos vetat de interiore cuiusvis culpa iudicare.²

Doctrina Christi ut etiam iniuriis ignoscamus postulat praeceptumque amoris ad inimicos omnes extendit, quod est Novae Legis mandatum: “Audistis quia dictum est: Diliges proximum tuum, et odio habebis inimicum tuum. Ego autem dico vobis: Diligite inimicos vestros, benefacite his qui oderunt vos: et orate pro persequentibus et calumniantibus vos” [Mt 5:43s].³

- 4329 29. (De essentiali inter omnes homines aequalitate et de iustitia sociali.) Cum omnes homines, anima rationali pollentes et ad imaginem Dei creati, eandem naturam eandemque originem habeant, cumque, a Christo redempti, eadem vocatione et destinatione divina fruuntur, fundamentalis aequalitas inter omnes magis magisque agnoscenda est.

Sane varia capacitate physica viriumque intellectualium et moralium diversitate non omnes homines aequiparantur. Omnium tamen discriminandi modus in iuribus personae fundamentalibus, sive socialis sive [1049] culturalis, ob sexum, stirpem, colorem, socialem condicionem, linguam aut religionem, superandus et removendus est, utpote Dei proposito contrarius. Vere enim dolendum est iura illa fundamentalia personae adhuc non ubique sarta tecta servari. Ut si mulieri denegetur facultas libere sponsum eligendi et vitae statum amplectendi, vel ad parem educationem et culturam quae viro agnoscitur accedendi.

but they do more harm to those who practice them than to those who suffer from the injury. Moreover, they are the supreme dishonor to the Creator.

28. (Reverence and love toward enemies.) Respect and love ought to be extended also to those who think or act differently than we do in social, political, and even religious matters. In fact, the more deeply we come to understand their ways of thinking through such courtesy and love, the more easily will we be able to enter into dialogue with them.

This love and goodwill, to be sure, must in no way render us indifferent to truth and goodness. Indeed, love itself impels the disciples of Christ to speak the saving truth to all men. But it is necessary to distinguish between error, which always merits repudiation, and the person in error, who never loses the dignity of being a person even when he is flawed by false or inadequate religious notions.¹ God alone is the judge and searcher of hearts; for that reason he forbids us to make judgments about the internal guilt of anyone.²

The teaching of Christ even requires that we forgive injuries³ and extends the law of love to include every enemy, according to the command of the New Law: “You have heard that it was said: You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy. But I say to you: love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those who persecute and calumniate you” [Mt 5:43-44].

29. (The essential equality of all men and of social justice.) Since all men possess a rational soul and are created in God’s likeness, since they have the same nature and origin, have been redeemed by Christ, and enjoy the same divine calling and destiny, the basic equality of all must receive increasingly greater recognition.

True, all men are not alike from the point of view of varying physical power and the diversity of intellectual and moral resources. Nevertheless, with respect to the fundamental rights of the person, every type of discrimination, whether social or cultural, whether based on sex, race, color, social condition, language, or religion, is to be overcome and eradicated as contrary to God’s intent. For in truth it must still be regretted that fundamental personal rights are still not being universally honored. Such is the case of a woman who is denied the right to choose a husband freely, to embrace a state of life, or to acquire an education or cultural benefits equal to those recognized for men.

Insuper, quamquam inter homines iustae diversitates adsunt, aequalis personarum dignitas postulat ut ad humaniorem et aequam vitae condicionem deveniatur. Etenim nimiae inter membra vel populos unius familiae humanae inaequalitates oeconomicae et sociales scandalum movent, atque iustitiae sociali, aequitati personae humanae dignitati, necnon paci sociali et internationali adversantur.

Humanae autem institutiones, sive privatae sive publicae, dignitati ac fini hominis subservire nitantur, simul adversus quamlibet servitutum tum sociale tum politicam strenue decertantes, et iura hominum fundamentalia sub omni regimine politico servantes. Immo, huiusmodi institutiones spiritualibus rebus, omnium altissimis, paulatim congruant oportet, etiamsi interdum sat longo tempore opus sit ut ad optatum finem perveniant.

30. (Quod ultra individualisticam ethicam progrediendum sit.) Profunda et velox rerum immutatio urgentius postulat ut nemo sit qui, ad rerum cursum non attendens vel inertia torpens, ethicae mere individualisticae indulgeat. Iustitiae ac caritatis officium magis ac magis adimpletur per hoc quod unusquisque, ad bonum commune iuxta proprias capacitates et aliorum necessitates conferens, etiam institutiones sive publicas sive privatas promovet et adiuvat quae hominum vitae condicionibus in melius mutandis inserviunt.

Sunt autem qui, largas generosioresque opiniones profitentes, ita tamen semper reapse vivunt ac si nullam societatis necessitatum curam habeant. Immo, plures, in variis regionibus, leges et praescriptiones sociales minimi faciunt. Non pauci, variis fraudibus ac dolis, iusta vectigalia vel alia quae societati debentur effugere non verentur. Alii normas quasdam vitae socialis, e. gr., ad valetudinem tuendam, aut ad vehiculorum ductum moderandum statutas, parvi aestimant, non animadvertentes se tali incuria vitae suae et aliorum periculum inferre. [1050]

Sanctum sit omnibus necessitudines sociales inter praecipua hominis hodierni officia recensere easque observare. Quo magis enim mundus unitur, eo apertius hominum munera particulares coetus superant et ad universum mundum paulatim extenduntur. Quod fieri nequit nisi et singuli homines et ipsorum coetus virtutes morales et sociales in seipsis colant et in societate diffundant, ita ut vere novi homines et artifices novae humanitatis existant cum necessario auxilio divinae gratiae.

31. (De responsabilitate et participatione.) Ut singuli homines suum conscientiae officium accuratius impleant tum erga seipsos, tum erga varios coetus quorum membra

Therefore, although rightful differences exist between men, the equal dignity of persons demands that a more humane and just condition of life be brought about. For excessive economic and social differences between the members of the one human family or population groups cause scandal and militate against social justice, equity, the dignity of the human person, as well as social and international peace.

Human institutions, both private and public, must labor to minister to the dignity and purpose of man. At the same time, let them put up a stubborn fight against any kind of slavery, whether social or political, and safeguard the basic rights of man under every political system. Indeed, human institutions themselves must be accommodated by degrees to the highest of all realities, spiritual ones, even if sometimes a rather long time will be required before they arrive at the desired goal.

30. (The need to transcend an individualistic ethic.) 4330 Profound and rapid changes make it more necessary that no one ignoring the trend of events or drugged by laziness content himself with a merely individualistic morality. It grows increasingly true that the obligations of justice and love are fulfilled only if each person, contributing to the common good, according to his own abilities and the needs of others, also promotes and assists the public and private institutions dedicated to bettering the conditions of human life.

Yet there are those who, while possessing grand and rather noble sentiments, nevertheless in reality live always as if they cared nothing for the needs of society. Many in various places even make light of social laws and precepts and do not hesitate to resort to various frauds and deceptions in avoiding just taxes or other debts due to society. Others think little of certain norms of social life, for example, those designed for the protection of health or laws establishing speed limits; they do not even advert to the fact that by such indifference they imperil their own life and that of others.

Let everyone consider it his sacred obligation to esteem and observe social necessities as belonging to the primary duties of modern man. For the more unified the world becomes, the more plainly do the offices of men extend beyond particular groups and spread by degrees to the whole world. But this development cannot occur unless individual men and their associations cultivate in themselves the moral and social virtues and promote them in society; thus, with the needed help of divine grace men who are truly new and artisans of a new humanity can be forthcoming.

31. (Responsibility and participation.) 4331 In order for individual men to discharge with greater exactness the obligations of their conscience toward themselves and Praeprimis educatio iuvenum cuiuslibet socialis originis ita instituenda est, ut viri mulieresque suscitentur qui non tantum exculti ingenii sed et magni animi sint, utpote qui a nostro tempore vehementer postulentur.

Sed ad hunc responsabilitatis sensum homo vix pervenit, nisi vitae condiciones ei permittant ut suae dignitatis conscius fiat, et vocationi suae, seipsum pro Deo et pro aliis impendendo, respondeat. Humana vero libertas saepe debilius fit, ubi ipse, nimis vitae facilitatibus indulgens, in aurea veluti solitudine seipsum includit. E contra roboratur, cum homo inevitabiles vitae socialis necessitates accipit [AAS: accepit], multiformes exigentias humanae coniunctionis assumit atque humanae communitatis servitio se obstringit.

Ideo omnium extimulanda est voluntas inceptorum communium suas partes assumendi. Laudanda est autem ratio agendi nationum, in quibus pars quam maxima civium in vera libertate rerum publicarum particeps fit. Ratio tamen habenda est condicionis realis uniuscuiusque gentis et necessarij vigoris publicae auctoritatis. Ut vero omnes cives prout sint ad participandam vitam variorum coetuum, quibus corpus sociale constat, necesse est ut his in coetibus bona inveniant, quae ipsos attrahant eosque ad aliorum servitium disponant. Iure arbitrari possumus futuram humanitatis sortem in illorum manibus reponi, qui posteris generationibus vivendi et sperandi rationes tradere valent. [1051] the various groups to which they belong, they must be carefully educated to a higher degree of culture through the use of the immense resources available today to the human race. Above all the education of youth from every social background has to be undertaken, so that there can be produced not only men and women of refined talents, but those great-souled persons who are so desperately required by our times.

Now a man can scarcely arrive at the needed sense of responsibility unless his living conditions allow him to become conscious of his dignity and to rise to his destiny by spending himself for God and for others. But human freedom is often crippled when a man encounters extreme poverty, just as it withers when he indulges in too many of life's comforts and imprisons himself in a kind of splendid isolation. Freedom acquires new strength, by contrast, when a man consents to the unavoidable requirements of social life, takes on the manifold demands of human partnership, and commits himself to the service of the human community.

Hence, the will to play one's role in common endeavors should be everywhere encouraged. Praise is due to those national procedures that allow the largest possible number of citizens to participate in public affairs with genuine freedom. Account must be taken, to be sure, of the actual conditions of each people and the decisiveness required by public authority. If every citizen is to feel inclined to take part in the activities of the various groups that make up the social body, these must offer advantages that will attract members and dispose them to serve others. We can justly consider that the future of humanity lies in the hands of those who are strong enough to provide coming generations with reasons for living and hoping.

32. (The incarnate Word and human solidarity.) As God did not create man for life in isolation, but for the formation of social unity, so also "it has pleased God to make men holy and save them not merely as individuals, without bond or link between them, but by making them into a single people, a people that acknowledges him in truth and serves him in holiness."¹ So from the beginning of salvation history he has chosen men not just as individuals but as members of a certain community. Revealing his mind to them, God called these chosen ones "his people" [Ex 3:7-12] and even made a covenant with them on Sinai.²

This communitarian character is developed and consummated in the work of Jesus Christ. For the very Word made flesh willed to share in the human fellowship. He was present at the wedding of Cana, visited the house of Zacchaeus, ate with publicans and sinners. He

Quae solidaritas semper augenda erit, usque ad illam diem qua consummabitur, et qua homines, gratia salvati, tamquam familia a Deo et Christo Fratre dilecta, perfectam gloriam Deo praestabunt. [1052]

CAPUT III

DE HUMANA NAVITATE IN UNIVERSO MUNDO

33. (Ponitur problema.) Suo labore atque ingenio homo suam vitam amplius evolvere semper conatus est; hodie autem, praesertim ope scientiae et artis technicae, suum dominium in universam fere naturam dilatavit ac iugiter dilatat, et adiutantibus imprimis auctis inter nationes multimodi commercii mediis, familia humana paulatim tamquam unam in universo mundo communitatem sese agnoscit atque constituit. Quo fit, ut multa bona, quae olim homo a supernis viribus praesertim exspectabat, hodie iam propria industria sibi procuret.

Coram immenso hoc conamine, quod totum humanum genus iam pervadit, multae exsurgunt inter homines interrogationes. Quinam est illius operositatis sensus et valor? Quomodo omnibus his rebus utendum est? Ad quem finem assequendum nisus sive singulorum sive societatum tendunt? Ecclesia, quae depositum verbi Dei custodit, ex quo principia in ordine religioso et morali hauriuntur, quin semper de singulis quaestionibus responsum in promptu habeat, lumen revelationis cum omnium peritia coniungere cupit, ut iter illuminetur, quod humanitas nuper ingressa est.

revealed the love of the Father and the sublime vocation of man in terms of the most common of social realities and by making use of the speech and the imagery of plain everyday life. Willingly obeying the laws of his country, he sanctified those human ties, especially family ones, that are the source of social structures. He chose to lead the life proper to an artisan of his time and place.

In his preaching he clearly taught the sons of God to treat one another as brothers. In his prayers he pleaded that all his disciples might be “one”. Indeed, as the Redeemer of all, he offered himself for all even to the point of death. “Greater love than this no one has, that one lay down his life for his friends” [Jn 15:13]. He commanded his apostles to preach to all peoples the gospel’s message that the human race was to become the family of God, in which the fullness of the law would be love.

As the firstborn of many brethren and by the giving of his Spirit, he founded after his death and Resurrection a new brotherly community composed of all those who receive him in faith and in love. This he did through his Body, which is the Church. There everyone, as members one of the other, would render mutual service according to the different gifts bestowed on each.

This solidarity must be constantly increased until that day on which it will be brought to perfection. Then, saved by grace, men will offer flawless glory to God as a family beloved of God and of Christ their Brother.

MAN’S ACTIVITY THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

33. (The problem.) Through his labors and his native 4333 endowments, man has ceaselessly striven to better his life. Today, however, especially with the help of science and technology, he has extended his mastery over nearly the whole of nature and continues to do so. Thanks to increased opportunities for many kinds of social contact among nations, a human family is gradually recognizing that it comprises a single world community and is making itself so. Hence many benefits once looked for, especially from heavenly powers, man has now enterprisingly procured for himself.

In the face of this immense undertaking, in which the whole human race is already engaged, many questions arise among men. What is the meaning and value of this feverish activity? How should all these things be used? To the achievement of what goal are the strivings of individuals and societies heading? The Church guards the heritage of God’s Word and draws from it moral and religious principles without always having at hand the solution to particular problems. As such she desires to add the light of revealed truth to mankind’s store of experience, so that the path that humanity has taken in recent times will not be a dark one.

Quod etiam opera penitus quotidiana respicit. Viri namque et mulieres qui, dum vitae sustentationem sibi et familiae comparant, navitates [1053] suas ita exercent ut societati opportune ministrent, iure existimare possunt se suo labore opus Creatoris evolvere, commodis fratrum suorum consulere, et ad consilium divinum in historia adimplendum personali industria conferre.³

Christiani itaque, nedum arbitrentur opera, quae homines suo ingenio et virtute pepererunt, Dei potentiae opponi, creaturamque rationalem quasi aemulam Creatoris existere, potius persuasum habent humani generis victorias signum esse magnitudinis Dei et fructus potentia Ipsius consilii. Quo magis vero hominum potentia crescit, eo latius ipsorum responsabilitas, sive singulorum sive communitatum extenditur. Unde apparet christiano nuntio homines ab exstruendo mundo non averti, nec ad bonum sui similium negligendum impelli, sed potius officio haec operandi arctius obstringi.⁴

34. (The value of human activity.) Throughout the course of the centuries, men have labored to better the circumstances of their lives through a monumental amount of individual and collective effort. To believers, this point is settled: considered in itself, this human activity accords with God's will. For man, created in God's image, received a mandate to subject to himself the earth and all it contains and to govern the world with justice and holiness:¹ a mandate to relate himself and the totality of things to him who was to be acknowledged as the Lord and Creator of all. Thus, by the subjection of all things to man, the name of God would be wonderful in all the earth.²

This mandate concerns the whole of everyday activity as well. For while providing the substance of life for themselves and their families, men and women are performing their activities in a way that appropriately benefits society. They can justly consider that by their labor they are unfolding the Creator's work, consulting the advantages of their brother men, and are contributing by their personal industry to the realization in history of the divine plan.³

Thus, far from thinking that works produced by man's own talent and energy are in opposition to God's power and that the rational creature exists as a kind of rival to the Creator, Christians are convinced that the triumphs of the human race are a sign of God's grace and the flowering of his own mysterious design. For the greater man's power becomes, the farther his individual and community responsibility extends. Hence it is clear that men are not deterred by the Christian message from building up the world or impelled to neglect the welfare of their fellows, but that they are rather more stringently bound to do these very things.⁴

35. (The regulation of human activity.) Human activity, to be sure, takes its significance from its relationship to man. Just as it proceeds from man, so it is ordered toward man. For when a man works, he not only alters things and society, he develops himself as well. He learns much, he cultivates his resources, he goes outside of himself and beyond himself. Rightly understood, this kind of growth is of greater value than any external riches that can be garnered. A man is more precious for what he is than for what he has.¹

Similarly, all that men do to obtain greater justice, wider brotherhood, and a more humane disposition of social relationships has greater worth than technical quam progressus technici valent. Hi enim progressus quasi materiam humanae promotioni praeberere possunt, illam autem per se solos ad actum nequaquam deducunt.

Unde haec est humanae navitatis norma, quod iuxta consilium et voluntatem divinam cum genuino humani generis bono congruat, et homini individuo vel in societate posito integrae suae vocationis cultum et impletionem permittat.

36. (De iusta rerum terrenarum autonomia.) Multi tamen coaevi nostri timere videntur, ne ex arctiore humanae navitatis et religionis [1054] coniunctione autonomia hominum vel societatum vel scientiarum impediatur.

Si per terrenarum rerum autonomiam intelligimus res creatas et ipsas societates propriis legibus valoribusque gaudere, ab homine gradatim dignoscendis, adhibendis et ordinandis, eadem exigere omnino fas est: quod non solum postulatur ab hominibus nostrae aetatis, sed etiam cum Creatoris voluntate congruit. Ex ipsa enim creationis condicione res universae propria firmitate, veritate, bonitate propriisque legibus ac ordine instruuntur, quae homo revereri debet, propriis singularum scientiarum artiumve methodis agnitis. Ideo inquisitio methodica in omnibus disciplinis, si modo vere scientifico et iuxta normas morales procedit, numquam fidei revera adversabitur, quia res profanae et res fidei ab eodem Deo originem ducunt.¹ Immo, qui humili et constanti animo abscondita rerum perscrutari conatur, etsi inscius quasi manu Dei ducitur qui, res omnes sustinens, facit ut sint id quod sunt.

Hinc deplorare liceat quosdam animi habitus, qui aliquando inter christianos ipsos, ob non satis perspectam legitimam scientiae autonomiam, non defuerunt et, contentionebus controversiisque exinde suscitatis, plurium animos eo perduxerunt ut fidem et scientiam inter se opponi censerent.²

At si verbis rerum temporalium autonomia intelligitur res creatas a Deo non pendere, eisque hominem sic uti posse ut easdem ad Creatorem non referat, nemo qui Deum agnoscit non sentit quam falsa huiusmodi placita sint. Creatura enim sine Creatore evanescit. Ceterum, omnes credentes, cuiuscumque sint religionis, vocem et manifestationem Eius in creaturarum loquela semper audierunt. Immo, per oblivionem Dei ipsa creatura obscuratur.

advances. For these advances can supply the material for human progress, but of themselves alone they can never actually bring it about.

Hence, the norm of human activity is this: that in accord with the divine plan and will, it harmonize with the genuine good of the human race and that it allow men as individuals and as members of society to pursue their total vocation and fulfill it.

36. (The rightful autonomy of earthly affairs.) Now 4336 many of our contemporaries seem to fear that a closer bond between human activity and religion will work against the independence of men, of societies, or of the sciences.

If by the autonomy of earthly affairs we mean that created things and societies themselves enjoy their own laws and values, which must be gradually deciphered, put to use, and regulated by men, then it is entirely right to demand that autonomy. Such is not merely required by modern man, but harmonizes also with the will of the Creator. For by the very circumstance of their having been created, all things are endowed with their own stability, truth, goodness, proper laws, and order. Man must respect these as he isolates them by the appropriate methods of the individual sciences or arts. Therefore, if methodical investigation within every branch of learning is carried out in a genuinely scientific manner and in accord with moral norms, it never truly conflicts with faith, for earthly matters and the concerns of faith derive from the same God.¹ Indeed, whoever labors to penetrate the secrets of reality with a humble and steady mind, even though he is unaware of the fact, is nevertheless being led by the hand of God, who holds all things in existence and gives them their identity.

Consequently, we cannot but deplore certain habits of mind, which are sometimes found, too, among Christians, that do not sufficiently attend to the rightful independence of science and that, from the arguments and controversies they spark, lead many minds to conclude that faith and science are mutually opposed.²

But if the expression “the independence of temporal affairs” is taken to mean that created things do not depend on God and that man can use them without any reference to their Creator, anyone who acknowledges God will see how false such a meaning is. For without the Creator, the creature would disappear. For their part, however, all believers of whatever religion always hear his revealing voice in the discourse of creatures. When God is forgotten, however, the creature itself grows unintelligible.

Universam enim hominum historiam ardua colluctatio contra potestates tenebrarum pervadit, quae inde ab origine mundi incepta, usque ad ultimum diem, dicente Domino,¹ perseverabit. In hanc pugnam insertus, homo ut bono adhaereat iugiter certare debet, nec sine magnis laboribus, Dei gratia adiuvante, in seipso unitatem obtinere valet.

Quapropter Ecclesia Christi, Creatoris consilio fidens, dum agnoscit progressum humanum verae hominum felicitati inservire posse, non potest tamen quin illud Apostoli resonare faciat: “Nolite conformari huic saeculo” [Rm 12:2], illi scilicet vanitatis et malitiae spiritui qui humanam navitatem, ad servitium Dei et hominis ordinatam, in instrumentum peccati transmutat.

Si quis ergo quaerit, qua ratione miseria illa superari possit, christiani profitentur, omnes hominis navitates, quae per superbiam et inordinatum sui ipsius amorem cotidie in discrimine versantur, Christi cruce et resurrectione purificandas et ad perfectionem deducendas esse. A Christo enim redemptus et in Spiritu Sancto nova creatura effectus, homo ipsas res a Deo creatas amare potest et debet. A Deo enim illas accipit et quasi de manu Dei fluentes respicit et reveretur. Pro illis Benefactori gratias agens et in paupertate et libertate spiritus creaturis utens ac fruens, in veram mundi possessionem introducit, tamquam nihil habens et omnia possidens.² “Omnia enim vestra sunt: vos autem Christi, Christus autem Dei” [1 Cor 3:22s].

37. (Human activity corrupted by sin.) Sacred Scripture teaches the human family what the experience of the ages confirms: that while human progress is a great advantage to man, it brings with it a strong temptation. For when the order of values is jumbled and bad is mixed with the good, individuals and groups pay heed solely to their own interests and not to those of others. Thus it happens that the world ceases to be a place of true brotherhood. In our own day, the magnified power of humanity threatens to destroy the race itself.

For a monumental struggle against the powers of darkness pervades the whole history of man. The battle was joined from the very origins of the world and will continue until the last day, as the Lord has attested.¹ Caught in this conflict, man is obliged to wrestle constantly if he is to cling to what is good, nor can he achieve his own integrity without great efforts and the help of God's grace.

That is why Christ's Church, trusting in the design of the Creator, acknowledges that human progress can serve man's true happiness, yet she cannot help echoing the apostle's warning: “Be not conformed to this world” [Rom 12:2]. Here by the world is meant that spirit of vanity and malice which transforms into an instrument of sin those human energies intended for the service of God and man.

Hence, if anyone wants to know how this unhappy situation can be overcome, Christians will tell him that all human activity, constantly imperiled by man's pride and inordinate self-love, must be purified and perfected by the power of Christ's Cross and Resurrection. For redeemed by Christ and made a new creature in the Holy Spirit, man is able to love the things themselves created by God and ought to do so. He can receive them from God and respect and reverence them as flowing constantly from the hand of God. Grateful to his Benefactor for these creatures, using and enjoying them in detachment and liberty of spirit, man is led forward into a true possession of them, as having nothing, yet possessing all things.² “All are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's” [1 Cor 3:22–23].

38. (Human activity elevated to perfection in the paschal mystery.) For God's Word, through whom all things were made, was himself made flesh and dwelt on the earth of men.¹ Thus he entered the world's history as a perfect man, taking that history up into himself and recapitulating it.² He himself revealed to us that “God is love” [1 Jn 4:8] and at the same time taught us that proinde transformationis mundi, novum dilectionis esse mandatum.

Eos igitur, qui divinae credunt caritati, certos facit, viam dilectionis omnibus hominibus aperiri et conamen fraternitatem universalem instaurandi non esse inane. Simul monet, hanc caritatem non in solis magnis rebus sectandam esse, sed et imprimis in ordinariis vitae adiunctis.

Pro nobis omnibus peccatoribus mortem sustinens,³ suo exemplo nos docet crucem etiam baiulandam esse, quam caro et mundus pacem et iustitiam sectantium humeris imponunt. Sua resurrectione Dominus constitutus, Christus, cui omnis potestas in caelo et in terra data est,⁴ per virtutem Spiritus Sui in cordibus hominum iam operatur, non solum venturi saeculi desiderium suscitans, sed eo ipso illa etiam generosa vota animans, purificans et roborans, quibus familia humana suam ipsius vitam humaniorem reddere et totam terram huic fini subiicere satagit.

Diversa autem sunt Spiritus dona: dum alios vocat ut caelestis habitationis desiderio manifestum testimonium reddant illudque in humana familia vividum conservent, alios vocat ut terreno hominum servitio se dedident, hoc suo ministerio materiam regni caelestis parantes. Omnes tamen liberat ut, proprio amore abnegato omnibusque terrenis viribus in vitam humanam assumptis, ad futura se extendant, quando humanitas ipsa fiet oblatio accepta Deo.⁵

Cuius spei arrham et itineris viaticum Dominus suis reliquit in illo sacramento fidei, in quo naturae elementa, ab hominibus exulta, in Corpus et Sanguinem gloriosum convertuntur, coena communionis fraternae et caelestis convivii praelibatione.

39. (Terra nova et caelum novum.) Terrae ac humanitatis consummandae tempus ignoramus,¹ nec universi transformandi modum novimus. Transit quidem figura huius mundi per peccatum deformata,² sed docemur Deum novam habitationem novamque terram parare in qua iustitia habitat,³ et cuius beatitudo omnia pacis desideria, quae in [1057] cordibus hominum ascendunt, implebit ac superabit.⁴ Tunc, morte devicta, filii Dei in Christo resuscitabuntur, et id quod seminatum the new command of love was the basic law of human perfection and, hence, of the world's transformation.

To those, therefore, who believe in divine love, he gives assurance that the way of love lies open to men and that the effort to establish a universal brotherhood is not a hopeless one. He cautions them at the same time that this charity is not something to be reserved for important matters, but must be pursued chiefly in the ordinary circumstances of life.

Undergoing death itself for all of us sinners,³ he taught us by example that we too must shoulder that cross which the world and the flesh inflict upon those who search after peace and justice. Appointed Lord by his Resurrection and given plenary power in heaven and on earth,⁴ Christ is now at work in the hearts of men through the energy of his Holy Spirit, arousing not only a desire for the age to come, but by that very fact animating, purifying, and strengthening those noble longings, too, by which the human family makes its life more human and strives to render the whole earth submissive to this goal.

Now, the gifts of the Spirit are diverse: while he calls some to give clear witness to the desire for a heavenly home and to keep that desire alive among the human family, he summons others to dedicate themselves to the earthly service of men and to make ready the material of the celestial realm by this ministry of theirs. Yet he frees all of them so that by putting aside love of self and bringing all earthly resources into the service of human life, they can devote themselves to that future when humanity itself will become an offering accepted by God.⁵

The Lord left behind a pledge of this hope and strength for life's journey in that sacrament of faith where natural elements refined by man are gloriously changed into his Body and Blood, providing a meal of brotherly solidarity and a foretaste of the heavenly banquet.

39. (The new heaven and the new earth.) We do not know the time for the consummation of the earth and of humanity,¹ nor do we know how all things will be transformed. As deformed by sin, the shape of this world will pass away;² but we are taught that God is preparing a new dwelling place and a new earth where justice will abide³ and whose blessedness will answer and surpass all the longings for peace that spring up in the human heart.⁴ Then, with death overcome, the sons of God will

Monemur sane nihil prodesse homini, si universum mundum lucretur, seipsum autem perdat.⁸ Expectatio tamen novae terrae extenuare non debet, sed potius excitare, sollicitudinem hanc terram excolendi, ubi Corpus illud novae familiae humanae crescit quod aliqualem novi saeculi adumbrationem iam praebere valet. Ideo, licet progressus terrenus a Regni Christi augmento sedulo distinguendus sit, in quantum tamen ad societatem humanam melius ordinandam conferre potest, Regni Dei magnopere interest.⁹

Bona enim humanae dignitatis, communionis fraternae et libertatis, hos omnes scilicet bonos naturae ac industriae nostrae fructus, postquam in Spiritu Domini et iuxta Eius mandatum in terris propagaverimus, postea denuo inveniemus, mundata tamen ab omni sorde, illuminata ac transfigurata, cum Christus Patri reddet regnum aeternum et universale: “regnum veritatis et vitae, regnum sanctitatis et gratiae, regnum iustitiae, amoris et pacis”.¹⁰ His in terris Regnum iam in mysterio adest; adveniente autem Domino consummabitur.

DE MUNERE ECCLESIAE IN MUNDO HUIUS TEMPORIS

Procedens ex amore Patris aeterni,² in tempore fundata a Christo Redemptore, coadunata in Spiritu Sancto,³ Ecclesia finem salutarem et eschatologicum habet, qui nonnisi in futuro saeculo plene attingi potest. Ipsa autem iam hic in terris adest, ex hominibus collecta, terrestris be raised up in Christ, and what was sown in weakness and corruption will be invested with incorruptibility.⁵ Enduring with charity and its fruits,⁶ all that creation⁷ which God made on man’s account will be unchained from the bondage of vanity.

Therefore, while we are warned that it profits a man nothing if he gain the whole world and lose himself,⁸ the expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate our concern for cultivating this one. For here grows the body of a new human family, a body that even now is able to give some kind of foreshadowing of the new age. Hence, while earthly progress must be carefully distinguished from the growth of Christ’s kingdom, to the extent that the former can contribute to the better ordering of human society, it is of vital concern to the kingdom of God.⁹

For after we have obeyed the Lord and, in his Spirit, nurtured on earth the values of human dignity, brotherhood, and freedom, and indeed all the good fruits of our nature and enterprise, we will find them again, but freed of stain, burnished, and transfigured, when Christ hands over to the Father: “a kingdom eternal and universal, a kingdom of truth and life, of holiness and grace, of justice, love, and peace”.¹⁰ On this earth that kingdom is already present in mystery. When the Lord returns, it will be brought into full flower.

THE ROLE OF THE CHURCH IN THE MODERN WORLD

40. (The mutual relation between the Church and the world.) Everything we have said about the dignity of the human person and about the human community and the profound meaning of human activity lays the foundation for the relationship between the Church and the world and provides the basis for dialogue between them.¹ In this chapter, presupposing everything that has already been said by this council concerning the mystery of the Church, we must now consider this same Church inasmuch as she exists in the world, living and acting with it.

Coming forth from the eternal Father’s love,² founded in time by Christ the Redeemer and made one in the Holy Spirit,³ the Church has a saving and an eschatological purpose that can be fully attained only in the future world. But she is already present in this world and is composed nempe civitatis membris quae ad hoc vocantur ut iam in generis humani historia familiam filiorum Dei, usque ad adventum Domini semper augendam, efforment.

Unita quidem propter bona caelestia iisque ditata, haec familia a Christo “in hoc mundo ut societas constituta et ordinata”⁴ est, atque “aptis mediis unionis visibilis et socialis”⁵ instructa. Ita Ecclesia, insimul “coetus adspectabilis et communitas spiritualis”,⁶ una cum tota humanitate incedit eandemque cum mundo sortem terrenam experitur, ac tamquam fermentum et veluti anima societatis humanae⁷ in Christo renovandae et in familiam Dei transformandae existit.

Haec quidem terrestris et caelestis civitatis compenetratio non nisi fide percipi potest, immo mysterium manet historiae humanae, quae usque ad plenam revelationem claritatis filiorum Dei peccato perturbatur. Ecclesia quidem, proprium suum finem salutarem persequens, non solum vitam divinam cum homine communicat, sed etiam lumen eius repercussum quodammodo super universum mundum fundit, potissimum per hoc quod personae humanae dignitatem sanat et elevat, humanae societatis compaginem firmat, atque cotidianam hominum navitatem profundiori sensu et significatione imbuit. Ita Ecclesia per singula sua membra et totam suam communitatem multa se conferre posse credit ad hominum familiam eiusque historiam humaniorem reddendam. [1059] of men, that is, of members of the earthly city who have a call to form the family of God’s children during the present history of the human race and to keep increasing it until the Lord returns.

Libenter insuper Ecclesia Catholica ea magni aestimat quae ad idem munus adimplendum aliae Ecclesiae christianae vel communitates ecclesiasticae socia opera contulerunt ac conferunt. Simul sibi firmiter persuasum habet se multum varioque modo a mundo, sive a singulis hominibus sive ab humana societate, eorum dotibus ac navitate, in praeparatione Evangelii iuvari posse. Mutui huius commercii atque adiutorii, in illis quae Ecclesiae et mundo quodammodo sunt communia, rite promovendi, principia quaedam generalia exponuntur.

41. (De adiutorio quod Ecclesia singulis hominibus praestare satagit.) Homo hodiernus in via est ad personalitatem suam plenius evolvendam iuraque sua in dies magis detegenda et affirmanda. Cum autem Ecclesiae concreditum sit manifestare mysterium Dei, qui est ultimus finis hominis, ipsa homini simul aperit sensum propriae eius existentiae, intimam scilicet de homine veritatem.

United on behalf of heavenly values and enriched by them, this family has been “constituted and structured as a society in this world”⁴ by Christ and is equipped “by appropriate means for visible and social union”.⁵ Thus, the Church, at once “a visible association and a spiritual community”,⁶ goes forward together with humanity and experiences the same earthly lot that the world does. She serves as a leaven and as a kind of soul for human society⁷ as it is to be renewed in Christ and transformed into God’s family.

That the earthly and the heavenly city penetrate each other is a fact accessible to faith alone; it remains a mystery of human history, which sin will keep in great disarray until the splendor of God’s sons is fully revealed. Pursuing the saving purpose that is proper to her, the Church does not only communicate divine life to men but in some way casts the reflected light of that life over the entire earth, most of all by its healing and elevating impact on the dignity of the person, by the way in which it strengthens the seams of human society and imbues the everyday activity of men with a deeper meaning and importance. Thus through her individual members and her whole community, the Church believes she can contribute greatly toward making the family of man and its history more human.

In addition, the Catholic Church gladly holds in high esteem the things that other Christian Churches or Ecclesial Communities have done or are doing cooperatively by way of achieving the same goal. At the same time, she is convinced that she can be abundantly and variously helped by the world in the matter of preparing the ground for the gospel. This help she gains from the talents and industry of individuals and from human society as a whole. The council now sets forth certain general principles for the proper fostering of this mutual exchange and assistance in concerns that are in some way common to the world and the Church.

41. (The assistance that the Church intends to offer individuals.) Modern man is on the road to a more thorough development of his own personality and to a growing discovery and vindication of his own rights. Since it has been entrusted to the Church to reveal the mystery of God, who is the ultimate goal of man, she opens up to man at the same time the meaning of his own existence, that is, the innermost truth about himself.

Vere novit Ecclesia solum Deum, cui ipsa inservit, profundissimis respondere desideriis humani cordis, quod nutrimentis terrestribus numquam plene satiatur. Novit praeterea hominem, incessanter a Spiritu Dei incitatum, numquam circa problema religionis prorsus indifferentem fore, sicut non solum experientia saeculorum anteaetorum, sed multiplici etiam testimonio nostrorum temporum comprobatur. Semper enim homo scire desiderabit, saltem confuse, quae sit significatio suae vitae, suae navitatis ac suae mortis. Ipsa praesentia Ecclesiae haec problemata in eius mentem revocat.

Solus autem Deus, qui hominem ad imaginem suam creavit atque a peccato redemit, his quaestionibus plenissimum responsum praebet, idque per revelationem in Filio suo qui homo factus est. Quicumque Christum sequitur, Hominem perfectum, et ipse magis homo fit.

Ex hac fide Ecclesia dignitatem naturae humanae omnibus opinionum mutationibus subtrahere potest, quae, exempli gratia, corpus humanum aut nimis deprimunt aut immoderate extollunt. Nulla lege humana personalis dignitas atque libertas hominis tam apte in tuto collocari possunt quam Evangelio Christi Ecclesiae concredito. Hoc enim Evangelium libertatem filiorum Dei annuntiat et proclamat, omnem servitutem ex peccato ultimatim fluentem respuit,¹ dignitatem [1060] conscientiae eiusque liberam decisionem sancte veretur, omnia talenta humana in Dei servitium hominumque bonum reduplicare indesinenter monet, omnes denique omnium commendans caritati.²

Quod legi fundamentali oeconomiae christianae correspondet. Etsi enim idem Deus sit Salvator qui et Creator, idem quoque Dominus et historiae humanae et historiae salutis, tamen in hoc ipso ordine divino iusta creaturae autonomia et praesertim hominis nedum auferatur, potius in suam dignitatem restituitur atque in ipsa firmatur.

Ecclesia ergo, vi Evangelii sibi concrediti, iura hominum proclamat et hodierni temporis dynamismum, quo haec iura undique promoventur, agnoscit et magni aestimat. Qui motus tamen spiritu Evangelii imbuendus et adversus omnem speciem falsae autonomiae tutandus est. Tentationi enim subiicimur, iudicandi nostra iura personalia tunc tantum plene servari, cum ab omni norma Legis divinae solvimur. Hac autem via, personae humanae dignitas, nedum salvetur, potius perit.

The Church truly knows that only God, whom she serves, meets the deepest longings of the human heart, which is never fully satisfied by what this world has to offer. She also knows that man is constantly worked upon by God's Spirit and, hence, can never be altogether indifferent to the problems of religion. The experience of past ages proves this, as do numerous indications in our own times. For man will always yearn to know, at least in an obscure way, what is the meaning of his life, of his activity, of his death. The very presence of the Church recalls these problems to his mind.

But only God, who created man in his own image and ransomed him from sin, provides the most adequate answer to the questions, and this he does through what he has revealed in Christ his Son, who became man. Whoever follows after Christ, the perfect man, becomes himself more of a man.

Thanks to this belief, the Church can anchor the dignity of human nature against all tides of opinion, for example those that undervalue the human body or idolize it. By no human law can the personal dignity and liberty of man be so aptly safeguarded as by the gospel of Christ that has been entrusted to the Church. For this gospel announces and proclaims the freedom of the sons of God and repudiates all the bondage that ultimately results from sin.¹ It has a sacred reverence for the dignity of conscience and its freedom of choice, constantly advises that all human talents be employed in God's service and men's, and, finally, commends all to the charity of all.²

This agrees with the basic law of the Christian dispensation. For though the same God is Savior and Creator, Lord of human history as well as of salvation history, in the divine arrangement itself, the rightful autonomy of the creature, and particularly of man, is not withdrawn, but is rather reestablished in its own dignity and strengthened in it.

The Church, therefore, by virtue of the gospel committed to her, proclaims the rights of man; she acknowledges and greatly esteems the dynamic movements of today by which these rights are everywhere fostered. Yet these movements must be penetrated by the spirit of the gospel and protected against any kind of false autonomy. For we are tempted to think that our personal rights are fully ensured only when we are exempt from every requirement of divine law. But this way lies, not the maintenance of the dignity of the human person, but its annihilation.

Missio quidem propria, quam Christus Ecclesiae suae concredidit, non est ordinis politici, oeconomici vel socialis: finis enim quem ei praefixit ordinis religiosi² est. At sane ex hac ipsa missione religiosa munus, lux et vires fluunt quae communitati hominum secundum Legem divinam constituendae et firmandae inservire possunt. Item, ubi opus fuerit, secundum temporum et locorum circumstantias, et ipsa suscitare potest, immo et debet, opera in servitium omnium, praesertim vero egentium destinata, uti opera misericordiae vel alia huiusmodi. [1061]

Ecclesia insuper agnoscit quidquid boni in dynamismo sociali hodierno invenitur: praesertim evolutionem versus unitatem, processum sanae socializationis et consociationis civilis et oeconomicae. Promotio enim unitatis cum intima Ecclesiae missione cohaeret, cum ipsa sit “in Christo veluti sacramentum seu signum et instrumentum intimae cum Deo unionis totiusque generis humani unitatis”.³

Ita ipsa mundo ostendit veram unionem sociale externam ex unione mentium et cordium fluere, ex illa scilicet fide et caritate, quibus in Spiritu Sancto eius unitas indissolubiliter condita est. Vis enim, quam Ecclesia hodiernae hominum societati iniicere valet, in illa fide et caritate, ad effectum vitae adductis, consistit, non autem in dominio aliquo externo mediis mere humanis exercendo.

Cum insuper vi suae missionis et naturae ad nullam alligetur particularem culturae humanae formam aut systema politicum, oeconomicum vel sociale, Ecclesia ex hac sua universalitate ligamen arctissimum inter diversas hominum communitates et nationes existere potest, dummodo ipsae ei fidant eiusque veram libertatem ad hanc suam missionem adimplendam reapse agnoscant. Qua de causa Ecclesia filios suos, sed etiam omnes homines monet, ut in hoc familiari spiritu filiorum Dei, omnes dissensiones inter nationes et stirpes superent et iustis associationibus humanis internam firmitatem praebeant.

Quaecumque igitur vera, bona, iustaque inveniuntur in diversissimis institutionibus, quae genus humanum sibi fortified and fulfilled by the unity, founded on Christ,¹ of the family of God’s sons.

Christ, to be sure, gave his Church no proper mission in the political, economic, or social order. The purpose he set before her is a religious one.² But out of this religious mission itself come a function, a light, and an energy that can serve to structure and consolidate the human community according to the divine law. As a matter of fact, when circumstances of time and place produce the need, she can and, indeed, should initiate activities on behalf of all men, especially those designed for the needy, such as the works of mercy and similar undertakings.

The Church recognizes that worthy elements are found in today’s social movements, especially an evolution toward unity, a process of wholesome socialization and of association in civic and economic realms. The promotion of unity belongs to the innermost nature of the Church, for she is, “thanks to her relationship with Christ, a sacramental sign and an instrument of intimate union with God and of the unity of the whole human race”.³

Thus she shows the world that an authentic union, social and external, results from a union of minds and hearts, namely, from that faith and charity by which her own unity is unbreakably rooted in the Holy Spirit. For the force that the Church can inject into the modern society of man consists in that faith and charity put into vital practice, not in any external dominion exercised by merely human means.

Moreover, since in virtue of her mission and nature she is bound to no particular form of human culture or to any political, economic, or social system, the Church by her very universality can be a very close bond between diverse human communities and nations, provided these trust her and truly acknowledge her right to true freedom in fulfilling her mission. For this reason, the Church admonishes her own sons, but also humanity as a whole, to overcome all strife between nations and races in this family spirit of God’s children and, in the same way, to give internal strength to human associations that are just.

With great respect, therefore, this council regards all the true, good, and just elements inherent in the very wide

Pius XII, address to the International Union of Institutes of Archeology, History, and History of Art in Rome, March 9, 1956: “Her divine founder, Jesus Christ, did not give the Church any mandate or fixed objective in the cultural order. The end Christ assigns her is strictly religious. . . . The Church must lead men to God so they may unreservedly devote themselves to him. . . . The Church can never lose sight of this strictly religious, supernatural purpose. The meaning of all her activities, even to the final canon of her Code, can only converge, directly or indirectly, with this end” (Son divin fondateur, Jésus-Christ, ne lui a donné aucun mandat ni fixé aucune fin d’ordre culturel. condidit incessanterque condit, eadem Concilium magna cum reverentia considerat. Declarat insuper Ecclesiam omnes tales institutiones adiuvere et promovere velle, quatenus hoc ab ea dependet et cum eius missione coniungi potest. Ipsa nihil ardentius desiderat quam ut omnium bono inserviens, se libere sub quovis regimine evolvere possit, quod iura fundamentalia personae ac familiae et boni communis necessitates agnoscat.

At non minus errant qui, e contrario, opinentur se ita seipsos negotiis terrestribus immergere posse, quasi ista omnino aliena sint a vita religiosa, quippe quia ipsam in solius cultus actibus et officiis quibusdam moralibus implendis consistere arbitrentur.

Discidium illud inter fidem quam profitentur et vitam quotidianam multorum, inter graviore nostris temporis errores recensendum est. Scandalum hoc iam in Vetere Testamento Prophetarum vehementer redarguebant³ et multo magis in Novo Testamento ipse Iesus Christus gravibus poenis minabatur.⁴

Ne igitur perperam inter se opponantur activitates professionales et sociales ex una parte, vita religiosa ex altera. Christianus, officia sua temporalia negligens, officia sua erga proximum, immo et ipsum Deum negligit suamque aeternam salutem in discrimen adducit. Gaudeant potius christiani, exemplum Christi secuti, qui fabrilem artem exercuit, se omnes suas navitates terrestres exercere posse, conatus humanos, domesticos, professionales, scientificos vel technicos in unam synthesim vitalem cum bonis religionis colligendo, sub quorum altissima ordinatione omnia in Dei gloriam coordinantur.

Laicis proprie, etsi non exclusive, saecularia officia et navitates competunt. Cum igitur, sive singuli sive consociati, ut cives mundi agunt, non solum leges proprias uniuscuiusque disciplinae servabunt, sed veram peritiam variety of institutions that the human race has established for itself and constantly continues to establish. The council affirms, moreover, that the Church is willing to assist and promote all these institutions to the extent that such a service depends on her and can be associated with her mission. She has no fiercer desire than that in pursuit of the welfare of all she may be able to develop herself freely under any kind of government that grants recognition to the basic rights of person and family, to the demands of the common good, and to the free exercise of her own mission.

43. (The assistance that the Church intends to offer to human activity through her Christian members.) This council exhorts Christians, as citizens of two cities, to strive to discharge their earthly duties conscientiously and in response to the gospel spirit. They are mistaken who, knowing that we have here no abiding city but seek one that is to come,¹ think that they may therefore shirk their earthly responsibilities. For they are forgetting that by the faith itself they are more obliged than ever to measure up to these duties, each according to his proper vocation.²

Nor, on the contrary, are they any less wide of the mark who think that religion consists in acts of worship alone and in the discharge of certain moral obligations and who imagine they can plunge themselves into earthly affairs in such a way as to imply that these are altogether divorced from the religious life.

This split between the faith that many profess and their daily lives deserves to be counted among the more serious errors of our age. Long since, the prophets of the Old Testament fought vehemently against this scandal,³ and even more so did Jesus Christ himself in the New Testament threaten it with grave punishments.⁴

Therefore, let there be no false opposition between professional and social activities, on the one part, and religious life, on the other. The Christian who neglects his temporal duties neglects his duties toward his neighbor and even God and jeopardizes his eternal salvation. Christians should rather rejoice that, following the example of Christ, who worked as an artisan, they are free to give proper exercise to all their earthly activities and to their humane, domestic, professional, social, and technical enterprises by gathering them into one vital synthesis with religious values, under whose supreme direction all things are harmonized unto God's glory.

Secular duties and activities belong properly although not exclusively to laymen. Therefore acting as citizens in the world, whether individually or socially, they will keep the laws proper to each discipline and labor to equip in illis campis sibi comparare studebunt. Libenter cum hominibus eosdem fines prosequentibus cooperabuntur. Agnoscentes exigentias fidei eiusque virtute praediti, incunctanter, ubi oportet, nova incepta excogitent atque ad effectum deducant. Ad ipsorum conscientiam iam apte formatam spectat, ut lex divina in civitatis terrenae vita inscribatur.

A sacerdotibus vero laici lucem ac vim spiritualem exspectent. Neque tamen ipsi censeant pastores suos semper adeo peritos esse ut, in omni quaestione exurgente, etiam gravi, solutionem [1063] concretam in promptu habere queant, aut illos ad hoc missos esse: ipsi potius, sapientia christiana illustrati et ad doctrinam Magisterii observanter attendentes,⁵ partes suas proprias assumant.

Pluries ipsa visio christiana rerum eos ad aliquam determinatam solutionem in quibusdam rerum adiunctis inclinabit. Alii tamen fideles, non minore sinceritate ducti, ut saepius et quidem legitime accidit, aliter de eadem re iudicabunt. Quodsi solutiones hinc inde propositae, etiam praeter partium intentionem, a multis facile connectantur cum nuntio evangelico, meminerint oportet nemini licere in praefatis casibus pro sua sententia auctoritatem Ecclesiae sibi exclusive vindicare. Semper autem colloquio sincero se invicem illuminare satagent, mutuam caritatem servantes et boni communis imprimis solliciti.

Laici vero, qui in tota vita Ecclesiae actuosas partes gerendas habent, non solum mundum spiritu christiano imbuere tenentur, sed etiam ad hoc vocantur ut in omnibus, in media quidem humana consortione, Christi sint testes.

Episcopi vero, quibus munus moderandi Ecclesiam Dei commissum est, cum presbyteris suis nuntium Christi ita praedicent, ut omnes fidelium terrestres activitates Evangelii luce perfundantur.

Insuper pastores omnes memores sint se sua cotidiana conversatione et sollicitudine⁶ mundo faciem Ecclesiae exhibere, ex qua homines vim et veritatem nuntii christiani iudicant. Vita et verbo, una cum religiosis atque suis fidelibus, demonstrent Ecclesiam sola sua praesentia, cum omnibus quae continet donis, inexhaustum fontem esse illarum virtutum, quibus mundus hodiernus maxime indiget. Studiis assiduis se ita aptos reddant, ut in dialogo cum mundo et hominibus cuiuscumque opinionis instituendo partes suas agere possint.

Imprimis vero in corde verba huius Concilii habeant: "Quia genus humanum hodie magis magisque in themselves with a genuine expertise in their various fields. They will gladly work with men seeking the same goals. Acknowledging the demands of faith and endowed with its force, they will unhesitatingly devise new enterprises, where they are appropriate, and put them into action. Laymen should also know that it is generally the function of their well-formed Christian conscience to see that the divine law is inscribed in the life of the earthly city.

From priests they may look for spiritual light and nourishment. Let the layman not imagine that his pastors are always such experts that to every problem that arises, however complicated, they can readily give him a concrete solution, or even that such is their mission. Rather, enlightened by Christian wisdom and giving close attention to the teaching authority of the Church,⁵ let the layman take on his own distinctive role.

Often enough the Christian view of things will itself suggest some specific solution in certain circumstances. Yet it happens rather frequently, and legitimately so, that with equal sincerity some of the faithful will disagree with others on a given matter. Even against the intentions of their proponents, however, solutions proposed on one side or another may be easily confused by many people with the gospel message. Hence it is necessary for people to remember that no one is allowed in the aforementioned situations to appropriate the Church's authority for his opinion. They should always try to enlighten one another through honest discussion, preserving mutual charity and caring above all for the common good.

Since they have an active role to play in the whole life of the Church, laymen are not only bound to penetrate the world with a Christian spirit, but are also called to be witnesses to Christ in all things in the midst of human society.

Bishops, to whom is assigned the task of ruling the Church of God, should, together with their priests, so preach the news of Christ that all the earthly activities of the faithful will be bathed in the light of the gospel.

All pastors should remember, too, that by their daily conduct and concern⁶ they are revealing the face of the Church to the world, and men will judge the power and truth of the Christian message thereby. By their lives and speech, in union with religious and their faithful, may they demonstrate that even now the Church, by her presence alone and by all the gifts she contains, is an inexhaustible fountain of those virtues that the modern world needs the most. By unremitting study they should fit themselves to do their part in establishing dialogue with the world and with men of all shades of opinion.

Above all let them take to heart the words that this council has spoken: "Since humanity today increasingly unitatem civilem, oeconomicam et socialem coalescit, eo magis oportet ut Sacerdotes, coniuncta cura et ope sub ductu Episcoporum et Summi Pontificis, omnem rationem dispersionis elidant, ut in unitatem familiae Dei totum genus humanum adducatur.”⁷ [1064]

Quamvis Ecclesia ex virtute Spiritus Sancti fidelis sponsa Domini sui manserit et numquam cessaverit esse signum salutis in mundo, ipsa tamen minime ignorat inter membra sua,⁸ sive clericos sive laicos, decurrente multorum saeculorum serie, non defuisse qui Spiritui Dei infideles exstiterint. Etiam hac nostra aetate Ecclesiam non fugit, quantum inter se distent nuntius a se prolatus et humana debilitas eorum quibus Evangelium conceditur.

Quidquid de istis defectibus historia iudicet, eorum conscii esse debemus eosdemque strenue impugnare, ne Evangelio diffundendo detrimentum afferant. Pariter novit Ecclesia quantopere ipsa, in sua cum mundo relatione excolenda, ex saeculorum experientia iugiter maturescere debeat. A Spiritu Sancto ducta [AAS: ducto], Ecclesia Mater indesinenter filios suos “ad purificationem et renovationem exhortatur, ut signum Christi super faciem Ecclesiae clarius effluat”.⁹

Praeteritorum saeculorum experientia, scientiarum profectus, thesauri in variis culturae humanae formis absconditi, quibus ipsius hominis natura plenius manifestatur novaeque viae ad veritatem aperiuntur, Ecclesiae quoque prosunt. Ipsa enim, inde ab initio suae historiae, nuntium Christi, ope conceptuum et linguarum diversorum populorum exprimere didicit, eumdemque sapientia insuper philosophorum illustrare conata est: in hunc finem nempe ut Evangelium tum omnium captivum sapientium exigentibus, in quantum par erat, aptaret.

Quae quidem verbi revelati accommodata praedicatio lex omnis evangelizationis permanere debet. Ita enim in omni natione facultas nuntium Christi suo modo exprimendi excitatur simulque vivum commercium inter Ecclesiam et diversas populorum culturas promovetur.¹ Ad tale [1065] commercium augendum Ecclesia, imprimis nostris temporibus, in quibus res celerrime mutantur et moves toward civil, economic, and social unity, it is more than ever necessary that priests, with joint concern and energy, and under the guidance of the bishops and the supreme pontiff, erase every cause of division, so that the whole human race may be led to the unity of God’s family.”⁷

Although by the power of the Holy Spirit the Church will remain the faithful spouse of her Lord and will never cease to be the sign of salvation on earth, still she is very well aware that among her members,⁸ both clerical and lay, some have been unfaithful to the Spirit of God during the course of many centuries; in the present age, too, it does not escape the Church how great a distance lies between the message she offers and the human failings of those to whom the gospel is entrusted.

Whatever be the judgment of history on these defects, we ought to be conscious of them and struggle against them energetically, lest they inflict harm on the spread of the gospel. The Church also realizes that in working out her relationship with the world she always has great need of the ripening that comes with the experience of the centuries. Led by the Holy Spirit, Mother Church unceasingly exhorts her sons “to purify and renew themselves so that the sign of Christ can shine more brightly on the face of the Church”.⁹

44. (The assistance that the Church receives from the world today.) Just as it is in the world’s interest to acknowledge the Church as a historical reality and to recognize her good influence, so the Church herself knows how richly she has profited by the history and development of humanity.

The experience of past ages, the progress of the sciences, and the treasures hidden in the various forms of human culture, by all of which the nature of man himself is more clearly revealed and new roads to truth are opened, profit the Church, too. For, from the beginning of her history she has learned to express the message of Christ with the help of the ideas and terminology of various peoples and has tried to clarify it with the wisdom of philosophers, too. Her purpose has been to adapt the gospel to the grasp of all as well as to the needs of the learned, insofar as such was appropriate.

Indeed, this accommodated preaching of the revealed Word ought to remain the law of all evangelization. For thus the ability to express Christ’s message in its own way is developed in each nation, and at the same time there is fostered a living exchange between the Church and the diverse cultures of people.¹ To promote such exchange, especially in our days, the Church requires the cogitandi modi valde variantur, peculiariter eorum auxilio indiget qui, viventes in mundo, varias institutiones et disciplinas callent earumque intimam mentem intelligunt, sive de credentibus sive de non credentibus agatur.

Totius Populi Dei est, praesertim pastorum et theologorum, adiuvante Spiritu Sancto, varias loquelas nostri temporis auscultare, discernere et interpretari easque sub lumine verbi divini diiudicare, ut revelata Veritas semper penitus percipi, melius intelligi aptiusque proponi possit.

Ecclesia, cum visibilem structuram socialem habeat, signum quidem suae unitatis in Christo, etiam evolutione vitae socialis humanae ditari potest et ditatur, non quasi aliquid in constitutione a Christo sibi data deesset, sed ad eandem profundius cognoscendam, melius exprimendam atque temporibus nostris feliciter accommodandam.

Ipsa grato animo percipit se, in sua communitate non minus quam in singulis suis filiis, varium adiutorium ab hominibus cuiusvis gradus vel condicionis accipere. Quicumque enim communitatem humanam in ordine familiae, culturae, vitae oeconomicae et socialis, necnon politicae tam nationalis quam internationalis, promovent, secundum consilium Dei communitati quoque ecclesiali, in quantum haec ab externis dependet, adiutorium non parvum afferunt. Immo Ecclesia, ex ipsa oppositione eorum qui ei adversantur vel eam persequuntur, se multum profecisse et proficere posse fatetur.²

45. (De Christo, alpha et omega.) Ecclesia, dum ipsa mundum adiuvat et ab eo multa accipit, ad hoc unum tendit ut Regnum Dei adveniat et totius humani generis salus instauretur.

Omne vero bonum, quod Populus Dei in suae peregrinationis terrestris tempore hominum familiae praebere potest, ex hoc profluit quod Ecclesia est “universale salutis [1066] sacramentum”,¹ mysterium amoris Dei erga hominem manifestans simul et operans.

Verbum enim Dei, per quod omnia facta sunt, Ipsum caro factum est, ita ut, perfectus Homo, omnes salvaret et universa recapitularet. Dominus finis est humanae historiae, punctum in quod historiae et civilizationis desideria vergunt, humani generis centrum, omnium cordium gaudium eorumque appetitionum plenitudo.² Ille special help of those who live in the world, are versed in different institutions and specialties, and grasp their innermost significance in the eyes of both believers and unbelievers.

With the help of the Holy Spirit, it is the task of the entire people of God, especially pastors and theologians, to hear, distinguish, and interpret the many voices of our age and to judge them in the light of the divine Word, so that revealed truth can always be more deeply penetrated, better understood, and set forth to greater advantage.

Since the Church has a visible and social structure as a sign of her unity in Christ, she can and ought to be enriched by the development of human social life, not that there is any lack in the constitution given her by Christ, but so that she can understand it more penetratingly, express it better, and adjust it more successfully to our times.

Moreover, she gratefully understands that in her community life no less than in her individual sons, she receives a variety of helps from men of every rank and condition, for whoever promotes the human community at the family level, culturally, in its economic, social, and political dimensions, both nationally and internationally, such a one, according to God’s design, is contributing greatly to the Church as well, to the extent that she depends on things outside herself. Indeed, the Church admits that she has greatly profited and still profits from the antagonism of those who oppose or who persecute her.²

45. (Christ, the Alpha and the Omega.) While helping the world and receiving many benefits from it, the Church has a single intention: that God’s kingdom may come and that the salvation of the whole human race may come to pass. 4345

For every benefit that the people of God during its earthly pilgrimage can offer to the human family stems from the fact that the Church is “the universal sacrament of salvation”,¹ simultaneously manifesting and actualizing the mystery of God’s love.

For God’s Word, by whom all things were made, was himself made flesh so that as perfect man he might save all men and sum up all things in himself. The Lord is the goal of human history, the focal point of the longings of history and of civilization, the center of the human race, the joy of every heart, and the answer to all its yearnings.²

4350–4359: 123rd General Congregation, November 16, 1964: “Notifications” and “Preliminary Note of Explanation”

In the council hall and in the consultation regarding the modi of Lumen gentium’s chapter 3 (nos. 18–29; cf. *4142–4155), differences of opinion emerged regarding the collegiality of the bishops and the dogmatic obligation of the distinct conciliar decrees. In order to facilitate the broadest possible approval in the final vote, the Theological Commission decided to provide beforehand a summary of their individual responses by means of a “preliminary note of explanation” (Nota explicativa praevia). Paul VI adopted this request as his own (cf. *4352). The secretary general of the council had the reading of the Nota preceded by Notificationes that specified the dogmatic obligation of the conciliar documents. At the suggestion of Paul VI, these two texts were added to the Acta of the council. Cf. also the Notificatio of the secretary general of the council of November 15, 1965 (171st General Congregation: AAS 58 [1966]: 836).

Notifications Given by the Secretary General of the Council at the 123rd General Congregation, November 16, 1964

4350 Quaesitum est quaenam esse debeat qualificatio theologica doctrinae, quae in Schemate de Ecclesia exponitur et suffragationi subicitur.

Commissio Doctrinalis quaesito responsonem dedit, in expendendis Modis spectantibus ad caput tertium Schematis de Ecclesia, hisce verbis:

“Ut de se patet, textus Concilii semper secundum regulas generales, ab omnibus cognitatas, interpretandus est.”

A question has arisen regarding the precise theological note that should be attached to the doctrine that is set forth in the schema De Ecclesia and is being put to a vote.

The Theological Commission has given the following response regarding the modi that have to do with chapter 3 of the De Ecclesia schema:

“As is self-evident, the council’s text must always be interpreted in accordance with the general rules that are known to all.”

4351 Qua occasione Commissio Doctrinalis remittit ad suam Declarationem 6 martii 1964, cuius textum hic transcribimus:

“Ratione habita moris conciliaris ac praesentis Concilii finis pastoralis, haec S. Synodus ea tantum de rebus fidei vel morum ab Ecclesia tenenda definit, quae ut talia aperte ipsa declaraverit.

Cetera autem, quae S. Synodus proponit, utpote Supremi Ecclesiae Magisterii doctrinam, omnes ac singuli christifideles excipere et amplecti debent iuxta ipsius S. Synodi mentem, quae sive ex subiecta materia sive ex dicendi ratione innotescit, secundum normas theologicae interpretationis.”

On this occasion the Theological Commission makes reference to its declaration of March 6, 1964, the text of which we transcribe here:

“Taking conciliar custom into consideration and also the pastoral purpose of the present council, the sacred council defines as binding on the Church only those things in matters of faith and morals that it shall openly declare to be binding.

“The rest of the things that the sacred council sets forth, inasmuch as they are the teaching of the Church’s supreme Magisterium, ought to be accepted and embraced by each and every one of Christ’s faithful according to the mind of the sacred council. The mind of the council becomes known either from the matter treated or from its manner of speaking, in accordance with the norms of theological interpretation.”

Superiore dein Auctoritate communicatur Patribus nota explicativa praevia ad Modos circa caput tertium Schematis de Ecclesia, ad cuius notae mentem atque sententiam explicari et intelligi debet doctrina in eodem capite tertio exposita.

Nota explicativa praevia

"Commissio statuit expansioni Modorum sequentes observationes generales praemittere.

1. Collegium non intelligitur sensu strictae iuridico, scilicet de coetu aequalium, qui potestatem suam praesidi suo demandarent, sed de coetu [73] stabili, cuius structura et auctoritas ex Revelatione deduci debent. Quapropter in Responsione ad Modum 12 explicite de Duodecim dicitur quod Dominus eos constituit 'ad modum collegii seu coetus stabilis'. Cf. etiam Modum 53.c.—Ob eandem rationem, de Collegio Episcoporum passim etiam adhibentur vocabula Ordo vel Corpus. Parallelismus inter Petrum ceterosque Apostolos ex una parte, et Summum Pontificem et Episcopos ex altera parte, non implicat transmissionem potestatis extraordinariae Apostolorum ad successores eorum, neque, uti patet, aequalitatem inter Caput et membra Collegii, sed solam proportionalitatem inter primam relationem (Petrus—Apostoli) et alteram (Papa—Episcopi). Unde Commissio statuit scribere in n. 22 non eadem sed pari ratione. Cf. Modum 57.

2. Aliquis fit membrum Collegii vi consecrationis episcopalis et communione hierarchica cum Collegii Capite atque membris. Cf. n. 22, § 1 in fine.

In consecratione datur ontologica participatio sacrorum munerum, ut indubie constat ex Traditione, etiam liturgica. Consulto adhibetur vocabulum munerum, non vero potestatum, quia haec ultima vox de potestate ad actum expedita intelligi posset. Ut vero talis expedita potestas habeatur, accedere debet canonica seu iuridica determinatio per auctoritatem hierarchicam. Quae determinatio potestatis consistere potest in concessione particularis officii vel in assignatione subditorum, ex datur iuxta normas a suprema auctoritate adprobatas. Huiusmodi ulterior norma ex natura rei requiritur, quia agitur de muneribus quae a pluribus subiectis, hierarchice ex voluntate Christi cooperantibus, exerceri debent. Evidens est quod haec "communio" in vita Ecclesiae, secundum adiuncta temporum, applicata est, priusquam in iure velut codificata fuerit.

A preliminary note of explanation is being given to the council Fathers from higher authority regarding the modi bearing on chapter 3 of the schema De Ecclesia; the doctrine set forth in chapter 3 ought to be explained and understood in accordance with the meaning and intent of this explanatory note. 4352

Preliminary Note of Explanation

The commission has decided to preface the assessment of the modi with the following general observations. 4353

1. College is not understood in a strictly juridical sense, that is, as a group of equals who entrust their power to their president, but as a stable group whose structure and authority must be learned from revelation. For this reason, in reply to modus 12, it is expressly said of the Twelve that the Lord set them up "as a college or stable group". Cf. also modus 53c. —For the same reason, the words Ordo or Corpus are used throughout with reference to the college of bishops. The parallel between Peter and the rest of the apostles, on the one hand, and between the supreme pontiff and the bishops, on the other hand, does not imply the transmission of the apostles' extraordinary power to their successors; nor does it imply, as is obvious, equality between the head of the college and its members, but only a proportionality between the first relationship (Peter-apostles) and the second (pope-bishops). Thus the commission decided to write "pari ratione", not "eadem ratione", in no. 22. Cf. modus 57.

2. A person becomes a member of the college by virtue of episcopal consecration and by hierarchical communion with the head of the college and with its members. Cf. no. 22, end of par. 1. 4354

In his consecration a person is given an ontological participation in the sacred functions; this is absolutely clear from tradition, liturgical tradition included. The word functions is used deliberately instead of the word powers because the latter word could be understood as a power fully ready to act. But for this power to be fully ready to act, there must be a further canonical or juridical determination through the hierarchical authority. This determination of power can consist in the granting of a particular office or in the allotment of subjects, and it is done according to the norms approved by the supreme authority. An additional norm of this sort is required by the very nature of the case, because it involves functions that must be exercised by many subjects cooperating in a hierarchical manner in accordance with Christ's will. It is evident that this "communio" was applied in the Church's life according to the circumstances of the time, before it was codified as law.

4356 3. Collegium, quod sine Capite non datur, dicitur: ‘subiectum quoque supremae ac plenae potestatis in universam Ecclesiam existere’. Quod necessario admittendum est, ne plenitudo potestatis Romani Pontificis in discrimen poneretur. Collegium enim necessario et semper Caput suum cointelligit, quod in Collegio integrum servat suum munus Vicarii Christi et Pastoris Ecclesiae universalis. A. v. distinctio non est inter Romanum Pontificem et Episcopos collectivam sumptos, sed inter Romanum Pontificem seorsim et Romanum Pontificem simul cum Episcopis. Quia vero Summus Pontifex est Caput Collegii, ipse solus quosdam actus facere potest, qui Episcopis nullo modo competunt, v. gr. Collegium convocare et dirigere, normas actionis approbare, etc. Cf. Modum 81. Ad iudicium Summi Pontificis, cui cura totius gregis Christi commissa est, spectat, secundum necessitates Ecclesiae decursu temporum variantes, determinare modum quo haec cura actuari conveniat, sive modo personali, sive modo collegiali. Romanus Pontifex ad collegiale exercitium ordinandum, promovendum, approbandum, intuitu boni Ecclesiae, secundum propriam discretionem procedit.

4357 4. Summus Pontifex, utpote Pastor Supremus Ecclesiae, suam potestatem omni tempore ad placitum exercere potest, sicut ab ipso suo munere requiritur. Collegium vero, licet semper existat, non propterea permanentem actionem strictae collegiali agit, sicut ex Traditione Ecclesiae constat. A. v. non semper est ‘in actu pleno’, immo nonnisi per intervalla actu strictae collegiali agit et nonnisi consentiente Capite. Dicitur autem ‘consentiente Capite’, ne cogitetur de dependentia velut ab aliquo extraneo; terminus ‘consentiens’ evocat e contra communione inter Caput et membra, et implicat necessitatem actus qui Capiti proprie competit. Res affirmatur explicita in n. 22, § 2 et explicatur ibid., in fine. Formula negativa ‘nonnisi’ omnes casus comprehendit:

For this reason it is clearly stated that hierarchical communion with the head and members of the Church is required. Communio is a notion that is held in high honor in the ancient Church (and also, today, especially in the East). However, it is understood, not as some kind of vague disposition, but as an organic reality that requires a juridical form and is animated by charity. Hence the commission, almost unanimously, decided that this wording should be used: “in hierarchical communion”. Cf. modus 40 and the statements on canonical mission (no. 24).

The documents of recent pontiffs regarding the jurisdiction of bishops must be interpreted in terms of this necessary determination of powers.

3. The college, which does not exist without the head, is said “to exist also as the subject of supreme and full power in the universal Church”. This must be admitted of necessity so that the fullness of power belonging to the Roman pontiff is not called into question. For the college, always and of necessity, includes its head, because in the college he preserves unhindered his function as Christ’s vicar and as pastor of the universal Church. In other words, it is not a distinction between the Roman pontiff and the bishops taken collectively, but a distinction between the Roman pontiff taken separately and the Roman pontiff together with the bishops. Since the supreme pontiff is head of the college, he alone is able to perform certain actions that are not at all within the competence of the bishops, e.g., convocating the college and directing it, approving norms of action, etc. Cf. modus 81. It is up to the judgment of the supreme pontiff, to whose care Christ’s whole flock has been entrusted, to determine, according to the needs of the Church as they change over the course of centuries, the way in which this care may best be exercised—whether in a personal or a collegial way. The Roman pontiff, taking account of the Church’s welfare, proceeds according to his own discretion in arranging, promoting, and approving the exercise of collegial activity.

4. As supreme pastor of the Church, the supreme pontiff can always exercise his power at will, as his very office demands. Though it is always in existence, the college is not as a result permanently engaged in strictly collegial activity; the Church’s tradition makes this clear. In other words, the college is not always “fully active”; rather, it acts as a college in the strict sense only from time to time and only with the consent of its head. The phrase “with the consent of its head” is used to avoid the idea of dependence on some kind of outsider; the term “consent” suggests rather communio between the head and the members and implies the need for an act that belongs properly to the competence of the head. This is explicitly affirmed in no. 22, par. 12, and is explained at the end of that section. The word “only” takes in all cases. It is evident from this that the norms approved by the supreme authority must always be observed. Cf. modus 84.

unde evidens est quod normae a suprema Auctoritate approbatae semper observari debent. Cf. Modum 84.

In omnibus autem apparet quod agitur de coniunctione Episcoporum cum Capite suo, numquam vero de actione Episcoporum independenter a Papa. In quo casu, deficiente actione Capitis, Episcopi agere ut Collegium nequeunt, sicut ex notione ‘Collegii’ patet. Haec hierarchica [75] communio omnium Episcoporum cum Summo Pontifice in Traditione certe solemnitas est.

N.B. Sine communione hierarchica munus sacramentale-ontologicum, quod distinguendum est ab aspectu canonico-iuridico, exerceri non potest. Commissio autem censuit non intransandum esse in quaestiones de liceitate et validitate, quae relinquuntur disceptationi theologorum, in specie quod attinet ad potestatem quae de facto apud Orientales seiunctos exercetur, et de cuius explicatione variae exstant sententiae.”

It is clear throughout that it is a question of the bishops acting in conjunction with their head, never of the bishops acting independently of the pope. In the latter instance, without the action of the head, the bishops are not able to act as a college: this is clear from the concept of “college”. This hierarchical communion of all the bishops with the supreme pontiff is certainly firmly established in tradition. 4358

N.B. Without hierarchical communion, the ontologico-sacramental function, which is to be distinguished from the juridico-canonical aspect, cannot be exercised. However, the commission has decided that it should not enter into question of liceity and validity. These questions are left to theologians to discuss—specifically the question of the power exercised de facto among the separated Eastern Churches, about which there are various explanations. 4359

4400: Instruction of the Holy Office Piam et constantem, July 5, 1963

The instruction permits the cremation of corpses especially in those regions where it is difficult to find places that satisfy the hygienic prescriptions for the establishment of burial sites or where burial conflicts with the prevailing religious sentiment (e.g., in India).

Cremation

Piam et constantem christianorum consuetudinem fidelium cadavera humandi Ecclesia semper fovere studuit sive ipsam communiendo opportunis ritibus, quibus inhumationis symbolica et religiosa significatio clarior appareret, sive etiam poenas comminando contra eos, qui tam salutarem praxim impeterent; quod praesertim praestitit Ecclesia, quoties impugnatio fiebat ex infenso animo adversus christianos mores et ecclesiasticas traditiones ab iis, qui sectario spiritu imbuti, humationi cremationem substituere conabantur in signum violentae negationis christianorum dogmatum, maxime vero mortuorum hominum resurrectionis et humanae animae immortalitatis.

Quod vero propositum, uti patet, erat quid subjective inhaerens animo cremationis fautorum, obiective autem ipsi cremationi non adhaerens; corporis enim incineratio, sicut nec animam attingit nec Dei omnipotentiam impedit a corpore restituendo, ita in se non continet illorum dogmatum obiectivam negationem.

Non ergo agitur de re intrinsece mala vel christianae religioni ex se infensa; quod semper sensit Ecclesia, quippe quae, in quibusdam adiunctis, scilicet quando certo constabat vel constat cadaverum cremationem

The constant and pious practice among Christians of burying the bodies of the faithful departed has always been the object of solicitude on the part of the Church, shown both by providing it with appropriate rites to express clearly the symbolic and religious significance of burial and by establishing penalties against those who attacked this salutary practice. The Church has so acted especially when the opposition to burial sprang from motives hostile to Christian practice and ecclesiastical traditions on the part of those who, in a sectarian spirit, were trying to establish cremation in the place of burial as a sign of violent denial of Christian dogmas, especially those of the resurrection of the dead and the immortality of the soul. 4400

It is clear that this purpose was something subjective in the minds of the persons who favored cremation and not anything pertaining objectively to cremation itself; for the incineration of the body, since it neither affects the soul nor prevents the omnipotence of God from restoring the body, does not import the objective denial of those dogmas.

Hence there is no question of something intrinsically wrong or necessarily offensive to the Christian religion; and this has always been recognized by the Church, which never opposed or now opposes cremation of corpses fieri honesto animo et gravioribus ex causis, praesertim ordinis publici, tunc incinerationi non obstat nec obstat.

Huiusmodi animi in melius mutatio et rerum adiuncta inhumationi obstantia iam frequentiora his ultimis temporibus et clariora apparent; unde crebrae porriguntur S. Sedi preces ad obtinendam disciplinae ecclesiasticae mitigationem circa cadaverum cremationem, quam constat multoties hodie promoveri, minime ex odio contra Ecclesiam vel christianos mores, sed tantum ob rationes vel hygienicas vel oeconomicas vel alius etiam generis sive publici sive privati ordinis [823].

Quas preces sancta Mater Ecclesia, spirituali quidem fidelium bono directe intenta, sed aliarum necessitatum non ignara, benigne suscipiendas censet, sequentia statuendo:

1. Curandum omnino, ut consuetudo fidelium defunctorum corpora sepeliendi sancte servetur; quapropter, opportunis instructionibus et suasionibus adhibitibus, caveant Ordinarii, ut populus christianus a cadaverum crematione absterneatur, nec recedat, nisi necessitate coactus, ab usu inhumationis....

2. Ne autem difficultates ex hodiernis rerum adiunctis exsurgentes plus aequo augeantur, et ne frequentior oriatur necessitas dispensandi a legibus in hac re vigentibus, consultius visum est, aliquatenus mitigare iuris canonici praescripta, quae cremationem tangunt, ita scilicet, ut quae statuuntur in can. 1203, § 2 (de non exsequendo mandato cremationis) et in can. 1240, § 1, 5° (de deneganda sepultura ecclesiastica iis qui mandaverint suum corpus cremationi tradi) non iam universaliter urgeantur, sed tunc tantum, quando constiterit cremationem electam, fuisse ex negatione christianorum dogmatum vel ex animo sectario vel ex odio in catholicam religionem et Ecclesiam.

3. Inde etiam sequitur, iis qui elegerint proprii cadaveris cremationem, non esse, ex hoc capite, deneganda sacramenta nec publica suffragia, nisi constet ipsos talem electionem fecisse ex supra indicatis rationibus christianae vitae adversis.

4. Ne autem pius christifidelium sensus erga ecclesiasticam traditionem detrimentum patiatur et ut Ecclesiae animus a crematione alienus clare pateat, ritus ecclesiasticae sepulturae et subsequencia suffragia numquam fieri poterunt in ipso loco cremationis, ne per modum quidem simplicis comitatus in translatione cadaveris.

under certain circumstances, that is, whenever it is certain that it is done through innocent motives and for grave reasons, especially of a public order.

In our times this mental attitude has changed for the better, and the circumstances unfavorable to burial are more frequent and more evident; consequently many petitions are being presented to the Holy See asking for some mitigation of ecclesiastical discipline regarding cremation, which in these days is often advocated, not out of enmity toward the Church or Christian morals, but only for hygienic or economic reasons or others of a public or private nature.

Holy Mother Church, directly interested as she is in the good of the faithful, yet not blind to other necessities, considers that these requests should be favorably received by decreeing the following regulations:

1. By all means care should be taken so that the custom of burying the bodies of the faithful be religiously preserved; hence Ordinaries should, by appropriate instructions and exhortations, see to it that Catholics do not practice cremation and that, except in cases of necessity, they do not abandon the practice of burial, which the Church has always kept and which she consecrates with solemn rites....

2. However, lest difficulties arising from present circumstances be unduly increased and lest the necessity of dispensing from existing laws in this matter become more frequent, it has been wisely determined to mitigate somewhat the prescriptions of canon law concerning cremation, so that the provisions of can. 1203, § 2 (not to carry out a mandate of cremation) and those of can. 1240, § 1, 5° (denying ecclesiastical burial to persons who ordered that their bodies be cremated) be henceforth binding, not universally, but only when it is certain that cremation was chosen because of the denial of Christian dogmas or because of a sectarian spirit or through hatred of the Catholic religion and the Church.

3. It follows that persons who chose to have their bodies cremated are not for that reason to be denied the sacraments or public suffrages, unless it is certain that they made that choice for the above-mentioned reasons inimical to the Christian way of life.

4. But lest the pious attachment of the faithful to ecclesiastical tradition be weakened and in order to show clearly the opposition of the Church to cremation, the ceremonies of ecclesiastical burial and the prayers that follow them must never be performed in the very place where the cremation is done or even by way of simply accompanying the transfer of the remains.

4402–4407: Instruction of the Pontifical Biblical Commission Sancta mater ecclesia, April 21, 1964

This instruction emphasizes the importance of the various stages of tradition concerning the life and teaching of Jesus and recommends to exegetes the prudent application of new scientific methods.

Ed.: AAS 56 (1964): 713–16.

The Historical Truth of the Gospels

1. ... Ut [exegeata catholicus] Evangeliorum perennem veritatem et auctoritatem in plena luce collocet, accurate normas hermeneuticæ rationalis et catholice servans, nova exegeseos adiumenta sollerter adhibebit, praesertim ea quae historica methodus universim considerata affert. Haec sedulo fontes indagat eorumque naturam et vim definit, subsidia per critice textus, critice litterariam, cognitionem linguarum sibi comparat.

Observabit interpres monitum Pii XII fel. rec, qui ei iniungit, ut “prudenter ... perquirat quid dicendi forma seu litterarum genus, ab hagiographo adhibitum, ad veram et genuinam conferat interpretationem; ac sibi persuadeat hanc officii sui partem sine magno catholice exegeseos detrimento neglegi non posse.”¹...

Denique exegeta omnia media usurpabit, quibus altius indolem testimonii Evangeliorum, vitam religiosam primarum ecclesiarum, sensum et vim traditionis apostolicæ perspicat.

Ubi casus fert, interpreti investigare licet, quae sana elementa in “methodo historiae formarum” insint, quibus ad pleniorum Evangeliorum intelligentiam rite uti possit. Circumspecte tamen se gerat, quia saepe huic methodo commixta prostant principia philosophica et theologica haud probanda, quae tum methodum, tum conclusiones in re litteraria non raro depravant.

Quidam enim huius methodi fautores praeiudicatis opinionibus rationalismi abducti, supernaturalis ordinis existentiam et Dei personalis in mundo interventum, ope revelationis proprie dictae factum, miraculorum et prophetiarum possibilitatem et existentiam agnoscere renuunt.

Alii e falsa notione fidei procedunt ac si ipsa veritatem historicam non curet, immo cum eadem componi non possit.

Alii historicam vim et indolem documentorum revelationis quasi a priori negant.

Alii denique auctoritatem Apostolorum, quatenus testes Christi sunt, eorumque munus et influxum in primaevam communitatem parvi [714] pendentes, creatricem potentiam huius communitatis extollunt. ...

2. Interpres ut de firmitate eorum quae in Evangelii traduntur, recte statuatur, sollerter ad tria tempora traditionis attendat quibus doctrina et vita Iesu ad nos pervenerunt.

Christus Dominus sibi discipulos selectos adiunxit [cf. Mk 3:14; Lc 6:13], qui eum ab initio secuti sunt [cf. Lc 1:2; Act 1:21s], eius opera viderunt verbaque audierunt

1. ... In order to put the abiding truth and authority 4402 of the Gospels in their full light, [the Catholic exegete] will accurately adhere to the norms of rational and Catholic hermeneutics. He will diligently employ the new exegetical aids, above all those that the historical method, taken in its widest sense, offers to him—a method that carefully investigates sources and defines their nature and value and makes use of such helps as textual criticism, literary criticism, and the study of languages.

The interpreter will heed the advice of Pius XII of happy memory, who enjoined him “prudently ... to examine what contribution the manner of expression or the literary genre used by the sacred writer makes to a true and genuine interpretation. And let him be convinced that this part of his task cannot be neglected without serious detriment to Catholic exegesis.”¹...

Finally, the exegete will use all the means available to probe more deeply into the nature of Gospel testimony, into the religious life of the early churches, and into the sense and the value of apostolic tradition.

As occasion warrants, the interpreter may examine 4403 what reasonable elements are contained in the “form-critical method” that can be used for a fuller understanding of the Gospels. But let him be wary, because quite inadmissible philosophical and theological principles have often come to be mixed with this method, which not uncommonly have vitiated the method itself as well as the conclusions in the literary area.

For some proponents of this method have been led astray by the prejudiced views of rationalism. They refuse to admit the existence of a supernatural order and the intervention of a personal God in the world through strict revelation and the possibility and existence of miracles and prophecies.

Others begin with a false idea of faith, as if it had nothing to do with historical truth—or rather were incompatible with it.

Others deny the historical value and nature of the documents of revelation almost a priori.

Finally, others make light of the authority of the apostles as witnesses to Christ and of their task and influence in the primitive community, extolling rather the creative power of that community. ...

2. To judge properly concerning the reliability of what 4404 is transmitted in the Gospels, the interpreter should pay diligent attention to the three stages of tradition by which the doctrine and the life of Jesus have come down to us.

Christ our Lord joined to himself chosen disciples [cf. Mk 3:14; Lk 6:13], who followed him from the beginning [cf. Lk 1:2; Acts 1:21f.], saw his deeds, heard his words, et hoc modo apti fuerunt qui eius vitae et doctrinae testes essent [cf. Lc 24:48; Io 15:27; Act 1:8; 10:39; 13:31].

Dominus, cum doctrinam ore exponebat, modos ratiocinandi et exponendi tunc temporis vulgatos sequebatur, ita ad mentem auditorum se accommodans et efficiens, ut ea quae doceret firmiter menti imprimerentur et commode a discipulis memoria tenerentur. Hi miracula aliosque Iesu vitae eventus recte tamquam facta eo fine patrata vel disposita, ut eis homines in Christum crederent et doctrinam salutis fide amplecterentur, intellexerunt.

4405 Apostoli imprimis mortem et resurrectionem Domini annuntiabant, Iesu testimonium reddentes [cf. Lc 24:44–48; Act 2:32; 3:15; 5:30–32], eiusque vitam et verba fideliter exponebant [cf. Act 10:36–41], adiunctorum, in quibus auditores versabantur, in modo praedicandi rationem habentes [cf. Act 13:16–41 cum Act 17:22–31].

Postquam Iesus a mortuis resurrexit eiusque divinitas clare perspecta est [Act 2:36; Io 20:28], tantum afuit ut fides memoriam eorum quae evererant, deleret, ut eam potius firmaret, quia fides in eis quae Iesus fecerat et docuerat [Act 2:22; 10:37–39] nitebatur. Nec propter cultum, quo discipuli exinde Iesum ut Dominum et Filium Dei venerabantur, hic in “mythicam” personam mutatus est eiusque doctrina deformata.

Non est autem cur negetur Apostolos ea quae a Domino reapse dicta et facta sunt, auditoribus ea pleniori intelligentia tradidisse, qua ipsi eventibus gloriosus Christi instructi et lumine Spiritus veritatis [Io 2:22; 12:16; cf. 11:51s; 14:26; 16:12s; 7:39] edocti fruebantur. Inde est quod sicut Iesus ipse post resurrectionem “interpretabatur [715] illis” [Lc 24:27] tum Veteris Testamenti tum sui ipsius verba [cf. Lc 24:44s; Act 1:3], ita et illi eius verba et gesta, prout auditorum necessitates postulabant, interpretati sunt.

“Ministerio verbi instantes” [Act 6:4], variis dicendi modis, cum proprio proposito et auditorum mente congruentibus utentes praedicaverunt; nam “Graecis ac barbaris, sapientibus et insipientibus” debitores erant [Rm 1:14; cf. 1 Cor 9:19–23].

Hi vero loquendi modi quibus praecones Christum annuntiaverunt, distinguendi et perpendendi sunt: catecheses, narrationes, testimonia, hymni, doxologiae, preces aliaque id genus formae litterariae in Sacra Scriptura et ab hominibus illius aetatis usurpari solitae.

and in this way were equipped to be witnesses of his life and doctrine [cf. Lk 24:48; Jn 15:27; Acts 1:8; 10:39; 13:31].

When the Lord was orally explaining his doctrine, he followed the modes of reasoning and of exposition that were in vogue at the time. He accommodated himself to the mentality of his listeners and saw to it that what he taught was firmly impressed on the mind and easily remembered by the disciples. These men understood the miracles and other events of the life of Jesus correctly, as deeds performed or designed that men might believe in Christ through them and embrace with faith the doctrine of salvation.

The apostles proclaimed above all the death and Resurrection of the Lord, as they bore witness to Jesus [cf. Lk 24:44–48; Acts 2:32; 3:15; 5:30–32]. They faithfully explained his life and words [cf. Acts 10:36–41], while taking into account the circumstances in which their listeners found themselves [cf. Acts 13:16–41 with Acts 17:22–31].

After Jesus rose from the dead and his divinity was clearly perceived [Acts 2:36; Jn 20:28], faith, far from destroying the memory of what had transpired, rather confirmed it, because their faith rested on the things that Jesus did and taught [Acts 2:22; 10:37–39]. Nor was he changed into a “mythical” person and his teaching deformed in consequence of the worship that the disciples from that time on paid Jesus as the Lord and the Son of God.

On the other hand, there is no reason to deny that the apostles passed on to their listeners what was really said and done by the Lord with that fuller understanding which they enjoyed, having been instructed by the glorious events of Christ and taught by the light of the Spirit of Truth [Jn 2:22; 12:16; cf. 11:51f.; 14:26; 16:12f.; 7:39]. So, just as Jesus himself after his Resurrection “interpreted to them” [Lk 24:27] the words of the Old Testament as well as his own [cf. Lk 24:44f.; Acts 1:3], they, too, interpreted his words and deeds according to the needs of their listeners.

“Devoting themselves to the ministry of the Word”, they preached and made use of various modes of speaking that were suited to their own purpose and the mentality of their listeners. For they were debtors “to Greeks and barbarians, to the wise and the foolish” [Rm 1:14; cf. 1 Cor 9:19–23].

But these modes of speaking with which the preachers proclaimed Christ must be distinguished and (properly) assessed: catecheses, stories, testimonies, hymns, doxologies, prayers—and other literary forms of this sort that were in Sacred Scripture and were accustomed to be used by men of that time.

Hanc instructionem primaevam, prius ore, deinde scripto traditam—nam mox evenit ut multi conarentur “ordinare narrationem rerum” [cf. Lc 1:1] quae Dominum Iesum respiciebant—auctores sacri methodo, peculiari fini quem quisque sibi proposuit congrua, ad utilitatem ecclesiarum quattuor evangeliiis consignaverunt.

Quaedam e multis traditis selegentes, quaedam in synthesim redigentes, quaedam ad statum ecclesiarum attendendo explanantes, omni ope annisi sunt, ut lectores eorum verborum de quibus eruditi erant, cognoscerent firmitatem [cf. Lc 1:4]. Hagiographi enim ex eis quae acceperunt ea potissimum selegerunt, quae variis condicionibus fidelium et fini a se intento accommodata erant, eademque eo modo narrabant qui eisdem condicionibus eidemque fini congruebat.

Cum sensus enuntiationis etiam a consecutione rerum pendeat, Evangelistae tradentes verba vel res gestas Salvatoris, hic in alio, ille in alio contextu, ea ad utilitatem lectorum explicaverunt.

Quapropter indagat exegeta quid Evangelista, dictum vel factum hoc modo narrans vel in certo contextu ponens, intenderit. Veritati narrationis enim minime officit Evangelistas dicta vel res gestas Domini diverso ordine referre¹ eiusque sententias non ad litteram, sensu tamen retento, diversimode exprimere.²... [716]...

Exegeta, nisi ad haec omnia quae ad originem et compositionem Evangeliorum spectant attenderit et quaecumque probanda recentes investigationes attulerunt, rite adhibuerit, munus suum perspicendi quid hagiographi intenderit quidque reapse dixerint, non implebit...

Multa supersunt eaque gravissima in quibus edisserendis et explanandis exegeta catholicus acumen et ingenium libere exercere potest et debet, ut ad omnium utilitatem, ad maiorem in dies doctrinae sacrae profectum, ad iudicium magisterii Ecclesiae praeparandum et ulterius fulciendum, ad Ecclesiae defensionem et honorem ex suo quisque viritim conferat.¹

on by word of mouth and then in writing—for it soon happened that many tried “to compile a narrative of the things” [cf. Lk 1:1] that concerned the Lord Jesus—was committed to writing by the sacred authors in four Gospels for the benefit of the churches, with a method suited to the particular purpose that each (author) set for himself.

From the many things handed down they selected some things, reduced others to a synthesis, (still) others they explicated as they kept in mind the situation of the churches. With every (possible) means they sought that their readers might become aware of the reliability [cf. Lk 1:4] of those words by which they had been instructed. Indeed, from what they had received, the sacred writers above all selected the things that were suited to the various situations of the faithful and to the purpose they had in mind and adapted their narration of them to the same situations and purpose.

Since the meaning of a statement also depends on the sequence, the evangelists, in passing on the words and deeds of our Savior, explained these now in one context, now in another, depending on (their) usefulness to the readers.

Consequently, let the exegete seek out the meaning intended by the evangelist in narrating a saying or a deed in a certain way or in placing it in a certain context. For the truth of the story is not at all affected by the fact that the evangelists relate the words and deeds of the Lord in a different order¹ and express his sayings not literally but differently, while preserving (their) sense.²...

Unless the exegete pays attention to all these things 4407 that pertain to the origin and composition of the Gospels and makes proper use of all the laudable achievements of recent research, he will not fulfill his task of probing into what the sacred writers intended and what they really said...

There are still many things, and of the greatest importance, in the discussion and explanation of which the Catholic exegete can and must freely exercise his skill and genius so that each may contribute his part to the advantage of all, to the continued progress of sacred doctrine, to the preparation and further support of the judgment to be exercised by the ecclesiastical Magisterium, and to the defense and honor of the Church.¹

4410–4413: Encyclical Mysterium fidei, September 3, 1965

Under the influence of phenomenology and existential philosophy toward the end of the 1950s, a discussion emerged surrounding the concept of transubstantiation. Taking part in this discussion, among others, were B. Welte, P. Schoonenberg, and E. Schillebeeckx. The encyclical does not reject the new concepts of “transsignification” and “transfinalization”. However, it maintains that these are not sufficient for an adequate explanation of the eucharistic transformation, and they must be completed by the concept of “transubstantiation” (cf. *1642, 1652).

Ed.: AAS 57 (1965): 755–66.

Errors regarding the Eucharist

4410 Compertum namque habemus inter eos, qui de hoc Sacrosancto Mysterio loquendo scribendoque disserunt, esse nonnullos qui circa Missas quae privatim celebrentur, circa dogma transubstantiationis et cultum Eucharisticum tales vulgent opiniones, quae fidelium animos perturbent inque eorum mentes non modicam de rebus fidei ingerant confusionem, quasi cuique doctrinam semel ab Ecclesia definitam in oblivionem adducere liceat aut eam ita interpretari ut genuina verborum significatio seu probata conceptuum vis extenuetur.

For We can see that some of those who are dealing with this Most Holy Mystery [of the Eucharist] in speech and writing are disseminating opinions on Masses celebrated in private or on the dogma of transubstantiation that are disturbing the minds of the faithful and causing them no small measure of confusion about matters of faith, just as if it were all right for someone to take doctrine that has already been defined by the Church and consign it to oblivion or else interpret it in such a way as to weaken the genuine meaning of the words or the recognized force of the concepts involved.

4411 Non enim fas est, ut exemplo rem confirmemus, Missam quam “communitariam” dicunt, ita extollere, ut Missis quae privatim celebrentur derogetur; aut rationi signi sacramentalis considerandae ita instare quasi symbolismus, qui nullo diffitente sanctissimae Eucharistiae certissime inest, totam exprimat et exhauriat rationem praesentiae Christi in hoc Sacramento; aut de transubstantiationis mysterio disserere quin de mirabili conversione totius substantiae panis in corpus et totius substantiae vini in sanguinem Christi, de qua loquitur Concilium Tridentinum [cf. *1642], mentio fiat, ita ut in sola “transsignificatione” et “transfinalizatione”, ut aiunt, consistant; aut denique sententiam proponere et in usum deducere secundum quam in Hostiis consecratis, quae expleta celebratione sacrificii Missae supersunt, Christus Dominus praesens non amplius sit.

To give an example of what We are talking about, it is not permissible to extol the so-called “community” Mass in such a way as to detract from Masses that are celebrated privately; or to concentrate on the notion of sacramental sign as if the symbolism—which no one will deny is certainly present in the Most Blessed Eucharist—fully expressed and exhausted the manner of Christ’s presence in this sacrament; or to discuss the mystery of transubstantiation without mentioning what the Council of Trent had to say [cf. *1642] about the marvelous conversion of the whole substance of the bread into the body and the whole substance of the wine into the blood of Christ, as if they involve nothing more than “transsignification”, or “transfinalization”, as they call it; or, finally, to propose and act upon the opinion that Christ our Lord is no longer present in the consecrated hosts that remain after the celebration of the sacrifice of the Mass has been completed.

The Substantial Presence of Christ in the Eucharist

This presence [of Christ in the sacrament of the Eucharist] is called “real”, not to exclude the idea that the others are “real” too, but rather to indicate presence par excellence, because it is substantial and through it Christ becomes present whole and entire, God and man.¹ And so it would be wrong for anyone to try to explain this manner of presence by dreaming up a so-called “pneumatic” nature of the glorious body of Christ that would be present everywhere; or for anyone to limit it to symbolism, as if this most sacred sacrament were to

consist in nothing more than an efficacious sign “of the spiritual presence of Christ and of his intimate union with the faithful, the members of his Mystical Body”.²

The Presence of Christ after the Consecration

[766] Peracta transsubstantiatione, species panis et vini novam procul dubio induunt significationem, novumque finem, cum amplius non sint communis panis et communis potus, sed signum rei sacrae signumque spiritualis alimoniae; sed ideo novam induunt significationem et novum finem, quia novam continent “realitatem”, quam merito ontologicam dicimus. Non enim sub praedictis speciebus iam latet quod prius erat, sed aliud omnino; et quidem non tantum ob fidei Ecclesiae aestimationem, sed ipsa re, cum conversa substantia seu natura panis et vini in corpus et sanguinem Christi, nihil panis et vini maneat nisi solae species; sub quibus totus et integer Christus adest in sua physica “realitate” etiam corporaliter praesens, licet non eo modo quo corpora adsunt in loco.

As a result of transubstantiation, the species of bread and wine undoubtedly take on a new signification and a new finality, for they are no longer ordinary bread and wine but instead a sign of something sacred and a sign of spiritual food; but they take on this new signification, this new finality, precisely because they contain a new “reality” that we can rightly call ontological. For what now lies beneath the aforementioned species is not what was there before, but something completely different; and not just in the estimation of Church belief, but in reality, since once the substance or nature of the bread and wine has been changed into the body and blood of Christ, nothing remains of the bread and the wine except the species—beneath which Christ, whole and entire in his physical “reality”, is even corporeally present, although not in the manner in which bodies are in a place.

Ed.: AAS 57 (1965): 878–85.

The Historical Character of the Meeting

Nous sommes porteur d’un message pour toute l’humanité. Et Nous le sommes non seulement en Notre Nom personnel et au nom de la grande famille catholique: mais aussi au nom des Frères chrétiens qui partagent les sentiments que Nous exprimons ici, et spécialement de ceux qui ont bien voulu Nous charger explicitement d’être leur interprète. Et tel le messager qui, au terme d’un long voyage, remet la lettre qui lui a été confiée: ainsi Nous avons conscience de vivre l’instant privilégié,—si bref soit-il—où s’accomplit un vœu que Nous portons dans le cœur depuis près de vingt siècles.

Oui, vous vous en souvenez. C’est depuis longtemps que sommes en route, et Nous portons avec Nous une longue histoire; Nous célébrons ici l’épilogue d’un laborieux pèlerinage à la recherche d’un colloque avec le monde entier, depuis le jour où il Nous fut commandé: “allez, portez la bonne nouvelle à toutes les nations!”. Or c’est vous qui représentez toutes les nations. . . .

Notre message veut être tout d’abord une ratification morale et solennelle de cette haute Institution. Ce message vient de Notre expérience historique. C’est comme “expert en humanité” que Nous apportons à cette

Our mission is to bring a message for all mankind. We speak not only in Our own name and in the name of the great Catholic family, but also in the name of the Christian brethren who share in the sentiments We are expressing here, and especially of those who have been kind enough to designate Us explicitly as their spokesman. This is the kind of messenger who, at the end of a long journey, is handing over the letter that has been entrusted to him. Hence We have an awareness of living through a privileged moment—brief though it be—when a wish borne in Our heart for almost twenty centuries is being accomplished.

Yes, you recall it. We have been on Our way for a long time, and We bring a long history with Us. Here We are celebrating the epilogue of a laborious pilgrimage in search of an opportunity to speak heart to heart with the whole world. It began on the day when We were commanded: “Go, bring the good news to all nations!” You are the ones who represent all nations. . . .

Our message is meant to be first of all a moral and solemn ratification of this lofty institution, and it comes from Our experience of history. It is as an “expert in humanity” that We bring to this organization the support 4422 [882] ... La paix, vous le savez, ne se construit pas seulement au moyen de la politique et de l'équilibre des forces et des intérêts. Elle se construit avec l'esprit, les idées, les œuvres de la paix. Vous travaillez à cette grande œuvre. Mais vous n'êtes encore qu'au début de vos peines. Le monde arrivera-t-il jamais à changer la mentalité particulariste et belliqueuse qui a tissé jusqu'ici une si grande partie de son histoire?

Building Peace

... As you know very well, peace is not built merely by means of politics and a balance of power and interests. It is built with the mind, with ideas, with the works of peace. You are working at this great endeavor, but you are only at the beginning of your labors. Will the world ever come to change the selfish and bellicose outlook that has spun out such a great part of its history up to now?

Il est difficile de le prévoir; mais il est facile d'affirmer qu'il faut se mettre résolument en route vers la nouvelle histoire, l'histoire pacifique, celle qui sera vraiment et pleinement humaine, celle-là même que Dieu a promise aux hommes de bonne volonté. Les voies en sont tracées devant vous: la première est celle du désarmement.

It is hard to foresee the future but easy to assert that the world has to set out resolutely on the path toward a new history, a peaceful history, one that will be truly and fully human, the one that God promised to men of goodwill. The pathways are marked out before you, and the first one is disarmament.

If you want to be brothers, let the arms fall from your hands. A person cannot love with offensive weapons in his hands. Arms, and especially the terrible arms that modern science has provided you, engender bad dreams, feed evil sentiments, create nightmares, hostilities, and dark resolutions even before they cause any victims and ruins. They call for enormous expenses. They interrupt projects of solidarity and of useful labor. They warp the outlook of nations....

4424 [884] ... Jamais comme aujourd'hui, dans une époque marquée [885] par un tel progrès humain, n'a été aussi nécessaire l'appel à la conscience morale de l'homme. Car le péril ne vient ni du progrès ni de la science, qui, bien utilisés, pourront au contraire résoudre un grand nombre des graves problèmes qui assaillent l'humanité. Le vrai péril se tient dans l'homme, qui dispose d'instruments toujours plus puissants, aptes aussi bien à la ruine qu'aux plus hautes conquêtes.

... The appeal to the moral conscience of man has never before been as necessary as it is today, in an age marked by such great human progress. For the danger comes neither from progress nor from science; if these are used well they can, on the contrary, help to solve a great number of the serious problems besetting mankind. The real danger comes from man, who has at his disposal ever more powerful instruments that are as well fitted to bring about ruin as they are to achieve lofty conquests.

4425 En un mot, l'édifice de la civilisation moderne doit se construire sur des principes spirituels, les seuls capables non seulement de le soutenir, mais aussi de l'éclairer et de l'animer. Et ces indispensables principes de sagesse supérieure ne peuvent reposer—c'est Notre conviction, vous le savez—que sur la foi en Dieu.

To put it in a word, the edifice of modern civilization has to be built on spiritual principles, for they are the only ones capable, not only of supporting it, but of shedding light on it and inspiring it. And We are convinced, as you know, that these indispensable principles of higher wisdom cannot rest on anything but faith in God.

4430–4435: Joint Declaration Pénétrés de reconnaissance of Pope Paul VI and Patriarch Athenagoras I of Constantinople, December 7, 1965

The declaration, proclaimed simultaneously in session 9 of the Second Vatican Council and at Constantinople, removes the mutual excommunication of the Eastern and Western Churches pronounced in 1054. In a letter to Athenagoras I of July 25, 1967, Paul VI expressed his hope for an early end to the separation between the two Churches (AAS 59 [1967]: 852–54).

Ed.: AAS 58 (1966): 20f.

4. C'est pourquoi le pape Paul VI et le patriarche Athénagoras I^{er} en son synode, certains d'exprimer le désir commun de justice et le [21] sentiment unanime de charité de leurs fidèles et se rappelant le précepte du Seigneur: "Quand tu présentes ton offrande à l'autel, si là tu te souviens d'un grief que ton frère a contre toi, laisse là ton offrande devant l'autel et va d'abord te réconcilier avec ton frère",¹ déclarent d'un commun accord:

a) regretter les paroles offensantes, les reproches sans fondement, et les gestes condamnables qui, de part et d'autre, ont marqué ou accompagné les tristes événements de cette époque;

b) regretter également et enlever de la mémoire et du milieu de l'Église les sentences d'excommunication qui les ont suivis, et dont le souvenir opère jusqu'à nos jours comme un obstacle au rapprochement dans la charité, et les vouer à l'oubli;

c) déplorer, enfin, les fâcheux précédents et les événements ultérieurs qui, sous l'influence de divers facteurs, parmi lesquels l'incompréhension et la méfiance mutuelles, ont finalement conduit à la rupture effective de la communion ecclésiastique.

5. Ce geste de justice et de pardon réciproque, le pape Paul VI et le patriarche Athénagoras I^{er} avec son synode sont conscients qu'il ne peut suffire à mettre fin aux différends, anciens ou plus récents, qui subsistent entre l'Église catholique romaine et l'Église orthodoxe et qui, par l'action de l'Esprit-Saint, seront surmontés grâce à la purification des cœurs, au regret des torts historiques ainsi qu'à une volonté efficace de parvenir à une intelligence et une expression commune de la foi apostolique et de ses exigences.

En accomplissant ce geste, cependant, ils espèrent qu'il sera agréé de Dieu, prompt à nous pardonner lorsque nous nous pardonnons les uns les autres, et apprécié par le monde chrétien tout entier, mais surtout par l'ensemble de l'Église catholique romaine et l'Église orthodoxe comme l'expression d'une sincère volonté réciproque de réconciliation et comme une invitation à poursuivre, dans un esprit de confiance, d'estime et de charité mutuelles, le dialogue qui les amènera, Dieu aidant, à vivre de nouveau, pour le plus grand bien des âmes et l'avènement du règne de Dieu, dans la pleine communion de foi, de concorde fraternelle et de vie sacramentelle qui exista entre elles au cours du premier millénaire de la vie de l'Église.

4440–4469: Encyclical Populorum progressio, May 26, 1967

The encyclical returns to the problem of aid to developing nations, which had already been addressed in Mater et magistra. The subject of the document is the concept of "integral development", that is, of the full human development of people. Its importance

*4430 ¹ Mt 5:23f.

4. This is why Pope Paul VI and Patriarch Athenagoras I with his synod, certain that they are expressing the common desire for justice and the unanimous sentiment of charity on the part of their faithful and remembering the command of the Lord: "If you are offering your gift at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, leave your gift before the altar and go first to be reconciled to your brother",¹ declare with one accord that:

a. They regret the offensive words, the reproaches without foundation, and the reprehensible gestures that on both sides marked or accompanied the sad events of that period;

b. They also regret and wish to erase from the memory and midst of the Church the sentences of excommunication that followed them, and whose memory has acted as an obstacle to a rapprochement in charity down to our own day, and to consign them to oblivion;

c. Finally, they deplore the troublesome precedents and the later events that, under the influence of various factors, among them lack of understanding and mutual hostility, eventually led to the effective rupture of ecclesiastical communion.

5. This reciprocal act of justice and forgiveness, as Pope Paul VI and Patriarch Athenagoras I with his synod are aware, cannot suffice to put an end to the differences, ancient or more recent, that remain between the Roman Catholic Church and the Orthodox Church and that, by the action of the Holy Spirit, will be overcome, thanks to the purification of hearts, regret for historical errors, and an effective determination to arrive at an understanding and a common expression of the apostolic faith and its demands.

In accomplishing this act, however, they hope that it will be pleasing to God, who is prompt to pardon us when we forgive one another, and recognized by the whole Christian world, but especially by the Roman Catholic Church and the Orthodox Church together, as the expression of a sincere mutual desire for reconciliation and as an invitation to pursue, in a spirit of mutual trust, esteem, and charity, the dialogue that will lead them, with the help of God, to live once again for the greater good of souls and the coming of the kingdom of God, in the full communion of faith, of brotherly concord, and of a sacramental life that existed between them throughout the first millennium of the life of the Church.

is comparable to that of the encyclicals Rerum novarum and Quadragesimo anno. Populorum progressio underlines, as does no other preceding social encyclical, the universal dimension of social questions and the connection between development and peace. The reference to the social dimension of property and a clear judgment about Manchester [unrestricted] capitalism created quite a sensation in some developing countries.

The Necessity of the Development of Peoples

Cum enim, post Concilium Oecumenicum Vaticanum II conclusum, Ecclesia clarius etiam altiusque iudicavisset et expendisset quid hac de re Christi Iesu Evangelium flagitaret, suum esse duxit hominibus magis etiam egregiam navare operam, [258] ut non modo gravissimae huius quaestionis ii momenta omnibus vestigiis indagarent, sed etiam sibi persuaderent, hac summi discriminis hora, communi omnium actione vehementer opus esse....

Ceterum populi, qui recens suis legibus suisque iudiciis uti coeperunt, quasi necessitate cupiunt ad civilem adeptam libertatem sociales et oeconomicos processus addi, homine dignos suisque viribus sibi partos, ut primum cives iusta incrementa, uti homines, capiant, ut deinde ipsi in nationum consortione debitum sibi locum consequantur.

1. The progressive development of peoples is an object of deep interest and concern to the Church. This is particularly true in the case of those peoples who are trying to escape the ravages of hunger, poverty, endemic disease, and ignorance; of those who are seeking a larger share in the benefits of civilization and a more active improvement of their human qualities; of those who are consciously striving for fuller growth.

Since the conclusion of the Second Ecumenical Vatican Council, the Church, with an even greater awareness of what the gospel of Jesus Christ demands in this area, judges it her duty to help all men explore this serious problem in all its dimensions and to impress upon them the need for concerted action at this critical juncture....

6. Today we see men trying to secure a sure food supply, cures for diseases, and steady employment. We see them trying to eliminate every ill, to remove every obstacle that offends man's dignity. They are continually striving to exercise greater personal responsibility; to do more, learn more, and have more so that they might increase their personal worth. And yet, at the same time, a large number of them live amid conditions that frustrate these legitimate desires.

Moreover, those nations that have recently gained independence find that political freedom is not enough. They must also acquire the social and economic structures and processes that accord with man's nature and activity if their citizens are to achieve personal growth and if their country is to take its rightful place in the international community.

The Growing Disparities

4442 [261] 8. ... Nisi enim machinalis, quae hodie obtinet, civium rerum ratio consilio quodam temperetur, necessario sequitur, ut populorum inaequalitates, quod ad bonorum incrementa, nedum tollantur, potius ingravescant: atque idcirco ditiores nationes festinatos habeant processus, egentiores vero populi nonnisi lente proficiant. Quae civitatum inaequalitates cotidie magis augentur, cum aliae esculentas merces copiosiores quam pro numero civium fundant, aliae vero vel iis indigne egeant, vel, quas ipsae paucas fuderint, in incerto habeant, an ad reliquas nationes exportare possint.

8. ... Unless the prevailing machinery of civilization is modified, the disparity between rich and poor nations will increase rather than diminish; the rich nations are progressing with rapid strides, while the poor nations move forward at a slow pace. The imbalance grows with each passing day: while some nations produce a food surplus, other nations are in desperate need of food or are unsure of their export market.

9. Eodem autem tempore de rebus socialibus contentiones per universum fere mundum serpsere. Atque perturbationes, quae in regionibus ad artes operosas spectantibus pauperiores civium classes circumvaserunt, etiam in regiones mearunt, quarum res oeconomicae in agrorum cultura fere unice positae sunt; ita ut ipsi ruricolae hodie “miseræ calamitosaeque fortunæ”¹ suae consci sint.

Adde eodem et illud, quod indignae illae atque invidiosae inaequalitates, de quibus loquimur, non solum ad bonorum possessionem, sed magis etiam ad imperii functionem attinent. Fit enim in quibusdam territoriis ut, dum pauci et optimates cultu mollissimo fruuntur, interea egentes ac dissipati per agros incolae “omni paene possibilitate careant” [262] “propria initiativa ac responsabilitate agendi, saepe etiam in condicionibus vitae et laboris persona humana indignis versantes”.²

9. At the same time, social unrest has gradually spread throughout the world. The acute restlessness engulfing the poorer classes in countries that are now being industrialized has spread to other regions where agriculture is the mainstay of the economy. The farmer is painfully aware of his “wretched lot”.¹

Then there are the flagrant inequalities not merely in the enjoyment of possessions, but even more in the exercise of power. In certain regions a privileged minority enjoys the refinements of life, while the rest of the inhabitants, impoverished and disunited, “are deprived of almost all possibility of acting on their own initiative and responsibility and often subsist in living and working conditions unworthy of the human person”.²

Cultural Conflicts

10. De reliquo quoniam traditus humanitatis cultus cum humano cultu pugnat novissime in artificia meritoria inducto, utique accidit, ut sociales structurae ab horum dierum necessitatibus discrepantes fere comminuantur. Quare dum adultae aetatis homines in illius humani cultus quasi provincia, saepe saepius angusta, sive singulorum sive familiarum vitam esse collocandam putant, ab eaque nunc non esse discedendum opinantur, interim iuvenes se ab eadem remouent, quam uti vanum quendam obicem iudicant, ne sitienter ad novas vitae socialis rationes progrediantur.

Ex qua quidem inter duas aetates conflictione tristis ea civibus fertur condicio, ut aut instituta et opiniones maiorum servant, et vitae socialis auctus missos faciant; aut technicorum artes excultioresque consuetudines peregre invectas amplexentur, et maiorum instituta relinquunt, humanitate uberrima. Re autem vera saepenumero videmus morales, spirituales, religiosas quorundam provectoris aetatis hominum vires difficultatibus inflecti, neque eos illud consequi, ut in novum huiusmodi mundum se insinuent.

10. Moreover, traditional culture comes into conflict with the advanced techniques of modern industrialization; social structures out of tune with today’s demands are threatened with extinction. For the older generation, the rigid structures of traditional culture are the necessary mainstay of one’s personal and family life; they cannot be abandoned. The younger generation, on the other hand, regards them as useless obstacles and rejects them to embrace new forms of societal life.

The conflict between generations leads to a tragic dilemma: either to preserve traditional beliefs and structures and reject social progress or to embrace foreign technology and foreign culture and reject ancestral traditions with their wealth of humanism. The sad fact is that we often see the older moral, spiritual, and religious values give way without finding any place in the new scheme of things.

Authentic Development

13. ... In the present day, however, individual and group effort within these countries is no longer enough. The world situation requires the concerted effort of everyone, a thorough examination of every facet of the problem—social, economic, cultural, and spiritual. The Church, which has long experience in human affairs and has no desire to be involved in the political activities of any nation, “seeks but one goal: to carry forward the work of Christ under the

14. The development we speak of here cannot be restricted to economic growth alone. To be authentic, it must be well rounded; it must foster the development of each man and of the whole man. . . .

20. If development calls for an ever-growing number of technical experts, even more necessary still is the deep thought and reflection of wise men in search of a new humanism, one that will enable our contemporaries to enjoy the higher values of love and friendship, of prayer and contemplation,¹ and thus find themselves. This is what will guarantee man’s authentic development—his transition from less than human conditions to truly human ones.

22. In the very first pages of Scripture, we read these words: “Fill the earth and subdue it.”¹ This teaches us that the whole of creation is for man, that he has been charged to give it meaning by his intelligent activity, to complete and perfect it by his own efforts and to his own advantage. Now if the earth truly was created to provide man with the necessities of life and the tools for his own progress, it follows that every man has the right to glean what he needs from the earth.

The Second Ecumenical Vatican Council reiterated this truth: “God intended the earth and everything in it for the use of all human beings and peoples. Thus, under the leadership of justice and in the company of charity, created goods should flow fairly to all.”² All other rights, whatever they may be, including the rights of property and free trade, are to be subordinated to this principle. They should in no way hinder it; in fact, they should actively facilitate its implementation. Redirecting these rights back to their original purpose must be regarded as an important and urgent social duty.

23. . . . [The Fathers of the Church, too, teach] that the right to private property is not absolute and unconditional. No one may appropriate surplus goods solely for his own private use when others lack the bare necessities of life....

licet bona, quae sibi superent, unice ad privata commoda seponere, cum alii rebus careant vitae necessariis....

24. Bonum igitur commune quandoque deiectionem de fundi possessione postulat, si forte contingat, ut fundi quidam communem impediunt prosperitatem, quia vel nimis patent, vel parum aut nihil excoluntur, vel egestatem gignunt incolis, vel civitati gravia inferunt nocumenta.

Concilium Vaticanum II dum id, missis ambagibus, declarat,¹ non minus clare docet, tum fructus inde perceptos non esse libero hominum arbitrio relinquendos, tum nimii quaestus consilia, in suam dumtaxat utilitatem capta, prohibenda esse. Quare nullo modo licet, cives redivitibus abundantes, sibi ex opibus et labore nationis suae provenientibus, magnam eorum partem apud exterarum gentes collocare, ad privatas utilitates unice spectantes, nulla suae patriae ratione habita, in quam hoc agendi modo manifestam contumeliam iaciunt.²

24. If certain landed estates impede the general prosperity because they are extensive, unused, or poorly used, or because they bring hardship to peoples or are detrimental to the interests of the country, the common good sometimes demands their expropriation. 4450

The Second Vatican Council affirms this emphatically.¹ At the same time, it clearly teaches that income thus derived is not for man's capricious use and that the exclusive pursuit of personal gain is prohibited. Consequently, it is not permissible for citizens who have garnered sizeable income from the resources and activities of their own nation to deposit a large portion of their income in foreign countries for the sake of their own private gain alone, taking no account of their country's interests; in doing this, they clearly wrong their country.²

26. However, certain concepts have somehow arisen out of these new conditions and insinuated themselves into the fabric of human society. These concepts present profit as the chief spur to economic progress, free competition as the guiding norm of economics, and private ownership of the means of production as an absolute right, having no limits or concomitant social obligations. This unbridled liberalism paves the way for a particular type of tyranny, rightly condemned by Our predecessor Pius XI, for it results in the "international imperialism of money".¹... 4451

[272] 30. Sunt sine dubio rerum condiciones quae, utpote iniustae, Dei animadversionem acerrime petant. Cum enim populi toti, necessariis ad vivendum destituti, ita sint sub aliorum ditione, ut quodvis inceptum sua sponte inire, munera cum onere suscipere, ad altiores etiam humani cultus gradus ascendere, vitam socialem et publicam participare vetentur, facile homines sollicitantur, ut humanae dignitati iniuriam allatam vi repellant.

30. The injustice of certain situations cries out for God's attention. Lacking the bare necessities of life, whole nations are under the thumb of others; they cannot act on their own initiative; they cannot exercise personal responsibility; they cannot work toward a higher degree of cultural refinement or a greater participation in social and public life. They are sorely tempted to redress these insults to their human nature by violent means. 4452

31. Est quidem res pernota, seditiones et motus—nisi agatur de tyrannide aperta ac diuturna, qua primaria iura personae humanae laedantur et bono communi alicuius civitatis grave iniungatur detrimentum—novas parere iniurias, novas ingerere inaequalitates, ad novas strages

31. Everyone knows, however, that revolutionary uprisings—except where there is manifest, longstanding tyranny that would do great damage to fundamental personal rights and dangerous harm to the common good of the country—engender new injustices, introduce new inequities, and bring new disasters. The evil situation that exists, and it surely is evil, may not be dealt with in such a way that an even worse situation results.

The Common Action of Individuals and Institutions

Publicarum vero potestatum est statuere et iniungere fines expetendos, proposita assequenda, vias quibus eo perveniatur; earum scilicet est vires omnium stimulare, ad quos communis haec actio pertinet.

Sed curent oportet, ut eiusmodi operi privatorum iungant incepta et instituta interposita. Sic enim absoluta rerum [274] communio ac temere praestituta rerum oeconomicarum dispensatio devitantur, quae, cum libertati refragentur, usum primariorum personae humanae iurium auferunt.

33. Individual initiative alone and the interplay of competition will not ensure satisfactory development. We cannot proceed to increase the wealth and power of the rich while we entrench the needy in their poverty and add to the slavery of the oppressed. Organized programs are necessary for “directing, stimulating, coordinating, supplying, and integrating”¹ the work of individuals and intermediary organizations.

It is for the public authorities to establish and lay down the desired goals, the plans to be followed, and the methods to be used in fulfilling them; and it is also their task to stimulate the efforts of those involved in this common activity.

But they must also see to it that private initiative and intermediary organizations are involved in this work. In this way they will avoid total collectivization and the dangers of a planned economy that might threaten human liberty and obstruct the exercise of man’s basic human rights.

Demographic Growth

Non est dubium quin potestates publicae, quantum ad eas pertinet, in haec se queant interponere, cives hac de re docentes et accommodata rei consilia capientes, dummodo haec praescriptis legis moralis congruant, et iusta coniugum libertas absolutissime servetur. Cum vero ius firmissimum matrimonii et procreationis demitur, actum est de humana dignitate. Est denique parentum, re plane perspecta, de numero liberorum statuere; quod munus illi in se recipiunt coram Deo, coram se ipsis, coram liberis iam genitis, coram communitate ad quam pertinent, praecepta secuti conscientiae suae, de lege divina, authentice interpretata, edoctae et fiducia Dei roboratae.¹

37. There is no denying that the accelerated rate of population growth brings many added difficulties to the problems of development where the size of the population grows more rapidly than the quantity of available resources to such a degree that things seem to have reached an impasse. In such circumstances people are inclined to apply drastic remedies to reduce the birth rate.

There is no doubt that public authorities can intervene in this matter, within the bounds of their competence. They can instruct citizens on this subject and adopt appropriate measures, so long as these are in conformity with the dictates of the moral law and the rightful freedom of married couples is preserved completely intact. When the inalienable right of marriage and of procreation is taken away, so is human dignity. Finally, it is for parents to take a thorough look at the matter and decide upon the number of their children. This is an obligation they take upon themselves, before their children already born and before the community to which they belong—following the dictates of their own consciences informed by God’s law authentically interpreted and bolstered by their trust in him.¹

Integral Humanism

41. ... [278] ... Itaque ex rebus sibi propositis populi ad progressionem nitentes probe eligant: coarguant et abiciant falsa bona, quibus optima forma vitae humanae deminuitur, accipiant vero munera egregia et utilia, quae una cum rebus praeclaris sibi propriis secundum indolem suam provehere studeant.

42. Haec est humanitatis ratio perfecta, quae promoveatur oportet;¹ numquid aliud est quam omnimodo profectui totius hominis et cunctorum hominum consulere? Humanitatis vero ratio artioribus finibus circumscripta, a bonis animi atque a Deo aliena, qui illorum est fons et origo, specie tantum potior esse potest. ...

41. ... The developing nations must choose wisely from among the things that are offered to them. They must test and reject false values that would tarnish a truly human way of life, while accepting noble and useful values in order to develop them in their own distinctive way, along with their own indigenous heritage. 4456

42. This is the full-bodied humanism that must be promoted.¹ And does this not mean the fulfillment of the whole man and of every man? A narrow humanism, closed in on itself and not open to the values of the spirit and to God who is their source and origin, could achieve only apparent success. ... 4457

Gravis sane est haec causa, cum ex ea cunctorum hominum cultus civilis, qui futuris erit temporibus, pendeat. ...

43. Development of the individual necessarily entails a joint effort for the development of the human race as a whole. ... 4458

44. This duty concerns first and foremost the wealthier nations. Their obligations stem from the human and supernatural brotherhood of man and present a threefold obligation: (1) mutual solidarity—the aid that the richer nations must give to developing nations; (2) social justice—the rectification of trade relations between strong and weak nations; (3) universal charity—the effort to build a more humane world community, where all can give and receive and where the progress of some is not bought at the expense of others. The matter is urgent, for on it depends the future of world civilization. ... 4459

47. ... It is not just a question of fighting wretched conditions, though this is an urgent and necessary task. It involves building a human community where men can live truly human lives, free from discrimination on account of race, religion, or nationality, free from servitude to other men or to natural forces they cannot yet control satisfactorily. It involves building a human community where liberty is not an idle word, where the needy Lazarus can sit down with the rich man at the same banquet table.¹ ... 4460

48. The duty of promoting human solidarity also falls upon the shoulders of nations: "It is a very important duty of the advanced nations to help the developing nations."¹ This conciliar teaching must be implemented. While it is 4461

4462 [285] 56. Omnes autem conatus, sane non mediocres, qui ad iuvandas civitates gradatim progredientes sive pecuniariis sive technicis auxiliis capiuntur, fallaces inanesque plane evadant, si ab his comparata remedia magna ex parte irrita fiant ob mutabiles negotiationum rationes, quae inter ditiores et tenuiores populos intercedant. Etenim alteri omni exspectatione et fiducia destituantur, ubi metuant, ne alteri id ab ipsis repetant, quod iam dederint....

56. Efforts are being made to help the developing nations financially and technologically. Some of these efforts are considerable. Yet all these efforts will prove to be vain and useless if their results are nullified to a large extent by the unstable trade relations between rich and poor nations. The latter will have no grounds for hope or trust if they fear that what is being given them with one hand is being taken away with the other....

58. It is evident that the principle of free trade, by itself, is no longer adequate for regulating international agreements. It certainly can work when both parties are about equal economically; in such cases it stimulates progress and rewards effort. That is why industrially developed nations see an element of justice in this principle.

Aliter tamen dicendum est, cum rerum condiciones inter nationes nimis impares fiunt: pretia enim, [286] de quibus inter negotiatores libero pacto convenit, exitus prorsus iniquos habere possunt. Fatendum quidem est, in hac rerum provincia praecipuum caput liberalismi, quem appellant, uti negotiationum normam in dubium vocari.

But the case is quite different when the nations involved are far from equal. Market prices that are freely agreed upon can turn out to be most unfair. It must be avowed openly that, in this case, the fundamental tenet of liberalism (as it is called), as the norm for market dealings, is open to serious question.

4465 [287] 61. ... Competitorum aemulatio a mercatura non est quidem pellenda, sed iis continenda modis, quibus reapse iusta et honesta, atque adeo homine digna efficiatur. In negotiationibus autem exercendis inter oeconomicas procuraciones ditiores et procuraciones egentiores, rerum condiciones nimis dissimiles, atque agendi facultates nimis dispares sunt. Iustitiae ratio, ut sit homine digna et honesta, postulat, ut in commerciis, quae inter varias mundi nationes exercentur, competitoribus aliqua saltem emendi ac vendendi aequa et par condicio tribuatur....

61. ... Indeed, competition should not be eliminated from trade transactions; but it must be kept within limits so that it operates justly and fairly and thus becomes a truly human endeavor. Now in trade relations between the developing and the highly developed economies there is a great disparity in their overall situation and in their freedom of action. In order that international trade be human and moral, social justice requires that it restore to the participants a certain equality of opportunity....

Discrimination Because of Color or Race

62. Sed alia quoque obstant et impediunt, quominus humana societas, quae nunc vivit, aequior efficiatur, eademque firmiter pleniusque in mutua universorum hominum necessitudine consistat: obstant videlicet cum propriae civitatis gloriatio tum suae cuiusque stirpis veluti cultus. . . .

[288] 63. Nunc studium suae cuiusque stirpis non est proprium earum nationum tantum, quae recens sui iuris factae sunt, ubi huiusmodi cultus post odia vel tribuum vel politicarum partium se abdit, non solum iustitiae maxime officiens, sed etiam civium tranquillitatem salutemque periclitans. Quod studium, cum colonicae vigerent condiciones, saepe discidia inter colonos et autochthones concitavit, pariter impediens ne iidem ad mutuam fructuosamque animorum concordiam pervenirent, pariter animos ad acerbam invidiam ob veras acceptas iniurias inflammans. Idem plurimum obstat, quominus populi a fortunis inopes mutuam adiutricem operam sibi volentes navent, atque discidorum et inimicitarum semen in mediis civitatibus serit, quotiescumque, contemptis hominum iuribus, quae remitti nequeunt, sive singuli sive familiae, stirpis vel coloris causa, a praecipuis ceterorum civium iuribus iniuste sese exclusos animadvertunt.

62. There are other obstacles to creation of a more just social order and to the development of world solidarity: nationalism and racism. . . . 4466

63. Racism is not the exclusive attribute of young nations, where sometimes it hides beneath the rivalries of clans and political parties, with heavy losses for justice and at the risk of civil war. During the colonial period it often flared up between the colonists and the indigenous population and stood in the way of mutually profitable understanding, often giving rise to bitterness in the wake of genuine injustices. It is still an obstacle to collaboration among disadvantaged nations and a cause of division and hatred within countries whenever individuals and families see the inviolable rights of the human person held in scorn, as they themselves are unjustly subjected to a regime of discrimination because of their race or their color. 4467

Longing for a Better Age

79. Nonnulli fortasse huiusmodi expectationes quasi vana opinionum commenta censeant. Fieri enim potest, ut eorum consuetudo res ipsas ut sunt spectandi aliquid vitii habeat, quod nondum animadverterint citatissimum huius aetatis cursum, in qua homines artiore fratrum necessitudine vivere cupiunt [296] atque, licet ignorantibus, erroribus noxisque detineantur ac saepe in efferatos recidunt mores vel longe a salutis via aberrent, lente tamen ac vel etiam sine sensu ad suum accedunt Creatorem.

76. . . . When we fight poverty and oppose the unfair conditions of the present, we are not just promoting human well-being; we are also furthering man's spiritual and moral development, and hence we are benefitting the whole human race. For peace is not simply the absence of warfare, based on a precarious balance of power; it is fashioned by efforts directed day after day toward the establishment of the ordered universe willed by God, with a more perfect form of justice among men. . . . 4468

79. Some would regard these hopes as vain flights of fancy. It may be that these people are not realistic enough and that they have not noticed that the world is moving rapidly in a certain direction. Men are growing more anxious to establish closer ties of brotherhood; despite their ignorance, their mistakes, their offenses, and even their lapses into barbarism and their wanderings from the path of salvation, they are slowly making their way to the Creator, even without adverting to it. 4469

This struggle toward a more human way of life certainly calls for hard work and imposes difficult sacrifices. But even adversity, when endured for the sake of one’s brothers and out of love for them, can contribute greatly to human progress. The Christian knows full well that when he unites himself with the expiatory sacrifice of the Divine Savior, he helps greatly to build up the body of Christ,¹ to assemble the people of God into the fullness of Christ.

4470–4479: Encyclical Humanae vitae, July 25, 1968

Vatican II had discussed questions of family planning and the regulation of births especially in connection with the deliberations on articles 47–52 of the Pastoral Constitution (“De dignitate matrimonii et familiae fovendae”). On October 23, 1964, Paul VI reserved to himself the taking of a conclusive magisterial position (cf. Gaudium et spes 51, n. 14). He transmitted the related questions to the Commissio pro studio populationis, familiae et natalitatis already established by John XXIII in March 1963. On June 23, 1964, the pope spoke publicly for the first time of the work of this commission in the context of a discourse to the cardinals (AAS 56 [1964]: 588f.), and he stressed its urgency. The deliberations of the commission, raised on March 7, 1966, to the level of a commission of cardinals under the presidency of Ottaviani, lasted until June 24, 1966. On June 28, 1966, Cardinal J. Döpfner, the vice president of the commission, transmitted to the pope the official final report dated June 26, 1966, and approved almost unanimously by the commission, composed by now of sixty members. This Schema documenti de responsabili paternitate recommended the conditional approval of “artificial” methods of regulating conception. Several days later, Cardinal Ottaviani delivered to the pope a votum dated May 25, 1966, and endorsed by four members of the commission that, in consideration especially of the Church’s traditional teaching, authorized only the method based on calculations of time (Knaus-Ogino). From the deliberations of the commission, a third document emerged, an expert opinion on the moral theological plane (Documentum syntheticum de moralitate regulationis nativitatum), which took a position critical of the arguments of the minority. On October 29, 1966, in a speech to the participants of a national congress of the Italian Society of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Paul VI, for the first time publicly and with reference to his discourse of June 23, 1964, took up the problem of the regulation of birth. He referred to the importance of this question, which was delaying the promulgation of a magisterial decision (AAS 56 [1966]: 1166–70). From 1967 until February 1968, a “secret commission” debated the question, preparing several drafts for the texts of the encyclical. In addition, there was the advisory position of the Secretariat of State under Cardinal Cicognani. The definitive form of the text is the work, essentially, of the pope himself.

Married Love

4470 9. ... Quibus rebus in sua luce positis, perspicue et notae et necessitates coniugalis amoris propriae patent, quas maximi est ponderis iustis aestimare momentis.

Est ante omnia amor plane humanus, hoc est sensibilis et spiritualis. Quare non agitur solum de mero vel naturae vel affectuum impetu, sed etiam ac praesertim de liberae voluntatis actu, eo scilicet tendente, ut per cotidianae vitae gaudia et dolores non modo perseveret, sed praeterea augeatur; ita nimirum ut coniuges veluti cor unum et anima una fiant, suamque humanam perfectionem una simul adipiscantur.

4471 Agitur deinde de amore pleno, id est de peculiari illa personalis amicitiae forma, in qua coniuges omnia magno animo inter se partiuntur, neque iniustas exceptiones admittunt, vel suis dumtaxat commodis student. Qui coniugem suum re vera amat, eum profecto non tantum ob id quod ab eo accipit, sed propter eum ipsum amat; idque libens facit, ut eum dono sui ditet.

9. ... In the light of these facts, the characteristic features and exigencies of married love are clearly indicated, and it is of the highest importance to evaluate them exactly.

This love is above all fully human, a compound of sense and spirit. It is not, then, merely a question of natural instinct or emotional drive. It is also, and above all, an act of the free will, whose trust is such that it is meant not only to survive the joys and sorrows of daily life, but also to grow, so that husband and wife become in a way one heart and one soul and together attain their human fulfillment.

It is a love that is total—that very special form of personal friendship in which husband and wife generously share everything, allowing no unreasonable exceptions and not thinking solely of their own convenience. Whoever really loves his partner loves not only for what he receives, but loves that partner for the partner’s own sake, content to be able to enrich the other with the gift of himself.

*4469 ¹ Cf. Eph 4:12; cf. Vatican Council II, Dogmatic Constitution on the Church Lumen gentium, no. 13 (AAS 57 [1965]: 17; *4132).

Ad hoc, coniugalis amor et fidelis et exclusorius est, usque ad vitae extremum; qualem scilicet sponsus et sponsa eo die cogitatione comprehenderunt, quo liberi planeque conscii matrimoniali se vinculo devinxerunt. Quae coniugum fidelitas etsi interdum habeat difficultates, nemini tamen asseverare licet, eam non esse possibilem, cum contra quovis tempore nobilis sit meritisque uber. Posita enim volventibus saeculis a tot coniugibus exempla non tantum probant, eam esse matrimonii naturae consentaneam, sed insuper ex ea, veluti e fonte, intimam diuturnamque felicitatem fluere.

Hic denique amor fecundus est, quippe qui non totus in [487] coniugum communionem contineatur, sed eo etiam spectet ut pergat, novasque exsuscitet vitas. “Matrimonium et amor coniugalis indole sua ad prolem procreandam et educandam ordinantur. Filii sane sunt praestantissimum matrimonii donum, et ad ipsorum parentum bonum maxime conferunt.”¹

10. Quas ob causas amor coniugum ab ipsis exigit, ut munus suum probe noverint, paternitatem consciam attingens, quae, cum hodie optimo iure tantopere urgeatur, est idcirco recte intellegenda. . . .

Married love is also faithful and exclusive of all others, and this until death. This is how husband and wife understood it on the day on which, fully aware of what they were doing, they freely vowed themselves to one another in marriage. Though this fidelity of husband and wife sometimes presents difficulties, no one has the right to assert that it is impossible; it is, on the contrary, always honorable and meritorious. The example of countless married couples proves not only that fidelity is in accord with the nature of marriage, but also that it is the source of profound and enduring happiness.

Finally, this love is fecund. It is not confined wholly to the loving interchange of husband and wife; it also contrives to go beyond this to bring new life into being. “Marriage and conjugal love are by their nature ordained toward the procreation and education of children. Children are really the supreme gift of marriage and contribute in the highest degree to their parents’ welfare.”¹

10. Married love, therefore, requires of husband and wife the full awareness of their obligations in the matter of responsible parenthood, which today, rightly enough, is much insisted upon, but which at the same time should be rightly understood. . . .

The Marital Act

Revera, ut usu noscitur, non ex unaquaque coniugali congressione nova exoritur vita. Deus enim naturales leges ac tempora fecunditatis ita sapienter disposuit, ut eadem iam per se ipsa generationes subsequentes intervallent.

Verumtamen Ecclesia, dum homines commonet de observandis praeceptis legis naturalis, quam constanti sua doctrina interpretatur, id docet necessarium esse, ut quilibet matrimonii usus ad vitam humanam procreandam per se destinatus permaneat.²

11. The sexual activity, in which husband and wife are intimately and chastely united with one another, through which human life is transmitted, is, as the recent council recalled, “noble and worthy”.¹ It does not, moreover, cease to be legitimate even when, for reasons independent of their will, it is foreseen to be infertile. For its natural adaptation to the expression and strengthening of the union of husband and wife is not thereby suppressed.

The fact is, as experience shows, that new life is not the result of each and every act of sexual intercourse. God has wisely ordered laws of nature and the incidence of fertility in such a way that successive births are already naturally spaced through the inherent operation of these laws.

The Church, nevertheless, in urging men to the observance of the precepts of the natural law, which she interprets by her constant doctrine, teaches that each and every marital act must of necessity retain its intrinsic relationship to the procreation of human life.²

Unlawful Birth Control Methods

14. Therefore We base Our words on the first principles of a human and Christian doctrine of marriage

edicere, omnino respuendam esse, ut legitimum modum numeri liberorum temperandi, directam generationis iam coeptae interruptionem, ac praesertim abortum directum, quamvis curationis causa factum.¹

Pariter, sicut Ecclesiae Magisterium pluries docuit, damnandum est seu viros seu mulieres directo sterilitate, vel perpetuo vel ad tempus, afficere.²

Item quivis respuendus est actus, qui, cum coniugale commercium vel praevideatur vel efficitur vel ad suos naturales exitus ducit, id tamquam finem obtinendum aut viam adhibendam intendat, ut procreatio impediatur.³

when We are obliged once more to declare that the direct interruption of the generative process already begun and, above all, all direct abortion, even for therapeutic reasons, are to be absolutely excluded as lawful means of regulating the number of children.¹

Equally to be condemned, as the Magisterium of the Church has affirmed on many occasions, is direct sterilization, whether of the man or of the woman, whether permanent or temporary.²

Similarly excluded is any action that, either before, at the moment of, or after sexual intercourse, is specifically intended to prevent procreation—whether as an end or as a means.³

Lawful Birth Control

4479 Si infitandum non est, coniuges in utroque casu mutua certaue consensione prolem ob probabiles rationes vitare velle, atque pro explorato habere liberos minime esse nascituros, attamen fatendum pariter est, in priore

16. ... If, therefore, there are well-grounded reasons for spacing births, arising from the physical or psychological condition of husband or wife or from external circumstances, the Church teaches that married people may then take advantage of the natural cycles immanent in the reproductive system and engage in marital intercourse only during those times that are infertile, thus controlling birth in a way that does not in the least offend the moral principles We have just explained.¹

Neither the Church nor her doctrine is inconsistent when she considers it lawful for married people to take advantage of the infertile period but condemns as always unlawful the use of means that directly prevent conception, even when the reasons given for the latter practice may appear to be upright and serious. In reality, these two cases are completely different. In the former, the married couple rightly use a faculty provided them by nature. In the latter, they obstruct the natural development of the generative process.

It cannot be denied that in each case the married couple, for acceptable reasons, are both perfectly clear in their intention to avoid children and wish to make sure that none will result. But it is equally true that it tantum casu fieri, ut ipsi coniuges se a maritali amplexu temporibus fecunditatem invehentibus abstinere valeant, quotiescumque ob iustas rationes liberorum procreatio optanda non sit; cum autem tempora conceptibus non apta redierint, fieri ut ipsi utantur commercio ad mutuum testandum amorem atque ad promissam sibi fidem servandam. is exclusively in the former case that husband and wife are ready to abstain from intercourse during the fertile period as often as for reasonable motives the birth of another child is not desirable. And when the infertile period recurs, they use their married intimacy to express their mutual love and safeguard their fidelity toward one another. In doing this, they certainly give proof of a true and authentic love.

Presencia de la Iglesia, September 6, 1968

The First General Assembly of the Latin American bishops took place in 1955 in Rio de Janeiro. The Second General Assembly at Medellín, opened by Paul VI, carried the application of the Second Vatican Council to the Latin American continent and marked a revolutionary turning point for the Latin American Church. Of importance theologically was the “option for the poor” taken by the bishops. The documents of the assembly, to whose final formulation theological experts contributed decisively, were approved by the pope on October 24, 1968.

Ed.: Second General Conference of the Latin American Bishops (Medellín), Presencia de la Iglesia en la actual transformación de América Latina a la luz de Concilio Vaticano II (Buenos Aires, 1969).

I. Justice

3. La Iglesia Latinoamericana tiene un mensaje para todos los hombres que, en este continente, tienen “hambre y sed de justicia”. El mismo Dios que crea al hombre a su imagen y semejanza, crea la “tierra y todo lo que en ella se contiene para uso de todos los hombres y de todos los pueblos de modo que los bienes creados puedan llegar a todos, en forma más justa”,¹ y le da poder para que solidariamente transforme y perfeccione el mundo.²

Es el mismo Dios quien, en la plenitud de los tiempos, envía a su Hijo para que hecho carne, venga a liberar a todos los hombres de todas las esclavitudes a que los tiene sujetos el pecado,³ la ignorancia, el hambre, la miseria y la opresión, en una palabra, la injusticia y el odio que tienen su origen en el egoísmo humano.

Por eso, para nuestra verdadera liberación, todos los hombres necesitamos una profunda conversión a fin de que llegue a nosotros el “Reino de justicia, de amor y de paz”. El origen de todo menosprecio del hombre, de toda injusticia, debe ser buscado en el desequilibrio interior de la libertad humana, que necesitará siempre, en la historia, una permanente labor de rectificación.

La originalidad del mensaje cristiano no consiste directamente en la afirmación de la necesidad de un cambio de estructuras, sino en la insistencia en la conversión del hombre, que exige luego este cambio. No tendremos un continente nuevo sin nuevas y renovadas estructuras; sobre todo, no habrá continente nuevo sin hombres nuevos, que a la luz del Evangelio sepan ser verdaderamente libres y responsables. . . .

3. The Latin American Church has a message for all men on this continent who “hunger and thirst after justice”. The very God who creates men in his image and likeness creates the “earth and all that is in it for the use of all men and all nations, in such a way that created goods can reach all in a more just manner”¹ and gives them power to transform and perfect the world in solidarity.²

It is the same God who, in the fullness of time, sends his Son in the flesh, so that he might come to liberate all men from the slavery to which sin has subjected them:³ hunger, misery, oppression, and ignorance, in a word, that injustice and hatred which have their origin in human selfishness.

Thus, for our authentic liberation, all of us need a profound conversion so that “the kingdom of justice, love, and peace” might come to us. The origin of all disdain for mankind, of all injustice, should be sought in the internal imbalance of human liberty, which will always need to be rectified in history.

The uniqueness of the Christian message does not so much consist in the affirmation of the necessity for structural change as it does in the insistence on the conversion of men that will in turn bring about this change. We will not have a new continent without new and reformed structures, but, above all, there will be no new continent without new men, who know how to be truly free and responsible according to the light of the gospel. . . .

4482 5. ... La búsqueda cristiana de la justicia es una exigencia de la enseñanza bíblica. Todos los hombres somos humildes administradores de los bienes. En la búsqueda de la salvación debemos evitar el dualismo que separa las tareas temporales de la santificación.

A pesar de que estamos rodeados de imperfecciones, somos hombres de esperanza. Creemos que el amor a Cristo y a nuestros hermanos será no solo la gran fuerza liberadora de la injusticia y la opresión, sino la inspiradora de la justicia social, entendida como concepción de vida y como impulso hacia el desarrollo integral de nuestros pueblos....

4483 16. Ante la necesidad de un cambio global en las estructuras latinoamericanas, juzgamos que dicho cambio tiene como requisito, la reforma política.

El ejercicio de la autoridad política y sus decisiones tienen como única finalidad el bien común. En Latinoamérica tal ejercicio y decisiones con frecuencia aparecen apoyando sistemas que atentan contra el bien común o favorecen a grupos privilegiados. La autoridad deberá asegurar eficaz y permanentemente a través de normas jurídicas, los derechos y libertades inalienables de los ciudadanos y el libre funcionamiento de las estructuras intermedias.

La carencia de una conciencia política en nuestros países hace imprescindible la acción educadora de la Iglesia, con objeto de que los cristianos consideren su participación en la vida política de la Nación como un deber de conciencia y como el ejercicio de la caridad, en su sentido más noble y eficaz para la vida de la comunidad.

5. ... The Christian quest for justice is a demand arising from biblical teaching. All men are merely humble stewards of material goods. In the search for salvation we must avoid the dualism that separates temporal tasks from the work of sanctification.

Although we are encompassed with imperfections, we are men of hope. We have faith that our love for Christ and our brethren will be not only the great force liberating us from injustice and oppression, but also the inspiration for social justice, understood as a concept of life and as an impulse toward the integral development of our peoples....

16. Faced with the need for a total change of Latin American structures, we believe that change has political reform as its prerequisite.

The exercise of political authority and its decisions have as their only end the common good. In Latin America such authority and decision-making frequently seem to support systems that militate against the common good or that favor privileged groups. By means of legal norms, authority ought effectively and permanently to assure the rights and inalienable liberties of the citizens and the free functioning of intermediary structures.

Public authority has the duty of facilitating and supporting the creation of means of participation and legitimate representation of the people or, if necessary, the creation of new ways to achieve it. We want to insist on the necessity of vitalizing and strengthening the municipal and communal organization, as a beginning of organizational efforts at the departmental, provincial, regional, and national levels.

The lack of political consciousness in our countries makes the educational activity of the Church absolutely essential for the purpose of bringing Christians to consider their participation in the political life of the nation as a matter of conscience and as the practice of charity in its most noble and meaningful sense for the life of the community.

14. La realidad descrita constituye una negación de la paz, tal como la entiende la tradición cristiana.

Tres notas caracterizan, en efecto, la concepción cristiana de la paz.

a) La paz es, ante todo, obra de justicia.¹ Supone y exige la instauración de un orden justo² en el que los hombres puedan realizarse como hombres, en donde su dignidad sea respetada, sus legítimas aspiraciones satisfechas, su acceso a la verdad reconocida, su libertad personal garantizada. Un orden en el que los hombres no sean objetos, sino agentes de su propia historia. Allí, pues, donde existen injustas desigualdades entre hombres y naciones se atenta contra la paz.³

La paz en América Latina no es, por lo tanto, la simple ausencia de violencias y derramamientos de sangre. La opresión ejercida por los grupos de poder puede dar la impresión de mantener la paz y el orden, pero en realidad no es sino "el germen continuo e inevitable de rebeliones y guerras".⁴

La paz solo se obtiene creando un orden nuevo que "comporta una justicia más perfecta entre los hombres."⁵ En este sentido, el desarrollo integral del hombre, el paso de condiciones menos humanas a condiciones más humanas, es el nombre nuevo de la paz.

10. Political aspect ...

Tensions among the countries of Latin America: ...

12. An exacerbated nationalism ...

13. Armaments ...

14. The reality described constitutes a negation of peace as it is understood in the Christian tradition. 4486

Three factors characterize the Christian concept of peace:

a. Peace is, above all, a work of justice.¹ It presupposes and requires the establishment of a just order² in which men can fulfill themselves as men, where their dignity is respected, their legitimate aspirations satisfied, their access to truth recognized, their personal freedom guaranteed; an order where man is not an object, but an agent of his own history. Therefore, there will be attempts against peace where unjust inequalities among men and nations prevail.³

Peace in Latin America, therefore, is not the simple absence of violence and bloodshed. Oppression by the power groups may give the impression of maintaining peace and order, but in truth it is nothing but the "continuous and inevitable seed of rebellion and war".⁴

"Peace can only be obtained by creating a new order that carries with it a more perfect justice among men."⁵ It is in this sense that the integral development of man, the path to more human conditions, becomes the new name of peace.

4487 b) La paz, en segundo lugar, es un quehacer permanente.¹ La comunidad humana se realiza en el tiempo y está sujeta a un movimiento que implica constatemente cambio de estructuras, transformación de actitudes, conversión de corazones.

La “tranquilidad del orden”, según la definición agustiniana de la paz, no es, pues, pasividad ni conformismo. No es, tampoco, algo que se adquiera una vez por todas; es el resultado de un continuo esfuerzo de adaptación a las nuevas circunstancias, a las exigencias y desafíos de una historia cambiante. Una paz estática y aparente puede obtenerse con el empleo de la fuerza; una paz auténtica implica lucha, capacidad inventiva, conquista permanente.²

La paz no se encuentra, se construye. El cristiano es un artesano de la paz.³ Esta tarea, dada la situación descrita anteriormente, reviste un carácter especial en nuestro continente; para ello, el Pueblo de Dios en América Latina, siguiendo el ejemplo de Cristo deberá hacer frente con audacia y valentía al egoísmo, al la injusticia personal y colectiva.

La paz con Dios es el fundamento último de la paz interior y de la paz social. Por lo mismo, allí donde dicha paz social no existe; allí donde se encuentran injustas desigualdades sociales, políticas, económicas y culturales, hay un rechazo del don de la paz del Señor; más aún, un rechazo del Señor mismo.³

b. Secondly, peace is a permanent task.¹ A community becomes a reality in time and is subject to a movement that implies constant change in structures, transformation of attitudes, and conversion of hearts.

The “tranquility of order”, according to the Augustinian definition of peace, is neither passivity nor conformity. It is not something that is acquired once and for all. It is the result of continuous effort and adaptation to new circumstances, to new demands and challenges of a changing history. A static and apparent peace may be obtained with the use of force; an authentic peace implies struggle, creative abilities, and permanent conquest.²

Peace is not found, it is built. The Christian man is the artisan of peace.³ This task, given the above circumstances, has a special character in our continent; thus, the people of God in Latin America, following the example of Christ, must resist personal and collective injustice with unselfish courage and fearlessness.

c. Finally, peace is the fruit of love.¹ It is the expression of true fraternity among men, a fraternity given by Christ, Prince of Peace, in reconciling all men with the Father. Human solidarity cannot truly take effect unless it is done in Christ, who gives the Peace that the world cannot give.² Love is the soul of justice. The Christian who works for social justice should always cultivate peace and love in his heart.

Peace with God is the basic foundation of internal and social peace. Therefore, where this social peace does not exist, there will we find social, political, economic, and cultural inequalities; there will we find the rejection of the peace of the Lord and a rejection of the Lord himself.³

15. ... “Violence is neither Christian nor evangelical.”¹ The Christian man is peaceful and not ashamed of it. He is not simply a pacifist, for he can fight,² but he prefers peace to war. He knows that “violent changes in structures would be fallacious, ineffectual in themselves, and not conforming to the dignity of man, which demands that the necessary changes take place from within, that is to say, through a fitting awakening of conscience, adequate preparation, and effective participation of all, which the ignorance and often inhuman conditions of life make it impossible to assure at this time.”³

V. Youth

10. ... La Iglesia ve en la juventud la constante renovación de la vida de la humanidad y descubre en ella un signo de sí misma: “La Iglesia es la verdadera juventud del mundo.”¹

10. ... The Church sees in youth the constant renewal 4490 of the life of humanity and discovers in youth a sign of the Church herself. “The Church is the true youth of the world.”¹

11. Ve en efecto en la juventud el renovado comienzo y la persistencia de la vida, o sea, una forma de superación de la muerte.

11. She sees in youth, in other words, the continual 4491 renewal and perseverance of life, that is to say, a way of overcoming death.

Esto no tiene sólo un sentido biológico sino también socio-cultural, psicológico y espiritual.

This is meant not only in the biological sense, but in the socio-cultural, psychological, and spiritual sense.

En efecto, frente a las culturas que muestran signos de vejez y caducidad, la juventud está llamada a aportar una revitalización; a mantener una “fe en la vida”,¹ a conservar su “facultad de alegrarse con lo que comienza”.² Ella tiene la tarea de reintroducir permanentemente el “sentido de la vida”.³ Renovar las culturas y el espíritu, significa aportar y mantener vivos nuevos sentidos de la existencia. La juventud está, pues, llamada a ser como una perenne “reactualización de la vida”.

Thus confronted with cultures that show signs of senility and decay, youth is called upon to open the way to a revitalization, to maintain “faith in life”,¹ to keep “its ability to be joyful with that which is new”.² It has the task of continually reintroducing “the meaning of life”.³ To renew cultures and spirits means to offer and keep alive new meanings of life. Youth, therefore, is called upon to be a perpetual “reactualization of life”.

12. En la juventud así entendida, descubre también la Iglesia un signo de sí misma.

12. Understood thus, the Church finds in youth a sign 4492 of herself.

Un signo de su fe, pues la fe es la interpretación escatológica de la existencia, su sentido pascual, y por ello, la “novedad” que encierra el Evangelio. La fe, anuncio del nuevo sentido de las cosas, es la renovación y rejuvenecimiento de la humanidad. Desde esta perspectiva la Iglesia invita a los jóvenes “a sumergirse en las claridades de la fe”¹ y de este modo a introducir la fe en el mundo para vencer las formas espirituales de muerte, es decir “las filosofías del egoísmo, del placer, de la desesperanza y de la nada”,² filosofías que implantan en la cultura formas viejas y caducas.

Youth is a sign of her faith, for faith is the eschatological interpretation of existence, to which it gives paschal significance. Faith is therefore the “news” of the gospel. Faith, herald of the new meaning of things, is the renewal and rejuvenation of humanity. From this point of view, the Church invites youth to “submerge themselves in the enlightenment of the faith”¹ and thus introduce faith into the world to combat spiritual forms of death, that is, “philosophies of selfishness, pleasure, despair, and nihilism”,² philosophies that bring senile and decaying forms into a culture.

Es la juventud un símbolo de la iglesia, llamada a una constante renovación de sí misma, o sea a un incesante rejuvenecimiento.³

Youth is a symbol of the Church, called to a constant renovation and renewal, that is, to a continual “rejuvenation”.³

XIV. The Poverty of the Church

1. El Episcopado Latinoamericano no puede quedar indiferente ante las tremendas injusticias sociales

1. The Latin American bishops cannot remain 4493 indifferent in the face of the tremendous social injustices existentes en América Latina, que mantienen a la mayoría de nuestros pueblos en una dolorosa pobreza cercana en muchísimos casos a la inhumana miseria....

4494 4. Debemos distinguir:

a) La pobreza como carencia de los bienes de este mundo es, en cuanto tal, un mal. Los profetas la denuncian como contraria a la voluntad del Señor y las más de las veces como el fruto de la injusticia y el pecado de los hombres;

b) La pobreza espiritual, es el tema de los pobres de Yavé.¹ La pobreza espiritual es la actitud de apertura a Dios, la disponibilidad de quien todo lo espera del Señor.² Aunque valoriza los bienes de este mundo no se apega a ellos y reconoce el valor superior de los bienes del Reino;³

c) La pobreza como compromiso, que asume, voluntariamente y por amor, la condición de los necesitados de este mundo para testimoniar el mal que ella representa y la libertad espiritual frente a los bienes, sigue en esto el ejemplo de Cristo que hizo suyas todas las consecuencias de la condición pecadora de los hombres⁴ y que “siendo rico se hizo pobre”,⁵ para salvarnos.

4495 5. En este contexto una Iglesia pobre:

—Denuncia la carencia injusta de los bienes de este mundo y el pecado que la engendra;

—Predica y vive la pobreza espiritual, como actitud de infancia espiritual y apertura al Señor;

—Se compromete ella misma en la pobreza material. La pobreza de la Iglesia es, en efecto, una constante de la Historia de la Salvación....

4496 8. Por todo eso queremos que la Iglesia de América Latina sea evangelizadora de los pobres y solidaria con ellos, testigo del valor de los bienes del Reino y humilde servidora de todos los hombres de nuestros pueblos. Sus pastores y demás miembros del Pueblo de Dios han de dar a su vida y sus palabras, a sus actitudes y su acción, la coherencia necesaria con las exigencias evangélicas y las necesidades de los hombres latinoamericanos.

existent in Latin America, which keep the majority of our peoples in dismal poverty, which in many cases becomes inhuman wretchedness....

4. We must distinguish:

a. Poverty, as a lack of the goods of this world necessary to live worthily as men, is in itself evil. The prophets denounce it as contrary to the will of the Lord and most of the time as the fruit of the injustice and sin of men.

b. Spiritual poverty is the theme of the poor of Yahweh.¹ Spiritual poverty is the attitude of opening up to God, the ready disposition of one who hopes for everything from the Lord.² Although he values the goods of this world, he does not become attached to them, and he recognizes the higher value of the riches of the kingdom.³

c. Poverty as a commitment through which one assumes voluntarily and lovingly the conditions of the needy of this world in order to bear witness to the evil it represents and to spiritual liberty in the face of material goods follows the example of Christ, who took to himself all the consequences of men's sinful condition⁴ and who “being rich became poor”⁵ in order to redeem us.

5. In this context a poor Church:

—denounces the unjust lack of this world's goods and the sin that begets it;

—preaches and lives in spiritual poverty, as an attitude of spiritual childhood and openness to the Lord;

—is herself bound to material poverty. The poverty of the Church is, in effect, a constant factor in the history of salvation....

8. Because of the foregoing, we wish the Latin American Church to be the evangelizer of the poor and one with them, a witness to the value of the riches of the kingdom and the humble servant of all our people. Her pastors and the other members of the people of God have to correlate their life and words, their attitudes and actions to the demands of the gospel and the necessities of the men of Latin America.

4500–4512: Apostolic Letter Octogesima adveniens to Cardinal Maurice Roy, May 14, 1971

This document was composed for the eightieth anniversary of the social encyclical Rerum novarum (*3265–3271). In a particular way, emphasis is given to the significance of the social doctrine of the Church in opposition to the ideologies of Marxism, socialism, and liberalism. Marxism is vigorously rejected for its doctrine as well as its method. Socialism and liberalism are judged in a more nuanced way, but in their radical forms they are likewise repudiated.

4. Si tam diversae condiciones rerum considerantur, arduum profecto Nobis est unam enuntiare sententiam, qua solutio, omnibus locis congruens, proponatur. Verumtamen eiusmodi studio minime ducimur neque hoc est officii Nostri. Etenim ipsae christianae communitates id agere debent, ut propriae regionis statum ex rei veritate perscrutentur, ut eum luce immutabilium Evangelii verborum illustrent, ut principia cogitandi, iudicandi normas, regulas operandi e sociali doctrina Ecclesiae hauriant; doctrinam dicimus eam, quae temporum cursu est confecta, maxime vero hac machinaria aetate, ex illo scilicet die, historia digno, quo Leo XIII “de opificum conditione” nuntium edidit, cuius anniversariam memoriam recolere est Nobis hodie et honoris et laetitiae causa. . . .

4. In the face of such widely varying situations, it is difficult for Us to utter a unified message and to put forward a solution that has universal validity. Such is not Our ambition, nor is it Our mission. It is up to the Christian communities to analyze with objectivity the situation that is proper to their own country, to shed on it the light of the Gospel’s unalterable words, and to draw principles of thinking, norms of judgment, and rules of action from the social teaching of the Church. This social teaching has been worked out in the course of history and notably, in this industrial era, since the historic date of the message of Pope Leo XIII on “the condition of the workers”, and it is an honor and joy for Us to celebrate today the anniversary of that message. . . . 4500

22. While scientific and technological progress continues to overturn man’s surroundings, his patterns of knowledge, work, consumption, and relationships, two aspirations persistently make themselves felt in these new contexts, and they grow stronger to the extent that he becomes better informed and better educated: the aspiration to equality and the aspiration to participation in managerial functions, two forms of man’s dignity and freedom. 4501

24. The two aspirations, to equality and to participation, seek to promote a democratic type of society. Various models are proposed; some are tried out; none of them gives complete satisfaction; and the search goes on between ideological and pragmatic tendencies. The Christian has the duty to take part in this search and in the organization and life of political society. . . . 4502

25. Political activity—need one remark that we are dealing primarily with an activity, not an ideology?—should be the projection of a plan of society that is consistent in its concrete means and in its inspiration and that springs from a complete conception of man’s vocation and of its differing social expressions. It is not for the State or even for political parties, which would be closed unto themselves, to try to impose an ideology by means that would lead to a dictatorship over minds, the worst kind of all. It is for cultural and religious groupings, without prejudice, of course, to the freedom of their members, to develop in the social body, disinterestedly and in their own ways, those ultimate convictions on the nature, origin, and end of man and society. . . . 4503

4505 31. Hisce temporibus christifideles alliciuntur doctrinis socialismi eiusque variis formis, quae temporis decursu ortae sunt. In quibus studia aliqua ac proposita reperire conantur, quae in ipsorum animis, vi suae christianae fidei, insident. Existimant enim se in hanc historiae viam dirigi atque illuc cupiunt suam conferre operam. Illa autem historiae via, aliis in continentibus terris generibusque civilis cultus, alias prae se fert rationes sub eodem nomine, tametsi hic motus excitatus est atque excitatur saepius doctrinis, quae cum christiana fide componi nequeunt. Peracre igitur subtileque postulatur iudicium, quoniam crebrius christiani, socialismo allecti, eo inclinant, ut generatim quidem et universe illum sibi fingant tamquam aliquid omni ex parte perfectum: ex quo socialismus fit voluntas servandae iustitiae, mutuae necessitudinis et aequali/423)tatis. Ipsi praeterea agnoscere recusant violentas coerciones motuum socialismi historicorum, qui ex iis doctrinis, unde exorti sunt, pendere pergunt. Inter varios illos modos, quibus socialismus declaratur—huius generis sunt magnanima cupiditas et inquisitio aequioris societatis, motus historici cum ordinatione ac proposito rei politicae, composita doctrina, quae se proficitur hominis considerationem exhibere integram liberamque prorsus—discrimina sunt instituenda, quibus ipsis rerum in adiunctis certa selectio fiat. Verumtamen discrimina haec efficere non debent, ut modi illi putentur inter se omnino separati ac seorsum consistentes. Vinculum definitum, quod pro re nata iis intercurrit, liquido denotari oportet; quae quidem perspicentia christianos comprehendere sinet, quousque liceat sese immiscere atque implicare his consiliis, iis servatis bonis praesertim libertatis et officiorum conscientiae et spatii vitae spiritus tribuendi, quae omnia plenum spondent hominis progressum ad perfectionem.

29. It has been possible today to speak of a retreat of ideologies. In this respect, the present time may be favorable for an openness to the concrete transcendence of Christianity. It may also be a more accentuated sliding toward a new positivism: universalized technology as the dominant form of activity, as the overwhelming pattern of existence, even as a language, without the question of its meaning being really asked.

31. Some Christians are today attracted by socialist currents and their various developments. They try to recognize therein a certain number of aspirations that they carry within themselves in the name of their faith. They feel that they are part of that historical current and wish to play a part within it. Now this historical current takes on, under the same name, different forms according to different continents and cultures, even if it drew its inspiration, and still does in many cases, from ideologies incompatible with faith. Careful judgment is called for. Too often Christians attracted by socialism tend to idealize it in terms that, apart from anything else, are very general: a will for justice, solidarity, and equality. They refuse to recognize the limitations of the historical socialist movements, which remain conditioned by the ideologies from which they originated. Distinctions must be made to guide concrete choices between the various levels of expression of socialism: a generous aspiration and a seeking for a more just society, historical movements with a political organization and aim, and an ideology that claims to give a complete and self-sufficient picture of man. Nevertheless, these distinctions must not lead one to consider such levels as completely separate and independent. The concrete link that, according to circumstances, exists between them must be clearly marked out. This insight will enable Christians to see the degree of commitment possible along these lines, while safeguarding the values, especially those of liberty, obligation of conscience, and openness to the spiritual, that guarantee the integral development of man.

32. Other Christians even ask whether a historical development of Marxism might not authorize certain concrete rapprochements....

33. For some, Marxism remains essentially the active practice of class struggle. Experiencing the ever present and continually renewed force of the relationships of domination and exploitation among men, they reduce dominationis atque iniqui quae[424]stus ex hominibus facti experiuntur, nihil aliud marxismum esse arbitrantur nisi pugnam, interdum sine ullo alio consilio, certationem nempe, quam necesse sit ali et etiam continenter excitari. Aliis vero ipse in primis est exercitatio communis politicae atque oeconomicae potestatis sub unius factionis moderatione, quae se solam asseverat exprimere ac despondere bonum omnium, adempta sive singulis sive ceteris coetibus universa agendi eligendique potestate. Iuxta alios, tertio, marxismus—sive rerum potitus est sive minus—refertur ad doctrinam socialisticam, innixam in materialismo historico, quem vocant, atque in negatione omnium naturam transcendentium. Aliis demum is apparet formam praefrens magis extenuatam, quae nostrorum temporum homines magis allicit: nempe habetur opera aliqua ad scientiae normas exacta, accuratissima via investigandarum rerum socialium ac politicarum, rationabile idemque iam historia probatum vinculum inter meram mentis notionem atque usum turbulentae rerum conversionis. Quamvis hic explicandi modus commendet nonnullas rei ipsius facies, ceteris neglectis, easdemque interpretetur secundum doctrinae placita, tamen idem quibusdam suppeditat, una cum operandi subsidio, firmam mentis persuasionem praeviam actioni, dum sibi sumit scientifico se modo dispicere impulsiones progredientis hominum societatis.

34. Si autem in illa marxiana doctrina, qualis in ipsius vitae actionem traducitur, hae variae distingui possunt facies atque quaestiones, quae inde christifidelibus proponuntur tum ad deliberandum tum etiam ad agendum, vanum profecto est atque periculosum eam ob causam oblivisci artissimi illius vinculi, quod penitus easdem coniungit; item diversa amplecti elementa marxianae investigationis, nulla habita ratione necessitudinis, quae cum doctrina ipsis intercedit; denique ingredi in mediam illam classium contentionem eius[425]que marxianam interpretationem, dum perspicere omittitur genus societatis violentae atque imperii absoluti, ad quae paulatim actio illa perducit.

Marxism to no more than a struggle—at times with no other purpose—to be pursued and even stirred up in permanent fashion. For others, it is first and foremost the collective exercise of political and economic power under the direction of a single party, which would be the sole expression and guarantee of the welfare of all and would deprive individuals and other groups of any possibility of initiative and choice. At a third level, Marxism, whether in power or not, is viewed as a socialist ideology based on historical materialism and the denial of everything transcendent. At other times, finally, it presents itself in a more attenuated form, one also more attractive to the modern mind: as a scientific activity, as a rigorous method of examining social and political reality, and as the rational link, tested by history, between theoretical knowledge and the practice of revolutionary transformation. Although this type of analysis gives a privileged position to certain aspects of reality to the detriment of the rest and interprets them in the light of its ideology, it nevertheless furnishes some people not only with a working tool but also a certitude preliminary to action: the claim to decipher in a scientific manner the mainsprings of the evolution of society.

34. While, through the concrete existing form of 4508 Marxism, one can distinguish these various aspects and the questions they pose for the reflection and activity of Christians, it would be illusory and dangerous to reach a point of forgetting the intimate link that radically binds them together, to accept the elements of Marxist analysis without recognizing their relationships with ideology, and to enter into the practice of class struggle and its Marxist interpretations, while failing to note the kind of totalitarian and violent society to which this process leads.

35. On another side, we are witnessing a renewal of 4509 the liberal ideology. This current asserts itself both in the name of economic efficiency, and for the defense of the individual against the increasingly overwhelming hold of organizations, and as a reaction against the totalitarian tendencies of political powers. Certainly, personal initiative must be maintained and developed. But do not Christians who take this path tend to idealize liberalism in their turn, making it a proclamation in favor of freedom? They would like a new model, more adapted to present-day conditions, while easily forgetting that at the very root of philosophical liberalism is an erroneous affirmation of the autonomy of the individual in his activity, his motivation, and the exercise of his liberty.

singulorum hominum autonomiae, quod attinet ad eorum navitatem, ad agendarum rerum causas atque ad libertatis exercitationem. Quod profecto significat liberalium doctrinam prudens iudicium a christianis pariter postulare.

Qui nisus omnia scientiarum ope in unum redigendi, [428] consilium quoddam prodit, periculorum plenum. Nam primarias partes investigationi seu analysi tribuere, idem est atque hominem detruncare et, specie alicuius viae scientificae, efficere, ut ipse non amplius se totum comprehendat.

Hence, the liberal ideology likewise calls for careful discernment on their part.

37. Today, moreover, the weaknesses of the ideologies are better perceived through the concrete systems in which they are trying to affirm themselves. Bureaucratic socialism, technocratic capitalism, and authoritarian democracy are showing how difficult it is to solve the great human problem of living together in justice and equality. How in fact could they escape the materialism, egoism, or constraint that inevitably go with them?...

38. In this world dominated by scientific and technological change, which threatens to drag it toward a new positivism, another more fundamental doubt is raised. Having subdued nature by using his reason, man now finds that he himself is, as it were, imprisoned within his own rationality; he in turn becomes the object of science....

This scientific reduction betrays a dangerous pre-supposition. To give a privileged position in this way to such an aspect of analysis is to mutilate man and, under the pretext of a scientific procedure, to make it impossible to understand man in his totality.

40. ... Of course, each individual scientific discipline will be able, in its own particular sphere, to grasp only a partial—yet true—aspect of man; the complete picture and the full meaning will escape it. But within these limits the human sciences give promise of a positive function that the Church willingly recognizes. They can even widen the horizons of human liberty to a greater extent than the conditioning circumstances perceived enable one to foresee. They could thus assist Christian social morality, which no doubt will see its field restricted when it comes to suggesting certain models of society, while its function of making a critical judgment and taking an overall view will be strengthened by its showing the relative character of the behavior and values presented by such and such a society as definitive and inherent in the very nature of man....

4520–4522: Declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith Mysterium filii Dei, February 21, 1972

A growing philosophical movement aiming to go beyond the metaphysical thought of substance led to theological attempts at a reformulation of the concept of person that, in a particular way, touched on Christology and the doctrine of the Trinity (cf.

P. Schoonenberg, Hij is een God van mensen (A God of Persons) [Zurich, 1969]. The declaration sets itself against unnamed authors who begin, not with the existence of the human nature of Christ in the Divine Person (enhypostasis, anhypostasis), but instead with the presence of God in the human person of Jesus Christ and who place in doubt the doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit.

Recent Christological and Trinitarian Errors

3. Recentes errores circa fidem in Filium Dei hominem factum.—Huic fidei aperte adversantur opiniones iuxta quas nobis revelatum notumque non esset Filium Dei ab aeterno in mysterio Deitatis subsistere distinctum a Patre et Spiritu Sancto; itemque opiniones secundum quas evacuanda esset notio unius personae Iesu Christi, genitae a Patre ante saecula secundum divinam naturam et in tempore ex Maria Virgine secundum naturam humanam; ac denique assertio secundum quam humanitas Iesu existeret, non ut assumpta in personam aeternam Filii Dei, sed potius in seipsa ut persona humana, ideoque mysterium Iesu Christi in eo consisteret quod Deus se revelans summo modo praesens esset in persona humana Iesu.

Qui ita sentiunt, a vera fide in Christum longe remanent, etiam cum asserunt singularem Dei praesentiam in Iesu efficere ut ipse summum ultimumque culmen sit divinae Revelationis; neque veram fidem in Christi divinitatem recuperant, cum addunt Iesum dici posse Deum, eo quod, in eius humana, quam dicunt, persona, Deus summe praesens sit.

[239] ... 5. Recentes errores de Sanctissima Trinitate ac speciatim de Spiritu Sancto. —A fide igitur deerrat opinio secundum quam Revelatio nos incertos relinqueret de aeternitate Trinitatis et speciatim de aeterna existentia Spiritus Sancti ut personae, in Deo, a Patre Filioque distinctae. Verum est Sanctissimae Trinitatis mysterium nobis revelatum esse in [240] oeconomia salutis, maxime in Christo, qui a Patre in mundum missus est et qui cum Patre mittit in Populum Dei Spiritum vivificantem. Sed hac Revelatione credentibus aliqua cognitio data est etiam vitae intimae Dei, in qua “Pater generans, Filius nascens et Spiritus Sanctus procedens” sunt “consubstantiales et coaequales, coomnipotentes et coaeterni”.¹

3. Recent errors regarding faith in the Son of God made man. —Opinions that hold that it has not been revealed and made known to us that the Son of God subsists from all eternity in the mystery of the Godhead, distinct from the Father and the Holy Spirit, are in open conflict with this belief. The same is true of opinions that should abandon the notion of the one person of Jesus Christ begotten in his divinity of the Father before all ages and born in his humanity of the Virgin Mary in time; and, lastly, of the assertion that the humanity of Christ existed, not as being assumed into the eternal person of the Son of God, but existed rather of itself as a person and, therefore, that the mystery of Jesus Christ consists only in the fact that God, in revealing himself, was present in the highest degree in the human person Jesus. 4520

Those who think in this way are far removed from true belief in Christ, even when they maintain that the special presence of God in Jesus results in his being the supreme and final expression of divine revelation; nor do they come back to true belief in Christ’s divinity by adding that Jesus can be called God because God is supremely present in what they call his human person. 4521

... 5. Recent errors on the Most Holy Trinity and on the Holy Spirit in particular. —The opinion that revelation has left us uncertain about the eternity of the Trinity, and in particular about the eternal existence of the Holy Spirit as a person in God distinct from the Father and the Son, deviates from the faith. It is true that the mystery of the Most Holy Trinity was revealed to us in the economy of salvation, and most of all in Christ himself, who was sent into the world by the Father and together with the Father sends the life-giving Spirit to the people of God. But by this revelation there is also given to believers some knowledge of God’s intimate life, in which “the Father who generated, the Son who is generated, and the Holy Spirit who proceeds” are “consubstantial and co-equal, alike omnipotent and co-eternal”.¹ 4522

This declaration in parts 2–5 treats the infallibility of the Church and of the pope. It is directed against the doctrinal opinions of the Tübingen theologian Hans Küng, expressed in his writings Die Kirche [The Church] (Freiburg, 1967) and Unfehlbar? Eine Anfrage [Infallible? An inquiry] (Zurich, 1970). The two writings were the object of a Roman doctrinal proceeding that, after a temporary suspension (cf. the declaration of Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith De duobus operibus Professoris Ioannis

Küng of February 15, 1975: AAS 67 [1975]: 203f.), terminated on December 18, 1979, with the removal of H. Küng's ecclesiastical teaching authorization (AAS 72 [1980]: 385–93). His name, in fact, is never mentioned in the declaration, but it is in the footnote to Mysterium ecclesiae that Archbishop J. Schröffer, on behalf of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, read out at a news conference on the day of the declaration's promulgation (July 5, 1973). Cf. also the declarations issued the same day by the Secretary of the German Conference of Bishops and by Hans Küng (NKD 43:178–83, 184–88). It is uncertain whether in parts 1 and 6 the intervention was to target Küng's ideas on the unity of the Church and on the priesthood.

1. De unitate Christi ecclesiae

Confiteri tamen iidem catholici debent se divinae misericordiae dono ad illam Ecclesiam pertinere, quam Christus condidit et quae a successoribus Petri ceterorumque Apostolorum dirigitur, penes quos integra ac viva perstat primigenia communitatis apostolicae institutio atque doctrina, perenne eiusdem Ecclesiae veritatis [398] et sanctitatis patrimonium.⁴

Quare christifidelibus sibi fingere non licet Ecclesiam Christi nihil aliud esse quam summam quamdam—divisam quidem, sed adhuc aequaliter unam—Ecclesiarum et communitatum ecclesialium; ac minime iis liberum est tenere Christi Ecclesiam hodie iam nullibi vere subsistere, ita ut nonnisi finis existimanda sit, quem omnes Ecclesiae et communitates quaerere debeant.

2. De infallibilitate ecclesiae universae

1. The Unity of Christ's Church

... “Catholics must joyfully acknowledge and esteem the truly Christian endowments derived from our common heritage that are to be found among our separated brethren”,¹ and they must strive for the reestablishment of unity among all Christians by making a “common effort of purification and renewal”,² so that the will of Christ may be fulfilled and the division of Christians may cease to be an obstacle to the proclamation of the gospel throughout the world.³

But at the same time Catholics are bound to profess that through the gift of God's mercy they belong to that Church which Christ founded and which is governed by the successors of Peter and the other apostles, who are the depositories of the original apostolic tradition, living and intact, which is the permanent heritage of truth and holiness of that same Church.⁴

The followers of Christ are therefore not permitted to imagine that Christ's Church is nothing more than a collection (divided, but still possessing a certain unity) of Churches and Ecclesial Communities. Nor are they free to hold that Christ's Church nowhere really exists today and that she is to be considered only as an end that all Churches and Ecclesial Communities must strive to reach.

2. The Infallibility of the Whole Church

... God, who is absolutely infallible, thus deigned to bestow upon his new people, which is the Church, a certain shared infallibility, which is restricted to matters of faith and morals, which is present when the whole people of God unhesitatingly holds a point of doctrine pertaining to these matters, and finally which always depends upon the wise providence and anointing of the grace of the Holy Spirit, who leads the Church into all truth until the glorious coming of her Lord.¹...

3. De infallibilitate magisterii ecclesiae

Jesus Christus autem Magisterium Pastorum, quibus munus commisit docendi Evangelium universo Populo suo totique familiae humanae, congruo infallibilitatis charismate circa res fidei et morum instructum esse voluit. Quod, cum non procedat ex novis revelationibus, quibus Successor Petri Collegiumque Episcoporum fruuntur,¹ ipsos non eximit a cura perscrutandi, aptis mediis adhibitis, divinae revelationis thesaurum in Sacris Litteris, quibus veritas incorrupte docetur, quam Deus salutis nostrae causa conscribi voluit,² atque in viva, quae est ab Apostolis, Traditione.³

In munere autem suo adimplendo, Ecclesiae Pastores assistentia Spiritus Sancti gaudent, quae apicem suum attingit, quando Populum Dei tali modo erudiunt, ut, ex promissionibus Christi in Petro ceterisque Apostolis datis, doctrinam necessario immunem ab errore tradant.

... Without doubt the faithful, who in their own manner share in Christ’s prophetic office,¹ in many ways contribute toward increasing the understanding of faith in the Church. “For”, as the Second Vatican Council says, “there is a growth in the understanding of the realities and the words that have been handed down. This happens through the contemplation and study made by believers, who treasure these things in their hearts [cf. Lc 2:19, 51], through the intimate understanding of spiritual things they experience, and through the preaching of those who have received through episcopal succession the sure charism of truth.”²...

But by divine institution ... it is the exclusive task of these pastors alone, the successors of Peter and the other apostles, to teach the faithful authentically, that is, with the authority of Christ shared in different ways; so that the faithful, who may not simply listen to them as experts in Catholic doctrine, must accept their teaching given in Christ’s name with an assent that is proportionate to the authority that they possess and that they mean to exercise.¹...

3. The Infallibility of the Church’s Magisterium

Jesus Christ, from whom derives the task proper to the pastors of teaching the gospel to all his people and to the entire human family, wished to endow the pastors’ Magisterium with a fitting charism of infallibility in matters regarding faith and morals. Since this charism does not come from new revelations enjoyed by the successor of Peter and the college of bishops,¹ it does not dispense them from studying with appropriate means the treasure of divine revelation contained both in Sacred Scripture, which teaches us intact the truth that God willed to be written down for our salvation,² and in the living tradition that comes from the apostles.³

In carrying out their task, the pastors of the Church enjoy the assistance of the Holy Spirit; this assistance reaches its highest point when they teach the people of God in such a manner that, through the promises of Christ made to Peter and the other apostles, the doctrine they propose is necessarily immune from error.

Qua nixum veritate, Concilium Vaticanum I materiam fidei catholicae definitivum: “Fide divina et catholica ea omnia credenda sunt, quae in verbo Dei scripto vel tradito continentur et ab Ecclesia sive sollemni iudicio, sive ordinario et universali magisterio tamquam divinitus revelata credenda proponuntur”.² Ea ergo fidei catholicae obiecta—quae dogmatum nomine nuncupantur—necessario sunt et quovis tempore fuerunt incommutabilis norma, sicut pro fide, ita etiam pro scientia theologica.

4. De dono infallibilitatis ecclesiae non extenuando

4538 [402] ... Exsistit profecto ordo ac veluti hierarchia dogmatum Ecclesiae, cum diversus sit eorum nexus cum fundamento fidei.¹ Haec autem hierarchia significat quaedam ex dogmatibus inniti aliis tamquam

This occurs when the bishops scattered throughout the world but teaching in communion with the successor of Peter present a doctrine to be held irrevocably.¹ It occurs even more clearly both when the bishops by a collegial act (as in ecumenical councils), together with their visible head, define a doctrine to be held² and when the Roman pontiff “speaks ex cathedra, that is, when, exercising the office of pastor and teacher of all Christians, through his supreme apostolic authority, he defines a doctrine concerning faith or morals to be held by the universal Church”.³

According to Catholic doctrine, the infallibility of the Church’s Magisterium extends not only to the deposit of faith but also to those matters without which that deposit cannot be rightly preserved and expounded.¹ The extension, however, of this infallibility to the deposit of faith itself is a truth that the Church has from the beginning held as having been certainly revealed in Christ’s promises.

The First Vatican Council, basing itself upon this truth, defined as follows the matter of Catholic faith: “All those things are to be believed by divine and Catholic faith that are contained in the written or transmitted Word of God and that are proposed by the Church, either by a solemn judgment or by the ordinary and universal Magisterium, to be believed as having been divinely revealed”.² Therefore the objects of Catholic faith—which are called dogmas—necessarily are and always have been the unalterable norm both for faith and for theological science.

4. Not Diminishing the Gift of the Church’s Infallibility

From what has been said about the extent of and conditions governing the infallibility of the people of God and of the Church’s Magisterium, it follows that the faithful are in no way permitted to see in the Church merely a fundamental permanence in truth that, as some assert, could be reconciled with errors contained here and there in the propositions that the Church’s Magisterium teaches to be held irrevocably, as also in the unhesitating assent of the people of God concerning matters of faith and morals....

... It is true that there exists an order and, as it were, a hierarchy of the Church’s dogmas, as a result of their varying relationship to the foundation of the faith.¹ This hierarchy means that some dogmas are founded on other

... Ad ... historicam condicionem quod attinet, initio observandum est sensum, quem enuntiationes fidei continent, partim pendere e linguae adhibitae vi significandi certo quodam tempore certisque rerum adiunctis.

Praeterea, nonnumquam contingit, ut veritas aliqua dogmatica primum modo incompleto, non falso tamen, exprimatur, ac [403] postea, in ampliore contextu fidei aut humanarum cognitionum considerata, plenius et perfectius significetur.

Deinde, Ecclesia novis suis enuntiationibus, ea quae in Sacra Scriptura aut in praeteritis Traditionis expressionibus iam aliquomodo continentur, confirmare aut dilucidare intendit, sed simul de certis quaestionibus solvendis erroribusve removendis cogitare solet; quarum omnium rerum ratio habenda est, ut illae enuntiationes recte explanentur.

Denique, etsi veritates, quas Ecclesia suis formulis dogmaticis reapse docere intendit, a mutabilibus alicuius temporis cogitationibus distinguuntur et sine iis exprimi possunt, nihilominus interdum fieri potest, ut illae veritates etiam a Sacro Magisterio proferantur verbis, quae huiusmodi cogitationum vestigia secumferant...

5. Not Corrupting the Notion of the Church's Infallibility

... With regard to ... [this] historical condition, it must first be observed that the meaning of the pronouncements of faith depend partly upon the expressive power of the language used at a certain point in time and in particular circumstances. 4539

Moreover, it sometimes happens that some dogmatic truth is first expressed incompletely (but not falsely), and at a later date, when considered in a broader context of faith or human knowledge, it receives a fuller and more perfect expression.

In addition, when the Church makes new pronouncements, she intends to confirm or clarify what is in some way contained in Sacred Scripture or in previous expressions of tradition; but at the same time she usually has the intention of solving certain questions or removing certain errors. All these things have to be taken into account in order that these pronouncements may be properly interpreted.

Finally, even though the truths that the Church intends to teach through her dogmatic formulas are distinct from the changeable conceptions of a given epoch and can be expressed without them, nevertheless it can sometimes happen that these truths may be enunciated by the sacred Magisterium in terms that bear traces of such conceptions...

As for the meaning of dogmatic formulas, this remains ever true and constant in the Church, even when it is expressed with greater clarity or more developed. 4540

The faithful, therefore, must shun the opinion, first, that dogmatic formulas (or some category of them) cannot signify truth in a determinate way but can only offer changeable approximations to it, which to a certain extent distort or alter it; secondly, that these formulas signify the truth only in an indeterminate way, this truth being like a goal that is constantly being sought by means of such approximations. Those who hold such an opinion do not avoid dogmatic relativism, and they corrupt the concept of the Church's infallibility relative to the truth to be taught or held in a determinate way...

Priesthood of Christ*

II de potestate, quae sacerdotii ministerialis est propria, haec docuit: “Si quilibet credentes baptizare potest, sacerdotis tamen est aedificationem Corporis sacrificio eucharistico perficere”;¹ atque: “Idem vero Dominus, inter fideles, ut in unum coalescerent corpus in quo “omnia membra non eundem actum habent” [Rm 12:4], quosdam instituit ministros qui, in societate fidelium, sacra Ordinis potestate pollerent Sacrificium offerendi et peccata remittendi.”²

Haud dissimili modo secundus Generalis Coetus Synodi Episcoporum iure asseruit solum sacerdotem valere personam Christi agere ad praesidendum sacrificiali convivio idque perficiendum, in quo Populus Dei oblationi Christi consociatur.³

Praetermissis nunc quaestionibus de singulorum sacramentorum ministris, e Sacrae Traditionis et Sacri Magisterii testificatione constat christifideles qui, ordinatione sacerdotali non suscepta, proprio ausu munus sibi sumant eucharistiam conficiendi, id non solum prorsus illicite, sed etiam invalide tentare. Huiusmodi autem abusus, sicubi irrepererint, a Pastoribus Ecclesiae reprimendos esse patet.

the following concerning the power belonging to the ministerial priesthood: “Though everyone can baptize the faithful, the priest alone can complete the building up of the Body in the eucharistic sacrifice.”¹ And again: “The same Lord, in order that the faithful might form one body in which ‘all the members have not the same function’ [Rom 12:4], appointed some ministers within the society of believers who by the power of orders would be capable of offering the sacrifice and of forgiving sins.”²

In the same way the second General Assembly of the Synod of Bishops rightly affirmed that only the priest can act in the person of Christ and preside over and perform the sacrificial banquet in which the people of God are united with the oblation of Christ.³

Passing over at this point questions regarding the ministers of the various sacraments, the evidence of sacred tradition and of the sacred Magisterium make it clear that the faithful who have not received priestly ordination and who take upon themselves the office of performing the Eucharist attempt to do so not only in a completely illicit way but also invalidly. Such an abuse, wherever it may occur, must clearly be eliminated by the pastors of the Church.

4550–4552: Declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on Abortion Quaestio de abortu procurato, November 18, 1974

Ed.: AAS 66 (1974): 730–37.

Procured Abortion

4550 1. Quaestio de abortu procurato deque lege quae abortus libertatem forte concedat, fere ubique acrium disceptationum argumentum evasit. Quae disceptationes minoris gravitatis profecto essent, si de vitae humanae causa non ageretur, quae primordiale bonum est, necessario tuendum ac promovendum. Id cuique patet, quamquam multi rationes quaerere conantur, ut, contra manifestam rei veritatem, etiam abortus huic causae inservire possit. Ac mirum non videri non potest, quod dum ex una parte gliscere cernimus apertam reclamationem adversus poenam capitis et quodlibet belli genus, ex altera vero parte animadvertimus magis magisque abortus libertatem vindicari, sive absolutam sive certis limitibus circumscriptam, qui quidem laxiores usque fiunt.

1. The problem of procured abortion and of its possible legal liberalization has become more or less everywhere the subject of impassioned discussions. These debates would be less grave were it not a question of human life, a primordial value, which must be protected and promoted. Everyone understands this, although many look for reasons, even against all evidence, to promote the use of abortion. One cannot but be astonished to see a simultaneous increase of unqualified protests against the death penalty and every form of war and the vindication of the liberalization of abortion, either in its entirety or in ever broader indications.

Sterilization

1. Quaecumque sterilizatio quae ex seipsa, seu ex natura et conditione propria, immediate hoc solummodo efficit ut facultas generativa incapax reddatur ad consequendam procreationem, habenda est pro sterilizatione directa, prout haec intelligitur in declarationibus Magisterii Pontificii, speciatim Pii XII.¹

Absolute, ergo, interdicta manet iuxta doctrinam Ecclesiae, non obstante quacumque recta intentione subiectiva agentium consulendi curae vel praeventioni mali sive physici sive psychici, quod ex praegnatione praevideatur vel timetur eventurum. Et quidem graviore ratione interdicatur sterilizatio ipsius facultatis, quam sterilizatio singulorum actuum, cum illa statum sterilitatis in personam inducat, fere semper irreversibilem.

The Church is too conscious of the fact that it belongs to her vocation to defend man against everything that could disintegrate or lessen his dignity to remain silent on such a topic. Because the Son of God became man, there is no man who is not his brother in humanity and who is not called to become a Christian in order to receive salvation from him.

... 10. In regard to the mutual rights and duties of the person and of society, it belongs to moral teaching to enlighten consciences; it belongs to the law to specify and organize external behavior. There is precisely a certain number of rights that society is not in a position to grant since these rights precede society; but society has the function to preserve and to enforce them. These are the greater part of those that are today called “human rights” and that our age boasts of having formulated. 4551

11. The first (right) of the human person is the right to life. He has other goods, and some are more precious, but this one is fundamental—the condition of all the others. Hence it must be protected above all others. It does not belong to society, nor does it belong to public authority, in any form to recognize this right for some and not for others: all discrimination is evil, whether it be founded on race, sex, color, or religion. It is not recognition by another that constitutes this right. This right is antecedent to its recognition; it demands recognition, and it is strictly unjust to refuse it. 4552

1. Any sterilization whose sole, immediate effect, of itself, that is, of its own nature and condition, is to render the generative faculty incapable of procreation is to be regarded as direct sterilization, as this is understood in statements of the pontifical Magisterium, especially of Pius XII.¹ 4560

It remains absolutely forbidden, therefore, according to the teaching of the Church, even when it is motivated by a subjectively right intention of curing or preventing a physical or psychological ill-effect that is foreseen or feared as a result of pregnancy. The sterilization of the faculty itself is even more strongly prohibited than is the sterilization of individual acts, since it is nearly always irreversible.

Neque invocari potest ullum mandatum publicae auctoritatis, quae ex titulo necessarii boni communis velit imponere sterilizationem directam, quippe quae laederet dignitatem et inviolabilitatem personae humanae.² Pariter invocari non potest in casu principium totalitatis, quo iustificantur interventus in organa propter maius bonum personae; sterilitas enim in se intenta non dirigitur ad personae bonum integrale recte intentum “rerum bonorumque ordine servato”,³ [739] si quidem eius bono ethico, quod est supremum, nocet, cum ex proposito privet essentiali elemento praevisam libereque electam activitatem sexualem. Negat, tamen, significationem doctrinalem huic facto, ut tali, attribui posse ad constituendum “locum theologicum” quem invocare valeant fideles ut, derelicto Magisterio authentico, adhaereant sententiis privatorum theologorum ab eo dissentientibus.¹

4570–4579: Apostolic Exhortation Evangelii nuntiandi, December 8, 1975

The evolution of the Catholic Church into a multicultural world Church made necessary a new formulation of the concept of evangelization. Ten years after the conclusion of the Second Vatican Council and as a recapitulation of the deliberations of the Roman Synod of Bishops of 1974 on the theme of “evangelization in the world today”, Paul VI issued this apostolic exhortation, which, referring to the conciliar decree Ad gentes on missionary activity (AAS 58 [1966]: 947–90), emphasizes the local and particular Churches as the concrete forms of the universal Church, speaks of the evangelization of cultures, and adopts as its own the Latin-American “option for the poor” (cf. *4493–4496).

The Message of Jesus

4570 6. Quod testimonium Christus Dominus de se ipse perhibuit et S. Lucas rettulit in Evangelio suo—“Oportet me evangelizare verbum [regnum] Dei”¹—magnum sane momentum habet, quippe quod uno vocabulo totum Iesu munus ac mandatum definiat: “Quia ideo missus sum.”² Quae quidem verba plenam suam significationem prae se ferunt, si cum superioribus textus evangelici locis comparantur, ubi Christus sibi attribuit sententiam Isaiae prophetae: “Spiritus Domini super me; propter quod unxit me, evangelizare pauperibus misit me.”³

Nor can any public authority justify the imposition of sterilization as being necessary for the common good, since it damages the dignity and inviolability of the human person.² Neither can one invoke the principle of totality in this case, the principle that would justify interference with organs for the greater good of the person. Sterility induced as such does not contribute to the person’s integral good, properly understood, “keeping things and values in proper perspective”.³ Rather, it does damage to a person’s ethical good, which is the highest, since it deprives subsequent freely chosen sexual acts of an essential element. Hence article 20 of the ethical code published by the conference held in 1971 faithfully reflects the correct teaching, and its observance should be urged.

2. The congregation reaffirms this traditional Catholic teaching. It is aware that many theologians dissent from it, but it denies that this fact as such has any doctrinal significance, as though it were a theological source that the faithful might invoke, forsaking the authentic Magisterium for the private opinions of theologians who dissent from it.¹

6. The witness that the Lord gives of himself and that St. Luke gathered together in his Gospel—“I must proclaim the good news of the kingdom of God”¹—without doubt has enormous consequences, for it sums up the whole mission of Jesus: “That is what I was sent to do.”² These words take on their full significance if one links them with the previous verses, in which Christ has just applied to himself the words of the prophet Isaiah: “The Spirit of the Lord has been given to me, for he has anointed me. He has sent me to bring the good news to the poor.”³

Laetum nuntium de civitate in civitatem afferre, pauperioribus in primis, qui saepe ad illud accipiendum sunt animo propensiores, ut declaretur impletas esse promissiones Foederis, a Deo oblati: hoc proprium munus est, ad quod exsequendum Iesus se esse a Patre missum profitetur. Omnes quoque Christi mysterii partes—Incarnatio ipsa, miracula, doctrina, discipulorum vocatio, missio duodecim Apostolorum, crux et Resurrectio, perpetua inter suos praesentia—spectaverunt ad ipsam Evangelii nuntiandi actionem. . . .

[10] . . . 9. Tamquam Boni sui Nuntii caput et veluti centrum, Christus salutem annuntiat, scilicet magnum Dei donum, quod habendum est non solum liberatio ab iis omnibus, quibus homo opprimitur, sed potissimum a peccato et a Maligno liberatio cum gaudio coniuncta, quo quis fruitur, cum Deum cognoscit et ab Eo cognoscitur, Eum videt, in Eo fidenter quiescit. Haec omnia fieri incipiunt per Christi vitae decursum atque eius morte ac resurrectione perpetuo comparantur, sed inter historiae [11] vices in patientia sunt provehenda, donec explete perficiantur die supremi illius Christi adventus, qui quando venturus sit nemo novit praeter Patrem.¹

10. Hoc Regnum atque haec Salus—quae verba quaedam quasi claves sunt ad intellegendam Iesu Christi evangelizationem—a quolibet homine ut gratia ac misericordia accipi possunt; eadem tamen unusquisque simul consequi debet per vim—ea, ut ait Dominus, violenti rapiunt¹—per laborem et dolorem, per vitam ad Evangelii normas traductam, per sui abnegationem et crucem, per spiritum evangelicarum Beatitudinum. At in primis eadem bona quisque consequi potest per plenam sui ipsius spiritualem renovationem, quae in Evangelio metánoia appellatur, scilicet per totius hominis conversionem, quo ipsius mens et cor penitus immutantur.²

Siquidem evangelizandi munus habendum est gratia ac vocatio Ecclesiae propria, verissimamque eius indolem exprimit. Ecclesia evangelizandi causa exstat, id est ut praedicet ac doceat verbum Dei, ut per eam donum gratiae ad nos perveniat, ut peccatores cum Deo reconcilientur, ut denique Christi sacrificium in perpetuum repraesentet in Missa celebranda, quae eius mortis eiusque gloriosae Resurrectionis memoriale est.

Going from town to town, preaching to the poorest—and frequently the most receptive—the joyful news of the fulfillment of the promises and of the covenant offered by God is the mission for which Jesus declares that he is sent by the Father. And all the aspects of his mystery—the Incarnation itself, his miracles, his teaching, the gathering together of the disciples, the sending out of the Twelve, the Cross and the Resurrection, the permanence of his presence in the midst of his own—were components of his evangelizing activity. . . .

. . . 9. As the kernel and center of his good news, 4571 Christ proclaims salvation, this great gift of God that is liberation from everything that oppresses man but that is above all liberation from sin and the Evil One, in the joy of knowing God and being known by him, of seeing him, and of being given over to him. All of this is begun during the life of Christ and definitively accomplished by his death and Resurrection. But it must be patiently carried on during the course of history, in order to be realized fully on the day of the final coming of Christ, whose date is known to no one except the Father.¹

10. This kingdom and this salvation, which are the 4572 key words of Jesus Christ’s evangelization, are available to every man as grace and mercy, and yet at the same time each individual must gain them by force—they belong to the violent, says the Lord,¹ through toil and suffering, through a life lived according to the gospel, through abnegation and the cross, through the spirit of the beatitudes. But above all each individual gains them through a total interior renewal that the Gospel calls metánoia; it is a radical conversion, a profound change of mind and heart.²

14. . . . The Church knows this. She has a vivid awareness 4573 of the fact that the Savior’s words, “I must proclaim the good news of the kingdom of God”,¹ apply in all truth to herself. She willingly adds with St. Paul: “Not that I boast of preaching the gospel, since it is a duty that has been laid on me; I should be punished if I did not preach it.”² . . .

Evangelizing is in fact the grace and vocation proper to the Church, her deepest identity. She exists in order to evangelize, that is to say, in order to preach and teach, to be the channel of the gift of grace, to reconcile sinners with God, and to perpetuate Christ’s sacrifice in the Mass, which is the memorial of his death and glorious Resurrection.

Evangelization and Culture

- 4574 [17] 18. Ecclesia sentit evangelizare idem revera esse ac Bonum Nuntium exportare in omnes usque coetus generis humani, ut, dum hoc propria vi intrinsecus penetrat, humanitatem ipsam novam efficiat: “Ecce nova facio omnia.”¹...
- 4575 [18] 19. ... non solum quidem Ecclesiae interest Evangelium praedicare in latioribus semper locorum finibus illudve hominum multitudinibus usque maioribus, sed ipsius etiam Evangelii potentia tangere et quasi evertere normas iudicandi, bona quae plus momenti habent, studia ac rationes cogitandi, motus impulsores et vitae exemplaria generis humani, quae cum Dei verbo salutisque consilio repugnant.
- 4576 20. ... evangelizare oportere—non foris, tamquam si ornamentum aliquod vel exterior color addatur, sed intus, ex vitae centro et ad vitae radices—seu Evangelio perfundere culturas atque etiam culturam hominis, secundum latissimum illum ac plenissimum sensum, quem hae voces accipiunt in Constitutione Gaudium et spes,¹ cum inde proceditur semper ab ipsa persona humana, semperque reditur ad necessitudinem inter personas atque coniunctionem earum cum Deo.
- 4577 Evangelium, ac proinde evangelizatio, aequari sane non possunt cum aliqua cultura, cum soluta sint ab omnibus culturis. Nihilominus Regnum, quod Evangelio nuntiatur, in vitae usum deducitur ab hominibus, qui sua certa cultura imbuti sunt, atque in Regno aedificando necessario usurpanda sunt quaedam elementa culturae et culturarum humanarum. Etsi [19] Evangelium et evangelizatio ad nullam proprie culturam pertinent, tamen non eiusmodi sunt plane, ut cum iis componi nequeant, sed contra valent easdem penetrare, neque ulli deserviunt.
- 4578 Discidium inter Evangelium et culturam sine dubio detrimentosus nostri temporis casus est, sicut etiam aliis aetatibus fuit. Proinde, oportet omnem opem operamque impendere, ut sedulo studio humana cultura, sive potius ipsae culturae evangelizentur. Renasci eas necesse est ex sua cum Bono Nuntio coniunctione. Verumtamen, huiusmodi coniunctio non eveniet, nisi Bonus Nuntius proclamabitur.
18. For the Church, evangelizing means bringing the good news into all the strata of humanity and, through its influence, transforming humanity from within and making it new: “Now I am making the whole of creation new.”¹...
19. ... For the Church it is a question not only of preaching the gospel in ever wider geographic areas or to ever greater numbers of people, but also of affecting and, as it were, upsetting, through the power of the gospel, mankind’s criteria of judgment, determining values, points of interest, lines of thought, sources of inspiration, and models of life that are in contrast with the Word of God and the plan of salvation.
20. ... What matters is to evangelize man’s culture and cultures (not in a purely decorative way, as it were, by applying a thin veneer, but in a vital way, in depth and right to their very roots), in the wide and rich sense that these terms have in Gaudium et spes,¹ always taking the person as one’s starting point and always coming back to the relationships of people among themselves and with God.
- The gospel and, therefore, evangelization are certainly not identical with culture, and they are independent in regard to all cultures. Nevertheless, the kingdom that the gospel proclaims is lived by men who are profoundly linked to a culture, and the building up of the kingdom cannot avoid borrowing the elements of human culture or cultures. Though independent of cultures, the gospel and evangelization are not necessarily incompatible with them; rather they are capable of permeating them all without becoming subject to any one of them.
- The split between the gospel and culture is without a doubt the drama of our time, just as it was of other times. Therefore every effort must be made to ensure a full evangelization of culture, or, more correctly, of cultures. They have to be regenerated by an encounter with the gospel. But this encounter will not take place if the gospel is not proclaimed.

Evangelization and the Promotion of Man

- 4579 [26] 31. Revera inter evangelizationem et promotionem humanam, seu progressionem et liberationem, interveniunt intima vincula coniunctionis: vincula sunt
31. Between evangelization and human advancement—development and liberation—there are in fact profound links. These include links of an anthropological order, ordinis anthropologici, quia homo evangelizandus non est aliquid a rebus abstractum, sed persona obnoxia quaestionibus socialibus et oeconomicis; vincula sunt etiam ordinis theologici, quia consilium creationis segregari non potest a consilio redemptionis, quae pertingit usque ad condiciones valde concretas iniustitiae evincendae itemque iustitiae reparandae; vincula sunt etiam ordinis summe evangelici, qui est ordo caritatis: quo modo, enim, mandatum novum proclamari potest, nisi cum iustitia et pace promovetur vera ac germana progressio hominis?

Istud volumus afferre, cum monuimus non esse admittendum, in evangelizatione neglegi “posse vel debere gravitatem maximam . . . illarum quaestionum, quae hodie tantopere agitantur et quae respiciunt iustitiam, liberationem, progressionem et pacem in mundo. Si enim istud fiat, etiam ignoretur doctrina Evangelii de amore erga proximum patientem et egentem.”¹ because the man who is to be evangelized is not an abstract being but is subject to social and economic questions. They also include links in the theological order, since one cannot dissociate the plan of creation from the plan of redemption. The latter plan touches the very concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored. They include links of the eminently evangelical order, which is that of charity: How in fact can one proclaim the new commandment without promoting in justice and in peace the true, authentic advancement of man?

We Ourselves have taken care to point this out by recalling that it is impossible to accept “that in evangelization one could or should ignore the importance of the problems so much discussed today, concerning justice, liberation, development, and peace in the world. This would be to forget the lesson that comes to us from the gospel concerning love of our neighbor who is suffering and in need.”¹

Ed.: AAS 68 (1976): 78–86.

The Dignity of Man and the Divine Law

3. Nostrae aetatis homines magis in dies sibi persuasum habent personae humanae dignitatem vocationemque id postulare, ut ipsi, rationis lumine ducti, bona virtutesque naturae suae insita detegant, continenter promoveant, in vitaeque suae [79] actionem traducant, eo quidem consilio, ut magis in dies progredi possint.

Attamen in re morali aestimanda homo nequaquam arbitrio suo procedere potest: “In imo conscientiae legem detegit, quam ipse sibi non dat, sed cui oboedire debet. . . . Nam homo legem in corde scriptam habet, cui parere dignitas eius est et secundum quam ipse iudicabitur.”¹

Praeterea nobis christianis Deus per revelationem suam notum fecit suum salutis consilium, ac proposuit tamquam supremam atque immutabilem vitae normam, Christum, Salvatorem et Sanctificatorem, per doctrinam et exempla Ipsius, qui dixit: “Ego sum lux mundi: qui sequitur me non ambulat in tenebris, sed habebit lumen vitae.”²

Homini, igitur, dignitas vere promoveri nequit, nisi ordo essentialis eius naturae servatur. Fatendum quidem est, per civilis cultus decursum bene multas rerum

3. The people of our time are more and more convinced that the human person’s dignity and vocation demand that they should discover, by the light of their own intelligence, the values innate in their nature, that they should ceaselessly develop these values and realize them in their lives, in order to achieve an ever greater development. 4580

In moral matters man cannot make value judgments according to his personal whim: “In the depths of his conscience, man detects a law that he does not impose on himself but that holds him to obedience. . . . For man has in his heart a law written by God. To obey it is the very dignity of man; according to it he will be judged.”¹

Moreover, through his revelation God has made known to us Christians his plan of salvation, and he has held up to us Christ, the Savior and Sanctifier, in his teaching and example, as the supreme and immutable Law of life: “I am the light of the world; anyone who follows me will not be walking in the dark, he will have the light of life.”²

Therefore, there can be no true promotion of man’s dignity unless the essential order of his nature is respected. Of course, in the history of civilization many condiciones vitaeque humanae necessitates mutatas esse atque in posterum etiam mutatum iri; at quilibet morum profectus et quodlibet vivendi genus contineri debent intra fines, quos statuunt immutabilia principia, quae innituntur in elementis constitutivis et relationibus essentialibus cuiusque humanae personae; quae elementa ac relationes historica adiuncta transcendunt.

Haec principia fundamentalia, quae humana ratio percipere potest, continentur in “lege divina, aeterna, obiectiva et universali, qua Deus consilio sapientiae et dilectionis suae mundum universum viasque communitatis ordinat, dirigit, gubernat. Huius suae legis Deus hominem participem reddit, ita ut providentia divina suaviter disponere, veritatem incommutabilem magis magisque cognoscere possit.”³ Haec autem lex divina nostrae cognitioni pervia est. [80]

The Doctrine of the Church and the Natural Law

At vero revelatio divina atque etiam, in rerum ordine sibi proprio, naturalis rationis sapientia, cum germanas attingunt humani generis necessitates, simul necessario in luce ponunt leges immutabiles in elementis constitutivis naturae hominis insitas, quae eadem apparent in omnibus viventibus qui ratione praediti sunt.

Accedit, quod a Christo Ecclesia instituta est tamquam “columna et firmamentum veritatis”.¹ Ipsa, auxiliante Spiritu Sancto, sine intermissione custodit et sine errore tradit veritates ordinis moralis, atque authentice interpretatur non solum legem positivam revelatam, “sed etiam principia ordinis moralis ex ipsa natura humana profluentia”,² quae spectant ad plenum hominis profectum eiusque sanctificationem. Ecclesia reapse per totum suae historiae decursum semper retinuit certa legis naturalis praecepta vim habere absolutam atque immutabilem, eorumque violationem censuit doctrinae et spiritui Evangelii repugnare.

of the concrete conditions and needs of human life have changed and will continue to change. But all evolution of morals and every type of life must be kept within the limits imposed by the immutable principles based upon every human person’s constitutive elements and essential relations—elements and relations that transcend historical contingency.

These fundamental principles, which can be grasped by reason, are contained in “the divine law—eternal, objective, and universal—whereby God orders, directs, and governs the entire universe and all the ways of the human community, by a plan conceived in wisdom and love. Man has been made by God to participate in this law, with the result that, under the gentle disposition of divine providence, he can come to perceive ever increasingly the unchanging truth.”³ This divine law is accessible to our minds.

4. Hence, those many people are in error who today assert that one can find neither in human nature nor in the revealed law any absolute and immutable norm to serve for particular actions other than the one that expresses itself in the general law of charity and respect for human dignity. As a proof of their assertion, they put forward the view that so-called norms of the natural law or precepts of Sacred Scripture are to be regarded only as given expressions of a form of a particular human culture at a certain moment of history.

But in fact, divine revelation and, in its own proper order, the wisdom of natural reason emphasize the authentic exigencies of human nature. They thereby necessarily manifest the existence of immutable laws inscribed in the constitutive elements of human nature and which are revealed to be identical in all beings endowed with reason.

Furthermore, Christ instituted his Church as “the pillar and bulwark of truth”.¹ With the Holy Spirit’s assistance, she ceaselessly preserves and transmits without error the truths of the moral order, and she authentically interprets not only the revealed positive law but “also those principles of the moral order that have their origin in human nature itself”² and that concern man’s full development and sanctification. Now in fact the Church throughout her history has always considered a certain number of precepts of the natural law as having an absolute and immutable value, and in their transgression she has seen a contradiction of the teaching and spirit of the gospel.

Huiusmodi opinio christianae doctrinae adversatur, quae statuit qualemcumque genitalem hominis actionem matrimonii terminis contineri debere. Quantumvis enim firmum est eorum propositum, qui praematuris hisce iunctionibus sese vinciunt, nihilominus hae iunctiones haud sinunt, ut sinceritas ac fidelitas mutuae necessitudinis inter viri ac mulieris personas in tuto ponantur, nec praesertim ut haec necessitudo a cupiditatum et arbitrii mobilitate protegatur....

Pastoral Care and Homosexuality

[85] ... Etenim, secundum obiectivum rerum ordinem moralem iunctiones homosexuales sunt actus, qui sua necessaria et essentiali ordinatione privantur. In Sacris Scripturis reprobantur uti graves depravationes, immo exhibentur tamquam funesta repudiationis Dei consecutio.¹ Haec quidem Divinarum Scripturam sententia non sinit, ut concludatur eos omnes, qui ista deformitate laborent, hac de causa iam in personali culpa esse; nihilominus testatur actus homosexualitatis suapte intrinseca natura esse inordinatos, neque unquam ullo modo approbari posse.

Pastoral Care and Masturbation

9. Saepe hodie in dubium vocatur vel aperte negatur tradita catholicae Ecclesiae doctrina, secundum quam masturbatio gravem in re morali deordinationem constituit. Psychologia et sociologia, uti aiunt, ostendunt illam, praesertim in adolescentibus, ad maturescentem sexualitatem communiter pertinere, ac nihil propterea verae et gravis culpae in ea contineri, nisi quatenus consulto quis se dederit solitariae voluptati in eo ipso circumclusae (“ipsatio”); quo in casu actum utique omnino op[er]ari[86] poni communioni amoris inter diversi

... 7. Today there are many who vindicate the right to sexual union before marriage, at least in those cases where a firm intention to marry and an affection that is already in some way conjugal in the psychology of the subjects require this completion, which they judge to be connatural. This is especially the case when the celebration of the marriage is impeded by circumstances or when this intimate relationship seems necessary in order for love to be preserved.

This opinion is contrary to Christian doctrine, which states that every genital act must be within the framework of marriage. However firm the intention of those who practice such premature sexual relations may be, the fact remains that these relations cannot ensure, in sincerity and fidelity, the interpersonal relationship between a man and a woman, nor especially can they protect this relationship from whims and caprices....

... 8. At the present time there are those who, basing themselves on observations in the psychological order, have begun to judge indulgently, and even to excuse completely, homosexual relations between certain people. This they do in opposition to the constant teaching of the Magisterium and to the moral sense of the Christian people....

For according to the objective moral order, homosexual relations are acts that lack an essential and indispensable finality. In Sacred Scripture they are condemned as a serious depravity and even presented as the sad consequence of rejecting God.¹ This judgment of Scripture does not of course permit us to conclude that all those who suffer from this anomaly are personally responsible for it, but it does attest to the fact that homosexual acts are intrinsically disordered and cannot be approved of in any way.

9. The traditional Catholic doctrine that masturbation constitutes a grave moral disorder is often called into doubt or expressly denied today. It is said that psychology and sociology show that it is a normal phenomenon of sexual development, especially among the young. It is stated that there is real and serious fault only in the measure that the subject deliberately indulges in solitary pleasure closed in on self (“ipsation”), because in this case the act would indeed be radically opposed to the loving communion between persons of different sex that sexus personas, quam quidem contendunt praecipuum esse propositum usus sexualis facultatis.

Haec tamen opinio et doctrinae et consuetudini pastoralis Ecclesiae catholicae adversatur. Qualiscumque vis est aliquarum argumentationum indolis biologicae vel philosophicae, quibus interdum usi fuerunt theologi, revera tum Ecclesiae Magisterium—per decursum constantis traditionis—tum moralis christifidelium sensus sine dubitatione firmiter tenent masturbationem esse actum intrinsece graviterque inordinatum.¹

some hold is what is principally sought in the use of the sexual faculty.

This opinion, however, is contradictory to the teaching and pastoral practice of the Catholic Church. Whatever the force of certain arguments of a biological and philosophical nature, which have sometimes been used by theologians, in fact both the Magisterium of the Church—in the course of a constant tradition—and the moral sense of the faithful have declared without hesitation that masturbation is an intrinsically and seriously disordered act.¹

4590–4606: Declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith Inter insigniores on the Question of the Admission of Women to Priestly Ministry, October 15, 1976

In 1975, the Anglican Churches of Canada and England had approved, in principle, the admission of women to priestly ministry. In two letters addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, F. D. Coggan (November 30, 1975, and March 23, 1976: AAS 68 [1976]: 599–601), Paul VI had explained why the Roman Catholic Church rejects the priestly ordination of women. The declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, on behalf of the pope, attributes a normative force to the tradition of ordination that goes back to Christ, and it argues, in a positive manner, for the “naturalis similitudo” (*4600) that must exist between Christ and his servant, who acts “in persona Christi”. This argument is not a “strict proof”, but it does illuminate the doctrine by means of the “analogy of faith” (*4598). The declaration does not take a position on the issue of women in the diaconate.

Ed.: AAS 69 (1977): 101–15.

I. Traditio perpetua ab Ecclesia servata

4590 Numquam Ecclesia catholica sensit presbyteralem vel episcopalem ordinationem mulieribus valide conferri posse....

II. Quomodo Christus se gesserit

4592 Christus Iesus nullam mulierem inter Duodecim adscivit. Si ita se gessit, id non propterea evenit, quod sui temporis moribus cedebat, nam ipsius cum mulieribus agendi ratio modo civium suorum prorsus dissimilis erat, et ab eorum observantia ille voluntarie audacterque se removebat....

I. Preserving the Constant Tradition of the Church

The Catholic Church has never felt that priestly or episcopal ordination can be validly conferred on women....

The Church’s tradition in the matter has thus been so firm in the course of the centuries that the Magisterium has not felt the need to intervene in order to formulate a principle that was not attacked or to defend a law that was not challenged. But each time that this tradition had the occasion to manifest itself, it witnessed to the Church’s desire to conform to the model left to her by the Lord.

The same tradition has been faithfully safeguarded by the Churches of the East. Their unanimity on this point is all the more remarkable since in many other questions their discipline admits of a great diversity. At the present time, these same Churches refuse to associate themselves with requests directed toward securing the accession of women to priestly ordination.

II. The Attitude of Christ Himself

Jesus Christ did not call any woman to become part of the Twelve. If he acted in this way, it was not in order to conform to the customs of his time, for his attitude toward women was quite different from that of his milieu, and he deliberately and courageously broke with it....

*4584¹ Cf. Leo IX, letter Ad splendidum nitentis (*687f.); decree of the Holy Office, March 2, 1679 (*2149); Pius XII, address of October 8, 1953 (AAS 45 [1953]: 678); address of May 19, 1956 (AAS 48 [1956]: 472f.).

[103] ... Haec vero omnia—id fatendum est—non quidem talem evidentiā afferunt, ut cuique proxime perspicua sint, quod quidem mirandum non est, siquidem quaestiones, quas movet Verbum Dei, altiores sunt quam ut responsa pateant; nam ad intellegendum tam Iesu missionis, quam Scripturae ipsius ultimum sensum, non satis est mere historicam textuum enarrationem instruere. Hac tamen in re agnoscendus est velut fascis colligatus factorum, quae in idem indicandum vergunt, magisque admirationem movent quod Iesus munus apostolicum¹ mulieribus non concedidit. ...

III. Apostoli quomodo se gesserint

Die autem Pentecostes, Spiritu Sancto repleti sunt omnes, viri ac mulieres [cf. Act 2:1; 1:14], attamen nonnisi “Petrus cum undecim levavit vocem suam”, ut nuntiaret in Iesu adimpletas esse prophetias [Act 2:14].

IV. Quae Christus et apostoli fecerunt, norma sunt perpetua

[105] ... Etsi hic Christi et Apostolorum modus se gerendi a tota persaecla usque ad nos firma traditione ut norma habitus est, quaestio tamen oritur, num hodie aliter se gerere Ecclesiae liceat. Sunt qui affirmative respondeant, pluribus rationibus fulti, quas pervestigare oportet.

Asseverant praesertim Iesum et Apostolos sic egisse, quia mores illius temporis regionisque necessario observabant, nec aliam causam fuisse, cur Christus ministerium neque mulieribus neque ipsi Matri suae committeret, nisi quod aliter agere prohiberent eiusdem temporis adiuncta. Nemo tamen probavit, ac reapse probari non potest, eiusmodi agendi modum solum a rationibus socialibus et cultus humani propriis esse profectum. Revera, cum Evangelia supra examinarem, Iesum [106] contra conspeximus ab opinionibus suorum coaetaneorum se longe distraxisse, ea auferendo discrimina, quibus mulieres a viris separabantur.

... It is true that these facts do not make the matter immediately obvious. This is no surprise, for the questions that the Word of God brings before us go beyond the obvious. In order to reach the ultimate meaning of the mission of Jesus and the ultimate meaning of Scripture, a purely historical exegesis of the texts cannot suffice. But it must be recognized that we have here a number of convergent indications that make all the more remarkable the fact that Jesus did not entrust the apostolic charge¹ to women. ...

III. The Practice of the Apostles

The apostolic community remained faithful to the attitude of Jesus toward women. Although Mary occupied a privileged place in the little circle of those gathered in the Upper Room after the Lord's Ascension [cf. Acts 1:14], it was not she who was called to enter the College of the Twelve at the time of the election that resulted in the choice of Matthias; those who were put forward were two disciples whom the Gospels do not even mention.

On the day of Pentecost, the Holy Spirit filled them all, men and women [cf. Acts 2:1; 1:14], yet the proclamation of the fulfillment of the prophecies in Jesus was made only by “Peter and the Eleven” [Acts 2:14].

IV. The Perpetual Norm of the Practice of Christ and the Apostles

... Could the Church today depart from this attitude of Jesus and the apostles, which has been considered as normative by the whole of tradition up to our own day? Various arguments have been put forward in favor of a positive reply to this question, and these must now be examined.

It has been claimed in particular that the attitude of Jesus and the apostles is explained by the influence of their milieu and their times. It is said that, if Jesus did not entrust to women and not even to his Mother a ministry assimilating them to the Twelve, this was because historical circumstances did not permit him to do so. No one, however, has ever proved—and it is clearly impossible to prove—that this attitude is inspired only by social and cultural reasons. As we have seen, an examination of the Gospels shows, on the contrary, that Jesus broke with the prejudices of his time by widely contravening the discriminations practiced with regard *4593¹ Some people object that Jesus chose twelve men in order to realize an allegorical sign: he wanted to show by means of an image that the Twelve would play the role that had originally been given to the twelve tribes of Israel (cf. Mt 19:28; Lk 22:30). In these cited texts, however, he only affirmed that the Twelve would participate in the eschatological judgment. The essential reason for the choice of the Twelve (cf. Mk 3:14) is found rather in the totality of the mission to which they were called, namely, to represent Christ to the people and to continue his work.

Asseverari ergo non potest Iesum opportunitatis tantum rationem habuisse, cum mulieres in apostolicum coetum non adnumeraret. Eo minus Apostoli ad hunc morem observandum societatis cultusque adiunctis coacti sunt apud Graecos, quod illi haec discrimina ignorabant....

V. Ministeriale sacerdotium mysterii Christi luce contemplandum est

Quae Christi repraesentatio tunc altissimam sui significationem ac peculiarem prorsus modum assequitur, cum eucharistica celebratur synaxis, fons et centrum Ecclesiae unitatis, convivium sacrificale, quo populus Dei sacrificio Christi coniungitur: sacerdos, qui solus potestatem habet id perficiendi, agit non tantum virtute, quae ei a Christo confertur, sed in persona Christi,² huius partes sustinens, ita ut to women. One, therefore, cannot maintain that, by not calling women to enter the group of the apostles, Jesus was simply letting himself be guided by reasons of expediency. Still less would social and cultural conditions have forced the apostles to maintain this custom among the Greeks, where these forms of discrimination were not known....

V. The Ministerial Priesthood in Light of the Mystery of Christ

... Having recalled the Church's norm and the basis thereof, it seems useful and opportune to illustrate this norm by showing the profound fittingness that theological reflection discovers between the proper nature of the sacrament of orders, with its specific reference to the mystery of Christ, and the fact that only men have been called to receive priestly ordination. It is a question here, not of bringing forward a demonstrative argument, but of clarifying this teaching by the analogy of faith.

The Church's constant teaching, repeated and clarified by the Second Vatican Council and again recalled by the 1971 Synod of Bishops and by the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith in its declaration of June 24, 1973, declares that the bishop or the priest, in the exercise of his ministry, does not act in his own name, in persona propria: he represents Christ, who acts through him: "The priest truly acts in the place of Christ", as St. Cyprian already wrote in the third century.¹ It is this ability to represent Christ that St. Paul considered as characteristic of his apostolic function [cf. 2 Cor 5:20; Gal 4:14].

The supreme expression of this representation is found in the altogether special form it assumes in the celebration of the Eucharist, which is the source and center of the Church's unity, the sacrificial banquet in which the people of God are associated in the sacrifice of Christ: the priest, who alone has the power to perform it, then acts not only through the effective power conferred on him by Christ, but in persona Christi,² taking the role (Sacerdos quidem ministerialis, potestate sacra qua gaudet, populum sacerdotalem efformat ac regit, sacrificium eucharisticum in persona Christi conficit illudque nomine totius populi Dei offert: AAS 57 [1965]: 14; *4126); Lumen gentium, no. 28: "In virtue of the sacrament of orders, after the image of Christ, the supreme and eternal priest, ... they exercise in a supreme degree their sacred functions in the eucharistic cult or in the eucharistic assembly of the people, where they act in the person of Christ ..." (Vi sacramenti ordinis, ad imaginem Christi, summi atque aeterni Sacerdotis ... suum vero munus sacrum maxime exercent in eucharistico cultu vel synaxi, qua in persona Christi agentes ...: AAS 57 [1965]: 34; *4153); Decree on the Ministry and Life of Priests Presbyterorum ordinis, no. 2: "Priests, by the anointing of the Holy Spirit, are signed with a special character and so are configured to Christ the priest in such a way that they are able to act in the person of Christ the head" (Presbyteri, unctione Spiritus Sancti, speciali characterem signantur et sic Christo Sacerdoti configurantur, ita ut in persona Christi Capitis agere valeant: AAS 58 [1966]: 992); Presbyterorum ordinis, no. 13: "Priests, as ministers of the sacred mysteries, especially in the sacrifice of the

Eadem autem naturalis similitudo exigitur circa personas, quae circa res: cum enim repraesentare oportet sacramentaliter Christi agendi modum in Eucharistia, non haberetur haec naturalis similitudo, quae inter Christum eiusque ministrum postulatur, nisi partes a viro agerentur: secus difficile in eodem ministro imago Christi perspiceretur; siquidem Christus ipse fuit et permanet vir.

Sine dubio totius generis humani mulierum aequae ac virorum primogenitus est Christus: unitatem peccato fractam ita reparavit, ut iam non sit Iudaeus neque Graecus, non sit servus neque liber, non masculus et femina: omnes enim unus sunt in Christo Iesu [cf. Gal 3:28]. Attamen Verbum incarnatum est secundum sexum virilem; quae quidem res in facto innititur, quod, nedum excellentiam quandam viri super mulierem importet, ab oeconomia salutis seiungi non potest: etenim id cum universo consilio Dei consonat—sicut a Deo est revelatum—cuius nucleus est Foederis mysterium....

of Christ, to the point of being his very image, when he pronounces the words of consecration.³

The Christian priesthood is therefore of a sacramental nature: the priest is a sign, the supernatural effectiveness of which comes from the ordination received, but a sign that must be perceptible¹ and that the faithful must be able to recognize with ease. The whole sacramental economy is in fact based upon natural signs, on symbols imprinted upon the human psychology: “Sacramental signs”, says St. Thomas, “represent what they signify by natural resemblance.”²

The same natural resemblance is required for persons as for things: when Christ’s role in the Eucharist is to be expressed sacramentally, there would not be this “natural resemblance” that must exist between Christ and his minister if the role of Christ were not taken by a man: in such a case it would be difficult to see in the minister the image of Christ. For Christ himself was and remains a man.

Christ is of course the firstborn of all humanity, of women as well as men: the unity he reestablished after sin is such that there are no more distinctions between Jew and Greek, slave and free, male and female, but all are one in Christ Jesus [cf. Gal 3:28]. Nevertheless, the Incarnation of the Word took place according to the male sex: this is indeed a question of fact, and this fact, while not implying an alleged natural superiority of man over woman, cannot be disassociated from the economy of salvation: it is, indeed, in harmony with the entirety of God’s plan as God himself has revealed it and of which the mystery of the Covenant is the nucleus....

If one does justice to these reflections, one will better understand how well-founded is the basis of the Church’s practice; and one will conclude that the controversies raised in our days over the ordination of women are for all Christians a pressing invitation to meditate on the mystery of the Church, to study in greater detail the meaning of the episcopate and the priesthood, and to rediscover the real and preeminent place of the priest in the community of the baptized, of which he indeed forms

*4600 ¹ “Therefore, since the sacrament is a sign, with respect to those things done in the sacrament, there is required not only the reality but also the signification of the reality” (Quia cum sacramentum sit signum et in eis quae in sacramento aguntur, requiritur non solum res, sed significatio rei), says St. Thomas, explicitly to exclude the ordination of women: Super IV libros Sententiarum IV, d. 25, q. 2, a. 1, qc. 1 c (R. membrum quidem est, a qua tamen secernitur, quia in iis actionibus, in quibus ordinationis character requiritur, sacerdos, cum illa efficacia, quae sacramentorum est propria, imago est ac signum ipsius Christi, qui convocat, absolvit, Foederis sacrificium conficit.

ecclesiae mysterio*

4603 [114] Quapropter non patet, quomodo proponi possit mulierum ad sacerdotium accessus ob eam, quae hominibus agnoscitur, iurium aequabilitatem, quaeque etiam christianis contingit. Ad quod probandum, nonnumquam ut argumento utuntur verbis supra allatis Epistulae ad Galatas [3:28], quibus declaratur nullam esse iam in Christo distinctionem viri et mulieris. His tamen verbis non agitur de ministeriis Ecclesiae, sed tantum assertitur omnes aequaliter vocari, ut adoptionem filiorum Dei accipiant.

Praeterea ac potissimum, in ipsa ministerialis sacerdotii natura vehementer erraret, qui illud inter humana iura ascriberet, cum baptismus nemini ullum ius conferat ad publicum ministerium in Ecclesia adipiscendum. Sacerdotium enim alicui confertur, non ut ei honori sit vel commodo, sed ut Deo et Ecclesiae serviat; immo respondet vocationi peculiari et omnino gratuita: “Non vos me elegistis, sed ego elegi vos et posui vos” [Jo 15:16; cf. Hebr 5:4]. . . .

4606 Restat ergo, ut profundius meditemur inter maxima christianae professionis asserta genuinam illam baptizatorum aequabilitatem, quae ideo non est uniformitas, quia Ecclesia est corpus varietate membrorum distinctum, in quo suum cuique membro munus assignatur. Munera ergo distinguenda, non part but from which he is distinguished because, in the actions that call for the character of ordination, for the community he is—with all the effectiveness proper to the sacraments—the image and symbol of Christ himself who calls, forgives, and accomplishes the sacrifice of the Covenant.

VI. The Ministerial Priesthood in the Mystery of the Church

For this reason, one cannot see how it is possible to propose the admission of women to the priesthood in virtue of the equality of rights of the human person, an equality that holds good also for Christians. To this end, use is sometimes made of the text quoted above, from the Letter to the Galatians [3:28], which says that in Christ there is no longer any distinction between men and women. But this passage does not concern ministries: it only affirms the universal calling to divine filiation, which is the same for all.

Moreover, and above all, to consider the ministerial priesthood as a human right would be to misjudge its nature completely: baptism does not confer any personal title to public ministry in the Church. The priesthood is not conferred for the honor or advantage of the recipient, but for the service of God and the Church; it is the object of a specific and totally gratuitous vocation: “You did not choose me, no, I chose you; and I commissioned you” [Jn 15:16; cf. Heb 5:4]. . . .

Since the priesthood is a particular ministry of which the Church has received the charge and the control, authentication by the Church is indispensable here and is a constitutive part of the vocation: Christ chose “those he wanted” [Mk 3:13]. On the other hand, there is a universal vocation of all the baptized to the exercise of the royal priesthood by offering their lives to God and by giving witness for his praise.

Women who express a desire for the ministerial priesthood are doubtless motivated by the desire to serve Christ and the Church. And it is not surprising that, at a time when they are becoming more aware of the discriminations to which they have been subject, they should desire the ministerial priesthood itself. But it must not be forgotten that the priesthood does not form part of the rights of the individual but stems from the economy of the mystery of Christ and the Church. . . .

It therefore remains for us to meditate more deeply on the nature of the real equality of the baptized that is one of the great affirmations of Christianity: equality is in no way identity, for the Church is a differentiated body, in which each individual has his role. The roles are distinct and must not be confused; they do not favor permiscenda sunt, nulli alterius in alterum exsuperantiae favent, aemulationis nomen non praebent.

the superiority of some vis-à-vis the others, nor do they provide an excuse for jealousy.

4610–4635: Document of the Third General Assembly of the Latin American Bishops in Puebla (Mexico) La evangelización, February 13, 1979

The Third General Assembly of the Latin American episcopacy was opened on January 28, 1979, by John Paul II, who, from January 25 to February 1, undertook his first visit to Latin America. The document was developed, after two years in preparation, in twenty-one working commissions and numerous plenary and semi-plenary sessions. The text, passed with 179 affirmative votes and one abstention, was approved by the pope on March 23, 1979 (AAS 71 [1979]: 527f.). After the more socio-political emphasis of the document of Medellín, the document of Puebla devotes greater attention to the questions of popular religiosity and culture. It confirms “the option for the poor” (cf. *4493–4496).

The Full Truth regarding Jesus Christ

174. ... Entre los esfuerzos por presentar a Cristo como Señor de nuestra historia e inspirador de un verdadero cambio social y los intentos por limitarlo al campo de la conciencia individual, creemos necesario clarificar lo siguiente:

175. Es nuestro deber anunciar claramente, sin dejar lugar a dudas o equívocos, el misterio de la Encarnación: tanto la divinidad de Jesucristo tal como la profesa la fe de la Iglesia, como la realidad y la fuerza de su dimensión humana e histórica.

176. Debemos presentar a Jesús de Nazaret compartiendo la vida, las esperanzas y las angustias de su pueblo y mostrar que El es el Cristo creído, proclamado y celebrado por la Iglesia.

177. A Jesús de Nazaret, consciente de su misión: anunciador y realizador del Reino, fundador de su Iglesia, que tiene a Pedro por cimiento visible; a Jesucristo vivo, presente y actuante en su Iglesia y en la historia.

178. No podemos desfigurar, parcializar o ideologizar la persona de Jesucristo, ya sea convirtiéndolo en un político, un líder, un revolucionario o un simple profeta, ya sea reduciendo al campo de lo meramente privado a quien es el Señor de la Historia....

192. ... Con amor y obediencia totales a su Padre, expresión humana de su carácter eterno de Hijo, emprende su camino de donación abnegada, rechazando la tentación del poder político y todo recurso a la violencia. Agrupa en torno a sí unos cuantos hombres tomados de diversas categorías sociales y políticas de su

174. ... Given the contrast between efforts to present Christ as the Lord of our history and the source of inspiration for authentic social change, on the one hand, and efforts to restrict him to the realm of the individual conscience, on the other, we believe that it is necessary to offer the following clarifications:

175. It is our duty to proclaim clearly the mystery of the Incarnation, leaving no room for doubt or equivocation. This mystery includes both the divinity of Jesus Christ, as it is professed by the faith of the Church, and the reality and force of his human and historical dimension.

176. We must present Jesus of Nazareth sharing the life, the hopes, and the anxieties of his people; and we must point out that he is the Christ who is believed, proclaimed, and celebrated by the Church.

177. (We must present) Jesus of Nazareth as someone conscious of his mission, as the proclaimer and realizer of the kingdom, and as the founder of his Church, whose visible foundation is Peter. And we must present Jesus Christ as alive, present, and at work in history and his Church.

178. We cannot distort, factionalize, or ideologize the person of Jesus Christ. That could be done in one of two ways: either by turning him into a politician, a leader, a revolutionary, or a simple prophet, on the one hand; or, on the other hand, by restricting him, the Lord of history, to the merely private realm....

192. ...With complete love and obedience to his Father, the human embodiment of his eternal character as the Son, Jesus sets out on the road of self-sacrifice and self-giving. He rejects the temptation of political power and all recourse to violence. He gathers around him a few men chosen from various social and political strata of tiempo. Aunque confusos y a veces infieles, los mueven el amor y el poder que de él irradian: ellos son constituidos en cimiento de su Iglesia; atraídos por el Padre,¹ inician el camino del seguimiento de Jesús. Camino que no es el de la autoafirmación arrogante de la sabiduría o del poder del hombre, ni el del odio o la violencia, sino el de la donación desinteresada y sacrificada del amor. Amor que abraza a todos los hombres. Amor que privilegia a los pequeños, los débiles, los pobres. Amor que congrega e integra a todos en una fraternidad capaz de abrir la ruta de una nueva historia.

4615 194. Cumpliendo el mandato recibido de su Padre, Jesús se entregó libremente a la muerte en la cruz, meta del camino de su existencia. El portador de la libertad y del gozo del reino de Dios quiso ser la víctima decisiva de la injusticia y del mal de este mundo. El dolor de la creación es asumido por el Crucificado que ofrece su vida en sacrificio por todos: Sumo Sacerdote que puede compartir nuestras debilidades, Víctima Pascual que nos redime de nuestros pecados; Hijo obediente que encarna ante la justicia salvadora de su Padre el clamor de liberación y redención de todos los hombres.

4616 195. Por eso, el Padre resucita a su Hijo de entre los muertos. Lo exalta gloriosamente a su derecha. Lo colma de la fuerza vivificante de su Espíritu. Lo establece como Cabeza de su Cuerpo que es la Iglesia. Lo constituye Señor del mundo y de la historia. Su resurrección es signo y prenda de la resurrección a la que todos estamos llamados y de la transformación final del universo. Por El y en El ha querido el Padre recrear lo que ya había creado.

the day. Though confused and often unfaithful, they are moved by the love and the power that radiates from him. They are the ones who constituted the foundation of his Church. Drawn by the Father,¹ they start out on the path involving the following of Jesus. It is not a path of arrogant self-assertion of human wisdom or power or a path of hatred or violence; instead, it involves disinterested self-giving and sacrificial love. This love embraces all men; gives a privileged place to the lowly, the weak, and the poor; and gathers all together, integrating them into a fraternity that is capable of opening up the way to a new history.

193. Thus, in his own original and incomparable way, Jesus calls for a radical discipleship that embraces the whole man, all men, the whole earth, and the cosmos. Its radicalness means that conversion ever remains an unfinished process on both the personal and societal levels. For even though the kingdom of God comes to pass through historical realizations, it is not identified with these realizations or exhausted in them.

194. Fulfilling the mandate received from his Father, Jesus freely surrendered himself to death on the Cross, the goal of his life's journey. The bearer of the freedom and joy of God's kingdom chose to be the decisive victim of this world's injustice and evil. The sorrow of creation is assumed by the Crucified One, who offers his life as a sacrifice for all. He is the High Priest who can share our weaknesses; the Paschal Victim who redeems us from our sins; the obedient Son who, in the face of his Father's saving justice, incarnates the cry of all men for liberation and redemption.

195. That is why the Father resurrects his Son from among the dead and exalts him in glory at his right hand. He fills him with the vivifying power of his Spirit. He establishes him as the Head of his Body, which is the Church. He constitutes him Lord of the world and of history. His Resurrection is the sign and pledge of the resurrection to which we all are called and of the ultimate transformation of the universe. Through him and in him the Father chose to re-create what he had already created.

4617 270. El Pueblo de Dios, como Sacramento universal de salvación, está enteramente al servicio de la comunión de los hombres con Dios y del género humano entre sí.¹ La Iglesia es, por lo tanto, un pueblo de servidores. Su modo propio de servir es evangelizar; es un servicio que sólo ella puede prestar. Determina su identidad y la originalidad de su aporte. Dicho servicio evangelizador

270. As a universal sacrament of salvation, the people of God are wholly in service to the cause of communion between men and God, on the one hand, and among the whole human race on the other.¹ Thus the Church is a people made up of servants, and its specific way of serving is to evangelize. This is a service that only the Church can contribute. It defines her identity and her own original de la Iglesia se dirige a todos los hombres, sin distinción. Pero debe reflejarse siempre en él la especial predilección de Jesús por los más pobres y los que sufren.

271. Dentro del Pueblo de Dios, todos—jerarquía, laicos, religiosos—son servidores del Evangelio. Cada uno según su papel y carisma propios. La Iglesia, como servidora del Evangelio, sirve a la vez a Dios y a los hombres. Pero para conducir a éstos hacia el Reino de su Señor, el único de quien ella, junto con la Virgen María, se proclama esclava y a quien subordina todo su servicio humano....

281. La realización histórica de este servicio evangelizador resultará siempre ardua y dramática, porque el pecado, fuerza de ruptura, obstaculizará permanentemente el crecimiento en el amor y la comunión, tanto desde el corazón de los hombres, como desde las diversas estructuras por ellos creadas, en las cuales el pecado de sus autores ha impreso su huella destructora. En este sentido, la situación de miseria, marginalización, injusticia y corrupción que hiere a nuestro continente, exige del Pueblo de Dios y de cada cristiano un auténtico heroísmo en su compromiso evangelizador, a fin de poder superar semejantes obstáculos. Ante tal desafío, la Iglesia se sabe limitada y pequeña, pero se siente animada por el Espíritu y protegida por María. Su intercesión poderosa le permitirá superar las “estructuras de pecado” en la vida personal y social y le obtendrá la “verdadera liberación” que viene de Cristo Jesús.¹...

362. La Evangelización ha de calar hondo en el corazón del hombre y de los pueblos; por eso, su dinámica busca la conversión personal y la transformación social. La Evangelización ha de extenderse a todas las gentes; por eso, su dinámica busca la universalidad del género humano. Ambos aspectos son de actualidad para evangelizar hoy y mañana en América Latina.

Evangelization and Popular Religiosity

444. Por religión del pueblo, religiosidad popular o piedad popular,¹ entendemos el conjunto de hondas creencias selladas por Dios, de las actitudes básicas que de esas convicciones derivan y las expresiones que las manifiestan. Se trata de la forma o de la existencia cultural que la religión adopta en un pueblo determinado. La religión del pueblo latinoamericano, en su forma cultural más característica, es expresión de la fe católica. Es un catolicismo popular.

contribution. The evangelizing service of the Church is addressed to all men without distinction, but it should also reflect Jesus' special predilection for those who are suffering and those who are poorest.

271. All those who make up the people of God—the hierarchy, lay people, religious—are servants of the gospel. Each serves in accordance with his own proper role and charism. As the servant of the gospel, the Church serves both God and men. But she does so in order to lead the latter to the kingdom of the Lord. The Church, along with Mary, proclaims herself the servant of this Lord alone; and all her service to men is subordinated to him....

281. The realization of this evangelizing service in history will always prove to be difficult and dramatic. Sin, a force making for breakdown and rupture, will always pose obstacles to growth in love and communion. It will always be operative, both within the hearts of men and within the various structures they have created and on which they have left the destructive imprint of their sinfulness. In that sense, the situation of misery, marginalization, injustice, and corruption that afflicts our continent requires the people of God and every Christian to display authentic heroism in their commitment to evangelizing, if they are to be able to overcome such imposing obstacles. Confronted with such a challenge, the Church knows that she is limited and small. But she also feels inspired by the Spirit and protected by Mary, whose powerful intercession will enable the Church to overcome the “sinful structures” in people’s personal and social life and will win for it the “authentic liberation” that comes from Jesus Christ.¹...

362. Evangelization should penetrate deeply into the hearts of men and peoples. Thus its dynamism aims at personal conversion and social transformation. Evangelization should be spread to all nations. Hence its dynamic thrust encompasses the whole of the human race. Both aspects are highly relevant for the work of evangelization in Latin America’s present and future.

444. By the religion of the people, popular religiosity, or popular piety,¹ we mean the whole complex of underlying beliefs rooted in God, the basic attitudes that flow from these beliefs, and the expressions that manifest them. It is the form of cultural life that religion takes on among a given people. In its most characteristic cultural form, the religion of the Latin American people is an expression of the Catholic faith. It is a people’s Catholicism.

4622 445. Con deficiencias y a pesar del pecado siempre presente, la fe de la Iglesia ha sellado el alma de América Latina,¹ marcando su identidad histórica esencial y constituyéndose en la matriz cultural del continente, de la cual nacieron los nuevos pueblos.

446. El Evangelio encarnado en nuestros pueblos los congrega en una originalidad histórica cultural que llamamos América Latina. Esa identidad se simboliza muy luminosamente en el rostro mestizo de María de Guadalupe que se yergue al inicio de la Evangelización.

447. Esta religión del pueblo es vivida preferentemente por los “pobres y sencillos”,² pero abarca todos los sectores sociales y es, a veces, uno de los pocos vínculos que reúne a los hombres en nuestras naciones políticamente tan divididas. Eso sí, debe sostenerse que esa unidad contiene diversidades múltiples según los grupos sociales, étnicos e, incluso, las generaciones.

4623 448. La religiosidad del pueblo, en su núcleo, es un acervo de valores que responde con sabiduría cristiana a los grandes interrogantes de la existencia. La sapiencia popular católica tiene una capacidad de síntesis vital; así conlleva creadoramente lo divino y lo humano; Cristo y María, espíritu y cuerpo; comunión e institución; persona y comunidad; fe y patria, inteligencia y afecto. Esa sabiduría es un humanismo cristiano que afirma radicalmente la dignidad de toda persona como hijo de Dios, establece una fraternidad fundamental, enseña a encontrar la naturaleza y a comprender el trabajo y proporciona las razones para la alegría y el humor, aun en medio de una vida muy dura....

457. Como toda la Iglesia, la religión del pueblo debe ser evangelizada siempre de nuevo....

445. Despite the defects and the sins that are always present, the faith of the Church has set its seal on the soul of Latin America.¹ It has left its mark on Latin America's essential historical identity, becoming the continent's cultural matrix out of which new peoples have arisen.

446. It is the gospel, fleshed out in our peoples, that has brought them together to form the original cultural and historical entity known as Latin America. And this identity is glowingly reflected on the mestizo countenance of Mary of Guadalupe, who appeared at the start of the evangelization process.

447. This people's religion is lived out in a preferential way by the “poor and simple”.² But it takes in all social sectors; and sometimes it is one of the few bonds that really brings together the people living in our nations, which are so divided politically. But of course we must acknowledge that there is much diversity amid this unity, a diversity of social, ethnic, and even generation groups.

448. At its core, the religiosity of the people is a storehouse of values that offers the answers of Christian wisdom to the great questions of life. The Catholic wisdom of the common people is capable of fashioning a vital synthesis. It creatively combines the divine and the human, Christ and Mary, spirit and body, communion and institution, person and community, faith and homeland, intelligence and emotion. This wisdom is a Christian humanism that radically affirms the dignity of every person as a child of God, establishes a basic fraternity, teaches people how to encounter nature and understand work, and provides reasons for joy and humor even in the midst of a very hard life....

450. The people's religious life is not just an object of evangelization. Insofar as it is a concrete embodiment of the Word of God, it itself is an active way in which the people continually evangelize themselves....

453. Due to lack of attention on the part of pastoral agents and to other complicated factors, the religion of the people shows signs of erosion and distortion. Aberrant substitutes and regressive forms of syncretism have already surfaced. In some areas we can discern serious and strange threats to the religion of the people, framed in terms that lay excessive stress on apocalyptic fantasies....

457. Like the Church as a whole, the religion of the people must be constantly evangelized over again....

Evangelization as Liberation

4626 480. En Medellín se despliega un proceso dinámico de liberación integral cuyos ecos positivos recoge la Evangelii Nuntiandi y el Papa Juan Pablo II en su Mensaje

480. At the Medellín conference, we saw the elucidation of a dynamic process of integral liberation. Its positive echoes were taken up by Evangelii nuntiandi and by John a esta Conferencia. Es un anuncio que urge a la Iglesia y que pertenece a la entraña misma de una evangelización que tiende hacia la realización auténtica del hombre.

² Cf. Paul VI, apostolic exhortation Evangelii nuntiandi, December 8, 1975, no. 48 (AAS 68 [1976]: 37f.).

481. Hay, sin embargo, distintas concepciones y aplicaciones de la liberación. Aunque entre ellas se descubren rasgos comunes, hay enfoques difíciles de llevar a una adecuada convergencia. Por ello, lo mejor es dar criterios que emanan del Magisterio y que sirven para el necesario discernimiento acerca de la original concepción de la liberación cristiana.

482. Aparecen dos elementos complementarios e inseparables: la liberación de todas las servidumbres del pecado personal y social, de todo lo que desgarrar al hombre y a la sociedad y que tiene su fuente en el egoísmo, en el misterio de iniquidad y la liberación para el crecimiento progresivo en el ser, por la comunión con Dios y con los hombres que culmina en la perfecta comunión del cielo, donde Dios es todo en todos y no habrá más lágrimas. . . .

485. Así, si no llegamos a la liberación del pecado con todas sus seducciones e idolatrías; si no ayudamos a concretar la liberación que Cristo conquistó en la Cruz, mutilamos la liberación de modo irreparable; también la mutilamos si olvidamos el eje de la evangelización liberadora, que es la que transforma al hombre en sujeto de su propio desarrollo individual y comunitario. La mutilamos igualmente, si olvidamos la dependencia y las esclavitudes que hieren derechos fundamentales que no son otorgados por gobiernos o instituciones por poderosas que sean, sino que tienen como autor al propio Creador y Padre.

486. Es una liberación que sabe utilizar medios evangélicos, con su peculiar eficacia y que no acude a ninguna clase de violencia ni a la dialéctica de la lucha de clases, sino a la vigorosa energía y acción de los cristianos, que movidos por el Espíritu, acuden a responder al clamor de millones y millones de hermanos.

Paul II in his message to this conference. This proclamation imposes an urgent task on the Church, and it belongs to the very core of an evangelization that seeks the authentic realization of man.

481. But there are different conceptions and applications of liberation. Though they share common traits, they contain points of view that can hardly be brought together satisfactorily. The best thing to do, therefore, is to offer criteria that derive from the Magisterium and that provide us with the necessary discernment regarding the original conception of Christian liberation.

482. There are two complementary and inseparable 4627 elements. The first is liberation from all the forms of bondage, from personal and social sin, and from everything that tears apart the human individual and society; all this finds its source to be egotism, in the mystery of iniquity. The second element is liberation for progressive growth in being through communion with God and men; this reaches its culmination in the perfect communion of heaven, when God is all in all and weeping forever ceases. . . .

485. Thus we mutilate liberation in an unpardonable 4628 way if we do not achieve liberation from sin and all its seductions and idolatry and if we do not help make concrete the liberation that Christ won on the Cross. We do the very same thing if we forget the crux of liberative evangelization, which is to transform men into active subjects of their own individual and communitarian development. And we also do the very same thing if we overlook dependence and the forms of bondage that violate basic rights that come from God, Creator and Father, rather than being bestowed by governments or institutions, however powerful they may be.

486. The sort of liberation we are talking about knows how to use evangelical means, which have their own distinctive efficacy. It does not resort to violence of any sort or to the dialectics of class struggle. Instead, it relies on the vigorous energy and activity of Christians, who are moved by the Spirit to respond to cries of countless millions of their brothers and sisters.

Political Violence

531. Ante la deplorable realidad de violencia en América Latina, queremos pronunciarnos con claridad. La tortura física y psicológica, los secuestros, la persecución de disidentes políticos o de sospechosos y la exclusión de la vida pública por causas de las ideas, son siempre condenables. Si dichos crímenes son realizados por la autoridad encargada de tutelar el bien común, envilecen a quienes los practican, independientemente de las razones aducidas.

531. Faced with the deplorable reality of violence 4629 in Latin America, we wish to express our view clearly. Condemnation is always the proper judgment on physical and psychological torture, kidnapping, the persecution of political dissidents or suspect persons, and the exclusion of people from public life because of their ideas. If these crimes are committed by the authorities entrusted with the task of safeguarding the common good, then they defile those who practice them, notwithstanding any reasons offered.

532. The Church is just as decisive in rejecting terrorist and guerrilla violence, which becomes cruel and uncontrollable when it is unleashed. Criminal acts can in no way be justified as the way to liberation. Violence inexorably engenders new forms of oppression and bondage, which usually prove to be more serious than the ones from which people are allegedly being liberated. But most importantly, violence is an attack on life, which depends on the Creator alone. And we must also stress that when an ideology appeals to violence, it thereby admits its own weakness and inadequacy.

533. Our responsibility as Christians is to use all possible means to promote the implementation of nonviolent tactics in the effort to reestablish justice in economic and socio-political relations. This is in accordance with the teaching of Vatican II, which applies to both national and international life....

The Option for the Poor

4632 1153. La opción preferencial por los pobres tiene como objetivo el anuncio de Cristo Salvador que los iluminará sobre su dignidad, los ayudará en sus esfuerzos de liberación de todas sus carencias y los llevará a la comunión con el Padre y los hermanos, mediante la vivencia de la pobreza evangélica. "Jesucristo vino a compartir nuestra condición humana con sus sufrimientos, sus dificultades, su muerte. Antes de transformar la existencia cotidiana, él supo hablar al corazón de los pobres, liberarlos del pecado, abrir sus ojos a un horizonte de luz y colmarlos de alegría y esperanza. Lo mismo hace hoy Jesucristo. Está presente en vuestras Iglesias, en vuestras familias, en vuestros corazones."¹

4633 1154. Esta opción, exigida por la realidad escandalosa de los desequilibrios económicos en América Latina, debe llevar a establecer una convivencia humana digna y fraterna y a construir una sociedad justa y libre.

1153. The objective of our preferential option for the poor is to proclaim Christ the Savior. This will enlighten them about their dignity, help them in their efforts to liberate themselves from all their wants, and lead them to communion with the Father and their fellowmen through a life lived in evangelical poverty. "Jesus Christ came to share our human condition through his sufferings, difficulties, and death. Before transforming day-to-day life, he knew how to speak to the heart of the poor, liberate them from sin, open their eyes to a light on the horizon, and fill them with joy and hope. Jesus Christ does the same thing today. He is present in your churches, your families, and your hearts."¹

1154. This option, demanded by the scandalous reality of economic imbalances in Latin America, should lead us to establish a dignified, fraternal way of life together as men and to construct a just and free society.

1155. The required change in unjust social, political, and economic structures will not be authentic and complete if it is not accompanied by a change in our personal and collective outlook regarding the idea of a dignified, happy human life. This in turn, disposes us to undergo conversion.¹

1156. The gospel demand for poverty, understood as solidarity with the poor and as a rejection of the situation in which most people on this continent live, frees the poor person from being individualistic in life and from being attracted and seduced by the false ideals of a consumer society. In like manner, the witness of a poor Church can evangelizar a los ricos que tienen su corazón apegado a las riquezas, convirtiéndolos y liberándolos de esta esclavitud y de su egoísmo.

evangelize the rich whose hearts are attached to wealth, thus converting and freeing them from this bondage and their own egotism.

The Option for Youth

1186. La Iglesia confía en los jóvenes.¹ Son para ella su esperanza. La Iglesia ve en la juventud de América Latina un verdadero potencial para el presente y el futuro de su evangelización. Por ser verdadera dinamizadora del cuerpo social y especialmente del cuerpo eclesial, la Iglesia hace una opción preferencial por los jóvenes en orden a su misión evangelizadora en el Continente.²

1186. The Church has confidence in young people.¹ 4635 They are a source of hope for her. In the young people of Latin America, she sees a real potential for the present and future of her evangelization. Because they inject real dynamism into the social body, and especially the ecclesial body, the Church assumes a preferential option for young people in terms of her evangelizing mission on this continent.²

4640–4645: Encyclical Redemptor hominis, March 4, 1979

Ed.: AAS 71 (1979): 274–86.

The Human Dimension of Redemption

10. Homo sine amore vivere nequit. Sibimet manet quiddam, quod incomprehensibile est, eiusque vita sensu privatur, nisi amor ei praebetur, nisi invenit amorem, nisi amorem experitur sumque efficit, nisi penitus amorem participat. Ob hanc omnino causam Christus Redemptor, . . . hominem ipsi homini plene manifestat. Et illa est—si ita quidem loqui licet—humana ratio et proprietas mysterii Redemptionis.

In ea vicissim homo magnitudinem suae humanitatis et dignitatem et pretium proprium denuo detegit. In Redemptionis mysterio homo iterum “exprimitur” et aliquo pacto iterum creatur. Profecto ipse iterum creatur! “Non est Iudaeus neque Graecus, non est servus neque liber, non est masculus et femina: omnes enim vos unus estis in Christo Iesu.”¹

Homo igitur, qui funditus se perspicere cupit—non tantum secundum quasdam subitarias, imperfectas, saepe exteriores, immo etiam specie sola apparentes rationes vel regulas suae vitae—debet sese ad Christum conferre cum sua anxietate et dubitatione, cum sua infirmitate et improbitate, cum vita sua et morte. Is debet quasi cum toto, quod ipse est, intrare in eum; debet “asciscere” atque assumere sibi omnem veritatem Incarnationis et Redemptionis, ut rursus se reperiat.

Qui intimus processus si in illo perficitur, homo fructus edit non sola Dei adoratione, verum etiam magna sui ipsius admiratione. Quantum enim momentum ac

10. Man cannot live without love. He remains a being 4640 that is incomprehensible for himself, his life is senseless, if love is not revealed to him, if he does not encounter love, if he does not experience it and make it his own, if he does not participate intimately in it. This, as has already been said, is why Christ the Redeemer . . . fully reveals man to himself. If we may use the expression, this is the human reason for and characteristic of the mystery of the redemption.

In this dimension man finds again the greatness, dignity, and value that belong to his humanity. In the mystery of the redemption man becomes newly “expressed” and, in a way, is newly created. He is newly created! “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus.”¹

The man who wishes to understand himself thoroughly— 4641 and not just in accordance with immediate, partial, often superficial, and even illusory standards and measures of his being—must with his unrest, uncertainty, and even his weakness and sinfulness, with his life and death, draw near to Christ. He must, so to speak, enter into him with all his own self; he must “appropriate” and assimilate the whole of the reality of the Incarnation and redemption in order to find himself.

If this profound process takes place within him, he then bears the fruit not only of adoration of God but also of deep wonder at himself. How precious must man be in the eyes pretium habere debet homo in conspectu Creatoris, si “talem ac tantum meruit habere Redemptorem”,¹ si Deus dedit “Filius suum Unigenitum”, ut homo “non pereat sed habeat vitam aeternam”²

Man as the Primary Way of the Church

4645 Cum ergo hic homo sit via Ecclesiae, eius cotidiana vitae et experientiae, eius missionis et laboris via, necesse est Ecclesia nostrae aetatis semper renovetur, memor condicionis, in qua ille versetur; cognitatis scilicet habeat eius facultates, quae, ut novo semper cursu diriguntur, ita ostenduntur. Oportet item Ecclesia pericula animadvertat homini impendentia. Noscere [286] pariter debet ea omnia, quae obsistunt, ne “vita hominis in dies humanior reddatur”,¹ neve omnia, ex quibus haec vita constat, verae hominis dignitati conformentur. Paucis: omnia sciat illi cursui repugnantia.

of the Creator if he “gained so great a Redeemer”¹ and if God “gave his only Son” in order that man “should not perish but have eternal life”²

In reality, the name for that deep amazement at man’s worth and dignity is the gospel, that is to say: the good news. It is also called Christianity. This amazement determines the Church’s mission in the world and, perhaps even more so, “in the modern world”. This amazement, which is also a conviction and a certitude—at its deepest root it is the certainty of faith, but in a hidden and mysterious way it vivifies every aspect of authentic humanism—is closely connected with Christ....

13. ... Jesus Christ is the chief way for the Church. He himself is our way “to the Father’s house”¹ and is the way to each man. On this way leading from Christ to man, on this way on which Christ unites himself with each man, nobody can halt the Church. This is an exigency of man’s temporal welfare and of his eternal welfare. Out of regard for Christ and in view of the mystery that constitutes the Church’s own life, the Church cannot remain insensible to whatever serves man’s true welfare, any more than she can remain indifferent to what threatens it....

14. ... Man in the full truth of his existence, of his personal being and also of his community and social being—in the sphere of his own family, in the sphere of society and very diverse contexts, in the sphere of his own nation or people (perhaps still only that of his clan or tribe), and in the sphere of the whole of mankind—this man is the primary route that the Church must travel in fulfilling her mission: he is the primary and fundamental way for the Church, the way traced out by Christ himself, the way that leads invariably through the mystery of the Incarnation and the redemption....

Since this man is the way for the Church, the way for her daily life and experience, for her mission and toil, the Church of today must be aware in an always new manner of man’s “situation”. That means that she must be aware of his possibilities, which keep returning to their proper bearings and thus revealing themselves. She must likewise be aware of the threats to man and of all that seems to oppose the endeavor “to make human life ever more human”¹ and make every element of this life correspond to man’s true dignity—in a word, she must be aware of all that is opposed to that process.

Questions on Eschatology

Sacra autem haec Congregatio, cuius est doctrinam fidei promovere [941] ac tutari, hic sibi proponit ea recolere quae Ecclesia, nomine Christi, docet, praesertim, quae inter christiani hominis mortem et resurrectionem universalem intercedunt.

1) Ecclesia credit¹ mortuorum resurrectionem.

2) Ecclesia hanc resurrectionem ita intellegit ut ad totum hominem referatur; haec autem pro electis nihil aliud est quam ipsius Resurrectionis Christi ad homines extensio.

3) Ecclesia affirmat continuationem et subsistentiam, post mortem, elementi spiritualis, conscientia et voluntate praediti, ita ut ipsum “ego humanum”, interim tamen complemento sui corporis carens, subsistat. Ad huiusmodi elementum designandum Ecclesia utitur voce “anima”, quae Sacrarum Scripturarum et Traditionis usu recepta est. Quamquam non ignorat in Scripturis Sacris huic voci diversas subici significationes, nihilominus ipsa censet nullam validam rationem adesse, cur vox reiciatur, ac iudicat praeterea prorsus necessarium esse verbale instrumentum ad christianorum fidem sustinendam.

4) Ecclesia excludit quoslibet cogitandi aut dicendi modos, quibus absurda fiant vel intellegi nequeant eius precatio, funebres ritus, cultus mortuorum: quae omnia, quoad suam substantiam, locos theologicos constituunt.

5) Ecclesia, secundum Sacras Scripturas, expectat “gloriosam manifestationem Domini nostri Iesu Christi”,¹ quam tamen distinctam et dilatam credit, respectu habito hominum condicionis statim post mortem.

6) Ecclesia, in sua doctrina proponenda de sorte hominis post mortem, excludit quamlibet explicationem, qua prorsus evanesceret significatio Virginis Mariae Assumptionis circa id quod ad ipsam unice pertinet; hoc scilicet sensu, quod corporea Virginis glorificatio eam glorificationem anticipat, quae ceteris omnibus electis destinatur.

7) Ecclesia, Novo Testamento ac Traditioni fideliter adhaerens, credit beatitudinem iustorum, qui aliquando cum Christo erunt. Item ipsa credit poena aeterna

The Sacred Congregation, whose task is to advance and protect the doctrine of the faith, here wishes to recall what the Church teaches in the name of Christ, especially concerning what happens between the death of the Christian and the general resurrection. 4650

1. The Church believes¹ in the resurrection of the dead. 4651

2. The Church understands this resurrection as referring to the whole person; for the elect it is nothing other than the extension to men of the Resurrection of Christ itself. 4652

3. The Church affirms that a spiritual element survives and subsists after death, an element endowed with consciousness and will, so that the “human self” subsists in the interim but without the complement of its body. To designate this element, the Church uses the word “soul”, the accepted term in the usage of Scripture and tradition. Although not unaware that this term has various meanings in the Bible, the Church thinks that there is no valid reason for rejecting it; moreover, she considers that the use of some word as a vehicle is absolutely indispensable in order to support the faith of Christians. 4653

4. The Church excludes every way of thinking or speaking that would render meaningless or unintelligible her prayers, her funeral rites, and the religious acts offered for the dead. All these are, in their substance, loci theologici. 4654

5. In accordance with the Scriptures, the Church looks for “the glorious manifestation of our Lord, Jesus Christ”,¹ believing it to be distinct and deferred with respect to the situation of people immediately after death. 4655

6. In teaching her doctrine about man’s destiny after death, the Church excludes any explanation that would deprive the Assumption of the Virgin Mary of its unique meaning, namely, the fact that the bodily glorification of the Virgin is an anticipation of the glorification that is the destiny of all the other elect. 4656

7. In fidelity to the New Testament and tradition, the Church believes in the happiness of the just who will one day be with Christ. She believes that there will be 4657

plectendum fore peccatorem, qui Dei visione pri[942]-vabitur, nec non huius poenae repercussionem in totum ipsius peccatoris “esse”. Ad electos autem quod attinet, credit etiam haberi posse purificationem visioni Dei praevidiam, quae tamen prorsus diversa est a damnatorum poena. Id Ecclesia intellegit, cum de Inferno ac de Purgatorio loquitur.

eternal punishment for the sinner, who will be deprived of the sight of God, and that this punishment will have a repercussion on the whole being of the sinner. She believes in the possibility of a purification for the elect before they see God, a purification altogether different from the punishment of the damned. This is what the Church means when speaking of hell and purgatory.

When dealing with man’s situation after death, one must especially beware of arbitrary imaginative representations: excess of this kind is a major cause of the difficulties that Christian faith often encounters. Respect must, however, be given to the images employed in the Scriptures. Their profound meaning must be discerned, while avoiding the risk of overattenuating them, since this often empties of substance the realities designated by the images.

Neither Scripture nor theology provides sufficient light for a proper picture of life after death. Christians must firmly hold the two following essential points: on the one hand, they must believe in the fundamental continuity, thanks to the power of the Holy Spirit, between our present life in Christ and the future life (charity is the law of the kingdom of God, and our charity on earth will be the measure of our sharing God’s glory in heaven); on the other hand, they must be clearly aware of the radical break between the present life and the future one, due to the fact that the economy of faith will be replaced by the economy of fullness of life: we shall be with Christ and “we shall see God”,¹ and it is in these promises and marvelous mysteries that our hope essentially consists. Our imagination may be incapable of reaching these heights, but our heart does so instinctively and completely.

Euthanasia

4660 Nomine euthanasiae significatur actio vel omissio quae suapte natura vel consilio mentis mortem affert, ut hoc modo omnis dolor removeatur. Euthanasia igitur in voluntatis proposito et in procedendi rationibus, quae adhibentur, continetur.

4661 Iamvero, denuo firmiter declarandum est neminem nihilque ullo modo sinere posse ut vivens humanum innocens occidatur, sive sit fetus vel embryon, sive infans

By euthanasia is understood an action or an omission that of itself or by intention causes death, in order that all suffering may in this way be eliminated. Euthanasia’s terms of reference, therefore, are to be found in the intention of the will and in the methods used.

It is necessary to state firmly once more that nothing and no one can in any way permit the killing of an innocent human being, whether a fetus or an embryo, an vel adultus, sive senex, sive morbo insanabili affectus, sive in mortis agone constitutus. Praeterea nemini licet mortiferam hanc actionem petere sibi aut alii, qui sit ipsius responsabilitati commissus, immo in eadem ne consentire quidem potest explicite vel implicite. Nec auctoritas ulla potest eam legitime iniungere vel permittere. Agitur enim de legis divinae violatione, de offensione dignitatis personae humanae, de crimine contra vitam, de facinore in hominum genus.

Fieri potest ut ob diuturnos ac vix tolerandos dolores, ob rationes in animi affectibus innixas, vel ob alterius generis causas, aliqui ad persuasionem adducantur se legitime posse mortem sibi petere aut aliis afferre. Quamquam hisce in casibus hominis culpa imminui aut omnino deesse potest, nihilominus error iudicii in quem conscientia, bona fide fortasse, incidit, naturam huius actus mortiferi non mutat, qui per se repudiandus semper erit.

Gravissime aegrotantium implorationes, quandoque mortem invocantium, haud intelligendae sunt quasi veram euthanasiae voluntatem significant; etenim fere semper agitur de anxii invocationibus auxilii et amoris. Praeter medicas curas, id quo aegrotus indiget, est amor, est fervidus animi affectus humanus et supernaturalis, quo proximi omnes, parentes et filii, medici et aegrotorum ministri eum complecti possunt ac debent....

Pariter licet horum mediorum usum abrumperе, quotiescumque exitus spes in eis repositam fallit. At in hoc capiendo consilio, ratio habeatur iusti desiderii aegroti eiusque familiarium, nec non sententiae medicorum, qui vere periti sint....

Semper licet satis habere communia remedia, quae ars medica suppeditare potest. Quapropter nemini obligatio imponenda est genus curationis adhibendi quod, etsi in usu iam est, adhuc tamen non caret periculo vel nimis est onerosum. Quae remedii recusatio comparanda non est cum suicidio: verius habenda est vel simplex acceptatio condicionis humanae....

infant or an adult, an old person or one suffering from an incurable disease or a person who is dying. Furthermore, no one is permitted to ask for this act of killing, either for himself or for another person entrusted to his care, nor can he consent to it, either explicitly or implicitly, nor can any authority legitimately recommend or permit such an action. For it is a question of the violation of the divine law, an offense against the dignity of the human person, a crime against life, and an attack on humanity.

It may happen that, by reason of prolonged and barely tolerable pain, for deeply personal or other reasons, people may be led to believe that they can legitimately ask for death or obtain it for others. Although in these cases the guilt of the individual may be reduced or completely absent, nevertheless the error of judgment into which the conscience falls, perhaps in good faith, does not change the nature of this act of killing, which will always be in itself something to be rejected. 4662

The pleas of gravely ill people who sometimes ask for death are not to be understood as implying a true desire for euthanasia; in fact, it is almost always a case of an anguished plea for help and love. What a sick person needs, besides medical care, is love, the human and supernatural warmth with which the sick person can and ought to be surrounded by all those close to him, parents and children, doctors and nurses....

... If there are no other sufficient remedies, it is permitted, with the patient's consent, to have recourse to the means provided by the most advanced medical techniques, even if these means are still at the experimental stage and are not without a certain risk.... 4663

It is also permitted, with the patient's consent, to interrupt these means, where the results fall short of expectations. But for such a decision to be made, account will have to be taken of the reasonable wishes of the patient and the patient's family, as also of the advice of the doctors who are specially competent in the matter.... 4664

It is also permissible to make do with the normal means that medicine can offer. Therefore, one cannot impose on anyone the obligation to have recourse to a technique that is already in use but that carries a risk or is burdensome. Such a refusal is not the equivalent of suicide; on the contrary, it should be considered as an acceptance of the human condition.... 4665

... When inevitable death is imminent in spite of the means used, it is permitted in conscience to take the decision to refuse forms of treatment that would only secure a precarious and burdensome prolongation of life, so long as the normal care due to the sick person in similar cases is not interrupted. 4666

The Baptism of Infants

- 4670 12. ... Verba ... quae Iesus Nicodemo dixerat,¹ Ecclesia semper ita intellexit scilicet “parvulos baptisate non esse privandos.”² Haec verba revera habebant formam adeo universalem atque absolutam ut a Patribus apta retinerentur ad necessitatem baptismi statuendam et a Magisterio expresse ad parvulos applicarentur;³ pro eis quoque hoc sacramentum habendum est introitus in populum Dei⁴ et propriae salutis ianua.
- 4671 13. Sua itaque docendi et agendi ratione Ecclesia ostendit se nullam aliam novisse viam, praeter baptismum, ad certo [1144] procurandum parvulis ingressum in aeternam beatitudinem....
- 4672 14. Quod infantes fidem suam nondum per se profiteri queunt, minime impedit quominus Ecclesia eis hoc sacramentum conferat, cum revera in sua ipsius fide eos baptizet....
- 4673 [1151] 28. Magni interest in primis in memoriam revocare baptismum parvulorum habendum esse grave officium; quaestiones quae de eo pastoribus ponuntur, non aliter solvendae sunt nisi fideliter attendendo ad doctrinam et perpetuam praxim Ecclesiae.
- 4674 Actio pastoralis circa parvulorum baptisma concrete regenda est duobus principiis, quorum alterum priori subicitur.
- 1) Baptismus, ad salutem necessarius, signum est et instrumentum praeventis amoris Dei, qui ab originali peccato liberat, atque vitae divinae consortium communicat: ex se, horum bonorum donum pro parvulis differendum non est.
- 2) Cautiones praestandae sunt, ut hoc donum per genuinam fidei et vitae christianae educationem ita crescere possit, ut sacramentum totam suam “veritatem” attingat.¹ Istae cautiones regulariter praestantur a parentibus vel propinquis, etsi suppleri possunt variis
12. ... The Church ... has always understood the words of Jesus to Nicodemus¹ to mean that “children should not be deprived of baptism.”² Jesus’ words are so universal and absolute in form that the Fathers employed them to establish the necessity of baptism, and the Magisterium applied them expressly to infants;³ the sacrament is for them, too, entry into the people of God⁴ and the gateway to personal salvation.
13. The Church has thus shown by her teaching and practice that she knows no other way apart from baptism for ensuring children’s entry into eternal happiness....
14. The fact that infants cannot yet profess personal faith does not prevent the Church from conferring this sacrament on them, since in reality it is in her own faith that she baptizes them....
28. In the first place, it is important to recall that the baptism of infants must be considered a serious duty. The questions it poses to pastors can be settled only by faithful attention to the teaching and constant practice of the Church.
- Concretely, pastoral practice regarding infant baptism must be governed by two great principles, the second of which is subordinate to the first.
1. Baptism, which is necessary for salvation, is the sign and the means of God’s prevent love, which frees us from original sin and communicates to us a share in divine life. Considered in itself, the gift of these blessings to infants must not be delayed.
2. Assurances must be given that the gift thus granted can grow by an authentic education in the faith and Christian life, in order to fulfill the true meaning of the sacrament.¹ As a rule, these assurances are to be given by the parents or close relatives, although various substitutions are possible

⁴ “When infants are baptized, nothing else takes place but their incorporation into the Church; that is, they are joined to the Body of Christ and its members” (Nihil agitur aliud cum parvuli baptizantur, nisi ut incorporentur Ecclesiae, id est, Christi corpori membrisque sociantur), wrote St. Augustine in De peccatorum meritis et remissione et de baptismo parvulorum III, 4, no. 7 (PL 44:189); cf. 4680–4685: Encyclical Dives in misericordia, November 30, 1980

The Nature of Mercy

IV. 6. ... [1199] ... Vis propria ac vera misericordiae non in eo solum consistit quod oculi forte vel acerrimi etiam atque clementes coniciuntur in malum morale aut physicum aut corporale; nam ex germana sua peculiarique natura comprobatur misericordia, cum aestimat, iterum fovet, extrahit bonum de omnibus mali formis in orbe terrarum atque in homine exstantibus. Ita quidem comprehensa defigit ipsa principalem doctrinam messianici nuntii Christi constitutivamque operis eius virtutem.

Eodem insuper hoc pacto intellegebant misericordiam et exercebant discipuli ipsius ac sectatores, quorum profecto in animis actisque misericordia numquam se praestare desinebat velut comprobationem apprime creatricem amoris, qui “vinci a malo” se non patitur sed qui vincit “in bono malo”.¹

Necesse ideo est verus misericordiae vultus ab integro semper discooperiatur. Quamquam praeiudicia varia obstant, videtur ea nostris summe necessaria temporibus.

IV. 6 ... The true and proper meaning of mercy does not consist only in looking, however penetratingly and compassionately, at moral, physical, or material evil: mercy is manifested in its true and proper aspect when it restores to value, promotes, and draws good from all the forms of evil existing in the world and in man. Understood in this way, mercy constitutes the fundamental content of the messianic message of Christ and the constitutive power of his mission.

His disciples and followers understood and practiced mercy in the same way. Mercy never ceased to reveal itself, in their hearts and in their actions, as an especially creative proof of the love that does not allow itself to be “conquered by evil” but overcomes “evil with good”.¹

The genuine face of mercy has to be ever revealed anew. In spite of many prejudices, mercy seems particularly necessary for our times.

Love Is Stronger than Death

7. ... [1206] ... Sua quidem in resurrectione Christus commonstravit Deum misericordis amoris idcirco plane, quod crucem in se receperat ut viam ad resurrectionem. Quam ob rem, cum crucis Christi meminimus eiusque passionis ac mortis, fides nostra et spes collineantur in Resuscitatum; in ipsum [1207] nominatim Christum, qui, “cum esset ... sero die illa prima sabbatorum ... stetit in medio”, in Cenaculo, “ubi erant discipuli ... insufflavit et dicit eis: ‘Accipite Spiritum Sanctum. Quorum remiseritis peccata, remissa sunt eis; quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt.’”¹

Ecce Dei Filium, qui sua in resurrectione funditus persensit super se misericordiam, Patris hoc est amorem, qui morte efficacior est.

Verum idem quoque Christus Filius Dei est, qui ad terminum, immo quadamtenus ultra terminum operis messianici sui, praebet se ipse inexhaustum fontem

7. ... In his Resurrection Christ has revealed the God of merciful love precisely because he accepted the Cross as the way to the Resurrection. And it is for this reason that—when we recall the Cross of Christ, his Passion and death—our faith and hope are centered on the Risen One: on that Christ who “on the evening of that day, the first day of the week, ... stood among them” in the Upper Room, “where the disciples were, ... breathed on them, and said to them: ‘Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained.’”¹

Here is the Son of God, who in his Resurrection experienced in a radical way mercy shown to himself, that is to say, the love of the Father that is more powerful than death.

And it is also the same Christ, the Son of God, who at the end of his messianic mission—and, in a certain sense, even beyond the end—reveals himself as the inexhaustible miseri cordiae, eiusdem nempe amoris, quem deinceps in longiore prospectu historiae salutis in Ecclesia numquam non confirmari oportet peccato ipso potentior. Christus paschalis ultima ac sempiterna misericordiae quasi quaedam corporatio est illiusque vivens signum: historicum-salvificum una et eschatologicum. Hoc sane cum eodem affectu liturgia sacra paschalis temporis ponit in ore nostro Psalmi verba: “Misericordias Domini in aeternum cantabo.”¹ source of mercy, of the same love that, in a subsequent perspective of the history of salvation in the Church, is to be everlastingly confirmed as more powerful than sin. The paschal Christ is the ultimate and everlasting incarnation of mercy, its living sign in salvation history and in eschatology. In the same spirit, the liturgy of Eastertide places on our lips the words of the psalm: “Misericordias Domini in aeternum cantabo” [Forever I will sing the mercies of the Lord].¹

Justice Alone Is Not Sufficient

4683 [1215] ... 12. Proclive quidem statuere est iustitiae sensum longe lateque expectatum esse in huius temporis societate; quem sine dubio affectum magis efferre omnia iustitiae adversantia, in rationibus videlicet tum inter homines coetus sociales vel “classes”, tum singulas inter gentes et civitates ac tandem politicas constitutiones integras, quin inter totos etiam, ut dicunt, mundos. Altus vero ille ac multiformis animi habitus, cui hominum conscientia istius aetatis iustitiam assignavit, testatur ethicam indolem dimicationum ac pugnarum, quae orbem permeant.

... 12. It is not difficult to see that in the modern world the sense of justice has been reawakening on a vast scale; and without doubt this emphasizes that which goes against justice in relationships between individuals, social groups, and “classes”, between individual peoples and states, and finally between whole political systems, indeed, between what are called “worlds”. This deep and varied trend, at the basis of which the contemporary human conscience has placed justice, gives proof of the ethical character of the tensions and struggles pervading the world.

4684 Cum hominibus autem nostrorum dierum communicat Ecclesia profundum hoc fervidumque desiderium vitae iustae secundum omnes eius partes neque intermittit ponderandas proponere diversas iustitiae illius rationes, qualem postulat hominum societatumque vita...

The Church shares with the people of our time this profound and ardent desire for a life that is just in every aspect, nor does she fail to examine the various aspects of the sort of justice that the life of people and society demands...

Attamen intellectu haud difficile est consilia et opera, quae proficiscantur a notione iustitiae quaeque conducere debeant efficiendae iustitiae in convictu hominum coetuum societatum humanarum, saepius quidem in re ipsa deformari. Quamvis deinceps ea pergant ad eundem iustitiae conceptum sese referre, experientia nihilo minus probat iustitiam superari aliis viribus negativis uti simulata odio vel etiam crudelitate...

And yet, it would be difficult not to notice that very often programs that start from the idea of justice and that ought to assist its fulfillment among individuals, groups, and human societies in practice suffer from distortions. Although they continue to appeal to the idea of justice, nevertheless experience shows that other negative forces have gained the upper hand over justice, such as spite, hatred, and even cruelty...

[1216] ... Prioris ac nostri temporis experimentum docet iustitiam ex se non sufficere solam, immo vero perducere ipsam posse ad negationem extinctionemque sui, nisi permittat virtuti altiori illi, quae amor est, vitam humanam variis rationibus propriis confingere...

... The experience of the past and of our own time demonstrates that justice alone is not enough, that it can even lead to the negation and destruction of itself, if that deeper power, which is love, is not allowed to shape human life in its various dimensions...

The Testimony of the Church

4685 [1217] ... VII. Hic ipse nostrae aetatis conspectus, qui non potest quin pariat intimam anxietatem, in mentem revocat verba, quae ob Filii Dei incarnationem exonuerunt in Mariae cantu “Magnificat” quaeque misericordiam celebrant “in progenies et progenies”.

... VII. In connection with this picture of our generation, a picture that cannot fail to cause profound anxiety, there come to mind once more those words that, by reason of the Incarnation of the Son of God, resounded in Mary’s Magnificat and that sing of “mercy from generation to generation”.

experientias ac dolores immensae hominum familiae proprios oportet Ecclesiam huius temporis induere sibi altiore subtilioremque simul conscientiam ipsius necessitatis reddendi universo in suo opere testimonii de misericordia Dei secundum viam traditionis in Vetere ac Novo Foedere at maxime ipsius Iesu Christi eiusque Apostolorum.

Impertiat Ecclesia necesse est testimonium misericordiae Dei in Christo patefactae per totum illius munus uti Messiae; immo profiteatur eam primo loco velut salvificam fidei veritatem ac necessariam ad vitam cum illa fide congruentem; deinde enitatur inducere ipsam et quasi corporare in vita tum suorum fidelium tum, quantum fieri possit, in vita omnium fidelium voluntatis hominum. Ad extremum, dum misericordiam profitetur Ecclesia fidaque permanet ei semper, ius habet atque officium invocandae Dei misericordiae, scilicet implorandae coram singulis casibus physici ac moralis mali et ante cunctas minationes, quae obscurant totum venturum vitae tempus hodierni generis humani.

sufferings of the great human family, must become more particularly and profoundly conscious of the need to bear witness in her whole mission to God's mercy, following in the footsteps of the tradition of the Old and the New Covenant and, above all, of Jesus Christ himself and his apostles.

The Church must bear witness to the mercy of God revealed in Christ, in the whole of his mission as Messiah, professing it in the first place as a salvific truth of faith and as necessary for a life in harmony with faith and, then, seeking to introduce it and to make it incarnate in the lives both of her faithful and as far as possible in the lives of all men of good will. Finally, the Church—professing mercy and remaining always faithful to it—has the right and the duty to call upon the mercy of God, imploring it in the face of all the manifestations of physical and moral evil, before all the threats that cloud the whole horizon of the life of humanity today.

4690–4699: Encyclical Laborem exercens, September 14, 1981

This encyclical was published for the ninetieth anniversary of the social encyclical Rerum novarum and expands on its themes. It underscores the importance of work for man and emphasizes the priority of labor over capital.

Ed.: AAS 73 (1981): 591–616.

Work at the Service of Man

6. ... [591] ... Fontes igitur dignitatis laboris ante omnia in eius ratione non obiectiva sed subiectiva sunt exquirendi.

Si de hac re ita sentitur, fundamentum ipsum paene evanescit, cui inhaerentes veteres in varios ordines homines secundum genus laboris ab iis patrati dividebant. Inde tamen non consequitur ut opus humanum, obiectiva ipsius ratione spectata, non possit neque debeat ullo modo comprobari atque extolli. Id solum est dicendum primarium fundamentum momenti laboris esse hominem ipsum, qui eius est subiectum.

Quocum ilico haec conclusio magni ponderis et indolem prae se ferens ethicam conectitur; quamvis verum sit hominem ad opus faciendum natum esse vocatumque, tamen prae primis “labor inservit homini, non homo labori”. Hac ipsa conclusione merito adducimur ut praestantissimam significationem subiectivam, sensui obiectivo antecellentem, agnoscamus.

Rem ita animo concipientes atque ponentes in variis operibus ab homine factis maiorem aut minorem inesse vim obiectivam, volumus tamen aperte affirmare unumquemque laborem aestimandum esse pro dignitate, quae propria sit ipsius subiecti eiusdem laboris, id est personae seu hominis opus illud facientis.

6. ... The sources of the dignity of work are to be sought primarily in the subjective dimension, not in the objective one. 4690

Such a concept practically does away with the very basis of the ancient differentiation of people into classes according to the kind of work done. This does not mean that, from the objective point of view, human work cannot and must not be rated and qualified in any way. It only means that the primary basis of the value of work is man himself, who is its subject.

This leads immediately to a very important conclusion of an ethical nature: however true it may be that man is destined for work and called to it, in the first place work is “for man” and not man “for work”. Through this conclusion, one rightly comes to recognize the preeminence of the subjective meaning of work over the objective one.

Given this way of understanding things, and presupposing that different sorts of work that people do can have greater or lesser objective value, let us try nevertheless to show that each sort is judged above all by the measure of the dignity of the subject of work, that is to say the person, the individual who carries it out.

4691 7. ... [593] ... Notum est quidem capitalismo definitam significationem historicam inesse, utpote systemati, videlicet systemati oeconomico-sociali, prout socialismo vel communismo opponatur. Tamen, si ad investigationem fundamentalis veritatis attenditur, ex qua totus cursus rerum oeconomicarum atque imprimis structurae ad bona parienda pertinentes—cuius generis est ipse labor—aestimantur, oportet agnoscere errorem capitalismi primigenii posse iterari, ubicumque homo, perinde ac universitas subsidiorum materialium ad bona gignenda destinatorum, quodammodo ut instrumentum, non secundum veram dignitatem laboris sui, id est non ut subiectum et auctor [594] atque adeo ut verus finis, ad quem totus cursus bonorum pariendorum contendit, tractetur.

7. ... Everybody knows that capitalism has a definite historical meaning as a system, an economic and social system, opposed to “socialism” or “communism”. But in the light of the analysis of the fundamental reality of the whole economic process—first and foremost of the production structure that work is—it should be recognized that the error of early capitalism can be repeated wherever man is in a way treated on the same level as the whole complex of the material means of production, as an instrument and not in accordance with the true dignity of his work—that is to say, where he is not treated as subject and maker and, for this very reason, as the true purpose of the whole process of production.

4692 9. ... [599] ... Si quis ergo significationem ethicam laboris accuratius velit describere, ad haec imprimis animum intendat oportet. Est autem labor hominis bonum—ac quidem bonum [600] humanitatis eius—quia per eum homo non solum mutat naturam, suis necessitatibus eam accomodans, sed etiam se ipsum ut hominem perficit, immo quodammodo “magis homo evadit”.

9. ... If one wishes to define more clearly the ethical meaning of work, it is this truth [that is, that work is a good thing for man] that one must particularly keep in mind. Work is a good thing for man—a good thing for his humanity—because through work man not only transforms nature, adapting it to his own needs, but he also achieves fulfillment as a human being and indeed, in a sense, becomes “more a human being”.

4693 [605] ... 12. Si hic temporis nostri status, ut est reapse, aspicitur, in cuius veluti compage tot conflictationes, ab homine excitatae, reperiuntur et instrumenta technica—fructus laboris humani praecipuas obtinent partes (monendum est hic etiam de timore cladis universalis, si forte bellum atomicum conflatur vim delendi habens, quae mente fingi nullatenus potest), [606] imprimis oportet principium in memoriam revocetur, quod Ecclesia iugiter docuit. Quod quidem in eo est positum ut labori priores partes deferantur quam opibus “capitalibus”; quod quidem principium ad cursum bona pariendi proxime pertinet, cuius si ratio habetur, labor semper est primaria causa efficiens, cum opes “capitales”, quae sunt summa subsidiorum ad bona parienda, solummodo instrumentum sint seu causa instrumentalis. Hoc principium profecto est veritas perspicua, ex tota hominis experientia historica fluens. ... [608]

12. The structure of the present-day situation is deeply marked by many conflicts caused by man, and the technological means produced by human work play a primary role in it. (We should also consider here the prospect of worldwide catastrophe in the case of a nuclear war, which would have almost unimaginable possibilities of destruction.) In view of this situation, we must first of all recall a principle that has always been taught by the Church: the principle of the priority of labor over capital. This principle directly concerns the process of production: in this process labor is always a primary efficient cause, while capital, the whole collection of means of production, remains a mere instrument or instrumental cause. This principle is an evident truth that emerges from the whole of man’s historical experience. ...

We must emphasize and give prominence to the primacy of man in the production process, the primacy of man over things. Everything contained in the concept of capital in the strict sense is only a collection of things. Man, as the subject of work, and independently of the work that he does—man alone is a person. This truth has important and decisive consequences.

13. Imprimis, hac veritate menti obversante, facile intellegitur opes “capitales” non seiungi posse a labore, neque ullo modo laborem obici contra opes “capitales”, neque has contra laborem; nedum ... homines certos ac definitos, qui hisce notionibus indicentur, liceat opponi alios aliis. Rectum, id est ipsi naturae quaestionis consentaneum, rectum, dicimus, id est intrinsecus verum simulque secundum mora[609]lem doctrinam legitimum tantum illud esse potest systema operis faciendi, quod antinomiam inter laborem opesque “capitales” in ipsis radicibus suis evincat, eo contendens, ut fingatur secundum principium supra expositum, ex quo labori partes priores eaeque essentiales et solidae sunt deferendae, ex quo indoles subiectiva labori inest humano, ex quo totum cursum bonorum gignendorum is efficienter participet, nulla habita ratione naturae operarum ab opificibus praestitarum.

13. In the light of the above truth we see clearly, 4695 first of all, that capital cannot be separated from labor; in no way can labor be opposed to capital or capital to labor, and still less ... can the actual people behind these concepts be opposed to each other, as will be explained later. A labor system can be right, in the sense of being in conformity with the very essence of the issue and in the sense of being intrinsically true and also morally legitimate, if in its very basis it overcomes the opposition between labor and capital through an effort at being shaped in accordance with the principle put forward above: the principle of the substantial and real priority of labor, of the subjectivity of human labor and its effective participation in the whole production process, independently of the nature of the services provided by the worker.

The Right of Property

14. ... [613] ... Numquam traditio christiana ius illud affirmavit veluti absolutum et inviolabile. Contra vero id accepit semper latiore in ambitu communis omnium iuris ad bona totius creationis adhibenda: videlicet ius privati domini, quatenus iuri usus communis destinationisque bonorum universali subicitur.

14. ... Christian tradition has never upheld this right as 4696 absolute and untouchable. On the contrary, it has always understood this right within the broader context of the right common to all to use the goods of the whole of creation: the right to private property is subordinated to the right to common use, to the fact that goods are meant for everyone.

Praeterea possessio numquam secundum Ecclesiae praecepta ita est intellecta ut causam inferre secum posset socialis contentio in opere ipso faciendo. Sicut iam est prius hisce in paginis monitum, comparatur possessio ante omnia per laborem ut serviat labori. Respicitur hic particulatim dominium instrumentorum ad bona parienda. Si autem ea seiunctim considerantur tamquam universitas possessionum circumscripta, quae, formam praefrens opum “capitalium”, opponatur labori, vel etiam ut opus quaestui habeatur, hoc adversatur naturae ipsi horum instrumentorum eorumque possessioni.

Furthermore, in the Church’s teaching, ownership 4697 has never been understood in a way that could constitute grounds for social conflict in labor. As mentioned above, property is acquired first of all through work in order that it may serve work. This concerns in a special way ownership of the means of production. Isolating these means as a separate property in order to set it up in the form of “capital” in opposition to “labor”—and even to practice exploitation of labor—is contrary to the very nature of these means and their possession.

Etenim non possunt illa possideri contra opus; nec possunt quidem possideri ut possideantur, quoniam una ratio legitima eorum possessionis—tum sub forma privati domini tum sub [614] possessionis publicae vel collectivae figura—ea est ut labori deserviant. Ideoque, dum operi proficiunt, efficere debent ut primum huius ordinis principium compleatur, quod est universalis destinatio bonorum iusque communis usus eorum. Ex hac igitur iudicandi ratione, nempe in consideratione operis humani communisque accessus ad bona hominibus destinata, non excludenda est, opportunis servatis condicionibus, socialis illa in commune collatio instrumentorum ad bona gignenda...

They cannot be possessed against labor, they cannot even be possessed for possession’s sake, because the only legitimate title to their possession—whether in the form of private ownership or in the form of public or collective ownership—is that they should serve labor, and thus, by serving labor, that they should make possible the achievement of the first principle of this order, namely, the universal destination of goods and the right to common use of them. From this point of view, therefore, in consideration of human labor and of common access to the goods meant for man, one cannot exclude the socialization, in suitable conditions, of certain means of production...

Therefore, while the position of “rigid” capitalism 4698 must undergo continual revision, in order to be reformed from the point of view of human rights, both human rights in the widest sense and those linked with man’s est affirmandum multiplices has ac tantopere optatas reformationes non posse ad effectum adduci per abolitionem, ex antecapto iudicio factam, possessionis privatae instrumentorum ad bona gignenda. Nam necesse animadverti est solam amotionem illorum effectiois bonorum instrumentorum (opum “capitalium”) a dominis ipsorum privatis haud sufficere ut in commune collatio eorum debito modo eveniat. Etenim cessant iam ad certum quendam hominum numerum pertinere, id est ad dominos privatos, ut possessio fiant constitutae societatis, dum administrationi subiacent gubernationique proximae alte[616]rius hominum manipuli, eorum videlicet, qui, etsi dominium iis deest, sed in societate ipsa imperium adest, utuntur illo imperio ad regendam omnem nationis oeconomiam vel loci alicuius.

Loqui enim de eiusmodi collatione in commune tum solum licebit, cum subiectiva societatis condicio praestita erit, id est cum unusquisque suo pro opere proprio habere se simul iure pleno poterit compossessorem ingentis illius quasi sedis operis faciendi, in qua una ipse cum ceteris elaborat.

The Vocation of Man to Love

4701 Sexualitas ideo, per quam vir ac femina se dedunt vicissim actibus coniugum propriis sibi ac peculiaribus, minime quiddam est dumtaxat biologicum, sed tangit personae humanae ut talis veluti nucleum intimum. Sexualitas modo vere humano expletur tantummodo, si est pars complens amoris, quo vir et femina sese totos mutuo usque ad mortem obstringunt.

work, it must be stated that, from the same point of view, these many deeply desired reforms cannot be achieved by an a priori elimination of private ownership of the means of production. For it must be noted that merely taking these means of production (capital) out of the hands of their private owners is not enough to ensure their satisfactory socialization. They cease to be the property of a certain social group, namely the private owners, and become the property of organized society, coming under the administration and direct control of another group of people, namely those who, though not owning them, from the fact of exercising power in society manage them on the level of the whole national or the local economy.

This group in authority may carry out its task satisfactorily from the point of view of the priority of labor; but it may also carry it out badly by claiming for itself a monopoly of the administration and disposal of the means of production and not refraining even from offending basic human rights. Thus, merely converting the means of production into State property in the collectivist system is by no means equivalent to “socializing” that property.

We can speak of socializing only when the subject character of society is ensured, that is to say, when on the basis of his work each person is fully entitled to consider himself a part owner of the great workbench at which he is working with everyone else.

11. ... Christian revelation recognizes two specific ways of realizing the vocation of the human person, in its entirety, to love: marriage and virginity. Either one is, in its own proper form, an actuation of the most profound truth of man, of his being “created in the image of God”.

Consequently, sexuality, by means of which man and woman give themselves to one another through the acts that are proper and exclusive to spouses, is by no means something purely biological, but concerns the innermost being of the human person as such. It is realized in a truly human way only if it is an integral part of the love by which a man and a woman commit themselves totally to one another until death.

Tota physica corporum donatio mendacium esset, nisi signum fructusque esset totius donationis personalis, in qua universa persona, etiam secundum temporalem rationem, praesens adest: si enim aliquid homo sibi retineret vel facultatem aliud postea statuendi, iam idcirco se non totum donaret.

Haec universalitas amore coniugali postulata convenit etiam consciae fecunditatis postulationibus, quae, cum ad hominem generandum dirigatur, superat natura sua ordinem simpliciter biologicum ac complectitur bonorum personalium summam, quae ut convenienter crescat, necessariae sunt continuae concordisque amborum coniugum partes.

Unicus autem “locus”, ubi haec donatio accidere potest ex omni sua veritate, matrimonium est sive amoris coniugalis foedus vel conscia ac libera electio, qua vir ac mulier in se recipiunt vitae amorisque communitatem intimam, a Deo ipso [93] praestitutam,¹ quae hac tantum ratione germanam suam ostendit significationem.

Coniugale institutum non est illegitimus quidam interventus societatis vel auctoritatis neque exterior formae impositio, verum interior necessitas ipsius foederis amoris coniugalis, qui palam affirmatur tamquam unicus et peculiaris omnino ut ex fidelitate erga Dei conditoris consilium vivatur. Haec fidelitas tantum abest ut personae libertatem restinguat ut tuto eam defendat ab omni subiectiva et relativa ratione eamque Sapientiae creatricis reddat participem.

The Spouses Are Witnesses of Salvation

13. ... [95] Nam per baptismum vir et femina semel et in perpetuum inseruntur in Novum Aeternumque Foedus, in sponsale Foedus Christi cum Ecclesia; et ob hanc indelebilem insertionem extollitur intima vitae amorisque coniugalis communitas condita a Creatore¹ assumiturque in sponsalem Christi caritatem, firmatam ac ditatam redemptrice Ipsius virtute.

Propter sacramentalem matrimonii sui indolem coniuges inter se vincuntur maxime indissolubili ratione. Quoniam mutuo ad se pertinent, iam revera per signum sacramentale commonstrant ipsam Christi coniunctionem cum Ecclesia.

Coniuges igitur sunt pro Ecclesia recordatio perpetua illius rei, quae in Cruce evenit; sibi vicissim et filiis sunt testes salutis, cuius eos efficit consortes sacramentum. Illius salutiferi eventus matrimonium, sicut quodvis sacramentum, est memoriale et executio et vaticinium: “hoc in memoriali sacramentum illis gratiam tribuit et

The total physical self-giving would be a lie if it were not the sign and fruit of a total personal self-giving, in which the whole person, including the temporal dimension, is present: if the person were to withhold something or reserve the possibility of deciding otherwise in the future, by this very fact he would not be giving totally.

This totality which is required by conjugal love also corresponds to the demands of responsible fertility. This fertility is directed to the generation of a human being, and so by its nature it surpasses the purely biological order and involves a whole series of personal values. For the harmonious growth of these values a persevering and unified contribution by both parents is necessary. 4702

The only “place” in which this self-giving in its whole truth is made possible is marriage, the covenant of conjugal love freely and consciously chosen, whereby man and woman accept the intimate community of life and love willed by God himself,¹ which only in this light manifests its true meaning. 4703

The institution of marriage is not an undue interference by society or authority or the extrinsic imposition of a form. Rather it is an interior requirement of the covenant of conjugal love that is publicly affirmed as unique and exclusive, in order to live in complete fidelity to the plan of God, the Creator. A person’s freedom, far from being restricted by this fidelity, is secured against every form of subjectivism or relativism and is made a sharer in creative Wisdom.

13. ... Indeed, by means of baptism, man and woman are definitively placed within the new and eternal covenant, in the spousal covenant of Christ with the Church. And it is because of this indestructible insertion that the intimate community of conjugal life and love, founded by the Creator,¹ is elevated and assumed into the spousal charity of Christ, sustained and enriched by his redeeming power. 4704

By virtue of the sacramentality of their marriage, spouses are bound to one another in the most profoundly indissoluble manner. Their belonging to each other is the real representation, by means of the sacramental sign, of the very relationship of Christ with the Church. 4705

Spouses are therefore the permanent reminder to the Church of what happened on the Cross; they are for one another and for the children witnesses to the salvation in which the sacrament makes them sharers. Of this salvation event marriage, like every sacrament, is a memorial, actuation, and prophecy: “As a memorial, the sacrament officium memoriae agenda magnorum Dei operum ac de illis testimonii reddendi coram filiis; uti salutis executio tribuit iis gratiam et officium implendi iam nunc inter se et erga filios postulata amoris ignoscentis redimentisque; uti vaticinium gratiam tribuit iis et officium vivendi e spe futurae congressionis cum Christo eamque testandi.”¹ gives them the grace and duty of commemorating the great works of God and of bearing witness to them before their children. As actuation, it gives them the grace and duty of putting into practice in the present, toward each other and their children, the demands of a love that forgives and redeems. As prophecy, it gives them the grace and duty of living and bearing witness to the hope of the future encounter with Christ.”¹

4707 [114] ... 29. Idcirco omnino quod coniugum amor participatio singularis est vitae mysterii atque ipsius Dei amoris, se scit [115] Ecclesia peculiare recepisse officium custodiendae et tuendae excelsae dignitatis matrimonii necnon gravissimum munus vitae humanae tradendae.

... 29. Precisely because the love of husband and wife is a unique participation in the mystery of life and of the love of God himself, the Church knows that she has received the special mission of guarding and protecting the lofty dignity of marriage and the most serious responsibility of the transmission of human life.

Thus, in continuity with the living tradition of the ecclesial community throughout history, the recent Second Vatican Council and the Magisterium of my predecessor Paul VI, expressed above all in the encyclical Humanae vitae, have handed on to our times a truly prophetic proclamation, which reaffirms and repropose with clarity the Church’s teaching and norm, always old yet always new, regarding marriage and regarding the transmission of human life.

4709 Hac de causa Synodi Patres in ultimo Coetu haec ipsa verba sunt elocuti: “Haec Sacra Synodus in unitate fidei cum Successore Petri congregata firmiter tenet quae in Concilio Vaticano II¹ et postea in Encyclica Humanae vitae proponuntur et in specie quod amor coniugalitatis debet esse plene humanus, exclusivus et apertus ad novam vitam.”²...

For this reason the synod Fathers made the following declaration at their last assembly: “This sacred synod, gathered together with the successor of Peter in the unity of faith, firmly holds what has been set forth in the Second Vatican Council¹ and afterward in the encyclical Humanae vitae, particularly that love between husband and wife must be fully human, exclusive, and open to new life.”² ...

4710 30. ... [116] ... Ecclesia destinatur ad omnibus iterum significandam—clariore quidem et firmiore persuasione—voluntatem suam promovendi omnibus viribus ac tuendi contra insidias cunctas vitam humanam, quacumque in condicione aut gradu progressionis reperitur.

30. ... The Church is called upon to manifest anew to everyone, with clear and stronger conviction, her will to promote human life by every means and to defend it against all attacks, in whatever condition or state of development it is found.

4711 Idcirco Ecclesia damnat velut gravem dignitatis humanae [117] iustitiaeque offensionem illa opera omnia regiminum vel aliarum auctoritatum publicarum, quae eo spectant ut quovis modo libertatem coniugum circumscribant decernendi de filiis.

Thus the Church condemns as a grave offense against human dignity and justice all those activities of governments or other public authorities that attempt to limit in any way the freedom of couples in deciding about children.

² Proposito 22. The conclusion of no. 11 of the encyclical Humanae vitae says: “The Church, nevertheless, in urging men to the observance of the precepts of the natural law, which she interprets by her constant doctrine, teaches that each and every marital act must of necessity retain its intrinsic relationship to the procreation of human life” (Verumtamen Ecclesia, dum homines commonet de observandis praeceptis legis naturalis, quam constanti sua doctrina interpretatur, id docet necessarium esse, ut quilibet matrimonii usus ad vitam humanam procreandam per se destinatus permaneat: AAS 60 [1968]: 488; *4475).

Proinde quaelibet vis talibus a magistratibus illata pro conceptionis impedimento, immo etiam pro ipsa sterilizatione, quae dicitur, et abortu procurato, prorsus damnanda est et vehementer repellenda.

Pariter tamquam aliquid graviter iniustum exsecrari oportet, quod in rationibus publicis inter nationes intercedentibus subsidia oeconomica adiuvandis populis concessa temperantur secundum consilia adversus conceptionem et sterilizationi necnon abortui procurato faventia.¹

Consequently, any violence applied by such authorities in favor of contraception or, still worse, of sterilization and procured abortion, must be altogether condemned and forcefully rejected.

Likewise to be denounced as gravely unjust are cases where, in international relations, economic help given for the advancement of peoples is made conditional on programs of contraception, sterilization, and procured abortion.¹

The Rights of the Family

[137] ... 46. ... palam fortiterque Ecclesia defendit familiae iura ab intolerabilibus societatis et Civitatis abusibus. Parti/[138]culatim vero synodi Patres haec, quae sequuntur, familiae iura, inter alia, memorarunt:

— Existendi et progrediendi ut familia, i.e. ius omnis hominis, praesertim etiam pauperum ad familiam condendam et aptis subsidiis sustentandam.

— Exercendi suum munus in vita transmittenda atque filios educandi.

— Intimitatis vitae et coniugalis et familiaris.

— Stabilitatis vinculi atque institutionis matrimonialis.

— Credendi et profitendi propriam fidem, eamque propagandi.

— Educandi filios iuxta proprias traditiones et valores religiosos, necnon culturales, instrumentis, mediis atque institutionibus necessariis.

— Obtinendi securitatem physicam, sociale, politicam, oeconomicam, praesertim pauperum et infirmorum.

— Ius ad habitationem aptam vitae familiae rite dudenda.

— Expressionis et repraesentationis coram publicis auctoritatibus oeconomicis, socialibus et culturalibus eisque subiacentibus, sive per se, sive ope consociationum.

— Consociationes creandi cum aliis familiis et institutionibus, ut apte et solleter suum munus adimpleat.

— Protegendi minores ope adaequatarum institutionum et legislationum, contra nociva pharmaca, pornographiam, alcoholismum, etc.

— Honesti otii quod simul valores familiae foveat.

— Ius senum ad dignam vitam et dignam mortem.

— Ius emigrandi tamquam familia ad meliorem vitam quaerendam.¹

46. ... The Church openly and strongly defends the rights of the family against the intolerable usurpations of society and the State. In particular, the synod Fathers mentioned the following rights of the family: 4712

— (the right) to exist and progress as a family, that is to say, the right of every human being, even if he is poor, to found a family and to have adequate means to support it;

— (the right) to exercise its responsibility regarding the transmission of life and to educate children; family life;

— (the right) to the intimacy of conjugal and family life;

— (the right) to the stability of the bond and of the institution of marriage;

— (the right) to believe in and profess one's faith and to propagate it;

— (the right) to bring up children in accordance with the family's own traditions and religious and cultural values, with the necessary instruments, means, and institutions;

— (the right,) especially of the poor and the sick, to obtain physical, social, political, and economic security;

— the right to housing suitable for living family life in a proper way;

— (the right) to expression and to representation, either directly or through associations, before the economic, social, and cultural public authorities and lower authorities;

— (the right) to form associations with other families and institutions, in order to fulfill the family's role suitably and expeditiously;

— (the right) to protect minors by adequate institutions and legislation from harmful drugs, pornography, alcoholism, etc.;

— (the right) to reasonable leisure time of a kind that also fosters family values;

— (the right) of the elderly to a worthy life and a worthy death;

— the right to emigrate as a family in search of a better life.¹

Matrimony as a Source of Sanctification

Iesu Christi donum minime totum positum est in sacramenti matrimonii celebratione, verum coniuges fulcit in vitae eorum perpetuitate....

Etiam ad coniuges et parentes christianos, praesertim in terrenis his temporariisque rebus, quae eos denotant, verba Concilii adhibentur: “Sic et laici, qua adoratores ubique sancte agentes, ipsum mundum Deo consecrant.”²

... 56. The sacrament of marriage is the specific source and original means of sanctification for Christian married couples and families. It takes up again and makes specific the sanctifying grace of baptism. By virtue of the mystery of the death and Resurrection of Christ, of which the spouses are made part in a new way by marriage, conjugal love is purified and made holy: “This love the Lord has judged worthy of special gifts, healing, perfecting, and exalting gifts of grace and of charity.”¹

The gift of Jesus Christ is not exhausted in the actual celebration of the sacrament of marriage, but rather supports the married couple throughout their lives....

... Christian spouses and parents are included in the universal call to sanctity. For them this call is specified by the sacrament they have celebrated and is carried out concretely in the realities proper to their conjugal and family life.¹ This gives rise to the grace and requirement of an authentic and profound conjugal and family spirituality that draws its inspiration from the themes of creation, covenant, cross, resurrection, and sign, which were stressed more than once by the synod.

Christian marriage, like the other sacraments, “whose purpose is to sanctify people, to build up the body of Christ, and, finally, to give worship to God”,¹ is in itself a liturgical action glorifying God in Jesus Christ and in the Church. By celebrating it, Christian spouses profess their gratitude to God for the sublime gift bestowed on them of being able to live in their married and family lives the very love of God for people and that of the Lord Jesus for the Church, his bride.

Just as husbands and wives receive from the sacrament the gift and responsibility of translating into daily living the sanctification bestowed on them, so the same sacrament confers on them the grace and moral obligation of transforming their whole lives into a “spiritual sacrifice”.¹

What the council says of the laity applies also to Christian spouses and parents, especially with regard to the earthly and temporal realities that characterize their lives: “As worshippers leading holy lives in every place, the laity consecrate the world itself to God.”²

4720–4723: Instruction of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith Sacerdotium ministeriale, August 6, 1983

In the postconciliar discussion on ministry, against the background of the growing shortage of priests, there was much talk of “the right of the community to the Eucharist” or the “right of the community to a priest” (cf. E. Schillebeeckx, Kerkelijk Ambt.

In certain cases, the connection between the Eucharist and the sacrament of holy orders was also placed in doubt, as in the eucharistic practices of some Italian and Dutch base communities. This document of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith addresses the “erroneous opinions” of unnamed theologians on the apostolicity of the Church, the relation between ministry and the community, and the understanding of the Eucharist.

The Minister of the Eucharist

1. Novarum opinionum fautores affirmant quamlibet christianam communitatem, eo ipso quod adunatur in nomine Christi ac proinde indivisa Eius praesentia fruitur [cf. Mt 18:20], omnibus gaudere potestatibus, quas Dominus Ecclesiae suae concedere voluit.

Praeterea existimant Ecclesiam esse apostolicam hoc sensu, quod omnes, qui per sacrum Baptisma abluti sunt eidemque aggregati et muneris Christi sacerdotalis, prophetici et regalis participes facti revera etiam Apostolorum successores habendi sunt. Quoniam vero in Apostolis Ecclesia tota praefiguratur, inde sequeretur ut verba quoque institutionis Eucharistiae, ad eos quidem directa, omnibus destinata essent.

Quam ob rem munus moderandi, uti aiunt, communitatem—quod coniunctum habet munus verbi Dei praedicandi et sacrae Synaxi praesidendi—non nisi mandatum esset ad rectum tuendum communitatis ordinem collatum, ac proinde “sacrum effici” non deberet. Vocatio ad tale ministerium novam capacitatem “sacerdotalem” non adderet sensu stricto—idque est causa cur plerumque ipsa vox “sacerdotii” vitetur—nec characterem imprimeret, quo quis ontologice constitueretur in condicione ministrorum, sed dumtaxat exprimeret coram communitate capacitatem initialem, quae per Baptismum collata est, ad effectum deduci.

3. Vi autem apostolicitatis singularum communitatum localium, in quibus non minus quam in structura episcopali Christus praesens adesset, quaelibet communitas, quantumvis exigua, si forte diu privaretur constitutive illo suo elemento quod est Eucharistia, tunc posset “resumere” originariam suam potestatem ac iure gauderet suum praesidem atque animatorem designandi eique conferendi omnes facultates ad ipsam communitatem moderandam necessarias, ea non excepta quae ad praesidendum Eucharistiae eamque consecrandam spectat. Affirmatur etiam Deum ipsum renuere non posse, in iisdem rerum adiunctis, illam potestatem etiam sine sacramento concedere, quam per sacramentalem Ordinationem conferre solet.

1. The promoters of these new opinions maintain that every Christian community, from the very fact that it is united in the name of Christ and thus enjoys his undivided presence [cf. Mt 18:20], is endowed with all the powers that the Lord wished to give to his Church. 4720

It is asserted, moreover, that the Church is apostolic in the sense that all those who have been washed in baptism and incorporated into her, having been made sharers in the priestly, prophetic, and royal office of Christ, are also truly successors of the apostles. From the fact that the whole Church was prefigured in the apostles, it would then follow that the words of institution of the Eucharist addressed to them were intended for everyone.

2. As a consequence, although necessary for the good ordering of the Church, the ministry of bishops and priests would not differ from the common priesthood of the faithful with respect to the participation in the priesthood of Christ in the strict sense, but only insofar as its exercise is concerned. 4721

The so-called role of moderating the community—including also that of preaching and presiding at the Eucharist—would, therefore, be only a simple mandate conferred for the orderly functioning of the community itself, and, therefore, it ought not to be “sacralized”. The call to such a ministry would not amount to a new “priestly” capacity—strictly speaking—and for that reason the term “priesthood” is generally avoided—nor would it impart any character with ontological significance for the state of the ministers, but would simply give expression before the community that the original power conferred in the sacrament of baptism had become effective.

3. In virtue of the apostolicity of the single local communities, in which Christ would be no less present than in an episcopal structure, each community, no matter how small, in the event of its being deprived for some time of such a constituent element as the Eucharist, could “reappropriate” its original powers. Also it would have the right of designating its own president and animator and conferring on him all the necessary faculties for leading the community itself, including that of presiding at and consecrating the Eucharist. It is, moreover, asserted that God himself would not refuse, in such circumstances, to grant, even without a sacramental rite, the power he normally gives through sacramental ordination. 4722

Ad huiusmodi conclusionem hoc etiam conducit, quod Eucharistiae celebratio saepe intellegitur tamquam simplex actus communitatis localis, quae adunatur ad ultimam Cenam Domini commemorandam per fractionem panis. Quare ageretur de convivio fraterno in quo communitas adunatur et exprimitur, potius quam de renovatione sacramentali sacrificii Christi [1004], cuius salvifica efficacia ad universos homines extenditur, praesentes vel absentes, sive vivos sive defunctos. . . .

4723 Opiniones supra memoratae, etsi formis sat variis atque extenuatis proponuntur, omnes tamen ad eandem conclusionem conspirant: scilicet potestatem conficiendi Sacramentum Eucharistiae non necessario conexam esse cum Ordinatione sacramentali. Manifesto patet hanc conclusionem componi nullo modo posse cum tradita fide, quia non solum hoc modo respuitur potestas sacerdotibus collata, sed etiam tota apostolica Ecclesiae structura laeditur, atque ipsa oeconomia sacramentaria salutis subvertitur.

Such is the conclusion also reached by the fact that the celebration of the Eucharist is often understood simply as the action of the local community, which is gathered together to commemorate, in the breaking of the bread, the Last Supper of the Lord. It would therefore be more a fraternal celebration in which the community comes together and gives expression to its identity than the sacramental renewal of the sacrifice of Christ, whose saving power extends to everyone, be they present or absent, living or dead. . . .

Although they may be expressed in various ways with different nuances, all these opinions lead to the same conclusion: that the power to confect the sacrament of the Eucharist is not necessarily connected with sacramental ordination. It is evident that such a conclusion is absolutely incompatible with the faith as it has been handed down, since not only does it deny the power conferred on priests, but it undermines the entire apostolic structure of the Church and distorts the sacramental economy of salvation itself.

This and the following instruction, Libertatis conscientia (*4750–4776), are concerned with the Latin American theology of liberation. The second instruction was preceded by a notification of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on the book by the theologian Leonardo Boff, O.F.M., Igreja-Carisma e Poder: Ensaio de Ecclesiologia Militante (Petrópolis, 1981; Eng. trans., Church, Charism and Power: Liberation Theology and the Institutional Church [New York, 1986]) of March 11, 1985 (AAS 77 [1985]: 756–62). The first instruction is highly critical of certain aspects of the “theology of liberation”. The second presents the “fundamental elements of the Christian doctrine on freedom and liberation”.

VII. Marxist Analysis

4732 [891]. . . 8. Nemo quidem negat suis ab originibus, at multo magis proximis hisce annis, marxianam doctrinam sic variatam esse ut plura sententiarum corpora pepererit insigniter inter sese distantia. Quatenus autem vere persistunt esse marxianae, eatenus opiniones illae haud desinunt cum principiis quibusdam principalibus conspirare quae cum christiana hominis societatisque conceptione dissentiant.

1. Impatience and a desire for results has led certain Christians, despairing of every other method, to turn to what they call “Marxist analysis”.

2. Their reasoning is this: an intolerable and explosive situation requires effective action that cannot be put off. Effective action presupposes a scientific analysis of the structural causes of poverty. Marxism now provides us with the means to make such an analysis, they say. Then one simply has to apply the analysis to the third-world situation, especially in Latin America. . . .

8. It is true that Marxist thought ever since its origins, and even more so lately, has become divided and has given birth to various currents that diverge significantly from each other. To the extent that they remain fully Marxist, these currents continue to be based on certain fundamental tenets that are not compatible with the Christian conception of humanity and society.

Quicumque proin similes adhibent formulas, fingentes se aliquot tantum conservare marxianae explicationis elementa quae aliunde in summa refutabitur, saltem gravem fovent ambiguitatem in priorum lectorum animis.

9. In memoriam rursus vocamus atheismum ac negationem personae humanae eiusque libertatis et iurium locum quidem medium obtinere totius mentis marxianae. In se ideo ea errores continent qui recta via minitantur fidei veritatibus de sorte hominum aeterna.

Praeterea si theologiam quis perficere velit aliqua “analisi”, cuius normae interpretandi ex hac athea conceptione pendeant, se necessario concludat in repugnantias exitiales. Ceterum falsus intellectus indolis spiritalis personae faciet ut haec tota submittatur communitati ipsi sicque principia negentur vitae socialis ac politicae dignitati humanae respondentis.

In this context, certain formulas are not neutral but keep the meaning they had in the original Marxist doctrine. This is the case with the “class struggle”. This expression remains pregnant with the interpretation that Karl Marx gave it, so it cannot be taken as the equivalent of “severe social conflict”, in an empirical sense. 4733

Those who use similar formulas, while claiming to keep only certain elements of the Marxist analysis and yet to reject the analysis taken as a whole, maintain at the very least a serious confusion in the minds of their readers.

9. Let us recall the fact that atheism and the denial of the human person, his liberty and rights, are at the core of the Marxist theory. This theory, then, contains errors that directly threaten the truths of the faith regarding the eternal destiny of individual persons. 4734

Moreover, to attempt to integrate into theology an analysis whose criterion of interpretation depends on this atheistic conception is to involve oneself in terrible contradictions. What is more, this misunderstanding of the spiritual nature of the person leads to a total subordination of the person to the collectivity and, thus, to the denial of the principles of a social and political life that is in keeping with human dignity.

Class Struggle

7. Qua de causa ostenditur ingressus ipse in classium contentionem tamquam caritatis ipsius necessitas; reicitur uti animus impediens contrariusque pauperum amori ipsa voluntas diligendi iam nunc omnem hominem, ad quemcumque ordinem pertinet, ac studium succurrendi ei per non violentas colloquii persuasionisque vias. Si autem quis affirmat hominem iam non odio esse debere, item simul asseverat, eo quod re vera pertineat ad orbem divitum, iam a principio eum inimicum classis esse debellandum. Quapropter universalis natura amoris proximi ac fraternitas fiunt eschatologicum principium quod soli “novo homini” valebit qui ex eversiois victoria exoriatur.

... 6. A radical politicization of faith’s affirmations and of theological judgments follows inevitably from this new conception. The question no longer has to do with simply drawing attention to the consequences and political implications of the truths of faith, which are respected beforehand for their transcendent value. In this new system, every affirmation of faith or of theology is subordinated to a political criterion, which in turn depends on the class struggle, the driving force of history. 4735

7. As a result, participation in the class struggle is presented as a requirement of charity itself. The desire to love everyone here and now, despite his class, and to go out to meet him with the nonviolent means of dialogue and persuasion is denounced as counterproductive and opposed to love of the poor. If one holds that a person should not be the object of hate, it is claimed nevertheless that, if he belongs to the objective class of the rich, he is primarily a class enemy to be fought. Thus the universality of love of neighbor and brotherhood becomes an eschatological principle, which will only have meaning for the “new man” who arises out of the victorious revolution. 4736

8. As far as the Church is concerned, this system would see her only as a reality interior to history, herself subject to those laws that are supposed to govern the development of history in its immanence. The Church, the gift of God and mystery of faith, is emptied of any specific reality by this reductionism. At the same time, it is disputed that the participation at the same Eucharistic Table of Christians who belong to opposing classes still makes any sense. . . .

10. But the “theologies of liberation”, which reserve credit for restoring to a place of honor the great texts of the prophets and of the gospel in defense of the poor, go on to a disastrous confusion between the poor of the Scripture and the proletariat of Marx. In this way they pervert the Christian meaning of the poor, and they transform the fight for the rights of the poor into a class fight within the ideological perspective of the class struggle. For them the Church of the poor signifies the Church of the class that has become aware of the requirements of the revolutionary struggle as a step toward liberation and that celebrates this liberation in its liturgy.

11. A further remark regarding the expression Church of the People will not be out of place here. From the pastoral point of view, this expression might mean the favored recipients of evangelization to whom, because of their condition, the Church extends her pastoral love first of all. One might also refer to the Church as people of God, that is, people of the New Covenant established in Christ.¹

12. But the “theologies of liberation” of which we are speaking mean by Church of the People a Church of the class, a Church of the oppressed people whom it is necessary to “conscientize” in the light of the organized struggle for freedom. For some, the people, thus understood, even become the object of faith.

13. Building on such a conception of the Church of the People, a critique of the very structures of the Church is developed. It is not simply the case of fraternal correction of pastors of the Church whose behavior does not reflect the evangelical spirit of service and is linked to old-fashioned signs of authority that scandalize the poor. It has to do with a challenge to the sacramental and hierarchical structure of the Church, which was willed by the Lord himself. There is a denunciation of members of the hierarchy and the Magisterium as objective representatives of the ruling class that has to be opposed. Theologically, this position means that ministers take their origin from the people, who therefore designate ministers of their own choice in accord with the needs of their historic revolutionary mission.

1. Libertatis conscientia et dignitatis humanae, una cum affirmatione iurium inalienabilium personae et populorum, recensetur inter notas maxime insignes nostrae aetatis. Libertas autem exigit condiciones ordinis oeconomici, socialis, politici et culturalis quae possibile reddant eius plenum exercitium. Ex viva perceptione difficultatum, quae [555] impediunt eius manifestationem, quaeque offendunt dignitatem humanam, originem sumunt vota vehementia ad liberationem, quibus mundus hodiernus laborat.

Ecclesia Christi sua facit haec vota, iudicans sub Evangelii lumine, quod suapte natura est libertatis et liberationis nuntius. Revera huiusmodi aspirationes, sive ad theoriam sive ad praxim quod attinet, nonnumquam quasdam secumferunt notas, quae non semper congruunt cum hominis veritate, qualis manifestatur sub lumine eius creationis et redemptionis. Ideoque Congregatio pro Doctrina Fidei necessarium duxit animos fidelium intentos facere “in errores vel pericula erroris, qui fidei tantopere nocent vitaeque christianae”.¹ Quae admonitiones, nedum sint obsoletae, in dies opportiores et ad rem pertinentes videntur.

1. Awareness of man’s freedom and dignity, together with the affirmation of the inalienable rights of individuals and peoples, is one of the major characteristics of our time. But freedom demands conditions of an economic, social, political, and cultural kind that make possible its full exercise. A clear perception of the obstacles that hinder its development and that offend human dignity is at the source of the powerful aspirations to liberation that are at work in our world. 4750

The Church of Christ makes these aspirations her own, while exercising discernment in the light of the gospel, which is by its very nature a message of freedom and liberation. Indeed, on both the theoretical and practical levels, these aspirations sometimes assume expressions that are not always in conformity with the truth concerning man as it is manifested in the light of his creation and redemption. For this reason, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith has considered it necessary to draw attention to “deviations, or risks of deviation, damaging to the faith and to Christian living”.¹ Far from being outmoded, these warnings appear ever more timely and relevant. 4751

True Freedom

At cum hominis libertas finita sit et erroris obnoxia, eius appetitus in id, quod solum boni speciem prae se fert, potest verti: si vero falsum bonum homo eligit, vocationi suae libertatis ipse minime respondet. Homo per liberum arbitrium sui iuris est: at libere agens potest aut bonum aliquod efficere aut destruere.

Legi divinae oboediens quam in corde suo sculptam habet et tamquam Spiritus Sancti impulsus accepit, homo exercet verum dominium in semetipsum et regalem suam vocationem filii Dei adimplet. “Deum serviendo, regnat.”¹ Veri nominis libertas est “servitium iustitiae”, cum contra transgressionis et mali electio “servitus sit peccati”.²

30. Man’s history unfolds on the basis of the nature he has received from God and in the free accomplishment of the purpose toward which the inclinations of this nature and of divine grace orient and direct him. 4752

But man’s freedom is finite and fallible. His desire may be drawn to an apparent good: in choosing a false good, he fails in his vocation to freedom. By his free will, man is master of his own life: he can act in a positive sense or in a destructive one.

By obeying the divine law inscribed in his conscience and received as an impulse of the Holy Spirit, man exercises true mastery over himself and thus realizes his royal vocation as a child of God. “By the service of God he reigns.”¹ Authentic freedom is the “service of justice”, while the choice of disobedience and evil is the “slavery of sin”.² 4753

Non ergo liberatio per se gignit libertatem hominis. Sensus communis, cui et christianus sensus consentit, scit libertatem, etiamsi condicionibus astrictam, non omnino tolli. Etiam homines gravissime coerciti valent suam libertatem declarare et ad sui liberationem procedere. Liberationis processus, qui peractus est, potest tantum inducere aptiores condiciones ad effectivum exercitium libertatis. Hac sane de causa liberatio, quae parvi faciat libertatem personalem eorum qui pro ipsa pugnent, suapte natura successu carebit.

31. This notion of freedom clarifies the scope of temporal liberation: it involves all the processes that aim at securing and guaranteeing the conditions needed for the exercise of an authentic human freedom.

Thus it is not liberation that in itself produces human freedom. Common sense, confirmed by Christian sense, knows that even when freedom is subject to forms of conditioning it is not thereby completely destroyed. People who undergo terrible constraints succeed in manifesting their freedom and taking steps to secure their own liberation. A process of liberation that has been achieved can only create better conditions for the effective exercise of freedom. Indeed, a liberation that does not take into account the personal freedom of those who fight for it is condemned in advance to defeat.

The Gospel and Justice

4756 Hac missione fungens, Ecclesia docet viam, quam homo sequatur in hoc mundo ut in Dei Regnum ingrediatur. Eius igitur doctrina extenditur ad universum ordinem morum et praesertim ad iustitiam, cui competit mutuas inter homines relationes ordinare. Et haec ad Evangelii praedicationem pertinent.

4758 64. Cum igitur doctrinam suam proponit de promovenda iustitia in hominum societatibus, vel fideles laicos hortatur ut secundum vocationem propriam adlaborent, Ecclesia extra fines suos non egreditur,

63. The Church’s essential mission, following that of Christ, is a mission of evangelization and salvation.¹ She draws her zeal from the divine love. Evangelization is the proclamation of salvation, which is a gift of God. Through the Word of God and the sacraments, man is freed in the first place from the power of sin and the power of the Evil One that oppress him; and he is brought into a communion of love with God. Following her Lord, who “came into the world to save sinners” [1 Tim 1:15], the Church desires the salvation of all people.

In this mission, the Church teaches the way that man must follow in this world in order to enter the kingdom of God. Her teaching therefore extends to the whole moral order and, in particular, to the justice that must regulate human relations. This is part of the preaching of the gospel.

But the love that impels the Church to communicate to all people a sharing in the grace of divine life also causes her, through the effective action of her members, to pursue people’s true temporal good, help them in their needs, provide for their education, and promote an integral liberation from everything that hinders the development of individuals. The Church desires the good of man in all his dimensions, first of all as a member of the city of God and, then, as a member of the earthly city.

64. Therefore, when the Church speaks about the promotion of justice in human societies, or when she urges the faithful laity to work in this sphere according to their own vocation, she is not going beyond her mission. She sed est etiam sollicita ne missio, sui ipsius et laicorum, absorbeatur curis [582] ad ordinem temporalem spectantibus, aut eisdem tantum circumscribatur.

Propter quod maxima afficitur sollicitudine, ut clare et firmiter servetur unitas et distinctio evangelizationem inter et promotionem humanam: unitatem scilicet, quia quaerit bonum hominis in integritate eius personae, distinctionem vero, quia munera haec duo diverso titulo suae competunt missioni.

65. Prosequens ergo suos fines Ecclesia effundit Evangelii lumen super res terrestres, ut persona humana sanetur a miseriis suis et dignitate sua proficiat. Societatis compago secundum iustitiam et pacem hoc modo promovetur et firmatur.¹

Item Ecclesia est fidelis suae missioni cum denuntiat errores, servitudines et oppressiones, quibus homines subsunt, cumque resistit conatibus instaurandi ordinem vitae socialis, a quo Deus abest, sive id contingat conscia oppositione sive culpanda neglegentia,² cumque demum iudicium suum fert de politicis motibus qui contra miseriam et oppressionem eluctare se dicunt, sed inficiuntur theoriis et methodis agendi Evangelio contrariis et ipsi homini oppositis.³

Sine dubio gratiae viribus, ordo moralis evangelicus homini affert novos prospectus novasque exigentias; at ipse perficit et elevat rationem moralem, quae iam ad naturam humanam pertinet et de qua Ecclesia est sollicita, agnoscens ibi adesse patrimonium commune omnibus hominibus, quatenus homines sunt.

The Special Option for the Poor

Solidarietatem suam demonstrat cum hominibus, qui nihil valere videntur in societate, a qua spiritualiter et nonnumquam physice reiciuntur, quos econtra in humana fraternitate et in communione filiorum Dei ipsa reintegrat.

is, however, concerned that this mission should not be absorbed by preoccupations concerning the temporal order or reduced to such preoccupations.

Hence she takes great care to maintain clearly and firmly both the unity and the distinction between evangelization and human promotion: unity, because she seeks the good of the whole person; distinction, because these two tasks enter, in different ways, into her mission.

65. It is thus by pursuing her own finality that the Church sheds the light of the gospel on earthly realities in order that human beings may be healed of their miseries and raised in dignity. The cohesion of society in accordance with justice and peace is thereby promoted and strengthened.¹

Thus the Church is being faithful to her mission when she condemns the forms of deviation, slavery, and oppression of which people are victims. She is being faithful to her mission when she opposes attempts to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, whether by deliberate opposition or by culpable negligence.² She is likewise being faithful to her mission when she exercises her judgment regarding political movements that seek to fight poverty and oppression according to theories or methods of action that are contrary to the gospel and opposed to man himself.³

It is of course true that, with the energy of grace, evangelical morality brings man new perspectives and new duties. But its purpose is to perfect and elevate a moral dimension that already belongs to human nature and with which the Church concerns herself in the knowledge that this is a heritage belonging to all people by their very nature.

68. ... In loving the poor, the Church also witnesses to man's dignity. She clearly affirms that man is worth more for what he is than for what he has. She bears witness to the fact that this dignity cannot be destroyed, whatever the situation of poverty, scorn, rejection, or powerlessness to which a human being has been reduced.

She shows her solidarity with those who do not count in a society by which they are rejected spiritually and sometimes even physically. She integrates these into human fellowship and into the community of the children of God.

Ecclesia peculiari modo convertitur materno cum affectu ad infantes, qui propter humanam malitiam numquam in lucem edentur, atque etiam ad provectos aetate, qui soli sunt ac derelicti.

- 4761 Optio praecipua pauperum tantum abest, ut significet voluntatem colendi solum hominum partem vel factionem, ut potius patefaciat universalitatem naturae et missionis Ecclesiae; e qua optione nemo excluditur.

Haec est ratio cur Ecclesia hanc optionem exprimere non possit categoriis sociologicis vel ideologicis particularibus, quippe quae reddant hanc propensionem veluti selectionem factiosam et contentiosam.

She is particularly drawn with maternal affection toward those children who, through human wickedness, will never be brought forth to the light of day, as also for the elderly, alone, and abandoned.

The special option for the poor, far from being a sign of particularism or sectarianism, manifests the universality of the Church's being and mission. This option excludes no one.

This is the reason why the Church cannot express this option by means of reductive sociological and ideological categories that would make this preference a partisan choice and a source of conflict.

The Principles of the Church's Social Doctrine

- 4762 [585] 72. Doctrina socialis Ecclesiae orta est ex concurrentibus evangelico nuntio eiusque exigentiis, quae in maximo mandato amoris Dei et proximorum et in iustitia ut in summa comprehenduntur,¹ et problematibus quae ex societatis vita promanant. Ea autem ut doctrinae corpus [586] est constituta, adhibitis sapientiae humanarumque scientiarum subsidiis; refertur ad aspectum ethicum vitae, et considerat etiam aspectum technicos problematum, at semper ut morale iudicium de his proferat.

- 4763 Cum per se dirigatur ad res agendas, doctrina haec progreditur, pro mutatis rerum adiunctis decursu temporum. Propterea, firmis semper manentibus principiis, iudicia quoque proferenda sunt circa particularia facta contingentia. Attamen haec doctrina tantum abest ut systema quoddam in se clausum constituat, ut iugiter sit aperta novis quaestionibus, quae semper proponuntur, subsidiaque ex omnibus charismatibus, experienciis et competentiis requirat.

- 4764 Ecclesia, rerum humanarum experta, propria doctrina sociali affert summam principiorum doctrinalium, criteriorum iudicandi,¹ et etiam regulas et impulsiones ad agendum,² ut immutationes ab imo, quas condiciones miseriae et iniustitiae postulant, ad effectum deducantur, eo tamen modo ut vero hominum bono consulatur.

72. The Church's social teaching is born of the encounter of the gospel message and of its demands summarized in the supreme commandment of love of God and neighbor in justice¹ with the problems emanating from the life of society. This social teaching has established itself as a doctrine by using the resources of human wisdom and the sciences. It concerns the ethical aspect of this life. It takes into account the technical aspects of problems but always in order to judge them from the moral point of view.

Being essentially orientated toward action, this teaching develops in accordance with the changing circumstances of history. This is why, together with principles that are always valid, it also involves contingent judgments. Far from constituting a closed system, it remains constantly open to the new questions that continually arise; it requires the contribution of all charisma, experiences, and skills.

As an "expert in humanity", the Church offers by her social doctrine a set of principles for reflection and *criteria for judgment*¹ and also directives for action² so that the profound changes demanded by situations of poverty and injustice may be brought about, and this in a way that serves the true good of humanity.

73. The supreme commandment of love leads to the full recognition of the dignity of each individual, created in God's image. From this dignity flow natural rights and duties. In the light of the image of God, freedom, which is the essential prerogative of the human person, is manifested in all its depth. Persons are the active and responsible subjects of social life.¹

Hominis dignitati veluti fundamento intime coniunguntur principium solidaritatis et principium subsidiaritatis, quae dicuntur. Prioris principii causa, homini opera danda est ad consequendum bonum commune societatis, in omnibus eius gradibus;¹ Ecclesiae igitur doctrina opponitur omnibus formis “individualismi” socialis vel politici.

Vi autem alterius principii, nec Rei Publicae nec ulli societati licet se substituere pro inceptis et responsabilitate personarum et communitatum interpositarum in eo gradu quo operari possint, nec destruere spatium plane necessarium eorum libertati;² quamobrem Ecclesiae doctrina socialis opponitur omnibus formis “collectivismi”.

[587] 74. Haec principia sunt fundamentum, in quo criteria innituntur ad iudicium ferendum de rerum condicionibus, structuris et systematibus socialibus. Ita Ecclesia non dubitat denunciare condiciones vitae, quae praeiudicium afferunt hominis dignitati et libertati.

Quae criteria apta sunt etiam ad aestimandum valorem structurarum, quae nihil aliud sunt nisi summa institutionum et usuum, quae homines aut iam existentia inveniunt aut ipsi gignunt in campo nationali vel internationali, quaeque vitam oeconomicam, socialem et politicam dirigunt vel ordinant. Per se sunt necessariae huiusmodi structurae, saepe tamen eo tendunt ut torpescant et durescant fiantque veluti machinamenta ab humana voluntate quodammodo soluta, ideoque impediunt vel pervertunt progressum socialem, generantque iniustitiam. Attamen pendunt ab hominis responsabilitate, qui potest eas immutare, et non a quodam historiae “determinismo”.

Institutiones et leges quae conformes sint legi naturali et ad bonum commune ordinentur, muniunt libertatem personarum et eius promotionem. Non damnari possunt omnes legis coactiones, nec stabilitas Rei Publicae, quae, in iure innixa, hoc nomine digna est. Sermo igitur fieri quidem potest de structuris peccato signatis, sed nemo potest damnare structuram uti tales.

Criteria iudicii respiciunt etiam systemata oeconomica, socialia et politica. Doctrina socialis Ecclesiae nullum eorum nominatim proponit, tamen ex eiusdem fundamentalibus principiis quivis lumen accipere potest ad discernendum utrum huiusmodi systemata humanae cum dignitatis exigentiis congruant necne....

Intimately linked to the foundation, which is man’s dignity, are the principle of solidarity and the principle of subsidiarity. By virtue of the first, man with his brothers is obliged to contribute to the common good of society at all its levels.¹ Hence the Church’s doctrine is opposed to all forms of social or political individualism. 4766

By virtue of the second, neither the State nor any society must ever substitute itself for the initiative and responsibility of individuals and of intermediate communities at the level on which they can function, nor must they take away the room necessary for their freedom.² Hence the Church’s social doctrine is opposed to all forms of collectivism.

74. These principles are the basis of criteria for making judgments on social situations, structures, and systems. Thus the Church does not hesitate to condemn situations of life that are injurious to man’s dignity and freedom. 4767

These criteria also make it possible to judge the value of structures. These are the sets of institutions and practices that people find already existing or that they create, on the national and international level, and that orientate or organize economic, social, and political life. Being necessary in themselves, they often tend to become fixed and fossilized as mechanisms relatively independent of the human will, thereby paralyzing or distorting social development and causing injustice. However, they always depend on the responsibility of man, who can alter them, and not upon an alleged determinism of history. 4768

Institutions and laws, when they are in conformity with the natural law and ordered to the common good, are the guarantees of people’s freedom and of the promotion of that freedom. One cannot condemn all the constraining aspects of law or the stability of a lawful State worthy of the name. One can therefore speak of structures marked by sin, but one cannot condemn structures as such. 4769

The criteria for judgment also concern economic, social, and political systems. The social doctrine of the Church does not propose any particular system; but, in the light of its fundamental principles, she makes it possible at once to see to what extent existing systems conform or do not conform to the demands of human dignity.... 4770

4771 [588] 76. E fundamentalibus principiis et criteriis iudicii procedere debent regulae et impulsiones ad agendum; cum bonum commune societatis humanae sit in servitium personarum, instrumenta operandi conformia esse debent hominum dignitati, et per eadem favendum est libertatis educationi.

Hoc est criterium firmum recte iudicandi et agendi: non datur veri nominis liberatio, nisi ipsa libertatis iura inde ab initio sarta tectaue serventur.

Itidem amplius admitti non licet culpabilis desidia rei publicae moderatorum in civitatibus democraticis, ubi longe abest ut socialis condicio per plurimum virorum et mulierum respondeat exigentiis iurium individualium et socialium, lege fundamentali rei publicae statutorum.

Christus nobis mandatum dedit, ut diligamus inimicos.² Liberatio igitur iuxta Evangelii mentem non congruit cum odio proximi, sive individualiter sive collective sumpti, odio inimicorum non excepto.

4774 78. Quaedam condiciones gravis iniustitiae magnam requirunt vim animi penitus reformandi et abolendi privilegia, quarum nulla est iusta causa. Sed qui viam reformationum spernunt et "mythum revolutionis" foveant, non solum inanem spem colunt abolitionem

76. Basic principles and criteria for judgment inspire guidelines for action. Since the common good of human society is at the service of people, the means of action must be in conformity with human dignity and facilitate education for freedom.

A safe criterion for judgment and action is this: There can be no true liberation if from the very beginning the rights of freedom are not respected.

Systematic recourse to violence put forward as the necessary path to liberation has to be condemned as a destructive illusion and one that opens the way to new forms of servitude. One must condemn with equal vigor violence exercised by the powerful against the poor, arbitrary action by the police, and any form of violence established as a system of government. In these areas one must learn the lessons of tragic experiences that the history of the present century has known and continues to know.

Nor can one accept the culpable passivity of the public powers in those democracies where the social situation of a large number of men and women is far from corresponding to the demands of constitutionally guaranteed individual and social rights.

77. When the Church encourages the creation and activity of associations such as trade unions that fight for the defense of the rights and legitimate interests of the workers and for social justice, she does not thereby admit the theory that sees in the class struggle the structural dynamism of social life. The action she sanctions is not the struggle of one class against another in order to eliminate the foe. She does not proceed from a mistaken acceptance of an alleged law of history. This action is rather a noble and reasoned struggle for justice and social solidarity.¹ The Christian will always prefer the path of dialogue and joint action.

Christ has commanded us to love our enemies.² Liberation in the spirit of the gospel is therefore incompatible with hatred of others, taken individually or collectively, and this includes hatred of one's enemy.

78. Situations of grave injustice require the courage to make far-reaching reforms and to suppress unjustifiable privileges. But those who discredit the path of reform and favor the myth of revolution not only foster the illusion that the abolition of an evil situation is in itself sufficient iniquae condicionis fore per se aptam ad efficiendam societatem humaniorem, sed etiam favent adventui regiminum “totalitariorum”.¹

Contentio contra iniustitias tunc solum rationi respondet, si suscipitur ad instaurandum novum ordinem socialem et politicum conformem exigentiis iustitiae, quae quidem notet oportet omnes gradus suae instaurationis, nam etiam media adhibenda moralem notam induere debent.²...

to create a more humane society; they also encourage the setting up of totalitarian regimes.¹

The Task of the Laity

Hoc munus exigit ut iterum et penitus consideretur, quanam relatio intercedat inter summum mandatum dilectionis et ordinem socialem in tota sua complexitate perspectum.

Altior huiusmodi consideratio eo directe spectat, ut accurate conficiantur et ad actum deducantur audacia programmata actionis ad liberationem consequendam socio-oeconomicam pluries centenorum milium virorum et mulierum, quorum status oppressionis oeconomicae, socialis et politicae est intolerabilis.

Primus autem gressus ad haec efficienda, est immensum educationis opus: scilicet promoveri debet educatio ad civilem laboris cultum, educatio ad solidaritatem et aditus omnium ad mentis culturam.

80. It is not for the pastors of the Church to intervene directly in the political construction and organization of social life. This task forms part of the vocation of the laity acting on their own initiative with their fellow citizens.¹ They must fulfill this task conscious of the fact that the purpose of the Church is to spread the kingdom of Christ so that all men may be saved and that through them the world may be effectively ordered to Christ.²...

81. Christians working to bring about that “civilization of love” which will include the entire ethical and social heritage of the gospel are today faced with an unprecedented challenge.

This task calls for renewed reflection on what constitutes the relationship between the supreme commandment of love and the social order considered in all its complexity.

The immediate aim of this in-depth reflection is to work out and set in motion ambitious programs aimed at the socioeconomic liberation of millions of men and women caught in an intolerable situation of economic, social, and political oppression.

This action must begin with an immense effort at education: education for the civilization of work, education for solidarity, access to culture for all.

The Holy Spirit as the Personal Expression of Divine Love

10. In his intimate life, God “is love”,¹ the essential love shared by the three Divine Persons: personal love personalis est Spiritus Sanctus ut Spiritus Patris et Filii. Quocirca is ut increated amor-donum “scrutatur profunda Dei”.² Affirmari licet vitam intimam Dei, unius et trini, in Spiritu Sancto esse prorsus donum, mutuam amoris commercium inter Personas divinas, atque per Spiritum Sanctum Deum in modum doni “exsistere”. Spiritus Sanctus est expressio personalis huiusmodi donationis, huiusce, ut dicimus, esse amorem.³ Persona-amor est, Persona-donum est: est inscrutabilis ubertas veritatis et ineffabilis perspicientiae notionis personae in Deo, quas sola Revelatione cognoscimus.

4781 Simul autem Spiritus Sanctus, prout Patri et Filio in divinitate est consubstantialis, est amor ac donum (increatedum), unde ut e fonte vivo emanat omnis largitio data creaturis (donum creatum): donum existentiae, tributum cunctis rebus per creationem, donum gratiae hominibus impertitum per oeconomiam salutis. Ut scripsit Paulus Apostolus, “caritas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum Sanctum, qui datus est nobis.”¹ is the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of the Father and the Son. Therefore he “searches even the depths of God”² as uncreated Love-Gift. It can be said that in the Holy Spirit the intimate life of the triune God becomes totally gift, an exchange of mutual love between the Divine Persons, and that through the Holy Spirit God exists in the mode of gift. It is the Holy Spirit who is the personal expression of this self-giving, of this being-love.³ He is Person-Love. He is Person-Gift. Here we have an inexhaustible treasure of the reality and an inexpressible deepening of the concept of person in God, which only divine revelation makes known to us.

At the same time, the Holy Spirit, being consubstantial with the Father and the Son in divinity, is love and uncreated gift from which derives as from a living source all giving of gifts vis-à-vis creatures (created gift): the gift of existence to all things through creation; the gift of grace to human beings through the whole economy of salvation. As the apostle Paul writes: “God’s love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us.”¹

Already at the end of the nineteenth century, the Holy See had declared illicit the transmission of semen (artificial insemination) into the female reproductive organs (Response of March 17, 1897; *3323). This prohibition was confirmed by Pius XII in his discourse of September 29, 1949, to the Fourth International Congress of Catholic Physicians (AAS 41 [1949]: 557–61) and by John XXIII on May 15, 1961, in the encyclical Mater et magistra (AAS 53 [1961]: 447; *3963). In opposition to the opinion of the Catholic universities of Lille, Nijmegen, Louvain, and Louvain-la-Neuve as well as various European episcopal synods, the instruction Donum vitae, referring to the argument of the encyclical Humanae vitae, no. 12 (the morality of human procreation requires the biological integrity of the sexual act), condemns not only heterologous but also homologous in-vitro fertilization with embryo-transfer (FIVET). —In the following selections, the italicized emphasis given to many passages in the original has been omitted.

INTRODUCTIO

1. Investigatio biomedica et ecclesiae doctrina

4790 [72] ... Ecclesia Magisterii sui auctoritatem non interponit vi peculiaris competentiae in regione scientiarum quae in experimentis nituntur; sed postquam comperta habet elementa, quae investigationibus scientificis et re technica suppeditantur, ipsa, vi muneris evangelici officiique apostolici, moralem intendit doctrinam proponere, quae personae dignitati eiusque integrae vocationi congruat, criteria iudicii moralis exponendo circa investigationum scientificarum et rei technicae applicationes, peculiarique modo circa ea omnia quae ad humanam vitam eiusque exordia attingant.

INTRODUCTION

1. Biomedical Research and the Teaching of the Church

... The Church’s Magisterium does not intervene on the basis of a particular competence in the area of the experimental sciences; but having taken account of the data of research and technology, it intends to put forward, by virtue of its evangelical mission and apostolic duty, the moral teaching corresponding to the dignity of the person and to his integral vocation. It intends to do so by expounding the criteria of moral judgment as regards the applications of scientific research and technology, especially in relation to human life and its beginnings. These criteria are the respect, defense, and promotion

*4780² 1 Cor 2:10.

*4781¹ Rom 5:5.

Quae quidem criteria sunt: observantia, defensio et promotio hominis, eius “primarium et fundamentale” ius ad vitam,¹ eius dignitas personae quae animo spirituali ac morali responsabilitate ditatur² et ad beatificam cum Deo communionem vocatur....

4. Criteria fundamentalia ad morale iudicium ferendum

Vita physica, unde in mundo humanarum vicissitudinum cursus incipit, nullo modo totam explet personae praestantiam, neque habenda est pro supremo bono hominis qui ad vitam sempiternam vocatur. Ipsa tamen ad hominis structuram pertinet quodammodo tamquam bonum “fundamentale”, propterea quod in ipsa vita physica cetera omnia personae bona nituntur atque explicantur.¹ Indoles inviolabilis iuris [76] ad vitam, quo creatura humana innocens gaudet “a conceptus momento usque ad mortem”,² signum atque postulatum est ipsius inviolabilis indolis personae, cui Creator vitae donum largitus est.

Respectu habito ad vitae transmissionem qualis apud cetera animantia in mundo universo animadvertitur, transmissio vitae humanae singularem indolem prae se fert, quae ab ipsa singulari personae humanae indole promanat. “Quoniamque hominis vita aliis hominibus consulto et cogitate traditur, sequitur idcirco, ut hoc agatur ad Dei praescriptiones firmissimas, sanctissimas, inviolatas; quas scilicet nemo non agnoscere, non servare debet. Quocirca hac in re nemini omnium licet iis uti viis rationibusque, quibus vel arborum vel animantium vitam prorogare licet.”³ of man, his “primary and fundamental right” to life,¹ his dignity as a person who is endowed with a spiritual soul and with moral responsibility² and who is called to beatific communion with God....

Hodierni rei technicae progressus effecerunt ut procreatio haberi possit absque sexuali coniunctione, per concursum in tubulo vitreo seu in vitro, uti aiunt, cellularum germinalium, quae a viro et muliere antea sumptae sunt. At, quod arte technica fieri potest, non eo ipso lex moralis admittit....

4. Fundamental Criteria for a Moral Judgment

The fundamental values connected with the techniques of artificial human procreation are two: the life of the human being called into existence and the special nature of the transmission of human life in marriage. The moral judgment on such methods of artificial procreation must therefore be formulated in reference to these values. 4791

Physical life, with which the course of human life in the world begins, certainly does not itself contain the whole of a person’s value, nor does it represent the supreme good of man who is called to eternal life. However, it does constitute in a certain way the “fundamental” value of life precisely because upon this physical life all the other values of the person are based and developed.¹ The inviolability of the innocent human being’s right to life “from the moment of conception until death”² is a sign and requirement of the very inviolability of the person to whom the Creator has given the gift of life.

By comparison with the transmission of other forms of life in the universe, the transmission of human life has a special character of its own, which derives from the special nature of the human person. “The transmission of human life is entrusted by nature to a personal and conscious act and as such is subject to the all-holy laws of God: immutable and inviolable laws that must be recognized and observed. For this reason one cannot use means and follow methods that could be licit in the transmission of the life of plants and animals.”³

Advances in technology have now made it possible to procreate apart from sexual relations through the meeting in vitro of the germ-cells previously taken from the man and the woman. But what is technically possible is not for that very reason morally admissible....

Church’s Magisterium*

... From the moment of conception, the life of every human being is to be respected in an absolute way because man is the only creature on earth that God has “willed for its own sake”¹ and the spiritual soul of each man is “immediately created” by God;² his whole being bears the image of the Creator. Human life is sacred because from its beginning it involves “the creative action of God”,³ and it remains forever in a special relationship with the Creator, who is its sole end.⁴ God alone is the Lord of life from its beginning until its end: no one can, in any circumstance, claim for himself the right to destroy directly an innocent human being.⁵

Human procreation requires on the part of the spouses responsible collaboration with the fruitful love of God;⁶ the gift of human life must be actualized in marriage through the specific and exclusive acts of husband and wife, in accordance with the laws inscribed in their persons and in their union.⁷...

I. RESPECT FOR HUMAN EMBRYOS

1. What Respect Is Due to the Human Embryo, Taking into Account His Nature and Identity?

The human being must be respected—as a person—from the very first instant of his existence. . . .

Thus the fruit of human generation, from the first moment of its existence, that is to say, from the moment the zygote has formed, demands the unconditional respect that is morally due to the human being in his bodily and spiritual totality. The human being is to be respected and

4. How Is One to Evaluate Morally Research and Experimentation¹ on Human Embryos and Fetuses?

Medical research must refrain from operations on live embryos, unless there is a moral certainty of not causing harm to the life or integrity of the unborn child and the mother and on condition that the parents have given their free and informed consent to the procedure.... 4796

*4796 ¹ Since the terms "research" and "experimentation" are often used equivalently and ambiguously, it is deemed necessary to specify the exact meaning given them in this document. (1) By research (investigatio) is meant any inductive-deductive process that aims at promoting the systematic observation of a given phenomenon in the human field or at verifying a hypothesis arising from previous observations. (2) By experimentation (experimentum) is meant any research in which the human being (in the various stages of his existence: embryo, fetus, child, or adult) represents the object through which or upon which one intends to verify the effect, at present unknown or not sufficiently known, of a given treatment (e.g., pharmacological, teratogenic, surgical, etc.) (Quoniam voces "investigatio" et "experimentum" saepe usurpantur significatione aequali et ambiguae, necessarium videtur explicare quanam significatio tribuenda sit hisce vocibus in hos documento. (1) Voce investigationis intellegitur quivis procedendi modus inductivus-deductivus eo spectans, ut promoveatur observatio systematica alicuius facti in campo humano, vel ut verificetur hypothesis orta ex praecedentibus observationibus. (2) Voce experimenti intellegitur quaevis investigatio, in qua creatura humana [in variis temporibus eius existientiae: embryo, fetus, puer vel adultus] est id per quod vel super quo dignosci intenditur effectus, adhuc ignotus, vel nondum bene cognitus, alicuius procedendi modi [e. gr. pharmacologici, theratogeni, chirurgici, etc.]).

5. Quaenam esse debet aestimatio moralis de usu embryonum qui, investigationis causa, habentur ope fecundationis in vitro?

6. Quomodo iudicandae sunt ceterae formae artificiosae tractationis embryonum, quae conectuntur cum “technicis rationibus humanae procreationis”?

4798 Rationes technicae fecundationis in vitro aditum patefacere possunt ad alias formas artificiosae tractationis biologicae vel geneticae embryonum humanorum, cuiusmodi sunt: conatus vel proposita fecundationis inter hominum et animalium gametes, et gestationis embryonum humanorum in uteris animalium; coniecturae vel consilia artificiales uteros fabricandi ad embryones excipiendos. Huiusmodi procedendi rationes repugnant creaturae humanae dignitati quae ad embryonem spectat, simulque ius laedunt uniuscuiusque personae ut concipiatur et nascatur in matrimonio et ex matrimonio.¹ Conatus quoque vel coniecturae eo spectantes ut creatura humana gignatur absque ulla colligatione cum sexualitate per “fixionem gemellarem”, clonationem, parthenogenesim, uti aiunt, habenda sunt pro re morum honestati contraria, quippe quae cum dignitate sive procreationis humanae sive coniugalis coniunctionis nullo modo cohaereant.

If the embryos are living, whether viable or not, they must be respected just like any other human person; experimentation on embryos that is not directly therapeutic is illicit.² ...

The corpses of human embryos and fetuses, whether they have been deliberately aborted or not, must be respected just as the remains of other human beings. ...

5. How Is One to Evaluate Morally the Use for Research Purposes of Embryos Obtained by Fertilization “in Vitro”?

Human embryos obtained in vitro are human beings and subjects with rights: their dignity and right to life must be respected from the first moment of their existence. It is immoral to produce human embryos destined to be exploited as disposable “biological material”. ...

6. What Judgment Should Be Made on Other Procedures of Manipulating Embryos Connected with the “Techniques of Human Reproduction”?

Techniques of fertilization in vitro can open the way to other forms of biological and genetic manipulation of human embryos, such as attempts or plans for fertilization between human and animal gametes and the gestation of human embryos in the uterus of animals, or the hypothesis or project of constructing artificial uteruses for the human embryo. These procedures are contrary to the human dignity proper to the embryo, and at the same time they are contrary to the right of every person to be conceived and to be born within marriage and from marriage.¹ Also, attempts or hypotheses for obtaining a human being without any connection with sexuality through “twin fission”, cloning, or parthenogenesis are to be considered contrary to the moral law, since they are in opposition to the dignity both of human procreation and of the conjugal union.

*4796² Cf. John Paul II, address to the participants of the congress of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, October 23, 1982: “I condemn, in the most explicit and formal way, experimental manipulations of the human embryo, since the human being, from conception to death, cannot be exploited for any purpose whatsoever” (Modo quam maxime aperto atque expresso ego reprobato artificiosas tractationes embryonis humani experimenti causa peractas, quia creatura humana, a momento conceptionis usque ad mortem, nullam ob causam abusu obnoxia fieri potest: AAS 75 [1983]: 37).

*4798¹ No one, before coming into existence, can claim a subjective right to begin to exist; nevertheless, it is legitimate to affirm the right of the child to have a fully human origin through conception in conformity with the personal nature of the human being. Life is a gift that must be bestowed in a manner worthy both of the subject receiving it and of the subjects transmitting it. This statement is to be borne in mind also for what will be explained concerning artificial human procreation (Nemo vindicare potest, antequam existat, ius subiectivum ad existentiam inchoandam; nihilominus, legitimum est affirmare ius pueri ad originem habendam plene humanam per conceptionem convenientem indoli personali creaturae humanae. Vita est donum tali dandum ratione, quae addeceat sive eum qui vitam accipit, sive illos qui eandem transmittunt. Haec explicatio prae oculis habeatur etiam quod attinet ad artificialem procreationem humanam, de qua subinde agendum erit).

Ipsa embryonum congelatio, etsi peragatur ad embryones in vita conservandos—quod “crioconservationem” vocant—observantiam violat viventibus humanis debitam, cum eorum physicam integritatem in gravia mortis vel damni pericula adducat, eos privet saltem ad tem/85/pus materna receptione ac gestatione, eosdemque constituat talibus in adiunctis, ut inde via pateat ad novas violationes novasque artificiosas tractationes.

Nonnulli conatus interveniendi in patrimonio cromosomico vel genetico non sunt therapeutici, sed spectant ad viventes humanos gignendos, selectos secundum sexum vel alias proprietates iam antea praestitutas. Huiusmodi artificiosae tractationes adversantur personali humanae creaturae dignitati eiusque integritati atque identitati. Eaedem igitur nullo modo comprobari possunt ob commoda, quae in societatis humanae bonum forte inde obvenire posse praevideantur.² Quaelibet humana persona per se ipsam observanda est: in hoc dignitas et ius consistunt uniuscuiusque creaturae humanae inde ab ipsius initio.

II. INTERVENTUS IN HUMANA PROCREATIONE

1. Cur humana procreatio in matrimonio fieri debeat?

[87] Quaevis humana creatura est semper tamquam Dei donum ac benedictio accipienda. Attamen, si ad moralia principia spectetur, dicendum est procreationem vere consciam erga nasciturum e solo matrimonio oriri posse....

Coniugum autem fidelitas, in unitate matrimonii, secumfert mutuam observantiam erga ius utriuslibet, ad hoc ut alter pater aut mater fiat solummodo per alterum.

Filius ius habet ut concipiatur, alvo contineatur, nascatur, educetur in matrimonio: is solummodo ad suos parentes referendo, certa atque publica ratione identitatem suam cognoscere potest, atque suam hominis formationem ad maturitatem perducere.... [88]

2. Fecundatio artificialis heterologa congruitne cum dignitate coniugum cumque matrimonii veritate?

... At fecundatio artificialis heterologa tum unitati matrimonii, tum coniugum dignitati, tum vocationi parentum propriae aperte contradicit, itemque iuri filii ad quem spectat ut et concipiatur et enascatur in matrimonio et per matrimonium.¹... [89] ...

The freezing of embryos, even when carried out in order to preserve the life of an embryo—cryopreservation—constitutes an offense against the respect due to human beings by exposing them to grave risks of death or harm to their physical integrity and depriving them, at least temporarily, of maternal shelter and gestation, thus placing them in a situation in which further offenses and manipulation are possible.

Certain attempts to influence chromosomal or genetic inheritance are not therapeutic but are aimed at producing human beings selected according to sex or other predetermined qualities. These manipulations are contrary to the personal dignity of the human being and his integrity and identity. Therefore, in no way can they be justified on the grounds of possible beneficial consequences for future humanity.² Every person must be respected for himself: in this consists the dignity and right of every human being from his beginning.

II. INTERVENTIONS UPON HUMAN PROCREATION

1. Why Must Human Procreation Take Place in Marriage?

Every human being is always to be accepted as a gift and blessing of God. However, from the moral point of view, a truly responsible procreation vis-à-vis the unborn child must be the fruit of marriage.... 4799

The fidelity of the spouses in the unity of marriage involves reciprocal respect of their right to become a father and a mother only through each other.

The child has the right to be conceived, carried in the womb, brought into the world, and brought up within marriage: it is through the secure and recognized relationship to his own parents that the child can discover his own identity and achieve his own proper human development....

2. Does Heterologous Artificial Fertilization Conform to the Dignity of the Couple and to the Truth of Marriage?

... Heterologous artificial fertilization is contrary to the unity of marriage, to the dignity of the spouses, to the vocation proper to parents, and to the child's right to be conceived and brought into the world in marriage and from marriage.¹... 4800

*4798² Cf. John Paul II, address to the participants of the thirty-fifth general assembly of the World Medical Association, October 29, 1983 (AAS 76 [1984]: 391).

*4800¹ Cf. Pius XII, address to the participants of the Fourth International Congress of Catholic Doctors, September 29, 1949 (AAS 41 [1949]: 559). According to the plan of the Creator, “A man leaves his father and mother and cleaves to his wife, and they become one flesh” (Gen 2:24). The unity of marriage, bound to the order of creation, is a truth accessible to natural reason. The Church's tradition and Magisterium frequently make reference to the book of Genesis, both directly and through the passages of the New

3. Maternitas “substitutiva”¹ estne moraliter licita?

4801 Nullatenus; et id quidem iisdem de causis, quibus est fecundatio artificialis heterologa reicienda: opponitur enim tum unitati matrimonii, tum etiam dignitati procreationis personae humanae.... [90] ...

4. Qui nexus intercedere debeat, ad morum leges, inter procreationem et actum coniugum proprium?

4802 ... Fecundatio vero artificialis homologa, procreationem persequens quae non ex actu proprio unionis [91] coniugalis consequitur, obiective separationem analogam operatur inter bona atque significationes matrimonii.

Quare, ea fecundatio licite appetitur, quae manat ex actu coniugali qui natura sua aptus sit “ad prolis generationem, ad quem natura sua ordinatur matrimonium, et quo coniuges fiunt una caro”.¹ Eadem vero procreatio tunc debita sua perfectione destituitur sub aspectu morali, cum animo non intenditur ut fructus coniugalis actus seu illius gestus qui est proprius unionis coniugum.... [92] ...

5. Fecundatio homologa in vitro estne moraliter licita?

4803 ... [93] ... Conceptio in vitro est effectus actionis technicae, per quem evenit fecundatio; ea autem neque re vera obtinetur, neque consulto appetitur tamquam manifestatio ac fructus actus qui est proprius coniunctionis coniugalis. In methodo FIVET homologa, igitur, etsi consideretur in contextu actuum coniugium qui reapse existunt, nihilominus generatio personae humanae obiective destituitur perfectione sibi propria, qua scilicet illa est terminus et fructus actus coniugalis,

3. Is “Surrogate”¹ Motherhood Morally Licit?

No, for the same reasons that lead one to reject heterologous artificial fertilization: for it is contrary to the unity of marriage and to the dignity of the procreation of the human person....

4. What Connection Is Required from the Moral Point of View between Procreation and the Conjugal Act?

... Homologous artificial fertilization, in seeking a procreation that is not the fruit of a specific act of conjugal union, objectively effects an analogous separation between the goods and the meanings of marriage.

Thus, fertilization is licitly sought when it is the result of a “conjugal act that is per se suitable for the generation of children to which marriage is ordered by its nature and by which the spouses become one flesh”.¹ But from the moral point of view, procreation is deprived of its proper perfection when it is not desired as the fruit of the conjugal act, that is to say, of the specific act of the spouses’ union....

5. Is Homologous “in Vitro” Fertilization Morally Licit?

... Conception in vitro is the result of the technical action that presides over fertilization. Such fertilization is neither in fact achieved nor positively willed as the expression and fruit of a specific act of the conjugal union. In homologous IVF and ET, therefore, even if it is considered in the context of “de facto” existing sexual relations, the generation of the human person is objectively deprived of its proper perfection: namely, that of being the result and fruit of a conjugal act in

Testament that refer to it: Mt 19:4–6; Mk 10:5–8; Eph 5:31. Cf. *4801¹ By the term surrogate mother, the instruction means: (a) the woman who carries in pregnancy an embryo implanted in her uterus and who is genetically a stranger to the embryo, because it has been obtained through the union of the gametes of donors, with the pledge to surrender the baby once it is born to the party who commissioned or made the agreement for the pregnancy; (b) the woman who carries in pregnancy an embryo to whose procreation she has contributed the donation of her own ovum, fertilized through insemination with the sperm of a man other than her husband, with the pledge to surrender the child once it is born to the party who commissioned or made the agreement for the pregnancy (Coniunctis verbis mater substitutiva Instructio intendit: (a) mulierem, embryonem gestantem, qui arte in eius sinu collocatus est, quique proinde, spectatis geneticæ legibus, ei extraneus est. cum obtentus fuerit per concursum gametum donatorum extraneorum, et ea quidem lege, ut puer nascetur ei tradatur qui talem pregnationem commiserit vel pacto mandaverit; (b) mulierem, embryonem gestantem, cuius procreationi ipsa proprio contulit ovulo, et quidem per seminationem spermatis viri fecundato, qui est alius a marito, ea item lege, ut puer, cum natus fuerit, ei tradatur qui pregnationem commiserit vel pacto mandaverit).

per quem coniuges fieri possunt “Dei cooperatores tradendo vitae donum novo alicui homini”.¹... [94] ...

Fatendum sane est in methodum FIVET homologam non cadere omnia admissa contra morum honestatem, quae deprehenduntur in procreatione extra matrimonium effecta; familia enim et matrimonium pergunt esse ambitus, in quo filiorum nativitas et educatio continentur. Attamen, iuxta traditam doctrinam de matrimonii bonis et de personae humanae dignitate, morale Ecclesiae iudicium perstat contrarium fecundationi homologae in vitro: haec est intrinsecus illicita, ac dignitati procreationis et coniunctionis coniugalis tunc etiam repugnat, cum nihil omittitur ut embryonis mors praecaveatur....

6. Quomodo secundum legem moralem aestimanda est seminatio artificialis homologa?

7. Quodnam criterium morale adhibendum est circa medici interventum in humana procreatione?

... Ars medica, cui propositum sit integro personae humanae bono [96] deservire, bona proprie humanae sexualitatis tueri debet.¹ Medicus munere fungitur deservendi bono personarum et humanae procreationi; quoad haec, ille nec disponendi nec decernendi potestatem habet. Medicus interventus tunc personarum dignitatem tuetur, cum actum coniugalem adiuvari studet, sive ut facilius expleatur, sive ut idem, iam rite expletus, finem suum assequi possit.²...

Coniuges, qui procreare prolem non valent, vel timent ne liberos gignant impeditos, dolore anguntur, qui ab omnibus intellegi et adaequate perpendi debet....

which the spouses can become “cooperators with God for giving life to a new person”.¹...

Certainly, homologous IVF and ET fertilization is not marked by all that ethical negativity found in extraconjugal procreation; the family and marriage continue to constitute the setting for the birth and upbringing of the children. Nevertheless, in conformity with the traditional doctrine relating to the goods of marriage and the dignity of the person, the Church remains opposed from the moral point of view to homologous “in vitro” fertilization. Such fertilization is in itself illicit and in opposition to the dignity of procreation and of the conjugal union, even when everything is done to avoid the death of the human embryo....

6. How Is Homologous Artificial Insemination to Be Evaluated from the Moral Point of View?

Homologous artificial insemination within marriage 4804 cannot be admitted except for those cases in which the technical means is not a substitute for the conjugal act but serves to facilitate and to help so that the act attains its natural purpose....

7. What Moral Criterion Can Be Proposed with Regard to Medical Intervention in Human Procreation?

... Medicine that seeks to be ordered to the integral 4805 good of the person must respect the specifically human values of sexuality.¹ The doctor is at the service of persons and of human procreation. He does not have the authority to dispose of them or to decide their fate. A medical intervention respects the dignity of persons when it seeks to assist the conjugal act either in order to facilitate its performance or in order to enable it to achieve its objective once it has been normally performed.²...

8. The Suffering Caused by Infertility in Marriage

The suffering of spouses who cannot have children or 4806 who are afraid of bringing a handicapped child into the world is a suffering that everyone must understand and properly evaluate....

A true and proper right to a child would be contrary to the child’s dignity and nature. The child is not an object to which one has a right, nor can he be considered as an object of ownership: rather, a child is a gift, “the supreme gift”¹ and the most gratuitous gift of marriage, and is a living testimony of the mutual giving of his parents. For this reason, the child has the right, as already mentioned,

III. DE RE MORALI AC CIVILI LEGE

Bona atque obligationes moralia lege civili observanda ac sancienda in hac materia

Hac de causa, nova quae progrediens res technica portendit fieri posse in campo scientiae biomedicae, requirunt ut ii, penes quos sunt civilia munera et potestas leges ferendi, auctoritatem suam interponant, quia harum technicarum rationum usus, vigilantiae non obnoxius, perducere poterit ad consecraria, quae praevideri nequeunt, et detrimentum afferre civili societati. Appellatio ad uniuscuiusque conscientiam et ad normas sibi voluntarie impositas, a scientiae investigatoribus satis non sunt ad personalia iura et reipublicae ordinem tuenda....

Leges civiles plurium Nationum hodie, secundum multorum opinionem, certis rei technicae methodis approbationem concedunt, quae non debetur; eadem ineptas se praebent ad tuendam eam morum honestatem, quae respondet naturalibus postulatis personae humanae ac "legibus non scriptis", quae a Creatore in corde hominis inditae sunt. Omnes bonae voluntatis homines operam praestare debent, peculiari modo in suae quisque professionis sede et in suorum civilium iurium exercitio, ut civiles leges moraliter improbandae reformentur, et illiciti technicarum artium usus emendetur. Praeterea, contra huiusmodi leges proponenda atque agnoscenda est "obiectio conscientiae", quam vocant. Acrius etiam a multis, praesertim a scientiarum biomedicarum peritis, persentiri coepta est instantia moralis conscientiae quae poseit, ut per "resistentiam passivam", uti dicunt, obsistatur iuridicae approbationi earum technicarum rationum, quae hominis vitae ac dignitati adversantur.

III. MORAL AND CIVIL LAW

The Values and Moral Obligations that Civil Legislation Must Respect and Sanction in This Matter

The inviolable right to life of every innocent human individual and the rights of the family and of the institution of marriage constitute fundamental moral values because they concern the natural condition and integral vocation of the human person; at the same time they are constitutive elements of civil society and its order.

For this reason the new technological possibilities that have opened up in the field of biomedicine require the intervention of the political authorities and of the legislator, since an uncontrolled application of such techniques could lead to unforeseeable and damaging consequences for civil society. Recourse to the conscience of each individual and to the self-regulation of researchers cannot be sufficient for ensuring respect for personal rights and public order....

It is part of the duty of the public authority to ensure that the civil law is regulated according to the fundamental norms of the moral law in matters concerning human rights, human life, and the institution of the family. Politicians must commit themselves, through their interventions upon public opinion, to securing in society the widest possible consensus on such essential points and to consolidating this consensus wherever it risks being weakened or is in danger of collapse....

The civil legislation of many States confers an undue legitimation upon certain practices in the eyes of many today; it is seen to be incapable of guaranteeing that morality which is in conformity with the natural exigencies of the human person and with the "unwritten laws" etched by the Creator upon the human heart. All men of goodwill must commit themselves, particularly within their professional field and in the exercise of their civil rights, to ensuring the reform of morally unacceptable civil laws and the correction of illicit practices. In addition, "conscientious objection" vis-à-vis such laws must be supported and recognized. A movement of passive resistance to the legitimation of practices contrary to human life and dignity is beginning to make an ever sharper impression upon the moral conscience of many, especially among specialists in the biomedical sciences.

4810–4819: Encyclical Sollicitudo rei socialis, December 30, 1987

This encyclical was composed for the twentieth anniversary of the encyclical Populorum progressio (*4440–4469). On the one hand, it underlines the importance of the encyclical of Paul VI, and, on the other hand, it takes up new questions of development. The new social encyclical includes, among other things, a forceful critique of consumerism and promotes the overcoming of bloc politics in favor of peace and development. Of theological importance are the concepts of “structures of sin” and “solidarity”. A shorter version of the social encyclical is contained in the discourse of John Paul II given on March 24, 1987, in the context of a commemoration for representatives of public life (Insegnamenti di Giovanni Paolo II X/1 [Rome, 1988], 669–77).

Ed.: AS 80 (1988): 547–68.

27. Quod Litterae Encyclicae nobis suaserunt inspiciendum in mundo huius temporis, nobis ostendit progressionem hominum non esse rectilineam, seu rem fere automatariam ac per se ipsam sine fine, perinde ac si genus humanum quibusdam sub condicionibus expedite ad aliquam veluti non definitam tendat perfectionem.¹

Haec notio, quae notioni progressionis, illuminismi notis philosophicis potius signatae coniungitur, quam progressionis² significatione oeconomica-sociali acceptae, nunc aperte in dubium revocari videtur, praesertim post cognitatas calamitates postremi utriusque belli pancosmii, post praestitutam ratio[548]nem, et partim ad effectum deductam, excidendi integros populos, necnon ipso instante periculo atomico. Stultam bonam spem irrationalem iactatio animi de ultimo hominis exitu secuta est non sine causa.

28. Eodem tamen tempore in discrimen etiam ratio adducta est, quae “oeconomica” vel “oeconomistica” nuncupatur et cum verbo “progressionis” conectitur. Hodie re vera melius intellegi potest merum congestum bonorum ac ministeriorum, quamvis plerisque in faecat hominibus, non satis esse ad humanam felicitatem persequendam. Proindeque facultas multiplicium bene-ficiorum realium, quae his proxime actis temporibus scientia et technica disciplina effecerunt, re addita, quae “informatica” dicitur, non homines ex omni eripit servitute. Ex contrario, postremorum annorum usus docet opes et potestates, quae homini ad nutum praesto sunt, in eum vertere ut opprimant, nisi regantur iudicio morali ac propensione ad verum generis humani bonum.

Trepida cognitio recentissimi temporis perquam idonea ad docendum videtur: prope miseras tardatae progressionis, quae accipi non possunt, nimia quaedam progressio adest, eademque pariter reicienda, quia, sicut prior, ita et altera est bono veraeque felicitati adversa. Nimia enim eiusmodi progressio, quae in supervacanea consistit abundantia omnis generis rerum corporearum

27. The examination that the encyclical invites us 4810 to make of the contemporary world leads us to note in the first place that development is not a straightforward process, as it were, automatic and in itself limitless, as though, given certain conditions, the human race were able to progress rapidly toward an undefined perfection of some kind.¹

Such an idea—linked to a notion of “progress” with philosophical connotations deriving from the Enlightenment, rather than to the notion of “development”² that is used in a specifically economic and social sense—now seems to be seriously called into doubt, particularly since the tragic experience of the two world wars, the planned and partly achieved destruction of whole peoples, and the looming atomic peril. A naive mechanistic optimism has been replaced by a well-founded anxiety for the fate of humanity.

28. At the same time, however, the “economic” concept 4811 itself, linked to the word development, has entered into crisis. In fact there is a better understanding today that the mere accumulation of goods and services, even for the benefit of the majority, is not enough for the realization of human happiness. Nor, in consequence, does the availability of the many real benefits provided in recent times by science and technology, including the computer sciences, bring freedom from every form of slavery. On the contrary, the experience of recent years shows that unless all the considerable body of resources and potential at man’s disposal is guided by a moral understanding and by an orientation toward the true good of the human race, it easily turns against man to oppress him.

A disconcerting conclusion about the most recent period should serve to enlighten us: side-by-side with the miseries of underdevelopment, themselves unacceptable, we find ourselves up against a form of superdevelopment, equally inadmissible, because like the former it is contrary to what is good and to true happiness. This superdevelopment, which consists in an pro quibusdam hominum coetibus, facile efficit ut homines et “possessioni” et immediatae voluptati serviant neque alio spectent, nisi ad res multiplicandas aliasve vel perfectiores pro iis, quas iam possederint, substituendas. Is est qui dicitur civilis cultus rerum consumendarum cupidus, qui idem et “reiciendorum” et “purgamentorum” est cultus. Res, quae possidetur, directo seponitur simul atque nova aut perfectiore superatur, neglecta utilitate perenni fortasse illius propria aut in commodum egentioris hominis convertenda....

*4810 ¹ Cf. apostolic exhortation Familiaris consortio, November 22, 1981, no. 6: “History is not simply a fixed progression toward what is better, but rather an event of freedom, and even a struggle between freedoms” (Hoc ipsum ostendit historiam non esse simpliciter progressionem necessariam ad meliora, sed eventum libertatis, quin immo luctationem inter libertates: AAS 74 [1982]: 88).

² For this reason the word “development” was used in the encyclical rather than the word “progress”, but with an attempt to give the word “development” its fullest meaning (Hac de causa in textu harum Litterarum Encyclicarum maluimus uti verbo “progressione” potius quam verbo “profectu” id vero curantes ut verbo “progressioni” plenissime detur sensus).

Ad veram tamen hominis progressionem ut perveniatur, necesse est ne illae animi partes neglegantur, in quibus propria ipsius hominis consistit natura, quem scilicet creavit Deus ad imaginem et similitudinem suam [cf. Gn 1:26]. Natura corporea et spiritalis, cuius imago ex altera Genesis narratione [Gn 2:7] duobus efficitur elementis: terra, qua Deus format corpus hominis, atque spiritu vitae, quem ei ipse inhalat.

Ita homo aliquam habet similitudinem cum ceteris creaturis: ipse invitatur ad commoditatem ex iis percipiendam, ad curamque earum agendam atque, sicut ipsa in Genesi narrantur res [Gn 2:15], in horto collocatur ut colat atque tueatur, idemque constituitur supra omnia animantia, quae Deus in eius potestate posuit [Gn 1:26]. Uno vero eodemque tempore homo manere debet Dei voluntati subditus, qui in usu ac potestate rerum limites imponit ei [Gn 2:16s], quemadmodum immortalitatem ei promittit [Gn 2:9; Sap 2:23]. Homo igitur, cum sit imago Dei, et aliquam cum eo similitudinem habet.

Secundum eiusmodi doctrinae principia progressio hominis nequit tantummodo consistere in usu et in potestate et omnimoda in possessione bonorum creatorum necnon rerum artibus et artificiis hominis perfectarum, sed potius in subicienda possessione, potestate, tractatione rerum sub similitudinem hominis cum Deo et sub eius vocationem ad immortalitatem assequendam....

excessive availability of every kind of material goods for the benefit of certain social groups, easily makes people slaves of “possession” and of immediate gratification, with no other horizon than the multiplication or continual replacement of the things already owned with others still better. This is the so-called civilization of “consumption” or “consumerism”, which involves so much “throwing away” and “waste”. An object already owned but now superseded by something better is discarded, with no thought of its possible lasting value in itself or of some other human being who is poorer....

29. Development that is not only economic must be measured and oriented according to the reality and vocation of man seen in his totality, namely, according to his interior dimension. There is no doubt that he needs created goods and the products of industry, which is constantly being enriched by scientific and technological progress. And the ever greater availability of material goods not only meets needs but also opens new horizons. The danger of the misuse of material goods and the appearance of artificial needs should in no way hinder the regard we have for the new goods and resources placed at our disposal and the use we make of them. On the contrary, we must see them as a gift from God and as a response to the human vocation, which is fully realized in Christ.

However, in trying to achieve true development, we must never lose sight of that dimension which is in the specific nature of man, who has been created by God in his image and likeness [cf. Gen 1:26]. It is a bodily and a spiritual nature, symbolized in the second creation account by the two elements: the earth, from which God forms man’s body, and the breath of life that he breathes into man’s nostrils [cf. Gen 2:7].

Thus man comes to have a certain affinity with other creatures: he is called to use them and to be involved with them. As the Genesis account says [cf. Gen 2:15], he is placed in the garden with the duty of cultivating and watching over it, being superior to the other creatures placed by God under his dominion [cf. Gen 1:25–26]. But at the same time man must remain subject to the will of God, who imposes limits upon his use and dominion over things [cf. Gen 2:16–17], just as he promises him immortality [cf. Gen 2:9; Wis 2:23]. Thus man, being the image of God, has a true affinity with him, too.

On the basis of this teaching, development cannot consist only in the use, dominion over, and indiscriminate possession of created things and the products of human industry but consists, rather, in subordinating the possession, dominion, and use to man’s divine likeness and to his vocation to immortality....

30. ... [552] ... Ex quibus effici cogique potest, saltem ab omnibus, qui credunt in Verbum Dei, hodiernam “hominis progressionem” habendam esse historiae momentum inceptae in creatione orbis terrarum perpetuoque in discrimen adductae ob neglectam quidem Dei voluntatem in primisque ob libidinem ido[553]latriae; sed ea fundamentali ratione cum promissionibus initio factis congruit. Qui, causam interponens durum esse certare vel assidue contendere vires ad assequendam victoriam, aut, nomine cognitae ipsius iacturae necnon reversionis ad caput, se difficili sed excitante abdicaret munere meliorem reddendi sortem totius hominis omniumque hominum, voluntatem Dei Creatoris is non observaret. ...

31. ... [554] ... Huic Dei consilio, quod initium ducit ab aeternitate in Christo—perfecta “image” Patris—quodque fastigium in eo habet, “qui est principium, primogenitus ex mortuis” [Col 1:15], nostra includitur historia, quae nostro privato et publico denotatur labore, ut hominum condicio melior reddatur, necnon difficultates vincantur in itinere frequenter nobis occurrentes, ita ut ad plenitudinem nos comparemus participandam, quae “habitat in Domino” [Col 1:19], quamque ipse tradit “Corpori suo, quod est Ecclesia” [Col 1:18; cf. Eph 1:22s], dum peccatum, quod nobis semper insidiatur nostraque laedit opera, vincitur ac redimitur “reconciliatione”, quam operatus est Christus [cf. Col 1:20].

Rerum prospectus hic amplior fit. Optatum infinitae cuiusdam “progressionis” recuperatur, in aliud tamen penitus mutatum nova quadam visione christiana fide patefacta, unde accipimus eiusmodi progressionem haberi tantummodo posse, quod Deus Pater inde a principio voluerit suam gloriam cum homine communicare in Christo Iesu a mortuis excitato, “in quo habemus redemptionem per sanguinem eius, remissionem peccatorum” [cf. Eph 1:7], in eoque voluerit peccatum vinci nostrumque maximum in bonum converti,¹ quod infinite superat quidquid progressio assequi potest. ...

33. ... [559] ... Christianus insuper, educatus ad videndam in homine Dei imaginem, vocatam ad plenam participandam libertatem plenumque bonum, quod Deus Ipse est, studium progressus eiusque effectiois sensu carens putat sine observantia et obsequio dignitatis unice huius “imaginis”. Ut alia utamur locutione, verus progressus ponendus est in Dei proximique amore debetque usui favere personarum cum societate. Ecce “civilis cultus amoris”, de quo tam frequenter Paulus PP. VI. loquebatur.

30. ... It is logical to conclude, at least on the part of those who believe in the Word of God, that today’s “development” is to be seen as a moment in the story that began at creation, a story that is constantly endangered by reason of infidelity to the Creator’s will and especially by the temptation to idolatry. But this “development” fundamentally corresponds to the promises made at the beginning. Anyone wishing to renounce the difficult yet exciting task of improving the lot of man in his totality, and of all people, with the excuse that the struggle is difficult and that constant effort is required, or simply because of the experience of defeat and the need to begin again, that person would be betraying the will of God the Creator. ...

31. ... A part of this divine plan, which begins from eternity in Christ, the perfect “image” of the Father, and which culminates in him, “the first-born from the dead” [Col 1:15], is our own history, marked by our personal and collective effort to raise up the human condition and to overcome the obstacles that are continually arising along our way. It thus prepares us to share in the fullness that “dwells in the Lord” [Col 1:19] and that he communicates “to his body, which is the Church” [Col 1:18; cf. Eph 1:22–23]. At the same time, sin, which is always attempting to trap us and that jeopardizes our human achievements, is conquered and redeemed by the “reconciliation” accomplished by Christ [cf. Col 1:20].

Here the perspectives widen. The dream of “unlimited progress” reappears, radically transformed by the new outlook created by Christian faith, assuring us that progress is possible only because God the Father has decided from the beginning to make man a sharer of his glory in Jesus Christ risen from the dead, in whom “we have redemption through his blood, ... the forgiveness of our trespasses” [Eph 1:7]. In him God wished to conquer sin and make it serve our greater good,¹ which infinitely surpasses what progress could achieve. ...

33. ... Furthermore, the Christian who is taught to see that man is the image of God, called to share in the full freedom and the full good that is God himself, does not understand a zeal for progress and its application that excludes regard and respect for the unique dignity of this “image”. In other words, true development must be based on the love of God and neighbor and must help to promote the relationships between individuals and society. This is the “civilization of love” of which Paul VI often spoke.

4816 34. Progressus indoles moralis discedere ne potest quidem ab obsequio erga entia, quae naturam visibilem efficiunt, quamque Graeci, significantes sane ordinem, quo illud eminet, “cosmum” vocabant. . . . [564] . . .

4817 38. . . . [565] . . . Quod ad christianos attinet, sicut et ad omnes, qui vocis “peccati” expressam significationem theologicam agnoscunt, mutatio rationis vivendi et mentis vel modi, quo quis est, sermone biblico vocatur “conversio” [cf. Mt 1:15; Lc 13:35; Is 30:15]. . . .

In itinere optatae conversionis versus superationem moralium impedimentorum, quae progressionem obstant, iam indicari potest ut bonum definitum et morale maior intelligentia homines et nationes copulari inter se. Quod viri et mulieres, in variis mundi partibus, tamquam proprias sentiunt iniustitias et violationes iurium humanorum longinquis in regionibus actas, quas numquam fortasse visent, aliud est signum quendam eventum esse mutatum in conscientiam et notam moralem esse consecutum.

Agitur ante omnia de mutua copulatione, quae recipitur uti systema praeponderans rationum in mundo nostri temporis, in eius partibus, seu oeconomia, cultura, res publicas administrandi scientia, religione, et ut genus morale assumitur. Cum ita mutua copulatio agnoscitur et assumitur, ei respondet, tamquam habitus moralis et socialis, tamquam “virtus”, consensio; quae igitur non simplex est et vagus misericordiae sensus vel levis miseratio tot personarum malis tributa, vicinarum aut longinquarum; sed est contra voluntas [566] firma et constans bonum curandi commune, seu bonum uniuscuiusque et omnium, quia omnes vere recipimus in nos. . . .

Eadem regula per similitudinem adhibetur in consuetudinibus gentium. Mutua copulatio mutanda est in concordiam, positam in principio omnia naturae bona esse omnibus desti[567]nata. Quae humana industria edit materias primas elaborando, bono omnium debent, labore iuvante, prodessent. . . .

34. Nor can the moral character of development exclude respect for the beings that constitute the natural world, which the ancient Greeks—alluding precisely to the order that distinguishes it—called the “cosmos”. . . .

38. . . . For Christians, as for all who recognize the precise theological meaning of the word “sin”, a change of behavior or mentality or mode of existence is called “conversion”, to use the language of the Bible [cf. Mt 1:15; Lk 13:3, 5; Is 30:15]. . . .

On the path toward the desired conversion, toward the overcoming of the moral obstacles to development, it is already possible to point to the positive and moral value of the growing awareness of interdependence among individuals and nations. The fact that men and women in various parts of the world feel personally affected by the injustices and violations of human rights committed in distant countries, countries that perhaps they will never visit, is a further sign of a reality transformed into awareness, thus acquiring a moral connotation.

It is above all a question of interdependence, sensed as a system determining relationships in the contemporary world, in its economic, cultural, political, scientific, and religious elements and accepted as a moral category. When interdependence becomes recognized in this way, the correlative response as a moral and social attitude, as a “virtue”, is solidarity. This, then, is not a feeling of vague compassion or shallow distress at the misfortunes of so many people, both near and far. On the contrary, it is a firm and persevering determination to commit oneself to the common good; that is to say, to the good of all and of each individual, because we are all really responsible for all. . . .

39. The exercise of solidarity within each society is valid when its members recognize one another as persons. Those who are more influential, because they have a greater share of goods and common services, should feel responsible for the weaker and be ready to share with them what they possess. Those who are weaker, for their part, in the same spirit of solidarity, should not adopt a purely passive attitude or one that is destructive of the social fabric, but, while claiming their legitimate rights, should do what they can for the good of all. The intermediate groups, in their turn, should not selfishly insist on their particular interests, but respect the interests of others. . . .

The same criterion is applied by analogy in international relationships. Interdependence must be transformed into solidarity, based upon the principle that the goods of creation are meant for all. That which human industry produces through the processing of raw materials, with the contribution of work, must serve equally for the good of all. . . .

4820–4823: Motu Proprio Ecclesia Dei, July 2, 1988

Because of his traditionalism and opposition to ecumenism and the freedom of conscience and religion, Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre was suspended from his ministerial functions by Paul VI in 1976 (cf. Discourse to the Cardinals of May 24, 1976: AAS 68 [1976]: 373f.). An indult of October 3, 1984, from the Congregation of Rites (AAS 76 [1984]: 1088f.) permitted the celebration of the Mass of the Tridentine Rite under prescribed conditions. At the same time, Lefebvre and his followers persisted in their rejection of the Second Vatican Council. After numerous failed efforts at reconciliation, on June 30, 1988, at Ecône (Wallis, Switzerland), Lefebvre consecrated four priests of his “Pius X” fraternity as bishops without papal mandate (cf. CIC/1983, cann. 1013, 1382). The motu proprio makes known the schism brought about by this act and the consequent excommunication of Lefebvre and his followers. Nevertheless, it offers to them, simultaneously, the possibility of return to the Catholic Church.

3. In itself, this act was one of disobedience to the Roman pontiff in a very grave matter of supreme importance for the unity of the Church, such as is the ordination of bishops, whereby the apostolic succession is sacramentally perpetuated. Hence such disobedience—which implies in practice the rejection of the Roman primacy—constitutes a schismatic act.¹...

4. The root of this schismatic act can be discerned in an incomplete and contradictory notion of tradition. 4821

... Sed omnino discors est pugnans Traditionis notio quae universali Ecclesiae Magisterio opponitur, quod quidem pertinet ad Romanum Episcopum Episcoporumque coetum. Nemo profecto traditioni fidelis haberi potest qui ligamina nempe recidit ac vincula ab eo cui Christus ipsa in persona Apostoli Petri, ministerium commisit unitatis in Ecclesiam suam.² [1497] a) Exitus reapse quem Episcopi Lefebvre motus nuper habuit omnibus fidelibus potest dare ansam debetque aperte ac penitus cogitandi de propria erga Traditionem Ecclesiae fidelitate, sincere a Magisterio sive ordinario, sive extraordinario, a Concilio praesertim, a Nicaeno ad Vaticanum II. Ex hac quidem meditatione, omnibus persuadendum est reiterato efficacique modo, oportere sane adhuc dilatare et fidelitatem augere, amotis omnino falsis interpretationibus ac arbitrariis et non legitimis amplificationibus de rebus ad doctrinam, liturgiam disciplinamque pertinentibus....

4823 5. Facinore modo patrato ante oculos obversante, nos debere intelligimus cunctos fideles conscios reddere quarundam rerum quas tristis eventus hic prae se omnino fert.

b) Velimus praeterea, et theologos viros et alios scientiarum ecclesiasticarum peritos admonere, ut et eorum sententia hisce in adiunctis exquiratur. Amplitudo, enim, et altitudo praeceptorum Concilii Vaticani II renovatum postulant investigationis studium, quo Concilii perpetuitas una cum Traditione omnino illustretur, in iis potissimum doctrinae partibus, quae, cum fortasse novae sint, nondum bene a quibusdam Ecclesiae portionibus intellectae sunt.

c) ... Omnes scire debent formalem schismati adhaesionem gravem esse in Deum iniuriam atque excommunicationem prae se ferre lege Ecclesiae rite statutam.¹

Incomplete, because it does not take sufficiently into account the living character of tradition, which, as the Second Vatican Council clearly taught, “comes from the apostles and progresses in the Church with the help of the Holy Spirit ...”¹.

... But especially contradictory is a notion of tradition that opposes the universal Magisterium of the Church possessed by the bishop of Rome and the body of bishops. It is impossible to remain faithful to the tradition while breaking the ecclesial bond with him to whom, in the person of the apostle Peter, Christ himself entrusted the ministry of unity in his Church.²

5. Faced with the situation that has arisen, I deem it my duty to inform all the Catholic faithful of some aspects that this sad event has highlighted.

a. The outcome of the movement promoted by Mons. Lefebvre can and must be, for all the Catholic faithful, a motive for sincere reflection concerning their own fidelity to the Church’s tradition, authentically interpreted by the ecclesiastical Magisterium, ordinary and extraordinary, especially in the ecumenical councils from Nicaea to Vatican II. From this reflection all should draw a renewed and efficacious conviction of the necessity of strengthening still more their fidelity by rejecting erroneous interpretations and arbitrary and unauthorized applications in matters of doctrine, liturgy, and discipline....

b. Moreover, I should like to remind theologians and other experts in the ecclesiastical sciences that they should feel themselves called upon to answer in the present circumstances. Indeed, the extent and depth of the teaching of the Second Vatican Council call for a renewed commitment to deeper study in order to reveal clearly the council’s continuity with tradition, especially in points of doctrine that, perhaps because they are new, have not yet been well understood by some sections of the Church.

c. ... Everyone should be aware that formal adherence to the schism is a grave offense against God and carries the penalty of excommunication decreed by the Church’s law.¹

Id spectat ad omnem humanum, sive mulierem sive virum, qui illud efficiunt quisque pro sua proprietate.... [1674]

the Creator “has willed for its own sake”; that creature is thus a person. Being a person means striving toward self-realization ..., which can only be achieved “through a sincere gift of self”. The model for this interpretation of the person is God himself as Trinity, as a communion of Persons. To say that man is created in the image and likeness of God means that man is called to exist “for” others, to become a gift.

This applies to every human being, whether woman or man, who live it out in accordance with the special qualities proper to each....

“He Will Have Dominion over You”

10. Biblica Libri Genesis descriptio veritatem delineat de consecutionibus peccati hominis, sicut etiam indicat conturbationem eius primigeniae necessitudinis inter virum et mulierem, quae personali utriusque dignitati respondet.... Cum igitur in descriptione biblica verba legimus mulieri dicta: “Ad virum tuum erit appetitus tuus, ipse autem dominabitur tui” [Gn 3:16], abruptionem perspicimus et constans periculum attinens ad hanc “duorum unitatem”, quae respondet dignitati imaginis et similitudinis Dei in utroque. Hoc tamen periculum est mulieri gravius. Namque illud donum sincerum esse indeque illud “pro” altero vivere dominium sequitur: “ipse dominabitur tui”. Id “dominium” conturbationem indicat et amissionem stabilitatis eius fundamentalis aequalitatis, quam vir et mulier habent in “unitate duorum”: hocque est detrimento praesertim mulieri, cum solum aequalitas, quae ex amborum dignitate, qua personarum, oritur, possit mutuas necessitudines instruere indole verae “communionis personarum”. Sed si huius aequalitatis violatio, quae quidem donum simul et ius est ab ipso Deo Creatore proficiscens, detrimento est mulieri, uno tempore minuit etiam veram viri dignitatem....

10. The biblical description in the Book of Genesis 4831 outlines the truth about the consequences of man’s sin, as it is shown by the disturbance of that original relationship between man and woman which corresponds to their individual dignity as persons.... Therefore when we read in the biblical description the words addressed to the woman: “Your desire shall be for your husband, and he shall rule over you” [Gen 3:16], we discover a break and a constant threat precisely in regard to this “unity of the two” which corresponds to the dignity of the image and likeness of God in both of them. But this threat is more serious for the woman, since domination takes the place of “being a sincere gift” and therefore living “for” the other: “he shall rule over you.” This “domination” indicates the disturbance and loss of the stability of that fundamental equality which the man and the woman possess in the “unity of the two”: and this is especially to the disadvantage of the woman, whereas only the equality resulting from their dignity as persons can give to their mutual relationship the character of an authentic “communion of persons”. While the violation of this equality, which is both a gift and a right deriving from God the Creator, involves an element to the disadvantage of the woman, at the same time it also diminishes the true dignity of the man....

In the name of liberation from male “domination”, 4832 women must not appropriate to themselves male characteristics contrary to their own feminine “originality”. There is a well-founded fear that if they take this path, women will not “reach fulfillment” but instead will deform and lose what constitutes their essential richness....

17. ... In the light of the gospel, they (motherhood 4833 and virginity) acquire their full meaning and value in Mary.... These two dimensions of the female vocation were united in her in an exceptional manner, in such a way that one did not exclude the other but wonderfully complemented it....

Motherhood

Mutua porro personae in conubio donatio ad munus sese recludit alicuius vitae novae, novi hominis, qui persona pariter est ad suorum parentum similitudinem. Iam inde ab initio secum maternitas infert ad novam personam apertionem quandam: haec omnino est propria mulieris “pars”. Nam tali in apertione, dum concipit nempe filium paritque, se ipsam mulier “per sincerum sui ipsius donum” reperit....

4835 19. ... Biblicum “mulieris” paradigma cumulat ac veluti coronatur ipsa Matris Dei maternitate, uti verbis Protoevangelii “Inimicitias ponam inter te et mulierem” [Gn 3:15] confirmatur. En ergo Deus in ea in ipsiusque materno responso “fiat” (“Fiat [1698] mihi secundum verbum tuum”), Novo cum hominum genere Foederi principium ponit ... [1700] ...

18. ... This truth about the person also opens up the path to a full understanding of women’s motherhood. Motherhood is the fruit of the marriage union of a man and woman....

This mutual gift of the person in marriage opens up the gift of a new life, a new human being, who is also a person in the likeness of his parents. Motherhood implies from the beginning a special openness to the new person: and this is precisely the woman’s “part”. In this openness, in conceiving and giving birth to a child, the woman “discovers herself through a sincere gift of self”....

Although both of them together are parents of their child, the woman’s motherhood constitutes a special “part” in this shared parenthood, and the most demanding part. Parenthood—even though it belongs to both—is realized much more fully in the woman, especially in the prenatal period. It is the woman who “pays” directly for this shared generation, which literally absorbs the energies of her body and soul. It is therefore necessary that the man be fully aware that in their shared parenthood he owes a special debt to the woman....

19. ... The biblical exemplar of the “woman” finds its culmination in the motherhood of the Mother of God. The words of the Proto-evangelium—“I will put enmity between you and the woman”—find here a fresh confirmation. We see that through Mary—through her maternal fiat (“Let it be done to me”)—God begins a New Covenant with humanity....

Lc 1:35]. Haec ideo divina maternitas

20. ... Consequently, celibacy for the kingdom of heaven results not only from a free choice on the part of man, but also from a special grace on the part of God, who calls a particular person to live celibacy. While this is a special sign of the kingdom of God to come, it also serves as a way to devote all the energies of soul and body during one’s earthly life exclusively for the sake of the eschatological kingdom....

Mary is the first person in whom this new awareness is manifested, for she asks the angel: “How can this be, since I have no husband?” [Lk 1:34]. Even though she is “betrothed to a man whose name was Joseph” [cf. Lk 1:27], she is firm in her resolve to remain a virgin. The motherhood that is accomplished in her comes exclusively from the “power of the Most High” and is the result of the Holy Spirit’s coming down upon her [cf. Lk 1:35]. This divine motherhood, therefore, is an altogether unforeseen response to the human expectation of women in Israel: it comes to Mary as a gift from God himself....

On the basis of the gospel, the meaning of virginity was developed and better understood as a vocation for women, too, one in which their dignity, like that of the Virgin of Nazareth, finds confirmation. The gospel puts forward the ideal of the consecration of the person, that is, the person's exclusive dedication to God by virtue of the evangelical counsels: in particular, chastity, poverty, and obedience. The perfect incarnation of these counsels is Jesus Christ himself. Whoever wishes to follow him in a radical way chooses to live according to these counsels. They are distinct from the commandments and show the Christian the radical way of the gospel. From the very beginning of Christianity, men and women have set out on this path, since the evangelical ideal is addressed to human beings without any distinction of sex.

In this wider context, virginity has to be considered also as a path for women, a path on which they realize their womanhood in a way different from marriage....

Spiritual Motherhood

21. Evangelico sensu percepta virginitas secum detractionem connubii infert proindeque etiam maternitatis physicae.

Verum huius modi renuntiatio maternitatis, quae in mulieris animo gignere potest magnum quoddam sacrificium, recludit simul eam ad alterius generis maternitatem experiendam: quae est maternitas "secundum Spiritum" [cf. Rm 8:4]....

22. ... [1707] ... Nobis igitur persuadent Biblia nec plenam explicationem haberi posse hominis ipsius, vel eius potius quod "humanum" est, nisi convenienter simul ad id recurratur quod "femineum" est. Simile vero quiddam in oeconomia salutifera Dei evenit: quam scilicet si funditus perspicere voluerimus cum hominis nempe historia tota coniunctam, praetermitti minime licebit in fidei nostrae prospectu mysterium "mulieris": virginis—matris—sponsae.

24. ... [1712] ... Sed provocatio ipsius "ethos" redemptionis clara est ac decretoria. Cunctae enim rationes pro "submissione" mulieris in matrimonio viro intellegendae potius sunt cum intellectu "mutuae subditionis" utriusque "in timore Christi".... [1715] ...

21. Virginity according to the gospel means 4837 renouncing marriage and thus physical motherhood.

Nevertheless, the renunciation of this kind of motherhood, a renunciation that can involve great sacrifice for a woman, makes possible a different kind of motherhood: motherhood "according to the Spirit" [cf. Rm 8:4]....

22. ... The Bible convinces us of the fact that one 4838 can have no adequate hermeneutic of man, or of what is "human", without appropriate reference to what is "feminine". There is an analogy in God's salvific economy: if we wish to understand it fully in relation to the whole of human history, we cannot omit, in the perspective of our faith, the mystery of "woman": virgin-mother-spouse.

24. ... But the challenge presented by the "ethos" of 4839 the Redemption is clear and definitive. All the reasons in favor of the "subjection" of woman to man in marriage must be understood in the sense of a "mutual subjection" of both "out of reverence for Christ"....

Christ is united with this “Body” as the bridegroom with the bride....

Since Christ, in instituting the Eucharist, linked it in such an explicit way to the priestly service of the apostles, it is legitimate to conclude that he thereby wished to express the relationship between man and woman, between what is “feminine” and what is “masculine”. It is a relationship willed by God both in the mystery of creation and in the mystery of redemption. It is the Eucharist above all that expresses the redemptive act of Christ the Bridegroom toward the Church the Bride. This is clear and unambiguous when the sacramental ministry of the Eucharist, in which the priest acts “in persona Christi”, is performed by a man....

4841 27. ... [1718] ... Doctrinam autem totius confirmans traditionis Concilium Vaticanum II memoravit in hierarchia ipsa sanctitatis “mulierem” ipsam, Mariam Nazarethanam Ecclesiae esse “figuram” eamque reliquos in via ad sanctimoniam “praecedere”. 27. ... The Second Vatican Council, confirming the teaching of the whole of tradition, recalled that in the hierarchy of holiness it is precisely the “woman”, Mary of Nazareth, who is the “figure” of the Church. She “precedes” everyone on the path to holiness; in her person “the Church has already reached that perfection whereby she exists without spot or wrinkle [cf. Eph 5:27]”.¹ In this sense, one can say that the Church is both “Marian” and “Apostolic-Petrine”.²

² “This Marian profile is also—perhaps even more—fundamental and characteristic of the Church than is the apostolic and Petrine profile to which it is profoundly united.... The Marian dimension of the Church is antecedent to the Petrine dimension, although closely united with and complementary to it. Mary Immaculate precedes all others, including obviously Peter himself and the apostles. This is so, not only because Peter and the apostles, being born of the human race under the burden of sin, form part of the Church, which is ‘holy with sinners’, but also because their triple function has no other purpose except to form the Church in line with the ideal of holiness already preformed and prefigured in Mary. A contemporary theologian has rightly stated that ‘Mary is “Queen of the Apostles” without claiming apostolic powers for herself. She possesses something else and something more’”

The Vocation and Mission of the Laity in the Church and in the World

2. ... Patres synodales, tempora post Concilium conscipientes, plane agnovērunt Spiritum vigorem iuvenilem nunc quoque Ecclesiae tribuere novamque sanctitatis et participationis virtutem in multis christifidelibus laicis suscitare. Quod, in aliis multis, ex renovata et mutua agendi et collaborandi ratione sacerdotum, religiosorum et christifidelium laicorum comprobatur; ex actuosa in liturgia participatione, in modo verbi Dei nuntiandi, in catechesi tradenda; ex multis pensis et operis christifidelibus laicis concreditis et ab his susceptis; ex florentibus coetibus, consociationibus, motibus spiritualibus atque ex laicorum in haec deditione; ex ampliore et perspicua participatione mulierum in vita Ecclesiae atque in societatis hodiernae progressu.

At Synodus simul animadvertit hanc christifidelium laicorum viam postconciliarem difficultatibus et periculis minime fuisse immunem. Ex quibus duas illas memoramus tentationes a quibus non semper se ipsi subdixerunt: eam in primis qua tam acre tribuerunt studium in ministeria et munera ecclesialia, ut saepe a sua et propria in responsabilitate in campo professionis, societatis, oeconomiae, culturae ac rei politicae recederent; eam deinde tentationem qua iniusta fidei a vita seiunctio atque evangelii receptionis ab actuosa opera in diversis huius temporis huiusque terrae rebus rata omnino fit...

2. ... In looking over the years following the council, the synod Fathers have been able to verify how the Holy Spirit continues to renew the youth of the Church and how he has inspired new aspirations toward holiness and the participation of so many lay faithful. This is witnessed, among other ways, in the new manner of active collaboration among priests, religious, and the lay faithful; the active participation in the liturgy, in the proclamation of the Word of God, and catechesis; the multiplicity of services and tasks entrusted to the lay faithful and fulfilled by them; the flourishing of groups, associations, and spiritual movements as well as a lay commitment in the life of the Church; and in the fuller and meaningful participation of women in the development of society. 4850

At the same time, the synod has pointed out that the postconciliar path of the lay faithful has not been without its difficulties and dangers. In particular, two temptations can be cited that they have not always known how to avoid: the temptation of being so strongly interested in Church services and tasks that some fail to become actively engaged in their responsibilities in the professional, social, cultural, and political world; and the temptation of legitimizing the unwarranted separation of faith from life, that is, a separation of the gospel's acceptance from the actual living of the gospel in various situations in the world...

3. The basic meaning of this synod and the most precious fruit desired as a result of it is the lay faithful's hearkening to the call of Christ the Lord to work in his vineyard, to take an active, conscientious, and responsible part in the mission of the Church in this great moment in history, made especially dramatic by occurring on the threshold of the third millennium. 4851

The lay faithful are sharers in the priestly mission, for which Jesus offered himself on the Cross and continues to be offered in the celebration of the Eucharist for the glory of God and the salvation of humanity. Incorporated into Christ the Lord, the baptized are united to him and to his sacrifice in the offering they make of themselves and their daily activities [cf. Rom 12:1–2]...

Through their participation in the prophetic mission of Christ, “who proclaimed the kingdom of his Father by the testimony of his life and by the power of his word”,¹ the lay faithful are given the ability and responsibility to accept the gospel in faith and to proclaim it in word and deed, without hesitating courageously to identify and denounce evil. United to Christ, the “great prophet” [Lk 7:16], and in the Spirit made “witnesses” of the risen Christ, the lay faithful are made sharers in the appreciation of the Church’s supernatural faith, which “cannot err in matters of belief”,² and sharers as well in the grace of the Word [cf. Acts 2:17–18; Rev 19:10]. They are also called to allow the newness and the power of the gospel to shine out every day in their family and social life as well as to express patiently and courageously in the contradictions of the present age their hope of future glory even “through the framework of their secular life”.³

Because the lay faithful belong to Christ, Lord and King of the Universe, they share in his kingly mission and are called by him to spread that kingdom in history. They exercise their kingship as Christians, above all in the spiritual combat in which they seek to overcome in themselves the kingdom of sin [cf. Rom 6:12], and then to make a gift of themselves so as to serve, in justice and in charity, Jesus who is himself present in all his brothers and sisters, above all in the very least [cf. Mt 25:40]...

The ministries receive the charism of the Holy Spirit from the risen Christ, in uninterrupted succession from the apostles, through the sacrament of orders: from him they receive the authority and sacred power to serve the Church, acting in persona Christi Capitis (in the person of Christ, the Head),¹ and to gather her in the Holy Spirit through the gospel and the sacraments.

The ordained ministries, apart from the persons who receive them, are a grace for the life and mission of the entire Church. These ministries express and realize a participation in the priesthood of Jesus Christ that is different, not simply in degree but in essence, from the participation given to all the lay faithful through baptism and confirmation. On the other hand, the ministerial priesthood, as the Second Vatican Council recalls, essentially has the royal priesthood of all the faithful as its aim and is ordered to it.²...

Salvifica Ecclesiae missio in mundum peragitur non a ministris dumtaxat, vi Ordinis sacramenti, sed ab omnibus quoque christifidelibus laicis; hi enim, propter propriam condicionem baptizatorum et specificatam vocationem, ea qua quisque valet mensura, partem habent in Christi muneribus sacerdotali, prophetico et regali.

Pastores igitur debent christifidelium laicorum ministeria, officia et munera agnoscere et promovere, cum eadem sacramentale fundamentum habeant in Baptismo et Confirmatione et pro eorum pluribus etiam in Matrimonio.

Quoties ergo Ecclesiae vel necessitas vel utilitas id exigit, pastores, iuxta normas iure universali constitutas, possunt christifidelibus laicis concedere quasdam functiones, quae sunt cum proprio pastorum munere conexas, non tamen exigunt characterem Ordinis....

Novissimus Synodalis Coetus protulit amplam et eloquentem varietatem casuum qui manifestant quomodo ministeria, officia et munera baptizatorum in Ecclesia considerentur. Patres valde aestimasse visi sunt auxilium in apostolatu ex parte christifidelium laicorum, virorum et feminarum, pro evangelizatione, pro sanctificatione et pro christiana animatione realitatum temporalium itemque eorum in casibus emergentibus et in permanentibus necessitatibus generosa disponibilitas ad partes supplendas.¹

Sic igitur postquam promota a Concilio est sic dicta renovatio liturgica, ipsi christifideles laici, perspicue animadvertentes quam maiora sibi munera competant in coetu liturgico et eius praeparatione, paratiores sese in dies exhibent hisce [431] partibus suscipiendis; celebratio enim liturgica censenda est non cleri dumtaxat sed totius coetus actio sacra. Aequum proinde visum est ut munera, quae non sunt ministrorum ordinatorum propria, per christifideles laicos absolvantur.² Inde spontanea fere ratione effectum est ut, cum christifideles re participes facti fuerint in actione liturgica, participes quoque fiant in nuntiando Dei verbo atque in ipsa cura pastoralis.³

23. The Church's mission of salvation in the world is realized not only by the ministers in virtue of the sacrament of orders but also by all the lay faithful; indeed, because of their baptismal state and their specific vocation, in the measure proper to each person, the lay faithful participate in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly mission of Christ.

The pastors, therefore, ought to acknowledge and foster the ministries, the offices, and the roles of the lay faithful that find their foundation in the sacraments of baptism and confirmation, indeed, for a good many of them, in the sacrament of matrimony.

When necessity and expediency in the Church require it, the pastors, according to established norms from universal law, can entrust to the lay faithful certain offices and roles that are connected to their pastoral ministry but do not require the character of orders....

However, the exercise of such tasks does not make pastors of the lay faithful: in fact, a person is not a minister simply in performing a task, but through sacramental ordination....

The recent synodal assembly has provided an extensive and meaningful overview of the situation in the Church on the ministries, offices, and roles of the baptized. The Fathers have manifested a deep appreciation for the contribution of the lay faithful, both women and men, in the work of the apostolate, in evangelization, sanctification, and the Christian animation of temporal affairs, as well as their generous willingness to supply in situations of emergency and chronic necessity.¹

Following the liturgical renewal promoted by the council, the lay faithful themselves have acquired a more lively awareness of the tasks that they fulfill in the liturgical assembly and its preparation and have become more widely disposed to fulfill them: the liturgical celebration, in fact, is a sacred action, not simply of the clergy, but of the entire assembly. It is, therefore, natural that the tasks not proper to the ordained ministers be fulfilled by the lay faithful.² In this way there is a natural transition from an effective involvement of the lay faithful in the liturgical action to that of announcing the Word of God and pastoral care.³

Nihilominus non defuerant in ipso Coetu Synodali qui, iuxta positiva iudicia, alia negativa obtruderent circa usum haud satis cautum vocabuli “ministerium”, circa confusionem et, interdum, exaequationem commune inter et sacerdotium ministeriale, circa id quod aliquae ecclesiasticae leges et normae parum observentur; quod ad arbitrium fiat interpretatio de conceptu “subsidiaritatibus”; quod christifideles laici quodammodo “clericalizentur”; quod periculum adsit re constituendi structuram quamdam ecclesiam servitii quae parallela existat illi quae Ordinis sacramento fundatur.

Ad subveniendum igitur hisce periculis locuti sunt Patres de necessitate exprimentum quam dilucide, et quidem accuratioribus vocalibus,⁴ tum missionis unitatem in Ecclesia, cui missioni baptizati omnes accedunt, tum partiter substantialem Pastorum diversitatem ministerii, quod, cum in Ordinis sacramento fundatur, differat necesse est ab aliis ministeriis, officiis et muneribus ecclesialibus, quae in sacramentis Baptismi et Confirmationis radicanantur....

In the same synod assembly, however, a critical judgment was voiced along with these positive elements about too indiscriminate a use of the word “ministry”, the confusion and the equating of the common priesthood and the ministerial priesthood, the lack of observance of ecclesiastical laws and norms, the arbitrary interpretation of the concept of “subsidiarity”, the tendency toward a “clericalization” of the lay faithful and the risk of creating, in reality, an ecclesial structure of parallel service to that founded on the sacrament of orders.

Precisely to overcome these dangers, the synod Fathers have insisted on the necessity to express with greater clarity, and with a more precise terminology,⁴ both the unity of the Church's mission in which all the baptized participate and the substantial diversity of the ministry of pastors that is rooted in the sacrament of orders, all the while respecting the other ministries, offices, and roles in the Church that are rooted in the sacraments of baptism and confirmation....

Si enim christiana oratio inserenda est in motum trinitarium Dei, etiam eius essentiale contentum necessario est definiendum duplici huiusmodi motus directione: in Spiritu Sancto scilicet Filius in mundum venit ad reconciliandum eum cum Patre gestis et doloribus suis; in eodem autem motu in eodemque Spiritu, Filius caro factus redit ad Patrem, eius voluntatem adimplens Passione et Resurrectione....

II. Christian Prayer in the Light of Revelation

7. ... If the prayer of a Christian has to be inserted 4860 in the trinitarian movement of God, then its essential content must also necessarily be determined by the twofold direction of such movement. It is in the Holy Spirit that the Son comes into the world to reconcile it to the Father through his works and sufferings. On the other hand, in this same movement and in the very same Spirit, the Son Incarnate returns to the Father, fulfilling his will through his Passion and Resurrection....

The prayer of Jesus has been entrusted to the Church (“Pray then like this”, Mt 6:9).¹ This is why when a Christian prays, even if he is alone, his prayer is in fact always within the framework of the “communion of saints” in which and with which he prays, whether in a public and liturgical way or in a private manner....

The purpose of the instruction "On the Ecclesial Vocation of the Theologian" is a fundamental clarification of the relation between theology and the Magisterium. The comments about dissent seem to suggest that the 1989 "Declaration of Cologne" and subsequent publications supplied the occasion.

Ed.: AAS 82 (1990): 1552–68.

II. Vocatio theologi

experience of the divine, as Messalianism proposed.¹... In opposing them, the Fathers insisted on the fact that the soul's union with God in prayer is realized in a mysterious way and, in particular, through the sacraments of the Church. Moreover, it can even be achieved through experiences of affliction or desolation. These are not necessarily a sign ... that the Spirit has abandoned a soul. Rather, ... they may be an authentic participation in the state of abandonment experienced on the Cross by our Lord, who always remains the model and mediator of prayer.²...

IV. The Christian Way to Union with God

14. In order to draw near to that mystery of union with God which the Greek Fathers called the divinization of man, ... it is necessary in the first place to bear in mind that from eternity the Son is "other" with respect to the Father, and yet, in the Holy Spirit, he is "of the same substance". Consequently, this otherness, far from being an ill, is rather the greatest of goods. There is otherness in God himself, who is one single nature in three Persons, and there is also otherness between God and creatures, who are by nature different. ...

II. The Vocation of the Theologian

6. Among the vocations awakened in this way by the Spirit in the Church is that of the theologian. His role is to pursue in a particular way an ever deeper understanding of the Word of God found in the inspired Scriptures and handed on by the living tradition of the Church.

... Theological science responds to the invitation of truth as it seeks to understand the faith. It thereby aids the people of God in fulfilling the apostle's command [cf. 1 Pet 3:15] to give an accounting for their hope to those who ask it. ...

9. Through the course of centuries, theology has progressively developed into a true and proper science. The theologian must therefore be attentive to the epistemological requirements of his discipline, to the demands of rigorous critical standards, and thus to a rational verification of each stage of his research. The

In scientia theologica haec libertas investigationis inscribitur intra cognitionem rationalem, cuius obiectum praebet Revelatione, transmissa et explicata in Ecclesia sub Magisterii auctoritate, et per fidem excepta. Neglegere haec elementa, quae ut principia habenda sunt, idem est ac desistere a theologia exercenda. Ut satis hanc rationem inter theologiam et Magisterium explicemus, nunc opportunum ducimus munus considerare, quo Magisterium fungitur in Ecclesia....

III. Magisterium pastorum

[1557] 16. Munus divinae Revelationis depositum sancte custodiendi et fideliter exponendi suapte natura secumfert Magisterium definitive proponere posse¹ sententias quae, etiam si non continentur in veritatibus fidei, ipsis tamen intime conectuntur, adeo ut indoles definitiva talium affirmationum a Revelatione ipsa tandem derivet.²...

IV. Magisterium et theologia

obligation to be critical, however, should not be identified with the critical spirit that is born of feeling or prejudice. The theologian must discern in himself the origin of and motivation for his critical attitude and allow his gaze to be purified by faith....

11. ... Consequently, “this very disinterested service 4872 to the community of the faithful”, which theology is, “entails in essence an objective discussion, a fraternal dialogue, an openness and willingness to modify one’s own opinions.”¹

12. Freedom of research, which the academic 4873 community rightly holds most precious, means an openness to accepting the truth that emerges at the end of an investigation in which no element has intruded that is foreign to the methodology corresponding to the object under study.

In theology this freedom of inquiry is the hallmark of a rational discipline whose object is given by revelation, handed on and interpreted in the Church under the authority of the Magisterium, and received by faith. These givens have the force of principles. To eliminate them would mean to cease doing theology. In order to set forth precisely the ways in which the theologian relates to the Church’s teaching authority, it is appropriate now to reflect upon the role of the Magisterium in the Church....

III. The Magisterium of the Church’s Pastors

16. By its nature, the task of religiously guarding and 4874 loyally expounding the deposit of divine revelation (in all its integrity and purity) implies that the Magisterium can make a pronouncement “in a definitive way”¹ on propositions that, even if not contained among the truths of faith, are nonetheless intimately connected with them, in such a way that the definitive character of such affirmations derives in the final analysis from revelation itself.²...

IV. The Magisterium and Theology

21. The living Magisterium of the Church and 4875 theology, while having different gifts and functions, ultimately have the same goal: preserving the people of God in the truth that sets free and thereby making them “a light to the nations”. This service to the ecclesial community brings the theologian and the Magisterium into a reciprocal relationship....

Hic assensus ad doctrinam Magisterii ordinarii et universalis extenditur, cum doctrina fidei proponitur tamquam divinitus revelata credenda.

Cum idem proponit definitive veritates respicientes fidem et mores, [1560] quae etiam si non pertinent proprie ad Revelationem, stricte et intime ei conectuntur, ipsae firmiter amplectendae et retinendae sunt.¹

Cum autem Magisterium, etiam sine voluntate ponendi actum “definitivum”, doctrinam docet sive ad iuvandam altiorem perceptionem Revelationis vel eius rei, quae explanat argumentum eiusdem Revelationis, sive ad monendum de conformitate alicuius doctrinae cum veritatibus fidei, sive denique ad praecavendas opiniones quae cum eisdem veritatibus non componuntur: tunc religiosum voluntatis et intellectus obsequium requiritur.² . . .

4878 24. Denique Magisterium, ut maxime idoneo quo fieri possit modo, Populo Dei deserviat, ac nominatim ut eum tueatur a periculosis opinionibus quae ad errorem conducere possint, intervenire potest in quaestionibus disputatis, in quibus, una cum firmis principiis, elementa coniecturalia et contingentia miscentur. . . .

Voluntas sinceri obsequii erga hanc Magisterii doctrinam, in rebus quae per se irreformabiles non sunt, pro regula habenda est. Potest tamen accidere, ut theologus quaestiones sibi ponat, quae, prout fert casus, opportunitatem, formam ac vel etiam materiam alicuius interventus respiciant. Quod eum imprimis impellet, ut accurate inspiciat quaenam sit horum interventuum auctoritas, prout ipsa se prodit sive ex indole documentorum, sive ex frequenti propositione eiusdem doctrinae, sive ex dicendi ratione.¹ . . .

4879 [1561] 27. Etiam si doctrina fidei in discrimen non adducatur, theologus opiniones suas vel hypotheses suas contrarias non exhibebit, quasi de conclusionibus agatur, quae nullam controversiam admittant. Quod exigitur ob

22. Collaboration between the theologian and the Magisterium occurs in a special way when the theologian receives the canonical mission or the mandate to teach. In a certain sense, such collaboration becomes a participation in the work of the Magisterium, linked, as it then is, by a juridic bond. . . .

23. When the Magisterium of the Church makes an infallible pronouncement and solemnly declares that a teaching is found in revelation, the assent called for is that of theological faith. This kind of adherence is to be given even to the teaching of the ordinary and universal Magisterium when it proposes for belief a teaching of faith as divinely revealed.

When the Magisterium proposes “in a definitive way” truths concerning faith and morals, which, even if not divinely revealed, are nevertheless strictly and intimately connected with revelation, these must be firmly accepted and held.¹

When the Magisterium, not intending to act “definitively”, teaches a doctrine to aid a better understanding of revelation and make explicit its contents or to recall how some teaching is in conformity with the truths of faith or finally to guard against ideas that are incompatible with these truths, the response called for is that of the religious submission of will and intellect.² . . .

24. Finally, in order to serve the people of God as well as possible, in particular, by warning them of dangerous opinions that could lead to error, the Magisterium can intervene in questions under discussion that involve, in addition to solid principles, certain contingent and conjectural elements. . . .

The willingness to submit loyally to the teaching of the Magisterium on matters per se not irreformable must be the rule. It can happen, however, that a theologian may, according to the case, raise questions regarding the timeliness, the form, or even the contents of magisterial interventions. Here the theologian will need, first of all, to assess accurately the authoritativeness of the interventions, which becomes clear from the nature of the documents, the insistence with which a teaching is repeated, and the very way in which it is expressed.¹ . . .

27. Even if the doctrine of the faith is not in question, the theologian will not present his own opinions or divergent hypotheses as though they were non-arguable conclusions. Respect for the truth as well as for the

Si nihilominus post sincerum conatum difficultates permaneant, theologi officium est in notitiam auctoritatum Magisterii perferre quaestiones ortas ex ipsa doctrina proposita vel ex probationibus quae offeruntur, vel etiam ex modo quo eadem doctrina proponitur. Ipse id efficit spiritu evangelico ductus ac vehementi studio permotus difficultates solvendi. Sic genus quoddam "magisterii paralleli" theologorum exoritur, quod magisterio authentico adversatur et aemulatur.¹...

[1568] 39. ... Rogare maiorem opinionis partem quid tandem credere facereque deceat, adversus Magisterium invocare pondus publicae opinionis, praetendere theologorum "consensum", affirmare theologum esse praesagum quemdam interpretem alicuius "basis" aut sui

28. The preceding considerations have a particular application to the case of the theologian who might have serious difficulties, for reasons that appear to him well founded, in accepting a non-irreformable magisterial teaching.... 4880

30. If, despite a loyal effort on the theologian's part, the difficulties persist, the theologian has the duty to make known to the magisterial authorities the problems raised by the teaching in itself, in the arguments proposed to justify it, or even in the manner in which it is presented. He should do this in an evangelical spirit and with a profound desire to resolve the difficulties. His objections could then contribute to real progress and provide a stimulus to the Magisterium to propose the teaching of the Church in greater depth and with a clearer presentation of the arguments.... 4881

32. ... In particular, the concern here is to address that public opposition to the Magisterium of the Church also called "dissent", which must be distinguished from the situation of personal difficulties treated above.... 4882

33. Dissent has different aspects. In its most radical form, it aims at changing the Church following a model of protest that takes its inspiration from political society.... 4883

34. Dissent is generally defended by various arguments, two of which are more basic in character. The first lies in the order of hermeneutics. The documents of the Magisterium, it is said, reflect nothing more than a debatable theology. The second takes theological pluralism sometimes to the point of a relativism that calls the integrity of the faith into question. Here the interventions of the Magisterium would have their origin in one theology among many theologies, while no particular theology, however, could presume to claim universal normative status. In opposition to and in competition with the authentic Magisterium, there thus arises a kind of "parallel magisterium" of theologians.¹... 4884

39. ... Polling public opinion to determine the proper thing to think or do, opposing the Magisterium by exerting the pressure of public opinion, making the excuse of a "consensus" among theologians, maintaining that the theologian is the prophetic spokesman of a 4885

*4884 ¹ The notion of a "parallel magisterium" of theologians in opposition to and in dispute with the Magisterium of the pastors is sometimes supported by reference to certain texts in which St. Thomas Aquinas makes a distinction between the "magisterium cathedrae pastoralis" [magisterium of the pastor's chair] and "magisterium cathedrae magisterialis" [magisterium of the teacher's chair] (Contra impugnantes, c. 2; Quodlib. III, q. 4, a. 1 [9]; In IV Sent. 19, 2, 2, q. 3, sol. 2 ad 4). Actually these texts do not give any support for this position, for St. Thomas was absolutely certain that the right to judge in matters of doctrine was due solely to the "officium praelationis" [office of the prelates].

iuris communitatis quae hac ratione unica habeatur fons veritatis: haec omnia grave denotant detrimentum sensus veritatis, atque similiter sensus Ecclesiae.

“base” or autonomous community that would be the source of all truth, all this indicates a grave loss of the sense of truth and of the sense of the Church.

4890–4896: Encyclical Redemptoris missio, December 7, 1990

Twenty-five years after the Decree on the Mission Activity of the Church of the Second Vatican Council (AAS 58 [1966]: 947–90) and twenty years after Evangelii nuntiandi (*4570–4579), the encyclical confirms the necessity of “missio ad gentes” because of the weakness of the Church’s presence, both qualitative and quantitative, in many nations.

Introductio

4890 2. ... Hoc documentum finem internum habet, qui est fidei et vitae christianae renovatio. Missio enim Ecclesiam renovat, firmat fidem et identitatem christianam, novum infundit animi ardorem novosque dat stimulos. Fides corroboratur eam donando! Nova populorum christianorum evangelizatio instinctum et munimentum inveniet in munere missionis universalis....

I. Iesus Christus unicus salvator

4891 [258] 10. Salutis universalitas non significat illam iis solis oblatam esse, qui expresse in Christum credunt et Ecclesiam ingressi sunt. Si omnibus destinatur, salutis facultas vere est omnibus suppeditanda. Sed liquet hodie, sicut praeterito tempore, multos homines facultatem non habere cognoscendi vel accipiendi Evangelii revelationem, in Ecclesiam ingrediendi. Hi vivunt enim in socialibus culturalibusque condicionibus, quae hoc non sinunt, et saepe sunt ad diversas religiones educati. His Christi salus patens est per gratiam quae, quamquam arcanam habet necessitudinem cum Ecclesia, in hanc tamen formali ratione eos non introducit, sed modo illuminat congruenti eorum interiori conditioni rerumque temporumque adiunctis....

4892 [259] 11. ... Omnes religiones omnesque sensus observantibus est nobis imprimis cum simplicitate affirmanda nostra fides in Christum, unum hominis salvatorem: quam fidem, uti donum desursum accepimus sine nostro merito. Nos cum Paulo dicimus: “Non erubesco evangelium: virtus enim Dei est in salutem omni credenti” [Rm 1:16]....

IV. Campi Missionis ad gentes immensi

4893 [278] 33. Actionis differentia in unica Ecclesiae missione non ex causis oritur ipsius missionis proprii, sed ex condicionibus in quibus illa explicatur.¹ Si mundus huius aetatis respectu evangelizationis consideratur, tres possunt condiciones distingui.

Introduction

2. ... The present document has as its goal an interior renewal of faith and Christian life. For missionary activity renews the Church, revitalizes faith and Christian identity, and offers fresh enthusiasm and new incentive. Faith is strengthened when it is given to others! It is in commitment to the Church’s universal mission that the new evangelization of Christian peoples will find inspiration and support....

I. Jesus Christ, the Only Savior

10. The universality of salvation means that it is granted not only to those who explicitly believe in Christ and have entered the Church. Since salvation is offered to all, it must be made concretely available to all. But it is clear that today, as in the past, many people do not have an opportunity to come to know or accept the gospel revelation or to enter the Church. The social and cultural conditions in which they live do not permit this, and frequently they have been brought up in other religious traditions. For such people salvation in Christ is accessible by virtue of a grace that, while having a mysterious relationship to the Church, does not make them formally part of the Church but enlightens them in a way that is accommodated to their spiritual and material situation....

11. ... While respecting the beliefs and sensitivities of all, we must first clearly affirm our faith in Christ, the one Savior of mankind, a faith we have received as a gift from on high, not as a result of any merit of our own. We say with Paul, “I am not ashamed of the gospel: it is the power of God for salvation to everyone who has faith” [Rom 1:16]....

IV. The Vast Horizons of the Mission Ad Gentes

33. The fact that there is a diversity of activities in the Church’s one mission is not intrinsic to that mission but arises from the variety of circumstances in which that mission is carried out.¹ Looking at today’s world from the viewpoint of evangelization, we can distinguish three situations.

*4893¹ Cf. Vatican Council II, Decree on the Mission Activity of the Church Ad gentes, no. 6 (AAS 58 [1966]: 952–55).

Ea, imprimis, ad quam intendit actio missionalis Ecclesiae: populorum, scilicet, humanorum coetuum, contextuum [279] socialium et culturalium, in quibus aut Christus et eius Evangelium noti non sunt, aut in quibus desunt communitates christianae maturae, quae possint, in rerum locorumque adiunctis, ubi sunt, fidem exprimere aliisque humanis coetibus eandem nuntiare. Haec est proprie missio ad gentes.²

Sunt deinde communitates christianae, quae aptis solidisque structuris ecclesiasticis instructae sunt, fide sunt et vita ferventes, Evangelii testimonium disseminant in suis locis et officium animadvertunt missionis universalis. In illis actio, vel cura pastoralis, explicatur Ecclesiae.

Est denique condicio interposita, praesertim in Nationibus antiquae christianitatis, sed etiam aliquando in Ecclesiis iunioribus, ubi integri baptizatorum coetus vivum sensum fidei amiserunt, aut prorsus se non iam membra agnoscunt Ecclesiae, vitam viventes a Christo remotam et ab eius Evangelio. In hoc casu "nova evangelizatio" vel "iterata evangelizatio" est necessaria....

V. Missionis viae

[299] 52. Suum persequens missionale opus inter gentes incidit Ecclesia in diversas culturas et ipsa vicissim includitur in talis inculturationis motum. Est ideo haec necessitas quaedam, quae totum eius historiae iter signavit, at hodie praesertim gravis est et urgens....

First, there is the situation that the Church's missionary activity addresses: peoples, groups, and sociocultural contexts in which Christ and his gospel are not known or that lack Christian communities sufficiently mature to be able to incarnate the faith in their own environment and proclaim it to other groups. This is mission ad gentes in the proper sense of the term.²

Secondly, there are Christian communities with adequate and solid ecclesial structures. They are fervent in their faith and in Christian living. They bear witness to the gospel in their surroundings and have a sense of commitment to the universal mission. In these communities the Church carries out her activity and pastoral care.

Thirdly, there is an intermediate situation, particularly in countries with ancient Christian roots, and occasionally in the younger Churches as well, where entire groups of the baptized have lost a living sense of the faith or even no longer consider themselves members of the Church and live a life far removed from Christ and his gospel. In this case, what is needed is a "new evangelization" or a "re-evangelization"....

V. Paths of Mission

52. As she carries out missionary activity among the nations, the Church encounters different cultures and becomes involved in the process of inculturation. The need for such involvement has marked the Church's pilgrimage throughout her history, but today it is particularly urgent.... 4894

Through inculturation the Church makes the gospel incarnate in different cultures and at the same time introduces peoples, together with their cultures, into her own community.¹ She transmits to them her own values, at the same time taking the good elements that already exist in them and renewing them from within.² Through inculturation the Church, for her part, becomes a more intelligible sign of what she is and a more effective instrument of mission....

55. Interreligious dialogue is a part of the Church's evangelizing mission. Understood as a method and means of mutual knowledge and enrichment, dialogue is not in opposition to the mission ad gentes; indeed, it has special links with that mission and is one of its expressions. This mission, in fact, is addressed to those who do not know Christ and his gospel and who belong for the most part to other religions. In Christ, God calls all peoples to himself, and he wishes to share with them the fullness of his revelation and love. He does not fail to make himself 4895

VII. Operae missionariae communicatio

Christiana nos spes sustentat penitus nos dedentes evangelizationi novae ac missioni universali facitque ut, quem ad modum docuit nos Iesus, precemur: “adveniat regnum tuum, fiat voluntas tua, sicut in caelo, et in terra” [Mt 6:10]....

4900–4914: Encyclical Centesimus annus, May 1, 1991

The encyclical on the one-hundredth anniversary of Rerum novarum (*3265–3271) recapitulates the basic statements of Leo XIII, outlines the path of social upheavals up to 1989, and discusses the social obligations of ownership as well as the relations of State, economy, and culture.

Caput IV: Possessio privata et universalis bonorum addictio

4900 32. ... Si olim proventuum causa potissima terra erat et postea pecuniae caput, acceptum tamquam acervus machinarum et bonorum ex instrumentis constantium, nunc causa praecipua usque magis ipse est homo, hoc est eius cognoscendi facultas quae apparet per cognitionem et disciplinas, facultas se ordinandi consociata voluntate, facultas necessitatem alterius intellegendi eandemque explendi.

present in many ways, not only to individuals, but also to entire peoples through their spiritual riches, of which their religions are the main and essential expression, even when they contain “gaps, insufficiencies, and errors”.¹ All of this has been given ample emphasis by the council and the subsequent Magisterium, without detracting in any way from the fact that salvation comes from Christ and that dialogue does not dispense from evangelization.²...

VII. Cooperation in Missionary Activity

86... 1. As the third millennium of the redemption draws near, God is preparing a great springtime for Christianity, and we can already see its first signs. In fact, both in the non-Christian world and in the traditionally Christian world, people are gradually drawing closer to gospel ideals and values, a development that the Church seeks to encourage. Today in fact there is a new consensus among peoples about these values: the rejection of violence and war; respect for the human person and for human rights; the desire for freedom, justice, and brotherhood; the surmounting of different forms of racism and nationalism; the affirmation of the dignity and role of women.

Christian hope sustains us in committing ourselves fully to the new evangelization and to the worldwide mission and leads us to pray as Jesus taught us: “Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven” [Mt 6:10]....

Chapter IV: Private Property and the Universal Destination of Material Goods

32. ... Whereas at one time the decisive factor of production was the land and, later, capital—understood as a total complex of the instruments of production—today the decisive factor is increasingly man himself, that is, his knowledge, especially his scientific knowledge, his capacity for interrelated and compact organization, as well as his ability to perceive the needs of others and to satisfy them.

35. ... [837] Ea [societas liberi operis, conductionis et participationis] scilicet mercatui non opponitur sed convenienter est Reipublicae auctoritatibus temperanda ut totius societatis expleat necessitates...

33. However, the risks and problems connected with this kind of process should be pointed out. The fact is that many people, perhaps the majority today, do not have the means that would enable them to take their place in an effective and humanly dignified way within a productive system in which work is truly central. They have no possibility of acquiring the basic knowledge that would enable them to express their creativity and develop their potential... Thus, if not actually exploited, they are to a great extent marginalized; economic development takes place over their heads, so to speak, when it does not actually reduce the already narrow scope of their old subsistence economies...

34. It would appear that, on the level of individual nations and of international relations, the free market is the most efficient instrument for utilizing resources and effectively responding to needs. But this is true only for those needs that are “solvent”, insofar as they are endowed with purchasing power, and for those resources that are “marketable”, insofar as they are capable of obtaining a satisfactory price. But there are many human needs that find no place on the market. It is a strict duty of justice and truth not to allow fundamental human needs to remain unsatisfied and not to allow those burdened by such needs to perish. It is also necessary to help these needy people to acquire expertise, to enter the circle of exchange, and to develop their skills in order to make the best use of their capacities and resources. Even prior to the logic of a fair exchange of goods and the forms of justice appropriate to it, there exists something that is due to man because he is man, by reason of his lofty dignity. Inseparable from that required “something” is the possibility to survive and, at the same time, to make an active contribution to the common good of humanity...

35. ... Such a [society of free enterprise] is not directed against the market, but it demands that the market be appropriately controlled by the forces of society and by the State, so as to guarantee that the basic needs of the whole of society are satisfied...

At present, the positive efforts that have been made along these lines are being affected by the still largely unsolved problem of the foreign debt of the poorer countries. The principle that debts must be paid is certainly just. However, it is not right to demand or expect payment when the effect would be the imposition of political choices leading to hunger and despair for entire peoples. It cannot be expected that the debts that have been contracted should be paid at the price of unbearable sacrifices. In such cases it is necessary to find—as in fact is partly happening—ways to lighten, defer, or even cancel the debt, compatible with the fundamental right of peoples to subsistence and progress.

4904 36. ... Postulatio ipsius vitae, natura sua acceptioris et ditioris, est per se legitima; tamen non possunt non in luce poni nova officia et pericula huic historico tempore cohaerentia. Modis, quibus novae necessitates oriuntur et definiuntur, semper subest notio plus minusve homini eiusque vero bono consentanea: ex delectibus bonorum efficiendorum et consumendorum certa se patefacit cultura, uti universalis vitae notio. Hinc oritur nimium rerum consumendarum studium. In deprehendis novis necessitatibus novisque viis satisfaciendi eis, oportet quemque sinere se integra hominis imagine dirigi, quae observet momenta eius uti hominis et materialia ac naturalia interioribus et spiritalibus subiciat. Si quis autem suos directos spectat appetitum et praetermittit naturam personae suae consciae et liberae, importari possunt mores consumptionis et [839] vitae consuetudines ipsae per se vitiosae aut eius corporis et animi sanitati nocentes. Institutum oeconomicum in se normas non habet quibus possit recte discernere modos novos et altiores satiandi necessitates humanas ab ipsis novis necessitatibus inventis, quae personae maturae formationi obstant. Malum non est melius vivere cupere sed mala est constitutio vitae, quae melior esse iudicatur, cum id spectat ut quis habeat non ut sit, et cum is plus habere vult non ut plus ipse sit sed ut vita absumatur supervacanea voluptate.¹ Curandum est idcirco ut vitae rationes constituentur, in quibus conquisitio veri pulchri boni et communio cum ceteris hominibus propter communem progressionem electiones efficiant consumptionum, compendiorum, pecuniae collocationum....

36. ... To call for an existence that is qualitatively more satisfying is of itself legitimate, but one cannot fail to draw attention to the new responsibilities and dangers connected with this phase of history. The manner in which new needs arise and are defined is always marked by a more or less appropriate concept of man and of his true good. A given culture reveals its overall understanding of life through the choices it makes in production and consumption. It is here that the phenomenon of consumerism arises. In singling out new needs and new means to meet them, one must be guided by a comprehensive picture of man that respects all the dimensions of his being and that subordinates his material and instinctive dimensions to his interior and spiritual ones. If, on the contrary, a direct appeal is made to his instincts—while ignoring in various ways the reality of the person as intelligent and free—then consumer attitudes and life-styles can be created that are objectively improper and often damaging to his physical and spiritual health. Of itself, an economic system does not possess criteria for correctly distinguishing new and higher forms of satisfying human needs from artificial new needs that hinder the formation of a mature personality. Thus a great deal of educational and cultural work is urgently needed, including the education of consumers in the responsible use of their power of choice, the formation of a strong sense of responsibility among producers and among people in the mass media in particular, as well as the necessary intervention by public authorities....

It is not wrong to want to live better; what is wrong is a style of life that is presumed to be better when it is directed toward "having" rather than "being" and that wants to have more, not in order to be more, but in order to spend life in enjoyment as an end in itself.¹ It is therefore necessary to create life-styles in which the quest for truth, beauty, goodness, and communion with others for the sake of common growth are the factors that determine consumer choices, savings, and investments....

37. Equally worrying is the ecological question that accompanies the problem of consumerism and that is closely connected to it. In his desire to have and to enjoy rather than to be and to grow, man consumes the resources of the earth and his own life in an excessive and disordered way. At the root of the senseless destruction of the natural environment lies an anthropological error, which unfortunately is widespread in our day. Man, who discovers his capacity to transform and in a certain sense create the world through his own work, forgets that this is always based on God's prior and original gift of the things that are. Man thinks that he can make arbitrary use of the earth, subjecting it without restraint to his will, as though it did not have its own requisites and a prior God-given purpose, which man can indeed develop but must not betray. Instead of carrying out his role as a cooperator with God in the work of creation, man sets himself up in place of God and thus ends up provoking a rebellion on the part of nature, which is more tyrannized than governed by him.¹...

Dum enim iuste profecto, etsi multo minus quam oportet, cogitatur de areis naturalibus diversorum generum animalium, quae ne extinguantur periculum est, quoniam intellegitur eorum unumquodque peculiariter conferre ad terrae generalem temperationem, parum curatur de “oecologiae humanae” condicionibus moralibus tutandis. ...

Sicut temporibus veteris capitalismi Respublica debebat iura laboris fundamentalia defendere, ita nunc novo in capitalismo et illa et universa societas bona communia defendere debent, quae ceteroquin saeptum sunt intra quod tantummodo potest quisque legitime sua ipsius consequi proposita.

Alius hic mercatus terminus invenitur: necessitates existunt communes et qualitativae, quae istius modis et institutis expleri nequeunt. Humana postulata existunt quae eius logicam consecutionem effugiunt. Bona existunt quae ex sua natura nec possunt nec debent venire et emi. Haud dubie, viae rationesque mercatus multa praebent auxilia; adiuvant praeter cetera, ad melius opibus utendum; mercium commutationem fovent, et imprimis maximi faciunt voluntates et proposita personae humanae, quae in pactione incidunt in voluntatem et proposita alterius personae; attamen pericula afferunt “idololatriae” mercatus, qui bona esse nescit quae suapte natura nec sint nec esse possint simplices merces.

38. In addition to the irrational destruction of the natural environment, we must also mention the more serious destruction of the human environment, something that is by no means receiving the attention it deserves. Although people are rightly worried—though much less than they should be—about preserving the natural habitats of the various animal species threatened with extinction, because they realize that each of these species makes its particular contribution to the balance of nature in general, too little effort is made to safeguard the moral conditions for an authentic “human ecology”....

40. ... Just as in the time of primitive capitalism the State had the duty of defending the basic rights of workers, so now, with the new capitalism, the State and all of society have the duty of defending those collective goods that, among others, constitute the essential framework for the legitimate pursuit of personal goals on the part of each individual.

Here we find a new limit on the market: there are collective and qualitative needs that cannot be satisfied by market mechanisms. There are important human needs that escape its logic. There are goods that by their very nature cannot and must not be bought or sold. Certainly the mechanisms of the market offer secure advantages: they help to utilize resources better; they promote the exchange of products; above all they give central place to the person’s desires and preferences, which, in a contract, meet the desires and preferences of another person. Nevertheless, these mechanisms carry the risk of an “idolatri” of the market, an idolatri that ignores the existence of goods that by their nature are not and cannot be mere commodities.

41. ... Exploitation, at least in the forms analyzed and described by Karl Marx, has been overcome in Western society. Alienation, however, has not been overcome as it exists in various forms of exploitation, when people use one another, and when they seek an ever more refined satisfaction of their individual and secondary needs, while ignoring the principal and authentic needs that ought to regulate the manner of satisfying the other satisfaciendi ceteris postulatis.¹ Homo qui solum curat ut potiatur rebus et fruatur, nec iam aptus ad cupiditates et impetus suos refrenandos atque per oboedientiam veritati subiciendos, liber esse non potest. Oboedientia veritati, etiam veritati quoad Deum et hominem, est prima libertatis condicio. Nam efficit ut proprii usus, appetitus et modi ad eos sedandos secundum iustum ordinem disponantur ita sane ut rerum possessio ratio fiat qua homo crescat. . . .

Initialem quaestionem nunc repentibus licetne nobis affirmare, collapsa communismo, capitalismum esse rationem socialem vincentem et ad illam spectare debere Nationum conatus quae operam dant suis oeconomiiis reficiendis suisque societatibus? Estne hoc exemplar Nationibus Tertii Mundi proponendum quae verae progressionis oeconomicae et civilis quaerunt viam?

Responso sane implicata est. Si, “capitalismus” existimatur ratio oeconomica, quae pondus praecipuum et positivum agnoscit administrationis, mercatus, possessionis privatae et hinc consequentis responsalis officii de instrumentis confectionis, liberae hominis facultatis moliendi in oeconomiae regione, responso est certe adfirmans, etsi forte magis proprium est loqui de “oeconomia administrationis”, vel “oeconomia mer[546]catus”, vel simpliciter “oeconomia libera”. At si “capitalismus” existimatur ratio, ubi libertas in provincia oeconomiae, non in solidum contextum politicum tamquam in formam stabilem includitur, qui eam immittat ad ministerium integrae libertatis humanae eamque putet peculiarem mensuram libertatis cuius cardo ethicus est et religiosus, tum responso tantumdem negans est. . . .

Ipsa ideo, ut conclusi praepositorum circuli constituantur, adiuvere non potest, qui emolumentorum privatorum gratia vel ex doctrinae principiis Civitatis regimen arripiunt.

Sincerum quidem populare regimen tantummodo in Civitate iuris exstare valet idemque in recta personae humanae notione consistit. Etenim haec poscit ut ones, too.¹ A person who is concerned solely or primarily with possessing and enjoying, who is no longer able to control his instincts and passions, or to subordinate them by obedience to the truth, cannot be free: obedience to the truth about God and man is the first condition of freedom, making it possible for a person to order his needs and desires and to choose the means of satisfying them according to a correct scale of values, so that the ownership of things may become an occasion of growth for him. . . .

42. Returning now to the initial question: Can it perhaps be said that, after the failure of Communism, capitalism is the victorious social system and that capitalism should be the goal of the countries now making efforts to rebuild their economy and society? Is this the model that ought to be proposed to the countries of the Third World that are searching for the path to true economic and civil progress?

The answer is obviously complex. If by “capitalism” is meant an economic system that recognizes the fundamental and positive role of business, the market, private property, and the resulting responsibility for the means of production, as well as free human creativity in the economic sector, then the answer is certainly in the affirmative, even though it would perhaps be more appropriate to speak of a “business economy”, “market economy”, or simply “free economy”. But if by “capitalism” is meant a system in which freedom in the economic sector is not circumscribed within a strong juridical framework that places it at the service of human freedom in its totality and that sees it as a particular aspect of that freedom, the core of which is ethical and religious, then the reply is certainly negative. . . .

Chapter V: State and Culture

46. The Church values the democratic system inasmuch as it ensures the participation of citizens in making political choices and guarantees to the governed the possibility both of electing and holding accountable those who govern them and of replacing them through peaceful means when appropriate.¹

Thus she cannot encourage the formation of narrow ruling groups that usurp the power of the State for individual interests or for ideological principles.

Authentic democracy is possible only in a State ruled by law and on the basis of a correct conception of the human person. It requires that the necessary conditions condiciones impleantur sive necessariae ad singulas personas provehendas, optimis traditis inculcatisque praeceptis, sive societatis subiectivitati necessariae, inducta participationis structura communisque officii. Hodiernis profecto temporibus arbitrantur homines agnosticis itemque relativismum scepticum philosophiam agnoscere ac primum habitum, quae in genere Reipublicae populari inveniantur, atque eos quotquot sibi sint conscii se veritatem novisse eidemque firmiter adhaereant, non esse fidos quoad populare regimen, cum minime probent veritatem a maiore civium parte statui vel pro politica vicissitudinis varietate flecti. Nunc vero illud est animadvertendum, nulla si sit postrema veritas quae eisdem politicam actionem dirigat et moderetur, ideo notiones et persuasiones ad imperium adipiscendum veluti instrumenta commode usurpari posse. Populare tandem regimen principiis carens in totalitarismum manifestum occultumve prompte vertitur, ut hominum annales commonstrant.

Haudquaquam Ecclesia fanaticismi vel fundamentalismi praetermittit periculum eorum qui sub doctrinae cuiusdam titulo, quae scientificam se audet praebere religiosamve, iniungere reliquis se posse existimant suam de veritate notionem et de bono. Ad hoc revera genus christiana veritas non pertinet. Cum non sit ipsa ideologica, christiana fides certis cancellis versicolorem naturam socialium et politicarum rerum circumscribi non postulat, quae simul fatetur nempe hominis vitam [851] per aetates effici in multiplicibus condicionibus nec semper iis perfectis. Ecclesia igitur, quandoquidem transcendentem hominis dignitatem agnoscit, libertatis observantiam tenet suam videlicet ut rationem et viam.²

At suscepta tantummodo veritate plene et perfecte aestimatur libertas: sine veritate in terrarum orbe nihil sane habet ponderis libertas ac homo libidinum incursioni obicitur et condicionibus adstringitur apertis abditisque. Christianus autem libertatem vivit [cf. Io 8:31s] eidemque inservit, secundum suae vocationis naturam missionariam dum veritatem quam cognovit usque prae se fert. Omni autem veritatis spectata particula quae in cuiusque vitae experientia occurrit et singulorum Nationumque in cultura, ipse cum aliis hominibus colloquens testari non desistit id quod de humana persona docuit fides rectusque rationis usus.³

be present for the advancement both of the individual through education and formation in true ideals and of the “subjectivity” of society through the creation of structures of participation and shared responsibility. Nowadays there is a tendency to claim that agnosticism and skeptical relativism are the philosophy and the basic attitude that correspond to democratic forms of political life. Those who are convinced that they know the truth and firmly adhere to it are considered unreliable from a democratic point of view, since they do not accept that truth is determined by the majority or that it is subject to variation according to different political trends. It must be observed in this regard that if there is no ultimate truth to guide and direct political activity, then ideas and convictions can easily be manipulated for reasons of power. As history demonstrates, a democracy without values easily turns into open or thinly disguised totalitarianism.

Nor does the Church close her eyes to the danger of fanaticism or fundamentalism among those who, in the name of an ideology that purports to be scientific or religious, claim the right to impose on others their own concept of what is true and good. Christian truth is not of this kind. Since it is not an ideology, the Christian faith does not presume to imprison changing sociopolitical realities in a rigid schema, and it recognizes that human life is realized in history in conditions that are diverse and imperfect. Furthermore, in constantly reaffirming the transcendent dignity of the person, the Church’s method is always that of respect for freedom.²

But freedom attains its full development only by accepting the truth. In a world without truth, freedom loses its foundation and man is exposed to the violence of passion and to manipulation, both open and hidden. The Christian upholds freedom and serves it, constantly offering to others the truth that he has known [cf. Jn 8:31–32], in accordance with the missionary nature of his vocation. While paying heed to every fragment of truth he encounters in the life experience and in the culture of individuals and of nations, he will not fail to affirm in dialogue with others all that his faith and the correct use of reason have enabled him to understand.³

47. Following the collapse of Communist totalitarianism and of many other totalitarian and “national security” regimes, today we are witnessing a pre-dominance, not without signs of opposition, of the democratic ideal, together with lively attention to and concern for human rights. But for this very reason it is necessary for peoples in the process of reforming their systems to give democracy an authentic and solid foundation through the explicit recognition of those rights.¹ Among the most important of these rights, mention must be made of the right to life, an integral part of which is the right of the child to develop in the mother’s womb from the moment of conception; the right to live in a united family and in an environment conducive to the growth of one’s personality; the right to develop one’s intelligence and freedom in seeking and knowing the truth; the right to share in the work that makes wise use of the earth’s material resources and to derive from that work the means to support oneself and one’s dependents; and the right freely to establish a family, to have and to rear children through the responsible exercise of one’s sexuality. In a certain sense, the source and synthesis of these rights is religious freedom, understood as the right to live in the truth of one’s faith and in conformity with one’s transcendent dignity as a person.²

48. ... In recent years the range of such intervention has vastly expanded, to the point of creating a new type of State, the so-called “Welfare State”. This has happened in some countries in order to respond better to many needs and demands, by remedying forms of poverty and deprivation unworthy of the human person. However, excesses and abuses, especially in recent years, have provoked very harsh criticisms of the Welfare State, dubbed the “Social Assistance State”. Malfunctions and defects in the Social Assistance State are the result of an inadequate understanding of the tasks proper to the State. Here again the principle of subsidiarity must be respected: a community of a higher order should not interfere in the internal life of a community of a lower order, depriving the latter of its functions, but rather should support it in case of need and help to coordinate its activity with the activities of the rest of society, always with a view to the common good.¹...

49. ... In order to overcome today’s widespread individualistic mentality, what is required is a concrete commitment to solidarity and charity, beginning in the family with the mutual support of husband and wife and the care that the different generations give to one another.... It is urgent therefore to promote not only family policies, but also those social policies that have the family as their principal object, policies that assist the family by providing adequate resources and efficient means of support, both for bringing up children and for looking after the elderly, so as to avoid distancing the latter from the family unit and in order to strengthen relations between generations.¹

Apart from the family, other intermediate communities exercise primary functions and give life to specific networks of solidarity. These develop as real communities of persons and strengthen the social fabric, preventing society from becoming an anonymous and impersonal mass, as unfortunately often happens today. It is in interrelationships on many levels that a person lives and that society becomes more “personalized”. The individual today is often suffocated between two poles represented by the State and the marketplace. At times it seems as though he exists only as a producer and consumer of goods or as an object of State administration. People lose sight of the fact that life in society has neither the market nor the State as its final purpose, since life itself has a unique value that the State and the market must serve. Man remains above all a being who seeks the truth and strives to live in that truth, deepening his understanding of it through a dialogue that involves past and future generations.²

52. ... I myself, on the occasion of the recent tragic war in the Persian Gulf, repeated the cry: “Never again war!” No, never again war, which destroys the lives of innocent people, teaches how to kill, throws into upheaval even the lives of those who do the killing and leaves behind a trail of resentment and hatred, thus making it all the more difficult to find a just solution of the very problems that provoked the war. Just as the time has finally come when in individual States a system of private vendetta and reprisal has given way to the rule of law, so too a similar step forward is now urgently needed in the international community. Furthermore, it must not be forgotten that at the root of war there are usually real and serious grievances: injustices suffered, legitimate aspirations frustrated, poverty, and the exploitation of multitudes of desperate people who see no real possibility of improving their lot by peaceful means.

For this reason, another name for peace is development.¹

I. The Church, A Mystery of Communion

3. ... If the concept of communion, which is not a univocal concept, is to serve as a key to ecclesiology, it has to be understood within the teaching of the Bible and the patristic tradition, in which communion always involves a double dimension: the vertical (communion with God) and the horizontal (communion among men). It is essential to the Christian understanding of communion that it be recognized above all as a gift from God, as a fruit of God's initiative accomplished in the paschal mystery. The new relationship between man and God that has been established in Christ and is communicated through the sacraments also extends to a new relationship among human beings....

II. Universal Church and Particular Churches

8. The universal Church is therefore the Body of the Churches.¹ Hence it is possible to apply the concept of communion in analogous fashion to the union existing among particular Churches and to see the universal Church as a communion of Churches. Sometimes, however, the idea of a “communion of particular Churches” is presented in such a way as to weaken the concept of the unity of the Church at the visible and institutional level. Thus it is asserted that every particular Church is a subject complete in itself and that the universal Church is the result of a reciprocal recognition on the part of the particular Churches. This ecclesiological unilateralism, which impoverishes not only the concept of the universal Church but also that of the particular Church, betrays an insufficient understanding of the concept of communion....

9. ... For this reason, “the universal Church cannot be conceived as the sum of the particular Churches or as a federation of particular Churches.”¹ She is not the result of the communion of the Churches, but, in her essential mystery, she is a reality ontologically and temporally prior to every individual particular Church.

Indeed, according to the Fathers, ontologically, the Church-mystery, the Church that is one and unique, precedes creation² and gives birth to the particular Autumant ergo quidam totum Ecclesiae mysterium praesens fieri ubi Eucharistia celebratur, tali quidem modo, ut quodlibet aliud unitatis universalitatisque principium reddatur non essenziale. Aliae autem opiniones, diversis influxibus theologice obnoxiae, tendunt ad supradictam visionem particularem Ecclesiae modo adhuc magis radicali proponendam, adeo ut sustineant congregari in nomine Iesu [cf. Mt 18:20] idem esse ac generare Ecclesiam. . . Profecto ex unitate atque indivisibilitate Corporis eucharistici Domini necessario sequitur unitas ipsius Corporis mystici, quod est Ecclesia una et indivisibilis....

From this Church, which in her origins and her first manifestation is universal, have arisen the different local Churches, as particular expressions of the one unique Church of Jesus Christ. Arising within and out of the universal Church, they have their ecclesiality in her and from her. Hence the formula of the Second Vatican Council: The Church in and formed out of the Churches³ is inseparable from this other formula: The Churches in and formed out of the Church.⁴...

III. Communion of the Churches, Eucharist, and Episcopate

11. ... The rediscovery of a eucharistic ecclesiology, 4923 though being of undoubted value, has however sometimes placed unilateral emphasis on the principle of the local Church. It is claimed that, where the Eucharist is celebrated, the totality of the mystery of the Church would be made present in such a way as to render any other principle of unity or universality nonessential. Other conceptions, under different theological influences, present this particular view of the Church in an even more radical form, going as far as to hold that gathering together in the name of Jesus [cf. Mt 18:20] is the same as generating the Church.... Indeed, the unicity and indivisibility of the eucharistic Body of the Lord implies the unicity of his Mystical Body, which is the one and indivisible Church....

13. The bishop is a visible source and foundation 4924 of the unity of the particular Church entrusted to his pastoral ministry.¹ But for each particular Church to be fully Church, that is, the particular presence of the universal Church with all her essential elements, and hence constituted after the model of the universal Church, there must be present in her, as a proper element, the supreme authority of the Church: the episcopal college “together with their head, the supreme pontiff, and never apart from him”.² The primacy of the bishop of Rome and the episcopal college are proper elements of the universal Church that are “not derived from the particularity of the Churches”³ but are nevertheless

The document is concerned with Jesus Christ, the “good news” of the Father, who, in and through the Church, continues his mission (part 1), the promotion of man as a dimension of evangelization and Christian culture (part 2), and the development of pastoral guidelines (part 3). Special emphasis is given in the second part to the significance of human rights, ecological challenges, the problem of poverty, and the basic questions of social order; in the same way, the multiplicity and rights of the indigenous, African American, and Mestizo cultures are discussed.

VIVIENTE EN SU IGLESIA

PART TWO: JESUS CHRIST, THE LIVING EVANGELIZER WITHIN HIS CHURCH

I. La nueva evangelización

I. The New Evangelization

4930 26. La Nueva Evangelización tiene como finalidad formar hombres y comunidades maduras en la fe y dar respuesta a la nueva situación que vivimos, provocada por los cambios sociales y culturales de la modernidad. Ha de tener en cuenta la urbanización, la pobreza y la marginación. Nuestra situación esta marcada por el materialismo, la cultura de la muerte, la invasión de las sectas y propuestas religiosas de distintos orígenes. ...

26. The aim of the new evangelization is to form people and communities whose faith is mature and to respond to the new situation we are facing as a result of the social and cultural changes of modernity. It must take into account urbanization, poverty, and marginalization. Our situation bears the marks of materialism, the culture of death, the invasion of the sects and religious proposals from a variety of sources. ...

30. ... The new evangelization must be more inculcated into the ways of being and living of our cultures, while keeping in mind the particular features of different cultures, especially indigenous and African American cultures. (It is crucial that we learn to speak in tune with the mentality and culture of our hearers and in accord with their forms of communication and contemporary means of expression.) The new evangelization will thus follow the thrust of the Incarnation of the Word. New evangelization demands that the Church undergo a pastoral conversion. Such a conversion must be in keeping with the council. It affects everything and everybody: in personal and community awareness and practice and in relationships of equality and of authority. It does so with structures and dynamisms that can make the Church ever more clearly present as an effective sign and as sacrament of universal salvation.

II. La promoción humana

II. Human Advancement

4932 [563] 178. Evangelizar es hacer lo que hizo Jesucristo, cuando en la sinagoga mostró que vino a “evangelizar” a los pobres [cf. Lc 4:18–19], Él “siendo rico se hizo pobre para enriquecernos con su pobreza” [2 Cor 8:9]. Él nos desafía a dar un testimonio auténtico de pobreza

178. Evangelizing means doing what Jesus Christ did in the synagogue when he stated that he had come to “bring glad tidings” to the poor [cf. Lk 4:18f.]. He “became poor although he was rich, so that by his poverty you might become rich” [2 Cor 8:9]. He challenges us to evangélica en nuestro estilo de vida y en nuestras estructuras eclesiales, tal cual como Él lo dio.

Esta es la fundamentación que nos compromete en una opción evangélica y preferencial por los pobres, firme e irrevocable pero no exclusiva ni excluyente....

III. La cultura cristiana

[579] 229. ... Esta evangelización de la cultura, que la invade hasta su núcleo dinámico, se manifiesta en el proceso de inculturación, al que Juan Pablo II ha llamado “centro, medio y objetivo de la Nueva Evangelización”:¹ Los auténticos valores culturales, discernidos y asumidos por la fe, son necesarios para encarnar en esa misma cultura el mensaje evangélico y la reflexión y praxis de la Iglesia....

230. ... Es necesario inculturar el Evangelio a la luz de los tres grandes misterios de la salvación: la Navidad, que muestra el camino de la Encarnación y mueve al evangelizador a compartir su vida con el evangelizado; la Pascua, que conduce a través del sufrimiento a la purificación de los pecados, para que sean redimidos; y Pentecostés, que por la fuerza del Espíritu posibilita a todos entender en su propia lengua las maravillas de Dios.

244. América Latina y el Caribe configuran un continente multiétnico y pluricultural. En él conviven en general pueblos aborígenes, afroamericanos, mestizos y descendientes de europeos y asiáticos, cada cual con su give an authentic witness of gospel poverty in the way we live and in our church structures, just as he gave it.

Such is the basis for our commitment to a gospel-based and preferential option for the poor, one that is firm and irrevocable but not exclusive or excluding....

III. Christian Culture

229. ... This evangelization of culture, which reaches into its dynamic core, is expressed in the inculturation process, which John Paul II has called the “center, means, and aim of the new evangelization”.¹ Authentic Christian values, discerned and assumed in faith, are necessary in order to incarnate the gospel message and the Church’s reflection and practice into that culture.... 4933

230. ... The gospel must be inculturated in the light of the three great mysteries of salvation: Christmas, which demonstrates the path of the Incarnation and prompts evangelizers to share their lives with the evangelized; Easter, which leads through suffering to the purification of sins, so that they may be redeemed; and Pentecost, which by the power of the Spirit enables all to understand the wonders of God in their own language. 4934

The inculturation of the gospel is a process that entails recognizing those gospel values that have been maintained more or less pure in present-day culture and recognizing those new values that are congruent with the message of Christ. The aim of inculturation is to bring society to discover the Christian nature of those values, to esteem them, and to maintain them as values. It also seeks to incorporate gospel values that are not present in the culture, either because they have been obscured or have even disappeared....

243. ... One goal of inculturated evangelization will always be the salvation and integral liberation of a particular people or human group, strengthening its identity and trusting in its specific future. At the same time, it will stand opposed to the powers of death by taking on the perspective of Jesus Christ incarnate, who out of weakness, poverty, and the redeeming Cross saved mankind. The Church defends the genuine human values of all peoples, especially of those who are oppressed, defenseless, and excluded, as they confront the overwhelming power of the structures of sin manifested in modern society. 4935

244. Latin America and the Caribbean constitute a multiethnic and multicultural continent on which indigenous, African American, and mestizo peoples and those descending from Europeans and Asians live 4936

propia cultura que los sitúa en su respectiva identidad social, de acuerdo con la cosmovisión de cada pueblo, pero buscan su unidad desde la identidad católica.

4937 [584] 245. ... La Iglesia, al encontrarse con estos pueblos nativos, trató desde el principio de acompañarlos en la lucha por su propia sobrevivencia, enseñándoles el camino de Cristo Salvador, desde la injusta situación de pueblos vencidos, invadidos y tratados como esclavos. En la primera evangelización, junto a enormes sufrimientos, hubo grandes aciertos e intuiciones pastorales valiosas, cuyos frutos perduran hasta nuestros días.

4938 246. Las culturas afroamericanas, presentes en América Latina y el Caribe, están marcadas por una constante resistencia a la esclavitud. Estos pueblos, que suman millones de personas, tienen también en sus culturas valores humanos que expresan la presencia del Dios creador.

Durante los cuatro siglos, es cierto que varios millones de africanos negros fueron transportados como esclavos, violentamente arrancados de sus tierras, separados de sus familias y vendidos como mercancías. La esclavitud de los negros y las matanzas de los indios fueron el mayor pecado de la expansión colonial de occidente. Por desgracia, en lo que se refiere a la esclavitud, el racismo y la discriminación, hubo bautizados que no fueron ajenos a esta situación....

Líneas pastorales: Evangelización inculturada

4939 248. ... Ofrecer el evangelio de Jesús con el testimonio de una actitud humilde, comprensiva y profética, valorando su palabra a través de un diálogo respetuoso, franco y fraterno y esforzarnos por conocer sus propias lenguas.

[585] Crecer en el conocimiento crítico de sus culturas para apreciarlas a la luz del Evangelio.

Promover una inculturación de la liturgia, acogiendo con aprecio sus símbolos, ritos y expresiones religiosas compatibles con el claro sentido de la fe, manteniendo el valor de los símbolos universales y en armonía con la disciplina general de la Iglesia.

Acompañar su reflexión teológica, respetando sus formulaciones culturales que les ayudan a dar razón de su fe y esperanza.

Crecer en el conocimiento de su cosmovisión, que hace de la globalidad Dios, hombre y mundo, una unidad que impregna todas las relaciones humanas, espirituales y trascendentes.

Promover en los pueblos indígenas sus valores culturales autóctonos mediante una inculturación de la Iglesia para lograr una mayor realización del Reino.

together. Each has its own culture, which provides it with its own social identity in accord with each people's world vision, but they seek unity on the basis of their Catholic identity.

245. ... From her first encounters with these native peoples, the Church sought to accompany them as they struggled for survival out of the unjust situation of people who had been defeated, invaded, and treated as slaves, and she taught them the way of Christ the Savior. Along with enormous suffering, the first evangelization brought major accomplishments and attained valuable pastoral insights. Their fruit has lasted to the present.

246. African American cultures in Latin America and the Caribbean are marked by a continual resistance to slavery. These peoples, who number in the millions, also have in their cultures human values that express the presence of God the Creator.

It is true that during the first four centuries several million Africans were brought as slaves. They were violently torn away from their lands, separated from their families, and sold as items of merchandise. The enslaving of blacks and killing of Indians were the worst sin of the West's colonial expansion. Unfortunately, some baptized people were involved in slavery, racism, and discrimination....

Pastoral Directions: Inculturated Evangelization

248. ... Offer the gospel of Jesus with the witness of a humble, understanding, and prophetic attitude, esteeming what they have to say through a respectful, frank, and fraternal dialogue; strive to learn their languages.

Acquire greater critical knowledge of their cultures in order to appreciate them in the light of the gospel.

Foster an inculturation of the liturgy by appreciating and drawing on those symbols, rituals, and religious expressions of theirs that are compatible with the clear meaning of the faith, while maintaining the value of the universal symbols, and in harmony with the Church's general discipline.

Accompany their theological reflection by respecting their cultural formulations, which help them to provide a reason for their faith and hope.

Acquire greater knowledge of their world vision, which makes the complex of God-human-world a unity that pervades all human, spiritual, and transcendent relationships.

Promote within the indigenous peoples their own native cultural values by means of an inculturation of the Church so as to embody God's reign more fully.

249. Conscientes del problema de marginación y racismo que pesa sobre la población negra, la Iglesia, en su misión evangelizadora, quiere participar de sus sufrimientos y acompañarlos en sus legítimas aspiraciones en busca de una vida más justa y digna para todos.¹

Por lo mismo, la Iglesia en América Latina y el Caribe quiere apoyar a los pueblos afroamericanos en la defensa de su identidad y en el reconocimiento de sus propios valores; como también ayudarlos a mantener vivos sus usos y costumbres compatibles con la doctrina cristiana.²

Del mismo modo nos comprometemos a dedicar especial atención a la causa de las comunidades afroamericanas en el campo pastoral, favoreciendo la manifestación de las expresiones religiosas propias de sus culturas.³

250. Desarrollar la conciencia del mestizaje, no sólo racial sino cultural, que caracteriza a grandes mayorías en muchos de nuestros pueblos, pues está vinculado con la inculturación del Evangelio.

251. Para una auténtica promoción humana, la Iglesia quiere apoyar los esfuerzos que hacen estos pueblos para ser reconocidos como tales por las leyes nacionales e internacionales, con pleno derecho a la tierra, a sus propias [586] organizaciones y vivencias culturales, a fin de garantizar el derecho que tienen de vivir de acuerdo con su identidad, con su propia lengua y sus costumbres ancestrales, y de relacionarse con plena igualdad con todos los pueblos de la tierra. . . .

4950–4971: Encyclical Veritatis splendor, August 6, 1993

This encyclical, first announced in 1987, deals with the positions of unnamed theologians on basic questions of moral theology that have resulted in “a crisis” (no. 5). After a biblical foundation, freedom and law, conscience and truth, the fundamental option and concrete behavior, and the nature of moral acts are treated.

Ed.: AAS 85 (1993): 1159–1223.

CAPUT II

“NOLITE CONFORMARI HUIC SAECULO” [Rm 12:2]

32. A quibusdam . . . scholis recentioribus tantum extollitur libertas ut habeatur aliquid absoluti, bonorum fons et origo. Semitas has ingrediuntur doctrinae quae transcendentiae amittunt significationem vel quae Deum prorsus denegant.

Conscientiis singulorum facultates tribuuntur quae proprie pertinent ad ultimam iudicii moralis sententiam, quae definit et sine errore statuit de bono et malo. Pro

249. Conscious of the problem of exclusion and racism weighing down on the black population, the Church in her evangelizing mission wishes to share in their sufferings and to accompany them in their legitimate aspirations for a more just and decent life for all.¹

Hence, the Church in Latin America and the Caribbean wants to support African American peoples in defending their identity and in acknowledging their own values and to help them to keep alive those practices and customs of theirs that are compatible with Christian teaching.²

We likewise commit ourselves to devote special attention to the cause of African American communities in the pastoral field by encouraging the manifestation of the religious expressions proper to their cultures.³

250. Develop that mestizo consciousness, not only of racial amalgamation [mestizaje] but also of cultural amalgamation, which is typical of the majority of the people in many of our countries, for it is connected to the inculturation of the gospel.

251. In the interest of genuine human development, the Church wants to support the efforts that these people are making to bring national and international law to recognize them as peoples with full rights to land and to their own organizations and ways of life, in order to safeguard their right to live in accordance with their identity, speaking their own language and observing their ancestral customs, and to establish relations with full equality with all the peoples of the earth.

CHAPTER II

“DO NOT BE CONFORMED TO THIS WORLD” [Rom 12:2]

32. Certain currents of modern thought have gone so far as to exalt freedom to such an extent that it becomes an absolute, which would then be the source of values. This is the direction taken by doctrines that have lost the sense of the transcendent or that are explicitly atheist.

The individual conscience is accorded the status of a supreme tribunal of moral judgment that hands down categorical and infallible decisions about good and evil.

*4940 ¹ Cf. general audience, Wednesday, October 21, 1992, 3.

principio quod postulat suam quemque sequi debere conscientiam, illud iniuria ponitur principium quod declarat iudicium morale esse verum ex eo quod ex propria conscientia oritur. Sed hoc modo veritatis necessarium postulatum resolvitur ceditque iudicio sinceritatis, authenticitatis, “concordantiae secum”, adeo ut perventum sit ad moralis iudicii opinionem positam omnino in privato iudicio. . . .

I. Libertas et lex

To the affirmation that one has a duty to follow one’s conscience is unduly added the affirmation that one’s moral judgment is true merely by the fact that it has its origin in the conscience. But in this way the inescapable claims of truth disappear, yielding their place to a criterion of sincerity, authenticity, and “being at peace with oneself”, so much so that some have come to adopt a radically subjectivistic conception of moral judgment. . . .

I. Freedom and Law

35. . . . In contrast, however, some present-day cultural tendencies have given rise to several currents of thought in ethics that center upon an alleged conflict between freedom and law. These doctrines would grant to individuals or social groups the right to determine what is good or evil. Human freedom would thus be able to “create values” and would enjoy a primacy over truth, to the point that truth itself would be considered a creation of freedom. Freedom would thus lay claim to a moral autonomy that would actually amount to an absolute sovereignty. . . .

37. In their desire, however, to keep the moral life in a Christian context, certain moral theologians have introduced a sharp distinction, contrary to Catholic doctrine,¹ between an ethical order, which would be human in origin and of value for this world alone, and an order of salvation, for which only certain intentions and interior attitudes regarding God and neighbor would be significant. . . .

40. . . . The moral law has its origin in God and always finds its source in him: at the same time, by virtue of natural reason, which derives from divine wisdom, it is a properly human law. . . . Nevertheless, the autonomy of reason cannot mean that reason itself creates values and moral norms.¹ Were this autonomy to imply a denial of the participation of the practical reason in the wisdom of the divine Creator and Lawgiver, or were it to suggest a freedom that creates moral norms on the basis of historical contingencies or the diversity of societies and cultures, this sort of alleged autonomy would contradict the Church’s teaching on the truth about man.² . . .

48. . . . The person, including the body, is completely entrusted to himself, and it is in the unity of body and soul that the person is the subject of his own moral acts. The person, by the light of reason and the support of virtue, discovers in the body the anticipatory signs, the expression, and the promise of the gift of self, in Creatoris propositum. Dignitate personae humanae prae oculis habita—per se ipsa confirmanda—ratio bonum morale nonnullorum beneficiorum peculiare percipit, in quod persona naturaliter tendit. . . .

49. Doctrina quae moralem actum a corporeis condicionibus disiungit Sacrae Scripturae praeceptis repugnat et Traditioni: eiusmodi doctrina, immutata specie, veteres errores instaurat, quos Ecclesia semper respuit, quia personam humanam redigunt ad quamdam libertatem “spiritalem” mere formalem. . . .

[1174] 50. . . . Corporalitatibus respuens adulterationes quae eius humanam significationem demutant, Ecclesia homini inservit eidemque veri amoris viam demonstrat, in qua solummodo is verum Deum invenire potest.

Naturae lex sic intellecta se opponit divisioni inter libertatem et naturam: etenim illae apte iunguntur inter se penitusque sociantur.

51. . . . Sed cum personae humanae exprimat dignitatem ipsiusque fundamentum ponat iurium officiorumque praecipuorum, naturalis lex est universalis suis in praescriptis eiusque auctoritas omnes homines complectitur. Haec universalitas hominum singularitatem non praetermittit, neque singularitatem et non iterabili naturae cuiusque personae officit: contra, ipsius quosque actus radicatus complectitur, qui veri boni testantur universalitatem. . . .

53. Celsus hominis aetatis nostrae sensus de historia et de humano cultu, nonnullos inducit ut de ipsius legis naturalis immutabilitate ambigant, ideoque “de moralitatis regulis obiectivis”,¹ quae afficiant omnes homines qui nunc sunt quique sunt futuri, perinde ac eos qui fuerunt. . . .

conformity with the wise plan of the Creator. It is in the light of the dignity of the human person—a dignity that must be affirmed for its own sake—that reason grasps the specific moral value of certain goods toward which the person is naturally inclined. . . .

49. A doctrine that dissociates the moral act from the bodily dimensions of its exercise is contrary to the teaching of Scripture and tradition. Such a doctrine revives, in new forms, certain ancient errors that have always been opposed by the Church, inasmuch as they reduce the human person to a “spiritual” and purely formal freedom. . . . 4955

50. . . . By rejecting all manipulations of corporeity that alter its human meaning, the Church serves man and shows him the path of true love, the only path on which he can find the true God. 4956

The natural law thus understood does not allow for any division between freedom and nature. Indeed, these two realities are harmoniously bound together, and each is intimately linked to the other.

51. . . . But inasmuch as the natural law expresses the dignity of the human person and lays the foundation for his fundamental rights and duties, it is universal in its precepts and its authority extends to all mankind. This universality does not ignore the individuality of human beings, nor is it opposed to the absolute uniqueness of each person. On the contrary, it embraces at its root each of the person’s free acts, which are meant to bear witness to the universality of the true good. . . . 4957

52. . . . The negative precepts of the natural law are universally valid. They oblige each and every individual, always and in every circumstance. It is a matter of prohibitions that forbid a given action semper et pro semper, without exception, because the choice of this kind of behavior is in no case compatible with the goodness of the will of the acting person, with his vocation to life with God and to communion with his neighbor. . . . 4958

The Church has always taught that one may never choose kinds of behavior prohibited by the moral commandments expressed in negative form in the Old and New Testaments. As we have seen, Jesus himself reaffirms that these prohibitions allow no exceptions: “If you wish to enter into life, keep the commandments. . . . You shall not murder, You shall not commit adultery, You shall not steal, You shall not bear false witness” [Mt 19:17–18]. 4959

53. The great concern of our contemporaries for historicity and for culture has led some to call into question the immutability of the natural law itself and, thus, the existence of “objective norms of morality”¹ valid for all people of the present and the future, as for those of the past. . . . 4960

II. Conscientia et veritas

4963 [1184] 64. ... Ideo Ecclesiae auctoritas, quae suam de quaestionibus moralibus sententiam dicit, nihil de Christifidelium conscientiae libertate detrahit: tum quia conscientiae libertas numquam est resolutio “a” veritate, sed semper ac solum est “in” veritate; tum etiam quia Magisterium non affert christianae conscientiae veritates ipsi extraneas, sed veritates patefacit, quas iam possidere debet, eas ab actu fidei primigenio excolendo....

III. Delectio fundamentalis ac definitae sese gerendi rationes

4964 [1185] 65. ... Ita inter optionem fundamentalem et consultas delectiones cuiusdam definitae actionis distinctio introducitur quae apud nonnullos auctores formam dissociationis accipit cum expresse “bonum” et “malum” morale assignant rationi transcendentali optionis fundamentalis propriae, eas delectiones, quae ad particulares se gerendi rationes “intramundanas” pertinent, “iustas” aut “erroneas” appellantes, respicientes videlicet ad necessitudines hominis cum semet ipso, cum ceteris hominibus, cumque universis rebus. Intus in hominis actione, hiatus inter binos

II. Conscience and Truth

59. Conscience thus formulates moral obligation in the light of the natural law: it is the obligation to do what the individual, through the workings of his conscience, knows to be a good he is called to do here and now. The universality of the law and its obligation are acknowledged, not suppressed, once reason has established the law’s application in concrete present circumstances. The judgment of conscience states “in an ultimate way” whether a certain particular kind of behavior is in conformity with the law; it formulates the proximate norm of the morality of a voluntary act, “applying the objective law to a particular case”.¹...

61. ... Consequently, in the practical judgment of conscience, which imposes on the person the obligation to perform a given act, the link between freedom and truth is made manifest. Precisely for this reason conscience expresses itself in acts of “judgment” that reflect the truth about the good, and not in arbitrary “decisions”. The maturity and responsibility of these judgments—and, when all is said and done, of the individual who is their subject—are not measured by the liberation of the conscience from objective truth, in favor of an alleged autonomy in personal decisions, but, on the contrary, by an insistent search for truth and by allowing oneself to be guided by that truth in one’s actions....

64. ... It follows that the authority of the Church, when she pronounces on moral questions, in no way undermines the freedom of conscience of Christians. This is so not only because freedom of conscience is never freedom “from” the truth but always and only freedom “in” the truth, but also because the Magisterium does not bring to the Christian conscience truths that are extraneous to it; rather it brings to light the truths that it ought already to possess, developing them from the starting point of the primordial act of faith....

III. Fundamental Choice and Specific Kinds of Behavior

65. ... A distinction thus comes to be introduced between the fundamental option and deliberate choices of a concrete kind of behavior. In some authors this division tends to become a separation, when they expressly limit moral “good” and “evil” to the transcendental dimension proper to the fundamental option and describe as “right” or “wrong” the choices of particular “innerworldly” kinds of behavior: those, in other words, concerning man’s relationship with himself, with others, and with the material world. There thus appears to be established within human acting a clear disjunction between two moralitatis gradus adumbrari videtur: hinc ordinem boni et mali ex voluntate pendentem, illinc definitos actus, qui moraliter iusti aut mendosi censentur secundum solam technicam computationem proportionis inter bona et mala “praemorabilia” aut “physica”, quae reapse actionem sequuntur....

[1189] 70.... Ita disiunctio optionis fundamentalis a deliberatis electionibus definitarum rationum sese gerendi—quae malae sint suapte natura aut ob rerum adiuncta—quibus in controversiam illa non deducatur, continet contemptionem doctrinae catholicae de peccato mortali: “Cum tota Ecclesiae traditione peccatum mortale eum dicimus actum, quo homo sponte scienterque repudiat Deum, eius legem, foedus caritatis a Deo sibi propositum, praepotans se ad se ipsum et ad aliquid divinae voluntati contrarium convertere (conversio ad creaturam)...”¹

IV. Actus moralis

Primarium essentialeque elementum ad iudicium morale est obiectum actus humani, quod statuit de eius ordinatione ad bonum adque ultimum finem, qui Deus levels of morality: on the one hand, the order of good and evil, which is dependent on the will, and, on the other hand, specific kinds of behavior, which are judged to be morally right or wrong only on the basis of a technical calculation of the proportion between the “pre-moral” or “physical” goods and evils that actually result from the action....

67. These tendencies are therefore contrary to the teaching of Scripture itself, which sees the fundamental option as a genuine choice of freedom and links that choice profoundly to particular acts.... 4965

69. As we have just seen, reflection on the fundamental option has also led some theologians to undertake a basic revision of the traditional distinction between mortal sins and venial sins. They insist that the opposition to God’s law that causes the loss of sanctifying grace—and eternal damnation, when one dies in such a state of sin—could only be the result of an act that engages the person in his totality: in other words, an act of the fundamental option.... 4966

70. ... The separation of the fundamental option from deliberate choices of particular kinds of behavior, disordered in themselves or in their circumstances, that would not engage that option thus involves a denial of Catholic doctrine on mortal sin: “With the whole tradition of the Church, we call mortal sin the act by which man freely and consciously rejects God, his law, the covenant of love that God offers, preferring to turn in on himself or to some created and finite reality, something contrary to the divine will (conversio ad creaturam)...”¹ 4967

IV. The Moral Act

78. The morality of the human act depends primarily and fundamentally on the “object” rationally chosen by the deliberate will, as is borne out by the insightful analysis, still valid today, made by St. Thomas.¹... 4968

79. One must therefore reject the thesis, characteristic of teleological and proportionalist theories, that holds that it is impossible to qualify as morally evil according to its species—its “object”—the deliberate choice of certain kinds of behavior or specific acts apart from a consideration of the intention for which the choice is made or the totality of the foreseeable consequences of that act for all persons concerned. 4969

The primary and decisive element for moral judgment is the object of the human act, which establishes whether it is capable of being ordered to the good and to the

Consequently, she must reject the theories set forth above, which contradict this truth....

CHAPTER III

“LEST THE CROSS OF CHRIST BE EMPTIED OF ITS POWER”

[1 COR 1:17]

115. ... Each of us knows how important is the teaching that represents the central theme of this encyclical and that is today being restated with the authority of the successor of Peter. Each of us can see the seriousness of what is involved, not only for individuals, but also for the whole of society, with the reaffirmation of the universality and immutability of the moral commandments, particularly those that prohibit always and without exception intrinsically evil acts....

1. Priestly ordination, which hands on the office entrusted by Christ to his apostles of teaching, sanctifying, and governing the faithful, has in the Catholic Church from the beginning always been reserved to men alone. This tradition has also been faithfully maintained by the Oriental Churches....

2. ... In the apostolic letter Mulieris Dignitatem, I myself wrote in this regard: “In calling only men as his apostles, Christ acted in a completely free and sovereign manner. In doing so, he exercised the same freedom with qua toto in vitae suae instituto dignitatem extulit mulieris vocationemque, non tamen accomodans se vigentibus moribus ac traditionibus lege illius temporis constitutis.”¹

Evangelia enim et Acta Apostolorum testificantur hanc vocationem factam esse secundum aeternum Dei consilium: Christus elegit quos voluit ipse [cf. Mc 3:13–14; Io 6:70], idque fecit una cum Patre, “per Spiritum Sanctum” [Act 1:2], postquam pernoctaverat in oratione [cf. Lc 6:12]. Quapropter in admissione ad sacerdotium ministeriale,² Ecclesia semper tamquam constantem normam agnovit Domini sui agendi rationem in duodecim virorum electione, quos Ipse posuit Ecclesiae suae fundamentum [cf. Apc 21:14]. Qui quidem non tantum munus acceperunt, quod deinde a quolibet Ecclesiae membro exerceri potuisset, sed iidem peculiariter et arte [547] cum ipsius Verbi Incarnati missione sunt consociati [cf. Mt 10:1, 7–8; 28:16–20; Mc 3:13–16; 16:14–15]. Apostoli idem fecerunt cum cooperatores suos elegerunt³ qui ipsis successuri erant in ministerio.⁴ Qua in electione illi quoque inclusi erant qui, decursu temporum Ecclesiae, ipsorum Apostolorum munus prosequerentur, scilicet vicem gerendi Christi Domini ac Redemptoris.⁵

3. Ceterum, quod Maria Sanctissima, Dei et Ecclesiae Mater, munus non accepit Apostolorum proprium, neque sacerdotium ministeriale, clare ostendit non admissionem mulierum ad sacerdotalem ordinationem non posse minorem earum dignitatem significare nec discrimen erga eas, sed fidelem observantiam consilii, quod sapientiae Domini universi est tribuendum.

Mulieris praesentia eiusque in Ecclesiae vita missioneque partes, etsi non sunt cum sacerdotio ministeriali coniunctae, perstant tamen ratione absoluta necessariae et eae quae substitui non possint.... Novum Testamentum cunctaque Ecclesiae historia satis superque testantur in Ecclesia praesentiam mulierum germanarum discipularum et testium Christi in familia atque in civili professione praeter quam in integra dedicatione famulatu Dei et Evangelii....

[548] 4. Quamvis doctrina de ordinatione sacerdotali viris tantum reservanda constanti et universali Ecclesiae Traditione servetur atque Magisterio in recentioribus documentis firmiter doceatur, temporibus tamen nostris diversis in partibus disputabilis habetur, aut which, in all his behavior, he emphasized the dignity and the vocation of women, without conforming to the prevailing customs and to the traditions sanctioned by the legislation of the time.”¹

In fact the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles attest that this call was made in accordance with God’s eternal plan; Christ chose those whom he willed [cf. Mk 3:13–14; Jn 6:70], and he did so in union with the Father, “through the Holy Spirit” [Acts 1:2], after having spent the night in prayer [cf. Lk 6:12]. Therefore, in granting admission to the ministerial priesthood,² the Church has always acknowledged as a perennial norm her Lord’s way of acting in choosing the twelve men whom he made the foundation of his Church [cf. Rev 21:14]. These men did not in fact receive only a function that could thereafter be exercised by any member of the Church; rather, they were specifically and intimately associated in the mission of the incarnate Word himself [cf. Mt 10:1, 7–8; 28:16–20; Mk 3:13–16; 16:14–15]. The apostles did the same when they chose fellow workers³ who would succeed them in their ministry.⁴ Also included in this choice were those who, throughout the time of the Church, would carry on the apostles’ mission of representing Christ the Lord and Redeemer.⁵

3. Furthermore, the fact that the Blessed Virgin 4982 Mary, Mother of God and Mother of the Church, received neither the mission proper to the apostles nor the ministerial priesthood clearly shows that the non-admission of women to priestly ordination cannot mean that women are of lesser dignity, nor can it be construed as discrimination against them. Rather, it is to be seen as the faithful observance of a plan to be ascribed to the wisdom of the Lord of the universe.

The presence and the role of women in the life and mission of the Church, although not linked to the ministerial priesthood, remain absolutely necessary and irreplaceable.... The New Testament and the whole history of the Church give ample evidence of the presence in the Church of women, true disciples, witnesses to Christ in the family and in civil professions, as well as in total consecration to the service of God and of the gospel....

4. Although the teaching that priestly ordination is 4983 to be reserved to men alone has been preserved by the constant and universal tradition of the Church and firmly taught by the Magisterium in its more recent documents, at the present time in some places it is nonetheless

You Shall Not Kill: God's Holy Law

57. . . . Faced with the progressive weakening in individual consciences and in society of the sense of the absolute and grave moral illicitness of the direct taking of all innocent human life, especially at its beginning and at its end, the Church's Magisterium has spoken out with increasing frequency in defense of the sacredness and inviolability of human life. The papal Magisterium, particularly insistent in this regard, has always been seconded by that of the bishops, with numerous and comprehensive doctrinal and pastoral documents issued either by episcopal conferences or by individual bishops. The Second Vatican Council also addressed the matter forcefully, in a brief but incisive passage.¹

Therefore, by the authority that Christ conferred upon Peter and his successors, and in communion with the bishops of the Catholic Church, We confirm that the direct and voluntary killing of an innocent human being is always gravely immoral. This doctrine, based upon that unwritten law which man, in the light of reason, finds in his own heart [cf. Rom 2:14–15], is reaffirmed by Sacred Scripture, transmitted by the tradition of the Church, and taught by the ordinary and universal Magisterium.² The deliberate decision to deprive an innocent human being of his life is always morally evil and can never be licit either as an end in itself or as a means to a good end. It is in fact a grave act of disobedience to the moral law and, indeed, to God himself, the author and guarantor of that Hodie tamen multorum hominum in conscientia ipsa eius gravitatis perceptio paulatim est obiecta. Quod in animis, in moribus, in legibus ipsis accipitur abortus, luculentum est documentum periculosissimi cuiusdam discriminis moralium sensuum, unde difficilior usque fit inter bonum discernere ac malum, etiam cum fundamentale agitur ad vitam ius....

62. ... [472] Auctoritate proinde utentes Nos a Christo Beato Petro eiusque Successoribus collata, consentientes cum Episcopis qui abortum crebrius respuerunt quique in superius memorata interrogatione licet per orbem disseminati una mente tamen de hac ipsa concinuerunt doctrina, declaramus abortum recta via procuratum, sive uti finem intentum seu ut instrumentum, semper gravem prae se ferre ordinis moralis turbationem, quippe qui deliberata existat innocentis hominis occisio. Haec doctrina naturali innititur lege Dei que scripto Verbo, transmittitur Ecclesiae Traditione atque ab ordinario et universali Magisterio exponitur.¹

Nequit exinde ulla condicio, ulla finis, ulla lex in terris umquam licitum reddere actum suapte natura illicitum, cum Dei Legi adversetur in cuiusque hominis insculptae animo, ab Ecclesia praedicatae, quae potest etiam ratione agnosci....

[475] 65. Clare ideo in primis ut rectum de euthanasia feratur morale iudicium, est definienda illa. law; it contradicts the fundamental virtues of justice and charity....

58. Among all the crimes that can be committed 4991 against life, procured abortion has characteristics making it particularly serious and deplorable. The Second Vatican Council defines abortion, together with infanticide, as an “unspeakable crime”.¹

But today, in many people’s consciences, the perception of its gravity has become progressively obscured. The acceptance of abortion in the popular mind, in behavior, and even in law itself is a telling sign of an extremely dangerous crisis of the moral sense, which is becoming more and more incapable of distinguishing between good and evil, even when the fundamental right to life is at stake....

62. ... Therefore, by the authority that Christ conferred 4992 upon Peter and his successors, in communion with the bishops—who on various occasions have condemned abortion and who in the aforementioned consultation, albeit dispersed throughout the world, have shown unanimous agreement concerning this doctrine—We declare that direct abortion, that is, abortion willed as an end or as a means, always constitutes a grave moral disorder, since it is the deliberate killing of an innocent human being. This doctrine is based upon the natural law and upon the written Word of God, is transmitted by the Church’s tradition, and taught by the ordinary and universal Magisterium.¹

No circumstance, no purpose, no law whatsoever can ever make licit an act that is intrinsically illicit, since it is contrary to the law of God that is written in every human heart, knowable by reason itself, and proclaimed by the Church....

65. For a correct moral judgment on euthanasia, in the 4993 first place a clear definition is required. Euthanasia in the strict sense is understood to be an action or omission that of itself and by intention causes death, with the purpose of eliminating all suffering. “Euthanasia’s terms of reference, therefore, are to be found in the intention of the will and in the methods used.”¹

Euthanasia must be distinguished from the decision to forego so-called “aggressive medical treatment”, in other words, medical procedures that no longer correspond to the real situation of the patient, either because they are by

Atque multo flagitiosius videtur euthanasiae facinus, si ab iis patrat, qui—ut familiares—consanguineum leniter amanterque iuvare debent vel—ut medici—suam ipsorum propter artem, aegrotum curare debent, etiamsi in condicionibus ille insanabilibus versatur.

Euthanasiae electio gravior fit cum in homicidium vertitur, quod alii in quadam persona patrant quae nullo prorsus modo eam quaesivit eamque comprobavit. Summum deinceps arbitrium attingitur et iniuria, cum quidam medici vel legum latores de vita morteque decernendi sibi vindicant potestatem....

Taking into account these distinctions, in harmony with the Magisterium of my predecessors² and in communion with the bishops of the Catholic Church, We confirm that euthanasia is a grave violation of the law of God, since it is the deliberate and morally unacceptable killing of a human person. This doctrine is based upon the natural law and upon the written Word of God, transmitted by the Church’s tradition, and taught by the ordinary and universal Magisterium.³

Depending on the circumstances, this practice involves the malice proper to suicide or murder....

66. ... Even when not motivated by a selfish refusal to be burdened with the life of someone who is suffering, euthanasia must be called a false mercy and, indeed, a disturbing “perversion” of mercy. True “compassion” leads to sharing another’s pain; it does not kill the person whose suffering we cannot bear. Moreover, the act of euthanasia appears all the more perverse if it is carried out by those, like relatives, who are supposed to treat a family member with patience and love or by those, such as doctors, who by virtue of their specific profession are supposed to care for the sick person even in the most painful terminal stages.

The choice of euthanasia becomes more serious when it takes the form of a murder committed by others on a person who has in no way requested it and who has never consented to it. The height of arbitrariness and injustice is reached when certain people, such as physicians or legislators, arrogate to themselves the power to decide who ought to live and who ought to die....

72. ... Laws that authorize and promote abortion and euthanasia are therefore radically opposed not only to the good of the individual but also to the common good; as such they are completely lacking in authentic juridical validity. Disregard for the right to life, precisely because it leads to the killing of the person whom society exists to serve, is what most directly conflicts with the possibility of achieving the common good. Consequently, a civil law authorizing abortion or euthanasia ceases by that very fact to be a true, morally binding civil law.

73. Abortion and euthanasia are thus crimes that no human law can claim to legitimize. There is no obligation

Going beyond the statements of the Second Vatican Council, the Petrine ministry is presented as episcopé. The exercise of primacy should be more closely determined within ecumenical dialogue.

The Catholic Church’s Commitment to Ecumenism

[929] 14. ... Non agitur de summa facienda omnium divitiarum, quae in Communitatibus christianis sunt disseminatae, ut ad Ecclesiam perveniat, ad quam Deus spectet in futurum. Secundum magnam Traditionem, quam Patres Orientales et Occidentales testantur, Ecclesia catholica credit Deum in Eventu Pentecostes iam ostendisse Ecclesiam in sua veritate eschatologica,

Chapter IV

You Did It to Me: For a New Culture of Human Life

95. ... What is urgently called for is a general mobilization of consciences and a united ethical effort to activate a great campaign in support of life. All together, we must build a new culture of life: new, because it will be able to confront and solve today’s unprecedented problems affecting human life; new, because it will be adopted with deeper and more dynamic conviction by all Christians; new, because it will be capable of bringing about a serious and courageous cultural dialogue among all parties. While the urgent need for such a cultural transformation is linked to the present historical situation, it is also rooted in the Church’s mission of evangelization....

101. ... The gospel of life is for the whole of human society. To be actively pro-life is to contribute to the renewal of society through the promotion of the common good. It is impossible to further the common good without acknowledging and defending the right to life, upon which all the other inalienable rights of individuals are founded and from which they develop.... Only respect for life can be the foundation and guarantee of the most precious and essential goods of society, such as democracy and peace....

3. At the Second Vatican Council, the Catholic Church committed herself irrevocably to following the path of the ecumenical venture, thus heeding the Spirit of the Lord, who teaches people to interpret carefully the “signs of the times”....

14. ... It is not a matter of adding together all the riches scattered throughout the various Christian Communities in order to arrive at a Church that God has in mind for the future. In accordance with the great tradition, attested to by the Fathers of the East and of the West, the Catholic Church believes that in the Pentecost Event God has already manifested the Church in her eschatological quam Ipse parabat “a tempore iusti Abel”.¹ Iam ea data est. Ob eam causam nos iam in ultimis sumus temporibus. Elementa huius Ecclesiae iam datae existunt, in sua plenitudine coniuncta, in Ecclesia catholica et, sine hac plenitudine, in ceteris Communitatibus,² ubi mysterii christiani quidam aspectus efficacius interdum sunt in luce positi. Oecumenismus plane contendit ut communionem ex parte, quae est inter christianos augeat ad plenam communionem in veritate inque caritate. . . .

5003 [943] 38. . . . Quod ad hoc attinet, dialogus oecumenicus, qui partes stimulat eo implicatas ad se interrogandas, comprehendendas, vicissim aperiendas, inexpectatas inventiones permittit. Concertationes et intolerantes controversiae in affirmationes repugnantes ea [944] mutaverunt, quae re effectus erant duorum obtutum, idem scrutantium sed rationibus diversis. Oportet hodie formula reperiatur quae, tota veritate deprehensa, transcendere sinat lectiones ex parte ac falsas interpretationes remove. . . .

How Long Is the Way that Lies before Us?

5004 [968] 79. Iam nunc argumenta finiri possunt pervestiganda, ad verum fidei assensum adipiscendum, nempe: 1) inter Sacram Scripturam ratio, quae summa auctoritate de fide pollet, et sacram Traditionem, quae est omnino [969] necessaria ad Dei verbum explicandum; 2) Eucharistia, sacramentum Corporis et Sanguinis Christi, reality, which he had prepared “from the time of Abel, the just one”.¹ This reality is something already given. Consequently we are even now in the last times. The elements of this already-given Church exist, found in their fullness in the Catholic Church and, without this fullness, in the other Communities,² where certain features of the Christian mystery have at times been more effectively brought to light. Ecumenism is directed precisely to making the partial communion existing between Christians grow toward full communion in truth and charity. . . .

35. . . . It can be said that the entire Decree on Ecumenism is permeated by the spirit of conversion.¹ In the document, ecumenical dialogue takes on a specific characteristic; it becomes a “dialogue of conversion” and, thus, in the words of Pope Paul VI, an authentic “dialogue of salvation”.² Dialogue cannot take place merely on a horizontal level, being restricted to meetings, exchanges of points of view, or even the sharing of gifts proper to each Community. It has also a primarily vertical thrust, directed toward the One who, as the Redeemer of the world and the Lord of history, is himself our reconciliation. This vertical aspect of dialogue lies in our acknowledgment, jointly and to each other, that we are men and women who have sinned. It is precisely this acknowledgment that creates in brothers living in Communities not in full communion with one another that interior space where Christ, the source of the Church’s unity, can effectively act, with all the power of his Spirit, the Paraclete. . . .

38. . . . In this regard, ecumenical dialogue, which prompts the parties involved to question each other, to understand each other, and to explain their positions to each other, makes surprising discoveries possible. Intolerant polemics and controversies have made incompatible assertions out of what was really the result of two different ways of looking at the same reality. Nowadays we need to find the formula that, by capturing the reality in its entirety, will enable us to move beyond partial readings and eliminate false interpretations. . . .

79. It is already possible to identify the areas in need of fuller study before a true consensus of faith can be achieved: (1) the relationship between Sacred Scripture, as the highest authority in matters of faith, and sacred tradition, as indispensable to the interpretation of the Word of God; (2) the Eucharist, as the sacrament of

82. It is understandable how the seriousness of the commitment to ecumenism presents a deep challenge to the Catholic faithful. The Spirit calls them to make a serious examination of conscience. The Catholic Church must enter into what might be called a “dialogue of conversion”, which constitutes the spiritual foundation of ecumenical dialogue. In this dialogue, which takes place before God, each individual must recognize his own faults, confess his sins, and place himself in the hands of the One who is our Intercessor before the Father, Jesus Christ.... 5006

84. In a theocentric vision, we Christians already have a common Martyrology. This also includes the martyrs of our own century, more numerous than one might think, and it shows how, at a profound level, God preserves communion among the baptized in the supreme demand of faith, manifested in the sacrifice of life itself.¹ The fact that one can die for the faith shows that other demands of the faith can also be met.... 5007

... Albeit in an invisible way, the communion between our Communities, even if still incomplete, is truly and solidly grounded in the full communion of the saints—those who, at the end of a life faithful to grace, are in communion with Christ in glory. These saints come from all the Churches and Ecclesial Communities that gave them entrance into the communion of salvation....

her “perpetual and visible principle and foundation of unity”¹ and whom the Spirit sustains in order that he may enable all the others to share in this essential good. In the beautiful expression of Pope St. Gregory the Great, my ministry is that of servant of the servants of God. This designation is the best possible safeguard against the risk of separating power (and in particular the primacy) from ministry. Such a separation would contradict the very meaning of power according to the Gospel: “I am among you as one who serves” [Lk 22:27], says our Lord Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church. On the other hand, as I acknowledged on the important occasion of a visit to the World Council of Churches in Geneva on June 12, 1984, the Catholic Church’s conviction that in the ministry of the bishop of Rome she has preserved, in fidelity to the apostolic tradition and the faith of the Fathers, the visible sign and guarantor of unity, constitutes a difficulty for most other Christians, whose memory is marked by certain painful recollections. To the extent that we are responsible for these, We join Our predecessor Paul VI in asking forgiveness.²...

92. ... As the heir to the mission of Peter in the Church, which has been made fruitful by the blood of the princes of the apostles, the bishop of Rome exercises a ministry originating in the manifold mercy of God. This mercy converts hearts and pours forth the power of grace where the disciple experiences the bitter taste of his personal weakness and helplessness. The authority proper to this ministry is completely at the service of God’s merciful plan, and it must always be seen in this perspective. Its power is explained from this perspective. ...

94. This service of unity, rooted in the action of divine mercy, is entrusted within the college of bishops to one among those who have received from the Spirit the task, not of exercising power over the people—as the rulers of the Gentiles and their great men do [cf. Mt 20:25; Mk 10:42]—but of leading them toward peaceful pastures. This task can require the offering of one’s own life [cf. Jn 10:11–18]. St. Augustine, after showing that Christ is “the one Shepherd, in whose unity all are one”, goes on to exhort: “May all shepherds thus be one in the one Shepherd...”¹ The mission of the bishop of Rome within the college of all the pastors consists precisely in “keeping watch” (episkopein), like a sentinel, so that, through the efforts of the pastors, the true voice of in unaquaque Ecclesia particulari eis demandata efficitur una, sancta, catholica et apostolica Ecclesia. Omnes Ecclesiae plena visibilique communionem fruuntur, quandoquidem cum Petro sociantur Pastores omnes idoque sunt Christi unitate.

Potestate et auctoritate, quibus adeptis munus hoc vacuefit, Episcopus Romanus communionem omnium Ecclesiarum praestare debet. Hoc nomine primus ipse est inter unitatis ministros. Huiusmodi primatus variis gradibus exercetur, qui tutelam Verbi transmittendi, sacramentalem liturgicamque celebrationem, missionem, disciplinam atque christianam vitam respiciunt. Ad Petri Successorem pertinet necessitatem commonefacere boni Ecclesiae communis, si quis forte inducatur ad id obliviscendum, suis commodis antepositis. Eius est monere, praemonere, declarare a fidei unitate nonnunquam illam, aut illam crebrescentem opinionem abhorrere. Cum id requirunt condiciones, ipse omnium Pastorum secum iunctorum nomine loquitur. Ipse potest etiam—certis quibusdam condicionibus, quas Concilium Vaticanum I definivit—ex cathedra declarare quamdam doctrinam ad fidei depositum pertinere.² Testans sic ipse veritatem, unitati inservit.

95. Haec vero omnia in communionem sunt facienda. Cum catholica Ecclesia asseverat Episcopi Romani munus cum Christi voluntate congruere, ipsa hoc munus a missione non seungit, quae episcoporum coetui credita est, qui “vicarii et legati Christi”¹ ipsi quoque sunt. Episcopus Romanus ad eorum “collegium” pertinet et ii in ministerio sunt eius fratres.

Quod ad unitatem omnium Communitatum christianarum spectat, in provincia, ut liquet, primatus sollicitudinum inest. Ut Romanus Episcopus probe novimus, idque hisce Litteris encyclicis confirmavimus, vehementer a Christo exoptari plenam visibilemque communionem omnium Communitatum, in quibus propter Dei fidelitatem habitat eius Spiritus. Persuasum habemus peculiari nos officio obstringi, cum potissimum perspiciamus plerasque christianas Communitates oecumenica cupiditate flagrare cumque petitionem nobis subiectam exaudiamus, ut aliquam inveniamus formam pri[978]matus exercitii, quae, nihil essentiae suae deponens, in novam tamen condicionem pateat. Christ the Shepherd may be heard in all the particular Churches. In this way, in each of the particular Churches entrusted to those pastors, the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church is made present. All the Churches are in full and visible communion, because all the Pastors are in communion with Peter and therefore united in Christ.

With the power and the authority without which such an office would be illusory, the bishop of Rome must ensure the communion of all the Churches. For this reason, he is the first servant of unity. This primacy is exercised on various levels, including vigilance over the handing down of the Word, the celebration of the liturgy and the sacraments, the Church’s mission, discipline, and the Christian life. It is the responsibility of the successor of Peter to recall the requirements of the common good of the Church, should anyone be tempted to overlook it in the pursuit of personal interests. He has the duty to admonish, to caution, and to declare at times that this or that opinion being circulated is irreconcilable with the unity of faith. When circumstances require it, he speaks in the name of all the pastors in communion with him. He can also—under very specific conditions clearly laid down by the First Vatican Council—declare ex cathedra that a certain doctrine belongs to the deposit of faith.² By thus bearing witness to the truth, he serves unity.

95. All this, however, must always be done in communion. When the Catholic Church affirms that the office of the bishop of Rome corresponds to the will of Christ, she does not separate this office from the mission entrusted to the whole body of bishops, who are also “vicars and ambassadors of Christ”.¹ The bishop of Rome is a member of the “college”, and the bishops are his brothers in the ministry.

Whatever relates to the unity of all Christian Communities clearly forms part of the concerns of the primacy. As bishop of Rome, We are fully aware, as We have reaffirmed in the present encyclical letter, that Christ ardently desires the full and visible communion of all those Communities in which, by virtue of God’s faithfulness, his Spirit dwells. We are convinced that We have a particular responsibility in this regard, above all in acknowledging the ecumenical aspirations of the majority of the Christian Communities and in heeding the request made of Us to find a way of exercising the primacy that, while in no way renouncing what is essential to its mission, is nonetheless open to a new situation. For a whole millennium Christians were united in “a brotherly communione sacramentalisque vitae, sede Romana moderante communi consensu, si dissensiones circa fidem et disciplinam inter eas orirentur.”² Hac ratione primatus partes unitatis agebat. Patriarcham oecumenicum, Suam Sanctitatem Demetrium I, alloquentes diximus Nos esse Nobis conscios “varias propter rationes, atque utriusque partis praeter voluntatem, id quod servitium esse debebat, omnino alio sub lumine esse demonstratum. At [...] ob studium Christi voluntati vere parendi Nos ipsos agnoscimus, veluti Romanum Episcopum, ad ministerium exercendum vocari [...]. Spiritus Sanctus sua luce nos perfundat atque omnes pastores theologosque nostrarum Ecclesiarum illuminet, ut, una simul, ut patet, illas formas perquiramus, in quibus hoc ministerium obire possit amoris opus, quod ab utrisque agnoscatur.”³ communion of faith and sacramental life... If disagreements in belief and discipline arose among them, the Roman See acted by common consent as moderator.”² In this way the primacy exercised its office of unity. When addressing the Ecumenical Patriarch His Holiness Dimitrios I, We acknowledged Our awareness that “for a great variety of reasons, and against the will of all concerned, what should have been a service sometimes manifested itself in a very different light. But ... it is out of a desire to obey the will of Christ truly that We recognize that as bishop of Rome We are called to exercise that ministry... May the Holy Spirit shine his light upon us, enlightening all the pastors and theologians of our Churches, that we may seek—together, of course—the forms in which this ministry may accomplish a service of love recognized by all concerned.”³

96. This is an immense task, which we cannot refuse and which we cannot carry out alone. Could not the real but imperfect communion existing between us persuade Church leaders and their theologians to engage with us in a patient and fraternal dialogue on this subject, a dialogue in which, leaving useless controversies behind, we could listen to one another, keeping before us only the will of Christ for his Church and allowing ourselves to be deeply moved by his plea “that they may all be one ... so that the world may believe that you have sent me” [Jn 17:21]?

5020–5030: Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation Ecclesia in Africa, September 14, 1995

This exhortation summarizes the results of the Special Assembly for Africa of the Roman Synod of Bishops of April 10–May 8, 1994. At the same time, it develops perspectives for the Church in Africa.

A Memorable Time for the Church

14. We exhort all God’s people in Africa to accept with open hearts the message of hope addressed to them by the synodal assembly. During their discussions the synod Fathers, fully aware that they were expressing the expectations not only of African Catholics but also those of all the men and women of the continent, squarely faced the many evils that oppress Africa today... Despite the mainly negative picture that today characterizes numerous parts of Africa, and despite the sad situations being experienced in many countries, the Church has the duty to affirm vigorously that these difficulties can be overcome. She must

The proclamation of the gospel can be fully carried out only through the contribution of all believers at every level of the universal and local Church.

It is especially the concern of the local Church, entrusted to the responsibility of the bishop, to coordinate the commitment to evangelization by gathering the faithful together, confirming them in the faith through the work of the priests and catechists, and supporting them in the fulfillment of their respective tasks....

5040–5041: Response of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, October 28, 1995

This response of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, approved by John Paul II, clarifies the obligatory character of the apostolic letter Ordinatio sacerdotalis (*4980–4983), which presented the decision against the priestly ordination of women.

Ed.: AAS 87 (1995): 1114.

Dub.: Utrum doctrina, tradita tamquam definitive tenenda in Epist. Ap. “Ordinatio sacerdotalis”, iuxta quam Ecclesia facultatem nullatenus habet ordinationem sacerdotalem mulieribus conferendi, ut pertinens ad fidei depositum intelligenda sit.

Resp.: Affirmative.

Haec enim doctrina assensum definitivum exigit, cum, in verbo Dei scripto fundata atque in Ecclesiae Traditione inde ab initio constanter servata et applicata, ab ordinario et universali magisterio infallibiliter proposita sit.¹ Quapropter, praesentibus adiunctis, Romanus Pontifex, proprium munus fratres confirmandi exercens [cf. Lc 22:32], eandem doctrinam per formalem declarationem tradidit, explicite enuntians quod semper, quod ubique et quod ab omnibus tenendum est, utpote ad fidei depositum pertinens...

Question: Is the teaching that the Church has no authority whatsoever to confer priestly ordination on women, which is presented in the apostolic letter Ordinatio sacerdotalis to be held definitively, to be understood as belonging to the deposit of the faith?

Response: Yes.

This teaching requires definitive assent, since, founded on the written Word of God and from the beginning constantly preserved and applied in the tradition of the Church, it has been set forth infallibly by the ordinary and universal Magisterium.¹ Thus, in the present circumstances, the Roman pontiff, exercising his proper office of confirming the brethren [cf. Lk 22:32], has handed on this same teaching by a formal declaration, explicitly stating what is to be held always, everywhere, and by all, as belonging to the deposit of the faith...

The instruction On Certain Questions regarding the Collaboration of the Non-Ordained Faithful in the Sacred Ministry of Priests deals with the growing significance of lay ministry in the Church, as it is expressed by the increasing importance of community and pastoral consultants, pastoral animators, catechists, and so on, and initiated by the Second Vatican Council. The instruction was approved by Pope John Paul II on August 13 in forma specifica. It was signed by eight congregations or pontifical councils, and its publication triggered intense discussion.

THEOLOGICA PRINCIPIA

1. Sacerdotium commune et sacerdotium ministeriale

THEOLOGICAL PRINCIPLES

1. The Common Priesthood of the Faithful and the Ministerial Priesthood

Jesus Christ, the Eternal High Priest, wished that his one and indivisible priesthood be transmitted to his Church... There exists “a true equality between all with regard to the dignity and to the activity that is common to all the faithful in the building up of the body of Christ”. By the will of Christ, some are constituted “teachers, dispensers of the mysteries, and pastors”.¹ The common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial or ministeriale vel hierarchicum, “licet essentia et non gradu tantum differant, ad invicem tamen ordinantur; unum enim et alterum suo peculiari modo de uno Christi sacerdotium participant”.² Inter eos efficax datur unitas, quia Spiritus Sanctus Ecclesiam in communione ac ministratioe unificat atque diversis donis hierarchicis et charismaticis instruit.³

Essentiale discrimen inter sacerdotium commune et sacerdotium ministeriale igitur non reperitur in Christi sacerdotio, quod usque manet unum et indivisibile, ne in sanctitate quidem ad quam omnes fideles vocantur. . . .

Notae, quae distinguunt sacerdotium ministeriale Episcoporum presbyterorumque a sacerdotio communi fidelium ideoque fines etiam constituunt eorum cooperationis in sacro ministerio exercendo, in haec pauca conferri possunt:

- a) Sacerdotium ministeriale suam reperit radicem in successione apostolica atque sacra potestate fruatur,⁶ quae stat in facultate et responsabilitate agendi in persona Christi Capitis et Pastoris.⁷
- b) Idem sacros ministros famulos efficit Christi et Ecclesiae per legitimam proclamationem Dei verbi, per sacramentorum celebrationem et pastorem fidelium directionem.⁸

hierarchical priesthood, “though they differ essentially and not only in degree, . . . are nonetheless ordered one to another; (since) each in its own proper way shares in the one priesthood of Christ”.² Between both there is an effective unity since the Holy Spirit makes the Church one in communion, in service, and in the outpouring of the diverse hierarchical and charismatic gifts.³

Thus the essential difference between the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial priesthood is not found in the priesthood of Christ, which remains forever one and indivisible, or in the sanctity to which all of the faithful are called. . . .

This diversity exists at the mode of participation in the priesthood of Christ and is essential in the sense that, “while the common priesthood of the faithful is exercised by the unfolding of baptismal grace—a life of faith, hope, and charity, a life according to the Spirit—the ministerial priesthood is at the service of the common priesthood . . . and directed at the unfolding of the baptismal grace of all Christians.”⁴ Consequently, the ministerial priesthood “differs in essence from the common priesthood of the faithful because it confers a sacred power for the service of the faithful”.⁵ . . .

The characteristics that differentiate the ministerial priesthood of bishops and priests from the common priesthood of the faithful and consequently delineate the extent to which other members of the faithful cooperate with this ministry may be summarized in the following fashion:

- a. The ministerial priesthood is rooted in the apostolic succession and vested with sacred power,⁶ consisting of the faculty and the responsibility of acting in the person of Christ the Head and the Shepherd.⁷
- b. It is a priesthood that renders its sacred ministers servants of Christ and of the Church by means of authoritative proclamation of the Word of God, the administration of the sacraments, and the pastoral direction of the faithful.⁸

. . . The ordained ministry, therefore, is established on the foundation of the apostles for the upbuilding of the Church:⁹ “and is completely at the service of the Church”.¹⁰ “Intrinsically linked to the sacramental nature

Quia verbum et gratia quorum sunt ministri, eorum non sunt, sed Christi qui illa eis pro aliis concredit, ipsi libere omnium fient servi.”¹¹

2. Unitas ac distinctio officiorum ministerialium

Ministerii ordinati officia, coniuncte considerata, unum propter eorum fundamentum,¹ unitatem quamdam efficiunt indivisibilem. Una enim et unica, quemadmodum in Christo,² est salutaris actionis radix, quae a ministro per officia docendi, sanctificandi ceterosque fideles regendi significatur atque efficitur. Haec unitas essentialiter functionum exercitium sacri ministri afficit, eademque semper sunt exercitium, complures per species, partis Christi, Capitis Ecclesiae.

Si quidem ministri ordinati procuratio muneris docendi, sanctificandi et regendi substantiam constituit ministerii pastoralis, varia ministrorum sacrorum officia, quae individuam unitatem efficiunt, alia ab aliis seiuncta intellegi non possunt, immo in sua ipsorum mutua convenientia et completiva coniunctione sunt consideranda. In nonnullis tantum officiis, et certo quodam modo, cooperari cum pastoribus possunt alii fideles non ordinati, si ab eis hanc operam, congruis servatis modis, requirit legitima Auctoritas. Christus Iesus enim “in corpore suo, scilicet Ecclesia, dona ministrorum iugiter disponit, quibus Ipsius virtute nobis invicem ad salutem servitia praestamus”.³ “Nihilominus exercitium huiusmodi munerum non efficit ex [859] christifideli laico pastorem: nam ministerium non munus efficit sed sacramentalis ordinatio. Ordinis dumtaxat sacramentum confert ministerio ordinato peculiarem participationem in Christi munere Capitis et Pastoris atque in eius aeterno sacerdotio. Si quae autem functio suppletorie exercetur, id immediate et formaliter legitimum evadit vi officialis deputationis a pastoribus collatae: ipsum autem, dum ad actum concrete reducitur directioni auctoritatis ecclesiasticae subest.”⁴...

3. Ministerium ordinatum substitui non potest

Fidelium communitas, ut Ecclesia vocetur eaque vera sit, ductorem suum sumere non potest e quibusdam of ecclesial ministry is its character of service. Entirely dependent on Christ, who gives mission and authority, ministers are truly ‘servants of Christ’ [Rom 1:1] in the image of him who freely took for us ‘the form of a slave’ [Phil 2:7]. Because the word and grace of which they are ministers are not their own but are given to them by Christ for the sake of others, they must freely become the slaves of all.”¹¹

2. Unity and Diversity of Ministerial Functions

The functions of the ordained minister, taken as a whole, constitute a single indivisible unity in virtue of their singular foundation in Christ.¹ As with Christ,² salvific activity is one and unique. It is signified and realized by the minister through the functions of teaching, sanctifying, and governing the faithful. This unity essentially defines the exercise of the sacred minister’s functions, which are always an exercise, in different ways, of the role of Christ as Head of the Church.

Therefore, since the exercise of the office of teaching, sanctifying, and governing by the sacred minister constitutes the essence of pastoral ministry, the diverse functions proper to ordained ministers form an indivisible unity and cannot be understood if separated, one from the other. Rather they must be viewed in terms of mutual correspondence and complementarity. Only in some of these functions, and to a limited degree, may the non-ordained faithful cooperate with their pastors should they be called to do so by lawful authority and in accordance with the prescribed manner. “He [Jesus Christ] continually provides in his body, that is, in the Church, for gifts of ministries through which, by his power, we serve each other unto salvation.”³ “The exercise of such tasks does not make pastors of the lay faithful; in fact, a person is not a minister simply in performing a task, but through sacramental ordination. Only the sacrament of orders gives the ordained minister a particular participation in the office of Christ, the Shepherd and Head in his Eternal Priesthood. The task exercised in virtue of supply takes its legitimacy formally and immediately from the official deputation given by pastors, as well as from its concrete exercise under the guidance of ecclesiastical authority.”⁴...

3. The Indispensability of the Ordained Ministry

For a community of the faithful to be called a Church, and indeed to truly be a Church, it cannot be ordinationibus et apparatus, quae pertinent ad sociativam vel politicam naturam.

Unaquaeque Ecclesia particularis a Christo sum ductorem depromere debet, quia Ipse Ecclesiae radicitus ministerium apostolicum concessit; quocirca nulla communitas potestatem habet sibi ipsi¹ ductorem dandi vel quandam per delegationem eum statuendi. Exercitium “muneris” docendi et gubernandi deposcit revera canonicam vel iuridicam hierarchiae auctoritatis deliberationem.²

Sacerdotium ideo ministeriale necessario coniungitur cum existentia ipsa communitatis quatenus Ecclesiam constituit: “Non igitur censendum erit ordinatum sacerdotium velut (...) aliquid communitate ecclesiali posterius, quasi concipi possit hanc prius constitutam esse et postea sacerdotio donatam.”³ Si deest namque in communitate sacerdos, caret ipsa exercitio et functione sacramentali Christi Capitis Pastorisque, quod ad essentiam ipsius vitae communitatis pertinet.

[860] Sacerdotium ministeriale ergo substitui non potest....

4. Fidelium non ordinatorum in pastoralis ministerio cooperatio

Pro his postremis officiis vel functionibus, fideles non ordinati ius non habent ea exercendi, sed “sunt habiles ut a sacris Pastoribus ad illa officia ecclesiastica et munera assumantur, quibus ipsi secundum iuris prae[861]scripta fungi valent”³ vel “deficientibus ministris (...) possunt (...) quaedam eorum officia supplere (...) iuxta iuris praescripta”⁴.

Ut haec cooperatio concinne ad rem deducatur pastoralis ministerii necesse est, ad pastorales errores et disciplinae abusus vitandos, doctrinalia principia guided according to political criteria or those of human organizations.

Every particular Church owes its guidance to Christ, since it was he who fundamentally linked apostolic mission to the Church, and hence no community has the power to grant that mission to itself¹ or to delegate it. In effect, a canonical or juridical determination made by hierarchal authority is necessary for the exercise of the “office” of teaching and governing.²

The ministerial priesthood is therefore necessary for a community to exist as “Church”: “The ordained priesthood ought not to be thought of as existing ... posterior to the ecclesial community, as if the Church could be imagined as already established without this priesthood.”³ Indeed, were a community to lack a priest, it would be deprived of the exercise and sacramental action of Christ, the Head and Pastor, which are essential for the very life of every ecclesial community.

Thus the ordained priesthood is absolutely irreplaceable....

4. The Collaboration of the Non-ordained Faithful in Pastoral Ministry

Among the various aspects of the participation of the non-ordained faithful in the Church’s mission considered by the conciliar documents, that of their direct collaboration with the ministry of the Church’s pastors is considered.¹ Indeed, “when necessity and expediency in the Church require it, the pastors, according to established norms from universal law, can entrust to the lay faithful certain offices and roles that are connected to their pastoral ministry but do not require the character of orders.”²...

With regard to these last-mentioned areas or functions, the non-ordained faithful do not enjoy a right to such tasks and functions. Rather, they are “capable of being admitted by the sacred pastors ... to those functions that, in accordance with the provisions of law, they can discharge”³ or where “ministers are not available ... they can supply certain of their functions ... in accordance with the provisions of law.”⁴

To ensure that such collaboration is harmoniously incorporated into pastoral ministry and to avoid situations of abuse and disciplinary irregularity in

I. De ministerio ordinato

1. . . . Sacramentum Ordinis “ordinandum Christo per gratiam Spiritus Sancti configurat specialem, ut sit instrumentum Christi pro Eius Ecclesia. Per ordinationem recipitur capacitas agendi tamquam Christi legatus, Capitis Ecclesiae, in Eius triplici munere sacerdotis, prophetae et regis.”¹

Vi sacramenti Ordinis, missio a Christo Apostolis suis concredita, permanenter in Ecclesia exercetur usque ad temporem finem; ipsa est sacramentum ministerii apostolici.² Actus sacramentalis ordinationis ultra progreditur, quam simplex electio, designatio, delegatio aut institutio communitatis operari potest, quia confert Spiritus Sancti donum, quod sinit ut potestas sacra exerceatur, quae tantummodo a Christo per Ecclesiam suam proficisci potest.³ “Missus a Domino non auctoritate propria loquitur et agit, sed virtute auctoritatis Christi; non tamquam communitatis membrum, sed eidem nomine Christi loquens. Nemo potest sibi ipsi conferre gratiam, haec debet donari et offerri. Hoc supponit ministros gratiae, auctoritate et aptitudine a Christo ornatos.”⁴

pastoral practice, it is always necessary to have clarity in doctrinal principles. Therefore a consistent, faithful, and serious application of the current canonical dispositions throughout the entire Church, while avoiding the abuse of multiplying “exceptional” cases over and above those so designated and regulated by normative discipline, is extremely necessary.

Where the existence of abuses or improper practices has been proved, pastors will promptly employ those means judged necessary to prevent their dissemination and to ensure that the correct understanding of the Church’s nature is not impaired. . . .

I. The Ordained Ministry

1. . . . The sacrament of orders “configures the recipient to Christ by a special grace of the Holy Spirit, so that he may serve as Christ’s instrument for his Church. By ordination he is enabled to act as a representative of Christ, Head of the Church, in his triple office of priest, prophet, and king.”¹ 5060

Through the sacrament of orders, the mission entrusted by Christ to his apostles continues to be exercised in the Church until the end of time. It is thus the sacrament of apostolic ministry.² The sacramental act of ordination surpasses mere election, designation, or delegation by the community, because it confers a gift of the Holy Spirit enabling the exercise of sacred power that can only come from Christ himself through his Church.³ “The one sent by the Lord speaks and acts, not of his own authority, but by virtue of Christ’s authority; not as a member of the community, but speaking to it in the name of Christ. No one can bestow grace on himself; it must be given and offered. This fact presupposes ministers of grace, authorized and empowered by Christ.”⁴

The sacrament of apostolic ministry comprises three degrees. Indeed, “the divinely instituted ecclesiastical ministry is exercised in different degrees by those who even from ancient times have been called bishops, priests, and deacons.”⁵ Together with priests and deacons as their helpers, the bishops have received pastoral charge of the community and preside in God’s stead over the flock of pastores, et doctrinae magistri, sacri cultus sacerdotes et gubernationis ministri.⁶

Natura sacramentalis ministerii ecclesialis efficit ut eidem intrinsece coniuncta ista “indoles servitii. Ministri etenim, prorsus dependentes a Christo qui missionem praebet et auctoritatem, vere sunt ‘servi Christi’ [cf. Rom 1:7] ad imaginem Christi qui libere propter nos ‘formam servi’ [Phil 2:7] accepit.”⁷ Sacro ministerio inest praeterea *nota collegialis*⁸ et nota personalis,⁹ quarum vi “ministerium sacramentale in Ecclesia est igitur servitium in nomine Christi exercitum. Hoc indolem habet personalem et formam collegialem.”¹⁰

II. Ordo diaconatus

5061 2. Ministerium diaconorum in Ecclesia inde a temporibus apostolicis documentis comprobatur. Secundum firmam Traditionem cuius testis est Sanctus Irenaeus, quaequae in liturgiam ordinationis est recepta, initium diaconatus in eventu ponitur institutionis “septem virorum”, de quibus in Actis 6:1–6 agitur. Itaque in primo sacrae hierarchiae initio diaconi sunt constituti, quorum ministerium in Ecclesia magnum in honore est habitum.¹ Sanctus Paulus eos et una cum iis Episcopos salutatur in Epistula ad Philippenses [cf. Phil 1:1], et in prima Epistula ad Timotheum qualitates et virtutes exponit, quibus ornentur oportet ut ministerio suo digne fungantur [cf. 1 Tim 3:8–13].²

In scriptis Patrum Ecclesiae inde a primordiis haec compages hierarchica et ministerialis Ecclesiae, etiam diaconatum continens, asseritur. Secun[840]dum Sanctum Ignatium Antiochenum³ Ecclesia particularis sine Episcopo, presbytero et diacono ne cogitari quidem posse videtur. Ipse affirmat ministerium diaconi aliud non esse quam “ministerium Iesu Christi, qui ante saecula erat apud Patrem et apparuit in consummatione saeculorum”. “Non enim in cibo et potu sunt ministri, sed ministri Ecclesiae Dei”. *Didascalia Apostolorum*⁴ ac Patres saeculis subsequentibus necnon varia Concilia⁵ et which they are shepherds inasmuch as they are teachers of doctrine, priests of sacred worship, and ministers of pastoral government.⁶

The sacramental nature of ecclesial ministry is such that it is “intrinsically linked to ... its character of service. Entirely dependant on Christ who gives mission and authority, ministers are truly ‘slaves of Christ’ [cf. Rom 1:1], in the image of him who freely took ‘the form of a slave’ for us [Phil 2:7].”⁷ The sacred ministry also has a *collegial form*⁸ and a *personal character*⁹ by which “sacramental ministry in the Church, then, is a service exercised in the name of Christ. It has a personal character and a collegial form.”¹⁰

II. The Diaconate

2. The service of deacons in the Church is documented from apostolic times. A strong tradition, attested already by St. Irenaeus and influencing the liturgy of ordination, sees the origin of the diaconate in the institution of the “seven” mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles 6:1–6. Thus, at the initial grade of the sacred hierarchy are deacons, whose ministry has always been greatly esteemed in the Church.¹ St. Paul refers to them and to the bishops in the exordium of his Epistle to the Philippians [cf. Phil 1:1], while in his first Epistle to Timothy he lists the qualities and virtues they should possess so as to exercise their ministry worthily [cf. 1 Tim 3:8–13].²

From its outset, patristic literature witnesses to this hierarchical and ministerial structure in the Church, which includes the diaconate. St. Ignatius of Antioch³ considers a Church without bishop, priest, or deacon unthinkable. He underlines that the ministry of deacons is nothing other than “the ministry of Jesus Christ, who was with the Father before time began and who appeared at the end of time”. They are not deacons of food and drink but ministers of the Church of God. The Didascalia Apostolorum,⁴ the Fathers of subsequent centuries, the various councils,⁵ as well as ecclesiastical praxis ecclesiastica⁶ continuitatem et progressum huius rei revelatae testantur.

Institutio diaconalis in Ecclesia occidentali usque ad V saeculum floruit, exinde variis de causis paulatim declinavit donec facta est tantum interiectio quaedam intermedia pro candidatis ad sacerdotium.

Concilium Tridentinum statuit ut diaconatus permanens in pristinum restitueretur sicut temporibus antiquis, secundum propriam naturam, scilicet ut originarium ministerium in Ecclesia.⁷ Sed huiusmodi praescriptio in praxim reapse non fuit deducta.

Concilio Vaticano II tribuendum est ut diaconatus possit “in futurum tamquam proprius ac permanens gradus hierarchiae restitui ... (et) viris maturioris aetatis etiam in matrimonio viventibus conferre poterit, necnon iuvenibus idoneis, pro quibus tamen lex caelibatus firma remanere debet” iuxta constantem traditionem.⁸ Tres sunt causae praecipuae quae ad hoc constituendum induxerunt: a) desiderium Ecclesiam muneribus ministerii diaconalis locupletandi, quae aliter, multis in regionibus difficile exerceri possent; b) voluntas gratia ordinationis diaconalis eos roborandi, qui iam muneribus diaconalibus fungebantur; c) sollicitudo eo pertinens ut regionibus penuria cleri laborantibus, per sacros ministros prospiceretur. Hae causae in luce ponunt quomodo restauratio diaconatus permanentis minime imminuere velit significationem, momentum et prosperitatem sacerdotii ministerialis, quae semper generoso animo enitenda est, etiam eo quod ei nihil substitui potest....

praxis⁶ all confirm the continuity and development of this revealed datum.

Up to the fifth century, the diaconate flourished in the Western Church, but after this period, it experienced, for various reasons, a slow decline, which ended in its surviving only as an intermediate stage for candidates preparing for priestly ordination.

The Council of Trent disposed that the permanent diaconate, as it existed in ancient times, should be restored, in accord with its proper nature, to its original function in the Church.⁷ This prescription, however, was not carried into effect.

The Second Vatican Council established that “it will be possible for the future to restore the diaconate as a proper and permanent rank of the hierarchy ... (and confer it) even upon married men, provided they be of more mature age, and also on suitable young men for whom, however, the law of celibacy must remain in force”,⁸ in accordance with constant tradition. Three reasons lay behind this choice: (a) a desire to enrich the Church with the functions of the diaconate, which otherwise, in many regions, could only be exercised with great difficulty; (b) the intention of strengthening with the grace of diaconal ordination those who already exercised many of the functions of the diaconate; (c) a concern to provide regions where there was a shortage of clergy with sacred ministers. Such reasons make clear that the restoration of the permanent diaconate was in no manner intended to prejudice the meaning, role, or flourishing of the ministerial priesthood, which must always be fostered because of its indispensability....

Ecclesiological and Christological Perspective

4. First of all we must consider the diaconate, 5062 like every other Christian identity, from within the Church, which is understood as a mystery of trinitarian communion in missionary extension. This is a necessary, even if not the first, reference in the definition of the identity of every ordained minister insofar as its full truth consists in being a specific participation in and *5061 ⁶ In the early period of Christianity, every local Church needed a number of deacons proportionate to her numbers so that everyone might be known and helped (cf. Didascalia XII Apostolorum 16: F. X. Funk, ed., 1:208). Pope St. Fabian of Rome (236–250) divided the city into seven zones (or regiones, later called diaconiae) and placed a deacon (regionarius) in charge of each for promotion of charity and assistance to the poor. An analogous diaconal structure was found in many cities of East and West during the third and fourth centuries.

repraesentatio ministerii Christi.¹ Quo pacto intellegitur cur diacono manus imponantur atque peculiaris gratia sacramentalis conferatur, qua sacramentum ordinis inseritur.²

Specifica ad Christum conformatio

5. Diaconatus confertur per peculiarem effusionem Spiritus (ordinatio), quae in recipientis persona specificam efficit configurationem cum Christo, Domino et Servo omnium. In constitutione Lumen gentium (n. 29) explicatur, textu Constitutionum Ecclesiae Aegyptiacae allato, quod manuum impositio diacono non est “ad sacerdotium sed ad ministerium”,³ id est non ad celebrationem eucharisticam sed ad servitium. Quae animadversio una cum monitu Sancti Polycarpi in constitutione Lumen gentium (n. 29) pariter commemorato,⁴ specificam diaconi identitatem exhibet: is enim, prout unicus ministerii ecclesiastici particeps, est in Ecclesia specificum signum sacramentale Christi servi. Vi sui muneris debet esse “interpres necessitatum ac [846] votorum christianarum communitatum” atque “instimulator famulatus seu diaconiae”,⁵ quae est pars essentialis missionis Ecclesiae.

6. Materia ordinationis diaconalis est impositio manuum Episcopi; forma in verbis orationis ordinationis consistit, quae tribus momentis, anamnesi nempe, epiclesi et intercessione signatur.⁶...

Forma essentialis sacramenti est epiclesis quae his in verbis consistit: “Emitte in eum, Domine, quaesumus, Spiritum Sanctum, quo in opus ministerii fideliter exsequendi munere septiformis tuae gratiae roboretur”. Septem dona autem ex Isaiae 11:2 originem suam trahunt, et quidem in ampliata forma a Septuaginta mutuata. Haec sunt dona Spiritus in Messiam effusa, quae ordini initiatis participantur....

representation of the ministry of Christ.¹ This is why the deacon receives the laying on of hands and is sustained by a specific sacramental grace that inserts him into the sacrament of orders.²

Specific Conformation to Christ

5. The diaconate is conferred through a special outpouring of the Spirit (ordination), which brings about in the one who receives it a specific conformation to Christ, Lord and servant of all. Quoting a text of the Constitutiones Ecclesiae Aegyptiacae, Lumen gentium (no. 29) defines the laying on of hands on the deacon as being, not “ad sacerdotium sed ad ministerium”,³ that is, not for the celebration of the Eucharist, but for service. This indication, together with the admonition of St. Polycarp, also taken up again by Lumen gentium (no. 29),⁴ outlines the specific theological identity of the deacon: as a participation in the one ecclesiastical ministry, he is a specific sacramental sign, in the Church, of Christ the servant. His role is to “express the needs and desires of the Christian communities” and to be “a driving force for service, or diakonia”,⁵ which is an essential part of the mission of the Church.

“Matter” and “Form” of the Sacrament

6. The matter of diaconal ordination is the laying on of the hands of the bishop; the form is constituted by the words of the prayer of ordination, which is expressed in the three moments of anamnesis, epiclesis, and intercession.⁶...

The essential form of the sacrament is the epiclesis, which consists of the words: “Lord, send forth upon them the Holy Spirit, that they may be strengthened by the gift of your sevenfold grace to carry out faithfully the work of the ministry.” The seven gifts originate in a passage of Isaiah 11:2, from the fuller version given by the Septuagint. These are the gifts of the Spirit given to the Messiah, which are granted to the newly ordained....

Character and Specific Sacramental Grace

7. ... Just as in all sacraments that imprint character, grace has a permanent virtuality. It flowers again and again in the same measure in which it is received and accepted again and again in faith.

Relationship with Bishops and Priests

8. In the exercise of their power, deacons, since they share in a lower grade of ecclesiastical ministry, necessarily depend on the bishops, who have the fullness of the sacrament of orders. In addition, they are placed in a special relationship with the priests, in communion with whom they are called to serve the people of God.¹ ...

5065–5066: Motu proprio Ad tuendam fidem, May 18, 1998

The motu proprio Ad tuendam fidem expanded on CIC 1983 can. 749, § 1, and strengthened both the Professio fidei and the ius iurandum fidelitatis of 1989 (cf. AAS 81 [1989]: 104–6), which had been received only hesitantly. Both texts were published again together with a doctrinal explanation in 1998 (cf. *5070–5072). An appeal to the competency of the Magisterium to present truths definitively that are connected to doctrine on faith and morals can be found in the instruction of the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith Donum veritatis (*4877), in the encyclical Evangelium vitae (*4990–4993), as well as in the response to the question regarding Ordinatio sacerdotalis (*5040f.). In the Second Vatican Council, this question was not settled (cf. LG 25, *4149).

Hoc ipsum Symbolum Nicaenum-Constantinopolitanum continetur in Professione fidei, a Congregatione pro Doctrina Fidei ulterius elaborata,¹ quae specialiter imponitur determinatis christifidelibus emittenda in susceptione aliquorum officiorum directe vel indirecte respicientium profundiorum [458] investigationem in veritates de fide et de moribus aut coniunctorum cum peculiari potestate in Ecclesiae regimine.²

2. Professio fidei, rite praemisso Symbolo Nicaeno-Constantinopolitano, habet etiam tres propositiones aut commata, quae explicare intendunt fidei catholicae

To protect the faith of the Catholic Church against errors arising from certain members of the Christian faithful, especially from among those dedicated to the various disciplines of sacred theology, We, whose principal duty is to confirm the brethren in the faith [cf. Lk 22:32], consider it absolutely necessary to add to the existing texts of the Code of Canon Law and the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches new norms that expressly impose the obligation of upholding truths proposed in a definitive way by the Magisterium of the Church and that also establish related canonical sanctions.

1. From the first centuries to the present day, the Church has professed the truths of her faith in Christ and the mystery of his redemption. These truths were subsequently gathered into the Symbols of the faith, today known and proclaimed in common by the faithful in the solemn and festive celebration of Mass as the Apostles' Creed or the Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed.

This same Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed is contained in the profession of faith developed by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith,¹ which must be made by specific members of the faithful when they receive an office that is directly or indirectly related to deeper investigation into the truths of faith and morals or is united to a particular power in the governance of the Church.²

veritates ab Ecclesia, sub ductu Spiritus Sancti qui eam “omnem veritatem docebit” [Io 16:13], sequentibus temporibus altius perscrutatas aut perscrutandas.¹

Primum comma, quod enuntiat: “Firma fide quoque credo ea omnia quae in verbo Dei scripto vel tradito continentur et ab Ecclesia sive sollemni iudicio sive ordinario et universali Magisterio tamquam divinitus revelata credenda proponuntur”,² congruenter affirmat et suum praescriptum habet in legis latione universali Ecclesiae in can. 750 *Codicis Iuris Canonici*³ et in can. 598 Codicis Canonum Ecclesiarum Orientalium.⁴

Tertium comma edicens: “Insuper religioso voluntatis et intellectus obsequio doctrinis adhaereo quas sive Romanus Pontifex sive Collegium Episcoporum enuntiant cum Magisterium authenticum exercent etsi non definitivo actu easdem proclamare intendunt”,⁵ locum suum obtinet in can. [459] 752 *Codicis Iuris Canonici*⁶ et in can. 599 Codicis Canonum Ecclesiarum Orientalium.⁷

3. Attamen secundum comma, in quo asseveratur: “Firmiter etiam amplector ac retineo omnia et singula quae circa doctrinam de fide vel moribus ab eadem definitive proponuntur”,⁸ nullum habet congruentem canonem in Codicibus Ecclesiae Catholicae. Magni momenti est hoc comma Professionis fidei, quippe quod indicet veritates necessario conexas cum divina revelatione. Hae quidem

the truths of the Catholic faith, which the Church, in the course of time and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit “who will teach the whole truth” [Jn 16:13], has ever more deeply explored and will continue to explore.¹

The first paragraph states: “With firm faith, I also believe everything contained in the Word of God, whether written or handed down in tradition, which the Church either by a solemn judgment or by the ordinary and universal Magisterium sets forth to be believed as divinely revealed.”² This paragraph appropriately confirms and is provided for in the Church’s universal legislation, in canon 750 of the *Code of Canon Law*³ and canon 598 of the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches.⁴

The third paragraph states: “Moreover, I adhere with submission of will and intellect to the teachings that either the Roman pontiff or the college of bishops enunciate when they exercise their authentic Magisterium, even if they do not intend to proclaim these teachings by a definitive act.”⁵ This paragraph has its corresponding legislative expression in canon 752 of the *Code of Canon Law*⁶ and canon 599 of the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches.⁷

3. The second paragraph, however, which states “I also firmly accept and hold each and everything definitively proposed by the Church regarding teaching on faith and morals”,⁸ has no corresponding canon in the Codes of the Catholic Church. This second paragraph of the profession of faith is of utmost importance since it refers to truths that are necessarily connected to

10. Equivalent collegial actions cannot be carried out at the level of individual particular Churches or of gatherings of such Churches called together by their respective bishops. At the level of an individual Church, it is in the name of the Lord that the diocesan bishop leads the flock entrusted to him, and he does so as the proper, ordinary, and immediate pastor. His actions are strictly personal, not collegial, even when he has a sense of being in communion....

12. III. Episcopal Conferences

20. In the episcopal conference the bishops jointly exercise the episcopal ministry for the good of the faithful of the territory of the conference; but, for that exercise to be legitimate and binding on the individual bishops, there is needed the intervention of the supreme authority of the Church which, through universal law or particular mandates, entrusts determined questions to the deliberation of the episcopal conference. Bishops, whether individually or united in conference, cannot autonomously limit their own sacred power in favor of the episcopal conference, and even less can they do so in favor of one of its parts, whether the permanent council or a commission or the president. This logic is quite explicit in the canonical norm concerning the exercise of the legislative power of the bishops assembled in the episcopal conference: "The conference of bishops can issue general decrees only in those cases in which the common law prescribes it or a special mandate of the Apostolic See, given either motu proprio or at the request of the conference, determines it."¹ In other cases "the competence of individual diocesan bishops remains intact; and neither the conference nor its president may act in the name of all the bishops unless each and every bishop has given his consent."²...

22. In dealing with new questions and in acting so that the message of Christ enlightens and guides people's consciences in resolving new problems arising from changes in society, the bishops assembled in the episcopal conference and jointly exercising their teaching office are well aware of the limits of their pronouncements. While being official and authentic and in communion with the Apostolic See, these pronouncements do not have the characteristics of a universal Magisterium. For this reason the bishops are to be careful to avoid interfering with the doctrinal work of the bishops of other territories, bearing in mind the wider, even worldwide, resonance that the means of social communication give to the events of a particular region.

Taking into account that the authentic Magisterium of the bishops, namely, what they teach insofar as they are invested with the authority of Christ, must always be in communion with the Head of the college and its members,³ when the doctrinal declarations of episcopal conferences are approved unanimously, they may certainly be issued in the name of the conferences themselves, and the faithful are obliged to adhere with religious submission of mind to that authentic Magisterium of their own bishops. However, if this unanimity is lacking, a majority alone of the bishops of a conference cannot issue a declaration as authentic teaching of the conference to which all the faithful of the territory would have to adhere, unless it obtains the recognitio of the Apostolic See, which will not give it if the majority requesting it is not substantial. The intervention of the Apostolic See is analogous to that required by the law in order for the episcopal conference to issue general decrees.⁴ The recognitio of the Holy See serves, furthermore, to guarantee that, in dealing with new questions posed by the accelerated social and cultural changes characteristic of present times, the doctrinal response will favor communion and not harm it and will rather prepare an eventual intervention of the universal Magisterium. . . .

I, N.N., with firm faith believe everything that is contained in the Symbol of faith, namely:

I believe in one God, the Father, the Almighty ... [cf. *150].

With firm faith, I also believe everything contained in the Word of God, whether written or handed down in tradition, which the Church, either by a solemn judgment or by the ordinary and universal Magisterium, sets forth to be believed as divinely revealed.

I also accept and hold each and everything definitively proposed by the Church regarding teaching on faith and morals.

Moreover, I adhere with religious submission of will and intellect to the teachings that either the Roman pontiff or the college of bishops enunciate when they exercise their authentic Magisterium, even if they do not intend to proclaim these teachings by a definitive act. . . .

NOTA DOCTRINALIS PROFESSIONIS FIDEI FORMULAM
EXTREMAM ENUCLEANS

5071 [545] 4. Haec nova Professionis fidei formula symbolum Nicaenum-Constantinopolitanum rursus proponens ad finem perducitur tribus sententiis seu commatibus additis, quorum finis est ordines veritatis quibus fidelis adhaereat melius discernere. Operae pretium est horum commatum explanationem enucleare ita ut sensus primarius a Magisterio Ecclesiae praebitus bene intellegatur, recipiatur, integre conservetur.

Hodiernis quidem temporis verbum “Ecclesia” variis significationibus imbuitur quae, licet verae et congruentes, tamen distinctius sunt designandae, cum muneribus peculiaribus et propriis agatur eorum qui in Ecclesia operam dant. Quod ad quaestiones fidei vel disciplinae moralis spectat, patet tantum Summum Pontificem et Collegium Episcoporum in communione cum ipso commemorantium auctoritate docendi fidelesque obligandi pollere.¹ Episcopi enim “doctores authentici” fidei sunt “seu auctoritate Christi praediti”,² quia divina institutione Apostolis successerunt “in magisterio [546] et regimine pastoralis”; illi una simul cum Romano Pontifice supremam plenamque potestatem in universam Ecclesiam exercent, quae quidem potestas nonnisi Romano Pontifice consentiente exerceri potest.³

5. Primi commatis formula ... affirmatur obiectum docendi in omnibus doctrinis fidei divinae et catholicae constitui quae ab Ecclesia tamquam divinitus et rite revelatae, et ut tales immutabiles, proponuntur.⁴

Huius generis doctrinae in Verbo Dei scripto seu tradito continentur atque sententia sollemni tamquam veritates divinitus revelatae sive a Romano Pontifice “ex cathedra” loquente sive a Collegio Episcoporum ad concilium congregato definiuntur, sive dein a Magisterio ordinario et universali ad credendum infallibiliter proponuntur.

Hae doctrinae ex omnibus fidelibus assensum fidei theologalis exigunt. Proinde, si quis de iisdem contumaciter dubitaverit seu eas negaverit, censuram haeresos subibit, sicut in canonibus Codicis canonici ad rem attinentibus indicatur.⁵

DOCTRINAL COMMENTARY ON THE CONCLUDING FORMULA OF THE PROFESSION OF FAITH

4. This new formula of the profession of faith restates the Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed and concludes with the addition of three propositions or paragraphs intended to distinguish better the order of the truths to which the believer adheres. The correct explanation of these paragraphs deserves a clear presentation, so that their authentic meaning, as given by the Church’s Magisterium, will be well understood, received, and integrally preserved.

In contemporary usage, the term “Church” has come to include a variety of meanings, which, while true and consistent, require greater precision when one refers to the specific and proper functions of persons who act within the Church. In this area, it is clear that, on questions of faith and morals, the only subject qualified to fulfill the office of teaching with binding authority for the faithful is the supreme pontiff and the college of bishops in communion with him.¹ The bishops are the “authentic teachers” of the faith, “endowed with the authority of Christ”,² because by divine institution they are the successors of the apostles “in teaching and in pastoral governance”: together with the Roman pontiff they exercise supreme and full power over all the Church, although this power cannot be exercised without the consent of the Roman pontiff.³

5. In the first paragraph, ... the object taught is constituted by all those doctrines of divine and catholic faith that the Church proposes as divinely and formally revealed and, as such, irrefutable.⁴

These doctrines are contained in the Word of God, written or handed down, and defined with a solemn judgment as divinely revealed truths either by the Roman pontiff when he speaks “ex cathedra” or by the college of bishops gathered in council or infallibly proposed for belief by the ordinary and universal Magisterium.

These doctrines require the assent of theological faith by all members of the faithful. Thus, whoever obstinately places them in doubt or denies them falls under the censure of heresy, as indicated by the respective canons of the Codes of Canon Law.⁵

6. In the second proposition of the profession of faith ..., the object taught by this formula includes all doctrinas ad scientiam dogmaticam et moralem⁶ attinentes ad depositum fidei fideliter custodiendum et exponendum necessarias, licet a Magisterio Ecclesiae tamquam rite revelatae non sint propositae.

Huiusmodi doctrinae forma sollemni a Romano Pontifice “ex cathedra” loquente vel a Collegio Episcoporum ad concilium congregatorum definiri possunt, aut a Magisterio ordinario et universali Ecclesiae ut “sententia definitive tenenda”⁷ doceri. Unusquisque autem fidelis iis veritatibus firmiter et definitive assentiri debet fide de auxilio a Spiritu Sancto Magisterio Ecclesiae praebito necnon doctrina catholica de infallibilitate Magisterii his in rebus [547] innitens.⁸ Si quis illas negaverit, *veritatem doctrinae catholicae*⁹ respere videbitur eoque ipso in communione cum Ecclesia catholica amplius non erit plena.

7. Veritates ad secundum comma pertinentes variae naturae esse possunt variaque indole imbuuntur, quod a relatione earundem cum revelatione pendet. Exstant enim veritates nexu historico cum revelatione necessarie coniunctae; aliae autem veritates conexionem logicam ostendunt quae iter est conscientiae circa eandem revelationem perficiendae ad quod absolvendum Ecclesia vocatur. Quamquam eae doctrinae ut rite revelatae non proponuntur quippe quae fidei elementa non revelata vel nondum ut talia expressim agnita addant, indoles tamen definitiva iis non deest quae etiam nexu interiore cum veritate revelata demonstratur. Praeteres infitiandum non est processu dogmatico maturescente intelligentiam tum rerum veritatem cum verborum depositi fidei in vita Ecclesiae progredi posse necnon Magisterium aliquas earum doctrinarum dogmata fidei divinae et catholicae proclamare valere.

8. Quod ad naturam assensionis erga veritates quae vel tamquam divinitus revelatae ab Ecclesia proponuntur (in primo commate) vel tamquam definitivae sunt habendae (in secundo commate), magni est momenti in lucem proferre indolem assensionis erga utraque praecepta eodem modo esse plenam et irrevocabilem. Differentia ad virtutem supernaturalem fidei spectat:

those teachings belonging to the dogmatic or moral area⁶ that are necessary for faithfully keeping and expounding the deposit of faith, even if they have not been proposed by the Magisterium of the Church as formally revealed.

Such doctrines can be defined solemnly by the Roman pontiff when he speaks “ex cathedra” or by the college of bishops gathered in council, or they can be taught infallibly by the ordinary and universal Magisterium of the Church as a “doctrine definitively to be held”.⁷ Every believer, therefore, is required to give firm and definitive assent to these truths, based on faith in the Holy Spirit’s assistance to the Church’s Magisterium and on the Catholic doctrine of the infallibility of the Magisterium in these matters.⁸ Whoever denies these truths would be in a position of *rejecting a truth of Catholic doctrine*⁹ and would therefore no longer be in full communion with the Catholic Church.

7. The truths belonging to this second paragraph can be of various natures, thus giving different qualities to their relationship with revelation. There are truths that are necessarily connected with revelation by virtue of a historical relationship; while other truths evince a logical connection that expresses a stage in the maturation of understanding of revelation that the Church is called to undertake. The fact that these doctrines may not be proposed as formally revealed, insofar as they add to the data of faith elements that are not revealed or that are not yet expressly recognized as such, in no way diminishes their definitive character, which is required at least by their intrinsic connection with revealed truth. Moreover, it cannot be excluded that at a certain point in dogmatic development, the understanding of the realities and the words of the deposit of faith can progress in the life of the Church, and the Magisterium may proclaim some of these doctrines as also dogmas of divine and catholic faith.

8. With regard to the nature of the assent owed to the truths set forth by the Church as divinely revealed (those of the first paragraph) or to be held definitively (those of the second paragraph), it is important to emphasize that there is no difference with respect to the full and irrevocable character of the assent that is owed to these teachings. The difference concerns the supernatural assensio enim erga veritates primi commatis recta via fide de auctoritate Verbi Dei innitur (doctrinae de fide credenda); fundamenta autem assensionis erga veritates secundi commatis in fide de auxilio a Spiritu Sancto Magisterio praebito et in doctrina catholica de infallibilitate Magisterii (doctrinae de fide tenenda) ponuntur.

9. Utcumque Magisterium Ecclesiae doctrinam tamquam divinitus revelatam credendam (in primo commate) aut definitive retinendam (in secundo commate) actu definitivo aut non definitivo docet. Si de actu definitivo agitur, veritas sollemniter definitur pronuntiatione Romani Pontificis “ex cathedra” aut interventu Concilii Oecumenici. Sin de actu non definitivo agitur, doctrina a Magisterio ordinario et universali Episcoporum qui ubique terrarum in communionem cum Successore Petri versantur, infallibiliter docetur. Huiusmodi doctrina confirmari seu iterum affirmari potest a Romano [548] Pontifice nulla etiam definitione sollemni pronuntiata declarante eandem doctrinam ad institutionem Magisterii ordinarii et universalis tamquam veritatem divinitus revelatam (in primo commate) aut tamquam veritatem doctrinae catholicae (in secundo commate) pertinere. Idcirco, cum de aliqua doctrina nullum in forma sollemni definitionis exstet iudicium, sed eadem a Magisterio ordinario et universali—in cuius numerum Papa necessarie confertur—doceatur quippe quae ad patrimonium depositi fidei respiciat, intellegenda est tunc tamquam infallibiliter proposita.¹ Ergo Romani Pontificis declaratio confirmandi seu iterum affirmandi actus dogmatizationis novus non est, sed confirmatio formalis veritatis ab Ecclesia iam obtentae atque infallibiliter traditae.

10. Tertia Professionis fidei sententia affirmat: “Insuper religioso voluntatis et intellectus obsequio doctrinis adhaero quas sive Romanus Pontifex sive Collegium episcoporum enuntiant cum Magisterium authenticum exercent etsi non definitivo actu easdem proclamare intendant.”

Ad hoc comma pertinet omnis institutio de fide et de re morali tamquam vera aut saltem tamquam certa exhibitae, licet iudicio sollemni non definita nec a Magisterio ordinario et universali tamquam definita proposita. Nihilominus tamen tales institutiones Magisterium virtue of faith: in the case of truths of the first paragraph, the assent is based directly on faith in the authority of the Word of God (doctrines to be believed as of the faith [de fide credenda]); in the case of the truths of the second paragraph, the assent is based on faith in the Holy Spirit’s assistance to the Magisterium and on the Catholic doctrine of the infallibility of the Magisterium (doctrines to be held as of the faith [de fide tenenda]).

9. The Magisterium of the Church, however, teaches a doctrine to be believed as divinely revealed (first paragraph) or to be held definitively (second paragraph) with an act that is either defining or non-defining. In the case of a defining act, a truth is solemnly defined by an “ex cathedra” pronouncement by the Roman pontiff or by the action of an ecumenical council. In the case of a non-defining act, a doctrine is taught infallibly by the ordinary and universal Magisterium of the bishops dispersed throughout the world who are in communion with the successor of Peter. Such a doctrine can be confirmed or reaffirmed by the Roman pontiff, even without recourse to a solemn definition, by declaring explicitly that it belongs to the teaching of the ordinary and universal Magisterium as a truth that is divinely revealed (first paragraph) or as a truth of Catholic doctrine (second paragraph). Consequently, when there has not been a judgment on a doctrine in the solemn form of a definition, but this doctrine, belonging to the inheritance of the deposit of faith, is taught by the ordinary and universal Magisterium, which necessarily includes the pope, such a doctrine is to be understood as having been set forth infallibly.¹ The declaration of confirmation or reaffirmation by the Roman pontiff in this case is not a new dogmatic definition, but a formal attestation of a truth already possessed and infallibly transmitted by the Church.

10. The third proposition of the profession of faith states: “Moreover, I adhere with religious submission of will and intellect to the teachings that either the Roman pontiff or the college of bishops enunciate when they exercise their authentic Magisterium, even if they do not intend to proclaim these teachings by a definitive act.”

To this paragraph belong all those teachings on faith and morals—presented as true or at least as sure, even if they have not been defined with a solemn judgment or proposed as definitive by the ordinary and universal Magisterium. Such teachings are, however, an authentic *5072 ¹ It should be noted that the infallible teaching of the ordinary and universal Magisterium is not only set forth with an explicit declaration of a doctrine to be believed or held definitively, but it is also expressed by a doctrine implicitly contained in a practice of the Church’s faith, derived from revelation, or, in any case, necessary for eternal salvation, and attested to by the uninterrupted tradition: such an infallible teaching is thus objectively set forth by the whole episcopal body, understood in a diachronic and not necessarily synchronic sense. Furthermore, the intention of the ordinary and universal Magisterium to set forth a doctrine as definitive is not generally linked to technical formulation of particular solemnity; it is enough that it be clear from the tenor of the words used and from their context.

A proposition contrary to these doctrines can be qualified as erroneous or, in the case of teachings of the prudential order, as rash or dangerous and therefore unable to be taught safely.⁴ . . .

5073–5074: Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity and the Lutheran World Federation, Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification, June 1998

The Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification summarizes the results of more than thirty years of Lutheran and Roman Catholic mutual discussions. The Joint Declaration was accepted by the Catholic Church and the Lutheran World Federation on October 31, 1999, in the common statement, to which an annex is attached (cf. *5081).

Ed.: The Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, Information Service, no. 98 (Vatican City, 1998/III): 83–86.

3. The Common Understanding of Justification

[83] 14. The Lutheran churches and the Roman Catholic Church have together listened to the good news proclaimed in Holy Scripture. This common listening, together with the theological conversations of recent years, has led to a shared understanding of justification. This encompasses a consensus in the basic truths; the differing explications in particular statements are compatible with it.

15. In faith we together hold the conviction that justification is the work of the triune God. The Father sent his Son into the world to save sinners. The foundation and presupposition of justification is the Incarnation, death, and Resurrection of Christ. Justification thus means that Christ himself is our righteousness, in which we share through the Holy Spirit in accord with the will of the Father.

Together we confess: By grace alone, in faith in Christ's saving work and not because of any merit on our part, we are accepted by God and receive the Holy Spirit, who renews our hearts while equipping and calling us to good works.¹

16. All people are called by God to salvation in Christ. Through Christ alone are we justified, when we receive this salvation in faith. Faith is itself God's gift through the Holy Spirit, who works through word and sacrament in the community of believers and who, at the same time, leads believers into that renewal of life which God will bring to completion in eternal life. 5073

17. We also share the conviction that the message of justification directs us in a special way toward the heart of the New Testament witness to God's saving action in Christ: it tells us that as sinners our new life is solely due to the forgiving and renewing mercy that God imparts as a gift and we receive in faith and never can merit in any way.

18. Therefore the doctrine of justification, which takes up this message and explicates it, is more than just one part of Christian doctrine. It stands in an essential relation to all truths of faith, which are to be seen as internally related to each other. It is an indispensable criterion which constantly serves to orient all the teaching and practice of our churches to Christ. When Lutherans emphasize the unique significance of this criterion, they do not deny the interrelation and significance of all truths of faith.

When Catholics see themselves as bound by several criteria, they do not deny the special function of the message of justification. Lutherans and Catholics share the goal of confessing Christ in all things, who alone is to be trusted above all things as the one Mediator (1 Tim 2:5f.) through whom God in the Holy Spirit gives himself and pours out his renewing gifts. . . .

5. The Significance and Scope of the Consensus Reached

- 5074 43. Our consensus in basic truths of the doctrine of justification must come to influence the life and teachings of our churches. Here it must prove itself. In this respect, there are still questions of varying importance which need further clarification. These include, among other topics, the relationship between the Word of God and church doctrine, as well as ecclesiology, ecclesial authority, church unity, ministry, the sacraments, and the relation between justification and social ethics. We are convinced that the consensus we have reached offers a solid basis for this clarification....

CHAPTER I THE REVELATION OF DIVINE WISDOM

... 11. God’s revelation is therefore immersed in time and history. Jesus Christ took flesh in the “fullness of time” [Gal 4:4]; and two thousand years later, I feel bound to restate forcefully that “in Christianity time has a fundamental importance.”¹ It is within time that the whole work of creation and salvation comes to light; and it emerges clearly, above all, that, with the Incarnation of the Son of God, our life is even now a foretaste of the fulfillment of time that is to come [cf. Heb 1:2]....

12. History therefore becomes the arena where we see what God does for humanity. God comes to us in the things we know best and can verify most easily, the things of our everyday life, apart from which we cannot understand ourselves.

In the Incarnation of the Son of God we see forged the enduring and definitive synthesis that the human mind of itself could not even have imagined: the Eternal enters time, the Whole lies hidden in the part, God takes on a human face. The truth communicated in Christ’s revelation is therefore no longer confined to a particular place or culture but is offered to every man and woman who would welcome it as the Word that is the absolutely valid source of meaning for human life....

13. ... By faith, man gives his assent to this divine testimony.

calling”,² which is to share in the divine mystery of the life of the Trinity.³...

CHAPTER II
I BELIEVE SO AS TO UNDERSTAND

16. ... What is distinctive in the biblical text is the conviction that there is a profound and indissoluble unity between the knowledge of reason and the knowledge of faith. The world and all that happens within it, including history and the fate of peoples, are realities to be observed, analyzed, and assessed with all the resources of reason, but without faith ever being foreign to the process. Faith intervenes, not to abolish reason’s autonomy or to reduce its scope for action, but solely to bring man to understand that in these events it is the God of Israel who acts...

23. ... Of itself, philosophy is able to recognize man’s ceaselessly self-transcendent orientation toward the truth; and, with the assistance of faith, it is capable of accepting the “foolishness” of the Cross as the authentic critique of those who delude themselves that they possess the truth, when in fact they run it aground on the shoals of a system of their own devising. The preaching of Christ crucified and risen is the reef upon which the link between faith and philosophy can break up, but it is also the reef beyond which the two can set forth upon the boundless ocean of truth. Here we see not only the border between reason and faith, but also the space where the two may meet.

CHAPTER III
I UNDERSTAND SO AS TO BELIEVE

31. ... This means that man—the one who seeks the truth—is also the one who lives by belief.

32. In believing, he entrusts himself to the knowledge acquired by other people. This suggests an important tension. On the one hand, the knowledge acquired through belief can seem an imperfect form of knowledge, to be perfected gradually through personal accumulation of evidence; on the other hand, belief is often humanly richer than mere evidence, because it involves an interpersonal relationship and brings into play not only a person’s capacity to know but also the deeper capacity to entrust oneself to others, to enter into a relationship with them that is intimate and enduring.

... At the same time, however, knowledge through belief, grounded as it is on trust between persons, is linked to truth: in the act of believing, man entrusts himself to the truth that the other declares to him...

From all that I have said to this point it emerges that man is on a journey of discovery that is humanly unstoppable—a search for the truth and a search for a person to whom he might entrust himself. Christian faith comes to meet him, offering the concrete possibility of reaching the goal he seeks. ...

34. This truth, which God reveals to us in Jesus Christ, is not opposed to the truths that philosophy perceives. On the contrary, the two modes of knowledge lead to truth in all its fullness. The unity of truth is a fundamental premise of human reasoning, as the principle of noncontradiction makes clear. Revelation renders this unity certain, showing that the God of creation is also the God of salvation history. It is one and the same God who establishes and guarantees the intelligibility and reasonableness of the natural order of things upon which scientists confidently depend¹ and who reveals himself as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. This unity of truth, natural and revealed, is embodied in a living and personal way in Christ. ...

CHAPTER V

THE MAGISTERIUM'S INTERVENTIONS IN PHILOSOPHICAL MATTERS

The Magisterium's Discernment as Diakonia of the Truth

49. ... It is neither the task nor the competence of the Magisterium to intervene in order to make good the lacunae of deficient philosophical discourse. Rather, it is the Magisterium's duty to respond clearly and strongly when controversial philosophical opinions threaten right understanding of what has been revealed and when false and partial theories that sow the seed of serious error, confusing the pure and simple faith of the people of God, begin to spread more widely. ...

CHAPTER VI

THE INTERACTION BETWEEN PHILOSOPHY AND THEOLOGY

72. ... In India particularly, it is the duty of Christians now to draw from this rich heritage the elements compatible with their faith, in order to enrich Christian thought. In this work of discernment, which finds its inspiration in the council's declaration Nostra aetate, certain criteria will have to be kept in mind. The first of *5077 ¹ "[Galileo] declared explicitly that the two truths, of faith and science, can never contradict each other, 'Sacred Scripture and the natural world proceeding equally from the divine Word, the first as dictated by the Holy Spirit, the second as a faithful executor of the commands of God', as he wrote in his letter to Father Benedetto Castelli on December 21, 1613. The Second Vatican Council says the same thing, even adopting similar language in its teaching: 'Methodical research, in all realms of knowledge, if it respects ... moral norms, will never be genuinely opposed to the faith: the reality of the world and of faith have their origin in the same God' (Gaudium et spes, no. 36). Galileo sensed in his scientific research the presence of the Creator, who, stirring in the depths of his spirit, stimulated him, anticipating and assisting his intuitions": John Paul II, address to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences (November 10, 1979): Insegnamenti II, 2 (1979), 1111–12.

normas ii ob oculos habebunt. Prima norma est humani spiritus universalitas cuius postulata in diversissimis culturis eadem reperiuntur. Altera, quae ex prima oritur, haec est: cum Ecclesia maioris momenti convenit culturas antea haud attactas, id, quod per inculturationem Graecae et Latinae disciplinae adepta est, posthabere non potest. Talis si repudiaretur hereditas, providum Dei consilium oppugnaretur, qui per temporis historiaeque semitam suam ducit Ecclesiam. Haec, ceteroqui, iudicandi lex propria est Ecclesiae omnium aetatum, etiam subsequentis, quae se persentiet divitem factam iis ex rebus quas adepta erit per orientalium culturarum hodiernum accessum, et in hac hereditate nova indicia reperiet, ut frugifer instituat dialogus cum culturis illis, quas humanitas iuvabit ut prosperent in suo ad futuram aetatem itinere. Tertio, cavebitur ne legitima proprietatis singularitatisque Indianae philosophiae expostulatio cum sententia illa confundatur, culturalem scilicet traditionem sua in diversitate concludi debere eamque per dissidentiam cum ceteris traditionibus emergere, quod quidem naturae humani spiritus ipsi est contrarium.

Quod de India dictum est, adscribitur patrimonio praestantium culturarum Sinensium et Iaponensium aliarumque Asiae Nationum itemque refertur thesauro culturarum Africae translatiicarum, quae verbis potissimum sunt transmissae.

73. His rebus consideratis, necessitudo quae inter theologiam et philosophiam opportune institui debet notam habebit cuiusdam circularis progres [62] sionis. Theologiae initium atque primigenius fons est Dei verbum in historia revelatum, dum ultimum propositum necessario erit ipsius intellectio quae sensim est perspecta succedentibus aetatibus. Quandoquidem autem Dei verbum est Veritas [cf. Io 17,17], fieri non potest quin ad eiusdem aptiorem intellectum opem conferat humanae veritatis inquisitio, philosophans scilicet mens, quae suis servatis legibus explicatur. Non agitur de hac vel illa notione vel parte cuiusdam systematis philosophici in theologico sermone simpliciter adhibenda; decretorium est quod fidelis ratio suae cogitationis facultatem exerceat ad verum reperiendum quendam intra motum, qui, initium ex Dei verbo sumens, consequi conatur pleniorum eiusdem comprehensionem....

POSTULATA HODIERNA ET OFFICIA

Verbi Dei postulationes haud renuntiandae

[67] 80. ... Primaria huius “philosophiae” in Bibliis repositae persuasio haec est: humana vita et mundus ipse aliquid significant et ordinantur ad sui perfectionem quam in Christo Iesu eveniunt....

[68] 81. ... Ut autem verbo Dei conveniat necesse in primis est philosophia suam reperiatur sapientialem these is the universality of the human spirit, whose basic needs are the same in the most disparate cultures. The second, which derives from the first, is this: in engaging great cultures for the first time, the Church cannot abandon what she has gained from her inculturation in the world of Greco-Latin thought. To reject this heritage would be to deny the providential plan of God, who guides his Church down the paths of time and history. This criterion is valid for the Church in every age, even for the Church of the future, who will judge herself enriched by all that comes from today’s engagement with Eastern cultures and will find in this inheritance fresh cues for fruitful dialogue with the cultures that will emerge as mankind moves into the future. Thirdly, care will need to be taken lest, contrary to the very nature of the human spirit, the legitimate defense of the uniqueness and originality of Indian thought be confused with the idea that a particular cultural tradition should remain closed in its difference and affirm itself by opposing other traditions.

What has been said here of India is no less true for the heritage of the great cultures of China, Japan, and the other countries of Asia, as also for the riches of the traditional cultures of Africa, which are for the most part orally transmitted.

73. In the light of these considerations, the relationship between theology and philosophy is best construed as a circle. Theology’s source and starting point must always be the Word of God revealed in history, while its final goal will be an understanding of that Word which increases with each passing generation. Yet, since God’s Word is Truth [cf. Jn 17:17], the human search for truth—philosophy, pursued in keeping with its own rules—can only help to achieve a better understanding of God’s Word. It is not just a question of theological discourse using this or that concept or element of a philosophical construct; what matters most is that the believer’s reason use its powers of reflection in the search for truth that moves from the Word of God toward a fuller understanding of it....

CHAPTER VII

CURRENT REQUIREMENTS AND TASKS

The Indispensable Requirements of the Word of God

80. ... The fundamental conviction of the “philosophy” found in the Bible is that the world and human life do have a meaning and look toward their fulfillment, which comes in Jesus Christ....

81. ... To be consonant with the Word of God, philosophy needs first of all to recover its sapiential amplitudinem quaerendi novissimum ac omnia complectentem sensum vitae. Haec prima necessitas, si res bene ponderantur, ipsi philosophiae addit perutile incitamentum ut suae ipsius naturae accomodetur. Id agens, enim, non erit dumtaxat decretoria quaedam et critica postulatio quae diversis scientiae partibus earum fundamentum ac limitem designat, verum proponetur etiam veluti extrema facultas colligandi totam scientiam actionemque hominum, dum ad unum finem eos concurrere cogit adque sensum ultimum....

Hodierna theologia officia

dimension as a search for the ultimate and overarching meaning of life. This first requirement is in fact most helpful in stimulating philosophy to conform to its proper nature. In doing so, it will be not only the decisive critical factor that determines the foundations and limits of the different fields of scientific learning, but it will also take its place as the ultimate framework of the unity of human knowledge and action, leading them to converge toward a final goal and meaning....

82. Yet this sapiential function could not be performed by a philosophy that was not itself a true and authentic knowledge, addressed, that is, not only to particular and subordinate aspects of reality—functional, formal, or utilitarian—but to its total and definitive truth, to the very being of the object that is known. This prompts a second requirement: that philosophy verify the human capacity to know the truth....

83. The two requirements already stipulated imply a third: the need for a philosophy of genuinely metaphysical range, capable, that is, of transcending empirical data in order to attain something absolute, ultimate, and foundational in its search for truth. This requirement is implicit in sapiential and analytical knowledge alike; and in particular it is a requirement for knowing the moral good, which has its ultimate foundation in the Supreme Good, God himself. Here I do not mean to speak of metaphysics in the sense of a specific school or a particular historical current of thought. I want only to state that reality and truth do transcend the factual and the empirical and to vindicate man's capacity to know this transcendent and metaphysical dimension in a way that is true and certain, albeit imperfect and analogical....

85. ... In the present situation, therefore, it is most significant that some philosophers are promoting a recovery of the determining role of this tradition for a right approach to knowledge. The appeal to tradition is not a mere remembrance of the past; it involves rather the recognition of a cultural heritage that belongs to all mankind. Indeed, it may be said that it is we who belong to the tradition and that it is not ours to dispose of at will. Precisely by being rooted in the tradition will we be able today to develop for the future an original, new, and constructive mode of thinking. This same appeal is all the more valid for theology....

Current Tasks for Theology

92. As an understanding of revelation, theology has always had to respond in different historical moments to the demands of different cultures, in order then to mediate the content of faith to those cultures in a coherent and fidei elementa tradere posset. Hodie quoque duplex ad eam pertinet munus. Altera ex parte opus explicet illa oportet quod Concilium Oecumenicum Vaticanum II suo tempore ei commisit: suas ut proprias renovaret docendi rationes quo evangelizationi efficacius inserviret. . . .

Ex altera vero parte oculos theologia intendat necesse est ultimam in veritatem quam ei commendat Revelatio ipsa neque sibi satis esse existimet in mediis consistere intervallis. Decet enim reminisci theologum opus suum respondere “ad vim dynamicam, quae in ipsa fide inest” suaeque inquisitionis argumentum id esse: “Veritas, Deus vivus eiusque salutis consilium per Iesum Christum revelatum”.¹ . . .

[81] 97. . . . Si traditionis theologiae universos complecti vult intellectus fidei thesaurus, ad philosophiam essendi decurrere debet. Haec enim necessario quaestionem essendi rursus proponet secundum postulationes atque totius traditionis philosophicae etiam recentioris utilitates adlatas, omni omissa opportunitate in superatas iam philosophicas rationes futiliter recidendi. . . .

Conclusio

[85] . . . 105. His Litteris encyclicis finem imponentibus, Nobis placet cumprimis ad theologos mentem Nostram postremo convertere, qui peculiari animi intentione philosophicas Dei verbi implicationes observent ac cogitationes in illa re defigant, unde speculativa ac practica scientiae theologiae granditas emergat. conceptually clear way. Today, too, theology faces a dual task. On the one hand, it must be increasingly committed to the task entrusted to it by the Second Vatican Council, the task of renewing its specific methods in order to serve evangelization more effectively. . . .

On the other hand, theology must look to the ultimate truth that revelation entrusts to it, never content to stop short of that goal. Theologians should remember that their work corresponds “to a dynamism found in the faith itself” and that the proper object of their inquiry is “the Truth which is the living God and his plan for salvation revealed in Jesus Christ”.¹ . . .

97. . . . If the understanding of the faith wishes to integrate all the wealth of the theological tradition, it must turn to the philosophy of being, which should be able to propose anew the problem of being—and this in harmony with the demands and insights of the entire philosophical tradition, including philosophy of more recent times, without lapsing into sterile repetition of antiquated formulas. . . .

Conclusion

. . . 105. In concluding this encyclical letter, my thoughts turn particularly to theologians, encouraging them to pay special attention to the philosophical implications of the Word of God and to be sure to reflect in their work all the speculative and practical breadth of the science of theology. I wish to thank them for their service to the Church. The intimate bond between theological and philosophical wisdom is one of the Christian tradition’s most distinctive treasures in the exploration of revealed truth. This is why I urge them to recover and express to the full the metaphysical dimension of truth in order to enter into a demanding critical dialogue with both contemporary philosophical thought and with the philosophical tradition in all its aspects, whether consonant with the Word of God or not. . . .

. . . 106. I appeal also to philosophers and to all teachers of philosophy, asking them to have the courage to recover, in the flow of an enduringly valid philosophical tradition, the range of authentic wisdom and truth—metaphysical truth included—which is proper to philosophical inquiry. They should be open to the impelling questions that arise from the Word of God, and they should be strong enough to shape their thought and discussion in response to that challenge. Let them always strive for truth, alert to the good that truth contains. Then they will be

The Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification (*5073f.) was ratified by the Lutheran World Federation and the Catholic Church with the “Official Common Statement”. At the same time, the partners committed themselves to a continuation of the dialogue. The attached appendix (annex) explains the consensus that was reached: the previous mutual doctrinal condemnations no longer affect the teaching of the present dialogue partners.

Ed.: The Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, Information Service, no. 103 (Vatican City, 2000/I–II): 4–6.

5081 . . . Based on the consensus reached, continued dialogue is required specifically on the issues mentioned especially in the Joint Declaration itself (JD 43) as requiring further clarification in order to reach full church communion, a unity in diversity, in which remaining differences would be “reconciled” and no longer have a divisive force. Lutherans and Catholics will continue their efforts ecumenically in their common witness to interpret the message of justification in language relevant for human beings today and with reference to both individual and social concerns of our times.

By this act of signing, The Catholic Church and The Lutheran World Federation confirm the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification in its entirety.¹

¹Annex to the official common statement

1. The following elucidations underline the consensus reached in the Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification (JD) regarding basic truths of justification; thus it becomes clear that the mutual condemnations of former times do not apply to the Catholic and Lutheran doctrines of justification as they are presented in the Joint Declaration.

2. “Together we confess: By grace alone, in faith in Christ’s saving work and not because of any merit on our part, we are accepted by God and receive the Holy Spirit, who renews our hearts while equipping and calling us to good works” (JD 15).

A. “We confess together that God forgives sin by grace and at the same time frees human beings from sin’s enslaving power . . .” (JD 22). Justification is forgiveness of sins and being made righteous, through which God “imparts the gift of new life in Christ” (JD 22). “Since we are justified by faith we have peace with God” (Rom 5:1). We are “called children of God; and that is what we are” (1 Jn 3:1). We are truly and inwardly renewed by the action of the Holy Spirit, remaining always dependent on his work in us. “So if anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation: everything old has passed away; see, everything has become new!” (2 Cor 5:17). The justified do not remain sinners in this sense.

Yet we would be wrong were we to say that we are without sin (1 Jn 1:8–10, cf. JD 28). “All of us make many mistakes” (Jas 3:2). “Who is aware of his unwitting sins? Cleanse me of many secret faults” (Ps 19:12). And when we pray, we can only say, like the tax collector, “God, be merciful to me, a sinner” (Lk 18:13). This is expressed in a variety of ways in our liturgies. Together we hear the exhortation “Therefore, do not let sin exercise dominion in your mortal bodies, to make you obey their passions” (Rom 6:12). This recalls to us the persisting danger which comes from the power of sin and its action in Christians. To this extent, Lutherans and Catholics can together understand the Christian as simul justus et peccator, despite their different approaches to this subject as expressed in JD 29–30.

B. The concept of “concupiscence” is used in different senses on the Catholic and Lutheran sides. In the Lutheran Confessional writings “concupiscence” is understood as the self-seeking desire of the human being, which in light of the Law, spiritually understood, is regarded as sin. In the Catholic understanding concupiscence is an inclination, remaining in human beings even after baptism, which comes from sin and presses toward sin. Despite the differences involved here, it can be recognized from a Lutheran perspective that desire can become the opening through which sin attacks. Due to the power of sin the entire human being carries the tendency to oppose God. This tendency, according to both Lutheran and Catholic conception, “does not correspond to God’s original design for humanity” (JD 30). Sin has a personal character and, as such, leads to separation from God. It is the selfish desire of the old person and the lack of trust and love toward God.

The reality of salvation in baptism and the peril from the power of sin can be expressed in such a way that, on the one hand, the forgiveness of sins and renewal of humanity in Christ by baptism is emphasized and, on the other hand, it can be seen that the justified also “are continuously exposed to the power of sin still pressing its attacks (cf. Rom 6:12–14) and are not exempt from a lifelong struggle against the contradiction to God . . .” (JD 28).

C. Justification takes place “by grace alone” (JD 15 and 16); by faith alone, the person is justified “apart from works” (Rom 3:28, cf. JD 25). “Grace creates faith not only when faith begins in a person but as long as faith lasts” (Thomas Aquinas, S. Th. II/II 4, 4 ad 3). The working of God’s grace does not exclude human action: God effects everything, the willing and the achievement; therefore, we are called to strive (cf. Phil 2:12ff.). “As soon as the Holy Spirit has initiated his work of regeneration and renewal in us through the Word and the holy sacraments, it is certain that we can and must cooperate by the power of the Holy Spirit . . .” (The Formula of Concord, FC SD II, 64f.; BSLK 897, 37ff.).

D. Grace as fellowship of the justified with God in faith, hope, and love is always received from the salvific and creative work of God (cf. JD 27). But it is nevertheless the responsibility of the justified not to waste this grace but to live in it. The exhortation to do good works is the exhortation to practice the faith (cf. BSLK 197, 45). The good works of the justified “should be done in order to confirm their call, that is, lest they fall from their call by sinning again” (Apol. XX, 13, BSLK 316, 18–24; with reference to 2 Pet 1:10. Cf. also FC SD IV, 33; BSLK 948, 9–23). In this sense Lutherans and Catholics can understand together what is said about the “preservation of grace” in JD 38 and 39. Certainly, “whatever in the justified precedes or follows the free gift of faith neither is the basis of justification nor merits it” (JD 25).

E. By justification we are unconditionally brought into communion with God. This includes the promise of eternal life; “If we have been united with him in a death like his, we will certainly be united with him in a resurrection like his” (Rom 6:5, cf. Jn 3:36, Rom 8:17). In the final judgment, the justified will be judged also on their works (cf. Mt 16:27; 25:31–46; Rom 2:16; 14:12; 1 Cor 3:8; 2 Cor 5:10, etc.). We face a judgment in which God’s gracious sentence will approve anything in our life and action that corresponds to his will. However, everything in our life that is wrong will be uncovered and will not enter eternal life. The Formula of Concord also states: “It is God’s will and express command that believers should do good works which the Holy Spirit works in them, and God is willing to be pleased with them for Christ’s sake, and he promises to reward them gloriously in this and in the future life” (FC SD IV, 38). Any reward is a reward of grace, on which we have no claim.

3. The doctrine of justification is measure or touchstone for the Christian faith. No teaching may contradict this criterion. In this sense, the doctrine of justification is an “indispensable criterion which constantly serves to orient all the teaching and practice of our churches to Christ” (JD 18). As such, it has its truth and specific meaning within the overall context of the Church’s fundamental trinitarian confession of faith. We “share the goal of confessing Christ in all things, who is to be trusted above all things as the one Mediator (1 Tim 2:5–6) through whom God in the Holy Spirit gives himself and pours out his renewing gifts” (JD 18).

4. The Response of the Catholic Church does not intend to put in question the authority of Lutheran Synods or of the Lutheran World Federation. The Catholic Church and the Lutheran World Federation began the dialogue and have taken it forward as partners with equal rights (“par cum pari”). Notwithstanding different conceptions of authority in the church, each partner respects the other partner’s ordered process of reaching doctrinal decisions.

5082–5083: Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation Ecclesia in Asia, November 6, 1999

In the apostolic exhortation, John Paul II summarizes the results of the Special Assembly for Asia of the Roman Synod of Bishops (April 18–May 14, 1998).

Ed.: AAS 92 (2000), 472–507.

CHAPTER III: THE HOLY SPIRIT: LORD AND GIVER OF LIFE

The Spirit of God in Creation and History

[472] 15. ... Following the lead of the Second Vatican Council, the synod Fathers drew attention to the multiple and diversified action of the Holy Spirit, who continually sows the seeds of truth among all peoples, their religions, [473] cultures, and philosophies.¹ This means that these religions, cultures, and philosophies are capable of helping people, individually and collectively, to work against evil and to serve life and everything that is good. The forces of death isolate people, societies, and religious communities from one another and generate the suspicion and rivalry that lead to conflict. The Holy Spirit, by contrast, sustains people in their search for mutual understanding and acceptance. The synod was therefore right to see the Spirit of God as the prime agent of the Church’s dialogue with all peoples, cultures, and religions. 5082

The Holy Spirit and the Incarnation of the Word

[474] 16. ... The presence of the Spirit in creation and history points to Jesus Christ, in whom creation and history are redeemed and fulfilled. The presence and action of the Spirit both before the Incarnation and in the climactic moment of Pentecost point always to Jesus and to the salvation he brings. So [475] too the Holy Spirit’s universal presence can never be separated from his activity within the Body of Christ, the Church.²...

CHAPTER IV: JESUS THE SAVIOR: PROCLAIMING THE GIFT

Proclaiming Jesus Christ in Asia

[482] 20. ... Yet at the same time the synod Fathers were well aware of the pressing need of the local Churches in Asia to present the mystery of Christ to their peoples according to their cultural patterns and ways of thinking. They pointed out that such an inculturation of the faith on their continent involves rediscovering the Asian countenance of Jesus and identifying ways in which the cultures of Asia can grasp the universal saving Matteo Ricci, and Roberto de Nobili, to mention only a few, needs to be emulated at the present time....

CHAPTER V: COMMUNION AND DIALOGUE FOR MISSION

A Mission of Dialogue

5083 29. ... [499] The Church can accomplish her mission only in a way that corresponds to the way in which God acted in Jesus Christ: he became man, shared our human life, and spoke in a human language to communicate his saving message. The dialogue which the Church proposes is grounded in the logic of the Incarnation. Therefore, nothing but fervent and unselfish solidarity prompts the Church's dialogue with the men and women of Asia who seek the truth in love....

Ecumenical Dialogue

30. Ecumenical dialogue is a challenge and a call to conversion for the whole Church, especially for the Church in Asia, where people expect from Christians a clearer sign of unity....

CHAPTER VI: THE SERVICE OF HUMAN PROMOTION

Preferential Love of the Poor

[506] 34. In seeking to promote human dignity, the Church shows a preferential love of the poor and the voiceless, because the Lord has identified himself with them in a special way [cf. Mt 25:40]....

[507] ... No one can remain indifferent to the suffering of the countless children in Asia who fall victim to intolerable exploitation and violence, not just as the result of the evil perpetrated by individuals, but often as a direct consequence of corrupt social structures. The synod Fathers identified child labor, pedophilia, and the drug culture as the social evils which affect children most directly, and they saw clearly that these evils are compounded by others like poverty and ill-conceived programs of national development.¹ The Church must do all she can to overcome such evils....

5085–5089: Declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on the Unicity and Salvific Universality of Jesus Christ and the Church Dominus Iesus, August 6, 2000

The declaration Dominus Iesus deals with the salvific significance of Jesus Christ and the Church in interreligious and interconfessional dialogue. In opposition to all relativizing tendencies, it refers to the statements of the constitution on the Church Lumen gentium of the Second Vatican Council (cf. *4101–4179). These interpretations have in part triggered vigorous disagreements, especially *5088.

3. ... The expository language of the declaration corresponds to its purpose, which is not to treat in a systematic manner the question of the unicity and salvific universality of the mystery of Jesus Christ and the Church or to propose solutions to questions that are matters of free theological debate, but rather to set forth again the doctrine of the Catholic faith in these areas, pointing out some fundamental questions that remain open to further development and refuting specific positions that are erroneous or ambiguous....

quae comprobare conantur pluralismum religiosum, non solum de facto sed etiam de iure (vel de principio). . . .

I. DE PLENITUDINE ET INDOLE DEFINITIVA REVELATIONIS IESU CHRISTI

[745] 5. Ut remedium afferatur huic formae mentis relativisticae, quae magis magisque grassatur, opus est imprimis ut affirmetur indoles definitiva ac [746] completa revelationis Iesu Christi. Firmiter enim credendum est in mysterio Iesu Christi, Filii Dei incarnati, qui est “via et veritas et vita” [Io 14:6], haberi revelationem plenitudinis veritatis divinae. . . .

6. Ecclesiae igitur fidei opponitur thesis de indole limitata, incompleta et imperfecta revelationis Iesu Christi, perinde ac si haec sit complementum revelationis aliis in religionibus exstantis. . . .

7. . . . Oboeditio fidei secum fert ut tamquam vera accipiatur Christi revelatio, de qua Deus spondet, qui est ipsa Veritas:² “Fides est imprimis adhaesio personalis hominis ad Deum; simul vero et inseparabiliter est liber toti veri [748] tati a Deo revelatae assensus.”³ . . . Firmiter ergo tenenda est distinctio inter fidem theologalem et credulitatem quae invenitur in aliis religionibus.

Dum enim fides acceptio est, vi gratiae, veritatis revelatae, quae una sinit “nos in mysterium ingredi intimum, cuius congruentem fovet intellectum”,⁴ credulitas aliarum religionum tributa in complexu illo innititur experientiae et cogitationis, qui divitiarum acervum sapientiae ac sensus religiosi efformat, mente conceptum ab hominibus veritatem quaerentibus ab eisque ad effectum deductum cum sese ad Divinum et Absolutum referunt.⁵ . . .

8. . . . [749] Ecclesiae autem traditio tamquam textus inspiratos unice habet canonicos libros Veteris et Novi Testamenti, quatenus ipsi a Spiritu Sancto sunt inspirati.⁶ . . . Deus tamen, volens ad se omnes gentes in Christo vocare eisque plenitudinem suae revelationis ac sui amoris communicare, praesens quoque efficitur multis modis justify religious pluralism, not only de facto but also de iure (or in principle). . . .

I. THE FULLNESS AND DEFINITIVENESS OF THE REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST

5. As a remedy for this relativistic mentality, which is becoming ever more common, it is necessary above all to reassert the definitive and complete character of the revelation of Jesus Christ. In fact, it must be firmly believed that, in the mystery of Jesus Christ, the incarnate Son of God, who is “the way, the truth, and the life” [Jn 14:6], the full revelation of divine truth is given. . . .

6. Therefore, the theory of the limited, incomplete, or imperfect character of the revelation of Jesus Christ, which would be complementary to that found in other religions, is contrary to the Church’s faith. . . .

. . . Therefore, the words, deeds, and entire historical event of Jesus, though limited as human realities, have nevertheless the Divine Person of the incarnate Word, “true God and true man”,¹ as their subject. For this reason, they possess in themselves the definitiveness and completeness of the revelation of God’s salvific ways, even if the depth of the divine mystery in itself remains transcendent and inexhaustible. . . .

7. . . . The obedience of faith implies acceptance of the truth of Christ’s revelation, guaranteed by God, who is Truth itself:² “Faith is first of all a personal adherence of man to God. At the same time, and inseparably, it is a free assent to the whole truth that God has revealed.”³ . . . For this reason, the distinction between theological faith and the belief found in the other religions must be firmly held.

If faith is the acceptance in grace of revealed truth, which “makes it possible to penetrate the mystery in a way that allows us to understand it coherently”,⁴ then belief, in the other religions, is that sum of experience and thought that constitutes the human treasury of wisdom and religious aspiration that man in his search for truth has conceived and acted upon in his relationship to God and the Absolute.⁵ . . .

8. . . . The Church’s tradition, however, reserves the designation of inspired texts to the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments, since these are inspired by the Holy Spirit.⁶ . . . Nevertheless, God, who desires to call all peoples to himself in Christ and to communicate to them the fullness of his revelation and love, “does

II. VERBUM INCARNATUM ET SPIRITUS SANCTUS IN OPERE SALUTIS

5086 9. In theologica nostri temporis perquisitione Iesus Nazarenus frequenter consideratur ut figura historica particularis, finita, revelatrix rei divinae modo non exclusivo, sed complementario cum aliis figuris quae pariter revelatrices et salvificae existimantur. Ideo Infinitum, Absolutum ultimumque Dei Mysterium sese hominum generi manifestaret multis modis multisque historicis figuris, quarum una esset Iesus Nazarenus. Magis definite, Ipse esset unus ex pluribus vultibus per temporum decursum a Verbo assumptis, ut salvifice cum hominibus communicaret.

10. Hae theses aperte discrepant a fide christiana. Firmiter enim credenda est fidei doctrina quae profitetur Iesum Nazarenum, Mariae filium, ipsumque solum, esse Patris Filium ac Verbum....

11. Eadem ratione firmiter credenda est fidei doctrina circa unicitatem oeconomiae salvificae, quam Deus Unus et Trinus voluit, cuius fons atque centrum exstat mysterium incarnationis Verbi, mediatoris divinae not fail to make himself present in many ways, not only to individuals, but also to entire peoples through their spiritual riches, of which their religions are the main and essential expression even when they contain ‘gaps, insufficiencies and errors’.”⁷ Therefore, the sacred books of other religions, which in actual fact direct and nourish the existence of their followers, receive from the mystery of Christ the elements of goodness and grace that they contain.

II. THE INCARNATE LOGOS AND THE HOLY SPIRIT IN THE WORK OF SALVATION

9. In contemporary theological reflection there often emerges an approach to Jesus of Nazareth that considers him a particular, finite, historical figure, who reveals the divine, not in an exclusive way, but in a way complementary with other revelatory and salvific figures. The Infinite, the Absolute, the Ultimate Mystery of God would thus manifest itself to mankind in many ways and in many historical figures: Jesus of Nazareth would be one of these. More concretely, for some, Jesus would be one of the many faces that the Logos has assumed in the course of time to communicate with man in a salvific way.

Furthermore, to justify the universality of Christian salvation as well as the fact of religious pluralism, it has been proposed that there is an economy of the eternal Word that is valid also outside the Church and is unrelated to her, in addition to an economy of the incarnate Word. The first would have a greater universal value than the second, which is limited to Christians, though God’s presence would be more full in the second.

10. These theses are in profound conflict with the Christian faith. The doctrine of faith must be firmly believed that proclaims that Jesus of Nazareth, son of Mary, and he alone, is the Son and the Word of the Father....

... Therefore, the theory that would attribute, after the Incarnation as well, a salvific activity to the Logos as such in his divinity, exercised “in addition to” or “beyond” the humanity of Christ, is not compatible with the doctrine of the Church.¹

11. Similarly, the doctrine of faith regarding the unicity of the salvific economy willed by the one and true God must be firmly believed, at the source and center of which is the mystery of the Incarnation of the gratiae in ordine creationis ac redemptionis [cf. Col 1:15–20], in quo omnia recapitulantur [cf. Eph 1:10]....

[752] 12. Est etiam qui proponat hypothesim de oeconomia quadam Spiritus Sancti, indole praedita universaliore quam oeconomia Verbi incarnati, crucifixi et resuscitati, quae asseveratio contradicit pariter catholicae fidei, utpote quae teneat salvificam Verbi incarnationem eventum esse trinitarium. In Novo Testamento mysterium Iesu Christi, Verbi incarnati, locus est praesentiae Spiritus Sancti atque principium effusionis eius in hominum genus non solum in temporibus messianicis [cf. Act 2:32–36; Io 7:39; 20:22; 1 Cor 15:45], sed etiam in temporibus, quae eius adventum in historiam praecesserunt [1 Cor 10:4; 1 Petr 1:10–12]....

Praeterea, ultra Ecclesiae fines visibiles, actio salvifica Iesu Christi, cum Spiritu Eius et per Spiritum Eius, hominum genus universum pertingit. ...

[753] ... Ut omnia ergo breviter colligantur, dicendum est actionem Spiritus non collocari ultra vel prope Christi actionem. De unica enim agitur Dei Unius et Trini salvifica oeconomia, quae ad rem deducitur in mysterio incarnatio[n]is, mortis et resurrectionis Filii Dei et Spiritu Sancto cooperante efficitur, quaeque in suo effectu salvifico ad homines cunctos et ad universum mundum pertingit. ...

III. DE UNICITATE ET UNIVERSALITATE MYSTERII SALVIFICI IESU CHRISTI

Concilium Vaticanum II his verbis nos docet: “unica mediatio Redemptoris non excludit, sed suscitatur variam apud creaturas participatam ex unico fonte cooperationem”.¹ Altius quidem perscrutandum est quid significet haec mediatio participata, cuius supremum principium unica Christi mediatio existet semper necesse est. ...

15. ... [756] Hac de re dici potest ac debet Iesum Christum, quoad humanum genus eiusque historiam, praeditum esse significatione ac vi quae prorsus sunt singulares et univocae, ad ipsum solum pertinentes, exclusivae, universales atque absolutae. ...

Word, mediator of divine grace on the level of creation and redemption [cf. Col 1:15–20], he who recapitulates all things [cf. Eph 1:10]....

12. There are also those who propose the hypothesis of an economy of the Holy Spirit with a more universal breadth than that of the incarnate Word, crucified and risen. This position also is contrary to the Catholic faith, which, on the contrary, considers the salvific Incarnation of the Word as a trinitarian event. In the New Testament, the mystery of Jesus, the incarnate Word, constitutes the place of the Holy Spirit’s presence as well as the principle of the Spirit’s effusion on humanity, not only in messianic times [cf. Acts 2:32–36; Jn 7:39, 20:22; 1 Cor 15:45], but also prior to his coming in history [cf. 1 Cor 10:4; 1 Pet 1:10–12]....

Furthermore, the salvific action of Jesus Christ, with and through his Spirit, extends beyond the visible boundaries of the Church to all humanity. ...

... In conclusion, the action of the Spirit is not outside or parallel to the action of Christ. There is only one salvific economy of the one and triune God, realized in the mystery of the Incarnation, death, and Resurrection of the Son of God, actualized with the cooperation of the Holy Spirit and extended in its salvific value to all mankind and to the entire universe. ...

III. UNICITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE SALVIFIC MYSTERY OF JESUS CHRIST

... 14. It must therefore be firmly believed as a truth 5087 of Catholic faith that the universal salvific will of the one and triune God is offered and accomplished once for all in the mystery of the Incarnation, death, and Resurrection of the Son of God.

Bearing in mind this article of faith, theology today ... is invited to explore if and in what way the historical figures and positive elements of these religions may fall within the divine plan of salvation. ... The Second Vatican Council, in fact, has stated that “the unique mediation of the Redeemer does not exclude, but rather gives rise to a manifold cooperation that is but a participation in this one source.”¹ The content of this participated mediation should be explored more deeply, but it must remain always consistent with the principle of Christ’s unique mediation. ...

15. ... In this sense, one can and must say that Jesus Christ has a significance and a value for the human race and its history that are unique and singular, proper to him alone, exclusive, universal, and absolute. ...

IV. DE ECCLESIAE UNICITATE ET UNITATE

5088 16. ... [757] in conexione cum unicitate et universalitate mediationis salvificae Iesu Christi, tamquam veritas fidei catholicae firmiter credenda est unicitas Ecclesiae ab ipso conditae. Sicut unus est Christus, unum solummodo Corpus eius exstat, unaque eius Sponsa: “una Ecclesia catholica et apostolica”.¹...

Fideles profiteri tenentur historicam vigere continuitatem—in successione apostolica radicam²—inter Ecclesiam a Christo conditam et Ecclesiam catholicam: ... “Haec Ecclesia, in hoc mundo ut societas constituta et ordinata, subsistit in Ecclesia catholica, a successore Petri et Episcopis in eius [758] communione gubernata.”³ Verbis “subsistit in” Concilium Vaticanum II duas voluit doctrinales affirmationes invicem componere: altera ex parte, Christi Ecclesiam, non obstantibus christianorum divisionibus, solummodo in Ecclesia Catholica plene existere pergere; ex altera vero inveniri “extra eius compaginem elementa plura sanctificationis et veritatis”,⁴ videlicet in Ecclesiis et Communitatibus ecclesialibus nondum in plena communione cum Ecclesia Catholica.⁵ Sed, ad postremas quod attinet, affirmandum est earum virtutem derivari “ab ipsa plenitudine gratiae et veritatis quae Ecclesiae catholicae concredita est.”⁶

17. Unica ergo est Christi Ecclesia, subsistens in Ecclesia Catholica, cuius moderatio spectat ad Petri Successorem et ad Episcopos in communione cum eo.⁷ Ecclesiae illae quae, licet in perfecta communione cum Ecclesia Catholica non sint, eidem tamen iunguntur vinculis strictissimis, cuiusmodi sunt successio apostolica et valida Eucharistiae celebratio, verae sunt Ecclesiae particulares.⁸ Quapropter in his quoque Ecclesiis praesens est et operatur Christi Ecclesia, quantumvis plena desit communicatio cum Ecclesia Catholica, eo quod ipsae doctrinam catholicam non acceptant de Primatu,

IV. UNICITY AND UNITY OF THE CHURCH

16. ... In connection with the unicity and universality of the salvific mediation of Jesus Christ, the unicity of the Church founded by him must be firmly believed as a truth of Catholic faith. Just as there is one Christ, so there exists a single body of Christ, a single Bride of Christ: “a single Catholic and apostolic Church”.¹...

The Catholic faithful are required to profess that there is a historical continuity—rooted in the apostolic succession²—between the Church founded by Christ and the Catholic Church... “This Church, constituted and organized as a society in the present world, subsists in the Catholic Church, governed by the successor of Peter and by the bishops in communion with him.”³ With the expression subsistit in, the Second Vatican Council sought to harmonize two doctrinal statements: on the one hand, that the Church of Christ, despite the divisions that exist among Christians, continues to exist fully only in the Catholic Church and, on the other hand, that “outside of her structure, many elements can be found of sanctification and truth”,⁴ that is, in those Churches and Ecclesial Communities that are not yet in full communion with the Catholic Church.⁵ But with respect to these, it needs to be stated that “they derive their efficacy from the very fullness of grace and truth entrusted to the Catholic Church.”⁶

17. Therefore, there exists a single Church of Christ, which subsists in the Catholic Church, governed by the successor of Peter and by the bishops in communion with him.⁷ The Churches that, while not existing in perfect communion with the Catholic Church, remain united to her by means of the closest bonds, that is, by apostolic succession and a valid Eucharist, are true particular Churches.⁸ Therefore, the Church of Christ is present and operative also in these Churches, even though they lack full communion with the Catholic Church, since they do not accept the Catholic doctrine of the primacy,

⁵ The interpretation of those who would derive from the formula subsistit in the thesis that the one Church of Christ could subsist also in non-Catholic Churches and Ecclesial Communities is therefore contrary to the authentic meaning of Lumen gentium. “The Council instead chose the word subsistit precisely to clarify that there exists only one ‘subsistence’ of the true Church, while outside her visible structure there exist only elementa Ecclesiae, which—being elements of that same Church—tend and lead toward the Catholic Church” (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, *Notification on the Book “Church: Charism and Power” by Fr. V. DE ECCLESIA UT REGNO DEI ET CHRISTI REGNO

18. ... [760] Ex textibus biblicis atque ex Patrum testimoniis, non secus atque ex Ecclesiae Magisterii documentis, sensus univoci non eruuntur expressionum Regnum Coelorum, Regnum Dei et Regnum Christi neve de earum cum Ecclesia conexione, utpote quae mysterium et ipsa sit quod plene in conceptu humano concludi non valet. Varias ergo possunt his de rebus theologicae explanationes exstare. Nulli autem ex iis explanationibus, quae possibiles sunt, eo pervenire licet, ut intimam conexionem inter Christum, Regnum et Ecclesiam quodam modo neget vel vacuefaciat....

19. ... [761] Cum rationes considerantur inter Regnum Dei, Regnum Christi et Ecclesiam intercedentes, partiales ac unilaterales exaltationes vitentur oportet, quales proponuntur ab iis quorum “notiones consulto Regnum amplificant et se profitentur ‘regnentricas’, in lucem proferunt imaginem Ecclesiae non de se sollicitae, sed ex toto deditae Regno testificando eique serviendo.... Praeterea, Regnum, quale ipsi intellegunt regnum, ad excludendam inducit aut ad minus existimandam Ecclesiam, ob renisum contra quendam ‘ecclesiocentrismum’ praeteriti temporis, et quia Ecclesiam tantummodo signum putant, et quidem ambiguitatis non expers.”¹ Hae theses fidei catholicae contradicunt, quia unicitatem negant relationis quam Christus et Ecclesia cum Regno Dei habent.

which, according to the will of God, the bishop of Rome objectively has and exercises over the entire Church.⁹

On the other hand, the Ecclesial Communities that have not preserved the valid episcopate and the genuine and integral substance of the eucharistic mystery¹⁰ are not Churches in the proper sense; however, those who are baptized in these communities are, by baptism, incorporated in Christ and thus are in a certain communion, albeit imperfect, with the Church.¹¹ Baptism in fact tends per se toward the full development of life in Christ, through the integral profession of faith, the Eucharist, and full communion in the Church.¹²...

V. THE CHURCH: KINGDOM OF GOD AND KINGDOM OF CHRIST

18. ... The meaning of the expressions kingdom of heaven, kingdom of God, and kingdom of Christ in Sacred Scripture and the Fathers of the Church, as well as in the documents of the Magisterium, is not always exactly the same, nor is their relationship to the Church, which is a mystery that cannot be totally contained by a human concept. Therefore, there can be various theological explanations of these terms. However, none of these possible explanations can deny or empty in any way the intimate connection between Christ, the kingdom, and the Church....

19. ... In considering the relationship between the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Christ, and the Church, it is necessary to avoid one-sided accentuations, as is the case with those “conceptions that deliberately emphasize the kingdom and that describe themselves as ‘kingdom centered’. They stress the image of a Church that is not concerned about herself but that is totally concerned with bearing witness to and serving the kingdom.... Furthermore, the kingdom, as they understand it, ends up either leaving very little room for the Church or undervaluing the Church in reaction to a presumed ‘ecclesiocentrism’ of the past and because they consider the Church herself only a sign, for that matter a sign not without ambiguity.”¹ These theses are contrary to Catholic faith because they deny the unicity of the relationship that Christ and the Church have with the kingdom of God.

VI. THE CHURCH AND THE OTHER RELIGIONS IN RELATION TO SALVATION

20. ... Above all else, it must be firmly believed that “the Church, a pilgrim now on earth, is necessary for enim Christus est Mediator ac via salutis, qui in Corpore suo, quod est Ecclesia, praesens nobis fit; Ipse autem necessitatem fidei et baptismi expressis verbis inculcando [cf. Mc 16:16; Io 3:5], necessitatem Ecclesiae, in quam homines per baptismum tamquam per ianua[m] [762] nuam intrant, simul confirmavit.² Haec doctrina universalis voluntati Dei salvificae non opponitur [cf. 1 Tim 2:4], quapropter “necesse est duae hae veritates coniunctae teneantur, videlicet vera possibilitas salutis in Christo pro omnibus hominibus et Ecclesiae necessitas ad hanc salutem.”³

Exstat Ecclesia “universale salutis sacramentum”,⁴ utpote quae, arcano modo semper coniuncta cum Christo Salvatore Capite suo eique subordinata, artam in Dei consilio servat relationem cum uniuscuiusque hominis salute.⁵ Quoad eos qui formaliter et visibiliter membra Ecclesiae non sunt, “Christi salus patens est per gratiam quae, quamquam arcanam habet necessitudinem cum Ecclesia, in hanc tamen formali ratione eos non introducit, sed modo illuminat congruenti eorum interiori conditioni rerumque temporumque adiunctis. Gratia haec a Christo venit, fructus est eius sacrificii et a Spiritu Sancto communicatur.”⁶ Arta relatione ipsa coniungitur cum Ecclesia, quippe quae “ex missione Filii missionisque Spiritus Sancti originem ducat secundum Propositum Dei Patris”.⁷

22. ... Verum est quidem aliarum religionum asseclas gratiam divinam accipere posse, at non minus verum est eos in statu gravis penuriae objective versari per comparationem cum statu eorum qui, in Ecclesia, mediorum salutis plenitudine fruuntur.⁹ ...

salvation: the one Christ is the mediator and the way of salvation; he is present to us in his body which is the Church. He himself explicitly asserted the necessity of faith and baptism [cf. Mk 16:16; Jn 3:5] and thereby affirmed at the same time the necessity of the Church that men enter through baptism as through a door.² This doctrine must not be set against the universal salvific will of God [cf. 1 Tim 2:4]; “it is necessary to keep these two truths together, namely, the real possibility of salvation in Christ for all mankind and the necessity of the Church for this salvation.”³

The Church is the “universal sacrament of salvation”,⁴ since, united always in a mysterious way to the Savior Jesus Christ, her Head, and subordinated to him, she has, in God’s plan, an indispensable relationship with the salvation of every human being.⁵ For those who are not formally and visibly members of the Church, “salvation in Christ is accessible by virtue of a grace that, while having a mysterious relationship to the Church, does not make them formally part of the Church, but enlightens them in a way that is accommodated to their spiritual and material situation. This grace comes from Christ; it is the result of his sacrifice and is communicated by the Holy Spirit”;⁶ it has a relationship with the Church, which, “according to the plan of the Father, has her origin in the mission of the Son and the Holy Spirit”.⁷

21. ... However, from what has been stated above about the mediation of Jesus Christ and the “unique and special relationship”⁸ that the Church has with the kingdom of God among men—which in substance is the universal kingdom of Christ the Savior—it is clear that it would be contrary to the faith to consider the Church as one way of salvation alongside those constituted by the other religions, seen as complementary to the Church or substantially equivalent to her, even if these are said to be converging with the Church toward the eschatological kingdom of God....

22. ... If it is true that the followers of other religions can receive divine grace, it is also certain that objectively speaking they are in a gravely deficient situation in comparison with those who, in the Church, have the fullness of the means of salvation.⁹ ...

Lateran Council IV, chap. 1, De fide catholica: *802); cf. also the letter of the Holy Office to the Archbishop of Boston (*3866–3872).

... In interreligious dialogue as well, the mission to the nations (missio ad gentes) “today as always retains its full force and necessity”.¹⁰... “Because she believes in God’s universal plan of salvation, the Church must be missionary.”¹¹ Interreligious dialogue, therefore, as part of her evangelizing mission, is just one of the actions of the Church in her mission to the nations.¹² Equality, which is a presupposition of interreligious dialogue, refers to the equal personal dignity of the parties in dialogue, not to doctrinal content or, even less, to the position of Jesus Christ—who is God himself made man—in relation to the founders of the other religions....

5091: Note of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on the Force of the Doctrinal Decrees concerning the Thought and Work of Antonio Rosmini Serbati, July 1, 2001

The note refers to decrees *3154f. and *3201–3241, after John Paul II, in the encyclical Fides et ratio of 1998 (cf. *5075–5080), had mentioned Rosmini in a positive way. The note first appeared in 2004 in AAS.

Ed.: AAS 96 (2004): 669–70.

[669] 7. La Congregazione per la Dottrina della Fede, a seguito di un approfondito esame dei due Decreti dottrinali, promulgati nel secolo XIX, e tenendo presenti i risultati emergenti dalla storiografia e dalla ricerca scientifica e teoretica degli ultimi decenni, è pervenuta alla seguente conclusione:

Si possono attualmente considerare ormai superati i motivi di preoccupazione e di difficoltà dottrinali e prudenziali, che hanno determinato la promulgazione del Decreto Post obitum di condanna delle “Quaranta Proposizioni” tratte dalle opere di Antonio Rosmini. E ciò a motivo del fatto che il senso delle proposizioni, così inteso e condannato dal medesimo Decreto, non appartiene in realtà all’autentica posizione di Rosmini, ma a possibili conclusioni della lettura delle sue opere. Resta tuttavia affidata al dibattito teoretico la questione della plausibilità o meno del sistema rosminiano stesso,

7. The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, following an in-depth examination of the two doctrinal decrees, promulgated in the nineteenth century, and taking into account the results emerging from historiography and from the scientific and theoretical research of the last ten years has reached the following conclusion:

The motives for doctrinal and prudential concern and difficulty that determined the promulgation of the decree Post obitum with the condemnation of the “Forty Propositions” taken from the works of Antonio Rosmini can now be considered superseded. This is so because the meaning of the propositions, as understood and condemned by the decree, belongs, not to the authentic position of Rosmini, but to conclusions that may possibly have been drawn from the reading of his works. The questions of the plausibility of the Rosminian system, of its speculative consistency, and of the philosophical della sua consistenza speculativa e delle teorie o ipotesi filosofiche e teologiche in esso espresse.

and theological theories and hypotheses expressed in it remain entrusted to the theoretical debate.

At the same time, the objective validity of the decree Post obitum, referring to the previously condemned propositions, remains for whoever reads them, outside of the Rosminian system, in an idealist, ontologist point of view and with a meaning contrary to Catholic faith and doctrine.

5092: Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Declaration, Preliminary Note, and Decree of Excommunication for Certain Women, August 5, 2002

On June 6, 2002, R. A. Braschi conferred “priestly ordination” on seven Catholic women (C. Mayr-Lumetzberger, A. T. Roitinger, G. Forster, I. Müller, I. Raming, P. Brunner, and A. White). The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith condemned this act as a simulation of a sacrament by a schismatic bishop and excommunicated the women who participated in it.

Ed.: AAS 94 (2002): 584.

Dichiarazione (monitum)

... L’avvenuta “ordinazione sacerdotale” è la simulazione di un sacramento e perciò invalida e nulla e costituisce un grave delitto contro la divina costituzione della Chiesa. Poiché il vescovo “ordinante” appartiene ad una comunità scismatica, si tratta inoltre di una grave offesa contro l’unità della Chiesa...

Declaration (monitum)

... The “priestly ordination” that has taken place is the simulation of a sacrament and, therefore, invalid and null, and it constitutes a grave offense against the divine constitution of the Church. Since the “ordaining” bishop belongs to a schismatic community, it also constitutes a grievous assault against the unity of the Church...

Ed.: AAS 96 (2004): 359–70.

[361] 2. ... È oggi verificabile un certo relativismo culturale che offre evidenti segni di sé nella teorizzazione e difesa del pluralismo etico che sancisce la decadenza e la dissoluzione della ragione e dei principi della legge morale naturale. A seguito di questa tendenza non è inusuale, purtroppo, riscontrare in dichiarazioni pubbliche affermazioni in cui si sostiene che tale pluralismo etico è la condizione per la democrazia.¹ Avviene così che, da una parte, i cittadini rivendicano per le proprie scelte morali la più completa autonomia mentre, dall’altra, i legislatori ritengono di rispettare tale libertà di scelta formulando [362] leggi che prescindono dai principi dell’etica naturale per rimettersi alia sola condiscendenza verso certi orientamenti culturali o morali transitori,² come se tutte le possibili concezioni della vita avessero uguale valore...

3. Questa concezione relativista del pluralismo nulla ha a che vedere con la legittima libertà dei cittadini cattolici di scegliere, tra le opinioni politiche compatibili con la fede e la legge morale naturale, quella che secondo il proprio criterio meglio si adegua alle esigenze del bene comune.

2. ... A kind of cultural relativism exists today, evident in the conceptualization and defense of an ethical pluralism that sanctions the decadence and disintegration of reason and the principles of the natural moral law. Furthermore, it is not unusual to hear the opinion expressed in the public sphere that such ethical pluralism is the very condition for democracy.¹ As a result, citizens claim complete autonomy with regard to their moral choices, and lawmakers maintain that they are respecting this freedom of choice by enacting laws that ignore the principles of natural ethics and yield to ephemeral cultural and moral trends,² as if every possible outlook on life were of equal value...

3. Such relativism, of course, has nothing to do with the legitimate freedom of Catholic citizens to choose among the various political opinions that are compatible with faith and the natural moral law and to select, according to their own criteria, what best corresponds to the needs of

[442] 13. Virtute huius suae necessitudines cum Golgothae sacrificio Eucharistia sensu proprio sacrificium

Introduction

5. “The Mystery of Faith!” When the priest recites or chants these words, all present acclaim: “We announce your death, O Lord, and we proclaim your Resurrection, until you come in glory.”

In these or similar words the Church, while pointing to Christ in the mystery of his Passion, also reveals her own mystery: the Church drawn from the Eucharist (Ecclesia de Eucharistia). By the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, the Church was born and set out upon the pathways of the world, yet a decisive moment in her taking shape was certainly the institution of the Eucharist in the Upper Room. Her foundation and wellspring is the whole paschal Triduum, but this is, as it were, gathered up, foreshadowed, and “concentrated” forever in the gift of the Eucharist. In this gift Jesus Christ entrusted to his Church the perennial making present of the paschal mystery. With it he brought about a mysterious “oneness in time” between that Triduum and the passage of the centuries. . . .

CHAPTER I THE MYSTERY OF FAITH

12. . . . The Mass makes present the sacrifice of the Cross; it does not add to that sacrifice, nor does it multiply it.¹ What is repeated is its memorial celebration, its commemorative representation,² which makes Christ's one, definitive redemptive sacrifice always present in time. The sacrificial nature of the eucharistic mystery cannot therefore be understood as something separate, independent of the Cross, or only indirectly referring to the sacrifice of Calvary.

13. By virtue of its close relationship to the sacrifice of Golgotha, the Eucharist is a sacrifice in the strict

*5094 ¹ Council of Trent, sess. 12, Doctrine and Canons on the Sacrifice of the Mass, chap. 2 (*1743): “For the victim is one and the same: the same now offers himself through the ministry of priests who then offered himself on the Cross; only the manner of offering is different.”

est, non tantum quadam universali significatione veluti si de simplici oblatione Christi tractaretur tamquam spiritalis fidelibus dati cibi. Nam amoris eius atque oboedientiae usque ad novissimum vitae momentum [cf. Io 10:17–18] in primis est donum Patri ipsius oblatum. Certe donum hoc nobis favet, quin immo, universo hominum generi [cf. Mt 26:28; Mc 14:24; Lc 22:20; Io 10:15], attamen donum imprimis ad Patrem: “Quod quidem sacrificium Pater suscepit ac vicissim pro eadem plena donatione Filii sui, qui erat ‘factus oboediens usque ad mortem’ [Phil 2:8], donationem suam paternam reddidit, nempe donum novae vitae immortalis in ipsa resurrectione”.³

Suum Ecclesiae concedens sacrificium voluit pariter Christus suum facere totius Ecclesiae spiritale sacrificium, quae etiam ut se ipsam cum Christi sacrificio offerat invitatur. . . .

CAPUT II

ECCLESIAM AEDIFICAT EUCHARISTIA

[448] 22. Renovatur incorporatio in Christum, primum per baptismum effecta, atque corroboratur perpetuo Sacrificii eucharistici participatione, potissimum per plenam eius participationem quae evenit in communione sacramentali. Asseverare licet non solum nostrum unumquemque Christum recipere, sed etiam Christum nostrum unumquemque recipere. . . .

sense, and not only in a general way, as if it were simply a matter of Christ’s offering himself to the faithful as their spiritual food. The gift of his love and obedience to the point of giving his life [cf. Jn 10:17–18] is in the first place a gift to his Father. Certainly it is a gift given for our sake, and indeed that of all mankind [cf. Mt 26:28; Mk 14:24; Lk 22:20; Jn 10:15], yet it is first and foremost a gift to the Father: “a sacrifice that the Father accepted, giving, in return for this total self-giving by his Son, who ‘became obedient unto death’ [Phil 2:8], his own paternal gift, that is to say, the grant of new immortal life in the Resurrection”.³

In giving his sacrifice to the Church, Christ has also made his own the spiritual sacrifice of the Church, which is called to offer herself in union with the sacrifice of Christ. . . .

CHAPTER II

THE EUCHARIST BUILDS THE CHURCH

22. Incorporation into Christ, which is brought about by baptism, is constantly renewed and consolidated by sharing in the eucharistic sacrifice, especially by that full sharing which takes place in sacramental communion. We can say not only that each of us receives Christ, but also that Christ receives each of us. . . .

25. The worship of the Eucharist outside of the Mass is of inestimable value for the life of the Church. This worship is strictly linked to the celebration of the eucharistic sacrifice. The presence of Christ under the sacred species reserved after Mass—a presence that lasts as long as the species of bread and of wine remain⁴—derives from the celebration of the sacrifice and is directed toward communion, both sacramental and spiritual.⁵ It is the responsibility of pastors to encourage, also by their personal witness, the practice of eucharistic adoration, and exposition of the Blessed Sacrament in particular, as well as prayer of adoration before Christ present under the eucharistic species.⁶ . . .

CHAPTER III

THE APOSTOLICITY OF THE EUCHARIST AND OF THE CHURCH

Offeritur nempe ‘in persona Christi’: cum celebrans ratione peculiari et sacramentali idem prorsus sit ac ‘summus aeternusque Sacerdos’, qui Auctor est princepsque Actor huius proprii sui Sacrificii, in quo nemo revera in eius locum substitui potest.”³ Sacerdotum ministerium, qui Ordinis sacramentum receperunt, in salutis disciplina a Christo instituta, Eucharistiam ab iis celebratam comprobat [453] donum esse quod auctoritatem communitatis funditus excedat et profecto substitui non potest ulla alia re ut eucharistica consecratio valide cum Crucis sacrificio coniungatur et Ultima Cena...

30. ... Catholici fideles ideo licet religiosas persuasiones horum suorum fratrum separatorum vereantur, sibi temperare debent ne communionem eorum in ritibus percipiant, ne quid ambiguitatis afferant de natura Eucharistiae neve propterea in officio suo desint veritatem luculenter testandi....

CAPUT IV

EUCARISTIA ET COMMUNIO ECCLESIALIS

[459] 39. ... Eucharisticae communitatis ipse congressus communis est etiam coniunctio cum proprio Episcopo et cum Pontifice Romano. Episcopus enim visibile principium est et fundamentum unitatis ipsius in ecclesia particulari.⁴ ... Aequabiliter quandoquidem “Romanus Pontifex, ut successor Petri, est unitatis, tum Episcoporum [460] tum fidelium multitudinis, perpetuum ac visibile principium et fundamentum”,⁵ coniunctio cum eo intrinseca est celebrationis Sacrificii eucharistici necessitas....

[462] 44. Cum prorsus Ecclesiae unitas, quam per sacrificium atque communionem corporis et sanguinis Domini Eucharistia complet, necessarium omnino habeat postulatam integrae communionis in vinculis professionis fidei, Sacramentorum et ecclesiastici regiminis, fieri non potest ut eadem liturgia eucharistica celebretur donec universitas talium vinculorum restituatur. Huiusmodi concelebratio non esset validum instrumentum, immo vero, posset se veluti obstaculum ministerial priest, acting in the person of Christ, brings about the eucharistic sacrifice”¹ was already firmly rooted in papal teaching.² As I have pointed out on other occasions, the phrase in persona Christi “means more than offering ‘in the name of’ or ‘in the place of’ Christ. In persona means in specific sacramental identification with the eternal High Priest who is the author and principal subject of this sacrifice of his, a sacrifice in which, in truth, nobody can take his place.”³ The ministry of priests who have received the sacrament of holy orders, in the economy of salvation chosen by Christ, makes clear that the Eucharist they celebrate is a gift that radically transcends the power of the assembly and is in any event essential for validly linking the eucharistic consecration to the sacrifice of the Cross and to the Last Supper....

30. ... The Catholic faithful, therefore, while respecting the religious convictions of these separated brethren, must refrain from receiving the communion distributed in their celebrations, so as not to condone an ambiguity about the nature of the Eucharist and, consequently, to fail in their duty to bear clear witness to the truth....

CHAPTER IV

THE EUCHARIST AND ECCLESIAL COMMUNION

39. ... The ecclesial communion of the eucharistic assembly is a communion with its own bishop and with the Roman pontiff. The bishop, in effect, is the visible principle and the foundation of unity within his particular Church.⁴... Likewise, since “the Roman pontiff, as the successor of Peter, is the perpetual and visible source and foundation of the unity of the bishops and of the multitude of the faithful”,⁵ communion with him is intrinsically required for the celebration of the eucharistic sacrifice....

44. Precisely because the Church’s unity, which the Eucharist brings about through the Lord’s sacrifice and by communion in his Body and Blood, absolutely requires full communion in the bonds of the profession of faith, the sacraments, and ecclesiastical governance, it is not possible to celebrate together the same eucharistic liturgy until those bonds are fully reestablished. Any such concelebration would not be a valid means and might well prove instead to be an obstacle to the attainment of

In this case, in fact, the intention is to meet a grave spiritual need for the eternal salvation of an individual believer, not to bring about an intercommunion that remains impossible until the visible bonds of ecclesial communion are fully reestablished. ...

5096: Considerations by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith regarding Proposals to Give Legal Recognition to Unions between Homosexual Persons, June 3, 2003

[48] 11. La Chiesa insegna che il rispetto verso le persone omosessuali non può portare in nessun modo all'approvazione del comportamento omosessuale oppure al riconoscimento legale delle unioni omosessuali. Il bene comune esige che le leggi riconoscano, favoriscano e proteggano l'unione matrimoniale come base della famiglia, cellula primaria della società. Riconoscere legalmente le unioni omosessuali oppure equipararle al matrimonio, significherebbe non soltanto approvare un comportamento deviante, con la conseguenza di renderlo un modello nella società attuale, ma anche offuscare valori fondamentali che appartengono al patrimonio comune dell'umanità. La Chiesa non può non difendere tali valori, per il bene degli uomini e di tutta la società.

11. The Church teaches that respect for homosexual persons cannot lead in any way to approval of homosexual behavior or to legal recognition of homosexual unions. The common good requires that laws recognize, promote, and protect marriage as the basis of the family, the primary unit of society. Legal recognition of homosexual unions or placing them on the same level as marriage would mean not only the approval of deviant behavior, with the consequence of making it a model in present-day society, but would also obscure basic values that belong to the common inheritance of humanity. The Church cannot fail to defend these values, for the good of men and women and for the good of the whole society.

8. "... et fecit Duodecim" [Mc 3:14]. Constitutio dogmatica Lumen gentium per haec evangelica verba doctrinam inducit de indole collegiali coetus Duodecim....

Collegialis coniunctio inter Episcopos constituitur simul Ordinatione episcopali simulque communione hierarchica; eademque ideo essentiam ipsam cuiusque Episcopi tangit et pertinet ad Ecclesiae structuram sicut eam voluit Iesus Christus. Nam Episcopi in episcopalis ministerii plenitudine sociantur vi consecrationis episcopalis et communione hierarchica cum Collegii Capite atque membris, id est cum Collegio quod semper suum Caput comprehendit. Ita fiunt membra Collegii episcopalis,¹ propter quod tria munera, videlicet sanctificandi, docendi et regendi, in Ordinatione episcopali assumpta, exerceri [834] debent in communione hierarchica, etiamsi, ob diversum eorum immediatum finem, modo distincto.²

Hoc efficit "affectum collegialem", uti vocatur, seu collegialitatem affectivam, ex qua effluit sollicitudo Episcoporum pro aliis Ecclesiis particularibus atque Ecclesia universali.³ Si quidem asseverare oportet Episcopum numquam solum esse, quoniam ipse est semper coniunctus cum Patre per Filium in Spiritu Sancto, addendum quoque est eum numquam solum esse, eo quod iugiter constanterque coniunctus est suis cum fratribus in episcopatu et cum eo quem Dominus elegit veluti Petri Successorem.

Huiusmodi affectus collegialis efficitur et multipliciter exprimitur secundum diversos gradus, institutionum etiam instar, quales exempli gratia sunt Synodi Episcoporum, Concilia particularia, Conferentiae Episcoporum, Curia Romana, Visitationes ad limina, cooperatio missionalis, etc. Sed affectus collegialis absolute efficitur et exprimitur solummodo in actione collegiali stricto sensu sumpta, scilicet in actione omnium Episcoporum una cum Capite, quocum potestatem plenam et supremam exercent in universam Ecclesiam.⁴

Haec collegialis natura ministerii apostolici ex ipsius Christi voluntate oritur. Affectus ideo collegialis, seu collegialitas affectiva, semper viget inter Episcopos veluti communio Episcoporum, sed quibusdam tantum in actis exprimitur tamquam collegialitas effectiva.

The Collegial Nature of the Episcopal Ministry

8. "... And he appointed Twelve" [Mk 3:14]. The dogmatic constitution Lumen gentium employs this Gospel text to introduce its teaching on the collegial nature of the group of the Twelve.... 5097

The collegial union between the bishops is based on both episcopal ordination and hierarchical communion. It thus affects the inmost being of each bishop and belongs to the structure of the Church as willed by Jesus Christ. One attains to the fullness of episcopal ministry by virtue of episcopal consecration and through hierarchical communion with the head of the college and with its members, that is, with the college, which always includes its head. This is how one becomes a member of the college of bishops¹ and is the reason why the three functions received in episcopal ordination—sanctifying, teaching, and governing—must be exercised in hierarchical communion, even though, given their different immediate finalities, in a distinct way.²

This constitutes what is called "the spirit of collegiality", or "affective" collegiality, which is the basis of the bishops' concern for the other particular Churches and for the universal Church.³ Consequently, if we must say that a bishop is never alone, inasmuch as he is always united to the Father through the Son in the Holy Spirit, we must also add that he is also never alone because he is always and continuously united with his brothers in the episcopate and with the one whom the Lord has chosen as the successor of Peter.

The spirit of collegiality is realized and expressed in different degrees and in various modalities, including institutional forms such as, for example, the synod of bishops, particular councils, episcopal conferences, the Roman curia, ad limina visits, missionary cooperation, etc. In its full sense, however, the spirit of collegiality is realized and expressed only in collegial action in the strict sense, that is, in the action of all the bishops together with their head, with whom they exercise full and supreme power over the whole Church.⁴

This collegial nature of the apostolic ministry is willed by Christ himself. Consequently, the spirit of collegiality, or affective collegiality, is always present among the bishops as communio episcoporum, but only in certain acts does it find expression as effective collegiality. The

Variis modi conversionis huius collegialitatis affectivae in collegialitatem effectivam sunt humanae indolis, sed diversis in gradibus complent divinam exigentiam ut episcopatus collegiali modo exprimitur.⁵ In Conciliis autem oecumenicis suprema episcopalis collegii in universam Ecclesiam potestas sollemniter exercetur.⁶

Collegialis sensus indolem universalitatis episcopatu tribuit. Potest igitur similitudo quaedam constitui inter Ecclesiam unam et universalem, ergo [835] indivisam, et episcopatum unum et indivisum, ergo universalem. Principium et fundamentum huius unitatis, sive Ecclesiae sive Collegii Episcoporum, est Romanus Pontifex. Sicut enim docet Concilium Vaticanum II, "Collegium hoc quatenus ex multis compositum, varietatem et universalitatem populi Dei, quatenus vero sub uno capite collectum unitatem gregis Christi exprimit".⁷ Quapropter "Episcopatus unitas unum est ex elementis quibus Ecclesia constituitur."⁸...

56. ... [897] In synodali aula quidam quaestionem posuit, possetne inter Episcopum ac supremam auctoritatem necessitudo sub principii subsidiarietatis lumine tractari, potissimum quod ad necessitudinem attinet inter Episcopum et Curiam Romanam, dum various ways in which affective collegiality comes to be realized in effective collegiality belong to the human order, but in varying degrees they concretize the divine requirement that the episcopate should express itself in a collegial manner.⁵ The college's supreme authority over the whole Church is solemnly exercised in ecumenical councils.⁶

The collegial dimension gives the episcopate its character of universality. A parallelism can thus be established between the Church as one and universal, and therefore indivisible, and the episcopacy as one and indivisible, and therefore universal. The principle and foundation of this unity, be it that of the Church or of the bishops, is the Roman pontiff. Indeed, as the Second Vatican Council teaches, the college, "insofar as it is composed of many, expresses the variety and universality of the people of God, but insofar as it is assembled under one head, it expresses the unity of the flock of Christ".⁷ For this reason, "the unity of the episcopate is one of the constitutive elements of the unity of the Church."⁸...

... Precisely because the college of bishops is a reality prior to the office of heading a particular Church, there are many bishops who, while carrying out tasks that are properly episcopal, are not heads of particular Churches.⁹ Each bishop, always in union with his brothers in the episcopate and with the Roman pontiff, represents Christ the Head and Shepherd of the Church: he does this not only in a proper and specific manner when he receives the office of pastor of a particular Church, but also when he cooperates with the diocesan bishop in the governance of his Church¹⁰ or when he shares in the Roman pontiff's office of universal pastor in the governance of the universal Church. In the course of her history the Church has also recognized, in addition to the specific form of presidency over a particular Church, other forms of exercising the episcopal ministry—such as that of an auxiliary bishop or a representative of the Roman pontiff in the offices of the Holy See or in papal legations; today too, in accordance with the norms of law, she admits these other forms when they are needed.¹¹

56. ... In the synod hall the question was raised whether the relationship between the bishop and the Church's supreme authority could be treated in the light of the principle of subsidiarity, especially with regard to relations between individual bishops and the Roman exoptatur ut hae necessitudines, cum ecclesiology communi congruentes, servatis uniuscuiusque officii explicentur et propterea in ampliore decentralizatione quae dicitur efficienda. Id quoque quaesitum est ut facultas quaedam vestigetur hoc principium in Ecclesiae vitam inferendi, dum quoquo modo illud tenetur constitutum principium ad episcopalem auctoritatem explicandam esse singulorum Episcoporum hierarchicam communionem cum Romano Pontifice episcopali collegio.

... Synodales tamen Patres putaverunt, quod ad episcopalis auctoritatis exercitium spectat, subsidiarietatis notionem esse ambigam iique institerunt ut theologice altius vestigaretur principii communionis sub lumine episcopalis auctoritatis natura.¹²...

Ut communionis principium recte efficaciterque adhibeatur, quaedam hac de re necessaria erunt elementa. In primis illud est servandum: in Ecclesia particulari dioecesanum Episcopum omnem habere ordinariam, propriam immediatamque potestatem, quae ad eius pastorale ministerium obeundum est necessaria. Quocirca ad eum proprius huius auctoritatis exercendae suo iure ambitus pertinet, quem ambitum agnoscunt et leges universae tutantur.¹³ Potestas autem Episcopi, altera ex parte, una cum suprema Romani Pontificis potestate existit, ipsa quoque episcopali, ordinaria et immediata [898] quae singulas Ecclesias earumque sodalitates, omnes pastores fidelesque complectitur.¹⁴...

Proprii facultas regiminis, quae magisterii authenticici quoque exercitium complectitur,¹⁵ quaeque intrinsece ad Episcopum eius in dioecesi pertinet, illa intra Ecclesiae mysterii naturam reperitur, quae efficit ut in Ecclesia particulari immanens sit universalis Ecclesia, quae praesentem reddit supremam auctoritatem, scilicet Romanum Pontificem et Episcoporum Collegium [899] cum eorum suprema, plena, ordinaria atque immediata potestate omnes in fideles pastoresque.¹⁶ curia. Hope was expressed that this relationship, in accordance with an ecclesiology of communion, could be characterized by respect for the competence of each and thus contribute to a greater decentralization. It was also asked that a study be made of the possibility of applying this principle to the life of the Church, without prejudice, however, to the fact that a constitutive principle for the exercise of episcopal authority is the hierarchical communion of the individual bishops with the Roman pontiff and the college of bishops.

... All the same, the synod Fathers considered that, as far as the exercise of episcopal authority is concerned, the concept of subsidiarity has proved ambiguous, and they called for a deeper theological investigation of the nature of episcopal authority in the light of the principle of communion.¹²...

If recourse to the principle of communion is to be made correctly and effectively, certain points of reference must always be kept in mind. Account will first have to be made of the fact that within his particular Church the diocesan bishop possesses all ordinary, proper, and immediate power needed for carrying out his pastoral ministry. He therefore has a proper sphere for the independent exercise of this authority, a sphere recognized and protected by universal law.¹³ On the other hand, the bishop's power coexists with the supreme power of the Roman pontiff, which is itself episcopal, ordinary, and immediate over all the individual Churches and their groupings and over all the pastors and faithful.¹⁴...

The capacity of proper governance, including the exercise of the authentic magisterium,¹⁵ which of its nature pertains to the bishop in his diocese, is an inherent part of the mysterious reality of the Church, whereby the universal Church is immanent within the particular Church together with her supreme authority, that is, the Roman pontiff and the college of bishops, who possess supreme, full, ordinary, and immediate power over all the faithful and their pastors.¹⁶ la condizione umana, dell'uomo e della donna, creati ad immagine di Dio, è una e indivisibile. È solo perché le donne sono più immediatamente in sintonia con questi valori che esse possono esserne il richiamo ed il segno privilegiato. Ma, in ultima analisi, ogni essere umano, uomo e donna, è destinato ad essere “per l'altro”. In tale prospettiva ciò che si chiama “femminilità” è più di un semplice attributo del sesso femminile. La parola designa infatti la capacità fondamentale umana di vivere per l'altro e grazie all'altro.

Pertanto la promozione della donna all'interno della società deve essere compresa e voluta come una umanizzazione realizzata attraverso quei valori riscoperti grazie alle donne. Ogni prospettiva che intende proporsi come una lotta dei sessi è solamente un'illusione ed un pericolo: finirebbe in situazioni di segregazione e di competizione tra uomini e donne e promuoverebbe un solipsismo che si alimenta ad una falsa concezione della libertà. . . .

the human condition of man and woman created in the image of God is one and indivisible. It is only because women are more immediately attuned to these values that they are the reminder and the privileged sign of such values. But, in the final analysis, every human being, man or woman, is destined to be “for the other”. In this perspective, that which is called “femininity” is more than simply an attribute of the female sex. The word designates, indeed, the fundamental human capacity to live for the other and because of the other.

Therefore, the promotion of women within society must be understood and desired as a humanization accomplished through those values, rediscovered thanks to women. Every outlook that presents itself as a conflict between the sexes is only an illusion and a danger: it would end in segregation and competition between men and women and would promote a solipsism nourished by a false conception of freedom. . . .

On a more concrete level, if social policies—in the areas of education, work, family, access to services, and civic participation—must combat all unjust sexual discrimination, they must also listen to the aspirations and identify the needs of all. The defense and promotion of equal dignity and common personal values must be harmonized with attentive recognition of the difference and reciprocity between the sexes where this is relevant to the realization of one's humanity, whether male or female.

5099: Notification of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on the Book Jesus, Symbol of God, by Father Roger Haight, S.J., December 13, 2004

The book by Roger Haight was published by Maryknoll: Orbis Books in 1999. The declaration lists the objectionable teachings [195–202]: they refer to theological method, the preexistence of the Word, the divinity of Jesus, the Holy Trinity, the unicity and universality of the salvific mediation of Jesus and of the Church, and the Resurrection of Jesus.

Ed.: AAS 97 (2005): 194–203.

[194] The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, after careful study, has judged that the book Jesus, Symbol of God,¹ by Father Roger Haight, S.J., contains serious doctrinal errors regarding certain fundamental truths of faith. . . .

[202] . . . In publishing this Notification, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith is obliged to declare that the above-mentioned assertions contained in the book Jesus, Symbol of God, by Father Roger Haight, S.J., are judged to be serious doctrinal errors contrary to the divine and catholic faith of the Church. As a consequence, until such time as his positions are corrected to be in complete conformity with the doctrine of the Church, the author may not teach Catholic theology.

[1009] 2. L'omosessualità e il ministero ordinato

Dal Concilio Vaticano II ad oggi, diversi documenti del Magistero—e specialmente il Catechismo della Chiesa Cattolica—hanno confermato l'insegnamento della Chiesa sull'omosessualità. . . .

Riguardo agli atti, insegna che, nella Sacra Scrittura, essi vengono presentati come peccati gravi. La Tradizione li ha costantemente considerati come intrinsecamente immorali e contrari alla legge naturale. . . .

Per quanto concerne le tendenze omosessuali profondamente radicate, che si riscontrano in un certo numero di uomini e donne, sono anch'esse oggettivamente disordinate e sovente costituiscono, anche per loro, una prova. Tali persone devono essere accolte con rispetto e delicatezza; a loro riguardo si eviterà ogni marchio di ingiusta discriminazione. Esse sono chiamate a realizzare la volontà di Dio nella loro vita e a unire al sacrificio della croce del Signore le difficoltà che possono incontrare.¹

Alla luce di tale insegnamento, questo Dicastero, d'intesa con la Congregazione per il Culto Divino e la Disciplina dei Sacramenti, ritiene necessario affermare chiaramente che la Chiesa, pur rispettando profondamente le persone in questione,² non può ammettere al Seminario e agli Ordini sacri coloro che praticano l'omosessualità, presentano tendenze omosessuali profondamente radicate o sostengono la cosiddetta cultura gay.³

[1010] . . . Non sono affatto da trascurare le conseguenze negative che possono derivare dall'Ordinazione di persone con tendenze omosessuali profondamente radicate. Qualora, invece, si trattasse di tendenze omosessuali che fossero solo l'espressione di un problema transitorio, come, ad esempio, quello di un'adolescenza non ancora compiuta, esse devono comunque essere chiaramente superate almeno tre anni prima dell'Ordinazione diaconale.

2. Homosexuality and the Ordained Ministry

From the time of the Second Vatican Council until today, various documents of the Magisterium, and especially the Catechism of the Catholic Church, have confirmed the teaching of the Church on homosexuality. . . .

Regarding acts, it teaches that Sacred Scripture presents them as grave sins. The tradition has constantly considered them as intrinsically immoral and contrary to the natural law. . . .

Deep-seated homosexual tendencies, which are found in a number of men and women, are also objectively disordered and, for those same people, often constitute a trial. Such persons must be accepted with respect and sensitivity. Every sign of unjust discrimination in their regard should be avoided. They are called to fulfill God's will in their lives and to unite to the sacrifice of the Lord's Cross the difficulties they may encounter.¹

In the light of such teaching, this Dicastery, in accord with the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments, believes it necessary to state clearly that the Church, while profoundly respecting the persons in question,² cannot admit to the seminary or to holy orders those who practice homosexuality, present deep-seated homosexual tendencies, or support the so-called "gay culture".³

. . . One must in no way overlook the negative consequences that can derive from the ordination of persons with deep-seated homosexual tendencies. Different, however, would be the case in which one was dealing with homosexual tendencies that were only the expression of a transitory problem—for example, that of an adolescence not yet superseded. Nevertheless, such tendencies must be clearly overcome at least three years before ordination to the diaconate.

Prooemium

5101 [217] 1. “DEUS CARITAS EST, et, qui manet in caritate, in Deo manet, et Deus in eo manet” [1 Io 4:6]. Haec Primae Epistulae Ioannis verba singulari quidem perspicuitate veluti fidei christianae centrum aperiunt: christianam Dei imaginem atque etiam congruentem hominis imaginem eiusque itineris. Praeterea eodem hoc in versiculo nobis concedit Ioannes compendiariam, ut ita dicamus, christianae vitae formulam: “Et nos cognovimus et credidimus caritati quam habet Deus in nobis.”

Nos Dei caritati credidimus—sic praecipuam vitae suae electionem declarare potest christianus. Ad initium, cum quis christianus fit, nulla est ethica voluntas neque magna quaedam opinio, verumtamen congressio datur cum eventu quodam, cum Persona quae novum vitae finem imponit eodemque tempore certam progressionem. Suo in Evangelio iam notaverat Ioannes hunc eventum hisce verbis: “Sic enim dilexit Deus mundum, ut Filium suum unigenitum daret, ut omnis, qui credit in eum ... habeat vitam aeternam” [3:16]. Cum medio puncto amoris suscepit christiana fides id quod fidei Israel fuerat nucleus simulque eidem nucleo novam addidit altitudinem atque amplitudinem. Credens enim Israelita cotidie verbis precatur Libri Deuteronomii, ubi includi is novit suae vitae nucleum: “Audi, Israel: Dominus Deus noster Dominus unus est. Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde [218] tuo et ex tota anima tua et ex tota fortitudine tua” [6:4–5]. In unicum aliquod praescriptum coniunxit Iesus amoris Dei mandatum cum amoris proximi praecepto, quod quidem continetur in Libro Levitico: “Diliges proximum tuum sicut te ipsum” [19:18; cf. Me 12:29–31]. Quoniam prior nos Deus dilexit [cf. 1 Io 4:10], nunc non est iam tantum “praeceptum” amor, verum est responsio erga amoris donum, quo Deus nobis occurrit.

In orbe, ubi cum Dei nomine nonnumquam etiam vindicta quin immo officium odii et violentiae coniunguntur, hic nuntius magnum habet in praesentia pondus atque certam quandam significationem. Hac de causa in his Nostris primis Encyclicis Litteris de amore cupimus loqui quo Deus nos replet quique a nobis cum aliis communicari debet. Sic harum Encyclicarum Litterarum duae magnae demonstrantur partes, quae inter se arte nectuntur. Earum prima pars prae se magis indolem speculativam fert, quandoquidem in ea—Nostris Pontificatus initio—quaedam de Dei amore praecipua extollere volumus, quem ipse arcana gratuitaque ratione homini praebet, una cum intrinseco vinculo illius Amoris cum humani amoris natura. Introduction

1. “God is love, and he who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him” [1 Jn 4:16]. These words from the First Letter of John express with remarkable clarity the heart of the Christian faith: the Christian image of God and the resulting image of mankind and its destiny. In the same verse, Saint John also offers a kind of summary of the Christian life: “We have come to know and to believe in the love God has for us.”

We have come to believe in God’s love: in these words the Christian can express the fundamental decision of his life. Being Christian is not the result of an ethical choice or a lofty idea, but the encounter with an event, a person, which gives life a new horizon and a decisive direction. Saint John’s Gospel describes that event in these words: “God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should ... have eternal life” [3:16]. In acknowledging the centrality of love, Christian faith has retained the core of Israel’s faith, while at the same time giving it new depth and breadth. The pious Jew prayed daily the words of the Book of Deuteronomy that expressed the heart of his existence: “Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord, and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might” [6:4–5]. Jesus united into a single precept this commandment of love for God and the commandment of love for neighbor found in the Book of Leviticus: “You shall love your neighbor as yourself” [19:18; cf. Mk 12:29–31]. Since God has first loved us [cf. 1 Jn 4:10], love is now no longer a mere “command”; it is the response to the gift of love with which God draws near to us.

In a world where the name of God is sometimes associated with vengeance or even a duty of hatred and violence, this message is both timely and significant. For this reason, I wish in my first encyclical to speak of the love that God lavishes upon us and that we in turn must share with others. That, in essence, is what the two main parts of this letter are about, and they are profoundly interconnected. The first part is more speculative, since I wanted here—at the beginning of my pontificate—to clarify some essential facts concerning the love that God mysteriously and gratuitously offers to man, together with the intrinsic link between that Love and the reality of human love. The second part is more concrete, since it treats the ecclesial exercise of the commandment of love of neighbor. The argument has vast implications, but a lengthy treatment would go beyond the scope of the present encyclical. I wish to emphasize some basic elements, so as to call forth in the world renewed energy and commitment in the human response to God's love.

PARS PRIMA

PART ONE

Amoris Unitas in Creatione et Salutis Historia

The Unity of Love in Creation and in Salvation History

[223] ... 7. Deliberationes nostrae, initio potius philosophicae, de amoris essentia per interiorem vim ad fidem usque biblicam nos nunc perduxerunt. Principio enim quaestio est posita utrum variae, immo contrariae, vocabuli amoris significationes subaudiunt quandam altiore unitatem an contra manere debeant solutae, una iuxta aliam. Ante omnia tamen quaestio emersit habeatne nuntius amoris nobis a Sacris Bibliis adlatus nec non ab Ecclesiae Traditione aliquid commune cum universali hominum amoris experientia an fortasse illi potius opponatur. Huius rei causa incidimus duas in principales voces quae sunt: eros uti titulus amoris "mundani" significandi atque agape tamquam amoris declaratio qui fide nititur eaque conformatur. Hi duo conceptus crebro inter se opponuntur ut "ascendens" amor et amor "descendens". Aliae quoque praesto sunt similes definitiones, verbi gratia distinctio inter amorem possessivum atque amorem oblativum (amorem concupiscentiae—amorem benevolentiae), cui interdum etiam amor subiungitur qui ad propriam spectat utilitatem.

... 7. By their own inner logic, these initial, somewhat philosophical reflections on the essence of love have now brought us to the threshold of biblical faith. We began by asking whether the different, or even opposed, meanings of the word "love" point to some profound underlying unity, or whether, on the contrary, they must remain unconnected, one alongside the other. More significantly, though, we questioned whether the message of love proclaimed to us by the Bible and the Church's tradition has some points of contact with the common human experience of love, or whether it is opposed to that experience. This in turn led us to consider two fundamental words: eros, as a term to indicate "worldly" love, and agape, referring to love grounded in and shaped by faith. The two notions are often contrasted as "ascending" love and "descending" love. There are other, similar classifications, such as the distinction between possessive love and oblativ love (amor concupiscentiae—amor benevolentiae), to which is sometimes also added love that seeks its own advantage.

In philosophica atque theologica disceptatione haec discrimina saepius ad extremum deducebantur, usquedum inter se opponebantur: amor proprie christianus esse dicebatur descendens, oblativus, id est agape; cultura autem non christiana, praesertim Graeca, amore signabatur ascendente, cupidus et possessivo, qui nempe est eros. Si quis autem voluerit hanc oppositionem ad ultima producere, tunc christianae rei essentia separabitur a principalibus vitae rationibus ipsorum hominum atque in se iam alium orbem constituet, qui fortasse mirabilis erit, at penitus ab ipsa summa vitae humanae segregatus. Re quidem vera eros et agape—amor ascendens atque amor descendens—non se sinunt umquam inter se seiungi. Quo enim plus etiam aliis modis rectam unitatem reperiunt in una amoris veritate, eo sane plus vera amoris natura in universum completur. Etiam si principio ipse eros in primis est studiosus, ascendens—quod fascinum ex magna felicitatis pollicitatione procedit—appropinquans deinde alteri, minus usque interrogant de se atque beatitatem alterius plus usque inquit, magis semper de illo

In philosophical and theological debate, these distinctions have often been radicalized to the point of establishing a clear antithesis between them: descending, oblativ love—agape—would be typically Christian, while, on the other hand, ascending, possessive, or covetous love—eros—would be typical of non-Christian, and particularly Greek, culture. Were this antithesis to be taken to extremes, the essence of Christianity would be detached from the vital relations fundamental to human existence and would become a world apart, admirable perhaps, but decisively cut off from the complex fabric of human life. Yet eros and agape—ascending love and descending love—can never be completely separated. The more the two, in their different aspects, find a proper unity in the one reality of love, the more the true nature of love in general is realized. Even if eros is at first mainly covetous and ascending, a fascination for the great promise of happiness, in drawing near to the other, it is less and less concerned with itself, increasingly seeks the happiness of the other, is concerned more and more with sollicitabitur, sese donabit atque cupiet “pro altero se esse”. Sic tempus agape in eum inseritur; alioquin eros decedit perditque suam ipsius naturam. Aliunde vero homo non potest vivere tantummodo de amore oblativo, descendente. Non valet semper solum donare, etiam recipere debet....

[226] 10. ... Philosophicus ad aspectus itemque historicus-religiosus in hac Sacrorum Bibliorum ratione revelandus in eo nititur quod ex una parte nos ante imaginem ponimus Dei, stricte quidem metaphysicam: absolute est Deus omnium rerum primigenius fons; sed hoc omnium rerum creandarum principium—Logos, primordialis ratio—est eadem opera amans quiddam, veri amoris impetu praeditum. Hoc modo eros summe extollitur, sed eodem tempore ita purificatur ut cum agape misceatur. Quocirca intellegere possumus Canticum Canticorum in Sacrae Scripturae canonem receptum, esse explicatum ex eo quod canticis his amoris demum Dei necessitudo significatur cum homine vicissimque hominis cum Deo. Hac ratione Canticum Canticorum factum est, tam in Christianis quam in Iudaicis litteris, cognitionis ac mysticae experientiae scaturigo, in qua biblicae fidei essentia manifestatur: ita sane, est hominis cum Deo consociatio—somnia scilicet hominis primigenium—, at haec consociatio non debet una simul fundi, in oceano videlicet Divini sine nomine mergi; est coniunctio quaedam quae amorem gignit, in quo ambo—Deus et homo—sui ipsorum manent atque tamen plene unum fiunt: “Qui ... adhaeret Domino, unus Spiritus est” cum eo [1 Cor 6:17], ait sanctus Paulus.

11. ... [227] ... “Quam ob rem relinquet vir patrem suum et matrem et adhaerebit uxori suae; et erunt in carnem unam” [Gn 2:24].

Daec hic reperiuntur maioris momenti notiones: eros in ipsius natura hominis est quasi defixus; Adamus aliquid exquirat atque “relinquet patrem suum et matrem” mulierem inquisiturus. Sua in unitate tantum humanitatis integritatem fingunt, “una caro” fiunt. Non minus praestat altera notio: in cursu quodam, qui in creatione nititur, ad matrimonium committit eros hominem, ad vinculum scilicet quoddam, singulariter definiteque signatum. Sic et sic tantum suus intimus finis ad effectum adducitur. Ad unius Dei imaginem monogamicum coniugium respondet. Matrimonium, quod in amore unico ac definito fundatur, imaginem efficit Dei necessitudinis cum eius populo ac vicissim: ratio qua Deus amat mensura fit humani amoris. Artum hoc inter eros et coniugium in Bibliis Sacris vinculum fere in litteris extra ea similitudinem non reperit.

Christus Iesus—Dei incarnatus amor

5102 12. ... Vera Novi Testamenti novitas haud in novis opinionationibus sistit, sed in ipsa Christi effigie, qui cogitationibus praebet carnem et [228] sanguinem—

the beloved, bestows itself and wants to “be there for” the other. The element of agape thus enters into this love, for otherwise eros is impoverished and even loses its own nature. On the other hand, man cannot live by oblativo, descending love alone. He cannot always give, he must also receive....

10. ... The philosophical dimension to be noted in this biblical vision, and its importance from the standpoint of the history of religions, lies in the fact that, on the one hand, we find ourselves before a strictly metaphysical image of God: God is the absolute and ultimate source of all being; but this universal principle of creation—the Logos, primordial reason—is at the same time a lover with all the passion of a true love. Eros is thus supremely ennobled, yet at the same time it is so purified as to become one with agape. We can thus see how the reception of the Song of Songs in the canon of Sacred Scripture was soon explained by the idea that these love songs ultimately describe God’s relation to man and man’s relation to God. Thus the Song of Songs became, both in Christian and Jewish literature, a source of mystical knowledge and experience, an expression of the essence of biblical faith: that man can indeed enter into union with God—his primordial aspiration. But this union is no mere fusion, a sinking in the nameless ocean of the Divine; it is a unity that creates love, a unity in which both God and man remain themselves and yet become fully one. As Saint Paul says: “He who is united to the Lord becomes one spirit with him” [1 Cor 6:17].

11. ... “Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and cleaves to his wife and they become one flesh” [Gen 2:24].

Two aspects of this are important. First, eros is somehow rooted in man’s very nature; Adam is a seeker, who “abandons his mother and father” in order to find woman; only together do the two represent complete humanity and become “one flesh”. The second aspect is equally important. From the standpoint of creation, eros directs man toward marriage, to a bond that is unique and definitive; thus, and only thus, does it fulfill its deepest purpose. Corresponding to the image of a monotheistic God is monogamous marriage. Marriage based on exclusive and definitive love becomes the icon of the relationship between God and his people and vice versa. God’s way of loving becomes the measure of human love. This close connection between eros and marriage in the Bible has practically no equivalent in extra-biblical literature.

Jesus Christ—the incarnate love of God

12. ... The real novelty of the New Testament lies not so much in new ideas as in the figure of Christ himself, who gives flesh and blood to those concepts—inaudited realism. In the Old Testament, the novelty of the Bible did not consist merely in abstract notions but in God's unpredictable and in some sense unprecedented activity. This divine activity now takes on dramatic form when, in Jesus Christ, it is God himself who goes in search of the "stray sheep", a suffering and lost humanity....

17. ... [231] ... Inter Deum hominem que amoris historia in eo nempe stat quod haec voluntatis communio in cogitationis affectionisque communione adolescit, atque sic nostra et Dei voluntas magis ac magis idem expetit: Dei voluntas mihi iam non est extranea voluntas, quam mihi extrinsecus mandata praecipunt, sed mea eadem est voluntas, eo quod ex experientia Deus re vera "interior intimo meo"¹ est quam ego. In Deo tum crescit deditio et Deus nostrum fit gaudium [cf. Ps 73[72]:23–28].

[232] 18. ... Mea solum proximi conveniendi promptitudo, ut ei amor significetur, coram Deo quoque me sensibilem reddit. Tantum proximi famulatus id patefacit mihi quod Deus pro me efficit et significat quo pacto me ipse amet. Sancti—verbi gratia beatam Matrem Teresiam Calcuttensem cogitemus—ex Domino eucharistico convento suam proximi usque de integro amandi vim hauserunt, atque vicissim hic occursus suam realem virtutem altitudinemque ex eorum famulatu pro aliis obtinuit. Amor Dei proximique amor seungi non possunt; unum est mandatum....

EXERCITATIO AMORIS IN ECCLESIA VELUTI "COMMUNITATE AMORIS"

... Caritas Ecclesiae officium

[233] 20. Amor proximi in amore Dei insitus officium est praesertim cuiusque fidelis, at est etiam officium totius communitatis ecclesialis, et hoc quibuscumque in eius gradibus: a communitate locali ad Ecclesiam particularem, immo ad Ecclesiam universalem in eius integritate. Ecclesia quoque tamquam [234] communitas amorem exsequi debet. Ex quo sequitur amorem egere etiam ordinatione uti praeparatione ad ministerium commune intenta. Talis officii conscientia habuit momentum decretorium in Ecclesia ab eius primordiis: "Omnes autem, qui crediderant, erant pariter et habebant omnia communia, et possessiones et substantias vendebant an unprecedented realism. In the Old Testament, the novelty of the Bible did not consist merely in abstract notions but in God's unpredictable and in some sense unprecedented activity. This divine activity now takes on dramatic form when, in Jesus Christ, it is God himself who goes in search of the "stray sheep", a suffering and lost humanity....

17. ... The love-story between God and man consists in the very fact that this communion of will increases in a communion of thought and sentiment, and thus our will and God's will increasingly coincide: God's will is no longer for me an alien will, something imposed on me from without by the commandments, but it is now my own will, based on the realization that God is in fact more deeply present to me than I am to myself.¹ Then self-abandonment to God increases and God becomes our joy [cf. Ps 73:23–28].

18. ... Only my readiness to encounter my neighbor and to show him love makes me sensitive to God as well. Only if I serve my neighbor can my eyes be opened to what God does for me and how much he loves me. The saints—consider the example of Blessed Teresa of Calcutta—constantly renewed their capacity for love of neighbor from their encounter with the Eucharistic Lord, and conversely this encounter acquired its realism and depth in their service to others. Love of God and love of neighbor are thus inseparable; they form a single commandment....

PART TWO

Caritas

THE PRACTICE OF LOVE BY THE CHURCH AS A "COMMUNITY OF LOVE"

... Charity as a responsibility of the Church

20. Love of neighbor, grounded in the love of God, 5103 is first and foremost a responsibility for each individual member of the faithful, but it is also a responsibility for the entire ecclesial community at every level: from the local community to the particular Church and to the Church universal in her entirety. As a community, the Church must practice love. Love thus needs to be organized if it is to be an ordered service to the community. The awareness of this responsibility has had a constitutive relevance in the Church from the beginning: "All who believed were together and had all things in common; and they sold their possessions and goods and distributed et dividebant illas omnibus, prout cuique opus erat” [Act 2:44–45]. ... Adolescente Ecclesia, haec absoluta forma communionis materialis re vera servari non poterat. Essentia tamen eius intima mansit: intra credentium communitatem nullum esse debet paupertatis genus eo quod bona ad dignam vitam agendam necessaria cuidam negantur.

[236] ... 25. Ex nostris deliberationibus hoc loco colliguntur duo essentialia argumenta:

a. Intima Ecclesiae natura triplici exprimitur munere: praedicatione Verbi Dei (kerygma-martyria), celebratione Sacramentorum (leiturgia), ministerio caritatis (diakonia). Munia sunt quae vicissim se praesupponunt et invicem seiungi nequeunt. Caritas non est pro Ecclesia veluti species operis assistentiae socialis quae aliis etiam relinqui posset, sed pertinet ad eius naturam, est irrenunciabilis expressio propriae ipsius essentiae.¹

b. Ecclesia est familia Dei in mundo. In hac familia nemo debet esse qui patitur ob egestatem. Eodem tamen tempore caritas-agape transcendit [237] limites Ecclesiae; parabola boni Samaritani manet veluti ratio mensurae, imponit amorem universalem qui prolabitur ad indigentem “fortuito” inventum [cf. Lc 10:31], quisquis est. Firma manente hac praecepti amoris universalitate, adest tamen exigentia specificae ecclesialis—ea nempe quod in ipsa Ecclesia uti familia nullum membrum ob egestatem patitur. Hoc sensu viget declaratio Epistulae ad Galatas: “Ergo dum tempus habemus, operemur bonum ad omnes, maxime autem ad domesticos fidei” [6:10].

Iustitia et Caritas

them to all, as any had need” [Acts 2:44–45].... As the Church grew, this radical form of material communion could not in fact be preserved. But its essential core remained: within the community of believers there can never be room for a poverty that denies anyone what is needed for a dignified life....

22. As the years went by and the Church spread farther afield, the exercise of charity became established as one of her essential activities, along with the administration of the sacraments and the proclamation of the Word: love for widows and orphans, prisoners, and the sick and needy of every kind is as essential to her as the ministry of the sacraments and preaching of the gospel. The Church cannot neglect the service of charity any more than she can neglect the sacraments and the Word....

25. Thus far, two essential facts have emerged from our reflections:

a. The Church’s deepest nature is expressed in her threefold responsibility: of proclaiming the word of God (kerygma-martyria), celebrating the sacraments (leiturgia), and exercising the ministry of charity (diakonia). These duties presuppose each other and are inseparable. For the Church, charity is not a kind of welfare activity that could equally well be left to others, but is a part of her nature, an indispensable expression of her very being.¹

b. The Church is God’s family in the world. In this family no one ought to go without the necessities of life. Yet at the same time caritas-agape extends beyond the frontiers of the Church. The parable of the Good Samaritan remains as a standard that imposes universal love toward the needy whom we encounter “by chance” [cf. Lk 10:31], whoever they may be. Without in any way detracting from this commandment of universal love, the Church also has a specific responsibility: within the ecclesial family no member should suffer through being in need. The teaching of the Letter to the Galatians is emphatic: “So then, as we have opportunity, let us do good to all, and especially to those who are of the household of faith” [6:10].

Justice and Charity

26. Since the nineteenth century, an objection has been raised to the Church’s charitable activity, subsequently developed with particular insistence by Marxism: the poor, it is claimed, do not need charity but justice.... There is admittedly some truth to this argument, but also much that is mistaken....

*5103¹ Cf. Congregation for Bishops, Directory for the Pastoral Ministry of Bishops Apostolorum Successores, February 22, 2004, 194 (Vatican City, 2004, p. 213).

[238] ... 28. Ad accuratius definiendam congruentiam inter necessarium studium pro iustitia et ministerium caritatis, ratio habeatur oportet de duabus praecipuis in re condicionibus:

a. Iustus societatis et Civitatis ordo fundamentale munus est rei politicae. Civitas quae non regitur iustitia, in magnam latronum manum redigitur, sicut dixit quondam Augustinus: “Remota itaque iustitia quid sunt regna nisi magna latrocinia”.¹...

[239] ... Iustitia est finis et ideo etiam intrinseca cuiusque politicae mensura. Politica est plus quam simplex ars technica qua publicae ordinationes definiuntur: fons eius et finis reperiuntur nempe in iustitia, quae est ethicae indolis....

[240] Ecclesia non potest nec debet sibi assumere politicam contentionem ut societatem quam iustissimam efficiat. Non potest nec debet locum Civitatis proprium occupare. Sed non potest nec debet quoque discedere a studio iustitiam reperiendi. Ingredi debet in eam per viam rationabilis argumentationis, atque spirituales suscitare vires, sine quibus iustitia, quae semper quoque renuntiationes expetit, nec sese extollere nec progredi valet. Iusta societas non potest esse opus Ecclesiae, sed a politicis illud procurari oportet. Attamen illius magnopere interest pro iustitia operari ut et mens aperiantur et voluntas boni postulationibus.

b. Amor—caritas—semper necessarius erit, in societate etiam admodum iusta. Nulla habetur iusta ordinatio civilis quae superfluum reddere possit ministerium amoris. Si quis de amore vult se subtrahere, prolabitur ad se ab homine velut homine eximendum. Semper dolor aderit in eo qui solacio indiget et auxilio. Semper aderit solitudo. Semper aderunt quoque condiciones materialis necessitatis, in quibus opus erit auxilium ferre intuitu veri erga proximum amoris.² Civitas quae omnibus providere vult, quae omnia in se amplectitur, efficitur denique burocratica instantia quae praestare nequit necessarium illud quo homo patiens—omnis homo—indiget: nempe benevola personali deditio. Non agitur de Civitate quae omnia constituat ac dominetur, sed potius de Civitate quae liberaliter agnoscat et foveat secundum subsidiarietatis principium incepta quae oriuntur ex variis socialibus viribus et in quibus coniunguntur libera voluntas et proximitas hominibus auxilio indigentibus. Ecclesia una est ex his viventibus virtutibus: in ipsa palpatur amoris vis a Christi Spiritu suscitata. Amor hic hominibus non solum materiale praebet adiumentum, sed etiam refectionem et curam animae, auxilium saepe

28. In order to define more accurately the relationship between the necessary commitment to justice and the ministry of charity, two fundamental situations need to be considered:

a. The just ordering of society and the State is a central responsibility of politics. As Augustine once said, a State that is not governed according to justice would be just a bunch of thieves.¹...

Justice is both the aim and the intrinsic criterion of all politics. Politics is more than a mere mechanism for defining the rules of public life: its origin and its goal are found in justice, which by its very nature has to do with ethics....

The Church cannot and must not take upon herself the political battle to bring about the most just society possible. She cannot and must not replace the State. Yet at the same time she cannot and must not remain on the sidelines in the fight for justice. She has to play her part through rational argument, and she has to reawaken the spiritual energy without which justice, which always demands sacrifice, cannot prevail and prosper. A just society must be the achievement of politics, not of the Church. Yet the promotion of justice through efforts to bring about openness of mind and will to the demands of the common good is something that concerns the Church deeply.

b. Love—caritas—will always prove necessary, even in the most just society. There is no ordering of the State so just that it can eliminate the need for a service of love. Whoever wants to eliminate love is preparing to eliminate man as such. There will always be suffering that cries out for consolation and help. There will always be loneliness. There will always be situations of material need where help in the form of concrete love of neighbor is indispensable.² The State that would provide everything, absorbing everything into itself, would ultimately become a mere bureaucracy incapable of guaranteeing the very thing that the suffering person—every person—needs: namely, loving personal concern. We do not need a State that regulates and controls everything, but a State that, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, generously acknowledges and supports initiatives arising from the different social forces and combines spontaneity with closeness to those in need. The Church is one of those living forces: she is alive with the love enkindled by the Spirit of Christ. This love does not offer people simply material help, but refreshment and care for their souls, something that often is even more necessary than magis necessarium quam fulcimen materiale. Affirmatio, secundum quam iustae structurae opera caritatis superflua reddunt, revera abscondit materiale hominis conceptum: praesumptam scilicet opinionem secundum quam homo vivere potest “in pane solo” [Mt 4:4; cf. Dt 8:3] – persuasionem quae hominem humiliat et reapse id ignorat quod est specificum humanum....

31. ... [244] ... b. Christiana navitas caritativa a factionibus et ideologiis seuncta esse debet. Non est instrumentum ad mundum mutandum secundum quandam doctrinam neque adstat in ministerio mundanorum consiliorum, sed est effectio hic et nunc amoris quo homo semper indiget....

5106: Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity: Statement concerning the Suppression of the Title “Patriarch of the West” in Relation to the Pope, March 22, 2006

Ed.: AAS 98 (2006): 364f.

Nota de suppressione tituli “Patriarca d’Occidente” ad Papam relati 5106 [364] Nell’Annuario Pontificio 2006 manca, nell’enumerazione dei titoli del Papa, il titolo “Patriarca d’Occidente”. Tale assenza è stata commentata in modi diversi ed esige un chiarimento.

Senza la pretesa di considerare la complessa questione storica del titolo di Patriarca in tutti i suoi aspetti, si può affermare dal punto di vista storico che gli antichi Patriarcati dell’Oriente, fissati dai Concili di Costantinopoli (381) e di Calcedonia (451), erano relativi ad un territorio abbastanza chiaramente circoscritto, allorché il territorio della Sede del Vescovo di Roma rimaneva vago. In Oriente, nell’ambito del sistema ecclesiastico imperiale di Giustiniano (527–565), accanto ai quattro Patriarcati orientali (Costantinopoli, Alessandria, Antiochia e Gerusalemme), il Papa era compreso come Patriarca material support. In the end, the claim that just social structures would make works of charity superfluous masks a materialist conception of man: the mistaken notion that man can live “by bread alone” [Mt 4:4; cf. Dt 8:3]—a conviction that demeans man and ultimately disregards all that is specifically human....

31. ... b. Christian charitable activity must be independent of parties and ideologies. It is not a means of changing the world ideologically, and it is not at the service of worldly stratagems, but it is a way of making present here and now the love that man always needs....

c. Charity, furthermore, cannot be used as a means of engaging in what is nowadays considered proselytism. Love is free; it is not practiced as a way of achieving other ends.³...

Those responsible for the Church’s charitable activity

32. Finally, we must turn our attention once again to those who are responsible for carrying out the Church’s charitable activity. As our preceding reflections have made clear, the true subject of the various Catholic organizations that carry out a ministry of charity is the Church herself—at all levels, from the parishes, through the particular Churches, to the universal Church....

Statement concerning the Suppression of the Title “Patriarch of the West” in Relation to the Pope

In the Annuario Pontificio 2006, the title “Patriarch of the West” is missing in the enumeration of the pope’s titles. This absence has been commented upon in various ways and requires a clarification.

Without any pretense of considering the complex historical question of the title of patriarch in all its aspects, it can be affirmed from the historical point of view that the ancient patriarchates of the East, established by the Councils of Constantinople (381) and of Chalcedon (451), were related to a rather clearly circumscribed territory, while the territory of the See of the bishop of Rome would remain vague. In the East, within the framework of the imperial ecclesiastical system of Justinian (527–565), alongside the four Eastern patriarchates (Constantinople, Alexandria, d'Occidente. Inversamente, Roma privilegiò l'idea delle tre sedi episcopali petrine: Roma, Alessandria ed Antiochia. Senza usare il titolo di "Patriarca d'Occidente", il IV Concilio di Costantinopoli (869–70), il IV Concilio del Laterano (1215) ed il Concilio di Firenze (1439), elencarono il Papa come il primo degli allora cinque Patriarchi.

[365] Il titolo di "Patriarca d'Occidente" fu adoperato nell'anno 642 da Papa Teodoro I. In seguito esso ricorse soltanto raramente e non ebbe un significato chiaro. La sua fioritura avvenne nel XVI e XVII secolo, nel quadro del moltiplicarsi dei titoli del Papa; nell'Annuario Pontificio esso apparve per la prima volta nel 1863.

Attualmente il significato del termine "Occidente" richiama un contesto culturale che non si riferisce soltanto all'Europa Occidentale, ma si estende dagli Stati Uniti d'America fino all'Australia e alla Nuova Zelanda, differenziandosi così da altri contesti culturali. Ovviamente tale significato del termine "Occidente" non intende descrivere un territorio ecclesiastico né esso può essere adoperato come definizione di un territorio patriarcale. Se si vuole dare al termine "Occidente" un significato applicabile al linguaggio giuridico ecclesiale, potrebbe essere compreso soltanto in riferimento alla Chiesa latina. Pertanto, il titolo "Patriarca d'Occidente" descriverebbe la speciale relazione del Vescovo di Roma a quest'ultima, e potrebbe esprimere la giurisdizione particolare del Vescovo di Roma per la Chiesa latina.

Di conseguenza, il titolo "Patriarca d'Occidente", sin dall'inizio poco chiaro, nell'evolversi della storia diventava obsoleto e praticamente non più utilizzabile. Appare dunque privo di senso insistere a trascinarselo dietro. Ciò tanto più che la Chiesa cattolica con il Concilio Vaticano II ha trovato per la Chiesa latina nella forma delle Conferenze Episcopali e delle loro riunioni internazionali di Conferenze Episcopali, l'ordinamento canonico adeguato alle necessità di oggi.

Tralasciare il titolo di "Patriarca d'Occidente" non cambia chiaramente nulla al riconoscimento, tanto solennemente dichiarato dal Concilio Vaticano II, delle antiche Chiese patriarcali (Lumen gentium, 23). Ancor meno tale soppressione può voler dire che essa sottintende nuove rivendicazioni. La rinuncia a detto titolo vuole esprimere un realismo storico e teologico e, allo stesso tempo, essere la rinuncia ad una pretesa, rinuncia che potrebbe essere di giovamento al dialogo ecumenico.

Antioch, and Jerusalem), the pope was considered the Patriarch of the West. Conversely, Rome preferred the idea of three Petrine episcopal sees: Rome, Alexandria, and Antioch. Without using the title "Patriarch of the West", the Fourth Council of Constantinople (869–870), the Fourth Lateran Council (1215), and the Council of Florence (1439) considered the pope as the first of the five patriarchs at the time.

The title "Patriarch of the West" was adopted in the year 642 by Pope Theodore I. It was used thereafter only rarely and had no clear meaning. Its development occurred in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, within the framework of the multiplication of papal titles; in the Annuario Pontificio, it appeared for the first time in 1863.

Nowadays, the meaning of the term "West" refers to a cultural context that is no longer tied to Western Europe but that extends from the United States of America to Australia and New Zealand, thereby differentiating itself from other cultural contexts. Obviously, such a meaning of the term "West" does not intend to delineate an ecclesiastical territory, nor can it be understood as the definition of a territory belonging to a patriarchate. If one wanted to give the term "West" a meaning that is applicable to ecclesiastical juridical language, it would be understood only with reference to the Latin Church. The title "Patriarch of the West" would then describe the special relationship of the bishop of Rome to the Latin Church and could express the particular jurisdiction of the bishop of Rome for the Latin Church.

Consequently, the title of "Patriarch of the West", unclear from the beginning, in the course of history became obsolete and practically unusable. It thus seemed pointless to continue using it. All the more so since, with the Second Vatican Council, the Catholic Church found for the Latin Church a canonical arrangement appropriate for the needs of today in the form of bishops' conferences and their international meetings.

Omitting the title of "Patriarch of the West" in reality changes nothing in the recognition, so solemnly declared by the Second Vatican Council, of the ancient patriarchal Churches [Lumen gentium, no. 23]. Still less can such a suppression be said to imply any new claims. The renunciation of said title wishes to express a historical and theological realism and, at the same time, to be a renunciation of a claim, a renunciation that could be of use to the ecumenical dialogue.

... I. Presupuestos Metodológicos

5107 2. ... [183] El lugar eclesial de la cristología no puede ser la “Iglesia de los pobres” sino la fe apostólica transmitida por la Iglesia a todas las generaciones. El teólogo, por su vocación particular en la Iglesia, ha de tener constantemente presente que la teología es ciencia de la fe. Otros puntos de partida para la labor teológica correrán el riesgo de la arbitrariedad y terminarán por desvirtuar los contenidos de la fe misma.¹

3. ... El desarrollo dogmático de los primeros siglos de la Iglesia, incluidos los grandes concilios, es considerado por el P. Sobrino como ambiguo y también negativo. No niega el carácter normativo de las formulaciones dogmáticas, pero, en conjunto, no les reconoce valor más que en el ámbito cultural en que nacieron. No tiene en cuenta el hecho de que el sujeto transtemporal de la fe es la Iglesia creyente y que los pronunciamientos de los primeros concilios han sido aceptados y vividos por toda la comunidad eclesial. ...

[184] II. La Divinidad de Jesucristo

4. ... Con sus aserciones de que la divinidad de Jesús ha sido afirmada sólo después de mucho tiempo de reflexión creyente y que en el Nuevo Testamento se halla solamente “en germen”, el Autor evidentemente tampoco la niega, pero no la afirma con la debida claridad y da pie a la sospecha de que el desarrollo dogmático, que reviste según él características ambiguas, ha llegado a esta formulación sin una continuidad clara con el Nuevo Testamento.

[185] Pero la divinidad de Jesús, está claramente atestiguada en los pasajes del Nuevo Testamento a que nos hemos referido. Las numerosas declaraciones conciliares en este sentido² se encuentran en continuidad con cuanto en el Nuevo Testamento se afirma de manera explícita y no solamente “en germen”. La confesión de la divinidad de Jesucristo es un punto absolutamente esencial de la fe de la Iglesia desde sus orígenes y se halla atestiguada desde el Nuevo Testamento.

... I. Methodological Presuppositions

2. ... The ecclesial foundation of Christology may not be identified with “the Church of the poor” but is found rather in the apostolic faith transmitted through the Church for all generations. The theologian, in his particular vocation in the Church, must continually bear in mind that theology is the science of the faith. Other points of departure for theological work run the risk of arbitrariness and end in a misrepresentation of the same faith.¹

3. ... Father Sobrino considers the dogmatic development of the first centuries of the Church including the great councils to be ambiguous and even negative. Although he does not deny the normative character of the dogmatic formulations, neither does he recognize in them any value except in the cultural milieu in which these formulations were developed. He does not take into account the fact that the transtemporal subject of the faith is the believing Church and that the pronouncements of the first councils have been accepted and lived by the entire ecclesial community. ...

II. The Divinity of Jesus Christ

4. ... Father Sobrino does not deny the divinity of Jesus when he proposes that it is found in the New Testament only “in seed” and was formulated dogmatically only after many years of believing reflection. Nevertheless, he fails to affirm Jesus’ divinity with sufficient clarity. This reticence gives credence to the suspicion that the historical development of dogma, which Sobrino describes as ambiguous, has arrived at the formulation of Jesus’ divinity without a clear continuity with the New Testament.

But the divinity of Jesus is clearly attested to in the passages of the New Testament to which we have referred. The numerous conciliar declarations in this regard² are in continuity with that which the New Testament affirms explicitly and not only “in seed”. The confession of the divinity of Jesus Christ has been an absolutely essential part of the faith of the Church since her origins. It is explicitly witnessed to since the New Testament.

III. La Encarnación del Hijo de Dios

5. Escribe el P. Sobrino: “Desde una perspectiva dogmática debe afirmarse, y con toda radicalidad, que el Hijo (la segunda persona de la Trinidad) asume toda la realidad de Jesús, y aunque la fórmula dogmática nunca explica el hecho de ese ser afectado por lo humano, la tesis es radical. El Hijo experimenta la humanidad, la vida, el destino y la muerte de Jesús” (Jesucristo, 308).

En este pasaje el Autor establece una distinción entre el Hijo y Jesús que sugiere al lector la presencia de dos sujetos en Cristo: el Hijo asume la realidad de Jesús; el Hijo experimenta la humanidad, la vida, el destino y la muerte de Jesús. No resulta claro que el Hijo es Jesús y que Jesús es el Hijo. En el tenor literal de estas frases, el P. Sobrino refleja la llamada teología del homo assumptus, que resulta incompatible con la fe católica. . . .

[186] 6. Otra dificultad en la visión cristológica del P. Sobrino deriva de su insuficiente comprensión de la communicatio idiomatum. . . .

[187] IV. Jesucristo y el Reino de Dios

7. El P. Sobrino desarrolla una visión peculiar acerca de la relación entre Jesús y el Reino de Dios. . . . Según el Autor, la persona de Jesús, como mediador, no se puede absolutizar, sino que se ha de contemplar en su relacionalidad hacia el Reino de Dios, que es evidentemente considerado algo distinto de Jesús mismo. . . . “Mediador y mediación se relacionan, pues, esencialmente, pero no son lo mismo. Siempre hay un Moisés y una tierra prometida, un Monseñor Romero y una justicia anhelada. Ambas cosas, juntas, expresan la totalidad de la voluntad de Dios, pero no son lo mismo” (Jesucristo, 147). Por otra parte la condición de mediador de Jesús le viene sólo de su humanidad: “La posibilidad de ser mediador no le viene, pues, a Cristo de una realidad añadida a lo humano sino que le viene del ejercicio de lo humano” (La fe, 253). . . .

[188] . . . No es suficiente hablar de una conexión íntima o de una relación constitutiva entre Jesús y el Reino o de una “ultimidad del mediador”, si éste nos remite a algo que es distinto de él mismo. Jesucristo y el Reino en un cierto sentido se identifican: en la persona de Jesús el Reino ya se ha hecho presente. . . . “El Reino de Dios no es un concepto, una doctrina, un programa [. . .], sino que es ante todo una persona que tiene el rostro y el nombre de Jesús de Nazaret, imagen del Dios invisible. Si se separa el Reino de Jesús ya no se tiene el Reino de Dios revelado por él.”³. . .

III. The Incarnation of the Son of God

5. Father Sobrino writes: “From a dogmatic point of view, we have to say, without any reservation, that the Son (the second Person of the Trinity) took on the whole reality of Jesus and, although the dogmatic formula never explains the manner of this being affected by the human dimension, the thesis is radical. The Son experienced Jesus’ humanity, existence in history, life, destiny, and death” (Jesus the Liberator, 242).

In this passage, the author introduces a distinction between the Son and Jesus that suggests to the reader the presence of two subjects in Christ: the Son assumes the reality of Jesus; the Son experiences the humanity, the life, the destiny, and the death of Jesus. It is not clear that the Son is Jesus and that Jesus is the Son. In a literal reading of these passages, Father Sobrino reflects the so-called theology of the homo assumptus, which is incompatible with the Catholic faith. . . .

6. Another difficulty with the christological view of Father Sobrino arises from an insufficient comprehension of the communicatio idiomatum. . . .

IV. Jesus Christ and the Kingdom of God

7. Father Sobrino advances a peculiar view of the relationship between Jesus and the Kingdom of God. . . . According to the author, the person of Jesus as mediator cannot be absolutized but must be contemplated in his relatedness to the kingdom of God, which is apparently considered to be something distinct from Jesus himself. . . . “Mediation and mediator are, then, essentially related, but they are not the same thing. There is always a Moses and a promised land, and Archbishop Romero and a dream of justice. Both things, together, express the whole of the will of God, while remaining two distinct things” (Jesus the Liberator, 108). On the other hand, Jesus’ condition as mediator comes solely from the fact of his humanity: “Christ does not, then, derive his possibility of being mediator from anything added to his humanity; it belongs to him by his practice of being human” (Christ the Liberator, 135).

. . . It is insufficient to speak of an intimate connection or of a constitutive relatedness between Jesus and the kingdom or of the finality of the mediator if this suggests something that is distinct from Jesus himself. In a certain sense, Jesus Christ and the kingdom are identified: in the person of Jesus, the kingdom has already been made present. . . . “The kingdom of God is not a concept, a doctrine, or a program . . . , but it is before all else a person with the face and name of Jesus of Nazareth, the image of the invisible God. If the kingdom is separated from Jesus, it is no longer the kingdom of God which he revealed.”³ . . .

*5107³ John Paul II, encyclical letter Redemptoris missio, no. 16 (AAS 83 [1991], 18).

V. La Autoconciencia de Jesucristo

8. El P. Sobrino afirma, citando a L. Boff, que “Jesús fue un extraordinario creyente y tuvo fe. La fe fue el modo de existir de Jesús” (Jesucristo, 203). . . .

[189] . . . La conciencia filial y mesiánica de Jesús es la consecuencia directa de su ontología de Hijo de Dios hecho hombre. Si Jesús fuera un creyente como nosotros, aunque de manera ejemplar, no podría ser el revelador verdadero que nos muestra el rostro del Padre. . . .

Jesús, el Hijo de Dios hecho carne, goza de un conocimiento íntimo e inmediato de su Padre, de una “visión”, que ciertamente va más allá de la fe. La unión hipostática y su misión de revelación y redención requieren la visión del Padre y el conocimiento de su plan de salvación. Es lo que indican los textos evangélicos ya citados. . . .

[190] VI. El Valor Salvífico de la Muerte de Jesús

9. Algunas afirmaciones del P. Sobrino hacen pensar que, según él, Jesús no ha atribuido a su muerte un valor salvífico: “Digamos desde el principio que el Jesús histórico no interpretó su muerte de manera salvífica, según los modelos soteriológicos que, después, elaboró el Nuevo Testamento: sacrificio expiatorio, satisfacción vicaria. . . . En otras palabras, no hay datos para pensar que Jesús otorgara un sentido absoluto trascendente a su propia muerte, como hizo después el Nuevo Testamento” (Jesucristo, 261). . . .

[191] . . . De esta manera los numerosos pasajes del Nuevo Testamento que hablan del valor salvífico de la muerte de Cristo⁴ resultan privados de toda conexión con la conciencia de Cristo durante su vida mortal. . . . De nuevo aparece aquí la dificultad a la que antes se ha hecho mención en cuanto al uso que el P. Sobrino hace del Nuevo Testamento. Los datos neotestamentarios: ceden el paso a una hipotética reconstrucción histórica, que es errónea.

10. . . . El P. Sobrino expone también su punto de vista respecto al significado soteriológico que se debe atribuir a la muerte de Cristo: “. . . El Jesús fiel hasta la cruz es salvación, entonces, al menos en este sentido: es revelación del homo verus, es decir, de un ser humano en el que resultaría que se cumplen tácticamente las características de una verdadera naturaleza humana. . . . El hecho mismo de que se haya revelado lo humano verdadero contra toda expectativa, es ya buena noticia, y por ello, es ya en sí mismo salvación. . . . Esta eficacia salvífica se muestra más bien a la manera de la ejemplar [192] que de la causa eficiente. . . .” (Jesucristo, 293–294). . . .

V. The Self-consciousness of Jesus

8. Citing Leonardo Boff, Father Sobrino affirms that “Jesus was an extraordinary believer and had faith. Faith was Jesus’ mode of being” (Jesus the Liberator, 154). . . .

The filial and messianic consciousness of Jesus is the direct consequence of his ontology as Son of God made man. If Jesus were a believer like ourselves, albeit in an exemplary manner, he would not be able to be the true Revealer showing us the face of the Father. . . .

Jesus, the Incarnate Son of God, enjoys an intimate and immediate knowledge of his Father, a “vision” that certainly goes beyond the vision of faith. The hypostatic union and Jesus’ mission of revelation and redemption require the vision of the Father and the knowledge of his plan of salvation. This is what is indicated in the Gospel texts cited above. . . .

VI. The Salvific Value of the Death of Jesus

9. In some texts some assertions of Father Sobrino make one think that, for him, Jesus did not attribute a salvific value to his own death: “Let it be said from the start that the historical Jesus did not interpret his death in terms of salvation, in terms of soteriological models later developed by the New Testament, such as expiatory sacrifice or vicarious satisfaction. . . . In other words, there are no grounds for thinking that Jesus attributed an absolute transcendent meaning to his own death, as the New Testament did later” (Jesus the Liberator, 201). . . .

In this way, the numerous passages in the New Testament that speak of the salvific value of the death of Christ are deprived of any reference to the consciousness of Christ during his earthly life.⁴ . . . Here again, the difficulty about Father Sobrino’s use of the New Testament appears. In his writing, the New Testament data gives way to a hypothetical historical reconstruction that is erroneous.

10. . . . Father Sobrino also advances his point of view about the soteriological significance that should be attributed to the death of Christ: “. . . The Jesus who is faithful even to the Cross is salvation, then, at least in this sense: he is the revelation of the homo verus, the true and complete human being, that is, of a human being in whom, as a matter of fact, all the characteristics of a true human nature are present. . . . The very fact that true humanity has been revealed, contrary to all expectations, is in itself good news and therefore is already in itself salvation. . . . This saving efficacy is shown more in the form of an exemplary cause than of an efficient cause . . .” (Jesus the Liberator, 229–30).

*5107⁴ Cf., for example, Rom 3:25; 2 Cor 5:21; 1 Jn 2:2, etc.

... La redención parece reducirse a la aparición del homo verus, manifestado en la fidelidad hasta la muerte. La muerte de Cristo es exemplum y no sacramentum (don). La redención se reduce al moralismo. Las dificultades cristológicas notadas ya en relación con el misterio de la encarnación y la relación con el Reino afloran aquí de nuevo....

... Redemption thus seems reduced to the appearance of the homo verus, manifested in fidelity unto death. The death of Christ is exemplum and not sacramentum (gift). This reduces redemption to moralism. The christological difficulties already noted in the discussion of the mystery of the Incarnation and the relationship with the kingdom appear here anew....

1. Queritur: Utrum Concilium Oecumenicum Vaticanum II mutaverit praecedentem doctrinam de Ecclesia?

Introduction

The Second Vatican Council, with its dogmatic constitution Lumen gentium and its decrees on ecumenism (Unitatis redintegratio) and the Oriental Churches (Orientalium Ecclesiarum), has contributed in a decisive way to the understanding of Catholic ecclesiology. The supreme pontiffs have also contributed to this understanding by offering their own insights and orientations for praxis: Paul VI in his encyclical letter Ecclesiam suam (1964) and John Paul II in his encyclical letter Ut unum sint (1995).

The consequent duty of theologians to expound with greater clarity the diverse aspects of ecclesiology has resulted in a flowering of writing in this field. In fact it has become evident that this theme is a most fruitful one, which, however, has also at times required clarification by way of precise definition and correction, for instance, in the declaration Mysterium Ecclesiae (1973), the Letter Addressed to the Bishops of the Catholic Church Communio notio (1992), and the declaration Dominus Iesus (2000), all published by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

The vastness of the subject matter and the novelty of many of the themes involved continue to provoke theological reflection. Among the many new contributions to the field, some are not immune from erroneous interpretations that in turn give rise to confusion and doubt. A number of these interpretations have been referred to the attention of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. Given the universality of Catholic doctrine on the Church, the Congregation wishes to respond to these questions by clarifying the authentic meaning of some ecclesiological expressions used by the Magisterium that are open to misunderstanding in the theological debate.

First Question: Did the Second Vatican Council change the Catholic doctrine on the Church?

Respondetur: Noluit mutare, at evolvere, profundius intellegere et fecundius exponere voluit, nec eam mutavisse dicendum est.

Quod Ioannes XXIII incipiente Concilio dilucide affirmavit.¹ Quod Paulus VI repetivit² et in promulgatione Constitutionis Lumen gentium sic expressit: “Huius vero promulgationis potissimum commentarium illud esse videtur, quod per eam doctrina tradita nullo modo immutata est. Quod Christus voluit, id ipsum nosmetipsi volumus. Quod erat, permansit. Quae volventibus saeculis Ecclesia docuit, eadem et nos docemus. Tantummodo, id quod antea solum vitae actione continebatur, nunc aperta etiam doctrina exprimitur; quod usque adhuc considerationi, disputationi, atque ex parte etiam controversiis obnoxium erat, in certam doctrinae formulam nunc redactum est.”³ Eandem intentionem episcopi iterum iterumque manifestaverunt et consecuti sunt.⁴

Response: The Second Vatican Council neither changed nor intended to change this doctrine; rather it developed, deepened, and more fully explained it.

This was exactly what John XXIII said at the beginning of the Council.¹ Paul VI affirmed it² and commented in the act of promulgating the constitution Lumen gentium: “There is no better comment to make than to say that this promulgation really changes nothing of the traditional doctrine. What Christ willed, we also will. What was, still is. What the Church has taught down through the centuries, we also teach. In simple terms, that which was assumed is now explicit; that which was uncertain is now clarified; that which was meditated upon, discussed, and sometimes argued over is now put together in one clear formulation.”³ The bishops repeatedly expressed and fulfilled this intention.⁴

*5108¹ John XXIII, address of October 11, 1962: “... The Council ... wishes to transmit Catholic doctrine, whole and entire, without alteration or deviation. ... To be sure, at the present time, it is necessary that Christian doctrine in its entirety, and with nothing taken away from it, is accepted with renewed enthusiasm and serene and tranquil adherence. ... It is necessary that the very same doctrine be understood more widely and more profoundly as all those who sincerely adhere to the Christian, Catholic, and apostolic faith strongly desire. ... It is necessary that this certain and unchangeable doctrine, to which is owed the obedience of faith, be explored and expounded in the manner required by our times. For the deposit of faith itself, or the truths that are contained in our venerable doctrine, are one thing; another thing is the way in which they are expressed, with, however, the same meaning and signification” (AAS 54 [1962]: 791–92).

³ Paul VI, address of November 21, 1964 (AAS 56 [1964]: 1009–10).

(A) [In no. 1 (Prooemium) of the schema of the decree: Act Syn III/II 296, 3–6] “Page 5, lines 3–6: Videtur etiam Ecclesiam catholicam inter illas Communiones comprehendere, quod falsum esset. R(espondetur): Hic tantum factum, prout ab omnibus conspicitur, describendum est. Postea clare affirmatur solam Ecclesiam catholicam esse veram Ecclesiam Christi [It appears that the Catholic Church, too, is found among those Communiones, which would be false. Response: Here only the fact, as it is viewed by all, is to be described. Afterward it is clearly affirmed that the Catholic Church alone is the true Church of Christ]” (ActSyn III/VII 12).

(B) [In Chapter I in general: Act Syn III/II 297–301] “4 —Expressius dicatur unam solam esse veram Ecclesiam Christi; hanc esse Catholicam Apostolicam Romanam; omnes debere inquirere, ut eam cognoscant et ingrediantur ad salutem obtinendam. ... R(espondetur): In toto textu sufficienter effertur, quod postulatur. Ex altera parte non est tacendum etiam in aliis communitatibus christianis inveniri veritates revelatas et elementa ecclesialia [4 —Let it be said more expressly that there is only one true Church of Christ; that this is the Catholic Apostolic Roman (Church); that all must seek to know her and enter her in order to obtain salvation. ... Response: In the entire text what is demanded is adequately proclaimed. On the other hand, it must also not be concealed that in other Christian communities revealed truths and ecclesial elements are found]” (ActSyn III/VII 15). Cf. also ibid., pt. 5.

(C) [In chapter I in general: ActSyn III/II 296f.] “5 —Clarius dicendum esset veram Ecclesiam esse solam Ecclesiam catholicam romanam. ... R(espondetur): Textus supponit doctrinam in constitutione ‘De Ecclesia’ expositam, ut pag. 5, lin. 24–25 affirmatur [5 —It should be said more clearly that the Roman Catholic Church alone is the true Church. ... Response: The text presupposes the doctrine set out in the constitution De Ecclesia, as is affirmed on page 5, lines 24–25]” (ActSyn III/VII 15). Thus the commission whose task it was to evaluate the responses to the decree Unitatis redintegratio clearly expressed the identity of the Church of Christ with the Catholic Church and her unicity and understood this doctrine to be founded in the dogmatic constitution Lumen gentium.

Respondetur: Christus unicum Ecclesiam “his in terris ... constituit” et ut “coetum adspectabilem et communitatem spiritualem”⁵ instituit, quae inde a sua origine in decursu historiae semper existit existetque et in qua sola permanserunt ac permanebunt omnia elementa ab eo instituta.⁶ “Haec est unica Christi Ecclesia, quam in Symbolo unam, sanctam, catholicam et apostolicam profitemur... Haec Ecclesia in hoc mundo ut societas constituta et ordinata, subsistit in Ecclesia catholica, a Successore Petri et Episcopis in eius communione gubernata.”⁷

Subsistentia in Constitutione Dogmatica Lumen gentium 8 est haec perpetua continuatio historica atque permanentia omnium elementorum a Christo institutorum in Ecclesia catholica,⁸ in qua Ecclesia Christi his in terris concrete invenitur.

Dum secundum doctrinam catholicam recte dici potest, Ecclesiam Christi in Ecclesiis et communitatibus ecclesialibus nondum plenam communionem cum Ecclesia catholica habentibus adesse et operari propter sanctificationis et veritatis elementa quae in illis sunt,⁹ verbum “subsistit” soli Ecclesiae catholicae ut singulare tantum attribuitur, quia refertur nempe ad notam [607] unitatis in symbolis confessam (Credo ... unam Ecclesiam); quae Ecclesia una subsistit in Ecclesia catholica.¹⁰

3. Quæritur: Quare vocabulum “subsistit in” et non simpliciter verbum “est” adhibetur?

Respondetur: Usus vocabuli retinentis plenam identitatem Ecclesiae Christi et Ecclesiae Catholicae doctrinam de Ecclesia non immutat, rationem tamen habet veritatis, apertius significans quod extra eius compaginem “elementa plura sanctificationis et veritatis” inveniuntur, “quae ut dona Ecclesiae Christi propria ad unitatem catholicam impellunt”.¹¹

Second Question: What is the meaning of the affirmation that the Church of Christ subsists in the Catholic Church?

Response: Christ “established ... here on earth” only one Church and instituted her as a “visible and spiritual community”,⁵ which from its beginning and throughout the centuries has always existed and will always exist and in which alone are found all the elements that Christ himself instituted.⁶ “This one Church of Christ, which we confess in the Creed as one, holy, catholic, and apostolic... This Church, constituted and organized in this world as a society, subsists in the Catholic Church, governed by the successor of Peter and the bishops in communion with him.”⁷

In number 8 of the dogmatic constitution Lumen gentium, “subsistence” means this perduring, historical continuity and the permanence of all the elements instituted by Christ in the Catholic Church,⁸ in which the Church of Christ is concretely found on this earth.

It is possible, according to Catholic doctrine, to affirm correctly that the Church of Christ is present and operative in the churches and ecclesial Communities not yet fully in communion with the Catholic Church, on account of the elements of sanctification and truth that are present in them.⁹ Nevertheless, the word “subsists” can only be attributed to the Catholic Church alone precisely because it refers to the mark of unity that we profess in the symbols of the faith (I believe ... in the “one” Church); and this “one” Church subsists in the Catholic Church.¹⁰

Third Question: Why was the expression “subsists in” adopted instead of the simple word “is”?

Response: The use of this expression, which indicates the full identity of the Church of Christ with the Catholic Church, does not change the doctrine on the Church. Rather, it comes from and brings out more clearly the fact that there are “numerous elements of sanctification and of truth” that are found outside her structure but that, “as gifts properly belonging to the Church of Christ, impel toward Catholic Unity”.¹¹

The two expressions quoted are those of Unitatis redintegratio, nos. 2, 5, and 3, 1.

4. Quaeritur: Quare Concilium Oecumenicum Vaticanum II Ecclesiis orientalibus a plena communione Ecclesiae catholicae seiunctis nomen “Ecclesiae” attribuit?

Respondetur: Concilium usum traditionalem nominis accipere voluit. “Cum autem illae Ecclesiae quamvis seiunctae, vera sacramenta habeant, praecipue vero, vi successionis apostolicae, Sacerdotium et Eucharistiam, quibus arctissima necessitudine adhuc nobiscum coniunguntur”,¹³ titulum merentur “Ecclesiae particulares vel locales”,¹⁴ et Ecclesiae sorores Ecclesiarum particularium catholicarum nuncupantur.¹⁵

“Proinde per celebrationem Eucharistiae Domini in his singulis Ecclesiis, Ecclesia Dei aedificatur et crescit.”¹⁶ Quia autem communio cum Ecclesia [608] catholica, cuius visibilis Caput est Episcopus Romae ac Successor Petri, non est quoddam complementum Ecclesiae particulari ab extra adveniens, sed unum e principiis internis quibus ipsa constituitur, conditio Ecclesiae particularis, qua potiuntur venerabiles illae communitates christianae, defectu tamen afficitur.¹⁷

Ex altera parte, plenitudo catholicitatis Ecclesiae propria, a Successore Petri et Episcopis in eius communione gubernatae, propter divisionem christianorum impeditur in historia plene consummanda.¹⁸

5. Quaeritur: Cur textus Concilii et Magisterii subsequentis communitatibus natis ex Reformatione saeculi XVI titulum Ecclesiae non attribuunt?

Respondetur: Quia secundum doctrinam catholicam hae communitates successionem apostolicam in sacramento Ordinis non habent, ideoque elemento essenziale Ecclesiam constitutivo carent. Illae communitates ecclesiales, quae, praesertim propter sacerdotii ministerialis

“It follows that these separated churches and Communities, though we believe they suffer from defects, are deprived neither of significance nor of importance in the mystery of salvation. In fact, the Spirit of Christ has not refrained from using them as instruments of salvation, whose value derives from that fullness of grace and of truth which has been entrusted to the Catholic Church.”¹²

Fourth Question: Why does the Second Vatican Council use the term “Church” in reference to the Oriental Churches separated from full communion with the Catholic Church?

Response: The council wanted to adopt the traditional use of the term. “Because these Churches, although separated, have true sacraments and above all—because of the apostolic succession—the priesthood and the Eucharist, by means of which they remain linked to us by very close bonds”,¹³ they merit the title of “particular or local Churches”¹⁴ and are called sister Churches of the particular Catholic Churches.¹⁵

“It is through the celebration of the Eucharist of the Lord in each of these Churches that the Church of God is built up and grows in stature.”¹⁶ However, since communion with the Catholic Church, the visible head of which is the bishop of Rome and the successor of Peter, is not some external complement to a particular Church but rather one of her internal constitutive principles, these venerable Christian communities lack something in their condition as particular Churches.¹⁷

On the other hand, because of the division between Christians, the fullness of universality, which is proper to the Church governed by the successor of Peter and the bishops in communion with him, is not fully realized in history.¹⁸

Fifth Question: Why do the texts of the council and those of the Magisterium since the council not use the title of “Church” with regard to those Christian Communities born out of the Reformation of the sixteenth century?

Response: According to Catholic doctrine, these Communities do not enjoy apostolic succession in the sacrament of orders and are, therefore, deprived of a constitutive element of the Church. These ecclesial Communities, which, specifically because of the absence

5109: Motu Proprio Summorum pontificum on the Use of the Roman Liturgy Prior to the Reform of 1970, July 7, 2007

With this motu proprio, the Roman Missal approved by John XXIII in 1962 is approved as an extraordinary form of the Latin Rite alongside the ordinary form of the Roman Missal approved by Paul VI and John Paul II. This measure aroused considerable opposition.

Ed.: AAS 99 (2007): 777–81.

[778] Inter Ritus romani libros liturgicos patet eminere Missale Romanum, quod in Romana urbe succrevit, atque succedentibus saeculis gradatim formas assumpsit, quae cum illa in generationibus recentioribus vigente magnam habent similitudinem...

Recentioribus autem temporibus, Concilium Vaticanum II desiderium expressit, ut debita observantia et reverentia erga cultum divinum denuo instauraretur ac necessitatibus nostrae aetatis aptaretur. Quo desiderio motus, Decessor noster Summus Pontifex Paulus VI libros liturgicos instauratos et partim innovatos anno 1970 Ecclesiae latinae approbavit; qui ubique terrarum permultas in linguas vulgares conversi, ab Episcopis atque a sacerdotibus et fidelibus libenter recepti sunt...

Instantibus precibus horum fidelium iam a Praedecessore Nostro Ioanne Paulo II diu perpensis, auditis etiam a Nobis Patribus Cardinalibus in Consistorio die XXIII mensis Martii anni 2006 habito, omnibus mature perpensis, invocato Spiritu Sancto et Dei freti auxilio, praesentibus Litteris Apostolicis DECERNIMUS quae sequuntur:

Art. 1. Missale Romanum a Paulo VI promulgatum ordinaria expressio “Legis orandi” Ecclesiae catholicae ritus Latini est. Missale autem Romanum a S. Pio V promulgatum et a beato Ioanne XXIII denuo editum habeatur uti extraordinaria expressio eiusdem “Legis orandi” Ecclesiae et ob venerabilem et antiquum eius

One of the liturgical books of the Roman Rite is the Roman Missal, which developed in the city of Rome and, with the passing of the centuries, little by little took forms very similar to that which it has had in recent times... 5109

In more recent times, Vatican Council II expressed a desire that the respectful reverence due to divine worship should be renewed and adapted to the needs of our time. Moved by this desire, our predecessor, the Supreme Pontiff Paul VI, approved, in 1970, reformed, and partly renewed liturgical books for the Latin Church. These, translated into the various languages of the world, were willingly accepted by bishops, priests, and faithful...

But in some regions, not a few faithful adhered and continue to adhere with great love and affection to the earlier liturgical forms. These had so deeply marked their culture and their spirit that in 1984 the Supreme Pontiff John Paul II, moved by a concern for the pastoral care of these faithful, with the special indult Quattuor abhinc anno, issued by the Congregation for Divine Worship, granted permission to use the Roman Missal published by John XXIII in the year 1962...

Following the insistent prayers of these faithful, long deliberated upon by Our predecessor John Paul II, and after having listened to the views of the Cardinal Fathers of the Consistory of March 22, 2006, having reflected deeply upon all aspects of the question, invoked the Holy Spirit, and trusting in the help of God, with these apostolic letters We establish the following:

Art. 1. The Roman Missal promulgated by Paul VI is the ordinary expression of the “Lex orandi” (law of prayer) of the Catholic Church of the Latin Rite. Nonetheless, the Roman Missal promulgated by St. Pius V and reissued by Bl. John XXIII is to be considered as an extraordinary expression of that same “Lex orandi” usum debito gaudeat honore. Hae duae expressiones “legis orandi” Ecclesiae, minime vero inducent in divisionem “legis credendi” Ecclesiae; sunt enim duo usus unici ritus Romani.

*5108 ¹⁹ Cf. Second Vatican Council, decree Unitatis redintegratio, no. 22, 3.

²⁰ Cf. Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, declaration Dominus Iesus, no. 17, 2 (AAS 92 [2000-II]: 758; *5088).

and must be given due honor for its venerable and ancient usage. These two expressions of the Church’s “Lex orandi” will in no way lead to a division in the Church’s “Lex credendi” (law of belief). They are, in fact, two usages of the one Roman Rite.

5110: Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Responses to Certain Questions of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops concerning Artificial Nutrition and Hydration, August 1, 2007*

Ed.: AAS 99 (2007): 820f.

5110 [120] 1. Quaeritur: Estne moralis obligatio subministrandi cibum et potum—sive naturali sive artificiosa ratione—aegroto qui versatur in “statu vegetativo”, excepto casu quo haec alimenta a corpore aegroti recepti nequeant seu solummodo cum gravi molestia physica ministrari possunt?

Respondetur affirmative; quandoquidem cibi potusque subministratio, artificiali etiam methodo peracta, in linea principii, servandae vitae medium ordinarium et proportionatum evadit. Quapropter eiusdem procurandae moralis viget obligatio, quatenus consequi comprobetur finem suum proprium, nempe nutritionem et imbibitionem aegroti; qua quidem subministratio dolores et mors inanitionis et dehydrationis causa vitantur.

2. Quaeritur: Si cibum et potum methodis artificialibus aegroto in “statu vegetativo permanente” versanti procurantur, possunt cessare erogari ex idoneorum medicorum sententia, vi certitudinis moralis praedita, secundum quam aegrotus numquam conscientiam suam recuperaturum esse censetur?

Respondetur negative; etenim aegrotus in “statu vegetativo permanente” versans semper persona est, dignitate humana nullatenus destituta, cui ex hac ipsa ratione curae ordinariae et proportionatae debentur; inter quas, in linea principii, subministratio cibi et potus, etiam methodo artificiali obtinenda, connumeranda est.

First question: Is the administration of food and water (whether by natural or artificial means) to a patient in a “vegetative state” morally obligatory except when they cannot be assimilated by the patient’s body or cannot be administered to the patient without causing significant physical discomfort?

Response: Yes. The administration of food and water even by artificial means is, in principle, an ordinary and proportionate means of preserving life. It is therefore obligatory to the extent to which, and for as long as, it is shown to accomplish its proper finality, which is the hydration and nourishment of the patient. In this way suffering and death by starvation and dehydration are prevented.

Second question: When nutrition and hydration are being supplied by artificial means to a patient in a “permanent vegetative state”, may they be discontinued when competent physicians judge with moral certainty that the patient will never recover consciousness?

Response: No. A patient in a “permanent vegetative state” is a person with fundamental human dignity and must, therefore, receive ordinary and proportionate care which includes, in principle, the administration of water and food even by artificial means.

5111–5115: Encyclical Spe salvi, November 30, 2007

After the programmatic, essentially catechetical first encyclical (cf. *5101–5105), the pope treated the subject of hope in his second encyclical. The similarly catechetical character is manifested by, among other things, the fact that, apart from the Catechism of the Catholic Church, neither councils nor prior documents of the Magisterium are cited, as would otherwise be customary.

[985] Prooemium

Introduction

5111 1. “Spe salvi facti sumus”—ait sanctus Paulus Romanis et nobis quoque (Rom 8:24). “Redemptio”, salus in christiana fide non est tantum simplex notitia. Redemptio nobis offertur eo sensu quod spes data est nobis, spes vero

1. “Spe salvi facti sumus”—in hope we were saved, says St. Paul to the Romans, and likewise to us [Rom 8:24]. According to the Christian faith, “redemption”—salvation—is not simply a given. Redemption is credenda, vi cuius nos praesentem possumus oppetere vitam: operosam quoque praesentem vitam quae geri et accipi potest, dummodo perducatur in metam atque si de hac meta certi esse possumus, si haec meta ita sublimis est ut pondus itineris pretium sit operae. ...

Fides spes est

2. ... [986] ... Paulus ... Thessalonicenses alloquitur: vos ita agite “ut non contristemini sicut et ceteri, qui spem non habent” [1 Thess 4:13]. In his quoque verbis propria christianorum nota apparet, nempe quod illi habent futurum: quamvis venturi temporis singula ignorant, summam tamen norunt vitam in vacuum non reduci. Tantummodo cum futurum certum est uti realitas positiva, tunc praesens dignum est ut vivatur. ...

[988] Notio spei quae fide nititur apud Novum Testamentum primaeamque Ecclesiam

[991] 7. ... In capite undecimo Epistulae ad Hebraeos (v. 1) quandam repperimus definitionem fidei quae hanc virtutem arte cum spe coniungit. ... “Fides est hypostasis rerum sperandarum; probatio rerum quae conspici nequeunt” [992] ... Fides ... Nobis iam nunc tribuit aliquid realitatis exspectatae, et haec praesens realitas “probationem” quandam nobis constituit rerum quae nondum conspiciuntur. Ipsa attrahit futurum intra tempus praesens, eo ut hoc extremum tempus non sit amplius solum illud “nondum”. Existentia huius futuri mutat praesens; praesens futura realitate attingitur, et ita res futurae in praesentes vertuntur et praesentes in futuras. ...

[993] 9. ... Ita enim hoc verbo significatur spes vitaliter gesta, vita quae spei certitudine nititur. Novo in Testamento haec Dei exspectatio, haec confirmatio a Dei [994] parte novum sensum accipit: in Christo enim Deo hoc est demonstratum. “Substantiam” enim rerum venturarum iam nobis patefecit, ita etiam Dei exspectatio novam accipit certitudinem. Ex rebus enim venturis exspectatur, iam inde a rebus in praesentia donatis. Exspectatur quidem Christo praesente et cum Christo praesente ut in eius Corpore totum compleatur donec extremus eius veniat adventus. ...

Vita aeterna—quid est?

10. ... [995] ... Cooritur simul tamen quaestio: cupimusne revera hoc—sempiternum vivere? Plures forsitan hodie idcirco fidem repudiant tantummodo quia illis vita aeterna non videatur optabilis res. Aeternam respuunt vitam sed praesentem accipiunt, et fides propterea de vita aeterna hunc ad finem videtur potius impedimentum. Vivere enim in aeternum—sine fine—pergere magis offered to us in the sense that we have been given hope, trustworthy hope, by virtue of which we can face our present: the present, even if it is arduous, can be lived and accepted if it leads toward a goal, if we can be sure of this goal, and if this goal is great enough to justify the effort of the journey. ...

Faith Is Hope

2. ... Paul ... says to the Thessalonians: You must not “grieve as others do who have no hope” [1 Thess 4:13]. Here too we see as a distinguishing mark of Christians the fact that they have a future: it is not that they know the details of what awaits them, but they know in general terms that their life will not end in emptiness. Only when the future is certain as a positive reality does it become possible to live the present as well. ...

The Concept of Faith-Based Hope in the New Testament and the Early Church

7. ... In the eleventh chapter of the Letter to the Hebrews (v. 1), we find a kind of definition of faith that closely links this virtue with hope. ... “Faith is the hypostasis of things hoped for; the proof of things not seen.” ... Faith ... gives us even now something of the reality we are waiting for, and this present reality constitutes for us a “proof” of the things that are still unseen. Faith draws the future into the present, so that it is no longer simply a “not yet”. The fact that this future exists changes the present; the present is touched by the future reality, and thus the things of the future spill over into those of the present and those of the present into those of the future. ...

9. ... Thus the word hypomone indicates a lived hope, a life based on the certainty of hope. In the New Testament this expectation of God, this standing with God, takes on a new significance: in Christ, God has revealed himself. He has already communicated to us the “substance” of things to come, and thus the expectation of God acquires a new certainty. It is the expectation of things to come from the perspective of a present that is already given. It is a looking-forward in Christ’s presence, with Christ who is present, to the perfecting of his Body, to his definitive coming. ...

Eternal Life—What Is It?

10. ... But then the question arises: Do we really want this—to live eternally? Perhaps many people reject the faith today simply because they do not find the prospect of eternal life attractive. What they desire is not eternal life at all, but this present life, for which faith in eternal life seems something of an impediment. To continue living forever—endlessly—appears more like a curse than a

[999] Fidei speique christianae transfiguratio recentioribus temporibus

5113 16. Quomodo enucleari potuit cogitatio illa: Christi nuntium stricto sensu ad singulos pertinere et solum unumquemque tangere? Quomodo eo perventum est ut “salutem animae” interpretarentur tamquam fugam ab officiis pro universo corpore et ut proinde disciplinam christiani nominis haberent uti singularem quandam inquisitionem salutis quae aliorum declinarent adiutorium? ... [1000] ... Ad Baconis mentem—novitas inde venit quod nova ratione scientia coniunguntur et usus. Hoc dein adhiberi potest etiam theologica ratione: nova enim haec inter scientiam et cotidianum usum habitudo significat dominationem in res creatas, homini a Deo concessam at originali peccato amissam restaurari posse.¹

Nunc vero eadem illa “redemptio”, “paradisi” amissi reintegratio non iam a fide petitur verum ex coniunctione nuper reperta inter scientiam et usum. gift. Death, admittedly, one would wish to postpone for as long as possible. But to live always, without end—this, all things considered, can only be monotonous and ultimately unbearable....

11. ... So what do we really want? Our paradoxical attitude gives rise to a deeper question: What in fact is “life”?... Ultimately we want only one thing—“the blessed life”, the life that is simply life, simply “happiness”. In the final analysis, there is nothing else that we ask for in prayer....

12. ... The term “eternal life” is intended to give a name to this known “unknown”....

Is Christian Hope Individualistic?

13. ... This type of hope has been subjected to an increasingly harsh critique in modern times: it is dismissed as pure individualism, a way of abandoning the world to its misery and taking refuge in a private form of eternal salvation....

The Transformation of Christian Faith and Hope in the Modern Age

16. How could the idea have developed that Jesus’ message is narrowly individualistic and aimed only at each person singly? How did we arrive at this interpretation of the “salvation of the soul” as a flight from responsibility for the whole, and how did we come to conceive the Christian project as a selfish search for salvation that rejects the idea of serving others?... The novelty—according to Bacon’s vision—lies in a new correlation between science and praxis. This is also given a theological application: the new correlation between science and praxis would mean that the dominion over creation—given to man by God and lost through original sin—would be reestablished.¹

17. Anyone who reads and reflects on these statements attentively will recognize that a disturbing step has been taken: up to that time, the recovery of what man had lost through the expulsion from Paradise was expected from faith in Jesus Christ: herein lay “redemption”. Now, this “redemption”, the restoration of the lost “Paradise”, is no longer expected from faith, but from the newly discovered link between science and praxis. It is not that faith is simply denied; rather it is displaced onto another level—that of purely private and other-worldly affairs—and at the same time it becomes somehow irrelevant for the world....

18. Eodem vero tempore duo rerum ordines magis magisque ingrediuntur progressus notionem: ratio atque libertas....

[1002] 20. ... Post illius medii ordinis motum anno MDCCCLXXXIX iam tempus advenerat novae seditionis, videlicet proletarianae. Haudquaquam poterat simpliciter technicus progressus parvis passibus lineari modo procedere. Saltus poscebatur alicuius revolutionis. Hanc temporis illius appellationem suscepit Carolus Marx atque linguae cogitationisque vibratione novum hunc magnum passum provehere studuit et, uti opinabatur, decretorium in annalibus versus salutem—scilicet ad id quod “Dei regnum” designaverat Kant.... Marx condicionem sui temporis descripsit atque acumine analytico vias ad rerum eversionem illustravit—non modo scientia: per communistarum factionem, ex communistarum praeconio anni MDCCCXLVIII natam, eam definite incohavit. Eius promissio, propter [1003] accuratas investigationes perspicuamque instrumentorum significationem ad radicatus effectam mutationem, allexit et usque semper denuo allicit. Rerum deinde conversio extremo maxime modo in Russia etiam evenit.

21. Sed cum eius victoria clare etiam animadversus est praecipuus Marx error. Ipse perdiligenter significavit quomodo conversio efficienda sit.... Nobis autem non dixit quomodo res postea procedere debuerint. Marx non solum necessaria novi mundi excogitare elementa et instituta omisit—his enim ipsis iam opus esse non debebat. Quod de hoc ipse nihil docet, clare ex sua rerum dispositione oritur. Altius inhaeret error eius. Ipse oblitus est hominem manere semper hominem. Hominem oblitus est atque eius oblitus est libertatem. Oblitus est libertatem manere semper libertatem, etiam pro malo....

24. Iterum nos ipsos interrogemus: quid sperare possumus? Et quid sperare non possumus? Ante omnia adfirmare debemus additionalem progressionem tantummodo in materiali sensu fieri posse. Hic, augescente cognitione structurarum materiae atque in congruentia cum inventionibus in dies progredientibus, clare quaedam consecutio datur progressionis ad maiorem usque naturae dominationem. In conscientiae ethicae ambitu decisionisque moralis deest similis additionis possibilitas eo quod humana libertas semper nova est atque iterum iterumque sua debet ferre iudicia.

18. At the same time, two categories become increasingly central to the idea of progress: reason and freedom....

19. We must look briefly at the two essential stages in the political realization of this hope, because they are of great importance for the development of Christian hope, for a proper understanding of it and of the reasons for its persistence. First there is the French Revolution—an attempt to establish the rule of reason and freedom as a political reality....

20. ... After the bourgeois revolution of 1789, the time had come for a new, proletarian revolution: progress could not simply continue in small, linear steps. A revolutionary leap was needed. Karl Marx took up the rallying call and applied his incisive language and intellect to the task of launching this major new and, as he thought, definitive step in history toward salvation—toward what Kant had described as the “Kingdom of God”.... Marx described the situation of his time, and with great analytical skill he spelled out the paths leading to revolution—and not only theoretically: by means of the Communist Party that came into being from the Communist Manifesto of 1848, he set it in motion. His promise, owing to the acuteness of his analysis and his clear indication of the means for radical change, was and still remains an endless source of fascination. Real revolution followed, in the most radical way in Russia.

21. Together with the victory of the revolution, though, Marx’s fundamental error also became evident. He showed precisely how to overthrow the existing order, but he did not say how matters should proceed thereafter.... Marx not only omitted to work out how this new world would be organized—which should, of course, have been unnecessary. His silence on this matter follows logically from his chosen approach. His error lay deeper. He forgot that man always remains man. He forgot man, and he forgot man’s freedom. He forgot that freedom always remains also freedom for evil....

The True Shape of Christian Hope

24. Let us ask once again: What may we hope? And what may we not hope? First of all, we must acknowledge that incremental progress is possible only in the material sphere. Here, amid our growing knowledge of the structure of matter and in the light of ever more advanced inventions, we clearly see continuous progress toward an ever greater mastery of nature. Yet in the field of ethical awareness and moral decision-making, there is no similar possibility of accumulation for the simple reason that man’s freedom is always new and he must always make his decisions anew. These decisions can never simply be [1006] 26. Non est scientia quae hominem redimit. Homo per caritatem redimitur. Id valet iam in ambitu mere mundiali. Cum quis sua in vita magnum amorem experitur, illud est “redemptionis” tempus, quod novam eius vitae offert significationem. Sed cito ille intellet quoque amorem sibi donatum, per se ipsum, suae vitae quaestionem non absolvere. Est amor qui fragilis manet. Potest morte deleri. Homo absoluto indiget amore. Indiget hac certitudine [1007] vi cuius ille dicere potest: “Neque mors neque vita neque angeli neque principatus neque instantia neque futura neque virtutes neque altitudo neque profundum neque alia quaelibet creatura poterit nos separare a caritate Dei, quae est in Christo Iesu Domino nostro” [Rom 8:38–39]. Si hic existit absolutus amor sua cum absoluta certitudine, tunc—solummodo tunc—homo “redemptus” est, quodcumque ei peculiari in casu obveniat. Id intellegitur cum dicimus: Iesus Christus nos “redemit”. Per Ipsum facti sumus certi de Deo—de Deo qui remotam quandam non constituit mundi “primam causam”, quoniam eius Filius unigenitus homo factus est, de quo unusquisque dicere potest: “In fide vivo Filii Dei, qui dilexit me et tradidit seipsum pro me” [Gal 2:20]....

[1011] “Loca” ad spem descendum et exercendam

I. Oratio tamquam spei schola

made for us in advance by others—if that were the case, we would no longer be free. Freedom presupposes that in fundamental decisions, every person and every generation is a new beginning....

26. It is not science that redeems man: man is redeemed by love. This applies even in terms of this present world. When someone has the experience of a great love in his life, this is a moment of “redemption” that gives a new meaning to his life. But soon he will also realize that the love bestowed upon him cannot by itself resolve the question of his life. It is a love that remains fragile. It can be destroyed by death. The human being needs unconditional love. He needs the certainty that makes him say: “Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord” [Rom 8:38–39]. If this absolute love exists, with its absolute certainty, then—only then—is man “redeemed”, whatever should happen to him in his particular circumstances. This is what it means to say: Jesus Christ has “redeemed” us. Through him we have become certain of God, a God who is not a remote “first cause” of the world, because his only begotten Son has become man and of him everyone can say: “I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me” [Gal 2:20]....

“Settings” for Learning and Practicing Hope

I. Prayer as a School of Hope

32. A first essential setting for learning hope is prayer. When no one listens to me anymore, God still listens to me. When I can no longer talk to anyone or call upon anyone, I can always talk to God. When there is no longer anyone to help me deal with a need or expectation that goes beyond the human capacity for hope, he can help me.¹ When I have been plunged into complete solitude ...; if I pray I am never totally alone....

II. Action and Suffering as Settings for Learning Hope

35. All serious and upright human conduct is hope in action....

37. ... We can try to limit suffering, to fight against it, but we cannot eliminate it.... It is not by sidestepping or fleeing from suffering that we are healed, but rather by our capacity for accepting it, maturing through it, and finding meaning through union with Christ, who suffered with infinite love....

[1016] 38. Humanitatis mensura determinatur essentialiter per habitudinem inter dolorem et dolentem. Hoc valet tam pro singulis quam pro societate. Societas quae dolentes accipere non potest neque adiuuare per participatum affectum, ut dolor dividatur et etiam interius feratur, est societas crudelis et inhumana. Nihilominus societas non valet patientes excipere nec eos in doloribus sustinere, si ipsi singuli ad hoc faciendum inhabiles sunt, et, alioquin, alter alterius dolores suscipere nequit, si ipsemet in dolore sensum, viam purificationis et maturitatis, iter spei detegere non potest....

[1018] III. *Iudicium tamquam locus ad spem
descendam et exercendam*

41. ... Prospectus Iudicii iam a primordiis animos christianorum in eorum vita cotidiana permovet tamquam regula ad vitam praesentem temperandam, tamquam monitum ad eorum conscientiam simulque tamquam spes de divina iustitia. Fides in Christum numquam solum retro respexit nec solum in altum, sed semper etiam in futurum, in horam iustitiae quam Dominus saepe praenuntiaverat. Hic contuitus in futurum tempus christianismum in praesentia dignitate ditavit....

42. Nova aetate mens de Iudicio finali obsolescit: ... [1019] ... Attamen materia fundamentalis circa expectationem Iudicii prorsus non evanescit. Nunc autem illud formam plane diversam induit. Atheismus XIX et XX saeculi secundum suas radices sumque finem, est quidam moralismus: reclamatio contra mundi et universalis historiae iniustitias. Mundus, in quo talis datur moles iniustitiae, doloris innocentium atque immanitatis potestatum, boni Dei opus nequit esse.... Si coram dolore huius mundi reclamatio contra Deum comprehensibilis videtur, ambitiosum desiderium ut hominum societas ea facere possit et debeat quae nullus Deus facit nec facere potest, superbum exstat atque intrinsecus non verum. Quod demum ex huiusmodi propositione graves immanitates iustitiaeque violationes sunt secutae, id haud casu evenit, sed in intrinseca huius praesumptionis falsitate innititur....

[1020] 44. Quod adversus Deum iustitiae nomine arguitur id non iuvat. Sine Deo mundus est sine spe mundus [cf. Eph 2:12]. Deus unus iustitiam efficere potest. Atque fides nos certos reddit: Is id agit. Novissimi Iudicii imago in [1021] primis terrifica non est imago, sed spei imago; nobis fortasse ipsa spei decretoria imago.... Deus iustitia est et iustitiam creat. Haec nostra solatio atque nostra spes. At sua in iustitia simul est gratia. Hoc scimus, Christum cruci affixum et resuscitatum contuentes. Ambae—iustitia et gratia—suo in interiore

38. The true measure of humanity is essentially determined in relationship to suffering and to the sufferer. This holds true both for the individual and for society. A society unable to accept its suffering members and incapable of helping to share their suffering and to bear it inwardly through “com-passion” is a cruel and inhuman society. Yet society cannot accept its suffering members and support them in their trials unless individuals are capable of doing so themselves; moreover, the individual cannot accept another’s suffering unless he personally is able to find meaning in suffering, a path of purification and growth in maturity, a journey of hope....

III. Judgment as a Setting for Learning and Practicing Hope

41. ... The prospect of the Judgment has influenced Christians in their daily living as a criterion by which to order their present life, as a summons to their conscience, and at the same time as hope in God’s justice. Faith in Christ has never looked merely backward or merely upward, but always also forward to the hour of justice that the Lord repeatedly proclaimed. This looking ahead has given Christianity its importance for the present moment....

42. In the modern era, the idea of the Last Judgment has faded into the background: ... The fundamental content of awaiting a final Judgment, however, has not disappeared: it has simply taken on a totally different form. The atheism of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries is—in its origins and aims—a type of moralism: a protest against the injustices of the world and of world history. A world marked by so much injustice, innocent suffering, and cynicism of power cannot be the work of a good God. A God with responsibility for such a world would not be a just God, much less a good God.... If in the face of this world’s suffering, protest against God is understandable, the claim that humanity can and must do what no God actually does or is able to do is both presumptuous and intrinsically false. It is no accident that this idea has led to the greatest forms of cruelty and violations of justice; rather, it is grounded in the intrinsic falsity of the claim....

44. To protest against God in the name of justice is not helpful. A world without God is a world without hope [cf. Eph 2:12]. Only God can create justice. And faith gives us the certainty that he does so. The image of the Last Judgment is not primarily an image of terror, but an image of hope; for us it may even be the decisive image of hope.... God is justice and creates justice. This is our consolation and our hope. And in his justice there is also grace. This we know by turning our gaze to the crucified and risen Christ. Both these things—justice and grace—

5116–5118: Instruction of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith Dignitas personae on Certain Bioethical Questions, September 8, 2008

The instruction, approved by Benedict XVI—published on the twentieth anniversary of the instruction Donum vitae (*4790–4807)—comments on a number of new bioethical problems: part 1 (nos. 4–10) includes the fundamental criteria of an anthropological, theological, and ethical nature; part 2 treats new questions concerning procreation (nos. 11–23); part 3 examines relevant therapeutic measures (nos. 24–35). The introduction stresses the continuity of the criteria with Donum vitae (*4790–4792) as well as the involvement of philosophical and bioethical experts in the evaluation process. The instruction is addressed to all the Christian faithful and to all who seek the truth.

ANTHROPOLOGICAE, THEOLOGICAE ET ETHICAE
RATIONES

ANTHROPOLOGICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ETHICAL ASPECTS OF HUMAN LIFE AND PROCREATION

5116 4. . . . [861] . . . Expedi illico hic revocare criterium ethicum fundamentale proclamatum in Instructione Donum vitae, ad omnes quaestiones morales perpendendas, quae ponuntur in iis quae spectant interventus de humano embryone: “Fructus generationis humanae, inde a primo temporis momento quo existere incipit, hoc est a momento quo formatio zygoti inchoatur, absolutam illam exigit observantiam, quae ex lege morali homini debetur quoad totam suam rationem corporalem atque spiritualem. Creatura humana ut persona observanda atque tractanda est inde ab eius conceptione, ac propterea inde ab illo temporis momento ipsi agnoscenda sunt iura personae, quorum primum recensetur ius inviolabile ad vitam, quo unaquaeque creatura humana innocens gaudet.”¹

5. . . . [862] . . . Etenim realis creaturae humanae substantia per totum suae vitae decursum, ante et post natiuitatem, vetat affirmari posse sive quod eius natura mutaverit sive quod moralis eius praestantia per gradus transierit, cum referta sit plena idoneitatis assumptione et anthropologica et ethica. Humanus embryon ergo, inde ab exordiis, personae nativa dignitate fruitur.

6. . . . Vitae humanae ortus, praeterea, authenticum habet contextum in matrimonio et in familia, in qua procreatur per actum qui amorem exprimit mutuuum viri et mulieris; igitur “dicendum est procreationem vere consciam erga nasciturum e solo matrimonio oriri posse”.² . . .

[863] 7. Ecclesia firmum habet quod humanum quidlibet sapiat non solum accipitur et observatur a fide,

4. . . . It is appropriate to recall the fundamental ethical criterion expressed in the instruction Donum vitae in order to evaluate all moral questions that relate to procedures involving the human embryo: “Thus the fruit of human generation, from the first moment of its existence, that is to say, from the moment the zygote has formed, demands the unconditional respect that is morally due to the human being in his bodily and spiritual totality. The human being is to be respected and treated as a person from the moment of conception; and therefore from that same moment his rights as a person must be recognized, among which in the first place is the inviolable right of every innocent human being to life.”¹

5. . . . The reality of the human being for the entire span of life, both before and after birth, does not allow us to posit either a change in nature or a gradation in moral value, since it possesses full anthropological and ethical status. The human embryo has, therefore, from the very beginning, the dignity proper to a person.

6. . . . The origin of human life has its authentic context in marriage and in the family, where it is generated through an act that expresses the reciprocal love between a man and a woman. Procreation that is truly responsible vis-à-vis the child to be born “must be the fruit of marriage”.² . . .

7. It is the Church’s conviction that what is human is not only received and respected by faith, but is also

The respect for the individual human being, which reason requires, is further enhanced and strengthened in the light of these truths of faith: thus, we see that there is no contradiction between the affirmation of the dignity and the affirmation of the sacredness of human life. “The different ways in which God, acting in history, cares for the world and for mankind are not mutually exclusive; on the contrary, they support each other and intersect. NOVAE QUAESTIONES DE PROCREATIONE

Technicae methodi adiuvantes fertilitatem

12. Quoad curam infertilitatis, novae artes technicae medicinae debent observare tria fundamentalia bona: a) ius ad vitam et ad physicam integritatem humanae cuiusque creaturae inde a conceptione usque ad mortem naturalem; b) matrimonii unitatem, quae secumfert mutuum observantiam coniugum iuris, ut pater et mater fieri valeant solummodo alter per alterum;¹ c) sexualitatis valores potissimum humanos, qui “poscunt ut humanae personae procreatio habeatur veluti fructus actus coniugalis, qui est nota propria mutui coniugum amoris”.²...

NEW PROBLEMS CONCERNING PROCREATION

Techniques for Assisting Fertility

12. With regard to the treatment of infertility, new 5117 medical techniques must respect three fundamental goods: (a) the right to life and to physical integrity of every human being from conception to natural death; (b) the unity of marriage, which means reciprocal respect for the right within marriage to become a father or mother only together with the other spouse;¹ (c) the specifically human values of sexuality, which require “that the procreation of a human person be brought about as the fruit of the conjugal act specific to the love between spouses”.²...

In light of this principle, all techniques of heterologous artificial fertilization³ as well as those techniques of homologous artificial fertilization⁴ that substitute for the conjugal act are to be excluded. On the other hand, techniques that act as an aid to the conjugal act and its fertility are permitted. ...

Destruction of Embryos*

14. The fact that the process of in vitro fertilization very frequently involves the deliberate destruction of embryos was already noted in the instruction Donum vitae.⁵ There were some who maintained that this was due to techniques that were still somewhat imperfect. Subsequent experience has shown, however, that all techniques of in vitro fertilization proceed as if the human embryo were simply a mass of cells to be used, selected, and discarded. ...

15. ... The blithe acceptance of the enormous number of abortions involved in the process of in vitro fertilization vividly illustrates how the replacement of the conjugal act by a technical procedure—in addition to being in contradiction to the respect that is due to procreation as something that cannot be reduced to mere reproduction—leads to a weakening of the respect owed to every human being. ...

Intracytoplasmic Sperm Injection (ICSI)

17. Among the recent techniques of artificial fertilization that have gradually assumed a particular importance is intracytoplasmic sperm injection.⁶ This technique is used with increasing frequency given its effectiveness in overcoming various forms of male infertility.⁷

Just as in general with in vitro fertilization, of which it is a variety, ICSI is intrinsically illicit: it causes a complete separation between procreation and the conjugal act. ...

*5117⁵ Cf. ibid., II (AAS 80 [1988]: 86).

⁷ There is ongoing discussion among specialists regarding the health risks that this method may pose for children conceived in this way.

New Forms of Interception and Contragestation

23. Alongside methods of preventing pregnancy that are, properly speaking, contraceptive, that is, that prevent conception following from a sexual act, there are other technical means that act after fertilization, when the embryo is already constituted, either before or after implantation in the uterine wall. Such methods are interceptive if they interfere with the embryo before implantation and contragestative if they cause the elimination of the embryo once implanted....

As is known, abortion is “the deliberate and direct killing, by whatever means it is carried out, of a human being in the initial phase of his or her existence, extending from conception to birth”.¹¹ Therefore, the use of means of interception and contragestation fall within the sin of abortion and are gravely immoral. Furthermore, when there is certainty that an abortion has resulted, there are serious penalties in canon law.¹²

28. ... [879] ... Hominis clonatio intrinsece est illicita, quia ad pessimum exitum perducens technicarum artium de artificiosa fecundatione negativitatem, finem habet procreandi novam creaturam humanam avulsam ab actu mutuae donationis coniugum, quin magis radicitus, absolutam ex toto a sexualitate. Haec ratio abusus secumfert et adulterationes artificiosas quibus graviter offenditur humana dignitas.¹

29. Quodsi clonationis finis esset reproductivus, cogereetur creatura clonata ad geneticum patrimonium praestitutum suscipiendum, et subiugaretur de facto—ut supra dictum est—ad quendam servitutis biologicae formam, a qua vix liberari posset. Sed idipsum quod quispiam ius sibi autumat determinandi suo arbitrio qualitates geneticas alius personae secumfert grave crimen contra eius praestantiam et fundamentalem inter homines aequabilitatem....

30. Multo gravior exhibetur, ethica ratione spectata, clonatio therapeutica quam vocant. Creare enim embryones, quos exstinguendos esse statuitur, etiamsi intendatur aegrotis prodesse, omnino incongruens est dignitati humanae, cum existentiam humanae creaturae, licet in gradu embryonis, nihil aliud amplius faciat quam merum instrumentum adhibendum et destruendum ad arbitrium sui. Etenim gravissimum est delictum vitam sacrificare cuiuslibet hominis ad alium curandum....

[880] Usus therapeuticus cellularum staminalium

... [881] 32. Ad iudicium ethicum ferendum perpendenda sunt tum deductionis cellularum staminalium methodi tum damna quae oriri possint ex eorum usu clinico vel experimentalis.

De rationibus ac viis adhibitis ad colligendas cellulas staminales fontes perpendendi sunt. Itaque licitae sunt habendae omnes methodi quae nullum grave damnum inferant creaturae a qua cellulae staminales extrahuntur. Haec condicio generaliter comprobatur si deductio fiat: a) ex texturis creaturae adultae; b) ex cruore funiculi umbilicalis in ipso partu; c) ex texturis fetuum qui mortui sint per naturalem interitum. Deductio econtra strengthening the gene pool.... This would be in contrast with the fundamental truth of the equality of all human beings that is expressed in the principle of justice, the violation of which, in the long run, would harm peaceful coexistence among individuals....

Human Cloning

28. ... Human cloning is intrinsically illicit in that, by taking the ethical negativity of techniques of artificial fertilization to their extreme, it seeks to give rise to a new human being without a connection to the act of reciprocal self-giving between the spouses and, more radically, without any link to sexuality. This leads to manipulation and abuses gravely injurious to human dignity.¹

29. If cloning were to be done for reproduction, this would impose on the resulting individual a predetermined genetic identity, subjecting him—as has been stated—to a form of biological slavery, from which it would be difficult to free himself. The fact that someone would arrogate to himself the right to determine arbitrarily the genetic characteristics of another person represents a grave offense to the dignity of that person as well as to the fundamental equality of all people....

30. From the ethical point of view, so-called therapeutic cloning is even more serious. To create embryos with the intention of destroying them, even with the intention of helping the sick, is completely incompatible with human dignity, because it makes the existence of a human being at the embryonic stage nothing more than a means to be used and destroyed. It is gravely immoral to sacrifice a human life for therapeutic ends....

The Therapeutic Use of Stem Cells

... 32. With regard to the ethical evaluation, it is necessary to consider the methods of obtaining stem cells as well as the risks connected with their clinical and experimental use.

In these methods, the origin of the stem cells must be taken into consideration. Methods that do not cause serious harm to the subject from whom the stem cells are taken are to be considered licit. This is generally the case when tissues are taken from: (a) an adult organism; (b) the blood of the umbilical cord at the time of birth; (c) fetuses who have died of natural causes. The obtaining of stem cells from a living human embryo, on the other Rationem ethicam quod spectat huiusmodi processus offendunt humanae creaturae dignitatem, cum misceantur elementa genetica hominis una cum animalium quae non nisi turbare possunt identitatem specificam hominis....

Usus humanae “materiae biologicae” ex illicita origine provenientis

34. ... [883] ... “Contra est item adserendum embryonum fetuumve humanorum usurpationem tamquam obiectorum totidem periclitationis constituere sceleratam violationem eorum dignitatem ut hominum, quibus videlicet ius sit ad eandem reverentiam quae omni debeatur infanti iam nato omnique personae.”² Huiusmodi experimentorum formae gravem prae se ferunt ordinis moralis turbationem.³

35. Alius est generis res quae in medio ponitur si viri pervestigationibus dediti utantur “materia biologica” originis illicitae, quae creata sit extra suam sedem pervestigationes scientificae vel quae inveniatur in mercatura....

Ad hoc quod spectat non sufficere videtur criterium independentiae a quibusdam propositum ethicis comitatibus, scilicet, nequit affirmari quod ethice liceat uti “materia biologica” illicitae originis, dummodo adsit clara distinctio inter quotquot ex una parte creant, congelant et morti tradunt embryones et quotquot ex altera parte pervestigant et incrementum ferunt scientificis experimentis. Hoc independentiae criterium non valet occultare contradictionem [884] insitam in agendi more eius qui proclamat respuendam esse iniustitiam ab aliis patratam, at insimul suscipit ad laborandum “materiam biologica” ab aliis creatam per huiusmodi iniustitiam....

Alius est ergo declarandum quod officium respuendi talem “materiam biologica” ... oritur ex officio secedendi, in exercitio propriae activitatis scientificae investigationis, ab adiunctis legis graviter iustitiam laedentibus et confirmandi explicite vitae humanae hand, invariably causes the death of the embryo and is consequently gravely illicit....

Attempts at Hybridization

33. Recently animal oocytes have been used for reprogramming the nuclei of human somatic cells—in this is generally called hybrid cloning—in order to extract embryonic stem cells from the resulting embryos without having to use human oocytes.

From the ethical standpoint, such procedures represent an offense against the dignity of human beings on account of the admixture of human and animal genetic elements capable of disrupting the specific identity of man....

The Use of Human “Biological Material” of Illicit Origin

34. ... “... The use of human embryos or fetuses as an object of experimentation constitutes a crime against their dignity as human beings who have a right to the same respect owed to a child once born, just as to every person.”² These forms of experimentation always constitute a grave moral disorder.³

35. A different situation is created when researchers use “biological material” of illicit origin that has been produced apart from their research center or that has been obtained commercially....

In this regard, the criterion of independence as it has been formulated by some ethics committees is not sufficient. According to this criterion, the use of “biological material” of illicit origin would be ethically permissible provided there is a clear separation between those who, on the one hand, produce, freeze, and cause the death of embryos and, on the other, the researchers involved in scientific experimentation. The criterion of independence is not sufficient to avoid a contradiction in the attitude of the person who says that he does not approve of the injustice perpetrated by others but at the same time accepts for his own work the “biological material” that the others have obtained by means of that injustice....

Therefore, it needs to be stated that there is a duty to refuse to use such “biological material”,... (springing) from the necessity to remove oneself, within the area of one’s own research, from a gravely unjust legal situation and to affirm with clarity the value of praestantiam. Igitur independentiae criterium de quo supra mentionem fecimus est necessarium, sed potest non sufficere, ratione ethica spectata.

Verum, in hoc generali et certo prospectu tam diversae ac seiunctae responsabilitates exstant, ut graves causae ac cum ethica congruentes possint excusare usum “rei biologicae” de qua dictum est. Itaque exempli gratia si periculum immineat saluti puerorum possunt eorum parentes usum vaccini permittere ad quod apparandum adhibitae sint lineae cellulares illicitae originis, quin parvipendatur omnium officium manifestandi de hac re dissensum et petendi ut sanitariae structurae in promptu habeant et offerant alia genera vaccinatorum. . . .

human life. Therefore, the above-mentioned criterion of independence is necessary but may be ethically insufficient.

Of course, within this general picture there exist differing degrees of responsibility. Grave reasons may be morally proportionate to justify the use of such “biological material”. Thus, for example, danger to the health of children could permit parents to use a vaccine that was developed using cell lines of illicit origin, while keeping in mind that everyone has the duty to make known his disagreement and to ask that his healthcare system make other types of vaccines available. . . .

A. GOD REVEALS HIMSELF

1. The Nature of the Revelation

a. DEFINITIONS OF THE REVELATION EVENT

A 1a

It has pleased God to reveal himself and to make known the mystery of his will, 4202, 4206; revelation is a communication of God himself and of his determinations, 3004; by it God speaks to —: men as friends, 4202; —: with authority to men, 2778; revelation is a doctrine that transcends history, (800), 3459.

The intention of God is —: that men through Christ in the Holy Spirit have access to the Father and come to share in the Divine Nature, 4202; —: to take men into fellowship with himself, 4202; —: to communicate to men the deepest truth of God and his plan for the salvation of man, 4202, 4204, 4322; —: to reveal the elevation and supernatural communion of man with God, 2854f.; —: to share divine treasures, 3005, 4206; through his revelation, God has made known to Christians his plan of salvation and established Christ, the Savior and Sanctifier, as their Law of life, 4580; cf. E 3bb (prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher); God the Father willed from the beginning to share his glory in Christ Jesus with man, 4814; the mystery of Christ was revealed to the apostles and prophets in the Holy Spirit so that they could preach the gospel, stir up faith, and gather together the Church, 4224; God's intention of salvation also embraces –: those who acknowledge the Creator, particularly Muslims, 4140; –: those who seek in shadows and images for the unknown God, 4140, 4891; cf. F 1b (the universal salvific will of God).

Revelation is –: absolutely necessary in view of the supernatural end of man, (378), 3005; –: definitive and complete, 5085; –: morally necessary to facilitate the knowledge of religious truths that are accessible to reason, 3005, 3876; in the light of revelation –: the vocation and misery of mankind find their ultimate reasons, 4313; –: the mystery of man shines forth, 4322, 4341; through and in Christ the riddles of pain and death are enlightened, 4322, 4341; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation); revelation guides the Church in her dialogue with inquiring men, 4303, 4312, cf. G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture).

The fact of revelation is solemnly defined, 800, 3004f.

Revelation ends with the apostles and is complete, (1501, 3070), 3421, 4201, 5085; cf. A 1bb (historicity and finality of revelation); the pope and bishops receive no new public revelation, 4150f., (4534); cf. H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching).

A 1b

b. PROPERTIES OF REVELATION

1ba The supernatural character of revelation. Revelation (in the strict sense) is supernatural, (2854), 3004–3006, (3547); it cannot be desired with purely natural powers, 2618; faith in revelation is different from natural belief, 3032; faith stands above reason, 2776, 2811, 3017; faith frees reason from errors and enriches it with the knowledge of many things, 2776, 3019, 5075–5077; cf. A 4a (reason and faith in general).

1bb Historicity and finality of revelation. Revelation (and faith in revelation) is invariable, 2802, 2829, 3020, 3043, 3541, 3549, (3626, 3893); the Christian economy of salvation will never pass away, 4204; before the return of Christ no new public revelation is to be expected, 4204; God has provided for the intact continuation and handing on of his saving revelation, 4207; Sacred Scripture, inspired by God, imparts the Word of God himself without change, 4228; cf. A 3b (Sacred Scripture); the Word of God remains eternally, 3235; the invariability of revealed teaching does not exclude the development of the teachings of faith: A 3ab (modes of tradition); A 4b (theological science); H 3b (official doctrinal decisions); on the historical conditionality of statements of faith, cf. 4539f.; the assistance of the Holy Spirit was not promised in order to disclose new doctrine, 3070; condemned are –: accommodations of the teachings of the faith to the spirit of the times, 3340–3342, 3458–3465; –: [The idea of progress in relation to revelation], 2905; –: religious pluralism, 5085; –: a plurality of economies of salvation, 5086.

1bc The mysterious character of revelation. Revelation also mediates a knowledge of divine realities that are in themselves accessible to human reason, 3005, 3876, 4206; natural reason shares these teachings with faith, 2851, 2853, 3136, 5077.

Deeds and words of the event of revelation reciprocally clarify the mystery contained in them, 4202.

Mysteries in the proper sense of the word can come to be grasped only through revelation (or faith), 2853f., 3015, 3041.

Mysteries exceed human reason, 824, 2851f., 2856, 3016, 3041, 4206; even after revelation they remain obscure and veiled, 2856, 3016; they exceed as well the reason of angels, 2856.

Mysteries do not conflict with –: reason, 2776, 2811, 3017–3019, (3287), 5075–5077; –: history, 3544f.; –: the natural sciences, 3287; morally responsible research methods never conflict with the faith, for earthly matters and the concerns of faith derive from the same God, 4336; consequently any claim contrary to the faith is false, 1441, 3017, (3895); causes of apparent contradictions 3017, (3287); a lack of understanding for the legitimate autonomy of science is to be regretted, 4336, 5076.

Revelation is the lodestar of science, 2877.

Cf. A 4a (reason and faith in general); C 4id (human research and the sciences).

A 1c

c. STAGES OF REVELATION

God manifested himself to our first parents, 4203; he has given mankind through Moses, the prophets, and other servants the doctrine of salvation, 800, 4203; he has so revealed himself to Israel that his ways with men and among nations have been made visible, 4221f.; God himself spoke through the prophets, 4221; the Old Testament revelation was preparation for and prefigurement of the revelation through Christ, 4122; cf. E 1b (promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant); E 1c (deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers through hope in the Promised One); through Israel the Church has received the revelation of the Old Testament, 4198; cf. G 1bb (Church prefigured in the Old Testament); G 3ce (relationship of the Church to religions).

God finally sent his Son, 4204; in Jesus Christ shines forth the self-revelation of God, 4202; he brings revelation to completion, 4204, 4207; in deeds and words he revealed his Father and himself, 4224; he speaks God's words, sharing with men the inner life of God, perfecting the Father's work of salvation through words and deeds, through his death, Resurrection, and the sending of the Spirit, 4204; Christ, in the revelation of the Father and his love, reveals man to man himself and makes his calling clear, 4322, 5077; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); E 2 (the life, death, and exaltation of Christ); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher).

God first solemnly revealed the mystery of human salvation in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit promised by Christ, 4175; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history).

Christ chose disciples to be witnesses of his life and his teaching, 4404; cf. E 2bb (Christ's work among men); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 3da (the apostolicity of the Church); in the saints God manifests his presence, 4170; cf. G 3bb (the holiness of the Church); M 1b (the communion of saints).

d. ERRORS TO BE AVOIDED

A 1d

Condemned: [Revelation is a purely human work, a philosophical discovery], 2777, 2781, 2904, 2907, 3541; [Revelation is only the human consciousness of man's relationship to God], 3420, 3464, 3541.

Condemned: [Revelation –: is impossible, 3027f.; –: impairs reason and is damaging], 2906, 3028; [Human reason is autonomous and totally self-sufficient], 2903.

The historical fact of revelation in the strict sense of the word is denied by ^arationalists and ^bmodernists, (^a2904), ^b3475, ^b3477f.; condemned –: the opinion that faith is not concerned with historical truth, 4403; –: the denial of the historical meaning of the witnesses to revelation, 4403; cf. A 3be (the interpretation of Sacred Scripture).

2. The Acceptance of Revelation in Faith

a. THE CAPACITY OF HUMAN REASON FOR TRUTH

A 2a

The human capacity for truth generally considered. Human knowledge has a twofold source: natural reason and faith, 2856, 3015, 5076, 5077, 5080; divine revelation and the wisdom of natural reason bring to light those immutable laws inscribed in the constitutive elements of human nature and revealed to be identical in all beings endowed with reason, 4581. 2aa

Natural knowledge, whose freedom is acknowledged, 3019, (3457), 4336, –: does not contradict the teachings of revelation, 2859; –: has to heed the teachings of revelation, 2914, (3405), 5080.

With reason alone –: one can acquire knowledge of natural, rational, and moral truth that differs from revealed, supernatural knowledge, 2766; the manner in which this knowledge is acquired according to Thomism, 3618–3620; intelligence is not confined to observable data alone but can with certitude attain to reality itself as knowable, 4315, 5080;

–: can be demonstrated the validity of natural human knowledge in general as well as metaphysical principles, 2767, 3892, 5079, 5080; especially the validity of the principles of the sufficient reason, causality, and finality, 3892; arguments to the contrary are rejected, 1028–1042, 1048;

–: the ^aspirituality, ^bimmortality, and ^cfreedom of the human soul can be proven, ^{ab}2766, ^{ac}2812.

Knowledge about hidden and future things cannot be gained from astrology, witchcraft, etc.; cf. J 1ek (superstition); books dealing with such are prohibited, 1859; magnetism and spiritism are condemned, 2825, 3642.

Cf. A 4a (reason and faith in general); C 4ee (mind and reason of man).

The human capacity to recognize religious truths. The existence of God can be known with certainty through natural means, 4206, indeed, 2ab even ^awithout revelation and ^bwithout the assistance of grace ^cit can be proven, ^b2441, ^c2751, 2756, ^{ac}2765, ^{ac}2812, ^c2853, 2855, 3004, 3538, 3875, ^{abc}3890, ^c3892.

The proof proceeds, ^anot a priori, but a posteriori: from the effects to the cause, 3538, ^a3622 (different examples are given); knowledge of God from the moral order, 3978; one cannot appeal to faith against an atheist, (2754), 2812.

One cannot invoke an immediate knowledge or vision of God, 2841f., 3201, 3205.

Certain characteristics of the nature of God can be known with the help of natural reason, (2441), 2853, 3875; among these are –: the existence of God as personal, 3890, 3892, 3979; –: the infinity of the divine perfections, 2751; –: God as origin and goal of all things, 3004, 4206; among various non-Christian people one finds a perception of a hidden power and at times the recognition of a Supreme Being or even of a Father, 4196; cf. G 3ce (Church and religions).

The works of God can certainly be recognized with the help of natural reason; among these are –: creation as such, 3004, 3875, 4203, 4206; –: the moral law, 2866, 3875, 3892; –: the divinity of the Mosaic and Christian revelation, 2752, 2756; –: the existence of Jesus Christ against the claim [Christ is a mythical invention], 2907, (3540), (4405); –: ^amiracles and ^bprophecies, ^a2753, ^{ab}2768, ^{ab}2907, ^{ab}3009, ^a3034, ^a3428, ^a3436f.; the miracle of the Resurrection of Christ can be proven from the tradition, 2754, (2768).

Believers of all religions have heard the revealing voice of God in the discourse of creatures, 4336; religions try to counter the restlessness of the human heart in different ways, 4196; in Hinduism men contemplate the divine mystery and express it in myths and philosophy, 4196; in Buddhism the insufficiency of this changeable world is realized and a way to liberation and illumination is taught, 4196; Muslims adore the one God, living, merciful, and all-powerful, the Creator of heaven and earth, who has spoken to men, 4197; cf. G 3ce (Church and religions).

Reasons for the denial of God's existence and various forms of atheism: C 4kh (atheism); G 3cf (Church and atheism).

^aAtheism, ^bagnosticism, and the ^crejection of natural theology are condemned, ^a3021f., ^b3026, ^c3475, ^a4321.

Cf. A 4a (reason and faith in general); C 4ee (mind and reason of man).

A 2b

b. FAITH AS RESPONSE TO GOD'S REVELATION

2ba God as the foundation of faith. Faith is a supernatural virtue through which what is revealed is believed on the basis of the authority of the God who reveals it, 3008, 3542; faith is free assent, following upon grace, ^aand is not necessarily brought about by proof, ^a3010, ^a3035, 4205; through the revelation of the Trinity in salvation history, above all in Christ, believers are given some knowledge of the intimate life of God, 4522; the Holy Spirit deepens with faith the understanding of revelation, 4205, 4315; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); faith is not a blind assent, 3010, 3542, 5077; through the supernatural power of faith the people of God adheres unwaveringly to the faith, penetrates it more deeply, and applies it more fully, 4130; cf. H 3db (infallibility of the Church); faith manifests God's design for man's total vocation, 4311; cf. C 4j (vocation of man); faith makes possible communion with the deceased, 4318; cf. M 1b (communion of saints).

Grace (the inspiration of the Holy Spirit) from God is necessary, 375, 378, 396–400, 1553, 2813, 3010, 3014, 3035.

Faith is a gift of grace and prerequisite for justification: F 2a; F 2b.

The modernist conception of faith is condemned, 3484–3486, 3542.

2bb Faith and human responsibility. On the part of human reason a judgment is required about the possibility and obligation to believe: Certain knowledge of the presuppositions of the faith (or of the fact of revelation) (which is to be striven for) can actually be attained, 2121, 2752–2754, 2756, 2768, ^a2778, 2853, 3009, 3019, 3539, 3892; faith (as obedience in harmony with reason) must precede reason, 2751, (2754), 2755, 2765f., 2812f., ^a3009, (3019); faith provides a final answer to every thoughtful man, 4318; faith as eschatological interpretation of existence, 4492, 5076, 5077.

On the part of the will the reception of faith demands freedom from coercion, L 5g (human rights); prayer as a school of faith and hope, 5114; action and suffering teach hope, 5114.

Obligation to believe: G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions); L 2c (virtue of faith); L 2f (recognition of the commandments of God and of the Church); all dogmas are revealed and therefore must be believed with the same divine faith, 4538.

Faith depends upon proclamation: The mystery of Christ was revealed to his apostles and prophets in the Holy Spirit, so that they proclaim the gospel to ^athe whole of creation, ^bstirring up faith in Jesus Christ and gathering together the Church, ^a4006, ^b4224; the Church must announce the message of salvation to those who do not believe and must ever preach faith and penance to believers, 4009, 4890; in the proclamation of the gospel, the Church seeks to bring hearers to receive and profess the faith, prepares them for baptism, and incorporates them in Christ, 4141; all proclamation must be regulated by Sacred Scripture, 4228, 4231; cf. A 3 (tradition of revelation); in regard to Church and evangelization or mission, cf. G 3cd; through the proclamation of the gospel the faithful are gathered together, 4151; on the ministry of bishops, priests, and deacons to preach, cf. H 3; H 5; H 6; the laity are to prepare the field of the world for the seeds of the divine Word, 4162; cf. G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); parents are to be the first preachers of the faith to their children, 4128; cf. G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family).

2bc The credibility of the faith. The existence of external signs of credibility are acknowledged, 3033f., 3475, 3477, 3539; motives of credibility are: ^aprophecies, ^bmiracles (among them ^cthe Resurrection of Christ), ^dthe heroism of the martyrs, ^ethe wonderful spread of the Christian religion, [the Church considered in herself (as an exceptional sign), ^a772, ^b2753, ^{bc}2754, ^{abc}2768, ^{abcde}2779, (^a2907), ^{ab}3009, ^e3012–3014, ^b3034, ^{ab}3539; a merely private inspiration or inner experience is not enough, 3033.

The judgment about credibility can be clouded by external influences, 3876; man can find himself in an invincible error concerning the true religion, 2865°, 2866.

3. The Tradition of God's Revelation

A 3a

a. THE NATURE OF THE TRADITION

3aa The beginning of the tradition. The human phenomenon of tradition, 5077, 5080; the tradition of the revelation originates in –: Christ, who reveals it to the apostles, 1501, 3006, 4207, 4212; –: the Holy Spirit, who ^adwells in the Church and who ^bdictated the revelation to the apostles, ^a600, ^b1501, ^b3006, who entrusted it to them, ^b4212, 4224.

In the tradition of the life and the teachings of Christ, three periods can be distinguished, 4404–4406.

Condemned: [The tradition contains nothing divine], 3548.

Modes of the tradition. Revelation is contained in the written and oral traditions of the Church, 609, 1501, 3006, 4207–4214. 3ab

The living tradition comes from the apostles, 4212f., 4534; the apostles handed on in their preaching, by example, and by observances what they had received from Christ or had learned through the prompting of the Holy Spirit, 4207; their preaching is expressed in a special way in the inspired books, 4209; cf. A 3bb (inspiration).

The apostolic tradition develops further in the Church under the assistance of the Holy Spirit, 4210; through the tradition God uninterruptedly converses with the Church, 4211; the faith must (always) further develop and grow, 4823.

In order to keep the Gospel forever whole and alive within the Church, the apostles handed on their own teaching authority to the bishops as their successors, in order that the Gospel would in their preaching be faithfully protected, explained, and made more widely known, (4144, ^a4150), 4208, ^a4212; cf. A 3ac (criteria of the tradition); G 3db (apostolic tradition); H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching).

Criteria of the tradition. The agreement of the entire Church in holding fast to the faith that has been handed on, 1637, ^a4209, 4213; by means of the supernatural sense of the faith, 4130. 3ac

The Holy Scriptures are the supreme rule of faith, 4228.

The handing on of the Word of God in its entirety in proclamation and interpretation by the bishops, to whom the apostles have handed on their own teaching authority, (4144), 4150, 4208, (4209), 4212; the teaching office is not above the Word of God but serves it, 4214.

The practice of the Church in liturgy, prayer, and the life of the faith, 4209, 4213; what has been handed on by the apostles includes everything that contributes to a holy way of life of the people of God and to the increase of the faith, 4209.

The agreement of the Fathers: Appeal to the tradition of the Fathers, 271, 370, 396, 399, 485, 501//520, 548, 550, 575, 635, 710, 824, 850, 1510, 1542, 1600, 1692, 1750, 1766, 1800, 1820f., 2090, 2830, 2855f., 3284, 3541; especially as the standard for interpreting Sacred Scripture, 1507, 1863, 2771, 2784.

The agreement of theologians: This represents the tradition, 824; therefore it must be taken into account, 1407, 2879.

Tradition, Sacred Scripture, and the Magisterium of the Church are so joined together that one does not exist without the others, 4212; a concept of tradition that ignores its living character and opposes the universal Magisterium of the Church and the bishop of Rome is incomplete and contradictory, 4822.

Cf. A 3be (interpretation of Sacred Scripture); A 3c (tradition and Sacred Scripture).

Recognition of the tradition –: is demanded by the Church, 110°, 110, 186°, 1501, 1504, 1863, 2537, 2738f., 2771, 2784, 2879, (3012, 3540), 3626, 4150; –: is achieved, 542, 548, 600, 602f., 609, 650–652, 654, 657, 705, 1510, 1600, 1637, 1648, 1750, 1764, 1766, 1800, 1820f., 3069, 4150. 3ad

b. SACRED SCRIPTURE

A 3b

Sacred Scripture as Word of God and word of men. For their composition God chose men, so that what he himself wanted would be handed on, 4215; Sacred Scripture is the Word of God inasmuch as it is consigned to writing under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, 4212, 4231; cf. A 3bb (inspiration); God has spoken in Sacred Scripture through men in human fashion, 4217, 4220; the human experience of the ages is in accord with Sacred Scripture, 4337. 3ba

The books of the Old Testament also contain some things that are incomplete and temporary, 4222.

What the apostles preached in fulfillment of the commission of Christ, afterward they themselves and apostolic men, under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, handed on in writing, 4225.

Inspiration. The fact of inspiration. The Holy Scriptures contain and are the Word of God because they are inspired, 4231; the canonical books have God as their author, (800), 3006, 3293, 4215, 4217, 4220, 4223, 4228; above all against the Manichaeans it is emphasized that the same God is author of the Old and the New Testament, 198, 325, 685, 790, 854, 1334, 1336, 1501; cf. B 1b (God, as the First Cause of life, truth, goodness). The inspired canonical Scriptures are to be differentiated from the religious texts of the people, 5085. 3bb

God's plan of salvation was foretold in the books of the Old Testament, 4221; the books of the Old Testament –: reveal God and man and the ways in which God deals with men, 4222; –: shows a truly divine pedagogical skill, 4222; –: contain the mystery of our salvation, 4222; –: were completely caught up into the proclamation of the gospel, 4223; –: first show forth their full meaning in the New Testament and in turn explain it, 4223.

The Word of God is set forth in an excellent way in the writings of the New Testament, 4224.

Among all Scriptures, the Gospels are preeminent, 4225; they are –: the principal witness to the life and teaching of the Savior, 4225f., (4406); –: of apostolic origin, 4225; –: the foundation of the faith, 4225.

Inspiration is attributed to the activity of the Holy Spirit, 1334, 1501, 3292, 3593, 4215f.; the Holy Spirit speaks ^a*in the Mosaic law*, ^b*through the prophets (or in the prophets)*, ^c*in the apostles*, ^d*through the evangelists (or in the evangelists)*, ^b41f., ^{bc}44, ^{abcd}46, ^{cd}48, ^e60, ^f150, ^g682, ^h4209, ⁱ4221, ^j4225, ^k4227, ^l4228.

The Spirit works through the sacred writers, 3293, 3650f., 4207, 4215–4220; the explanations of modernism are condemned, 3409–3411, 3413, 3491.

The scope of inspiration: It extends to all the books recognized by the Church with all their parts, (1504, 3006, 3029), 3291f., 4215, 4221, 4227.

The inerrancy of Sacred Scripture. The books of Sacred Scripture teach solidly, faithfully, and without error that truth which God wanted written down for the sake of our salvation, 4216, 4534; the Sacred Scriptures impart the Word of God himself without change, 4228; all the books contain undoubted truth, 1065; they are ^a*because of their inspiration* without error, ^a3292f., 3652–3654; one may not admit that the author has erred, 3291.

Claims are condemned that call the inerrancy into question and that propose a ^a*mythologism*, ^a2907, ^a3034, 3414, 3887.

The Sacred Scriptures do not intend to teach the nature of visible things, which they describe only as they appear to the senses, 3288; therefore there can be no real opposition between theologians and natural scientists, 3287.

3bc The canon. The Church, relying on the belief of the apostles, holds that the books of both the Old and New Testaments in their entirety, with all their parts, are sacred and canonical, 4215.

The canon was fixed by the Church, 179f., 186, 213, (350°), 1335, 1502f.; this canon must be acknowledged ^a*exclusively* and ^b*with all parts* (as they are contained in the Vulgate), ^a202, ^a213, ^a354, ^b1504, 1863, 2538, ^b3006, ^b3029; the books of the Old Testament are to be received with reverence by the Christian faithful, 4222.

The inner basis of canonicity lies neither in the Church's acknowledgment of a purely human work nor alone in the inerrancy of Sacred Scripture, but rather in the fact that it is inspired, 3006, 3409, 3412f., 3415, 3490.

3bd The reading of Sacred Scripture. In Sacred Scripture –: the eternal wisdom is shown, that men may learn the unspeakable goodness of God, 4220; –: the heavenly Father meets his children and speaks with them, 4228; –: men hear God, 4232; Christ himself speaks when Sacred Scripture is read in the Church, 4007; through the Word of God and the sacraments, man is freed from the power of sin and the Evil One and brought into a communion of love with God, 4755; the Word of God is support and life for the Church, 4228; pastoral preaching, catechesis, and Christian instruction draw from the word of Scripture, 4231; the Sacred Scriptures teach that man was created in the image of God and show him his place in the order of creation, 4312.

Easy access to Sacred Scripture should be provided for the faithful, 4229; all Christian faithful, especially members of religious communities, are admonished to frequent reading, 4232; all clergy must engage in diligent reading and study of Scripture, 4232; the reading of the Sacred Scriptures is broadly recommended, 770f.; it is not, however, useful for all, 1853f., 2712, 2771f.; consequently it is not required for all, 2479–2485, 2667; the reading may only use approved editions: A 3be (interpretation of Sacred Scripture).

Sacred Scripture is of the greatest importance in the celebration of the liturgy (in the readings, the homily, the psalms, liturgical prayers, orations, hymns), (4006f.), 4024; cf. J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).

Prayer must accompany the reading of Sacred Scripture, so that God and man may talk together, 4232; cf. J 1ee (prayer); J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).

3be The interpretation of Sacred Scripture. Literal and spiritual sense, 325, 3792f., 3826–3828, 3888f.; the interpreter must pay attention to the content and the unity of the whole of Scripture, 4219.

Original text and translations of Sacred Scripture. The exegete shall consult above all the oldest manuscripts, 3280.

Translations in other languages involve the danger of error and misuse, 770f., 1853f., 2710f.; therefore the Vulgate is declared authentic, 1506, 1853, 2710, 3280; this authenticity is only a juridical one, however, and does not exclude mistakes in translation, 3280, 3794f., 3825; the exegete should also consult other translations, 3280.

The Church tries to obtain suitable translations, above all from the original texts, 4229; translations of the Holy Books produced with the consent of the Church authorities and in cooperation with separated brethren can be used by all Christians, 4229; the faithful are taught the right use of the divine books by translations with commentaries, 4233; the faithful are permitted only translations with explanatory notes and ecclesial approbation, 1508, 1863, 2772; translations by non-Catholic Bible societies are prohibited, 2771, 2784.

Editions of the Sacred Scriptures, provided with suitable footnotes, should be prepared also for the use of non-Christians, 4234.

Literary genres, historicity. The exegete has –: to investigate what the sacred author intended to say, taking literary genres into consideration, 3829f., 4402f., 4405f., 4217, (4402), 4406f.; –: to attend to the prevailing forms of thought, language, narrative, and social interaction at the time, 4218, (4402), 4406; Jesus followed the modes of reasoning and of exposition of his times, 4404; cf. E 3bb (prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Christ as teacher); the apostles passed on the words of the Lord, taught by events and the Spirit, with fuller understanding and according to the needs of their listeners, 4405; they preached using many ways of speaking: catecheses, stories, testimonies, hymns, doxologies, prayers, and other literary forms, 4405; cf. A 3bb (inspiration); G 3d (apostolic tradition); the sacred writers selected what was suited to the situations of the faithful and to the purpose they had in mind and adapted their narration of them to the same situations and purpose, 4406; the evangelists express the words of the Lord, not literally, but differently, while preserving their sense, 4406; the disciples understood correctly the miracles and the other events of Jesus' life as deeds through which men might believe in Christ, 4404.

- The historical method offers aids for exegesis, 4402; it investigates sources carefully, 4402; its application to the Sacred Scriptures, 3290, (4218), 4402f.; the interpreter should attend to the three stages of tradition, 4404; cf. A 3aa (the beginning of tradition); only seemingly historical parts of Scripture, 3373; Genesis chapters 1–11: 3898; Ps 16:10f.: 3750; Gospels generally, 4402–4407; the historicity of the four Gospels, 4226; Mt 16:26 and Lk 9:25: 3751; the Gospel according to John, 3416–3418; the return of Christ in the Pauline letters, 3628–3630; the character of true prophecy, (2907), 3505f., 3528, 3563, 3573; mythological sources, 3899; condemned are –: the opinion that faith has nothing to do with historical truth, 4403; –: the denial of the historical value of the witnesses of revelation, 4403; –: extolling the “creative power of the primitive community” while making light of the authority of the apostles as witnesses to Christ, 4403.
- Only sound elements of the form-historical method are to be used, 4403; their use must lead neither to the denial of the existence of a supernatural order nor to a denial of a personal God in the world and the possibility and existence of miracles and prophecies, 4403; Jesus, because of the honor given him as Son of God in worship, must not be changed into a “mythical” person, and his teaching must not thereby be distorted, 4405; faith confirms the memory of the deeds and teachings of Jesus, 4405.
- As an aid, historical criticism—more than internal criticism—and knowledge of natural science are recommended, 3286f.; the historical method is assisted by textual criticism, literary criticism, and knowledge of the languages, 4402.
- Norms of interpretation are –: the living tradition of the whole Church, 4219; the Church carries out the divine task of guarding and interpreting the Word of God, 4219; the work of the exegetes assists her in this, 4219;
- : the analogy of faith, 3283, 3515, 3546, 3887, 4219;
- : the unanimous tradition of the Fathers and theologians, 1507, 1863, 2771, 2784, 3007, 3284, 3546, 3887; however, not all opinions of each individual must be upheld, 3289;
- : the judgment of the Church’s Magisterium, 1507, 1863, 2538, 3007, 3281, 3401–3408, 4150, 4214, 4219; under the supervision of the Magisterium the divine Scriptures are to be explored and interpreted so that as many servants of the divine Word as possible can dispense the nourishment of the Scriptures to the people of God, 4230.
- There remains a wide field for free research and interpretation regardless of the aforementioned norms, 3282, 3289, 3831, 4407; improvement and correction of ecclesial interpretation is possible there (not in questions of faith and morals), 3294; cf. H 3g (freedom of research and teaching).
- Generally condemned are the interpretive methods of the rationalists, modernists, and non-Catholic Bible societies, 2784, 3546f., 4403; the danger of errors in interpretation, especially among laity, is exposed, 770f.
- Rejected is the claim of the Manichaeans that there are contradictions between the Old and the New Testaments, 198, 790, 854, 1334, 1336.
- Particular questions. Questions of canonicity, authorship, and time of writing of certain books and parts: implicit quotations, 3372, 3654; 3bf the Pentateuch, 3394–3397, 3862–3864; Genesis, 3512–3519; the Psalms, 3521–3528; Isaiah, 3505–3509; the Synoptic question, 3577f.; the Gospel of Matthew, 3561–3567; the Gospels of Mark and Luke, 3568–3576; the Gospel of John, 3398–3400; the Acts of the Apostles, 3581–3586; the Pastoral Letters, 3587–3590; the Letter to the Hebrews, 3591–3593; the Letters of John, 180, 180¹; the Johannine comma, 3681f.; the Revelation of John, 486, 1501^o; other books, 1501^o.

C. TRADITION AND SACRED SCRIPTURE

A 3c

- The divine Scriptures and the holy tradition –: are the highest norm of the faith of the Church, 4228; –: form the one holy deposit of the Word of God, 4213; –: stand in close connection with each other and share the same origin and the same goal, 4212; in them the Church on earth looks at God, until he is seen face to face, 4208; they are both equally venerable, 1501, 4212.
- Through the tradition –: the Church’s full canon of the sacred books is known, 4211; –: the Scriptures are more profoundly understood and made active, 4211.
- The task of authentically interpreting the Word of God, whether written or handed on, has been entrusted exclusively to the teaching office of the Church, 4214; cf. A 3be (interpretation of Sacred Scripture); H 3a (bishops’ ministry of preaching: general specifications); sacred tradition, Sacred Scripture, and the teaching authority of the Church are so joined together that one cannot stand without the others and that together they contribute to salvation, 4214; cf. A 3ac (criteria of tradition); on the task of theology, cf. A 4ba.

4. The Reasonableness of Faith

a. REASON AND FAITH IN GENERAL

A 4a

- Reason demonstrates and defends the faith, 2776, 3019, 3135–3138; to a certain degree it grants insight into the mysteries, 2853, 3016, 3137, 3892; intelligence is not confined to observable data alone but can with genuine certitude attain to reality itself as knowable, 4315; the Church has always sought to express the message of Christ with the help of the concepts and terminology of various peoples and to clarify the message with the help of philosophers, 4344, 5075–5077; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization).

Because of the supernatural and mysterious character of the objects of revelation, limits are set to reason: A 1bc (the mysterious character of revelation); Christ offers in his preaching vistas closed to human reason, 4324; the mysteries cannot be handled like objects of the natural sciences, 2854, 2856f.; philosophy is not free from error, 2829; there are profound questions that can scarcely be solved by reason, 249, 5076, 5077.

Human reason (or philosophy) must serve the revealed truths (or theology) and should not seek to rule them, 824, 2829, 5076, 5077.

Too high an estimation of human reason is criticized (rationalism), 2732, 2775–2777, 2828f., 2850f., 2858–2861, 2878, 2901–2914; condemned is the teaching of the autocracy of reason and its independence from religion, 2860, 2903f., 2911, 2914, 3031f.; condemned is the tendency to solve questions of faith by the aid of reason alone, 824, 2732, (2738), 2851f., 2908f.; thereby would the merit of the faith be nullified, 824.

Cf. A 1b (properties of revelation); A 2a (the capacity of human reason for truth); C 4ee (mind and reason of man).

A 4b

b. THE SCIENCE OF THEOLOGY

4ba The task of theology. Theology is the scientific treatment of revelation in the light of faith, 3135–3138; all means are to be used to probe more deeply into the nature of Gospel testimony, into the religious life of the early Churches, and into the sense and the value of apostolic tradition, 4402; cf. A 3be (interpretation of Sacred Scripture); the Church encourages the study of the holy Fathers of both East and West and of sacred liturgies, 4230; the order of teachers is, as it were, primary in the Church, 771; the vocation of the theologian, 4870; it is the task of theologians to hear, distinguish, and judge the many voices of our age in the light of the divine Word, so that revealed truth can always be more deeply penetrated and set forth to greater advantage, 4344; theologians and other experts in the ecclesiastical sciences are called upon to reveal clearly the Second Vatican Council's unbroken continuity with the tradition, 4823; the integration of philosophies of other cultures, particularly those of India, and the problems involved with it, 5079.

The nature of theological progress lies in deepening, not in changing, 2802, 3020, 3043, 3541, (3626), 3886; condemned is a concept of progress in theology (above all that represented by the modernists), 2905, 3020, 3043, 3422–3424, 3426, 3458–3465, 3483, 3488, 3541; also condemned is the charge that the Magisterium of the Church has hindered the progress of theology, 2912, 3457; freedom of theological research, 4873; there is no obscuring of truths in the Church, 2495, 2601.

4bb The methods of theology. Reason is not the chief norm and only medium whereby knowledge of supernatural truths can be acquired, 2738; the theologian should not disregard the supernatural character of what is revealed, (2854, 2856f.), 3547; theology should proceed from the clear and defined deposit of doctrines to clarify what is obscure, 3886; theology is a dialogical, critical science, 4871f.

Theology rests on the written Word of God and tradition as its foundation, 4231; dogmas are and always have been the unalterable norm both for faith and for theological science, 4536; when comparing teachings in ecumenical dialogues, theologians should be mindful that there is an order or "hierarchy" of the truths in Catholic doctrine, 4192, 4538; the following opinions are wrong –: [Dogmatic formulas cannot signify truth in a determinate way but can only offer changeable approximations to it], 4540; –: [Dogmatic formulas signify the truth only in an indeterminate way], 4540; cf. H 3bb (subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions).

The scholastic method is (even if with reservations) defended against fideism and modernism and is recommended, 2814, 2876, 2913, 3139, ^a3140, 3894.

The apologetic method is defended, 3499f., 3879f.

Positive doubt is condemned as a basis for theological inquiry, 2738.

Traditional theological terminology should be retained, 824, 2831, 3881–3883.

Reference of theology to the Church's Magisterium. On the general acknowledgment of the Magisterium, cf. H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions); consent, difficulties, disagreements, 4875–4885; on agreement with the tradition, A 3 (tradition of God's revelation); on freedom to teach, H 3g (freedom of research and teaching); on correction of magisterial decisions through theological research, 5091.

The acknowledgment of the authority of certain theologians is generally enjoined, 1328, 2876.

Modern authors are sometimes preferred by the Magisterium to older ones, 904; authors are not, however, to be seen as endorsed by the Holy See simply because they are not explicitly condemned, 2047, 3154f.

4bc Theology and the other sciences. The preeminence of theology among the other sciences, 824, (2829); theology and philosophy, 5079, 5080; there can be no real opposition between theologians and natural scientists, 3287.

On the relationship of faith and science, cf. A 1bc (the mysterious character of revelation); A 4a (reason and faith in general); C 4id (human research and the sciences).

B. THE LIVING GOD

1. The God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ

a. THE GOD OF FAITH

B 1a

The mystery of God in the history of mankind. Cf. A (God reveals himself); esp. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation); C (God creates and blesses the world); esp. C 1 (God, Creator of heaven and earth); C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history); E (God saves men through Jesus Christ); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); G (God gathers his people); M (God perfects the world and man in his kingdom). 1aa

The God of the chosen people. Cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); E 1a and E 1b (promise of Christ in the Old Covenant); G 1b (Church as work of God). 1ab

The God and Father of Jesus Christ. Cf. B 1d (God eternally begets the Son); B 1j (conceptual formulation of the fatherhood of God); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ). 1ac

b. GOD, THE ONE FOUNDATION OF LIFE, OF TRUTH, OF GOODNESS

B 1b

The unicity of God: Faith in one God, 40–42, 44, 46, 48, 50f., 55, 60, 73, 75, 108, 125, 150, 800, 3001, 3021, 3875; God is one substance, 3001; the God of the Old and the New Testaments is one and the same, 198, 325, 790, 854, 1334, 1336.

The life of God: Faith in the living God, 40, (173), 3001, 4197; in his intimate life, God is the essential love shared by the three Divine Persons, 4780, 5101; cf. B 4bb (equality of the Persons with each other).

The truth of God: Faith in the true God, 3, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50, 60, 125, 150, 800, 1862, 3001, 3021, 3026; God is the source of all truth, 2811; God cannot deceive, 3008; God is the first truth, 3973.

The goodness of God: God is ^a*infinitely good* or ^b*the highest good*, (62), 240, ^b285, 470, 621, ^b1333, (3002), ^a3004f., ^a3251, ^b3973, 5101; he himself is perfect goodness, 4815; a concept of God that prescind from any goodness is condemned, 978.

The knowledge of God: God is (infinitely) wise, 2901, 3001, 3004, 3009, 3781; all-knowing, 164, 169, 3009, 3646.

God knows hearts and that which is hidden, 670, 2866, 4314, 4328; he knows the future of creation, (333, 419), 621, 625–629, 646, 685, 3003, 3646, 3890; this future thus has a certain truth, 1391–1395; God cannot err, 3008.

The will of God: 5101f.; God is –: infinitely perfect, 3001;

–: free from necessity, 526, 3890;

–: just, 285, 621, 1547, 1549, 1672, 2216, 3781;

–: good and merciful toward men, 62, 236, 248, 309, 1534, 1548f., 1562, 1576, 1668, 1696, 4166, (4197), 4318, 4685; he has fatherly concern for everyone, 4324; he is the Father of all, 4199; the mercy of God is revealed in Christ as Messiah, 4685; cf. D 7a (God's reconciling will); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will);

–: all-powerful (only more important passages will be indicated), 2//64, 71, 115, 125, 150, 191, 290, 297, 441, 680, 683, 685, 800, 851, 1330, 1880, 3001, 4522; the individual Persons are called all-powerful, 29, 75, 164, 169, 173, 441, 490, 4522; nothing can resist the will of God, 647; for God as Lord of the universe and of history, cf. C 1ga; assertions that limit the power of God are condemned, 410, 721, 726f.; [omnipotence in the proper sense pertains to the Father, and not wisdom and goodness], 734;

–: holy, 4165; cf. E 5dd (sinlessness and holiness of Christ); G 3ba (the divine foundation of ecclesial holiness);

–: (^ain and of himself) blessed, 415, 441f., ^a3001;

–: impassible (impassibilis) or invulnerable (^aagainst the Patripassians, who attribute to the being of God the suffering of the incarnate Son), 16, 166, ^a196f., 284, 293f., 297, ^a300, 318, 358, ^a359, ^a367, 504, 635f., 681, 801, 852, 2529; yet (because of the communication of idioms) one can say: "God has suffered in the flesh": E 5ea (communication of idioms).

c. GOD, TRANSCENDENT OVER ALL FINITE THINGS

B 1c

God is –: uncreated (incretatus, inconditus), 75, 501;

–: infinitely perfect (perfectus), 2751, 3001, 3623; moreover infinitely good: B 1b (God as foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); in him there is nothing imperfect, 569; he is in need of no participation in anything, 285, 358; nothing is comprised in his substance that could be counted, 530;

–: exalted over all, 3001; his majesty, 73, 75, 293, 529, 1331; his infinite greatness, 3955; cf. C 1ib (difference between Creator and creature);

- : glorious, 4814;
- : incomprehensible (incomprehensibilis) and ineffable (ineffabilis), 294, 501, 525, 800, 804, 3001;
- : simple (simplex), ^a*uncomposed* (incompositus), ^b*undivided* (indivisus), 297, 800, ^b805, ^{ab}1880, 3001;
- : personal, 3542, 3875, 3890, 3973, 3978, (4780); he exists in three Persons: B 4 (the trinitarian God);
- : immutable (immutabilis), 285, 294, 297, 501, 569, 683, 800, 853, 1330, 2901, 3001; (inconvertibilis), 197, 358, 416; in God there is no emanation or evolution, 285, 3024; nothing adds to him or is taken away from him, 285, 569;
- : a spiritual substance, 3001; thus God (^a*Father*; ^b*Son*) is invisible (invisibilis), ^a16, ^a21, ^a22, ^a29, ^b293f., 683, 853, 3001, 4114; he cannot be pictured through colors or figures, 1825;
- : immense (immensus), 75, 800, 1330, 3001; uncircumscribed (incircumscriptus) and incomprehensible (incapabilis), 504; there is nothing outside of God, 204; thus is God everywhere and omnipresent (^athrough his power, his presence, and his essence), 2185, ^a3330;
- : eternal (aeternus, sempiternus), 27, 71, 74f., 147, 173, 284f., 291, 293, 441, 683, 800, 853, 1330, 1337, 2828, 3001, 4522; he is without beginning, 501; God (^a*Father*; ^b*Son*) is immortal (immortalis), ^a21f., ^b294, ^b297, ^b358, ^b681, ^b801, ^b852, ^b1337; God (Father) is the King of Ages, 21f.; the error of the Patripassians: [God the Son is mortal according to his divinity], 359; cf. E 5a (Jesus Christ is of one being with the Father).

B 1d

d. GOD ETERNALLY BEGETS THE SON

The Father is without beginning, 1331; he is not ^a*made* (factus), ^b*created* (creatus), or ^c*begotten* (genitus) by any other, ^c60, ^{abc}75, ^c441, ^{ac}485, ^{bc}490, ^{bc}525, ^c527, 569, ^c572, ^c683, 800, 1330f.; everything he has, he has from himself, 1331.

He who begets the Son is the beginning, 71, 284, 526; he is the ^a*source and origin* or ^b*principle* of the whole Godhead, ^a490, ^a525, ^a568, ^b3326. Condemned: [The Cross of the Son is the suffering of the Father], 284; [The advent at the end of the world can be attributed to the Father], 737.

Cf. B 1b (God as foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); B 1c (God, transcendent over all finite things); B 1j (conceptual formulation of the fatherhood of God).

B 1e

e. THROUGH AND WITH THE SON, GOD SPIRATES THE SPIRIT

Cf. B 3c (divinity of the Spirit).

B 1f

f. GOD CREATES AND GUIDES THE WORLD

God is the Creator (creator, conditor) of all things, 19, 21f., 27–30, 36, 40//51, 60, 125, 150, 3001f., 3025, 3538, 3955, 4102, 4197, 4334; “from him is everything”, 60, 421, 680, (851), 3326; he has made everything through the Son and the Holy Spirit, 171; he is the Lord over all, 1, 5; cf. B 4c (operation of the Trinity in creation and salvation history); C 1 (God, the Creator of heaven and earth); C 1g (God directs everything according to his providence); C 5a (God and the goal of history).

B 1g

g. GOD SENDS THE SON AND THE SPIRIT

The mission of Jesus Christ, 101, 145, 527, 538, 1522, 3806, 4005, 4103, 4132, 4120, 4141, 4153, 4172, 4204, 4480, 4522, 4892.

The mission of the Holy Spirit: he is sent from the Father and from the Son, 60, 145, 527, 681, 3325, 3327f., (4132), (4145), (4168), 4522, (4780); the exalted Lord has –: sent the Spirit to the disciples, 4148, 4168, 4204, 4227; –: filled the Church with his Spirit, 4112, 4116, 4124, (4165f.), 4332; the mission of the Holy Spirit is twofold: visible in the Church, hidden in the souls of the just, 3327; he is sent for the constant sanctification of the Church, 4104; the feast of his mission is Pentecost, 3325.

Cf. E 2dd (mission of the Spirit); E 2e (work of the exalted Lord through the Spirit); E 4 (mission of Christ); G 1be (The Church remains through the ages the work of the Holy Trinity).

B 1h

h. GOD DIRECTS AND PERFECTS THE WORLD

Cf. M 2 (perfection of the kingdom of God); M 3be (consummation of the world).

i. THE CONCEPTUAL FORMULATION OF THE DIVINE BEING

B 1i

The metaphysical essence of God is defined (according to the Thomists) as subsistent Being, 3603, 3623f.

The identity between the essence and the perfections of God: each perfection belongs to the essence of God: God is truth, wisdom, etc., he does not simply participate in it, 285; for God, being and willing, willing and understanding are the same, 566; cf. B 1b (God, the one foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); B 1c (God, transcendent over all finite things); condemned are exaggerated assertions of the simplicity of God, 973f.; God is love, 5101f.

j. THE CONCEPTUAL FORMULATION OF THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD

B 1j

The Father begets the Son, not by the will or by necessity, but ^a*according to nature*, ^a71, 526; the Father begets the Son from himself, which means from his substance, 470, 485, 525f., 571, 617, 805, 1330; without diminution of himself, he communicates his substance to the Son, 805; that is why not only the Father is called “God” (as according to Arius), 176, 1332; cf. B 2 (Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God).

2. Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten Son of God

a. FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST AS THE SON OF THE FATHER

B 2a

Faith in Jesus Christ, the Son, 2//30, 36, 40//51, 55, 60–64, 71–76, 105, 125f., 144, 146, 150, 188f., 300–302, 325, 367–369, 421–426, 428–432, 434, 441f., 451, 453, 470, 485, 487, 490f., 501, 525–538, 542f., 546–548, 680f., 790f., 851f., 1330f.; cf. B 4a (faith in the triune God).

b. THE SON OF THE FATHER, MEDIATOR OF CREATION AND OF SALVATION

B 2b

The Son is principle from principle, 1331; he is (^aactually and in the proper sense) generated (genitus) or born (natus) from (out of) the Father, 40//51, 71, 75, 113, 125, 144, 150, 163, ^a168, 188f., 272, 284, 485, 490, 503, 526f., 547, 554, 564, 568f., 572, 681, 851, 1330, 1337, 2526.

The Son is no part of the Father, 526, 805; he is not an extension (extensio) or contraction (collectio) of the Father, 160.

The Son is not made (factus) or created (creatus) ^a*out of nothing*, ^a42//50, 60, 75, 113f., 125, ^a126, ^a130, 150, 155, 209, 485, 490, ^a526, 536, 1332, ^a2526; in what sense the Son is called “created” according to Proverbs 8:22, 114; he is not without substance, 160.

The Son is the only (unicus, unus) Son (^abesides whom there is no other), 4f., 12//30, 36, 62f., ^a105, 502; therefore only begotten (unigenitus), 2f., 11, 25, 27, 40//51, 60, 125, 150, 178, 258, 266, 272, 291, 300, 302, 318, 357, 538, 683, 900, 2526, 3350, 3352; only the Son is only from the Father, 75, 800, 1330.

The Son is generated from the Father, not by the will or by necessity, but ^a*according to nature*, ^a71, 526.

The Son is generated without beginning (principium, initium), 357, 470, 526, 536, 572, 617, 1331; eternal (^atimeless), ^a490, 504, (611), ^a617, 681, 852, 900, 1300f., 1331, (3274); he is from the beginning equal to the Father, 61; he is from eternity to eternity, (126), 147; he was before all ages (^abefore all beginning, ^beternally), 40–42, 48, 50f., 60, 76, ^b126, ^b147, 150, ^a189, 272, 294, ^a297, 301, 357, 427, ^a441, 485, ^a490, 503f., 526, 538, 547, 554, 568, 571, (611), 617, 681; he subsists from all eternity in the mystery of the Godhead, distinct from the Father and the Holy Spirit, 4520; condemned are teachings that deny the eternity of the Son: [^a*He will have an end*; ^bhe is mortal] and assert his changeability, 43, 45, 47, 49, 113, 126, 130, ^a160, ^b359, 2526.

Designations (excepting the very frequent name “Son of God”): “Word of God” (Verbum Dei, Logos), 40, 55, 113, 144, 147, 178, 250//263, 427, 502f., 852, 3326, 4338; “eternal Word”, 4204; this, however, may not be understood in the sense of an uttered word, 144, 147; “Wisdom” (sapientia), (113), 148, 476; “Word” (sermo), 148; “Power” (δύναμις), 113; condemned is the assertion that “Verbum” is a more proper and exact name for Christ than Son, 2698; incarnate love of God, 5102.

The mediator of creation: The Son is he “through whom everything is”, 40//51, 60, 125, 150, 421, 680, 3326, 4338, 4345; “through whom the ages were ordered”, 50f.; he is named “Creator of all”, 485; in Christ all things came into being, and in him all things hold together, 4114; he has taken up the world and summarized it in himself, 4338, (4345); cf. C 1c (the Son of God as mediator of creation).

The mediator of salvation: The Son is –: the Savior (salvator), 1, 3f., 4176, 4332, 4580, 4892; –: descended ^a*for the salvation of men* or ^b*for the remission of sins*, ^a40, ^a42, ^a44, ^a46, ^a48, ^a51, ^b55, ^a62, ^a64, ^a72, ^a76, ^a125, ^b144, ^b146, ^a150, ^a272, ^a301, ^b485, ^b491f., ^a500, ^b533, ^a681, (^a801), ^a901, (^a1337), ^b1400, ^a2529, ^a4172, (^a4303, ^a4310), ^b4313, (^a4345, ^a4445, ^a4494); cf. E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4c (mission of Jesus Christ).

The Son is —: the firstborn of all creation, 40, 50f., 60, (490), 4310; —: before all, 4114; —: the beginning, 4114; —: the same in eternity, 4310; —: the perfect man, 4338, 4345; cf. C 1c (the Son of God as mediator of creation); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man).

c. THE CONCEPTUAL FORMULATION OF THE DIVINITY OF THE SON

The Son is from the ^asubstance or ^bnature of the Father (not from another substance), ^c43, ^a44, ^c45, ^a48, ^c49, ^a76, ^a125, ^c126, ^c144, ^a163, ^{ab}441, ^c526, ^c900, ^a2526; everything which the Son has, he has from the Father, 1331; the Father has given the Son everything that is his ^aexcept paternity, (900), ^a1301, ^a1986, 3675; Christ is the image of the invisible God, 4114; he is the incarnate love of God, 5102; he is consubstantial with the Father: B 2b (the Son as mediator of creation and of salvation); B 4bb (equality of the Persons); E 5a (Jesus Christ is of one being with the Father).

3. The Spirit of God

B 3a

a. FAITH IN THE SPIRIT OF GOD

Faith in the Holy Spirit, 1//30, 36, 40//51, 55, 60–64, 71, 73, 75, 125, 144f., 147, 150, 188, 300, 325, 367, 421, 441, 451, 470, 485, 490, 501, 525, 527, 542, 546, 680, 682, 790, 851, 853, 1330.

B 3b

b. THE SPIRIT OF GOD IN CREATION AND SALVATION HISTORY

3ba Designations of the Holy Spirit: Love, above all between the Father and the Son, 3326, 3331, 4780; Paraclete (paracritus), 1, 41, 44, 46, 60, 64, 188; Gift, 570, 1522, 1529f., 1561, 1690, 3330, 4780; Will, 573; Lord and Life-giver, 4132.

3bb The Holy Spirit in creation: The Holy Spirit is he in whom all things are, 421, 680, 3326; he fills the earth, 4311; he renews the face of the earth, 4326; from the Holy Spirit springs every gift that is bestowed upon creatures: the gift of existence and grace, 4781; condemned: [The Holy Spirit is the soul of the world], 722.

3bc The work of the Holy Spirit in man: The Holy Spirit —: directs the unfolding of time, 4326; —: sows the seeds of truth among all peoples and their religions, 5082; —: points to Christ in creation and history, 5082; —: offers to all the possibility of being associated with the paschal mystery, 4322; —: assists the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326; in the Holy Spirit man is made a new creature, 4337.

3bd The work of the Holy Spirit in salvation history: Attributed to the Holy Spirit in salvation history are —: inspiration and speaking through the law, the prophets, and the apostles, 41//48, 150, 682, 790; —: the Incarnation of the Word: E 2a (conception and birth of Jesus Christ); for this reason, however, he is not the Father of the Son, 533; —: the descent at the baptism of Christ, 44, 46, 48; —: the sacrifice of Christ, 3327; —: the reposing on Christ, 178; in a special way he is called “Spirit of Christ”, 3807; for the fulfillment of their mission, Christ sent the Holy Spirit upon the apostles on Pentecost, (4143), 4145, 4148; the Spirit taught the apostles, 4405.

3be The Holy Spirit in the life of the Church: In the life of the Church, the Holy Spirit is —: Soul of the Church, 3328; —: her principle of life, 4116; —: wellspring of the unity in the teaching of the apostles and in fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers, 4132; he dwells in the Church, 600, 4104, 4116, 4141; he binds together her members, 3808, 4104, 4113, 4132f., 4340, 4342; he unifies the Church in communion and ^aservice, (3808), ^a4104, 4113, 4133, 4340, 4342; he helps in the interpretation of the different voices of our age, 4344; the restoration begun in Christ is carried forward in the mission of the Holy Spirit in the Church, 4168; the Church is the Temple of the Holy Spirit, (4104), 4141; the Holy Spirit —: was sent on Pentecost for the sanctification of the Church, 4104; —: sanctifies through sacraments and ministries, 4131; —: leads the Church ^ato perfect union with her Bridegroom, ^bon her pilgrimage to the kingdom of the Father, ^a4104, 4131, ^b4301, 4303, 4311, 4321, 4343, 4856; —: leads the Church into all truth, 4104, 4530; —: gives his different gifts for the welfare of the Church, 4113; —: works the diversity of graces, ministries, and works, 4158, (4856); cf. F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit); G 3ac (Church, built through the abundance of charisms); —: arouses the supernatural discernment in matters of faith of the people of God, 4130; —: enriches the people of God with virtues, 4131; —: perpetually supports the organic structure and harmony of the Church, 4146; —: vivifies her social structure, 4118; —: works the self-renewal of the Church, (4104, 4116), 4124, 4321; compels the Church to do her part that God’s plan for the salvation of the world may be fully realized, 4141, (4303); —: continues to renew the youth of the Church, 4850; —: encourages the Church, 4619; —: unflinchingly preserves the form of government established by Christ in his Church, 4152; —: places those endowed with charisms under the authority of the apostles, 4113; the assistance of the Holy Spirit was promised to the pope in Peter, 4149; the Holy Spirit assists —: the councils and the popes in their decisions, 102, 265, 444, 631, 1500f., 1600, 1635, 1667, 1726, 1738, 1820, (4150); —: the pastors in the fulfillment of their teaching function and in proposing a doctrine free from error, 4534; cf. H 3a (bishops’ ministry of preaching: general specifications).

On the Church as work of the Holy Spirit: G 1be (the Church remains work of the Holy Trinity); G 2a (designations of the Church); G 3aa (the divine foundation of ecclesial unity); G 3ac (Church, built through the abundance of charisms); G 3ba (divine foundation of ecclesial holiness); G 3ca (foundation of the catholicity of the Church in God); G 3d (apostolicity of the Church).

The Holy Spirit in the life of the faithful: He is the source of every created grace, 3807, 4165; on account of his gifts, he is named the seven-form Spirit, Spirit of wisdom, etc., 178, 183, 1726; to him are attributed the charisms, 575, 3328, 3342, 4104, 4113, 4131, (4159); his different gifts appear in different vocations, 4338; the Holy Spirit —: gives life, 3f., 42, 51, 62, 150, 546, 4160; —: is the Spirit of life, 4104; —: purifies, 62f.; —: renews, 4116, 4322, 4337; —: frees, 4338; —: helps toward justification, as he illuminates and prompts, 374–378, 387, 1525, 1552, 1678, 3009f., (4105); —: is inner help for faith, 4205, 4315; —: moves to conversion and opens the eyes of understanding, 4205; —: deepens the understanding of revelation, 4205; —: leads the faithful to all truth and makes the Word of Christ dwell in them, 4211; —: is the gift for the justified, 1527, 1529f., 1561, 1690, 3330; —: works in the saints in all ages, 60; —: lives in the saints and the just, 44, 46, 48, 1962, 3329–3331, 3814f.; their bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit, 1822; —: moves to love of God, 4166; —: brings forth love among the faithful and prompts it, 4113, 4166, 4322; —: acts upon the faithful in the liturgy through the sacramental signs, 4170; —: cooperates in the sacraments, 123, 183, 320, 793, 1774, 4170; —: cultivates the virtues, 3343; —: dwells in the hearts of the faithful as in a temple, 4104, 4123; —: anoints the faithful, 4130; —: is for those who believe the wellspring of unity in the teaching of the apostles and in fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayers, 4132; —: arouses in all disciples of Christ the desire to be peacefully united, as one flock under one shepherd, and to pursue this end, 4139.

The sin against the Holy Spirit and the power of the Church to forgive all sins, 349.

Cf. F 2c (indwelling and gracious working of God in the justified); G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity); G 3ac (Church, built through the abundance of charisms).

c. THE CONCEPTUAL FORMULATION OF THE DIVINITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

B 3c

The Holy Spirit is ^a*neither ungenerated* ^b*nor generated*, ^{ab}71, ^{ab}75, ^b485, ^b490, ^b527, ^b617, ^{ab}683; he proceeds from the Father ^a*and from the Son*, 42, 44, ^a48°, 51, 64, (^a64), 71, (^a71°), ^a75, (147), 150 (Gr.), ^a150 (Lat.), 178, (188), ^a284, 441, ^a470, ^a485, ^a490, ^a527, 546, ^a568f., ^a617, ^a682f., ^a800, ^a850, ^a853, ^a1072, ^a1300, ^a1330, ^a1986, ^a3807; he is the Spirit of the Father and of the Son, 178, 527f., 441, 490, 4780; the “Filioque” was added to the creed with good reason (because ^a*it can be proven through testimony of the Fathers*), 1302, 1986, ^a3553.

The Holy Spirit proceeds ^a*from a single principle* or from a single spiration, ^b*not from two principles*, ^{ab}850, ^a1300, ^{ab}1331, ^a1986; one can say: the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father through the Son, 1300; the Son is understood by the Greeks as cause (causa), by the Latins as principle of the subsistence of the Holy Spirit, 1301, 1986; even this, that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son, the Son receives from the Father, 1301.

There is only one Spirit, who ^a*alone* proceeds, 40f., 51, 71, 108, ^a1330.

The Holy Spirit is without beginning, 568, 800, 1331; he proceeds (timelessly) from all eternity, 441, 617, 850, 1300, 1331, 1986; he is always and without end, 800, 4522.

The Holy Spirit is of divine substance, 168; condemned: [He is not from the substance of the Father], 722; emphasized is his uncreated divinity against the errors: [The Holy Spirit is servant, ^a*a creature made through the Son*], 44–49, 71, 75, 145, ^a152, 155, ^a170, 485, 490, 527, 617, 1332, 2527.

The Holy Spirit, as Spirit of the Father and of the Son, is the personal love of God and “searches” “the depths of God”, (3326, 3331), 4780; he is the “personal expression” of the mutual love between the Divine Persons; he is “Person-Love”, “Person-Gift”, 4780; error about the Person of the Spirit, 4522.

4. The Triune God

a. FAITH IN THE TRIUNE GOD

B 4a

Testimonies of faith in the individual Divine Persons, in the Father, in the Son, and in the Holy Spirit, 1//30, 36, 40//51, 55, 60–64, 71, 73, 75, 105, 125, 144f., 150, 188, 300, 325, 367, 421, 441, 451, 470, 485, 490, 501, 525, 542, 546, 680, 790, 851, 1330; cf. also the form of baptism: K 3b.

Faith in the divine Trinity, 3f., 6, 71, 73, 75, 112, 115, 177, 188, 325, 367, 421, 525, 528f., 546, 568–570, 680, 790, 800, 851, 1330, 1880.

There are exclusively three Persons: Outside of the Holy Trinity, there is no other Divine Nature, 188, 851; condemned are the Priscillianists, who in addition to the Trinity introduce still other names of the Godhead, 452; this Trinity is not multiplied by number, 367; these three Persons do not return to themselves nor are they diminished, instead they remain, 144; the Word of God has therefore no end, 160.

Human reason and the divine Trinity: The Trinity is an incomprehensible, ineffable mystery for the intellect, 367, 525, 616, 619, 2669; cf. A 1bc (the mysterious character of revelation); A 4a (reason and faith); in the Trinity there is ineffable generation, 114; condemned are the assertions concerning the demonstrability of the Trinity and concerning their identification with reality, ideality, and morality, 3225f.; newer errors regarding the Holy Trinity and especially the Person of the Holy Spirit as distinct from the Father and Son, 4522.

B 4b

b. THE TRINITARIAN CONCEPT

4ba The distinctness of the Divine Persons. The existence of a distinction (against the Modalists): Even though God is one, he is not for himself alone, 71, 451, 490; the divine Trinity is not a hypostasis of three names, 284, 546; the Persons are not to be equated as though the same God were named sometimes Father, sometimes Son, sometimes Holy Spirit, 73, 75, 112, 154, 188, 192–194, 284, 451, 530, 569, 1330; the Father did not become incarnate and die, 105; only one is the Father, not three, etc., 75, 421; the Son of God exists from all eternity in the mystery of the Godhead distinct from the Father and Holy Spirit, 4520; the Holy Spirit exists eternally as one Person in God distinct from the Father and Son, 4522.

The nature of the distinction: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are names of relation, 528, 532, 570; one can distinguish the properties of the three Persons according to the relation, 570, 573, 800; one can say: The Father is one Person, the Son is another, etc., but not: The Father is one reality, the Son is another, etc., 573, 805; the other Persons are also signified in relative names, 532, 570; in place of the name “Holy Spirit”, which does not express sufficiently the relation, one can use the name “Gift” (“Donum”), 570, 4780.

The properties of the Persons in reciprocal comparison: Eternity without birth belongs to the Father, eternity with birth belongs to the Son, procession without birth belongs to the Holy Spirit, 532; or: The Father is generating, the Son generated or born, the Holy Spirit proceeding, 71, 188, 284, 367, 470, (526), 800, 4522.

Logical consequences from the distinction of Persons: One may not attribute to the Divine Nature what is proper to the Person, 367; therefore, the divine substance is not generating, generated, or proceeding, but rather the Father is generating, the Son generated, etc., 803f.

4bb The equality of the Divine Persons with each other. Comparison of the Son with the Father: The Father has generated nothing other than what he is himself, 525; he gave the Son (^awithout limitation) all that which is his except his paternity, ^a470, ^b526, ^a805, 1301, 1986; the Son is therefore ^a*in all things equal* (coaequalis), ^b*in nothing unequal* to the Father, 74, (76), ^{ab}144, 164, ^b290, 441, 470, 485, ^a490, 491, ^a526, 536f., 572, 617, ^a681, ^a852, 1337; he is of the same nature, 144, 297, 470; he is consubstantial (consubstantialis) with the Father, 42//51, 55, 125, 138, 150, 272, 301, 357, 430, 441f., 504, 526, 547, 554, 617, 619, 681, 852, 1337, (1880), 2526, 2529, 3350, 3675.

This equality is in particular declared of –: the divinity, 74, 144, 149, 168, 295, 318, 357; the Son is therefore God from God, 40//51, 125, 144, 150, 490, (525); light from light, 40//48, 125, 144, 150, 525; life from life, 40; –: the honor, the glory, the majesty, 74, 290, 318; –: the eternity (coaeternus), 27, 74, 290f., 297, 357, 441, 526, (611), 617, 1337, (4522); –: the wisdom and the knowledge, 164, 169, 566, 573; –: the will and the omnipotence, 144, 164, 169, 290, 566, 573, 681, 852; Jesus Christ as perfect God: E 5a (Jesus Christ is of one being with the Father).

Comparison of the Holy Spirit with the Father and the Son: The Holy Spirit is truly from the Father as from the Son, 168; with the Father and the Son, he is –: consubstantial (consubstantialis), 29, 46, 55, (152), 441, 853, 4781; –: coequal (coaequalis), 71, 175, 441, 527, 569, 853; and indeed in honor and majesty; that is why he is ^a*co-adored* (coadoratur) and ^b*co-glorified* (conglorificatur), ^{ab}42, 147, ^{ab}150, ^a174, ^{ab}546; –: coeternal (coaeternus, co sempiternus), 71, 441; –: equal in might and power (potentia, virtus), (29), 145, 147, 152; he is everywhere, like the Father and the Son, 169; as the Spirit of the Father and of the Son he is the personal love of God and “searches” “the depths of God”, (3326, 3331), 4780.

Comparison of the three Persons together: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are from one and the same nature, 297; that is why they are consubstantial (^a*consubstantiales* or ^b*coessentialis*), ^a3, ^{ab}325, ^a415, 421, ^a442, ^a501, 502, ^a516, ^a542, ^b547, 554, ^a616–618, ^{ab}680, ^b682, ^{ab}790, ^a800, ^a805, ^{ab}851, ^a4522, ^a4781; coequal (coaequales), 4, 75, 169, 173, 415, 441, 537, 616–618, 682, 800, 4522; so in the Trinity there is nothing lower, higher, larger, or smaller, 75, 569, 618.

In particular, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are equal –: in divinity (they are perfect [^aplenus, ^bperfectus] God), 4, 73, 75, 176, ^a325, ^b441, ^a529, ^a790, ^{ab}851, 4781; –: in honor and majesty, 73, 75, 501, 529, 1331; –: in eternity (^ain the Trinity there is nothing earlier or later), ^a75, ^a144, 162, 173, 284, ^a618, 1331, (4522); they are equally eternal, 75, 147, 325, 546, 616–618, 680, 682, 790, 800f., 853, 4522; no one is before or after another or without the others, 531; –: in immeasurability (they are everywhere and contain all things), 75, 169, 173; –: in power, 75, 173, 325, 529, 680, 790, 800, 853, 4522; there is no gradation of power in the Trinity, 144, 721, 1331; in his intimate life, God “is” essential “love” shared by the three Divine Persons, 4780.

Condemned are errors in relation to the equality of the Persons [“The Son and the Holy Spirit are creatures”], ^a155, 721f., 734, ^a1332.

4bc The mutual indwelling of the Divine Persons. The Son is always in the Father (and conversely), 113, 115; the Word is necessarily united with God, 112, 115; the Holy Spirit remains and lives in God, 112; the Father is wholly in the Son, wholly in the Holy Spirit—the Son is wholly in the Father, wholly in the Holy Spirit, etc., 1331; even this, that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son, the Son has from the Father, 1301; the innermost life of the one and triune God is the exchange of love between the Divine Persons, 4780; the Holy Spirit is the “personal expression” of the exchange of love between the Divine Persons; he is “Person-Love”, “Person-Gift”, 4780; cf. B 3c (divinity of the Holy Spirit).

4bd The three Divine Persons are one God. Principles: The three Persons are one God, 71, 73, 75, 112, 325, 530, 546, 680, 683, 853, 1330; there is number in God only with regard to the Persons, 530; a single name of divinity belongs to the three Persons, 188, 441; triune unity—one Trinity, 441, 501, 546.

In the three Persons is one (^a*and the same*, ^b*mutual*, ^c*unique*) divine substance (substantia, essentia, natura), 3, 71, 73, 75, 144f., 147, 153, 172, 177, 188, ^a284, ^c367, 415, 421, 441, 451, ^b470, 485, 490, 501, 525, 527–529, 535, 542, 546, 616, 683, 800, 804f., 806, 1330, 2527; the Father is the same as what the Son is, the Father and the Son are the same as what the Holy Spirit is, which means: by nature, one God, 573, 805; the Holy Spirit is consubstantial with the Father and with the Son in divinity, 4781; God should be called the “divine essence” not only in an ablative sense, but also in the nominative, 745.

A quaternity is excluded because of the unity of the divine essence, 804.

The substance of the Trinity is not greater in all of the Persons than in the individual Persons, (441), 490, 529.

To the three Persons belong –: one glory, 73, 172, 542, 546; –: one majesty, 144f., 172, 177, 490, 525, 542, 618, 680, 851; –: one truth, 172; –: one will, 172, 501, 542, 545f., 572f., 680, 851; –: one might, 73, 144f., 415, 421, 441, 451, 490, 501, 525, 542; –: one power (potestas, potentia), 3, 71, 73, (144), 153, 172, 177, 415, 421, 441, 451, 490, 501, 546, 680, 851; –: one act, 415, 441, 501, 531, 542, 545f.; –: one lordship, one kingdom, 172, 501, 542, 546, 3350; –: one blessedness, 415, 441; cf. B 1b (God, the one foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); B 1c (God, transcendent over all finite things).

All in God is one, where there is no opposition of relationship, 1330; the Divine Nature alone is the origin of all things, 804.

The Trinity is a consubstantial divinity, 284f., 415.

In the three Divine Persons the divine essence is undivided, indistinct, and inseparable [^a*individua*, ^b*indivisa (indivisibilis)*, ^c*inseparabilis*, ^d*indistincta (indiscreta)*], ^{bc}73, ^c144f., ^b188, ^b284, ^b290, ^d318, ^d367, ^{bd}415, ^d490, ^c505, ^b529, ^c531f., ^c538, ^c542, ^c545f., ^c561, ^c569, ^c571, ^c616, ^c683, ^a800, ^d805, ^d2697, ^{bc}3326, ^b3815.

Logical consequences of the one identical nature in each Divine Person: “God” is not a relative name or the name of a property, but rather the name of a power that is not expressed in a relation, 71, 528.

Whatever is said essentially of the Trinity is also to be said of the one nature of the three Persons, 542; that is why it is to be said of the individual (Person): God Father, God Son, etc., 529; not “three Gods”, 71, 73, 75, 176, 529, 546, 683, 853, 1330; not: “three omnipotent beings, uncreated beings, infinite beings, etc.”, 75, 529 (“omnia potentes” in 173 violates this rule); God is not threefold (triplex) but, rather, triune (trinus), 528; God is not distinct in three Persons but, rather, in three distinct Persons, (2696), 2697, 2830; one is not baptized in the names of the Father, etc., but, rather, in the name of the Father, etc., 415, 441.

Consequences for worship: The undifferentiated substance of the Trinity is adored in different ways, 367; it is not fitting to worship each individual Person of the Trinity, but rather one should render to the Trinity a common worship, 3325; that is why there is no unique feast for the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, but rather feasts of salvation history, 3325.

No separation may be proposed between the Divine Nature and the Persons, 745, 803; condemned is a tritheism that separates the one nature of the Persons and introduces three personal Gods, wills, and operations, 112, 115, 367, 545, 1880, 3325; however, not every distinction in God is to be denied, 973f.

C. THE OPERATION OF THE ONE AND TRIUNE GOD

B 4c

The unity of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and salvation history. To Father, Son, and Holy Spirit belongs one single operation, (171, 325), 415, 441, 501, 531, 542, 545f.; by reason of the principle: All in God is one, where there is no opposition of relationship, 1330. 4ca

The operations of the Trinity are inseparable, undivided, common, 491, 531, 535, 538, 571, 618, 3326; no Person works before or after another or without the others, 531; the Divine Persons are not three sources of creation but, rather, only one, namely, the Divine Nature alone, 800, 804, a1331.

Therefore the Incarnation was accomplished by the whole Trinity together, 491, 535, 571, 801, 3327; the mission of Jesus Christ as work of the Holy Trinity: E 4a.

The Church appears as the people united by the unity of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, 4104; there is a certain similarity between the unity of the Divine Persons and the unity of the children of God in truth and love, 4324; the Holy Spirit is united with the Father and the Son in operation and in the forgiveness of sins, 145; even though the indwelling and the saving works in the souls of the just are attributed to the Holy Spirit, they are common to the Trinity, 3331, 3814; the Church in time remains the work of the Holy Trinity: G 3aa (the divine foundation of ecclesial unity).

The properties of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and in salvation history. Basis: a certain similarity between the operation and the property of the respective Divine Person, 573, 3326. 4cb

Thus creation is referred to the individual Persons according to the formula: the Father, from whom all things are; the Son, through whom all things are; the Holy Spirit, in whom all things are, 421, 680, (851), 3326; or: the Father has made all things through the Son and the Holy Spirit, 171.

Intellectual abilities that are attributed to the Trinity: to the Father, memory; to the Son, intelligence; to the Holy Spirit, will, 573.

To the Father is attributed the works in which power excels, 3326; the creation of all things, 171, 3326; cf. C 1 (God, the Creator of heaven and earth); the predicate “almighty” attributed to the Father, cf. B 1b; the mission of Jesus Christ as work of the Father: E 4b.

To the Son is attributed the works in which wisdom excels, 3326; the reconciliation of men with God, 3326; the mystery of the Trinity was revealed in salvation history above all in Christ, 4522: B 2b (the Son, mediator of creation and of salvation); C 1c (the Son of God as mediator of creation); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4c (mission of Jesus Christ).

To the Holy Spirit is attributed the works in which love and divine goodness excel, 3326; the Incarnation of the Word: E 2a (conception and birth of Jesus Christ); E 4d (the mission of Christ as work of the Holy Spirit); his help in the sanctification of the soul, his dwelling in the just: B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history).

C. GOD CREATES AND BLESSES THE WORLD

1. Faith in God, the Creator of Heaven and Earth

C 1a

a. GOD, THE CREATOR OF ALL THINGS

God is the Creator (^a*author*; ^b*origin*) of all things, of the heavens and of the earth, of things visible and invisible, of the ages, 19, 21f., 27–30, 36, 40//51, 55, 60, 125, 150, 188, 191, 800, 3001f., ^b3004, 3025, 3538, 3955, 4102, ^b4206, ^a4320, 4334; “from him are all things”, 60, 421, 680, (851), 3326; he established the world and sustains it, 4203, 4302; he holds all things in existence and gives them their identity, 4336; God gives to all life, breath, and all things, 4140; he is the Lord of the universe, 1, 5.

Creation is referred to the individual Divine Persons: to the Father, from whom all things are; to the Son, through whom all things are; to the Holy Spirit, in whom all things are, 421, 680, (851), 3326; the Father has made all things through the Son and the Holy Spirit, 171; cf. B 4c (the operation of the one and triune God in creation); C 1c (God the Son as the mediator of creation); C 1d (the work of the Holy Spirit in creation).

Outside the Trinity there is nothing that has not been created, 285.

Cf. B 1f (God creates and directs the world); B 4c (the operation of the one and triune God in creation).

C 1b

b. GOD, THE ONLY CREATOR

There are not two efficient causes of the world or two gods, ^a*the God of the visible and the God of the invisible*, ^b*the author of the Old and the author of the New Covenant*, ^b198, ^a199, ^b325, (^b685), ^b790, ^b854, ^b1334, ^a1336, (^b1501); cf. A 3bb (inspiration); also the devil is a creature of God, not an uncreated principle (of evil), 286, 457f., 800, (1078); the devil has no power to create, 458.

The power to create (or ^aomnipotence) cannot be communicated to any creature, ^a2170f., 3624.

Cf. B 4c (the operation of the one and triune God in creation).

C 1c

c. THE SON OF GOD AS MEDIATOR OF CREATION

The Son of God, the image of God, is the exemplary cause of the form, the beauty, and the order of all things, 3326; God creates and sustains all things through the Word, 4203; Christ took up and summarized the world in himself, 4338, (4345); in him all things came into being and all things hold together, 4114; beneath all changes is what does not change and has its ultimate foundation in Christ, 4310; Christ is the same yesterday, today, and always, 4310; Christ, the beginning, is before all things, 4114; he is the beginning of the beginning, 1331; the plan of God begins in Christ from eternity, 4814; through Christ and in him the Father wished to recreate that which he had already created, 4616.

Christ is –: the image of the invisible God, 3326, 4310, 4322, 4814; –: the firstborn of all creation, 40, 50f., 60, (490), 4310; –: the Son (^athe Word of God), through whom (^awhich) everything is (^ahas been made), 40//51, 60, 125, 150, 421, 680, ^a4338, ^a4345; “through whom the ages were ordered”, 50f. –: the Creator of all things, 485; –: the Lord of all things (^aof all), 3913, 4114, ^a4158; the incarnate love of God, 5102; cf. E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ).

Christ is the perfect man, 4322, 4338, 4345; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 5b (Christ is of one being with men).

Christ is the goal and center of history: C 5b; M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

The work of Christ in the world: C 4de (the work of Christ among men and in history); E 2 (the mysteries of the life, death, and exaltation of Jesus Christ); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior).

God’s plan of creation and redemption in Christ: C 1ga (God as Lord of the universe and of history); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Cf. B 2b (the Son of the Father, mediator of creation and of salvation); B 4c (the operation of the one and triune God in creation).

d. THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT IN CREATION

C 1d

The Holy Spirit is the one “in whom all things” are, 421, 680, 3326; he fills the earth, 4311; he renews the face of the earth, 4326; he directs the unfolding of time, 4326; condemned: [The Holy Spirit is the soul of the world], 722.

The Holy Spirit is the source of the gifts given to creatures: those of existence and grace, 4781; cf. F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit).

Cf. B 3b (the Holy Spirit in creation and salvation history); C 4df (the work of the Holy Spirit among men and in history); B 4c (the operation of the one and triune God in creation).

e. GOD CREATES CREATURES GOOD

C 1e

All creatures are created good by God, 285, 470, 685, 1333, 1350, 4336; but affirmations that are too optimistic are condemned, 1044f., 1047.

Cf. C 4b (man, created good by God).

f. GOD PERMITS EVIL

C 1f

The origin of evil. Evil is the privation of good, 3251; evil is not a substance or nature but ^a*punishment of the substance*, ^a286, 1333; cf. 1fa D 1a (temptation by the evil spirit).

The errors (of the Manichaeans and the Priscillianists) on the origin of evil are condemned: [The principle and substance of evil is the devil], 286, 457, 874; cf. C 1b (God, the only Creator).

The freedom of creatures as the origin of evil: Freedom does not mean the license to do everything, even evil, 4317; C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs); C 2b (sin of the angels and its effect); C 4fc (freedom of man); D 1a (temptation by the evil spirit); D 1b (cause of human sin).

God permits evil, 3251; God knows evil in advance, but he does not determine it in advance, 628, 685; foreknowledge does not mean evil 1fb follows by necessity, 333, 627.

Condemned: [God brings about the evil works of man], 1556; [God cannot prevent evil], 727.

Condemned interpretations of evil: [God assigned the doing of evil to the devil as an office], 1223; [The afflictions of men are always a punishment for a sin —: ^a*even in Mary and in the martyrs*; —: they are a ^b*purification of the sinner*], ^a1972f., ^b2470.

Cf. D 1ad (God permits evil); F 1d (God’s gracious election).

g. GOD DIRECTS EVERYTHING ACCORDING TO HIS PROVIDENCE

C 1g

God as Lord of the universe and of history. God is —: the ruler or governor of the universe, 1, 5, 3003, 3875; —: the king of the ages, 21f.; —: the Lord of human history and salvation history, 4341; he has created the whole world by a free and hidden plan of his own wisdom and goodness, 4102; he directs the world with his providence, 629, 2901, 3003, 3251, 3875; God’s providence and saving design extend to all until the end of time, 4195; the world will be fashioned anew according to God’s design and reach its fulfillment, 4302; cf. C 1h (God is the goal of the world); C 5a (God and the goal of history); M (God perfects the world and man in his kingdom).

God is omniscient and almighty: B 1b (will of God); he knows the future of creatures, (333, 419), 621, 625–629, 646, 685, 3003, 3646; cf. B 1b (the knowledge of God).

The plan of creation cannot be dissociated from the plan of redemption, 4579; the plan of God begins in Christ and has its culmination in him, 4814; progress is possible only because God the Father has decided from the beginning to make man a sharer of his glory in Christ, 4814; cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event: the intention of God); A 1c (stages of revelation); C 1c (the Son of God as mediator of creation); C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4ie (progress); C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation); C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ); F 1 (God’s mercy and universal salvific will).

History corresponds with the promises made at the beginning, 4813; cf. C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history).

God elects men: E 6c (election of Mary); F 1d (God’s gracious election). Works of men and the grace of God; F 3d (the justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5a (the gratuity of grace); F 5c (the grace of God and the freedom of man); every movement of good will is from God, 244.

Cf. C 1gc (man’s cooperation in the work of God); C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs); C 4fc and L 1b (freedom of man).

The historicity and consummation of the world. The shape of this world, deformed by sin, is passing away, 4339; cf. C 5 (the goal and fulfillment of history); D 6 (the world and history under the servitude of sin); M (God perfects the world and man in his kingdom); in particular M 3be (consummation of the world).

- 1gc Man's cooperation in the work of God. God's plan includes human history, in which man seeks to better his condition, 4334, (4813), 4814; God gives men the power to transform and perfect the world, 4480; by their service in society they develop the work of the Creator and contribute to the realization of the divine plan, 4334; their works do not constitute any opposition to the power of God, but their victories are signs of the greatness of God and the fruit of his design, 4334; cf. C 4ie (progress).
The Church must collaborate in the realization of God's plan for the salvation of the world, 4141; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
Participation of men in the work of Jesus Christ: E 6d.
Man in freedom, his works, and the grace of God: F 3d (the justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); cf. F 5c (grace of God and freedom of man).
Whoever labors to penetrate the secrets of reality is led by the hand of God, 4336; cf. C 4id (human research and the sciences).
There are signs of God's presence and purpose in human happenings, needs, and desires, 4311; every movement of good will is from God, 244.
The image of divine perfections is perceived even in the social order, 3772, (3987); traces of divine love are found in the righteous, while those of divine power and wisdom appear even in the unrighteous, 3331.
Assertions that call into question the value and necessity of human activities are condemned, 2201//2255, 3817, 3846.
- 1gd Condemnations. Deism, which denies the action of God on man and the world, is condemned, 2902; fatalistic assertions are condemned: [The souls and bodies of men, ^aChrist included, are guided ^bby destiny, ^cby the stars, ^dby absolute necessity], ^c283, ^{abc}459f., ^d1177, ^{ac}1364.

C 1h

h. GOD IS THE GOAL OF THE WORLD

- God is the goal of all things, 3004, 3538, 4206, (4313), 4320.
The world was created for the glory of God, 3025; creation is ordered to the praise of God, 4162; the works and merits of men (of the saints) are to be referred to the glory of God, 243, (675, 1824f.), 3325, 3743; man must relate himself and the totality of things to God, 4334; condemned: [The glory of God is manifested equally in good and evil work, including blasphemy], 954–956.
God created the world, not to increase his happiness or to acquire perfection, but in order to manifest his perfection, 3002; cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation).
Questions of man concerning the ultimate end of things, 4303; cf. C ja (vocation of man to a higher life).
God as the goal of man: C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God).
Cf. C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history); M (God perfects the world and man in his kingdom); esp. M 3be (consummation of the world).

C 1i I. THE CONCEPTUAL FORMULATION OF DIVINE CREATION AND THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE CREATOR AND CREATION

- 1ia The conceptual formulation of divine creation. Things (^aaccording to their whole substance) were produced from nothing, 285, 790, 800, 1333, ^a3025, 3955: the contrary positions of pantheism and ontologism are condemned, 2846f., 3024, 3214–3219.
Creation is free from any necessity, 1333, 2828, 3002, 3025, 3218, 3890, (4102).
Creation is not from eternity but an act of the will of God ^afrom the beginning of time (^bagainst those who claim an eternal world without beginning), ^b410, ^b951–953, 1333, ^a3002, ^b3890.
The concept of "creation". Its revised version, demanded by modernism, is rejected, 3464; improper usage: (^aThe Father "created" the Son; ^bJesus was "created" from Mary), ^a114, ^b536.
- 1ib The difference between Creator and creature. God is exalted above all created things, 3001; God transcends human nature, 3973, 3978; there is no creature for whom God is its own nature, 285; God is uncreated, infinitely perfect, exalted above all things, incomprehensible, simple, immutable, a spiritual substance, invisible, immense, eternal: B 1c (God, transcendent over all finite things); the Father is without beginning: B 1d.
God is distinct from the world (^areally and essentially), 2901, ^a3001.
Between the Creator and creation there is in any similarity an even greater dissimilarity, 806; the Thomistic theses on the metaphysical essence of created being and its distinction from the Creator, on the analogy of being as well as on potency and act, 3601–3604, 3608, 3622, 3624; man depends on God, his Creator, 3008.
- 1ic The autonomy of earthly affairs is not annulled by their having been created. All created things and societies are endowed with their own laws and values as well as an order that is proper to them, which man must respect and form, 4336, (4343).
A false understanding of autonomy is given when "independence of temporal affairs" means that created things do not depend on God and that man can use them without any reference to their Creator, 4336; the movement for the promotion of human rights must be protected against false autonomy, 4341.

In the divine arrangement itself, the rightful autonomy of the creature, and particularly of man, is not withdrawn but is, rather, reestablished in its own dignity, 4341; without the Creator, the creature would disappear, 4336; the creature endowed with reason is not a rival of the Creator, 4334.

All believers of whatever religion have heard the revealing voice of God in the discourse of creatures, 4336. God constantly manifests himself to men in created things, 4203; cf. A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths).

The autonomy of man: C 4fc and L 1b (freedom of man).

Man and the autonomy of earthly things: C 4hb.

The errors of pantheism and ontologism are condemned, in particular with respect to the distinction between God and the creature: 1id
 [^a*God and nature are identical*; ^b*the Holy Spirit is the soul of the world*; ^c*universals as existent in reality are not distinct from God*; ^d*human nature or soul is something uncreated*; ^e*creation is a pure nothing*], ^d285, ^b722, ^e976, ^d977, 1043, ^c2843, ^a2901, ^a3023, 3201–3216.

Extent and diversity of creatures. Extent: condemned: [God has created as much as he can conceive], 410. 1ie

Diversity: two kinds are distinguished (^a“utraque creatura”) namely, the spiritual (the invisible, heaven) and the corporeal (the visible, the earth), 19, 27–30, 36, 40//51, 125, 150, ^a800, ^a3002, 3021; between matter and spirit there is an essential difference (no ^aidentity), ^a2901, 3891.

2. The Heavenly World: The Angels

a. ANGELS AS MESSENGERS OF GOD C 2a

The nature of angels. Angels were created by God, 800, (1078); they are not from the substance of God, 455; they are personal creatures, 2aa 3891; they possess a natural excellence, 286; they are endowed with reason, 475, 2856; Thomistic theses about the spiritual creature, 3607, 3611; errors about the propagation of angels, 1007.

Angels as mediators between God and man. God grants angels grace, heavenly gifts, and the divine indwelling, (633, 2800, 3815); their 2ab merits are rightly called grace, 1901//1905; they are in a certain way mediators between God and man, 3320.

Veneration of the angels: J 1eg (veneration of the saints); M 3bd (communion of angels and saints).

b. THE SIN OF THE ANGELS AND ITS EFFECT C 2b

Cf. C 1f (God permits evil); D 1a (temptation by the evil spirit).

3. The Visible World C 3

God created the visible world, 800, 3002; it is not the devil who created it: C 1b (God, the only Creator); C 1fa (origin of evil); Thomistic theses about the corporeal creature, 3608–3613.

God gives men an enduring witness to himself in created realities, 4203; cf. A 2ab (the human ability to recognize religious truths).

The autonomy of earthly affairs: C 1ic.

The orientation of earthly realities to God: C 1h (God is the goal of the world); C 5a (God and the goal of history).

The world is under the bondage of sin, 4302, 4339; its shape, deformed by sin, passes away, 4339; man disrupts the order between himself and created things, 4313; cf. C 4kb (effects of man’s sinfulness in the world and history); D 6 (world and history under the bondage of sin).

The historicity and consummation of the world: C 1gb; C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history); M (God perfects the world and man in his kingdom); esp. M 3be (consummation of the world).

World and man: The world is the theater of the history of mankind, marked by man’s activity, 4302; the elements of the world attain their summit in man through his reason and raise their voice in free praise of the Creator, 4314; the primacy of man with respect to things, 4694; man is above all living beings, 4812; he has an affinity to them, 4812; all things on earth should be related to him as to their center and crown, 4312; God created everything for the sake of men, 4339; man dominates and uses earthly creatures for the glorification of God, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, 4812; respect with regard to the beings of the natural world and the cosmos, 4816; the order between man and all created realities, 4313; man and creation: C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4h (man and creation); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world).

Condemned: [The sky and the stars have a soul and are intelligent powers], 408; [The creature’s perishability contains a contradiction in itself], 1047.

4. Man

C 4a

a. THE ORIGIN OF MANKIND

God created man, 800, 3002, 3008, 3955, 4314, (4341); he was created by God's love and is preserved by love, 4319; God as the origin of peoples, 4195; God has willed man for his own sake, 4324; God's plan and will: the genuine good of man, 4335.

Condemned: [Human nature does not differ from the nature of the Creator], 285.

Adam and Eve were the first human beings created by God, 443, 1363; polygenism is condemned: [There are men who do not descend from Adam through natural generation], 3897.

Man often refuses to acknowledge God as his origin. He thus disrupts his relationship to God, to himself, to others, and to all created things, 4313; cf. D 1c (nature of sin).

Man is dependent on God, his Creator, 3008.

Cf. C 1 (God, the Creator of heaven and earth).

C 4b

b. MAN, CREATED GOOD BY GOD

4ba Freedom from sin. God created man innocent, without sin, 239, 389, 621; Adam ^apossessed free will and the ^bpower to love, believe, and act appropriately, ^a239, ^b396, (^a398), ^a621, (^a1521, ^a1555), ^a3955, (^b400).

Cf. C 1e (God creates creatures good).

4bb Holiness and justice. Man was created in holiness and justice, 621, (633), 1511, 4313; the original justice and holiness were a gift of grace for Adam, (389), 2616, 3891; Adam as the figure of Christ, 4322; in the image of God, 4322.

Condemned are affirmations opposed to the gratuity of the intact state of nature: [^aThe good works of Adam were by their nature deserving of eternal life; ^bhis merits and his beatitude are wrongly called grace; ^cGod could not have created man from the beginning as he is born now, that is, without natural justice], ^{ab}1901//1926, ^c1955, ^c1979, 2434–2437.

The values that stem from endowments conferred by God on man are good, 4311. Cf. F 3 (justified man).

4bc Immortality. Adam was immortal, 222 (1511); immortality was for Adam a gratuitous gift, not a natural state, 1978, 2617.

C 4c

c. MAN HAS SINNED AND IS UNDER THE POWER OF SIN

Cf. C 4fg (the sinfulness of man and its consequences); C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); C 4ha (order between God, man, and creation); C 4if (human activity tainted by sin); C 4jk (man's sinfulness as an obstacle to the fulfillment of his vocation); C 4kb (effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); C 4kg (man's search for meaning); D (the sin of creatures, which God pardons).

C 4d

d. GOD WILLS THE SALVATION OF MAN AND GRANTS HIM COMMUNION

4da God in his grace wills the salvation of man. Salvation as freedom from what oppresses man, from sin and evil, and the joy of acknowledging God and of being known by him. This begins in the life of Christ, is won forever by his death and Resurrection, and must be carried on through history up to the coming of Christ, 4571; cf. C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

On divine grace and God's universal salvific will, cf. F (God justifies and sanctifies man); esp. F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

4db God has chosen man and saves him. God is good and merciful toward man, 62, 236, 248, 309, 1534, 1548f., 1562, 1576, 1668, 1696, 4166, (4197), 4318, 4685; he has a fatherly concern for everyone, 4324; he is the Father of all, 4199; God's mercy is revealed in Christ as Messiah, 4685; B 1b (will of God: God is merciful); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

The Father has chosen men in the Son before the foundation of the world and has predestined them to be adopted as children, 621, 4103; he decided to raise man to a participation of the divine life, 4102; from the beginning he wanted to share his glory with man in Christ, 4814; vocation of man to communion and dialogue with God: A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation); C 4fb (dignity of man).

After the fall of Adam, the Father did not abandon men; rather, he granted them helps to salvation in view of Christ, the Savior, 4102, (4203); he chose Israel to be his people and set up a covenant with it, 4122, (4140), 4332, 4198, 4221; cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); E 1b (the promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant); E 1c (deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers through hope in the Promised One); G 1bb (Church, prefigured in the Old Testament); G 3ce (Church and religions); K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant).

- God has saved men in Christ: C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E (God saves men through Jesus Christ); esp. E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior).
- God will judge men and consummate the world: M 2 (perfection of the kingdom of God).
- God will lead men into his eternal kingdom: M 3 (life of the world to come).
- God has revealed himself to men. God has revealed himself to men from the beginning and in the course of history—in created realities, 4dc to the first parents, to the patriarchs, Moses, the prophets, and in Christ, his Son, 800, 4203; cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths).
- God and religions. God shows himself to men in religions and allows them to enter into relation with him: A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation); A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths); G 3ce (the relationship of the Church to religions). 4dd
- The work of Christ among men and in history. Cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 2 (the mysteries of the life, death, and exaltation of Jesus Christ; his activity through the Spirit in history); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity). 4de
- The work of the Holy Spirit among men and in history. The Holy Spirit —: directs the unfolding of time, 4326; —: offers all the possibility of being associated with the paschal mystery, 4322; —: is present in the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326; in the Holy Spirit, man becomes a new creature, 4337; cf. B 3b (Holy Spirit in creation and salvation history); G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity). 4df

e. THE BODY-SOUL NATURE OF MAN

C 4e

- The complex nature of man. In the beginning, God established human nature as one and decreed men destined for unity, 4132; human nature is constituted *in a certain way both of mind, that is, ^ba soul endowed with reason, and body, 250, ^b272, ^a800, ^b900, ^a3002, 4314, (4812); the whole and entire man, body and soul, heart and conscience, mind and will, 4303, 4954–4956; man is a microcosm, 3771; cf. the human nature of Christ: E 5b (Jesus Christ is of one being with men). 4ea
- The soul of man. It is man's principle of life, 2833; the soul endowed with reason is really, by itself, *essentially the immediate form of the human body, ^b900, ^a902, ^{ab}1440, ^{ac}2828; parts of the soul in which the specific nature of man consists, 4812. 4eb
- The soul is spiritual (^aspiritualis) or rational (^brationalis/intellectualis), ^b657, ^b902, ^b1440, ^b2828, ^a3771, ^a4314; it is endowed with consciousness and will, 4653; the soul is immortal, 1440, 2766, 3771, 4400, 4314; the soul is more precious than the body, 815; cf. the rational soul of Christ, E 5b (Jesus Christ is of one being with men).
- Man should recognize in himself the spiritual and immortal soul, 4314; it subsists after the death of the man, so that the "human I"—without the complement of his body—subsists in the interim, 4653.
- There is only one soul in men, not two, 657f.; corresponding to the multiplicity of bodies in which they are infused, there are numerous souls, so that condemned is the error: [The soul is one and the same in all men], 1440.
- Thomistic theses about the soul and its faculties, 3613–3622; condemned are errors about its constitution, 977, 3220–3224.
- Origin of the soul: it is created by God immediately from nothing (190, 360), ^b685, ^a3896, (3953); the soul is not produced by natural generation, 360f., 1007, 3220; it does not develop from a purely sensitive principle, 3220f.; it is not of divine substance or a part of God, ^{ab}190, ^{ab}201, ^a285, ^a455, ^b685.
- Condemned: [The souls of men preexisted in heaven and were banished into bodies in punishment for their sins], 403, 456.
- The soul must not be considered as merely derived from physical and social influences, 4314.
- The soul (and the body) in eternal beatitude: M 3b (eternal beatitude); esp. M 3ba (premises of beatitude); M 3bb (vision of God).
- The body of man. Man, by his corporal constitution, unites in himself elements of the material world, so that through him they reach their summit, 4314; because of his creation by God and his resurrection on the Last Day, he must consider his body as good and honorable and should not consider it of little value, 4314; he must not allow his body, in which he is to glorify God, to serve evil inclinations, 4314. 4ec
- The origin of the body from preexistent and living matter may be affirmed, 3896; condemned is the error of the Manichaeans: [The formation of the body is the work of the devil], 462f.
- Physical life is a fundamental value, because all other values of the person are based upon it and develop from it, (4552), 4791; cf. L 4d (obligations and rights with regard to the body of the neighbor); L 5g (human rights).
- Right to life, to integrity of the body, and to a decent life: L 3c; L 4d; L 5g (human rights); obligations with regard to his own body and to that of his neighbor: L 3c; L 4d.
- Sexuality of man: L 3c (obligations and rights with regard to the body); L 6b (human sexuality).
- Transmission of human life: L 6c.
- Care of the bodies of the dead: L 4d (obligations and rights with regard to the body of the neighbor).
- Wounded by sin, man experiences the resistance of the body, 4314; cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin).

Resurrection and transfiguration of the body: M 3a; M 3bc.

Suffering and death: C 4ef; M 2ba.

The Church is opposed to too great an under- or overestimation of the human body, 4341.

4ed The heart of man. In his heart, man finds his inner reality and God awaits him, 4314; in his heart, man decides his destiny, 4314; God has inscribed in his heart an inner law, 3247f., (3272), 3780f., 3956, 4316, 4580; cf. C 4ff (conscience); L 1c (dictates of reason as natural law); L 1e (conscience).

God searches the heart, 4314; he knows hearts and what is hidden, 670, 2866; he alone judges and examines them, 4328; B 1b (knowledge of God).

Imbalances and corruption of the human heart and their effects on man and the world, 4310f.; cf. D 1b (cause of human sin); D 4a (sin in social relationships: occasions and causes).

Christ acts through the power of his Spirit in the hearts of men, 4338.

Harmony between the message of the Church and the desires of human hearts, 4321, 4326; apart from it, nothing can satisfy the human heart, 4321.

Education of men to a culture of the heart, 4331; cf. L 13 (order of culture).

Cf. L 3b and L 4c (obligations and rights with regard to the mind and heart).

4ee The mind and reason of man. Man has a share in the divine mind. This is why, by his intellect, he surpasses all things, 4315; the Creator placed him, endowed with reason, in society, 4321; cf. the rational soul of Christ, E 5b (Jesus Christ is of one being with men); cf. C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4h (man and creation).

Human reason's capacity for truth –: in general, 5076, 5077; cf. A 2aa; on knowledge of religious truths: A 2ab; knowledge of the divine plan by faith through the gift of the Holy Spirit, 4315.

The right of man to truth and the duty to search for truth: L 3b; L 4c; duty to help others overcome their intellectual inferiority, 3988.

Dictates of reason as natural law: L 1c; foundation of the natural law in God: L 1d.

Reason and revelation: A 1b (properties of revelation); A 2a (capacity of human reason for truth).

Human reason and the divine Trinity: B 4a (faith in the triune God).

Obscuring of reason through sin, 4315; cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin).

Limitations of reason; reason and faith: A 4 (reasonableness of faith); esp. A 4a (reason and faith); L 2c (virtue of faith); there are more profound questions that can hardly ever be resolved by reason, 249.

Men should, by the light of reason, discover, develop, and make use of their natural abilities, 4580, 5080; cf. C 4i (activity of man); C 4jj (vocation of human activity).

Application of human intelligence for research in the empirical sciences, technology, and in the liberal arts for the exploration and subjection of the material world, 4315; cf. C 4id (human research and the sciences); C 4ie (progress).

The perfection of intellectual nature by wisdom, 4315; it directs the mind of man toward what is true and good and leads it toward the invisible through the visible, 4315; divine revelation and the wisdom of natural reason bring to light those immutable laws inscribed in the constitutive elements of human nature and revealed to be identical in all beings endowed with reason, 4581, 5076–5080; deployment of man's wisdom for the humanization of man's knowledge, 4315; necessity of wisdom for the resolution of mankind's problems, 4315; the laity should accomplish their tasks bearing Christian wisdom in mind, 4343; cf. C 4ki (Christian humanism as true humanism).

Obligations and rights with regard to the mind and heart of man: L 3b; L 4c.

God is the source of all truth, 2811; he is true: B 1b (truth of God); he is (infinitely) wise, 2901, 3001, 3004, 3009, 3781; cf. B 1b (knowledge of God); foundation of the natural law in God: L 1d; Christ –: as Wisdom, (113), 148, 476; –: as Word, Logos: B 2b (designations of the Son of God); Christ's knowledge: E 5dc; the Holy Spirit opens the eyes of the mind, 4205; the Holy Spirit as Spirit of truth, who introduces into truth, 4104, 4211, 4326, 4530; the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of wisdom, 178, 183, 1726; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); G 1be (Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity).

4ef Suffering and death of man. The enigma of human existence in the face of death, 4318; man fears and rightly rejects the complete destruction and definitive disappearance of his person because of the seed of eternity that he bears within himself, 4318; the prolongation of biological life cannot satisfy the desire for another life, 4318.

Faith provides man with an answer to his anxiety about his future destiny, 4318; cf. A 2b and L 2c (faith).

God alone answers the question about the meaning of man's life and death through the revelation in his Son, 4341; through and in Christ, the enigma of sorrow and death is clarified that, apart from the gospel, overwhelms man, 4322; man, with his fear and doubt, his weakness and sin, his life and death, must draw near to Christ, 4641; through his suffering for men, Christ has traced the path that men must follow so that life and death might be sanctified, 4322; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Christ as teacher); Christ has shared suffering and death with men: E 2ba (communion with men); E 2c (suffering and death of Jesus Christ).

Without the divine foundation and the hope of eternal life, the enigmas of life and death, guilt and suffering remain without a resolution, so that men are thrown into despair, 4321; action and suffering as settings for learning hope, 5114; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope).

The existence of the Church reminds man of the problem of the meaning of his life and his death, 4341; the most intimate union of the disciples of Christ with the joy, hope, grief, and anxiety of the men of today, especially the poor and those afflicted in any way, 4301; cf. G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); administration of the sacrament of the anointing of the sick and dying: K 7, esp. K 7d and K 7e (recipients and effect of the anointing of the sick).

The death of man: M 2ba.

The appearance of bodily death with the sin of (the first) man: cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin).

Victory over death by the death and suffering of Christ: E 2c and E 2d (suffering, death, and exaltation of Jesus Christ); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior).

Vocation of man to immortality, 4812; cf. M 3 (life of the world to come); immortality of the human soul: C 4eb (soul of man).

Vocation of man by God to a blissful purpose beyond the reach of earthly misery, 4318; cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); M 3 (life of the world to come).

Resurrection of the dead: M 3a.

Responsibility of man in death for his life and its recompense: F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); M 2ab (judgment); M 2bb (particular judgment); M 2bc (purification of man); M 3a (resurrection of the dead); M 3b (eternal beatitude); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward); M 3d (condemnation of man).

Communion in faith with brothers already dead: J 1eg (veneration of the saints); M 1b and M 3bd (communion of saints).

f. THE PERSONAL DIGNITY OF MAN

C 4f

The human person. The dignity of the human person: C 4fb.

4fa

God, the Creator, has willed man for his own sake: Man is person, 4830; the constitutive elements of man and the essential relations of each human person transcend historical contingency, 4580f.; person, relations between persons, their union with God, 4576.

Every man is accorded the character of the person, that is, his is a nature that is endowed with intelligence and free will, (3709), 3957; as a person, man is subject to rights and duties, 3957; cf. L (God calls man to a moral life in community).

Being a person means striving toward self-realization, 4830; cf. C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God).

The human person must be saved, 4303; the progress of the human person and the advance of society hinge on each other, 4325; the beginning, subject, and goal of all social institutions is and must be the human person, 4325; cf. C 4ge and 4gf (goal and nature of civil society); C 4gi and L 5d (institutions); L 5 (fundamental attributes of social moral life).

By nature, the human person needs social life, 4325; cf. C 4ga (man destined to social life).

Basic liberties of the human person: L 5g (human rights); L 6a (rights of the family); the primary right of the human person is the right to life, 4552, 4791, 5116–5118; cf. L 4d (obligations and rights with relation to the body of the neighbor).

Cf. L 1 (fundamental attributes of the social moral life); esp. L 1a (person).

The dignity of man. Consciousness of the dignity of man is one of the most important characteristics of today, 4750; cf. C 4kc (contemporary changes). 4fb

The divine seed has been sown in man, 4303; he bears in himself an eternal seed that cannot be reduced to sheer matter, 4318; he has a share in the divine Spirit. This is why, by his intellect, he surpasses the material universe, 4315; cf. C 4ee (mind and reason of man); he is created in the image and likeness of God, 4199, 4312, 4322, 4324, 4329, 4334, 4341, ^a4480, 4765, ^a4812, 4815, ^a4830; as an image of God, he also possesses a resemblance to him, 4812; human life is to be considered something sacred, since it is in a particular relation with its Creator, 4792; man is capable of knowing and loving his Creator and was appointed master of all earthly creatures, 4312; cf. C 3 (visible world); C 4h (man and creation); God's voice echoes in his innermost depths, 4316; cf. C 4ff and L 1e (conscience).

God has chosen man and has revealed himself to him: A (God reveals himself); esp. A 1c (stages of revelation); C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); F (God justifies and sanctifies man); the mystery of man takes on light for the believer through Christian revelation, 4322; the dignity of man corresponds to the fundamental law of the Christian dispensation, 4341; Sacred Scripture teaches that man is created in the image of God and shows him his place in the order of creation, 4312; the gospel arouses the requirement of dignity, 4326; by no human law can the personal dignity of man be so safeguarded as by the gospel, 4341.

God has redeemed man: E (God saves men through Jesus Christ); esp. E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); the value and meaning of man for the Creator is clear in the redemption and in the handing over of his Son, 4641; in this, man finds again the greatness, dignity, and value of his humanity, 4640; the name for the deep amazement at man's worth and dignity is the gospel and Christianity, 4642.

The Church heals and elevates the dignity of the human person, 4340; through her faith in Christ, the perfect man, she anchors the dignity of human nature against all tides of opinion, 4341; her task is to defend man against what can destroy or dishonor him, 4550; she denounces the conditions of life that impair the dignity and freedom of men, 4767; in virtue of the gospel, she proclaims the rights of men and esteems their promotion, 4341; the Second Vatican Council inculcates respect for man, 4327; in love for the poor, the Church attests to the dignity of man, 4760; cf. G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); G 7ad (the Church and the poor).

- A particular reason for human dignity lies in the vocation of man to communion with God, 4319; without divine instruction and the hope of eternal life, the dignity of man is lacerated, 4321; the recognition of God is in no way hostile to man's dignity, since this dignity is rooted and perfected in God, 4321; elevation of human nature to a more exalted dignity because Christ assumed it, 4322; cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); C 4jd (vocation and dignity of man).
- The dignity of man and his person as center and summit of all earthly reality, 4312, 4314, 4326; he is not merely a speck of nature or a nameless constituent of human society, 4314; he is the only creature on earth whom God has willed for its own sake, 4324, 4792, 4830; cf. C 3 (visible world); C 4h (man and creation).
- The dignity of man and his intellectual aptitude, 4315, 4329; cf. C 4ee (mind and reason of man).
- Freedom is a sign of the image of God in man, 4317; the dignity of man demands that he act according to a free and conscious choice, that is, personally, 4317; it is lost when, in order to insure personal rights, it is detached from the norm of the divine law, 4341; cf. C 4fc (freedom of man); L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good); L 1f (moral act).
- Consequences that result from the dignity of the person: Man rightly rejects the complete destruction and definitive disappearance of his person, 4318; cf. C 4ef (suffering and death of man); C 4ja–c (vocation of man to a higher life, to communion with God, to salvation).
- The dignity of the human person demands that man discover, develop, and make use of his natural abilities, 4580; the dignity of man can be promoted only by respecting the order of his nature, 4580; man is more precious for what he is than for what he has, 4335, 4760; cf. C 4ia (meaning and goal of human activity); C 4jj (vocation of human activity).
- In order to acquire his dignity, man must free himself from the slavery of passions and pursue his end in the free choice of what is good, 4317; cf. C 4ji (vocation of human action).
- Fundamental equality of all men by reason of their equal dignity, 4329; dignity of women, 5029f.; equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity, 4501; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 7 (order of society: equality).
- The rights and obligations that devolve from the dignity of the human person are universal and inviolable, 3957, 4326, (4765); the principal commandment of love leads to the full recognition of the dignity of every person, 4765; human dignity and the rights that result from it are granted to all men and all peoples equally, 4199; it is necessary that man have access to all he needs in order to live a truly human life, 3165, 4326; human rights: L 5g; the rights of the family: L 6a; cf. L 5b (society and its responsibility).
- Respect for man means that all consider their neighbor as another self, having concern for his life and for the necessary means to lead it with dignity, 4327; respect and love also for those who think or act differently in social, political, or religious questions, 4328; those who are in error retain personal dignity, 3996, 4316, 4328; cf. C 4ff (conscience); L 2e (virtue of love); L 4 (relation to neighbor).
- The measure of humanity: the relationship to suffering and to the sufferer, 5114. In all domains of social life, respect for the dignity of the person must be taken into consideration: C 4gf (nature of civil society); C 4gi and L 5d (institutions); L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 7 (order of society: goal); L 8 (order of the State); contributing toward the protection of this dignity –: the right to worship God freely, according to one's conscience, 3250, 3961; –: the right to private property, (3949), 3950, 3965; the principles of solidarity and subsidiarity are linked to the dignity of man as to a foundation, 4766; cf. L 5e; L 5f (principles of solidarity and subsidiarity).
- Public and private institutions must serve the dignity of man in the struggle against political and social oppression and the protection of fundamental rights, 4329; cf. C 4gi and L 5d (institutions).
- The equal dignity of persons demands that a more humane and just condition of life and a reduction of economic and social differences between peoples be attained, 4329; cf. C 4gd (common good); C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); C 4gj (universal community of peoples); L 9 (order of the human family); there are conditions of life that do not allow man to become conscious of his dignity, 4331; cf. C 4ke (the poor); what is opposed –: to life, 4990–4998 (death, genocide, abortion, euthanasia, willful self-destruction); –: to the inviolability of the human person (mutilation, torture, mental constraint); –: to human dignity (subhuman living conditions; disgraceful working conditions; arbitrary imprisonment, deportation, slavery, prostitution, selling of women and children) is a disgrace and is more degrading to those who practice such things than to those who suffer the injustice and insults the honor of the Creator, 4327; cf. L 5g (human rights); the crimes of public authorities dishonor those who commit them, 4629; the dignity of man cannot be destroyed, not even at the lowest degree of misery, disrespect, rejection, and powerlessness, 4760; cf. C 4ke (the poor).
- Man created in the image of God must use earthly creatures for the glory of God, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4480; the order of things must be subordinate to the order of persons, and not contrariwise, 4326; cf. C 4h (man and creation); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world).
- 4fc The freedom of man. Cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs).
- The consciousness of freedom and human dignity as important characteristics of our time, 4750; cf. C 4kc (contemporary changes); the value of freedom promises an advance of man toward perfection, 4505; cf. C 4ie (progress).
- Man also possesses freedom in the state of fallen nature: D 2bc (effect of original sin); if there were a fated necessity, it would suppress the responsible character of human actions such as reward and punishment, 283.
- Because of free will, man is autonomous and can act freely, 4752; freedom confers on him the dignity of having power over his actions, 3245, 4752; his dignity demands that he act by a free and conscious choice, that is, personally, 4317; only in freedom can man direct himself toward the good, 4317; he is obliged to observe God's commandments through free will, 227, 245; freedom as an intrinsic attribute of the human person, 4765; vocation of man to full freedom, (4752), 4815; even if it is limited by circumstances, freedom is not entirely suppressed, 4754; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good); L 1f (moral act).

Rights of freedom: L 5g (human rights).

Man is made a free member of society by the Creator, 4321; all in the earthly community are entitled to freedom, 4163; equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); democracy and free participation of citizens in the exercise of power: C 4gh (authority in society); L 8 (order of the State); responsibility and free initiative of persons and groups in society: L 5f (principle of subsidiarity).

Autonomy and the created character of man: freedom is a characteristic of the image of God in man, ^a*which constitutes his nobility*, 4317, ^a4765; even if the same God is Creator and Savior, Lord of history and of salvation history, the rightful autonomy of creation and of man is not withdrawn but is, rather, reestablished in its own dignity and strengthened in it, 4341; the rational creature is not a rival of the Creator, 4334; man depends on God, his Creator, 3008; cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs).

Man's freedom can fully realize its orientation toward God only with the help of God's grace, 4317; freedom is not enough by itself to do what is good, 725; the preeminence of grace with respect to the cooperation of free will, 243; all movement of good will comes from God, 244; no one makes good use of his free will without Christ, 242; the grace of God and the freedom of man: F 5c; God's grace does not nullify man's free will: F 5ca (priority of grace in relation to the cooperation of free will); God's grace and man's work: F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5a (gratuity of grace); divine providence and human freedom: C 1gc (man's cooperation in the work of God); E 6d (participation of men in the work of Jesus Christ).

Each will have to render an account of his own life before the judgment seat of God, whether he has done good or evil, 4317; in his heart, man discerns his proper destiny beneath the eyes of God, 4314; cf. M 2bb (particular judgment).

Tasks of human freedom: God has willed to leave man to his own counsel, so that he can seek his Creator spontaneously and come freely to perfection, 4317; man must emancipate himself from all captivity to passion and pursue his goal in a free choice of what is good, 4317; authentic freedom is the service of justice, 4753; just usage of created realities in detachment and freedom with gratitude to the Creator, 4337; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good).

Freedom threatened and strengthened: Weakening of human freedom by poverty and by too easy a life; strengthening by consenting to the requirements of social life and commitment to the service of the human community, 4331; man's freedom is finite and fallible, 4752; free action can bring about or destroy a good, 4752; internal imbalance of human liberty as the origin of the contempt of man, 4481; freedom is damaged by sin, 4317; cf. C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin); D 4c (sinful structures of society); D 6 (world and history under the slavery of sin).

The full exercise of freedom demands appropriate economic, political, and cultural conditions, 4750, (4767); cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); freedom threatened by poverty: C 4ke (the poor); education for freedom, 4771.

The movement for the promotion of human rights must be protected against a false autonomy, 4341.

The freedom of Christ: Christ accomplished his work of salvation in full freedom: E 2b (life of Christ with men); E 2ca (suffering and death of Christ); E 4c (mission of Christ: work of the Son); E 5cb (the two natures of Christ in the unity).

Gospel and human freedom: The doctrine of freedom has its roots in the divine revelation, 4244; through his obedience unto death, Christ has opened to all men the way of the freedom of the children of God, 4163; man's freedom corresponds to the fundamental law of the Christian economy of salvation, 4341; the gospel is a message of freedom and liberation, 4751; it proclaims the freedom of the children of God and condemns all bondage, which in the final analysis results from sin, 4341; no human law can protect the liberty of man so aptly as the gospel, 4341; the freedom of believers, 4123, 4162, 4167.

Church and human freedom: the message of the Church spreads freedom, 4321; she protects the freedom of man, 4341; the Church denounces the conditions of life that compromise the dignity and freedom of man, 4767; she makes her own man's desire for liberation, 4751; the laity must contribute to progress in human and Christian liberty, 4162; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); G 6cb (mission and task of laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); G 7ab (Church and society).

Abuse of freedom: seduced by evil, from the beginning of history, man has abused his freedom by setting himself against God and seeking to attain his goal apart from God, 4313; human freedom is damaged by sin, 4317; the origin of all contempt of man must be sought in the internal imbalance of human liberty, 4481; men are tempted to think that their personal rights are ensured only when they are exempt from every requirement of divine law; it is thus that the dignity of the human person is lost, 4341; when man chooses a false good, he is not conformed to his vocation to freedom, 4752; cf. D 1c (nature of sin); D 2ba (nature of original sin).

Freedom does not mean the right to do anything, even evil, 4317; cf. D 1b (cause of human sin).

Atheistic understanding of autonomy: Systematic atheism pushes man's desire for autonomy to the point of rejecting any dependence on God: [Human freedom consists in the fact that man is an end unto himself, the sole artisan and creator of his own history], 4320; cf. C 4kh (atheism).

Philosophical liberalism is, according to its origin, the false affirmation of autonomy, 4509; cf. C 4lc (liberalism).

Orientation of man toward love. Man was created by God out of love and is preserved by love, 4318f.; cf. C 4a (origin of mankind).

Man cannot live without love, 4640.

- Love is the basic law of human perfection and hence of the world's transformation, 4338; man does not live fully in conformity with the truth of love if he does not freely acknowledge the love of God that sustains him and commit himself to his Creator, 4318; he can fully find himself only by giving himself to God ³*and to other men*, 4319, ³4324, ³4331; being a person means striving toward self-realization through the gift of self, 4830; C 4jf (vocation to the gift of self); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); L 2f (union with God).
- Virtue of love: L 2e; L 2f (union with God); L 3a (self-love as fundamental obligation); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 5e (principle of solidarity). Fraternity, solidarity, and love among people: C 4gb.
- The vocation of the human person to love is fulfilled in marriage and in virginity, 4700; these are concrete realizations of the highest truth of man, 4700; virginity, marriage: C 4f3 (man as male and female); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 6 (order of marriage and family).
- Human love is a compound of sense and spirit, 4470; in married love, it is a question of a total love, 4471, 4701f., 4709; sexuality concerns the innermost being of the human person and is not merely biological, 4701; cf. L 6b (conjugal love and human sexuality).
- Cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love among people); C 4jf (vocation to the gift of self); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); L 2e (virtue of love); L 3a (self-love as fundamental obligation); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 2f (union with God: gift of self).
- 4fe Man as male or female. God created man from the beginning as male and female; their union produced the primary form of interpersonal communion, 4312.
- The original relationship between man and woman is disturbed by sin, 4831; the stability of the fundamental equality of the man and the woman in the "unity of the two" is lost through sin, 4831; cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 4c (sinful structures of society); in the name of liberation from male domination, women must not appropriate to themselves male characteristics contrary to their own feminine originality, 4832, 5098; the woman's motherhood constitutes a special part in the shared parenthood of the spouses, and the most demanding part, from which results for the man a special debt to the woman, 4834.
- Motherhood and virginity are two dimensions of the feminine vocation, 4833; motherhood of the woman implies an openness to a new person, 4834; the mystery of woman—virgin-mother-spouse—is seen in the perspective of the ethos of the redemption, 4838f.
- The equal rights of man and woman, 3962, 3975f., 4199, 4329, 4460, 4467; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 5g (human rights). Human marriage: C 4fd (orientation of man to love); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 6 (order of marriage and family).
- Love and sexuality of man: C 4fd (orientation of man to love); L 2e (virtue of love); L 3c (obligations and rights with regard to the body); L 6b (conjugal love and human sexuality); rejection of homosexual relationships, 5096.
- 4ff The conscience of man. Conscience is the core and sanctuary of man, where he is alone with God, 4316; in his conscience, man detects that law which is fulfilled in the love of God and neighbor: he does not impose this law upon himself, but he must obey it; it calls him to do what is good and to avoid evil, 4316, 4961f., cf. L 1c (dictates of reason as natural law).
- In fidelity to conscience, Christians are joined with the rest of men in the search for truth and for the solution to the moral problems of individuals and society, 4316; the more right conscience holds sway, the more persons and groups turn aside from blind choice and strive to be guided by the objective norms of morality, 4316; the value of the obligation of conscience promises a progress of man toward perfection, 4505; cf. C 4ie (progress).
- The conscience that errs out of ignorance does not lose its dignity. The same cannot be said for the conscience that is habituated to sin or that cares little for truth and goodness, 4316.
- The gospel considers the dignity of the conscience and its free decision as sacred, 4341; ecclesial authority and freedom of conscience, 4963. Cf. L 1e (conscience).
- 4fg The sinfulness of man and its consequences. See D (the sins of the creatures that God pardoned).
- Man often disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself and others and all created things, 4313; he is split within himself; his whole life, whether individual or collective, shows itself to be a struggle between good and evil. That is why he needs the help of God's grace, 4313, (4325), 4337; cf. C 4kg (man's search for meaning); D 2bd (experience of division); F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace).
- 4fh Jesus Christ, the perfect man. Cf. E 5b (Jesus Christ is of one being with men).
- Christ is ("the image of the invisible God and at the same time has) entered into history as perfect man, ³4322, 4338, 4341, 4345, 5107; the Lord is the goal of human history, the focal point of the longings of history and of civilization, the center of the human race, 4345; Christ is the alpha and omega, the first and last, beginning and end, 4345; cf. C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).
- Only in Christ does the mystery of man truly take on light, 4322, 5107; only in him are the riddles of sorrow and death elucidated, which apart from the gospel overwhelm us, 4322; the man who wishes to understand himself must with his unrest, uncertainty, his weakness and sinfulness, his life and death, draw near to Christ, 4641; in Christ —: truths about man find their root and attain their crown, 4322; is found the fullness of religious life, 4197; Adam as the figure of the man to come, namely, Christ, 4322; Christ, in the revelation of the Father and his love, fully reveals man to man himself and makes his supreme calling clear, 4322, (4640); cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).

As perfect man, Christ wants to save all men, 4345, 5107; he took the world up into himself and recapitulated it, 4338, 4345; in his Incarnation, he united himself with every man, 4322; since in Christ human nature was assumed, it has been raised up to a divine dignity in all men, 4322; men are sons in the Son, 4322; Christ is the firstborn of many brothers, 4322, 4332; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

By suffering for men, Christ has blazed a trail men must follow so that life and death may be made holy, 4322, 5107; he calls for a discipleship in his gift of self that embraces the whole man, all men, and the whole cosmos, 4613f.; he taught by his example that it is necessary to shoulder the cross that the world and the flesh inflict upon those who search after peace and justice, 4338; whoever follows after Christ, the perfect man, becomes himself more of a man, 4341; man must assimilate the whole truth of the Incarnation and redemption in order to find himself, 4641; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).

Christ, the Savior, fully revealed man to man. This is the human foundation and singularity of the redemption, 4640, 5107; man discovers in it anew the grandeur, dignity, and value of his humanity, 4640; man becomes newly “expressed”, created, 4640; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).

Christ surrenders himself in perfect love and perfect obedience with respect to his Father, 4613; cf. E 2bb (Christ’s work among men).

Christ as King of all men: E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ).

Christ, the salvation of man. God’s plan destined Christ to be the source of salvation for the world, 4141; God the Father wanted from the beginning to share his glory with men in Jesus Christ, 4814; salvation begins during the life of Christ, is definitively accomplished by his death and Resurrection, and must be carried on in history up to the coming of Christ, 4571; after the Incarnation of Christ, every man is his brother and is called to become Christian in order to obtain salvation from him, 4550, 4891; the Holy Spirit offers everyone the possibility of being united in the paschal mystery, 4322; through God’s Word and the sacraments, man is freed from the power of sin and evil and introduced into a communion of love with God, 4755; the kingdom of Christ and salvation can be acquired by any man as grace through the renunciation of self, renewal, and conversion, 4572; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); C 4da (God in his grace wills the salvation of man); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); C 5d (kingdom of God as the goal of history); E 2bb (Christ’s work among men); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ); F 1 (God’s universal salvific will); esp. F 1c (the universal salvific will of God in Jesus Christ); F 2 (justification of the sinner through the grace of God).

Participation of men, especially Mary, in the redemption: E 6d.

Conversion and justification or salvation: F 2b (conversion and justification by faith).

Proclamation of salvation: A 2bb (faith and human responsibility); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); H 2f (bishops and world); H 3a (bishops’ ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (ministerial office of priests).

Faith as the beginning of salvation, 1532, 3008; cf. A 2b (faith as response to God’s revelation); F 2ba (foundation of justification); L 2c (virtue of faith).

Salvation is mediated through the Church and her sacraments: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture); the sacraments and their effect: K (God sanctifies through the sacraments); esp. K 2f (dignity and necessity of the sacraments); K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism).

Justified man: F 3a.

Man remains dependent on divine grace: F (God justifies and sanctifies man); esp. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace).

Man and the Church. Man is the way for the Church, 4645; most intimate union –: of the Church with mankind and its history, 4301, 4303; –: of the disciples of Christ with the joys, hopes, griefs, and anxieties of the men of this age, especially those who are poor or afflicted, 4301; the mission of the Church is a religious one and, thereby, a deeply human one, 4311; the Church is faithful to men, 4321; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 2bd (mission of the Church); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture).

The Church answers the questions of man: C 4jm (Church and the human vocation).

The Christian man receives the first-fruits of the Spirit, by which he becomes capable of discharging the new law of love, 4322; in the Holy Spirit man is made a new creature, 4337; cf. B 3bf (the Holy Spirit in the life of the faithful); F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit); G 3ac (the one Church, built by the multiplicity of charisms).

On the Christian rests the need and the duty to battle against evil and to suffer death, but, linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, he will hasten forward to resurrection full of hope, 4322; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope); M 3 (life of the world to come).

Tasks, obligations, and rights of the Christian man: G 4b (vocation and mission of the community of believers); G 6c (mission and task of the laity); H (God guides, instructs, and sanctifies the Church through her ministers); L (God calls man to a moral life in community).

Man’s reverence before God. Cf. A 2b (faith as response to God’s revelation); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); J (God blesses his people in the liturgy); J 1e (liturgies and forms of piety); L 2 (personal relationship with God).

The vocation of man: C 4j.

g. THE SOCIAL NATURE OF MAN

- 4ga Man destined to social life. The community of the Trinity as the reason and basis for human community, 4324; in the social order, man must recognize this reflection of God's perfection, 3772, (3978); cf. B 4bd (the three Divine Persons are one God); B 4ca (the unity of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and salvation history).
- Man lives in community, according to his nature, ^a*by virtue of God's disposition*, ^b*not merely voluntarily* or ^c*by agreement among men*, ^{ac}3151, ^{ab}3165, (3168), ^a3170–3173, 3743, 3971, ^a3973, ^a3979f., 4312, 4325; God did not create man for life in isolation, but for the formation of social unity, 4332; man was made an intelligent and free member of society by the Creator, 4321; the Creator has written the laws of social life into man's moral and spiritual nature, 4323; God has divided the care of the human race between the civil and ecclesiastical powers, 3168.
- By virtue of his nature, the human person needs social life, and to fulfill his vocation he needs dealings with others, services, and dialogue, 4312, 4325; unless man relates himself to others, he can neither live nor develop his potential, 4312.
- Man's relationship toward God, himself, others, and all created things, 4313; person, relationships between people, their connection with God, 4576.
- Man belongs to the domestic community, to the civil community, ^a*to the Church*, 3165, ^a3685; there are social ties that man needs, like the family and political community, which relate to his innermost nature, and others that originate from his free decision, 4325; cf. G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); G 4a (belonging to the Church); L 6 (order of marriage and family).
- God created man from the beginning as male and female; their companionship produces the primary form of interpersonal communion, 4312; familial relations give rise to social relations, (4332); cf. C 4fe (man as male or female); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 6a (right to marriage and family).
- Everyone must consider his neighbor as another self, taking into account his life and the means necessary to living it with dignity, 4327; external goods and goods of the soul have been granted man for his own perfection and for the good of others, 3267, 3952; to help others overcome their inferiority with respect to knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and wealth is a grave obligation, 3988; cf. L 4 (relation to neighbor); L 5a (man's social nature).
- The social order is a permanent task; it must be founded anew every day, 4326; persons are the active and responsible subjects of social life, 4765; social necessities are among the primary duties of modern man, 4330; man is not a nameless constituent of society, 4314; cf. L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 5f (principle of subsidiarity); L 7 (order of society).
- Human persons receive much from social life for the fulfillment of their vocation, even their religious vocation, 4325.
- Cf. L 4 (relation to neighbor); L 5 (fundamental attributes of social moral life); esp. L 5a (man's social nature).
- 4gb Fraternity, solidarity, and love among people. The human and supernatural brotherhood of man is expressed in the obligation to solidarity, social justice, and universal charity, 4459; the obligation of solidarity is also imperative among nations, 4461; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 9 (order of the human family).
- All efforts toward justice, brotherhood, and a humane order have greater worth than technical advances, 4335; peace is the fruit of love and the expression of true fraternity, 4488; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4ie (progress); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); L 7 (order of society: progress; peace).
- The world is no longer a place of brotherhood; the power of humanity threatens to destroy the human race, 4337; cf. C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor).
- God willed that all men should constitute one family and treat one another in a spirit of brotherhood, 4324; the fraternal community corresponds to man's vocation, 4303. Christ as the brother of man: E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).
- Christ brought men fraternity in order to reconcile them with the Father, 4488; he gives assurance that the effort to establish a universal brotherhood is not hopeless, 4338; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).
- Christian love gathers all together into a fraternity that is capable of opening up the way to a new history, 4613; cf. L 2e (virtue of love).
- The Church as fraternal community, 4332; cf. G 3a (unity of the Church).
- Option of the Church for the poor with the goal of a dignified, fraternal way of life together as men, 4633; cf. G 7ad (Church and the poor).
- The Second Vatican Council offers to mankind assistance in fostering that brotherhood of all men, 4303.
- Solidarity: Solidarity is the firm and persevering determination to commit oneself to the common good, 4817; collaboration as an act of solidarity between men and nations, (4461), 4817f.; solidarity is for nations the path to peace and to development, 4818; cf. L 7 (order of society: peace); L 9 (order of the human family).
- Solidarity, a principle of action: L 5e.
- Education for solidarity, 4776.
- Human solidarity can be realized only in Christ, 4488; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).
- The Church shows her solidarity with those who do not count in a society by integrating them into human fellowship and into the community of the children of God, 4760; she advises the sincere struggle for social justice and solidarity, 4773; cf. G 7ab (Church and society); G 7ad (Church and the poor).

- Love: The supreme commandment of love leads to the full recognition of the dignity of each individual, created in God's image, 4765; respect and love ought to be extended also to those who think or act differently in social, political, or religious matters, 4328; the principal laws of the social life are justice and love, 3941, 3973, (3978); the social order must be animated by love, 4326; obligations of justice and love are fulfilled —: through contributions to the common good, 4330, (4766), (4818); —: when the members within each society recognize one another as persons, 4818; love must be added to justice in order to shape human life in its various dimensions, 4684.
- Love as the principle of conduct with respect to God, among men, and in society: L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God); L 3a (self-love as fundamental obligation); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 5e (principle of solidarity).
- Civilization of love, 4776, 4815; culture of life, 4997–4998; cf. C 4gp (Christians and the human community); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 7ab (Church and society); L 13 (order of culture).
- Orientation of man to love: C 4fd; C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self).
- In his intimate life, God is essential love, 4780; cf. B 1b (God as foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); the kingdom of God is the kingdom of love and peace, 4162, (4339, 4481); cf. E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ); the Holy Spirit as the personal Love of God, 4780; cf. B 3c (divinity of the Holy Spirit); the Holy Spirit is present in the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is merciful); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).
- In complete love and complete obedience to the Father, Christ gives himself, 4613; he extends the commandment of love to all enemies, 4328, (4773); he sent the Holy Spirit upon all men that he might move them to love God with their whole heart and to love each other, 4166; love as ^a*task of the New Covenant*, ^b*as the fullness of the law*, ^a4328, ^b4332; the evangelical order is the order of charity, 4579; mercy as the fundamental content of the messianic message of Christ and the power of his mission, 4680; cf. E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ).
- All believers are called to perfection in love, 4166; they should love as Christ loves, 4123, 4166, 4613f.; gift of self as road by which to follow Jesus in a love that embraces all men, (4338), 4613; divine love must be pursued chiefly in the ordinary circumstances of life, 4338; cf. C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
- Justice and peace. Pursuit of justice in today's world: C 4kf; a large number of people live amid conditions that frustrate these legitimate 4gc desires, 4441; cf. C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor).
- Justice regulates human relations, 4756; the principal laws of the social life are justice and love, 3941, 3973, (3978); the social order must be built in justice, 4326; human and supernatural brotherhood of man is expressed in the obligation to solidarity, social justice, and universal charity, 4459; obligations of justice and love are fulfilled —: through contributions to the common good, 4330, (4766), (4818); —: when the members within each society recognize one another as persons, 4818; in a just order men can fulfill themselves as men, their dignity is respected, their legitimate aspirations satisfied, their access to truth recognized, and their personal freedom guaranteed, 4486; he is not an object, but an agent of his own history, 4486; a new social and political order in conformity with the demands of justice as the goal of the fight against injustices, 4774; peace can only be obtained by creating a new order that carries with it a more perfect justice among men, 4486; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); very often plans and programs that start from the idea of justice in practice suffer from distortions, 4684; cf. C 4if (human activity tainted by sin); D 5 (human activity and progress under the power of sin); love must be added to justice in order to shape human life in its various dimensions, 4684.
- Social justice: L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7 (order of society: social justice); L 9 (order of the human family).
- Justice in acquisition and possession: L 11 and L 12 (order of property/of the economy). (^aThe Christian search for) justice as demand of the gospel, ^a4482, 4762; authentic freedom is the service of justice, 4753.
- Characteristics of the Christian understanding of peace: Peace —: as the work of justice, 4486; —: is a permanent task, 4487; —: is the fruit of love, expression of a true fraternity among men, 4888; —: is not simply the absence of war, 4468.
- Ways toward peace: Peace is not found; rather, it is built ^a*through persevering work*, ^b*with the spirit, the ideas, and the works of peace*, ^b4422, ^a4468, 4487; an authentic peace implies struggle, creative abilities, and permanent conquest, 4487.
- Violence is neither Christian nor evangelical, 4489; oppression by power groups is the continuous and inevitable seed of rebellion and war, 4486; revolutionary uprisings engender new injustices, 4453, 4774; only a static and apparent peace may be obtained with the use of force, 4487; the Church advises, not a struggle between the classes, but the sincere struggle for social justice and solidarity, 4773; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); L 7 (order of society: violence).
- Where social peace does not exist, amid political, economic, and cultural inequalities, lie the rejection of the peace of the Lord and a rejection of the Lord himself, 4488; there will be attempts against peace where unjust inequalities among men and nations prevail, 4486; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 7 (order of society: equality and inequality); L 9 (order of the human family).
- Peace and progress: The integral development of man (^athe passage from less human conditions to more human conditions) is the new name for peace, 4485, ^a4486; the true and authentic advancement of man consists in peace and justice, 4579; peace can only be obtained through a new order that carries with it a more perfect justice among men, 4486; cf. C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society: progress and peace).

Peace and fraternity: Peace is the expression of an authentic fraternity among men, 4488; solidarity is the path to peace and at the same time to development, 4818; cf. C 4gb (fraternity and solidarity); L 5e (principle of solidarity).

Peace with God is the foundation of inner and social peace, 4488; cf. L 2e (virtue of love: unity of love of God and love of neighbor); L 2f (union with God); God has promised men a history of true and human peace, 4422; likeness between the union of men and the union of the Divine Persons, 4324; man was created by God in holiness and justice: C 4bb; God is just: 285, 621, 1547, 1549, 1672, 2216, 3781; cf. B 1b (will of God); the saving justice of the Father, 4615; God justifies sinners through grace: F 2b; God is preparing a new dwelling place and a new earth where justice and peace will abide, 4339; cf. M 3be (consummation of the world).

Christ is —: the source of ^aunity and peace, ^a4124, 4198; —: the Prince of Peace who gives the Peace that the world cannot give, 4488; —: the force liberating us from injustice and oppression and inspiring social justice, 4482; he is the unique source (or justice) and mediator of all graces, 1526, 3370, (3820); he taught us by example that we must shoulder the cross that the world and the flesh inflict upon those who search after peace and justice, 4338; the plan of salvation extends to the concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored, 4579; the kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of justice, love, and peace, 4162, (4339, 4481); cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher); E 3bd (kingship of Christ); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

The Holy Spirit is present in the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326; cf. B 3bc (the work of the Holy Spirit in man).

The Church as a sign of unity for the world, 4101, 4124, 4135, 4321, 4342, 4343; she proclaims peace in the world, 4162; she promotes it, 4135; her unity fortifies and fulfills the unity of the human family, 4342; by means of the laity, the world may more effectively fulfill its purpose in justice, charity, and peace, 4162; the Church strengthens the structure of human society in justice and peace, 4340; option for the poor with the goal of a just and free society, 4633; Christians and Muslims should preserve as well as promote together for all mankind social justice, peace, and freedom, 4197; Church and unity of mankind, or peace among men: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 3a (unity of the Church); G 7aa and G 7ab (Church and mankind/society); option of the Church for the poor with a just and free society as the goal, 4633; cf. G 7ad (Church and the poor); the teaching of the Church extends, in particular, to justice, 4756.

Evangelization does not mean ignoring but rather promoting justice, liberation, development, and peace in the world, 4579; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission).

The Christian is the artisan of peace, 4487; through the Christian, the world may more effectively fulfill its purpose in justice, charity, and peace, 4162; the Christian should prefer the path of dialogue and joint action, 4773; the Christian is peaceful, but not simply a pacifist, for he can fight; but he prefers peace to war, 4489; cf. G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world).

Christians await Christ's kingdom of justice, love, and peace, 4162, 4339, 4481; cf. M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (reigning with Christ).

Discord and injustice: C 4gl (disturbances in society); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); D 4c (sinful structures of society).

Cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7 (order of society: social justice; peace); L 9 (order of the human family).

4gd The common good encompasses the sum of those conditions of social life that allow men, ^a*groups and individuals*, relatively thorough and ready access to their own fulfillment, 3984, ^a4326; it is at the service of persons ^a*and preserves their rights*, ^a3983, ^a3985, 4771; it must be concerned with all the members of society, even if in different ways, 3984.

Because of the growing interdependence of the world, the common good involves rights and duties with respect to the whole human race, 4326, 4330; concern for the common good must be extended (^abeyond one's own nation) to the whole world, 3732, 3940, 3956, ^a3983, ^a3989, 3992–3994, 4326, 4330; groups must take account of the needs and legitimate aspirations of other groups and the general welfare of all mankind, 4326; created goods should flow fairly to all, 4448; cf. C 4gj (universal community of peoples and international institutions); L 9 (order of the human family).

Each must contribute to the common good according to his capacities and the needs of others, 4330; cf. L 5e (principle of solidarity).

Obligations relative to the common good: L 5c (common good).

Cf. C 4ge (goal of civil society); C 4gh (authority in society); C 4gi (institutions); C 4gj (universal community of peoples and international institutions); L 5c (common good); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7–11 (order of society, state, human family, work, property).

4ge The goal of civil society is —: to provide the necessary requirements of life that man cannot acquire alone, 3165, (4326); —: to promote the natural perfection (^awell-being) of man, 3772, 3782, ^a4326; —: to provide for the common good (^ain that it gives a framework for the activities of the individual), 3772, ^a3782, 3936, (4342, 4438, 4629); cf. L 7 (order of society: goal).

Human rights cannot be granted by human society itself, since they precede it; but it must protect them and render them effective, 4551; basic rights are not bestowed by governments or institutions but originate in God, Creator and Father, 4628; the most important human rights must enter into the constitutions of States, 3986; cf. L 5g (human rights); rights and obligations of citizens: L 7 (order of society: human rights); L 8 (order of the State).

- Only cultural and religious groupings have the right, without prejudice to the freedom of their members, to nourish convictions relating to the nature, origin, and goal of man and society, 4503; cf. L 5d (institutions and their rootedness in the nature of man).
- The doctrine that attempts to build a society without religion and that fights against the religious liberty of its citizens is to be condemned, 4162; cf. L 7 (order of society: social doctrines and systems).
- Cf. L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 7 (order of society: goal; human rights).
- The nature of civil society. The civil society is a perfect society according to its form and to its right, 3168, 3170, 3685; nevertheless, man 4gf precedes the State, and that is why man is not for the State, but the State is for man (^aa too liberal interpretation of this principle is, however, condemned), 3265, 3728, ^a3772, 3949; the social order and its development must invariably work to the benefit of the human person, for the order of things must be subordinate to the order of persons, 4326, (4446f., 4457, 4580, 4812, 4815).
- The social order requires constant improvement, must be founded on truth, built on justice, and animated by love; in freedom it should grow every day toward a more humane balance, 4326.
- Progress of the human person and the advance of society itself hinge on one another, 4325; all in the earthly city have a right to freedom, 4163; man was established free in society by the Creator, 4321.
- Modern civilization has to be built on spiritual principles, founded on faith in God, which support it, shed light on it, and inspire it, 4425.
- The temporal sphere is governed by its own principles, since it is rightly concerned with the interests of this world, 4162.
- If every citizen is to feel inclined to take part in the activities of the various groups that make up the social body, these groups must offer advantages, 4331; principle of solidarity: L 5e; principle of subsidiarity, L 5f; cf. L 5d (institutions and their rootedness in the nature of man).
- Cf. L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 7 and L 8 (order of society; of the State).
- Equality and inequality in society. The fundamental equality of men in society because of their dignity (^a*because they are in God's likeness and have the same nature and origin*) and ^b*their divine calling* (^c*despite racial differences*), ^b3130, ^c3977, 3980, 3988, ^{ab}4329; human 4gg dignity and the rights ^aand obligations that flow from it in the same way to all men, ^a3957, 4199, ^a4326.
- Social or cultural discrimination with respect to the fundamental rights of the person, whether based on sex, race, color, social condition, language, or religion, is to be eliminated as contrary to God's intent, 4199, (4321), 4329, 4460, 4467, 4940; cultural plurality must not lead to ethical pluralism in democracies, 5093.
- In human society one man's natural right gives rise to a corresponding duty in other men to recognize that right, 3970f., 3977.
- The inequality of power in society proceeds from God, 3131; the social order must be formed in the direction of an equilibrium that is increasingly more human in character, 3973.
- Equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501. Cf. L 5g (human rights); L 7 (order of society: equality).
- Authority in society. Authority is necessary for any human society, 3150, 3165, 3979f.; this is derived, ^a*not from the will of the people*, but 4gh ^b*from nature* and, therefore, ^c*from God*, ^a3150f., ^{bc}3165, ^{ac}3170, ^c3743, ^{bc}3979, ^c3981f., ^a3987.
- The legitimacy of authority is defended against the affirmations: [The perfect man is freed from obedience], 893, 2265; [People who reject a law do not sin], 2048; [People can rightly correct delinquent lords], 1167; a materialistic understanding of authority is condemned, 2960; the right to exercise power does not disappear with a sinful man, 1121, 1165, 1230.
- Any human authority has its limits in the eternal law, 3248f.; decrees have no binding force if they contravene God's laws or human rights, 3981, 3985; in the exercise of power, the dignity of the human person must be respected, 3980f.; any government must grant recognition to the basic rights of person and family and to the demands of the common good, 4342; cf. L 1c and L 1d (natural law); C 4gd and L 5c (common good); L 5g (human rights).
- The most important task of the State is to enable its citizens to observe their rights and obligations, 3985.
- The divine origin of authority does not mean that men have no right to determine the form of government and exercise of power, 3982; the capability of the authority to impose obligations derives ^a*from the moral order* and ^b*from the demands of the common good*, ^a3980, ^b3983f.; the exercise of political authority has for its sole purpose the common good, 3940, 3983, (4342), 4483, (4629); cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good).
- Participation of citizens in the exercise of power and democracy: several models are presented, 4502; equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501; the greatest possible number of citizens must participate with true liberty in public affairs, 4331; citizens are entitled –: to choose and to organize the form of the civil community, 3173, 3253f.; –: to elect those who rule the State, 3982; –: to participate actively in the affairs of the civil community, 3174, 3968, 3975f.; cf. L 8 (order of the State).
- The right to exercise power is not linked to any determined form of government, and this is why the Church does not disapprove of any of them, 2769, 3150, 3165, 3173f., 3254, 3982; cf. L 7 (order of society: social doctrines and social systems).
- Conscience and authority: L 1ef.
- Principle of solidarity: L 5e.
- Principle of subsidiarity: L 5f.
- Cf. L 8 (order of the State).

- 4gi The institutions of society. The beginning, the subject, and the goal of all social institutions is and must be the human person (“in the fight against social or political slavery and the protection of basic rights), 4325, 4326, ^a4329; institutions and laws that are in conformity with the natural law and ordered to the common good guarantee and promote the freedom of persons, 4769.
Support by each person of public or private institutions dedicated to bettering the conditions of human life, 4330.
The Church respects and promotes what is true, good, and just in what man has established, 4343; cf. G 7ab (Church and society).
Cf. L 5d (institutions).
- 4gj Universal community of peoples and international institutions. All peoples are one community, have one origin and one ultimate goal: God, 4195; human dignity and the rights flowing from it belong to all peoples, 4199; from worldwide interdependence it follows that the common good increasingly includes today rights and obligations with respect to the whole human race, 4326; groups must be attentive to the common good of the whole human family, 4326.
In the interest of all, the demand for a worldwide community is raised, 3956, 3992f.
The universal good of the whole human family demands a worldwide authority, 3992f., 3995; the organization of the United Nations as the necessary path of modern civilization and world peace, 4421.
Church, community of peoples, and international institutions: G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); G 7bb (Church and international institutions).
Cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 9 (order of the human family).
- 4gk International law is a natural right of divine origin, 3783–3785; a people can claim political independence for itself, 3255, 3976.
- 4gl Disturbances in society due to human sin. Social structures—necessary in themselves—tend to become fixed, to obstruct social progress, and to cause injustices, 4768; structures may be marked by sin but should not be condemned in themselves, 4769; social structures depend on the responsibility of man, 4768; the disturbances that so frequently occur result in part from the natural tensions of economic, political, and social forms; at a deeper level they flow from man’s pride and selfishness, 4325; the sinner suffers from internal divisions, and from these also flow the discords in society, 4310; man disrupts his relationship to his ultimate goal as well as his relationship toward himself and others, 4313; cf. D 1b (cause of human sin); D 4a (occasions and causes of sin in social relationships); D 4c (sinful structures of society).
Consequences of sin for social structures: the destructive imprint of sin, 4619; slavery through sin, hunger, misery, oppression and ignorance, injustice and hatred, 4480; the social order that is distanced from God gives rise to errors, slavery, and oppression, 4759; disturbance of the original relationship between man and woman, 4831; the great problems of mankind and the resulting poverty: C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); D 4c (sinful structures of society).
Consequences for the individual: men are often diverted from doing good and incited to evil by social conditions, 4325; all of human life, whether individual or collective, shows itself to be a struggle between good and evil, 4313; 4337; cf. D 4c (sinful structures of society).
Elimination of sinful structures: To overcome sin, men are dependent on the helping grace of God, 4313, 4325, 4337; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace); the plan of salvation extends to the concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored, 4579; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); elimination of the “structures of sin” in personal and social life and liberation by the Church through the intercession of Mary, 4619; the Church upsets, through the power of the gospel, criteria of judgment, values, habits of thought, impulses, and models of life that contradict God’s Word and plan of salvation, 4575; she condemns errors, slavery, and oppression and opposes attempts to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, 4759; a change in structures must be accompanied by a change in personal and collective mentality and by conversion, 4633; conversion ever remains an unfinished process on both the personal and societal levels, 4614; cf. F 2b (conversion and justification by faith); esp. F 2bb (nature of justification).
Liberation and structural change: C 4gm.
See D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures).
- 4gm Liberation and structural change. Rigid social structures marked by sin: C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); D 4c (sinful structures of society); slavery through sin, hunger, misery, oppression and ignorance, injustice and hatred, 4480; dependence and the forms of bondage that violate basic rights, 4628; integral liberation, 4935.
Desire for liberation in today’s world, 4750; cf. C 4kc (contemporary changes).
Social structures depend on the responsibility of man, who can modify them, and not on a “determinism” of history, 4768.
Goal of liberation and structural change: To help others overcome their inferiority with respect to knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and external goods is a grave obligation, 3988; the full exercise of freedom demands appropriate economic, political, and cultural conditions, 4750; temporal liberation secures and guarantees the conditions needed for the exercise of an authentic human freedom, 4754; the social order requires constant improvement, must be founded on truth, built on justice, and animated by love; in freedom it should grow every day toward a more humane balance, 4326; a community of men is to be built in which each can live in a human and free way without discrimination as to race, religion, or nationality, 4460; the goal of the struggle against injustices is a new social and political order according to the demands of justice, 4774; cf. C 4fc (freedom of man); C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society: liberation and structural changes).

The Magisterium of the Church distinguishes –: liberation from all the forms of bondage, from personal and social sin, 4627f.; –: liberation for progressive growth in being through communion with God and men, 4627f.; if one of these two elements is lacking, liberation does not go far enough, 4628; salvation is not only liberation from everything that oppresses man but is above all liberation from sin and the Evil One, 4571; for their authentic liberation, men need conversion, 4481; a change in structures must be accompanied by a change in personal and collective mentality and by conversion, 4633; the uniqueness of the Christian message does not consist in structural change but in the insistence on the conversion of men that will in turn bring about this change, 4481; cf. C 4gl and D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures); F 2b (conversion and justification).

Christ won liberation on the Cross, 4628; he freed man (the world) from the bondage of the devil and of sin, 4006, 4204, 4302, 4313, 4322; Christians must make this liberation concrete, 4628; in the face of his Father's saving justice, the obedient Son incarnates the cry of all men for liberation and redemption, 4615; Christ as the bearer of freedom, 4615; Christ as the source of inspiration for authentic social change, 4610; the plan of salvation extends to the concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored, 4579; Christ the Savior will enlighten the poor about their dignity and help them in their efforts to liberate themselves from all their wants, 4632; cf. D 7ba (God forgives sin through Jesus Christ); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); the Holy Spirit frees everyone for works pleasing to God, 4338; the Holy Spirit is present in the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326; cf. B 3bc (the work of the Holy Spirit in man); the intercession of Mary makes it possible for the Church to eliminate the "structures of sin" in personal and social life and to effect Christ's authentic liberation, 4619; cf. E 6dd (mediation of grace through Mary); gospel as message of freedom and liberation, 4751.

The Church of Christ makes man's desire for liberation her own and exercises discernment in the light of the gospel, 4751; she promotes an integral liberation from everything that hinders the perfection of individuals, 4757; evangelization as liberation with global liberation as the goal, 4626–4628; the Church seeks personal conversion and the transformation of society, 4620; she makes man the subject of his own individual and communitarian development, 4628; she uses evangelical means and does not resort to violence of any sort or to the dialectics of class struggle, 4628; between evangelization and human advancement, or development and liberation, there are profound links, 4579; evangelization does not mean ignoring justice, liberation, development, and the advance of peace in the world, 4579; cf. D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission).

The Church rejects violence (crime) as the path of liberation, 4628, 4630, 4772; from this error, new forms of bondage arise, 4772; there is no authentic liberation if the rights relating to freedom are not guaranteed, 4754, 4771; liberation in the spirit of the gospel is incompatible with hatred of others, taken individually or collectively, and this includes hatred of one's enemy, 4773; those who discredit the path of reform and favor the "myth of revolution" encourage the setting up of totalitarian regimes, 4774; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); G 7ab (Church and society); L 7 (order of society: violence).

The Church is opposed to an atheism that anticipates the liberation of man, especially through his economic and social emancipation, and considers religion an obstacle to this liberation, 4320; cf. C 4kh (atheism); G 3cf (Church and atheism).

Christ and the human community. Christ willed to share in human fellowship: at the wedding of Cana, visit to the house of Zacchaeus, eating with publicans and sinners, 4332; willingly obeying the laws of his country, he sanctified human ties, especially family ones, 4332; he shared the life, hopes, and fears of his people, 4611; he adverted to social realities, 4332; cf. E 2b (life of Jesus Christ with men); E 5ba (sameness in all the characteristics of human nature). 4gn

Jesus, the source of unity and peace, 4124; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Through the Spirit, Christ founded a new brotherly community, the Church as his body, 4332; the communitarian character of the people of God is developed and consummated in the work of Jesus Christ, 4332; Christ taught the sons of God to treat one another as brothers, 4332; cf. G 1bc (the Church, purchased by Jesus Christ); G 1be (Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity); G 2a (designations of the Church: Church as body of Christ); G 3aa (divine foundation of ecclesial unity).

Undergoing death itself for sinners, Christ taught them by example that it is necessary to shoulder that cross which the world and the flesh inflict upon those who search after peace and justice, 4338; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).

The Church and the human community. Cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 3a (unity of the Church); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); esp. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 7 (relationship of the Church to mankind, society, culture, State, and international institutions). 4go

The Church herself has the structure of a society: G 3ae (Church as juridically constituted society); cf. C 4gq (Christians and the Christian community).

Christians and the human community. Union of Christians with the rest of men in the search for truth and for the solution to moral problems, 4316; the Church asks that the laity be disposed to work together with other men, 4343; Christians must bring about that "civilization of love" which will include the entire ethical and social heritage of the gospel, 4776, (4815); the path leading there must begin with the work of education: education for the civilization of work and solidarity, access to culture for all, 4776; the participation of Christians in political life is an exercise of love of neighbor, 4484. Cf. G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); L 1eb (formation of conscience); L 13 (order of culture). 4gp 4gq Christians and the Christian community. From the beginning of salvation history, God has chosen men not just as individuals but as members of a certain community, as his people, 4332; cf. G 1ba (foundation of the Church); G 2a (designations of the Church: people of God; body of Christ); G 3a (unity of the Church); G 4 (community of the faithful and their mission); G 6 (laity in the Church); H (God guides, instructs, and sanctifies the Church through her ministers); J (God comes face to face with his people in the liturgy); K (God sanctifies through the sacraments).

C 4h

h. MAN AND CREATION

4ha The order between God, man, and creation. Man as the center and summit of creation, to which all earthly reality is oriented, 4312, (4314); the primacy of man with respect to things, 4694; man is superior to all the living beings that God has placed under his dominion, 4812; he possesses an affinity to the other creatures, 4812; cf. C 3 (visible world).

The order between God, man, and all created things, 4313; the order of things must be subordinate to the order of persons, and not contrariwise, 4326; every person has the right to receive from the earth what is necessary to him, 4448.

God made all creation on man's account, 4339; created in the image of God, he is to subdue earthly creatures and use them to God's glory ^a*and to watch over them*, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, ^a4812; (material) goods are created by God for the use of all. All are permitted to use them, 3267, 3942, 3951, (4448); the use of things must be guided by a moral understanding, 4811; new goods and resources must be considered a gift from God and a response to the human vocation, 4812; cf. C 4fb (dignity of man).

The expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate the concern for cultivating this one, 4339; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).

Application of the resources of the human mind to the exploration and subjugation of the material world, 4315.

God has imposed limits to man in the use of things, 4812; subjugation of the possession and use of things to the likeness of man with God and to his vocation, 4812; in gratitude to the Creator and through the use of created realities in detachment and liberty, man is led to a true possession of the world, 4337; respect for the things of visible nature, of the cosmos, 4816; ecological responsibility, 4905f.

Redeemed by Christ and made a new creature in the Holy Spirit, man can and must love the things created by God, 4337.

Mankind's questions about man's place and role in the universe, 4303; cf. C 4kg (man's search for meaning).

The world is under the bondage of sin, 4302, 4339; cf. C 4kb (effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history); D 6 (world and history under the bondage of sin); man has disrupted the relationship between himself and created things, 4313; men, with minds darkened, served the creature rather than the Creator, 4313; cf. D 1c (nature of sin); D 2ba (nature of original sin).

Cf. C 4i (activity of man); L 2b (respect for God); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world).

4hb Man and the autonomy of earthly things. Created things enjoy their own laws and values, which must be gradually deciphered, put to use, and regulated by man, 4336; cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world).

C 4i

i. THE ACTIVITY OF MAN

4ia The meaning of human activity. God gives man the power to transform and perfect the world, 4480; the personal and collective activity by which men seek to better their conditions of life correspond to God's plan, 4334, 4813f.; men who serve the community further develop through their labors the work of the Creator and contribute to the accomplishment of God's plan, 4334; modern belief in progress compared with Christian hope, 5113; the works of men are not opposed to the power of God, 4334; cf. C 1gc (man's cooperation in the work of God); F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5a (gratuity of grace); F 5c (grace of God and freedom of man).

Dignity and meaning of human work, 4690; when a man works, he not only alters things and society, he develops himself as well, 4335, 4338, 4692.

Affirmations that call into question the value and necessity of human activity are condemned, 2201//2255, 3817, 3846.

Questions of men concerning the meaning of their individual and collective efforts, 4303, 4333.

God alone responds to the question of the meaning of human activity through revelation in his incarnate Son, 4341.

4ib The meaning and goal of human activity. The dignity and vocation of the human person demands that men should discover, develop, and realize their natural powers, 4580; created in the image of God, man is to subdue earthly creatures and use them to God's glory, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, 4812; cf. C 4h (man and creation); L 2b (respect for God).

What men do to obtain justice, brotherhood, and a humane order has greater worth than technical advances, 4335; cf. C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society: progress).

Under the action of the Holy Spirit, all should tend, by renouncing egotism, toward that future when mankind itself will become an offering accepted by God, 4338.

When the values of human dignity, brotherhood, and freedom have been increased on earth in the Spirit of the Lord, they will be found again later, purified and transfigured, in the kingdom of the Father, 4339; cf. F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward).

- The order of human activity. The order between God, man, and world, 4313; the works and merits of men (saints) must be referred to the glory of God, 243, (675, 1824f.), 3325, 3743; no human activity can be withdrawn from God's dominion, 4162; in accord with the divine plan and will, human activity harmonizes with the genuine good of man and his total vocation, 4335; created goods must be perfected by labor, technical skill, and culture for the benefit of all men according to the design of the Creator and be more equitably distributed among them, 4162; man must increase his talents for the service of God and men, 4341; love is the basic law of human perfection and hence of the world's transformation, 4338; God's love must be sought in the ordinary circumstances of life, 4338; inaction is culpable, 4851. 4ic
- Created things and societies enjoy their own laws and values, which must be gradually deciphered, put to use, and regulated by man, 4336; cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs); C 4hb (man and the autonomy of earthly things).
- The dignity of human work, 4690; the primary basis of the value of work is man himself, who is its subject, 4690; the work serves the man, and not the man, the work, 4690; work is a good thing for man, because through work man not only transforms nature, but he also becomes more a human being, 4335, 4338, 4692; preeminence of its subjective meaning over its objective sense, 4690; all work is to be esteemed because of the dignity of the person who accomplishes this work, 4690; it is an error of early capitalism to treat man as an instrument and not in accordance with the true dignity of his work, 4691; cf. L 10a (man as the subject of work).
- Capital is at the service of work: L 10b.
- Hired labor: L 10c.
- Obligations and rights with regard to work: L 3d and L 4e; L 5g (human rights: right to work; unworthy working conditions); L 6a (rights of the family); L 11 and L 12 (order of property/of the economy).
- Education for the civilization of work, 4776.
- The fear of many contemporaries that a bond between human activity and religion will threaten the independence of men, of societies, and of the sciences, 4336.
- Men are not deterred by the Christian message from building up the world or impelled to neglect the welfare of their fellows, but they are rather more stringently committed to it, 4334; a hope related to the end of time does not diminish the importance of earthly duties but, rather, undergirds the fulfillment of them with fresh incentives, 4321; the expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate the concern for cultivating this one, 4339; avoiding the dualism that separates temporal tasks from the work of sanctification (^aacceptance of the gospel), 4482, ^a4850; cf. C 4ij (Christians and human activity); L 2d (virtue of hope); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).
- Human research and the sciences. Whoever labors to penetrate the secrets of reality with a humble and steady mind is being led by the hand of God, 4336; cf. C 1gc (man's cooperation in the work of God); revelation is the lodestar of science, 2877; if methodical investigation is carried out in a scientific manner and in accord with moral norms, it never truly conflicts with faith, for earthly matters and the concerns of faith derive from the same God, 4336; the mysteries of the faith do not contradict —: history, 3544f.; —: the natural sciences, 3287; there cannot be any true conflict between theology and the natural sciences, 3287; cf. A 1bc (the mysterious character of revelation); A 4bc (theology and the other sciences). 4id
- Application of human intelligence for research in the empirical sciences, technology, and in the liberal arts for the exploration and subjection of the material world, 4315; deployment of man's wisdom for the humanization of man's knowledge and the resolution of mankind's problems, 4315.
- All things are endowed with their own stability, truth, goodness, proper laws, and order, which man must respect as he isolates them by the appropriate methods of the individual sciences or arts, 4336; to be deplored are certain habits of mind once found among Christians that do not sufficiently attend to the rightful independence of science and that, from the arguments and controversies they spark, lead to the conclusion that faith and science are mutually opposed, 4336; cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs).
- The danger comes, not from science, which, used well, can solve many of mankind's problems, but from man, who has at his disposal ever more powerful instruments, 4424.
- The Church recognizes the service of the human sciences, 4512.
- The Magisterium of the Church and freedom of research and teaching: H 3g; scientific research must be judged, not in a spirit of suspicion and blind opposition with regard to all that is new, but with the greatest charity, 3831.
- Theological science: A 4b.
- False forms of faith in science: C 4If (positivism, faith in science and progress).
- Human progress. The social order and its development must invariably work to the benefit of the person, 4326; universal (^anot only economic) progress must be united to the progress of the whole (^band each) man (^cin all respects and according to all parts of the soul), ^{ab}4446f., ^b4457, ^{ac}4812; the progress of each man must be united to the progress of mankind (^aso that all men arrive at more human living conditions), ^a4447, 4458; for that, a new humanism must be sought, 4447, 4457; cf. C 4ki (Christian humanism as true humanism); man's progress cannot consist only in the use, dominion over, and indiscriminate possession of created things, but rather in subordinating the possession, dominion, and transformation of things to man's divine likeness and to his vocation, 4812; cf. C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4j (vocation of man); what men do to obtain justice, brotherhood, and a humane order has greater worth than technical advances, 4335. 4ie

True progress must be based on the love of God and neighbor, 4815; cf. L 2e (virtue of love); L 4a (love of neighbor); the values of freedom, the obligations of the conscience, and the life of the spirit promise a progress of man toward perfection, 4505; the zeal for progress and its application that excludes regard for the dignity of man is meaningless, 4815; all evolution of morals must be kept within the limits imposed by the human person's constitutive elements and essential relations, 4580; cf. C 4f (personal dignity of man); the moral character of progress commands respect for nature and the cosmos, 4816; cf. C 4h (man and creation).

Progress of peoples in the struggle against ^ahunger, ^bpoverty, ^cdisease, ^dignorance, and ^eunjust living conditions, ^a4440, ^b4468; as a consequence, human well-being, spiritual and moral development, and hence the benefit of the whole human race, 4468; the social order must be developed every day in truth, justice, and love and find in freedom a more humane balance, 4326; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); L 7 (order of society: progress); L 9 (order of the human family).

Progress and peace: The integral development of man ("the passage from less human conditions to more human conditions) is the new name of peace, 4485, ^a4486; true and authentic progress consists of peace and justice, 4579; solidarity is the path to peace and at the same time to development, 4818; cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love among people); C 4gc (justice and peace); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7 (order of society: progress and peace).

False conceptions of progress: man's progress is not linear, automatic, and limitless, 4810; progress does not mean simply economic growth, 4447; the mere accumulation of goods and services does not effect human happiness, 4811; side-by-side with the miseries of underdevelopment, a superdevelopment: equally inadmissible, 4811; excessive availability of every kind of material goods for certain social groups, 4811; consumer culture as a culture of "throwing away" and "waste", 4812; the free interplay of competition will not ensure satisfactory development, 4454; cf. C 4lc (liberalism); L 12 (order of the economy); false forms of faith in progress: C 4lf (positivism, faith in science and progress).

The dream of "unlimited progress" reappears, transformed by the Christian outlook, 4814.

Progress must be seen as a moment of history that is threatened by sin, 4813; progress as a source of temptation through the distortion of the order of values because of egotism, pride, and malice, 4337; the danger comes, not from science, but from man, who has at his disposal ever more powerful instruments, including those for destroying himself, 4424; cf. C 4kb (effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history); C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history); D 5 (human activity and progress under the power of sin).

Earthly progress must be distinguished from the growth of Christ's kingdom. Yet to the extent that it can contribute to the better ordering of human society, it is of vital concern to the kingdom of God, 4339; cf. C 5d (kingdom of God as the goal of history).

Progress exists because from the beginning, God the Father willed to share his glory with man in Jesus Christ, 4814; in Christ, God wished to conquer sin and make it serve man's greater good, which surpasses any progress, 4814; cf. C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); F 1 (God's universal salvific will); the spiritual principles for building modern civilization can rest only on faith in God, 4424; cf. L 5h (foundation of social norms in God).

Included in God's plan is human history, in which men seek to better their situation, 4334, (4813), 4814; God gives men the power to transform the world and to improve it, 4480; by their service in society, men further develop the work of the Creator and contribute to the realization of the divine plan, 4334; their works do not constitute any opposition to the power of God, but their victories are signs of the grandeur of God and the fruit of his design, 4334; cf. C 1gc (man's cooperation in the work of God).

The Holy Spirit assists the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and liberty, 4326.

The Church, trusting in the design of the Creator, acknowledges that human progress can serve man's true happiness, 4337; the progressive development of peoples is an object of deep interest and concern to the Church, 4440; the activities of the Church worked by the Spirit and the progress of society, 4850; the laity must contribute in their own way to the general progress, 4162; cf. G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture).

Between evangelization and human advancement, or development and liberation, there are profound links, 4579; evangelization does not mean ignoring justice, liberation, development, and the advance of peace in the world but, rather, their promotion, 4579; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission).

Cf. L 7 (order of society: progress); L 9 (order of the human family); L 12 (order of the economy).

4if Human activity tainted by sin. Sin impairs man's works, 4814; programs and works that start from the idea of justice in practice suffer from distortions, 4684; all human activity is imperiled by man's pride and self-love, 4337; spirit of malice transforms human activity into an instrument of sin, 4337; human progress threatened by egotism, pride, and malice, 4337; the sciences and progress threatened by the growing power of man, 4424; man has disrupted his relationship with God, himself, others, and all created things, 4313; he often does what he would not and fails to do what he would, 4310.

Men, with minds darkened, served the creature rather than the Creator, 4313; all their life is a combat between good and evil that they can survive only with the help of God's grace, 4313, 4337; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace).

Man is more precious for what he is than for what he has, 4335, 4760.

Cf. C 4kb (effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history); D 6 (world and history under the bondage of sin).

- Human activity brought to perfection in the paschal mystery. All human activity is purified and perfected by Christ's Cross and Resurrection, 4337; Christ animates and strengthens men through the energy of his Spirit to make their own life and earth more human, 4338.
- Christ taught by example that it is necessary to bear that cross which the world inflicts upon those who search after peace and justice, 4338; the Word of God reveals that the fundamental law of human perfection and the transformation of the world is the new commandment of love, 4338; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher); L 2e (virtue of love).
- Christ is at work in the hearts of men through the energy of his Holy Spirit, arousing in them a desire for the age to come and by animating, purifying, and strengthening longings for more humanity in the world, 4338; he gives assurance to the faithful that the pursuit of a universal brotherhood is not hopeless, 4338.
- Cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bc (priesthood of Jesus Christ).
- Christ and human activity. The example of Christ, who worked as an artisan, 4343; Christ willed to lead the life of a worker, 4332. 4ih
- Cf. E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).
- The Church and human activity. The Church imbues the everyday activity of men with deeper meaning, 4340; the existence of the Church recalls to men the problem of the meaning of their activity, 4341. 4ii
- The experience of past ages, the progress of the sciences, the treasures of human culture also serve the Church, 4344; cf. G 7ae (Church and culture).
- Christians and human activity. The Second Vatican Council exhorts Christians to strive to discharge their earthly duties in the spirit of the gospel, 4343. 4ij
- Christians should exercise all activities so that they unite their humane, domestic, professional, social, and technical enterprises with religious values, 4343; through their secular activities, they should attain a holier life so that the world might reach its goal more effectively in justice, love, and peace, 4162.
- The laity receive their strength through the gift of the Creator and the grace of the Savior, 4159; the efficacy of the laity is elevated from within by the grace of Christ, 4162.
- According to their vocation, by faith Christians are more obliged than ever to fulfill their earthly obligations, 4343; a Christian who neglects his temporal duties neglects his duties toward his neighbor and God and jeopardizes his eternal salvation, 4343.
- The separation between faith and everyday life, between earthly affairs and religious life is a grave error, 4343; avoiding the dualism that separates temporal tasks from the work of sanctification (^aacceptance of the gospel), 4482, ^a4850; Christians who, because of the life to come, neglect their earthly obligations digress from the truth, 4343; the expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate the concern for cultivating this one, 4339; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities). Cf. G 4bf; G 6cb; H 2f.; H 5 (tasks of the faithful, laity, bishops, and priests in the world).

j. THE VOCATION OF MAN

C 4j

- Vocation of man to a higher life. On the one hand, as a creature man experiences his limitations; on the other, he feels himself to be boundless in his desires and summoned to a higher life, 4310; questions about his ultimate end, 4303; cf. C 4kg (man's search for meaning). 4ja
- Vocation of man to communion with God. The integral vocation of man in God's plan, 4311; man has been created by God for a blissful purpose beyond the reach of earthly misery, 4318; cf. M 3b (eternal beatitude). The supreme goal of man is God alone, 3771, 4313, 4322, 4324, 4341, 4792; God as the final goal of peoples, 4195; vocation of man to a blissful purpose, 4318; man's vocation to share in the full good that is God himself, 4815, 4862; God has ordained man to a supernatural end, 3005; the end is a share in the good things of God, 3005; vocation of man to immortality, 4812; cf. C 1h (God as the goal of the world); M 3bb (vision of God as basis of beatitude); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ). 4jb
- Vocation of man to communion and to dialogue with God ^aand to participation in his beatitude, 4319, ^a4321; the eternal Father decided to elevate men to participation in the divine life, 4102; communion with God and men, which culminates in the perfect communion of heaven, as goal, 4627; every man remains an unsolved question to himself to which God alone can provide a complete answer, 4321; God responds to the most profound aspirations of the human heart, 4341; in serving God, man reigns, 4753; cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 3bd (reading of Sacred Scripture); J (God comes face to face with his people in the liturgy); M 3b (eternal beatitude); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward).
- The justified man as ^afriend, ^bmember of the household, (^cadopted) child, ^dheir of God, ^{cd}1515, ^c1522, ^c1524, ^{ad}1528, ^a1535, (^c1913), ^c1942, ^c2623, ^c3012, ^c3771, ^{acd}3957, ^b1535; cf. F 3a (the justified man as a friend of God).
- God's call is free and through grace: No one on earth can know who is chosen, 1540, 1565, 1566; condemned: [God could not create intellectual beings without ordering and calling them to the beatific vision], 389I; cf. F 1d (God's gracious election).
- Exaggerated affirmations concerning the union with God that can be attained on earth: L 2f (union with God).
- Cf. L 2f (union with God).

- 4jc Vocation of all men to salvation. Since Christ died for all, the Holy Spirit gives all the possibility of being united to the paschal mystery, 4322; after the Incarnation of Christ, every man is a brother of Christ and called to become Christian in order to obtain salvation from him, 4550; the Resurrection of Christ is the sign and pledge of the resurrection to which all are called, 4616; Christ wisely and patiently follows out the plan of his grace on behalf of sinners, 4186; the kingdom and salvation can be received by every man as grace through conversion, 4572; cf. B 3bc (the work of the Holy Spirit in man); C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); F 2b (conversion and justification by faith); G 3c (catholicity of the Church).
- 4jd Vocation and dignity of man. One particular reason for the dignity of man lies in the vocation of man to communion with God, 4319, 4321; cf. C 4fb (dignity of man).
- 4je Vocation of man to freedom, (4752), 4815; cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom of man); C 4gm (liberation and structural change).
- 4jf Vocation of man to the gift of self. ^a*Because of his likeness to the Divine Persons,* man can fully find himself only through the gift of himself ^b*to God* and ^c*to other men,* ^b4319, ^a4324, ^{bc}4331; being a person means striving toward one's own perfection through the gift of oneself, 4830; vocation of man to become gift, 4830; gift of self as a way of following Christ, 4613; abnegation, 4571; man does not live fully according to the truth of love unless he freely acknowledges that love and devotes himself to his Creator, 4318; cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love among people); C 4fd (orientation of man to love); L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God: gift of self); L 4a (love of neighbor); man must increase his talents in the service of God and for the good of men, 4341; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity).
The vocation of the human person to love is fulfilled in marriage and virginity, which are concrete realizations of the highest truth of man, 4700; motherhood and virginity are two dimensions of the feminine vocation, 4833; cf. 4fe (man as man and woman); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony).
All the faithful are called to perfection in love, 4166; love of God must be sought above all in the ordinary circumstances of life, 4338; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification).
There are living conditions that do not permit man to correspond to the vocation of self-giving, 4331; cf. C 4k3 (the poor); L 1f and L 1g (moral act; moral behavior).
- 4jg Human community as vocation of man. The fraternal community as vocation of man, 4303, (4627); cf. C 4gb (fraternity); man destined to social life: C 4ga; L 5a (man's social nature).
Man can better correspond to his vocation through his dealings with others, through reciprocal duties, and through fraternal dialogue, 4325; he receives much from social life for the accomplishment of his vocation, even the religious one, 4325.
Since all men enjoy the same divine vocation and the same destination, the fundamental equality of all must be recognized, 4329; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 7 (order of society: equality).
- 4jh Vocation of man to earthly development. Men must develop their capacities of soul and body and obtain temporal happiness through the accomplishment of their vocation, 3743, (4580); they must not despise the body but must consider it good and worthy, 4314; cf. C 4ec (body of man); C 4i (activity of man); L 3c (the body and corporal welfare).
- 4ji Vocation of human action. In the struggle against the powers of darkness, man must constantly strive to do good; for that he needs God's grace, 4337; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace); L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good).
- 4jj Vocation of human activity. Man, created in the image of God, must use earthly creatures to glorify God, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, 4812; the vocation of man demands that he discover, develop, and use his natural powers, (3743), 4580; cf. C 4h (man and creation); C 4ib (meaning and goal of human activity); C 4ie (progress).
- 4jk Man's sinfulness as an obstacle to the fulfillment of his vocation. Sin diminishes man, blocking his path to fulfillment, 4313.
Man often refuses to recognize God as his beginning. He thus disrupts his relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself and others and all created things. He seeks his goal outside of God, 4313; men have not glorified God; with minds darkened, they have served the creature rather than the Creator, 4313; cf. D 1c (nature of sin); D 2ba (nature of original sin); D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin).
- 4jl Christ and the human vocation. Christ reveals to man his sublime vocation, 4332, 4812; in the light of the revelation, man's vocation and his misery both find their ultimate reason, (4312), 4313, 4322; cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).
Through his Spirit, Christ offers man the strength to measure up to his supreme destiny, 4310; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).
- 4jm The Church and the human vocation, 4311–4345; the Church confirms man's vocation to a blissful purpose, 4318; she defends the dignity of the human vocation, restoring hope to those who despair of their higher destiny, 4321; the Second Vatican Council recognizes man's noble destiny, 4303; cf. G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
Instructed by revelation, the Church can give a response to the question of man. She is conscious of the difficulties in responding to this question, 4321; she opens up to man the meaning of his existence and of his innermost truth, 4341; the message of the Church is in accord with the deepest longings of the human heart, 4321; the existence of the Church recalls to man the problem of the meaning of his life, activity, and death, 4341; cf. G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).

Men are called, in the course of human history, to the family of the children of God, 4332, 4340; cf. G (God gathers his people); esp. G 2a (designations of the Church: Church as the people of God).

Vocation of Christians and the Church. The path of following Jesus is the path of disinterested self-giving and sacrificial love, 4613; cf. 4jn C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); L 2f (union with God: gift of self); L 2e (virtue of love); L 4a (love of neighbor).

According to their vocation, by faith Christians are more obliged than ever to fulfill their earthly obligations, 4343; cf. C 4ij (Christians and human activity); G 4bf and G 6cb (tasks of the faithful/laity in the world); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).

Vocation of the Church: G 2bd (mission and task of the Church).

k. THE HISTORICAL CONSTITUTION OF MAN

C 4k

The world is the theater of human history, portrayed by the actions, defeats, and triumphs of mankind, 4302; the human community becomes a reality in time and is subject to a movement that implies constant change in structures, transformation of attitudes, and conversion of hearts, 4487; progress of man as a moment of history, 4813; cf. C 4ie (progress). 4ka

Immediate effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history. Men have not glorified God. With darkened minds, they have served creation rather than the Creator, 4313; man finds that he has inclinations toward evil and is engulfed by ills, 4313. 4kb

The form of this world, disfigured by sin, passes away, 4339; until the full revelation of glory, human history is in disorder because of sin, 4340, 4813.

All of human life shows itself to be a struggle between good and evil in which men need God's grace, 4313; 4337; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace); this battle against the powers of darkness was joined from the very origins of the world and will continue until the last day, 4337.

Man often refuses to recognize God as his origin. He thus disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself, others, and all created things, 4313.

The values that proceed from man's disposition are of divine origin; because of the corruption of man's heart, they are often deformed and need to be purified, 4311; progress as a source of temptation because of the distortion of the order of values through the spirit of vanity and malice, 4337; programs and works that start from the idea of justice in practice suffer from distortions, 4684.

The Church warns against conforming to the spirit of the world, the spirit of vanity and malice, 4337.

The sinfulness of man and its consequences: C 4fg; D (sin of creatures, which God pardons); D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin).

Sin and —: the body of man: C 4ec; —: the mind and reason of man: C 4ee; —: the suffering and death of man: C 4ef.

Abuse of freedom: C 4fc.

Sinful structures in society: C 4gl; D 4c.

Sin and created realities: C 3 (visible world); C 4h (man and creation); D 6 (world and history under the bondage of sin).

Human activities and progress tainted by sin: C 4ie; C 4if; D 5.

The sinfulness and the vocation of man: C 4jk.

Redemption from sin by Christ: The Lord himself came to free and strengthen man, renewing him inwardly and casting out that prince of this world who held man in the bondage of sin, 4313; cf. C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 4c (mission of the Son); D 7ba (God forgives sins through Jesus Christ).

Contemporary changes. Man in today's living conditions faces changes in the world, man, his action, and his relationships, 4501; the present time: upheavals, crises, opportunities, hope, fear, 4304. 4kc

Psychological, moral, and religious changes: Questioning of traditional values, institutions, law, and ways of thinking; purification of religion of a magical view of the world; more personal and active faith; negation of God in science, philosophy, literature, art, human sciences, history and law, 4307.

Consciousness of certain values: Freedom, human dignity, affirmation of inalienable rights of the person and peoples, 4750; sense of justice in society, 4683; aspirations for justice and participation in managerial functions, 4501; promotion of democratic society according to diverse models, 4502; powerful aspirations for liberation, 4750.

Changes in the organization of society: dismantling of traditional local communities; industrial society; refined means of social communication; socialization; connection between individuals and peoples on a global level and evolution toward civil, economic, and social unity of mankind; dangers and opportunities, 4154, 4306, 4325, 4343.

Comprehensive changes in the practical order due to modern science and modern technology. Domination of man over nature, 4305, 4333, 4501.

Threats and problems of mankind. The man who is to be evangelized is not something abstract but, rather, a person subject to economic and social problems, 4579. 4kd

Political, social, economic, racial, and ideological tensions, 4304; tensions between races, rich and poor, international institutions, social levels, generations, families, sexes, within the person himself, (4307), 4308; anti-Semitism, 4198.

- Ideologizing, collective greed in groups and nations, 4308; mistrust, enmity, and distress of which man is both the cause and the victim, 4308; the growing power of mankind threatens to destroy the human race itself, 4337; mistrust among peoples, hostile blocs of nations, economic, military, and political tyranny, 4818; oppression of peoples, 4452; war that would destroy everything, 4304; disaster of two world wars, genocide, atomic peril, 4810; terrifying destructive arms and their consequences, 4423; preeminent role of technological means in conflicts, danger of atomic war, 4693.
- Poor nations, 4442; they depend economically on wealthier nations; underdevelopment side-by-side with immoderate development and wealth, 4811; growing inequalities and accumulation of possessions, 4442; trade relations to the detriment of poor countries, 4462; hunger, misery, and distress of a large part of the world population, 4304, 4310; ignorance, hunger, misery, oppression, injustice, 4440, 4480; see C 4k3 (the poor).
- Economic, social, and political oppression of large masses, 4776; inequalities in the exercise of power, contrast between small upper classes and the rest of the population, 4443; power of the rich and misery of the poor, oppression, 4454; poverty due to large landed estates, 4450; poor classes, 4443; poor peasants, 4443; new forms of social and psychological subjugation, 4304; conflicts in the social domain, including rural populations, 4443; accelerated population growth, 4455; illiteracy, 4304; speculation, 4450; consumer culture as a culture of “throwing away” and “waste”, 4812; passivity of public powers in the face of social disorders, 4772; cf. C 4ke (the poor).
- Challenge and loss of traditional values, institutions, laws, and ways of thinking; severe confusion in the manner and norms of behavior; large numbers of people distance themselves from religion, (4304), 4307; contradiction between tradition and progress in technology and civilization, 4444; generational conflict, 4444; problems of the elderly, 4444.
- Situation in Latin America: Systems that go against the common good or favor privileged groups, 4483; underdevelopment, an unjust situation that promotes tensions, conspires against peace, 4485; social injustices that keep people in poverty and misery, 4493; economic inequality, 4633; situation of misery, discrimination, injustice, and corruption, 4619; situation of the indigenous and African American population, 4931, 4936–4940.
- Situation in Africa: Social grievances and civil wars, 5028.
- Tensions between classes and internal colonialism; marginality; oppression by dominant groups and classes; external neocolonialism; flight of capital; fiscal fraud and loss of gains; progressive debt, monopolies, and imperialism of money; exaggerated nationalism; tensions between Latin American countries; armament, 4485; rebellions and wars, 4486; violence of terrorists and guerillas, 4630; torture, kidnapping, the persecution of political dissidents or suspect persons, and the exclusion of people from public life because of their ideas, 4629.
- Lack of political conscience, 4484.
- Sinful structures in society, C 4gl; D 4c.
- 4ke The poor. Poor peoples, 4304, 4309, 4310, 4440, 4442, 4462, 4480, 5083; poverty due to –: social injustice, 4493; –: large land holdings, 4450; poor classes, 4443; poor peasants, 4443; power of the rich and misery of the poor, 4454; oppression and violent measures of the wealthy, 4454, 4772; cf. C 4kd (problems of mankind).
- In need of aid are the elderly and abandoned, immigrants, exiles, children born out of wedlock, the hungry, 4327.
- Different forms of poverty: poverty as a lack of goods, 4494; spiritual poverty, 4494; poverty as a commitment that voluntarily and out of love assumes the living conditions of those who suffer, 4494; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); authentic use of created realities in poverty and freedom, in thanksgiving with regard to the Creator, 4337.
- Consequences of poverty: Impairment of human freedom, 4331, 5083; growing disinterest in the ultimate questions because of the pressure of material misery, 4310; decrease in the sense of responsibility when living conditions do not allow man to become conscious of his dignity and vocation, 4331; ignorance and living conditions unworthy of man prevent an awakening of conscience and full participation in the transformation of structures, 4441, 4489.
- The dignity of man cannot be destroyed, not even at the lowest level of poverty, scorn, rejection, and powerlessness, 4760; cf. C 4fb (dignity of man).
- To help others overcome their inferiority with respect to knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and external goods is a grave obligation, 3988; as protectors of the weak, the rich must be ready to share their goods with them, 4818; obligation of the rich to give alms, 2112, 3729; L 4e (obligations and rights with regard to material goods: alms).
- According to the prophets, poverty is contrary to the will of the Lord, 4494; poverty as the fruit of injustice and sin, 4494f., 5083; cf. C 4gl and D 4c (sinful structures of society).
- Christ and the poor: He has spoken to the poor, freed them from sin, and filled them with joy and hope, 4632; he proclaimed the good news to the poor (“who were frequently the most receptive”), ^band healed the contrite of heart, ^b4005, 4120, ^a4570; predilection of Jesus for the poorest and the suffering, 4617; Christ is above all present in the least of his brothers, 4852; cf. E 2bb (Christ’s work among men).
- The poverty of Christ, 930, 1087–1094; Christ carried out the work of redemption in poverty and persecution, 4120; although he was rich, he became poor in order to save men, 4494; cf. E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).

- The gospel's demand for poverty as solidarity with the poor, 4634; this demand frees the poor from false ideals of individualism and the consumer society, 4634; according to the prophets, poverty is contrary to the will of the Lord, the fruit of injustice and sin, 4494; Christian love favors the lowly, the weak, and the poor, 4613.
- The concept of certain liberation theologies confuses the poor of the Scriptures with the proletariat of Karl Marx, 4738; commitment to the poor becomes class conflict, 4738; cf. C 4lb (Marxism).
- The Church feels profoundly united with the poor, 4120, 4301, 4342; commitment and option of the Church for the poor: G 7ad (Church and the poor).
- Cf. L 7 (order of society: means and power of the rich); L 11 (order of property).
- Man's pursuit of justice. Inequalities in the world today: in person and family, between generations, social classes and sexes, between races, peoples, nations, and international institutions, 4308. 4kf
- Man's efforts for —: political, social, and economic justice and equality among peoples and social groups; —: equality of rights between men and women; —: personally meaningful work and participation in economic, social, and cultural life; endeavors of peoples for a universal community, 4309; in contemporary tensions and conflicts, an awakened sense of justice is evident in society, 4683.
- Cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); L 7 (order of society: social justice); L 9 (order of the human family).
- Man's search for meaning. The sense of being divided and limited, the desire for a higher life; the choice between various possibilities and the necessity of renunciation; the experience of discords in society and of his own sinfulness, 4310; man finds that he has inclinations toward evil and is engulfed by ills that cannot come from the Creator, who is good, 4313; cf. D 2bd (experience of division). 4kg
- Questions of men about the development of the world, their place and task in the universe, the meaning of their individual and collective efforts, and the ultimate goal of things and man, 4304, 4310, 4333; response to these questions through the exaltation or the debasement of man, 4312; man remains an unsolved question to himself, 4321; despair of men without a foundation in God or hope of eternal life, 4140, 4321; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope).
- Various religions (Judaism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, and other religions): A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths); G 3ce (Church and religions).
- Various world interpretations: Materialism, atheism, nihilism with man as the exclusive end; despair as consequence; many nevertheless pose fundamental questions about man and the meaning of life, 4310.
- Atheism as a serious fact of today, 4319; it is characterized by a refusal or rejection of any link with God, 4319. 4kh
- Various phenomena are described as atheism: Explicit atheism, agnosticism, or atheism due to methodological presuppositions, 4319; the systematic form of atheism refuses, in its desire for autonomy, any dependence on God, 4320; atheism that anticipates the liberation of man through his economic and social liberation and that sees in religion an obstacle to that liberation, 4320.
- Atheistic conception of autonomy: C 4fc (freedom of man).
- Atheistic ethics: L 1d (foundation of the natural law in God).
- Reasons for atheism: Atheism as a result of —: faith in science, 4319; —: anemic faith because of an excessive elevation of man, 4319; —: the rejection of an image of God that does not, however, represent the God of the Gospels, 4319; —: neglect of the question of God because of a lack of religious concern, 4319; atheism as —: a protest against evil in the world or against the absolute character attributed to certain human values, 4319; —: critical reaction against religions and against the Christian religion, 4319; access to God made difficult by today's civilization, 4319.
- Those who, against their conscience, stay away from God and avoid the religious question are not without fault. But the faithful themselves bear responsibility for atheism when they conceal the face of religion through false faith education, doctrine, or practice, 4319.
- Church and atheism: G 3cf.
- Christian humanism as true humanism. A new humanism must be found that allows man to find himself, 4447. 4ki
- True humanism —: is open to the certitude of faith, 4642; —: cannot abandon the values of the spirit and of God, 4457; —: is concerned with the integral progress of man and of all men, 4457.
- The wisdom of popular Latin American Catholicism is a Christian humanism, 4623.
- Cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher).
- The historical constitution of the Church. Cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church: visibility of the Church); G 3ad (Church from and in the Churches); G 3ae (Church as juridically constituted society); G 4 (community of the faithful); G 6 (laity); H (God guides, instructs, and sanctifies the Church through her ministers); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities). 4kj
- Church and today's world. The man who is to be evangelized is a person subject to social and economic problems, 4579; the Church has the right and duty to invoke and implore the mercy of God in the face of different situations of physical and moral evil and all the threats that weigh on men of today, 4685; the Church renews mankind with her own power, 4574; cf. C 4l (doctrines about society and the social doctrine of the Church); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 4bf and G 6cb (tasks of the faithful/laity in the world); G 7 (relationship of the Church to mankind, society, culture, 4kk

State, and international institutions); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (priests).

C 41 I. MODERN DOCTRINES ABOUT SOCIETY AND THE SOCIAL DOCTRINE OF THE CHURCH

Implications of the Church's social doctrine: L 5 (fundamental attributes of social moral life); L 6–13 (order of marriage and family, society, State, human family, work, property, economy, culture).

41b Marxism and socialism. Different perspectives on Marxism advanced by Christians –: socialism as the will to insure justice and equality, without taking into account the use of violence in historical socialism, 4505; –: approach to Marxism because of its historical evolution, 4506; Marxism as the active practice of the class struggle, 4507; –: Marxism as the exercise of political and economic power under the direction of a single party that claims to guarantee the good of all, 4507; –: Marxism as socialistic doctrine that is based on historical materialism and denies all transcendence, 4507; –: Marxism as a scientific method for the study of social and political realities and for the connection between knowledge and practice of a revolutionary change, 4507; –: recourse to "Marxist analysis": application of the Marxist method to the situation of the Third World and, in particular, to Latin America, 4730f.

Christian doctrine and Marxism: the danger exists that Christians might construe socialism as something perfect. Necessity of an accurate judgment, 4505.

It is dangerous –: to forget the link that unites the different forms of Marxism (4505), 4508; –: to approve of different elements of Marxist research without considering their link with the doctrine, 4508; –: to engage in the class struggle and its Marxist interpretation, 4508.

Accord of neo-Marxist systems in fundamental principles that contradict the Christian conception of man and society, 4732; such principles are: –: the "class struggle", 4733; –: atheism and the negation of the human person, of his freedom, and of his rights, 4734; cf. C 4fc (freedom); C 4kh (atheism); G 3cf (Church and atheism); –: a false understanding of the spiritual nature of the person, the negation of the principles of a social and political life in conformity with human dignity, the demand of total subordination to the community, 4734; –: a radical political interpretation of faith's affirmations and theological judgments, 4735; by the adoption of the Marxist analysis in theology –: doctrines of the faith or of theology are subordinated to the theory of the class struggle, 4735; –: participation in the class struggle becomes a requirement of charity itself, 4736; –: love of neighbor and brotherhood become an eschatological principle for the time following the revolution, 4736; –: the rich become the class enemy as a matter of principle, 4736; –: the nonviolent path of dialogue is condemned, 4736; –: the Church is considered in a purely immanent way, 4737; –: the "theologies of liberation" confuse the poor of Sacred Scripture and the proletariat of Karl Marx, 4738; cf. C 4ke (the poor); –: the fight for the rights of the poor is transformed into a class struggle, 4738; –: Church of the People is understood to be a Church of the class, a Church of the oppressed people whom it is necessary for the Church to "conscientize", 4740.

The Church does not adopt the theory of the class struggle, (3170), 3973, 4508, (4628), 4735f., 4773; she recommends a noble and reasoned struggle for justice and social solidarity, 4773; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7 (order of society: violence).

Doctrine of collectivism: Transfer of the means of production to the State, 4698f.; collectivism in all its forms is contrary to the social doctrine of the Church, 3726, 4766; the transfer of the means of production to the State according to the doctrine of collectivism does not in any way correspond to the socialization of that property, 4698f.; cf. L 11 (order of property).

Communism –: inverts the relationship between citizens and society, 2786, 3773, 3939; –: undermines the right to property, 2786; it is not permitted to support it, 3865, 3930; after the collapse of Marxist totalitarianism, 4910.

Socialism (even "moderate") is in contradiction with Christian principles, 2892, 2918, 3742–3744, *3939; the right of free association is restricted by socialists, 3939.

41c Liberalism. Renewal of the doctrines of liberalism, 4509; unbridled liberalism, 4451; free trade as norm, 4463; free interplay of competition, 4454.

Christian doctrine and liberalism: Danger that Christians might consider liberalism as something perfected, as the expression of the cause of freedom, 4510; the doctrine of the liberals calls for careful discernment on the part of Christians, 4509.

At its roots, philosophical liberalism is an erroneous affirmation of autonomy, 4509; cf. C 4fc (freedom: abuse of freedom).

A law of justice is not of itself inherent in free trade: prices fixed by free agreement can have unjust consequences. A major principle of liberalism thus becomes debatable, 4463; condemned are the following concepts: [Profit is the chief spur to economic progress, free competition is the guiding norm of economics, and private ownership of the means of production is an absolute right, having no limits or concomitant social obligations], 4451; cf. L 12 (order of the economy).

- The Church blames liberalism and its individualism, 3772, 3937, 3940f., 4451 (4454), (4330), 4463, 4509, 4766; cf. L 7 (order of society: social doctrines and social systems).
- The Church's doctrine is opposed to all the forms of social or political individualism, 4766; individualism must be avoided in relation to property, 3726, 3741, 4330, 4766; rejection of a purely individualistic ethic, 4330.
- Capitalism —: as system, 4691; —: as opposition to socialism or communism, 4691. 4ld
- Christian doctrine and capitalism: Error of early capitalism is present when man is treated as an instrument, not in accord with the true dignity of his work; 4691; the position of rigid capitalism must undergo continual revision in order to be reformed from the point of view of human rights, 4698; cf. C 4ic (organization of human activity); L 10–12 (order of work, property, economy).
- Materialism. Bureaucratic socialism, technocratic capitalism, tyrannical form of democracy, and their difficulty in responding to the great questions of justice and equality, 4510; danger of these systems: materialism, effort for its own advantage, oppression, 4510. 4le
- Consumer culture as a culture of “throwing away” and “waste”, 4812; the accumulation of goods and services alone does not bring about human happiness, 4811, 4904, 4908.
- Spiritual forms of death; philosophies of selfishness, pleasure, despair, and nihilism, 4492.
- Positivism, faith in science and progress. New form of positivism: “technology as form of activity, pattern of existence, and language,” 4505, 4511; man himself as the object of positivistic science, 4511. 4lf
- Christian doctrine and positivism: The effort to reduce everything to one, with the help of the sciences, betrays a dangerous intention, 4512; the consequence is the self-mutilation of man and the inability to understand himself, 4511; each scientific discipline will be able to grasp only a partial—yet true—aspect of man; the complete picture and the full meaning of all the parts will escape it, 4512; within these limits the human sciences give promise of a useful and lasting service, 4512.
- Man's progress is not linear, automatic, or limitless, 4810; this concept of “progress” derives from the Enlightenment; it is today called into doubt, 4810; an irrational optimism has been replaced by anxiety, 4810; crisis of the economic theory linked to the term “development”, 4811; development does not simply mean economic growth, 4447.
- Cf. C 4id (human research and the sciences); A 2a (capacity of human reason for truth); A 4a (reason and faith); C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society: progress); L 12 (order of the economy).
- Nationalism and racism. Cult of one's own race today and at the time of colonial domination, 4467. 4lg
- Christian doctrine and nationalism or racism: the solidarity of all men is opposed to the glorification of own's own State and one's own race, 4466; the Church deplores any form of anti-Semitism, 4198; the Church reproves, as foreign to the mind of Christ, any discrimination against men or harassment of them because of their race, color, condition of life, or religion, 4199; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); L 5g (human rights).
- Relativistic pluralism in democracy, 5093. 4lh

5. Goal and Fulfillment of History

a. GOD AND THE GOAL OF HISTORY

C 5a

- God's design and plan concerning the world: A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation); C 1g (God directs everything according to his providence); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); the world will be transformed according to God's design and will reach fulfillment, 4302.
- God as Lord of the universe and of history, who directs everything according to his providence: C 1ga.
- God as goal of the world: C 1h.
- God knows the future of creatures, (333, 419), 621, 625–629, 646, 685, 3003, 3646; cf. B 1b (knowledge of God).
- God will prepare a new dwelling and a new earth on which justice and peace will abide, 4339; after the resurrection of the children of God, all creation will be freed from the bondage of corruptibility. Charity and its fruits will endure, 4339.
- On the day of consummation, men saved by grace will render God perfect glory, 4332.
- A materialistic explanation of the end of the world is condemned, 1361.
- Cf. M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

b. JESUS CHRIST AND THE GOAL OF HISTORY

C 5b

- The Son of God as mediator of creation: B 2b; B 4c; C 1c. Redemption in Christ and God's plan of salvation: C 1ga (God as Lord of the universe and of history).
- The Son of God as mediator of salvation: B 2b; B 4c (work of the triune God); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior).
- Christ knew the day of the Last Judgment because of his divinity, 419, 474–476; cf. E 5dc (Christ's knowledge).

Christ as the goal of human history, the focal point of the longings of history and of civilization, the center of the human race, 4310, 4345; God's plan begins in Christ and culminates in him, 4814; Christ is present and acting in history, 4611; Christ is —: the Alpha and Omega, beginning and end, 4345; —: Lord of human history and salvation history, 4341; —: Lord of history and the inspiration for authentic social change, 4610, 4612; —: Lord of time, 4186; having ascended, Christ draws all to himself, 4224; the sorrow of creation is assumed by the Crucified One, who offers his life for all, 4615; the obedient Son, who, in the face of his Father's saving justice, incarnates the cry of all men for liberation and redemption, 4615; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of redemption); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ). Christ is perfect man: The Word of God, as perfect man, has taken the history of the world up into himself and recapitulated it, 4338; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher); E 5b (Jesus Christ is of one being with men).
The activity of the exalted Lord through the Spirit in the world and history: E 2e.
The plan of Christ's love is to renew everything in heaven and on earth, 4345; Christ calls for a radical discipleship of his self-gift, which embraces all men and the entire cosmos, 4613f.; through Christ, the world will be freed from the bondage of sin in order to be transformed according to God's design and to reach fulfillment, 4302; the Resurrection of Christ is the sign and pledge of the resurrection and final transformation of the universe, 4616; man and world will be entirely renewed in Christ at the end of time, 4168; cf. M 3be (consummation of the world).
The return of Christ and judgment at the end of time: E 2f.; M 2a (return of Christ and judgment); M 2bb (judgment); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

C 5c

C. MANKIND AND THE GOAL OF HISTORY

Questions of men about the evolution of the world, 4303; men do not know the time for the consummation of the earth and of mankind or how all things will be transformed, 4339; cf. C 4kg (search for meaning); M 3be (consummation of the world).
On earth grows the body of a new human family that even now is able to give some kind of foreshadowing of the new age, (4330), 4339; cf. M 3be (consummation of the world).
Necessity of grace for the construction of a new humanity, 4330; cf. F 5cb (necessity of grace).
Vocation of man: C 4j.

C 5d

d. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND CHRIST AS THE GOAL OF HISTORY

On earth the kingdom of God is already present in mystery; when the Lord returns, it will be brought into full flower, 4339; it was begun by God himself on earth and is to be further extended until it is brought to perfection by him at the end of time, with the appearance of Christ, 4123.
The kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of truth and life, holiness and grace, justice, love, and peace, 4162, (4339, 4481).
The kingdom of God comes to pass through historical realizations, without being identified with them or exhausted in them, 4614.
The kingdom proclaimed in the gospel is transposed into the practice of life by men who are profoundly linked with their own culture, 4577; in the building up of the kingdom, reference must be made to elements of culture or cultures, 4577.
The kingdom and salvation can be received by every person as grace through renunciation, renewal, and conversion of the whole man, 4572; cf. F 1 (God's universal salvific will).
Cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); F 2b (conversion and justification by faith); G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and the kingdom of God); M 1 (dawn of the kingdom of God in history); M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

C 5e

e. THE CHURCH AND THE GOAL OF HISTORY

Cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 3b (holiness of the Church); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

f. CHRISTIANS AND THE GOAL OF HISTORY

In the Spirit of Christ, Christians go in pilgrimage toward the fulfillment of human history, 4345.

The faithful are citizens of a kingdom that is not earthly but heavenly, 4133; the mutual penetration of earthly and heavenly citizenship remains a mystery of human history, 4340; cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and the kingdom of God); G 3b (holiness of the Church).

Cf. C 4j (vocation of man); G 4 (community of the faithful and their mission); G 6 (laity); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); J 1a (nature of the liturgy); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

D. THE SIN OF CREATURES, WHICH GOD PARDONS

1. Cause and Nature of Sin

a. TEMPTATION BY THE EVIL SPIRIT

D 1a

The fall of the angels. The devil (the demons) was created good (an angel) by God, 286, 457, 800, 1078; he fell from the supreme good, 286; the devil and the other demons became evil by their own doing (by free will), 325, 794, 800; he is, therefore, not changed into an opposing substance, 286.

The condemnation of the fallen angels. The punishment for the devil was ^aeternal damnation, (286), ^a411, ^a801. 1ab
 Condemned: [In the future there will be a restoration of the demons ^athrough the crucifixion of Christ], ^a409, 411.

The activity of the fallen angels. Temptation: the devil searches for occasions to harm, especially at the hour of death, 1694; man sinned at the suggestion of the devil, 800; the devil urged him to do so, 4313; he is, so to speak, the author of sin and the death of mankind, 291; man is deceived by him, 4140; sin with its seductions and idolatry, 4628. 1ac

The spirit of evil transforms into an instrument of sin those human energies intended for the service of God and man, 4337.

Through sin the devil exercises dominion over men, 1347, 1349, 1521, 1668; he has dominion over death, 291, 1511; the world is under the bondage of sin: D 6; the spirit of the world is the spirit of vanity and of malice, 4337.

Condemned statements concerning the influence (or power) of demons on the sin of man, 736, 2192, 2241–2253, 3233f.

Works falsely attributed to the devil as evil –: the formation of the body, 462f.; –: marriage, 461, 718, 802, 1012; its goodness is emphasized, 206, 321, 461–463, 794; –: the eating of meat, 464; its permissibility is emphasized, 207, 325, 795, 1350.

God permits evil, 3251; God foreknows evil, but he does not predestine it, 628, 685; foreknowledge does not cause evil necessarily to follow, 1ad 333, 627; condemned: [God, in the proper sense and by means of himself, brings forth the evil deeds of man], 1556; [God cannot prevent evil], 727; cf. C 1f (God permits evil); F 1d (God's gracious election).

Condemned interpretations of evil: [God assigned the doing of evil to the devil as an office], 1223; [the afflictions of men are always a punishment for a sin ^aeven in Mary and in the martyrs; they are a ^bpurification of the sinner], ^a1972f., ^b2470.

Cf. C 1ic (autonomy of earthly affairs); C 4fc (freedom of man); D 1b (cause of human sin).

b. THE CAUSE OF HUMAN SIN

D 1b

The will of man who sins is the cause of sin: only the one who gives in to the concupiscence that leads him into temptation sins, 1515, 1950, 1966f.

Consent is required for actual sin, 780; this is why small children cannot commit actual sin, 223, 780, 1514; condemned: [Acts of the will are not part of the nature of sin], 1946–1949, (1950–1953); [Man also sins in that which he does of necessity], 1967; ignorance can be invincible and thus excuse sin, (1485), 1969, 2865°, 2866; not all ignorance excuses, 729f.; violence excuses sin: applications, (762), 2715, 2758, 3634, 3718; fear does not eliminate the freedom and the capacity for discernment: applications, 1678, 1705, 2070, 2129, 2151, 2573, 3273; the confessor is to inquire about the circumstances of the sin, 813; circumstances that change the nature of the sin must be stated in confession, 1681, 1707, (1962); cf. L 1f (moral act).

^aDivision, ^bpride, ^cegotism and injustice, ^dthe attempt to build a social order without God as origin of social sin, ^a4310, ^bc4325, ^c4480, ^e4627, ^d4759; the imbalances suffered by the world today are linked to the more fundamental imbalance in the hearts of men, 4310.

Conditions of sin: man's freedom is limited and subject to error; this is why he can desire what has only the appearance of a good, 4752; because of his free will, man is autonomous, but in acting freely he can accomplish or destroy a good, 4752; freedom is wounded by sin, 4317; the origin of all disdain for mankind should be sought in the internal imbalance of human liberty, 4481; freedom does not mean the license to do anything, including evil, 4317; abuse of human freedom: C 4fc; contingent freedom that is obliged to the good: L 1b.

God is not the origin of sin. Condemned: [God causes evil not only in permitting it but in the proper sense of the term], 1556; God does not command the impossible, (397), 1536, 1568, (1572), 1954, 2001, 1406, 2619, (3718); cf. D 1ad (God permits evil).

The devil is not the cause of sin; he only suggests it: D 1ac (work of the evil spirit).

D 1c

c. THE NATURE OF SIN

The origin of evil: Evil is the absence of good, 3251; evil is not a substance or a nature, but ^a*punishment for the substance*, ^a286, 1333; cf. C 1fa (origin of evil).

Sin is –: turning away from God, 1525; –: rebellion against God, 4140, 4313; –: insult to God, 3891, 4128; –: free transgression of the law of God, 2291; –: choice of transgression and evil, 4753; –: infidelity to God's will and the temptation to idolatry, 4813; –: abuse of freedom, 4313; –: serving creation while disregarding the Creator, 4140, 4313; –: divisive force that hinders growth in love and communion, 4619; –: building a social order far from God, 4759.

The sinner is an enemy of God, 1528; the truth of God is turned into a lie, 4140; man pursues his goal outside of God, 4313.

Man often refuses to recognize God as his origin and thus disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself, others, and all created things, 4313.

A false conception of sin is at the basis of condemned affirmations –: about concupiscence, which is not in the proper sense sin but comes from sin and inclines to sin, 1012, 1452, 1515, 1950f., 1974–1976; –: [that God can direct hatred of God], 1049; –: [that neither the work nor the will nor the pleasure nor the concupiscence is sin, and neither should we wish to extinguish it], 739; –: about philosophical sin, 2291, (4492); only the fundamental option could be sin, 4964, 4955f.

2. Adam's Sin

D 2a

a. THE ORIGINAL SIN OF ADAM—TYPE OF HUMAN SIN

2aa Adam's sinful act. Adam sinned ^a*by the bad use of his free will* and ^b*by the transgression of God's commandment*, ^a621, ^b1511.

2ab The consequences of Adam's sin. Adam lost the noble original state of the first image, 496; he lost holiness and justice, 1511f.; he drew upon himself God's wrath, 1511; he was changed for the worse in soul and body, 371f., 385, 1511; he fell into the captivity of the devil, 1511; his free will was weakened, 383; he had to take upon himself death and punishment for sin, 222, 231, 413, 1511.

D 2b

b. MANKIND UNDER THE INHERITED BURDEN OF SIN

2ba The nature of original sin. The existence of a sin transmitted by Adam is stressed (in general), 223, 239, 341, 361, 371f., 391, 470, 491, 621f., 1073, 1512, 1865, 2538.

Nature: Original sin is one in origin, 1513; because of Adam's fall, men, when they are conceived, contract unrighteousness as their own, (239), 1523.

Although men knew God, they did not glorify him as God, but with darkened minds they served the creature rather than the Creator, 4140, 4313; seduced by evil, they have, from the beginning of history, abused their freedom, 4313; on the nature of original sin, see also D 1c (nature of sin).

Original sin is contracted without one's own consent, 780; it is proper to each one, 1513; errors concerning its voluntary character are condemned, 1948f., 2319; condemned: [From Adam, descendants contract the punishment but not the sin], 728, (1006), 1011.

A false conception about the Immaculate Conception of Mary is condemned, 3234; cf. E 6cc (preservation of Mary from original sin).

The concept of original sin has been distorted, 3891.

2bb The transmission of original sin. The transmission occurs, ^a*not through imitation*, but through propagation from Adam, 223, 231, ^a1513, 1523, 3705; original sin consequently extends to all men, including ^a*children*, ^a223, ^a231, 239, ^a1514; however, not only Christ but also Mary was free from original sin, 1973; cf. E 6cc (preservation of Mary from original sin).

2bc The effect of original sin. The state of fallen nature: Adam lost holiness, innocence, and justice for his descendants, 239, 1512, 1521, 5081; the good of nature has been corrupted, 400; cf. C 4b (man, created good by God); man was changed for the worse in soul and body, 371; diminishment of man, because he is prevented from attaining his fulfillment; 4313; he fell under the bondage of the devil (^aof sin), 1347, 1349, 1521, ^a4313, (4341), ^a4753; disfigurement of the image of God, 4322; loss of salvation, 4318; birth with an inclination to evil, 4325, 5081; death as an effect of original sin, 146, 222, 231, 371f., 1400, 1512, 1521, 2617; man would have been immune from bodily death if he had not sinned, 4318; cf. M 2ba (death of man); the tinder of sin, or concupiscence, creates an inclination to sin, 1515.

Experience of the resistance of the body, 4314.

The intelligence is obscured and weakened, 4315.

Religious knowledge has become more difficult, 2756, 2853, 3875.

Observance of the divine law has become more difficult, since free will has become weaker in its powers, (146), 339, 378, 383, 396, 622, 633, 1521.

Wounding of man's freedom, 4317.

Man was not weakened to the point where a moral life would be impossible for him: he still retained free will, understood as freedom from necessity: not only from ^aviolence or ^bconstraint, but also with respect to that necessity which was voluntary only in the original sin as its cause (Adam), 1939, 1941, 1952, ^a1966f., ^b2003, ^c2301; free will is useful not only with respect to sin, 1927–1930, 1965, 2438–2440; the value of free will is defended against the affirmations: [It was totally ^adestroyed, ^bit is an empty concept, ^cit is an invention of Satan], ^a331, ^a336, ^a339, ^b1486, ^{abc}1555, 3245f.; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good); L 1f (moral act).

The capacity of man to do good works and to lead a moral life is defended against the affirmation [Man sins in every work], 1481f., 1486, 1539, 1557, 1575, 1916, 1922, 1925, 1935–1937, (1940), 1961//1968, 2308, 2311, 2401–2407, (2408–2425), 2439, 2459, 2866.

The original relationship between man and woman was disturbed by sin, 4831; their equality in unity was lost through sin, 4831.

Consequences of original sin for human activity and progress: All of man's activities are in danger because of pride and disordered love of self, 4337; cf. D 5 (human activities and progress under the power of sin).

There is also a morally good natural love; condemned is the distinction: [There only exists a twofold love, to wit, good love resulting from grace and sinful love resulting from concupiscence], 1934, 1938, 2307, 2444–2448, (2449/2458), 2619, 2623f.

Concupiscence cannot harm a man who does not consent, 1515; condemned are affirmations about the sinfulness of concupiscence or the tinder of sin, 1012, 1453, 1515, 1950f., 1974–1976.

The future destiny of man affected by original sin: Death ^aof the body and ^bof the soul, 222, 231, ^{ab}371f., (^b1400), ^{ab}1512, 1521; privation of the ^avision of God and ^bof the kingdom of heaven (^b184, ^a219), ^b224, ^a780, ^b1347; punishment of damnation (but ^adifferent from the punishment of the one who is damned because of his own fault), ^a858, ^a1306, 2626; man becomes a "mass of perdition", 621; cf. M 3d (condemnation of man: theory of limbo).

Pardon of original sin through baptism: K 3e (effect of baptism).

Experience of division. Man experiences division and ambivalence, limitation and desire for a higher life, possible choices and the necessity to renounce, discord in society and his own sinful character, 4310; he experiences his own inclination to sin and is engulfed by manifold ills that cannot come from the good Creator, 4313; he finds that by himself he is incapable of battling the assaults of evil successfully, 4313; he does what he would not and fails to do what he would, 4310; cf. C 4kg (man's search for meaning); F 3b (justified man remains in danger). 2bd

The entire life of man, individual and collective, is presented as a struggle between good and evil. Man needs the helping grace of God for this, 4313, 4325, 4337, 5081; cf. F (God justifies and sanctifies man); esp. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace); divine grace and human works: F 3d (grace and human merit); F 5c (grace and human freedom); God's help because of -: prayer: J 1ee–ef; -: pious practices: J 1ed; -: the sacraments: K (God sanctifies through the sacraments).

3. The Sins of Man as an Individual

a. OCCASIONS OF SIN

D 3a

Man often refuses to recognize God as his origin. He thus disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself, others, and all created things, 4313.

The desire to possess: the accumulation of goods and services alone does not bring about human happiness, 4811; man is more precious for what he is than for what he has, 4335, 4760.

The occasions of sin must be avoided: laxist affirmations are condemned, 2061, 2161–2163.

It is necessary to resist temptations: a purely negative, quietist resistance is not enough, 2192, 2217, 2224, 2237, 2241–2253.

b. GRAVE SINS AND VENIAL SINS

D 3b

Difference between sins. Grave sins (capitalia/criminalia/gravia) or mortal sins (^amortalia) and light (parva/minuta/blevia) or venial (^cvenialia) sins, ^a795, ^a835, ^a838f., ^a858, ^a897, ^a913, ^a926, ^a965, ^a1002, ^a1306, ^{bc}1537, ^a1577, ^a1638, ^{ac}1680, ^b1920, ^{ac}2257, ^b3375, ^{ac}3381, ^{ab}4966f. 3ba

Grave, or mortal, sin. Condemned: [The only mortal sin is unbelief], 1544, 1577. 3bb

Effect of mortal sin: Enmity with God: 1680; loss of the grace of justification, 1705; exclusion from the kingdom of God, 835; delivery into the power of the devil, 1347, 1349, 1521, 1668; eternal damnation, hell, 780, 839, 858, 1002, 1075, 1306; cf. M 3d (causes of damnation).

In addition to eternal punishment, man also contracts temporal punishment, (1543), 1715.

Faith is not necessarily lost through mortal sin, 1544, 1578.

The souls of those who have died in a state of actual mortal sin go to hell. (338, 342), 839, 858, 926, 1002, 1075, 1306; cf. M 3d (condemnation of man).

Pardon of sins: D 7.

3bc Venial sins. Venial sin is of the kind into which even very holy men can fall, 1537, 1680; no man can avoid all venial sins during the whole of his life without a special privilege from God, 1573; man can always truthfully say that he is a sinner. 228–230; condemned: [By the interior way of quietism, one arrives at a state of soul where one no longer commits even venial sin], 2256–2258.

Venial sin does not exclude man from grace (justification), 1537, 1680; but a purification after death may be necessary, 838; cf. M 2bc (purification of man); condemned: [No sin is venial by nature; all sin merits eternal punishment], 1920; pardon of venial sins: D 7 (forgiveness of sins); K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful).

3bd Condemnation of laxist affirmations concerning ^a*joy at the evil of another*, ^b*sadness at the prosperity of another*, ^c*desire for an evil for another*, ^{abc}2113, ^c2114, ^a2115.

3be Consequences of sin. Experience of the resistance of the body, 4314; obscuring or weakening of the intelligence, 4315; wounding of freedom, 4317; bondage ^a*as effect of personal sin*, 4341, ^a4627, 4753, (4772); the power of sin and evil by which man is oppressed, 4755.

Sin diminishes man because it prevents him from attaining his fulfillment, 4313.

Damnation of the sinner because of a death ^a*without repentance* in the state of ^b*mortal sin* (^c*actual sin*), (^b338, ^a342), ^c627, ^c780, ^{ab}839, ^c1002, ^b1075, ^{bc}1306; the Church believes that the sinner deprived of the vision of God will face eternal punishment, and she calls that hell, 4657; cf. M 3d (condemnation of man).

Consequences for human activity, C 4if; D 5.

Consequences of sin in social relationships: C 4gl; D 4c.

4. Sin in Social Relationships

D 4a

a. OCCASIONS AND CAUSES

Sin as the force of division that hinders growth in love and communion, 4619.

Man often refuses to recognize God as his origin. He thus disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself, others, and all created things, 4313.

Men are often diverted from doing good and incited to evil by social conditions, 4325; customs in institutions and relationships in the world that induce to sin, 4162.

Human progress, which is a great good for man, brings temptations with it, 4337.

The internal division of the sinner gives rise to the disorders of society, 4310; the imbalances suffered by the world today are linked to the more fundamental imbalance in the hearts of men, 4310; the bondage of social sin has its source ^a*in pride, in egotism*, ^b*in the mystery of injustice*, ^a4325, ^b4480, ^b4627; errors, slavery, and oppression to which men succumb when they attempt to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, 4759.

D 4b

b. COLLECTIVE SINS

All human life, individual and collective, is presented as a struggle between good and evil, 4313, 4337.

Because the order of values is distorted and bad is mixed with the good, individuals and groups pay heed solely to their own interests and not to those of others, 4337.

The world is no longer a place of brotherhood; the growing power of mankind threatens to destroy the human race itself, 4337.

Because of the corruption of the human heart, human values are often disfigured, 4311.

Consequences of collective sins: D 4c.

The Church and sinners: She is wounded by the sins of the faithful, 4128; cf. G 3bb (holiness and sin in the Church).

The Church contributes to the conversion of sinners through love, example, and prayer, 4128; the power of the Church to pardon all sins, 349; sinners who approach the sacrament of penance are reconciled with the Church, 1674, 4128; cf. D 7bb (Church as mediatrix of forgiveness); G 3b (holiness of the Church); K 6 (sacrament of penance).

D 4c

c. SINFUL STRUCTURES OF SOCIETY

Cf. C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin).

Social structures—necessary in themselves—tend to become fixed, to obstruct social progress, and to cause injustices, 4768; structures may be marked by sin but should not be condemned in themselves, 4769; social structures depend on the responsibility of man, 4768; the disturbances that so frequently occur result in part from the natural tensions of economic, political, and social forms, 4325; at a deeper level they have their roots in man's pride and selfishness, which contaminate even the social sphere, 4325; structures men have created and on which they have left the destructive imprint of their sinfulness, 4619; when the order of things is flawed by the consequences of sin, man finds new inducements to sin, 4325; institutions and living conditions in the world that incite to sin, 4162; servitude of which other men or natural forces not sufficiently controlled are the cause, 4460.

The original relationship between man and woman was disturbed by sin, 4831; their equality in unity was lost through sin, 4831.

Where social peace does not exist, amid political, economic, and cultural inequalities, lie the rejection of the peace of the Lord and a rejection of the Lord himself, 4488.

Social consequences of sin: servitude, 4341, 4460, 4480, 4627; oppression of man, 4480, 4755; ignorance, misery, hunger, oppression, injustice, and hatred have their origin in human selfishness, 4480; errors, slavery, and oppression to which men succumb when they attempt to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, 4759; dependence and the forms of bondage that violate basic rights, 4628; violence, from which new forms of bondage arise, 4772; man's resources and potential turn against him to oppress him; 4811; poverty, which, according to the prophets, is contrary to the will of the Lord, 4494; poverty as the fruit of injustice and sin, 4494f.

Oppression, injustice between peoples and in society, absence of freedom, exploitation, hunger, misery, ignorance, hatred, tensions between peoples and in society, wars, danger of mankind's self-destruction, loss of values; on the problems of mankind today and on poverty: C 4kd; C 4ke.

Consequence for human activity and for progress: C 4if; D 5.

The Church and sin: The Church is in the world and bears its mark: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).

In her pilgrimage, the Church experiences ^a*sufferings*, ^b*temptations and trials*, ^c*persecutions from the world*, ^a4115, ^c4121, ^b4124, ^ac4147, ^c4344; there are martyrs in the Church, 4321; G 3bb (holiness of the Church).

The Church is both holy and in need of purification; she follows the path of penance and renewal, 4120, 4321, 5006; her holiness is imperfect, 4168; she encompasses sinners (^a*in her earthly pilgrimage*), 4120, ^a4190; among clerics and laity, there has been no lack of those who have been unfaithful to the Spirit of God, 4343; distance between the message proclaimed and the human failings of those to whom the gospel is entrusted, 4343; the Church must be purified of errors, 1510, 1520, 1763; she must fight against the failures among her members, 4343; cf. G 3bb (holiness and sin in the Church).

The service of evangelization is made more difficult by sin, 4619.

d. LIBERATION FROM AND OVERCOMING OF SINFUL STRUCTURES

D 4d

Overcoming of and liberation from sinful structures: To overcome sin, men are dependent on the helping grace of God, 4313, 4325, 4337; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); F 5cb (necessity of grace); the plan of creation cannot be separated from the plan of redemption; redemption extends to the concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored, 4579; the intercession of Mary makes it possible for the Church to eliminate the "structures of sin" in personal and social life, 4619; a change in structures must be accompanied by a change in personal and collective mentality and by conversion, 4633; conversion ever remains an unfinished process on both the personal and societal levels, 4614; the uniqueness of the Christian message does not consist in structural change but in the insistence on the conversion of men that will in turn bring about this change, 4481; cf. F 2b (conversion and justification by faith); Christian understanding of liberation: liberation from all the forms of bondage, from personal and social sin, 4627f.; liberation and structural change: C 4gm; L 7.

The Church denounces the errors, slavery, and oppression to which men succumb when they attempt to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, 4759; the Church upsets, through the power of the gospel, criteria of judgment, values, habits of thought, impulses and models of life that contradict God's Word and plan of salvation, 4575; cf. G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture).

5. Human Activity and Progress under the Power of Sin

D 5

Sin jeopardizes the works of man: 4814; programs and works that start from the idea of justice in practice often suffer from distortions, 4684; all of man's activities are in danger because of pride and disordered love of self, 4337; the spirit of evil transforms human activity, ordered to the service of God and man, into an instrument of sin, 4337; cf. C 4i (activity of man); esp. C 4if (human activity tainted by sin).

Progress as temptation through the distortion of the order of values because of consideration only of one's own interests by individuals and groups and because of the spirit of vanity and malice, 4337; the sciences and progress threatened by the growing power of man, 4424; fixed or rigid social structures that obstruct or distort social progress, 4768; cf. C 4ie (human progress).

D 6

6. The World and History under the Bondage of Sin

Man often refuses to recognize God as his origin. He thus disrupts his proper relationship to his own ultimate goal as well as his whole relationship toward himself, others, and all created things, 4313; although men have known God, they have not glorified him as God but have served creation rather than the Creator, 4313.

The world stands under the bondage of sin, 4302; it is disfigured by sin and passes away, 4339; it is endangered by sin, 4813.

Human history, up until the full revelation of glory, is marked by disorder because of sin, 4340; it is threatened by sin, 4813; it is pervaded by a battle against the powers of darkness from the very origins of the world and will continue until the last day, 4337.

The spirit of the world is the spirit of vanity and malice, 4337.

Cf. C 4kb (effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history).

7. Forgiveness of Sin

D 7a

a. GOD'S RECONCILING WILL

7aa The forgiveness of sin. Faith in the forgiveness of ^a*all* sins, 1, 11–22, ^a23, 26–30, 36, 50f., (62f., 71), 72, ^a540, ^a684, ^a854; how the unforgivable sin against the Holy Spirit is to be understood, 349.

In his prevenient love, God frees men from original sin and gives them a share in the divine life; cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

The faithful need God's mercy continually and must daily pray for the forgiveness of their sins, 4166; the Father's saving justice, 4615; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is merciful); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

God alone is the judge and searcher of hearts; for that reason he forbids us to make judgments about the internal guilt of anyone, 4328; he knows hearts and what is hidden, 670, 2866, 4314; cf. B 1b (knowledge of God).

The Holy Spirit is united with the Father and the Son in the forgiveness of sins, 145.

7ab Divine grace. The completely gratuitous gift of forgiveness and reconciliation, 4819; cf. F (God justifies and sanctifies man); esp. F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); F 5 (conceptual formulation of grace).

D 7b

b. GOD FORGIVES SINS THROUGH JESUS CHRIST AND THE MINISTRY OF THE CHURCH

7ba God forgives sins through Jesus Christ. In Christ, God wished to conquer sin and make it serve man's greater good, 4814; in Christ, God has reconciled everything with himself ^a*and men among themselves*, 4005, 4196, ^a4322; salvation is freedom from what oppresses man, from sin and evil, and the joy of acknowledging God and of being known by him; this salvation begins in the life of Christ, is won forever by his death and Resurrection, and must be carried on through history up to the coming of Christ, 4571; salvation in and through Jesus Christ: C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); esp. F 1c (the universal salvific will of God in Jesus Christ).

Christ has won forgiveness of sins through his suffering, 485, 1523, 1530, 1741, 3370, 3438, 3805, 4005, 4318; he won liberation on the Cross, 4628; he chose to be the victim of the world's injustice and evil, 4615; he is the High Priest who can share human weaknesses; he is the Paschal Victim who redeems from sins, 4615; human forces did not dispel original sin but the merit (the advocacy) of Christ, 341, 1514; condemned: [The Passion of Christ alone, without any other gift of God, suffices], 1014; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bc (priesthood of Jesus Christ).

Christ died for all (sinners), 4310, 4322, 4338; he came to save (free) men (^a*the poor*) from sin, 55, 144, 146, 485, 491f., 533, 1400, 4313, 4615, ^a4632; sin is conquered and redeemed by the reconciliation accomplished by Christ, 4814; Christ wanted to reconcile all men with the Father, 4488; he freed man (^a*the world*) from the bondage of the devil and sin, 4006, 4204, ^a4302, 4313, 4322; Christ has restored for the sons of Adam the image of God that was disfigured by the first sin, 4322; man has been reinstated by the Savior in the salvation that had been lost, 4318; human activities threatened by sin are purified by Christ's Cross and Resurrection, 4337; the redemption has an effect of satisfaction or expiation, 1529, 3339, 3438, 3891, 4120; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 4c (mission of Jesus Christ).

Christ was unlike man with regard to sin: E 5bb.

Justification of sinners through God's grace: F 2.

Participation of men, especially Mary, in the redemption: E 6d.

The Church as mediatrix of forgiveness ^aof all sins, 348, ^a349, ^a684, 794, 802, ^a854; the power of the Church to forgive all sins, 348f.; the gift of grace is to reach man through the Church so that sinners might be reconciled with God, 4573; she contributes to the conversion of sinners through love, example, and prayer, 4128; through God's Word and the sacraments, man is freed from the power of sin and evil and introduced into a communion of love with God, 4755; the intercession of Mary makes it possible for the Church to eliminate the "structures of sin" in personal and social life and to attain "authentic liberation", 4619. 7bb

Forgiveness of sin through the reception of baptism: K 3e (effect of baptism).

Forgiveness of sins through penance: K 6f (effect of the sacrament of penance).

Forgiveness of (venial) sins through reception of the Eucharist: K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful).

Forgiveness of sin and the erasure of the remains of sin through the anointing of the sick: K 7e.

Indulgences as remission of temporal punishment due for sins that, with respect to guilt, have already been erased, 1448; cf. K 10b (indulgences).

Cf. F 1c (universal salvific will of God mediated through the Church); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).

Forgiveness and individual or collective conversion. Cf. F 2b (conversion and justification); esp. F 2bb (nature of justification); participation of men, especially Mary, in the redemption: E 6d. 7bc

Overcoming of sinful structures. Cf. C 4g1 (disturbances in society); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures). 7bd

Justified man remains in danger. Cf. F 3b; F 5cb (necessity of grace). 7be

c. THE HISTORICAL FORM OF FORGIVENESS

D 7c

Forgiveness of sins in the Old Covenant. Original sin was remitted through circumcision, 780; K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant). 7ca

Forgiveness of sins in the New Covenant. Original sin was remitted through baptism: cf. K 3e and K 3f (effect and necessity of baptism). 7cb

Condemned is the concept that original sin is reinstated by sin committed after baptism, 3341.

Baptism as means of forgiveness of personal sins: K 3e and K 3f (effect and necessity of baptism).

Sacrament of penance as means of forgiveness for sin committed after baptism: K 6f and K 6g (effect and necessity of the sacrament of penance); perfect contrition before the reception of the sacrament of penance brings about forgiveness, but it must include the desire for the sacrament: K 6cb (contrition).

Forgiveness of (venial) sins through reception of the Eucharist: K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful).

Forgiveness of sins and the erasure of the remains of sin through the anointing of the sick: K 7e.

Displeasure alone is not enough for the pardon of bad thoughts, 1413.

The pouring out of the blood of animals works no remission of sins, 1079.

The mere remembrance of the baptism does not bring about forgiveness of grave sins or change them into venial sins, 1623.

Venial sins can be expiated by various means (outside of sacramental confession), 1680; the Eucharist is recommended as a remedy against them, 1638, 3375, (3380).

Condemned opinions about the forgiveness of sins. Condemned are the affirmations: [Forgiveness is given by virtue of the faith that the sins are forgiven], 1460–1462, 1533, 1563f., 1709; [Certain sins are only to be covered], 3235; [After the remission of the guilt and the annulment of eternal punishment, no more temporal punishment remains to be expiated], 1580; [Perfect love is not necessarily connected with the forgiveness of sins], 1918, 1932f., 1943; [In forgiveness, it is a matter only of liberation from the punishment incurred for sin or the obligation of punishment], 1956–1958. 7cc

E. GOD SAVES MEN THROUGH JESUS CHRIST

1. Faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of God and Savior

a. FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST ACCORDING TO THE CHURCH'S CREEDS

E 1a

Christ descended from heaven, 41//51, 60, 72, 125, 150.

Christ became man ^aby the Holy Spirit ^bfrom the Virgin, 6, ^{ab}10 //23, ^{ab}25–30, 36, 40, ^{ab}42, ^b44, 44//48, ^b46//51, 50, 51, ^b55, ^b60, ^{ab}61, ^{ab}62f., (^{ab}64), ^{ab}72, 125, ^b144, ^{ab}150.

Christ suffered, 6, 13f., 19, 23–30, 36, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 60, 76, 125, 150; he was crucified, 6, 10–12, 14–30, 41f., 46, 48, 50, 55, 60–64, 150; he died, 10, 13, 19, 21, 27f., 30, 55, 60–64, 72; he was buried, 6, 10–17, 21–30, 41f., 46, 48, 50, 55, 150.

Christ descended into hell, 16, 27–30, 76.

Christ rose from the dead, 6, 10–30, 40//64, 72, 76, 125, 150, 189.

Christ ascended into heaven, 6, 10–30, 40//64, 72, 76, 125, 150, 189.

Christ sits at the right hand of the Father, 6, 10–30, 41//64, 72, 76, 150.

Christ will come again at the end of the world, 6, 10–30, 40–42, 44, 46, 48, 50f., 55, 60, 61–64, 76, 125, 150.

The reign of Christ will have no end, 41f., 44, 46, 48, 60, 150.

E 1b

b. THE PROMISE OF JESUS CHRIST IN THE OLD COVENANT

Christ was announced and promised to many before the law and during the time of the law, 1522, (4203); he was promised through the prophets, 302, 4007, (4198); the salvific plan of the Old Testament was to prepare, to announce by prophecy, and to indicate through various types the coming of Christ and of the messianic kingdom, 4222; the Old Covenant was the preparation and the figure of the new and perfect covenant in Christ, 4122.

God has given the doctrine of salvation through Moses, the prophets, and other servants, 800, 4203, (4221).

The ceremonies, sacrifices, and sacraments of the Old Testament point to the coming of Christ, 1347; the sacrifice points to –: the sacrifice of the Cross, 3339; –: the eucharistic sacrifice, 1742.

Cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); G 1bb (the Church, prefigured in the Old Testament); K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant).

E 1c

c. THE DELIVERANCE OF THE GENTILES AND OF OLD TESTAMENT BELIEVERS THROUGH HOPE IN THE PROMISED ONE

After the fall of Adam, the Father did not leave men to themselves but offered helps to salvation, in view of Christ, the Redeemer, 4102, (4203); before Christ, men were saved, in part through the natural law, in part through the law of Moses, in the expectation of the coming of Christ, 341; there was no one who was powerless to observe the law, 2619; however, they needed the grace of Christ for the desire for supernatural salvation and for their justification, (1521), 1551, ^a2618, ^a2620; their justification derives from the merits of Christ, 3329; condemned: [None of the Gentile peoples from Adam to Christ were saved through the natural law, i.e., through the first grace of God], 336.

Original sin was forgiven in the Old Covenant through circumcision, 780; nevertheless, the kingdom of heaven was closed until the death of Christ, 780.

Christ fulfilled the Old Testament sacrificial system and priesthood, 1739; after the coming of Christ the legal prescriptions of the Old Testament came to an end, so that they need no longer be held as necessary for salvation, 1348.

Condemned: [That the Christian law through the succession of another law is about to have an end, just as the law of Moses has been terminated by the law of Christ], 1369.

Cf. K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant).

2. The Mysteries of the Life, Death, and the Exaltation of Jesus Christ

E 2a

a. THE CONCEPTION AND BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST

Faith of the creeds: The Son of God came down from heaven, 41//51, 60, 72, 125, 150, (4172).

The Word –: ^abecame man, ^bbecame flesh, ^cwas conceived, ^dwas born, ^d6, ^d10//23, ^c25–30, ^d36, ^b40, ^{ab}42, ^{abd}44//48, ^d50, ^{ab}51, ^b55, ^b60, ^d61, ^a62f., (^d64), ^{cd}72, ^{ab}125, ^{ab}150, (^b4005, ^b4122, ^b4172, ^b4220, ^b4224, ^a4338, ^a4550); –: (became flesh) by the Holy Spirit, 10//30, 42, 61–64, 72, 150, (291, 442, 571, 801, 3923, 4172, 4178); the Holy Spirit is not the Father of the incarnate Son, 533; –: (was born) of the Virgin (^cwithout the seed of man), 10–30, 42, ^a44, 46//51, 55, 60f., ^a62f., 64, 72, ^a144, 150, ^a189, (4172, 4178, 4322, 4520); –: (was born) of Mary: E 6b (the motherhood of Mary).

The Son of God willed to assume human nature, 3274.

More recent errors with respect to faith in the Son of God become man, 4520, 5099, 5107.

E 2b

b. THE LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST WITH MEN

2ba Communion with men. Christ dwelled among men, 44, 55, 60, 4224; he took to himself all the consequences of men's sinful condition, 4494; he shared the human condition (with its sufferings, difficulties, and death), 4632; he ate, drank, and slept, 791; he hungered, thirsted, and bore all the hardships of the body, 189, 791; he could share in human weakness, 4615; he was capable of suffering (^aagainst contrary errors), 105, 166, 189, ^a197, ^a293, 297, 442, 492, 504; because of his humanity he is characterized by the ability to die as well as the wish not to die, 564.

Christ was educated, 4177; he worked, thought, acted, loved, 4322; he led the life of a laborer, 4332; he practiced a trade, 4343; he willed to share human fellowship: the marriage feast at Cana, the visit with Zacchaeus, meals with tax collectors and sinners, 4332; he was freely subject to the laws of his land, 4332; he shared the life, the hopes, and the anxieties of his people, 4611.

That Christ is male cannot be separated from the plan of salvation, 4601.

The poverty of Christ (against the exaggeration of the Spirituals), 930, 1087–1094; Christ carried out the work of redemption in poverty and persecution, 4120; although he was rich, he became poor in order to save men, 4494.

Christ is the brother of men, 4158, 4177, 4322, 4332, 4550.

Cf. E 5b (Christ is of one being with men).

Christ's work among men. Christ works miracles and prophesies, (178), 2753, 3009, (3034), 3428, 3485; he gives himself over to the Father in perfect love and obedience, 4613; his task and mission, as he himself bears witness, is the proclamation of the good news, 4570; Incarnation, miracles, teaching, calling and sending disciples, Cross, Resurrection, and presence among his own are aimed at the proclamation of the gospel, 4570; preaching, words and works, signs and wonders, 4204; he himself fulfilled and proclaimed the gospel, 4207; he revealed his Father and himself in deeds and words, 4224; he preached the holiness of life to his disciples, 4166; he revealed his mystery to men, 4103; he showed the way of life, 801; mercy constitutes the fundamental content of the messianic message of Christ and the power of his mission, 4680; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is merciful); he extended the command of love to all enemies, 4328, (4773); he completed his work (^athe Father's work of salvation) through death, Resurrection, and Ascension as well as the sending of the Holy Spirit, ^a4204, 4224.

Christ in his preaching referred to the most common social realities and used the speech and imagery of everyday life, 4332; he followed the modes of reasoning and of exposition that were in vogue at the time, 4404; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher).

Christ and the poor: Christ healed the contrite of heart, 4005; he brought good news to the poor, 4005, 4120, 4570; he spoke to the poor, he freed them from sin, and he filled them with joy and hope, 4632; Jesus' preference for the poorest and the suffering, 4617, 5107.

Christ rejected the temptation of political power and violence, 4613.

Christ ^apreached and ^bestablished the kingdom of God on earth, ^a4105, ^b4224, ^a4571f., 5107; Jesus of Nazareth, the proclaimer and realizer of the kingdom, 4611; he founded the kingdom of heaven on earth according to the will of the Father, 4103; the kingdom of God was established by God on earth and must be further extended, 4123; the proclaimed kingdom of God shines for men in the word, works, miracles, presence, and Person of Christ, 4105; Christ proclaimed the Father's kingdom through the testimony of his life and the power of his words, 4161, 4852; cf. C 5d (kingdom of God and Christ as the goal of history); E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: the Church and the kingdom of God); M 1 (dawn of the kingdom of God in history); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

Christ preached the kingdom and salvation as the high point and center of his good news, 4571f.; salvation began during the life of Christ, was definitively accomplished by his death and Resurrection, but it must be carried on during the course of history, in order to be realized fully on the day of the final coming of Christ, 4571.

Christ chose disciples to be witnesses of his life and his teaching, 4404, 4570; in a completely free and sovereign manner Christ called only men as apostles, 4840.

Christ founded the Church: Christ gathered around him men from various social and political strata of the day. These constituted the foundation of his Church and went on the path of following Jesus, 4613; cf. G 1bc (the Church, purchased by Christ); G 2a (designations of the Church); G 2ba (Church of Jews and Gentiles); G 3da (Christ founds the Church on the apostles).

Sending out of the apostles: Christ gave the apostles the task of preaching the gospel everywhere and to everyone (^athe whole creation), ^a4006, 4141, 4147, 4148, ^a4185, 4207, 4332, (4570).

Christ gives his body and his blood under the species of bread and wine to his disciples, 1637, 1642, 1740; cf. K 5a (Last Supper of Christ).

C. SUFFERING AND DEATH OF JESUS CHRIST

E 2c

Suffering and death (faith of the creeds). Christ suffered, 6, 13f., 19, 23–30, 36, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 60, 76, 125, 150, (4005, 4006); he was crucified, 6, 10–12, 14–30, 41f., 46, 48, 50, 55, 60–64, 150; he died, 10, 13, 19, 21, 27f., 30, 55, 60–64, 72, (4006, 4106, 4112, 4204, 4224, 4310, 4322, 4332); he was buried, 6, 10–17, 21–30, 41f., 46, 48, 50, 55, 150.

Christ freely suffered, 6, 62f., 423, 442, 502, 1364; against the Docetists the true suffering is stressed, 325; the Son of God felt the pain in the flesh with his soul, 166; the wound in his side was inflicted only after his death, 901; condemned are assertions that Christ gave up all things in death, 1095–1097.

Fulfilling the mandate received from his Father, Jesus freely surrendered himself to death on the Cross, the goal of his life's journey, 4615; meaning of the Cross of Jesus, 4615, 5107.

2cb Descent into hell. Christ descended ^a*with his soul* into hell (^b*by himself, not only by his power*), 16, 27–30, 76, 369, 587, ^b738, ^a801, 852. He descended in order to free the saints (^aconfined there), ^a62f., 485; he neither freed the godless nor destroyed hell, 587, 1011, 1077.

E 2d

d. THE EXALTATION OF THE CRUCIFIED

2da Resurrection (faith of the creeds). Christ rose from the dead, 6, 10–30, 40//64, 72, 76, 125, 150, 189, (4005, 4006, 4106, 4112, 4204, 4224, 4310, 4322, 4345, 4814); the Father raised his Son from the dead, 4616; he rose by his own power (^awithout needing to be raised by his Father), ^a359, 539; he took up his soul again in the Resurrection, 325, 369, 791; the Son of God experienced the mercy and love of the Father in his Resurrection, which is more powerful than death, 4682; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is merciful).

Through his Resurrection the Word brought about in himself the resurrection of our nature, 358, (414, 485); cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

2db Ascension into heaven (faith of the creeds). 6, 10–30, 40//64, 72, 76, 125, 150, 189, (4005, 4224); he was taken up into heaven, 22.

2dc Seated at the right hand of the Father (faith of the creeds). 6, 10–30, 41//64, 72, 76, 150, (4111, 4168); he sits in glory, 44, 46, 72, (4112, 4123, 4162, 4345); he sits in human flesh, 167; the Father made him the Judge of the living and the dead, 4345; the Father exalts Christ at his right hand, fills him with the power of his Spirit, establishes him as the Head of his Body, the Church, and constitutes him Lord of the world and of history, 4616.

2dd Mission of the Holy Spirit. The exalted Lord remained with the apostles, 4227; he promised the disciples the Holy Spirit and sent him (^a*on Pentecost; ^bas advocate*), ^a4148, 4168, 4204, ^{ab}4227; for the fulfillment of their mission, Christ sent the apostles the Holy Spirit on Pentecost, (4143), 4145, 4148; he sent the Holy Spirit to all, to move them to love God with their whole heart and to love each other, 4166; he filled the Church with his Spirit, 4112, 4116, 4124, (4165f.), 4332; the Holy Spirit is sent from the Father and from the Son, 60, 145, 527, 681, 3325, 3327f., (4132, 4145, 4168), 4522, (4780); his mission is twofold: outwardly in the Church, hidden in the souls of the just, 3327; he is sent for the constant sanctification of the Church, 4104; the feast of his coming is Pentecost, 3325; cf. B 1g (sending of the Holy Spirit).

The Lord promised the Church the grace of God, 4124.

E 2e

e. THE WORK OF THE EXALTED LORD THROUGH THE SPIRIT

2ea The work of the Exalted One in the Church. Christ founded the Church, works in her, and preserves her: G 1bc (the Church, purchased by Christ); G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity through time); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); he is the Lord of the Church: E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); Christ is the Head of the Church, his Mystical Body; she is his Bride, fullness, or flock: G 2a (designations of the Church).

Christ as the ground of the Church's: -- oneness: G 3aa; -- holiness: G 3ba; -- catholicity: G 3ca; -- apostolicity: G 3da; Christ and the continuity and growth of the Church: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).

Presence of Christ in the Church: Christ is present in the Church and is at work in her, 3806, 4007, 4136, 4321, 4151, 4035, ^a4611, 4632; Christ is forever with his Church, especially in liturgical actions: in the sacrifice of the Mass, in the sacraments, through the reading of Sacred Scripture, through the prayer and song of the Church, 4007, (4036); Christ proclaims the gospel in the liturgy, 4033; cf. E 3b (prophetic ministry, priesthood, kingship of Jesus Christ); G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity through time).

The Church carries on the work of Christ, 4303, 4445; cf. G 2bd (mission and task of the Church).

The sacrifice of Christ continued after his death, 4153; Christ instituted the eucharistic sacrifice of his Body and Blood with the Last Supper in order to perpetuate the sacrifice of the Cross until he should come again, 4047; his work of salvation is accomplished in the sacrifice and sacraments, 4006, 4103; sacramental renewal of the sacrifice of Christ ^a*in the Eucharist*, 1740, 3339, ^a4722; re-presentation of the sacrifice of Christ in the celebration of the Mass by the Church, 4153, 4573, (4852); the eucharistic sacrifice is the unbloody re-presentation of the bloody sacrifice of the Cross and its memorial, 1740f., 1743, 3339, 3847f., 4006; Christ is present in the sacrifice of the Mass in the person of the minister and under the eucharistic species, 4007; cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); J 1c (effect of the liturgy); K 5bd (presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper).

Christ works through the sacraments: all sacraments are acts of the glorification of God in Christ and in the Church, 4715; cf. K 1b (Church as sacrament of salvation); esp. K 1bb (sacraments of the New Covenant are founded in the Christ-event); K 2b (minister of the sacraments); K 2d (effect of the sacraments); K 3e (effect of baptism); K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism); K 5a (Christ's Supper); K 5b (the ecclesial Lord's Supper); esp. K 5bb (actualization and accomplishment of the sacrifice of Jesus in the Lord's Supper) and K 5bd (efficacious presence of the Lord in the Lord's Supper); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops in offering the Lord's Supper); K 5ea (Eucharist as worship of God); K 5eb (effect of the Eucharist on the Church); K 6a (sacramentality of penance and its origin); K 7a (sacramentality of the anointing of the sick and its origin); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 8c (essential elements of the sacrament of orders); K 9a (sacramentality of matrimony and its origin); K 9ba (nature of matrimony, Christian matrimony); K 10a (sacramentals in general).

The presence and work of Christ in the bishops: In the bishops Christ is present in the midst of believers, 4145, 4163; the bishop or priest represents Christ in the exercise of his ministry, 4599; he is, then, the image and symbol of Christ himself, 4602; Christ governs the Church through the pope and the bishops, 4119, 4137, 4145; he preaches, especially through the bishops, the Word of God to all nations, administers the sacraments, incorporates new members into his body, and guides the pilgrim Church, 4145; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Jesus Christ and the apostles); H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops); H 2b (pastoral ministry of the pope); H 2c (pastoral ministry of bishops); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 3ca (bishops as organs of official doctrinal decisions); H 4 (ministry of sanctification of the bishops); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 5cb (competence of the ordained priests and bishops in the offering of the Lord's Supper).

The laity receive their power through the gift of the Creator and the grace of the Savior, 4159; the activity of the laity is elevated from within by the grace of Christ, 4162.

The work of the Exalted One in the faithful. Permanent presence of Christ in the midst of his own, 4570; Christ is present in the preaching to the poor, 4632; he is continuously present in all the brothers, above all in the least, 4852; the Christian man is conformed to the likeness of the Son, 4322; linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, he goes forward to the resurrection with hope, 4322; Christ should—as in the Virgin—be born and increase in the hearts of the faithful, 4178; he vivifies the laity in his Spirit and urges them on to every good and perfect work, 4160; he commissions the laity to the apostolate through baptism and confirmation, 4159; cf. C 4fk (the Christian man); E 3b (prophetic ministry, priesthood, kingship of Christ); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 4bc–4be, and G 6b (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly, kingly, and prophetic office of Christ); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 4b and G 6c (mission and task of the faithful/laity). 2eb

The presence and work of Christ in the bishops and priests of the Church: E 2ea.

The work of the Exalted One in the world. Jesus Christ is alive, present, and at work in history, 4611; beneath all changes lies what does not change and that has its ultimate foundation in Christ, 4310; cf. B 2b und C 1c (the Son of God as mediator of creation). 2ec

Christ, having been lifted up, is continually active in the world that he might lead men to the Church and through her join them to himself and that he might make them partakers of his glorious life, 4168; lifted up from the earth, Christ draws all men to himself, 4224; cf. C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); M 1a (kingdom of God has dawned in Christ).

Christ is now at work in the hearts of men through the energy of his Spirit, arousing a desire for the age to come and animating, purifying, and strengthening the efforts to make the world more human, 4338; Christ, through his Spirit, offers man the light and the strength to measure up to his supreme destiny, 4310; no one makes good use of his free will without Christ, 242; cf. C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation).

Christ, the perfect man: C 4fh; Christ, the salvation of man: C 4fi; Christ and the suffering and death of man: C 4ef; Christ and the sin of men: D 7ba (God forgives sins through Jesus Christ); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Christ and –: the human community: C 4gn; –: fraternity/solidarity among people: C 4gb; –: peace and justice among men: C 4gc; –: liberation and structural change in society: C 4gm; –: human activity: C 4ig; C 4ih.

Cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3b (prophetic ministry, priesthood, kingship of Christ).

f. THE RETURN OF THE LORD

E 2f

The return of Christ. The ^aglorious return of Christ ^bin his flesh, ^a6, 10–30, ^a40–42, ^a44, ^{ab}46, ^{ab}48, 50f., 55, ^a60, 61–64, 76, 125, ^a150, ^b167, 325, 414, 443, 485, 492, 681, ^b791, 801, 852, (4047), 4123, ^{ab}4168, (4530), 4571; he will come in order to be glorified in his saints and in all believers, 4168; the mystery of Christ will in the end be manifested in full light, 4121; full realization of salvation in the return of Christ, 4571; cf. M 2aa (return of Christ). 2fa

Christ, ^athe restorer of the dead to life, raises the dead, 72, ^a369, 485; cf. M 3a (resurrection of the dead).

The judgment of Christ, 10–30, 40//51, 55, 60–64, 76, 125, 150, 325, 414, 443, 485, 492, 540, 574, 681, 791, 801, 852, 859, 1549. 2fb

The Day of Judgment is unknown to angels and men, even ^ato the apostle Paul, 474f., ^a3629; Christ knows this day only by virtue of his divinity, 474–476.

Cf. M 2ab (judgment); M 2bb (particular judgment).

Perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God. Christ will ^abring to perfection the kingdom at the end of time and ^bhand it over to the Father, ^a4123, ^b4339; all will be made subject to him until he himself and all of creation are subjected to the Father, 4162; the reign of Christ will have no end, 41f., 44, 46, 48, 60, 150. 2fc

Men and the world will be perfectly reestablished at the end of time in Christ, 4168; Christ will conform our body to the body of his glory, 4168; he gives men a share in his immortality, 413; he lets believers participate in his kingdom, 540, 4162, (4339); he will be glorified in his saints and in all who have believed, 4168.

Cf. M 1a (kingdom of God has dawned in Christ); M 3bc (transfiguration of the body); M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

3. Jesus Christ, the Savior

E 3a

a. JESUS CHRIST, THE MEDIATOR OF SALVATION

Creeds: Jesus Christ, the Savior, 1, 3f.; ^afor the sake of our salvation, ^bin order to redeem, ^a40, ^a42, ^a44, ^a46, ^a48, ^a51, (55), ^b72, ^a76.

God's plan constituted Christ as the source of salvation for the world, 4141, 4891f.; God the Father willed from the beginning to share his glory with men in Christ, 4814; cf. C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); F 1 (God's universal salvific will); esp. F 1c (God's universal salvific will in Jesus Christ).

The name of absolute mediator belongs to Christ uniquely and alone, 1821, 3320; he is the one mediator between God and men, 4048, 4118, 4136, 4153, 4169, 4176, 4177; he is the unique source (of justification) and mediator of all graces, 1526, 3370, (3820); he is the mediator and the fullness of all revelation, 4202.

Christ is the mediator of creation: B 2b; C 1c. Christ is —: the Savior of all, 4176, 4332, 4580; —: the Sanctifier, 4580; —: author and consummator of holiness of life, 4166; —: focal point and the goal of the whole of human history, 4310, 4345; the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, beginning and end, 4345; cf. C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); —: the firstborn of many brothers, 4177, 4322; —: the perfect man: C 4fh; E 5b; —: the self-revelation of God: A 1c (stages of revelation); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher).

The Son of God took upon him human nature for the ennobling of man and consummated a mystical union with all mankind, 3274; by his Incarnation he united himself with every man, 4322; the worth and meaning of men in the eyes of the Creator becomes clear in the redemption and in the surrender of his Son, 4641.

The Son of God came for the sake of the salvation of ^aall men, (^bto save the human race, ^cnot to judge), 40//63, ^b64, ^b72, 76, 125, 150, 272, 301, ^b442, 500, 681, ^b801, ^a901, ^b1337, 2529, 4172, ^{bc}4303, ^b4310, ^b4345, ^{bc}4445, ^b4494; he was sent so that all might become children of God, 1522; he came —: for the salvation (liberation) of men (^athe poor) from sins, 55, 144, 146, 485, 491f., 533, 1400, 4313, 4615, ^a4632; —: to expiate the sins of the people, 4120; —: in order to free all men from every form of slavery, 4480; assertions that deny the redemption as the purpose of the Incarnation are condemned, 723, 1880; cf. D 7b (forgiveness of sins through Jesus Christ); E 4c (mission of Jesus Christ); F 1c (God's universal salvific will in Jesus Christ).

The gift of Christ's redemption applies to the entire human race, even to Mary, 3903; it is for the benefit of all, 624; after the Incarnation of Christ every man is his brother and is called to become a Christian in order to receive salvation from him, 4550; Christ suffered for all, (^awith respect to his goodness), 332, ^a340, 624, 630, 1522f., 2005, 2304f.; he died for all (sinners) ^aand was raised, ^a4310, 4322, 4332, 4338; he offers his body as a sacrifice for all: E 3bc (priesthood of Jesus Christ); it does not follow from this that all (^aChristians) will be saved, 623f., 630, ^a1362; if not all are saved, this is not to be ascribed to the limitedness of the ransom offered by Christ, but rather to the deficiency of men, 624; condemned: [All men damned before Christ were freed from hell], 587, 630, (1011, 1077); cf. F 1 (God's universal salvific will); esp. F 1c (universal salvific will of God in Jesus Christ).

The deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers through hope in the Promised One: E 1c.

Christ is the source of salvation, 3915, 4124, 4141; he granted the fullest salvation possible, 149; man will be restored by the Savior in the salvation he lost through his own fault, 4318; after Adam's fall the Father offered men helps to salvation in view of Christ, 4102; Christ fulfilled the Father's work of salvation, 4204, 5073; all man's glorying is in Christ, 1691; cf. F 2bc (causes of justification).

Salvation is liberation from what oppresses men, from sin and the Evil One, and the joy of knowing God and of being known by him; this salvation is begun during the life of Christ, definitively accomplished by his death and Resurrection, and must be carried on in history, in order to be realized fully at the final coming of Christ, 4571; cf. C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); C 4fi (Christ, the salvation of man); C 4jc (vocation of all men to salvation); F 1b (universal salvific will of God).

Salvation was accomplished by a kind of "recapitulation", 3915; hence, the parallel: first (old) Adam—second (new) Adam, 901, 1524, 3328, 3915, 4322; earthly man, heavenly man, 413.

The power of redemption is primarily attributed to the suffering and death of Christ, 485, 904, 1523, 1529f., 1741, 3370, 3438, 3805, 3957, 4005, 4006, 4318, 4322, 4628.

The paschal mysterium as source of salvation: Christ has achieved the work of redemption through the Easter mystery (paschal mysterium) of his suffering, 4005; Christ, the High Priest, is the Paschal Victim who redeems us from sins, 4615; all human activity must be purified and perfected by the power of Christ's Cross and Resurrection, 4337; cf. C 4ig (human activity brought to perfection in the paschal mystery); the Holy Spirit offers to all the possibility of being associated with the paschal mystery, 4322; by baptism men are plunged into the paschal mystery of Christ, 4006; linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, the faithful hasten forward to resurrection with hope, 4322.

By his obedience (even to death) Christ brought about redemption ^aand opened the way of the liberty of the children of God to all men, 4103, ^a4163; the obedient Son, in the face of his Father's saving justice, incarnates the cry of all men for liberation and redemption, 4615; in him perfect reconciliation comes forth and the fullness of divine service is accomplished, 4005; in Christ God has reconciled all (^a*men with one another and*) with himself, 4196, ^a4322; Christ brought fraternity in reconciling all men with the Father, 4488; Christ as the inexhaustible source of mercy, 4682; men are sons in the Son, 4322; Christ has merited life for men, 4322; in Christ human nature is raised up to an eminent dignity, 4322; to the sons of Adam he restored the divine likeness that had been disfigured from the first sin onward, 4322; in him sin was conquered and made to serve man's greatest good, 4814; he came for the redemption (liberation) of men (^a*the poor*) from sins, ^b*insofar as he renewed men inwardly and cast out the prince of this world*, 55, 144, 146, 485, 491f., 533, 1400, ^b4313, 4615, ^a4632; in Christ God has delivered men (^a*the world*) from bondage to the devil and sins, 4204, ^a4302, 4322; Christ, through ^a*death* and Resurrection, frees ^b*from the power of Satan* and from death ^b*and brings into the Father's kingdom*, 485, ^{ab}4006, ^a4318, ^a4322; he has conquered the power of death, 72, 3901; in Christ God has freed men from death and raised them to eternal life, 4204; Christ has given men a share in his immortality, 413; he has won liberation on the Cross, 4628; he is the bearer of the freedom and joy of God's kingdom, 4615; the Son of God came in order to liberate all men from all forms of slavery, 4480; redemption touches the very concrete situations of injustice to be combated and of justice to be restored, 4579; Christ, the Savior, who will enlighten the poor about their dignity, help them in their efforts to liberate themselves from all their wants, and lead them to communion with the Father and their fellowmen through evangelical poverty, 4632; cf. C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures); Christ will conform our body to the body of his glory, 4168; the Resurrection of Christ is the sign and pledge of the resurrection to which all men are called and of the ultimate transformation of the universe. Through him and in him the Father chose to re-create what he had already created, 4616; in the mystery of the redemption, man becomes newly "expressed" and, in a way, is newly created, 4640; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); M 3 (life of the world to come); through his Spirit, Christ offers man the strength to measure up to his supreme destiny, 4310; cf. C 4jl (Christ and the human vocation).

The communitarian character is developed and consummated in the work of Christ, 4332; Christ has sanctified human ties, especially family ones, 4332; Christ is the source ^a*of unity* and peace, ^a4124, 4198; in Christ human solidarity takes effect, 4488; Christ brings the peace that the world cannot give, 4488; he brings fraternity, 4488; cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, love among people); C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gn (Christ and the human community).

Christ is the meritorious cause (causa meritoria) of the justification of men, 1529, (1534), 5073; the followers of Christ are justified in Jesus, 4166; Christ obtains all graces through his own merit, 3370; no one becomes just unless a share in the merit of Christ is given to him, 1523, 1530, 1560; the exalted status of the Church's children is to be attributed, not to their own merits, but to the special grace of Christ, 4137; the Catholic doctrine of justification is in no way derogatory to the merits of Christ, 1583; condemned is the assertion that there is no special merit that springs from Christ's dignity, 1919; Christ's merit was applied also to men before Christ, 3329; cf. F 2 (justification of sinners through God's grace).

Christ's work of redemption is an ^a*overflowing*, immeasurable treasure, ^a1025, 1027, (1406), 3805; Christ merits are unlimited, 1027; there is no doubt about their effectiveness, 1534.

The merits of Christ for himself: Only Christ's humanity can experience an increase in glory, 318.

Redemption has a satisfactory or expiatory effect, 1529, 3339, 3438, 3891, (4120).

Infinite dignity comes to Christ by virtue of his work as the Savior, 3909.

Participation of men, especially Mary, in redemption: E 6d.

b. FORMS OF MEDIATION

E 3b

The three offices of Jesus Christ. God sent his Son that he might be Teacher, King, and Priest of all, 4132; Christ's tasks of Teacher, Shepherd, and Priest, 4145; the priestly, prophetic, and kingly office of Christ, 4157; participation of believers in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly office of Christ ^a*by virtue of baptism*, 4157, (4158), ^a4720, 4852, ^a4858; the bishops assume Christ's tasks of Teacher, Shepherd, and Priest and act in his person, 4145; cf. G 4a (belonging to the Church); G 4bc–4be (participation of the faithful in the three offices of Christ); G 6a (general principles regarding the laity); G 6b (participation of the laity in the three offices of Christ); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Jesus Christ and the apostles).

The person of Christ may not be ideologized by turning him into a politician, a leader, a revolutionary, or a simple prophet, 4612; condemned is the equation of Christ and his power with Moses and Muhammad, 1365; Christ does not allow himself to be reduced to the realm of the purely private or of the individual conscience, 4610, 4612.

- 3bb The prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ as teacher. Christ is the great prophet, 4161, 4852; God sent the Son in order to proclaim the gospel to the poor and to heal the brokenhearted, 4005; Christ preached the gospel, the kingdom, salvation, mercy, love: E 2bb (Christ's work among men); mission of Christ: E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ). Christ is the divine Teacher and the Model of all perfection, 4166; he speaks of the words of God and shares with men the innermost being of God, 4204; in deed and word he has revealed his Father and himself, 4224; he has the word of everlasting life, 4224; he entered the world to give witness to the truth, 4445; he enlightens all men, 4204; he is in his teaching and example the supreme and immutable Law of life, 4580; he is the embodiment of the evangelical counsels, 4836; he instructed men in the command of love, 4338; he commanded us to love our enemies, 4328, 4773; believers should love as Christ, 4123, 4166, 4613f.; in his Resurrection Christ has revealed the God of merciful love, 4681; the Word of God reveals and teaches that the new command of love is the basic law of human perfection and hence of the world's transformation, 4338; the virtue of love: L 2e; L 3a (self-love as fundamental obligation); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 5e (principle of solidarity); cf. A 1c (stages of revelation).
- The mystery of the Trinity is revealed in salvation history and most of all in Christ, 4522; in Christ -: God's self-revelation shines out, 4202; -: God's revelation is fulfilled, 4207; -: the mystery of man takes on light, 4322; -: the truths about man find their root and attain their crown, 4322; -: men find the fullness of religious life, 4196; -: the riddles of sorrow and death grow meaningful, 4322; Christ, in the revelation of the Father and his love, reveals man to man himself and makes his calling clear, 4322, 4332; God's self-revelation in Christ discloses God's deepest truth and the salvific destiny of man, 4202; through the revelation in his Son God gives an answer to the question of the meaning of human life, activity, and death, 4341; cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event); A 1c (stages of revelation); C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man).
- Christ reveals man to himself, 4640; this is the human reason for and characteristic of the redemption, 4640; in the redemption man finds again the greatness, dignity, and value of his humanity, 4640; the man who wishes to understand himself thoroughly must with his unrest, uncertainty, and even his weakness and sinfulness, with his life and death, draw near to Christ, 4641; he must appropriate for himself the whole of the reality of the Incarnation and redemption in order to find himself again, 4641; this deep amazement at the worth and dignity of man is called the gospel and Christianity, 4642; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man).
- Christ shows the way of life, 801; he is the way to salvation, 4136, 4197; through his suffering he has given an example and blazed the trail that men must follow if their life and death are to be made holy and take on new meaning, 4322; Christ's path is not the path of self-assertion, hatred, or violence but of disinterested self-giving. He calls for a radical discipleship that embraces the whole man, all men, the whole cosmos, 4613f.; he taught men by example that they must shoulder the cross that the world and the flesh inflict upon those who search after peace and justice, 4338; whoever follows after Christ, the perfect man, becomes himself more of a man, 4341; cf. C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); L 2e (the virtue of love); L 2f (union with God: gift of self); L 4a (love of neighbor).
- The chief way for the Church is Jesus Christ, 4643; the whole man is the way of the Church traced out by Christ. This way leads through the mystery of the Incarnation and redemption, 4644; he is the way to the Father and the way to each man, 4643; the way of Christ to man, 4643; cf. G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
- Christ is the light of the nations, 4101; he is the way, the truth, and the life, 4197.
- Christ always had a messianic consciousness, (3432), 3435; he worked miracles and prophecies in order to prove that he is the Messiah, (178), 2753, (3006), 3009, (3034), 3428, 3485.
- Christ teaches through the Church, 3806; he preaches the Word of God to all nations especially through the ministry of the bishops, 4145; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 4bc and 6ba (participation of the faithful/laity in the prophetic office of Jesus Christ); H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching); esp. H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).
- 3bc The priesthood of Jesus Christ. Christ is the highest and eternal priest (^ahigh priest), 4106, ^a4125, 4153, 4160, ^a4615; he is anointed ^awith the Holy Spirit, ^a4005, 4106; he brought the sacrifice and priesthood of the Old Testament to fulfillment, 1739; cf. E 1c (deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers).
- Christ grants ^aministers and the people a share in his priestly office, ^a4160; the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial priesthood both participate in the one priesthood of Christ, 4126.
- The liturgy is an exercise of the priestly office of Jesus Christ, 4007; Christ is priest and sacrificial offering in the Church, 802; he is present in the sacrifice of the Mass in the person of the minister and under the eucharistic species, 4007; cf. K 5b (the ecclesial Lord's Supper).
- The death on the Cross was a sacrifice, 1083, 1740f., 1743, 1753f., (3316), 3339, 3847f.; Christ, the high priest, is the Paschal Victim who redeems from sins, 4615; the only sacrifice of the New Testament is the sacrifice of Christ, 4153; he has offered himself as a sacrificial offering, (1983), 1740, 3678, 3847; as an innocent lamb, he freely shed his blood, 4322; he offered himself once and for all time to the Father as a spotless victim, 4153; he has established a New Covenant ^ain his blood, 4122, ^a4223; he has offered his sacrifice, not for himself, but for men, 261; these have been redeemed by the blood of Christ and gathered together into one Church, 4170; Christ purchased the Church with his blood, 540, 575, 4124; he delivered himself up for her in order to sanctify her, 4165; the sorrow of creation is assumed by the Crucified One, who offers his life as a sacrifice for all, 4615.
- The sacrifice of Christ remains valid after his death, even if it ^awas accomplished once and for all on the Cross, and is sacramentally renewed (^bin the Eucharist), 1740, ^a3339, ^b4722; it was continued after his death, 4153; re-presentation of the sacrifice of Christ in the celebration of the Mass by means of the Church, 4153, 4573; the eucharistic sacrifice is the unbloody re-presentation of the bloody sacrifice of the Cross and its remembrance, 1740f., 1743, 3339, 3847f., 4006; Christ offered himself on the Cross and continues to be offered in the celebration of the Eucharist for the glory of God and the salvation of humanity, 4852; in the eucharistic sacrifice the sacrifice of the Cross is perpetuated until Christ comes again, 4047; Christ makes men partakers of his life by nourishing them with his Body and Blood, 4168; cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); J 1c (effect of the liturgy); K 5bb (actualization and accomplishment of the sacrifice of Jesus in the Lord's Supper).

Christ baptizes, sanctifies, and offers sacrifice through the Church, 3806, 4007; through the service of the bishops, he administers the sacraments of the faith to those who believe, 4145; cf. G 4bd; G 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly office of Jesus Christ); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops in offering the Lord's Supper); K 8a (the priesthood of the New Covenant).

The kingship of Jesus Christ. The faith of the creeds in Christ, the King, and in his kingdom, 3f.; cf. M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ). 3bd (^aOnly) Christ is (^ain the full and strict meaning of the term) king, ^a3916, 4133, 4853; he is king also as man, 3250–3252, 3675; the basis for his kingly dignity is the hypostatic union and his merit as Savior, 3250–3252, 3676, 3913–3915.

Meaning and nature of his kingly power, 3677; Christ is given all power in heaven and on earth, 4148, 4338; his kingly power extends over all humanity, 791, 3350f., 3678f.; Christ is the king for whom to serve means to reign, 4162; he entered the world to save, not to judge, to serve, not to be served, 4303, 4445.

The kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of truth, of life, of holiness, of grace, of justice, of love, and of peace, where creation itself will be delivered into the freedom of the glory of the sons of God, 4162, (4339, 4481); Christ allows believers to share in his kingdom, 540, 4162, (4339); cf. C 5d (kingdom of God and Christ as the goal of history); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God by means of Christ); G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and kingdom of God); M 1 (dawn of the kingdom of God in history); M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

Christ, the Prince of Peace, 4488; Christ as the source ^aof unity and peace, ^a4124, 4198; he gives the peace that the world cannot give, 4488; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace).

Christ is not only the Redeemer but the lawgiver, 1571.

Christ is named in the creeds the ^aone Lord, 2f., ^a4, 5, 11//30, 36, ^a40//51, 60, 62f. ^a71, 76, ^a125, ^a150.

Christ is –: appointed Lord by his Resurrection, 4338; –: Lord of all things (^aof all), 3913, ^a4158; –: Lord and king of the whole world, 4853; –: Lord of human history and ^aof salvation history, ^a4341, 4610, 4612; –: Lord of ages, 4186; –: the head of all, 4141; the Father constituted Christ as Lord of the world and of history, 4616; cf. C 5b (Christ and the goal of history); Christ rules the things in heaven and the things on earth, 4114; his lordship will have no end, 41f., 44, 46, 48, 60, 150; he is the source of inspiration for authentic social change, 4610.

Christ is –: Lord and master of the Church, 4310, (4530); –: the head of the Church, ^ato whom she is subject, 4114, ^a4117, 4123, 4132, 4133, 4170, 4616; the Church clings to him, 4152; cf. G 1be (the Church remains the work of the Holy Trinity); G 2a (designations of the Church).

Christ rules through the Church, 3806; he rules the Church through the pope and the bishops, 4119, 4137, 4145; cf. G 4be and G 6bc (participation of the faithful/laity in the kingly office of Jesus Christ); H 2 (pastoral ministry of bishops); esp. H 2a and H 2c (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).

4. The Mission of Jesus Christ: The Work of the Trinitarian God

a. WORK OF THE HOLY TRINITY

E 4a

The entire divine Trinity as a whole brought about the Incarnation, 491, 535, 571, 801, 3327.

Cf. B 4ca (the unity of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and salvation history).

b. WORK OF THE FATHER

E 4b

The mission of Jesus Christ from the Father, 101, 145, 527, 538, 1522, 3806, 4005, 4103, 4120, 4132, 4141, 4153, 4172, 4204, 4480, 4522; cf. B 1g (God sends his Son).

The plan of creation cannot be dissociated from the plan of redemption, 4579; God the Father decided from the beginning to make man a sharer of his glory in Christ, 4814; the plan of God begins in Christ and culminates in him, 4814; God's plan constituted Christ as the source of salvation for the world, 4141; cf. F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); esp. F 1c (universal salvific will of God in Jesus Christ).

Cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event: the intention of God); A 1c (stages of revelation); B 4cb (the properties of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and in salvation history); C 1ga (God as Lord of the universe and of history).

E 4c

c. WORK OF THE SON

The Son of God willed to take human nature upon himself, 3274; he suffered willingly, (^anot compelled by fate), 6, 62f., 423, 442, 502, ^a1364; fulfilling the mandate received from his Father, Jesus freely surrendered himself to death on the Cross, the goal of his life's journey, 4615.

The Son of God took upon him human nature for the ennobling of man and consummated thus a mystical union with all mankind, 3274.

The plan of the love of Christ is to renew everything in heaven and on earth, 4345.

The Son of God came for the sake of the salvation ^aof all men, (^bin order to save the human race, ^cnot in order to judge), 40//63, ^b64, ^b72, 76, 125, 150, 272, 301, ^b442, 500, 681, ^b801, ^a901, ^b1337, 2529, 4172, ^{bc}4303, ^b4310, ^b4345, ^{bc}4445, ^b4494; he was sent so that all might become children of God, 1522; he came for the salvation (liberation) of men (^athe poor) from sin, 55, 144, 146, 485, 491f., 533, 1400, 4313, 4615, ^a4632; he came in order to liberate all men from all forms of slavery, 4480; he came to expiate the sins of people, 4120; he has died and ^abeen raised for all (sinners), ^a4310, 4322, 4332, 4338; Christ follows out the plan of grace toward sinners wisely and patiently, 4186; condemned is the assertion that denies redemption as a purpose, 723, 1880; cf. E 3a (Christ, the mediator of salvation).

The fact that the Incarnation of the Word took place according to the male sex cannot be dissociated from the economy of salvation, 4601.

The work of Christ: E 2 (mysteries of the life, death, and exaltation of Christ); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior).

Cf. B 4cb (the properties of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and in salvation history).

E 4d

d. WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

The Incarnation is attributed to the Holy Spirit, 10//30, 42, 61–64, 72, 150, 291, 442, 485, 571, 801, 3923, (4172, 4178); the Holy Spirit endowed the Virgin with fertility, 292, 533; he formed the body of Christ in the womb of the Virgin, 3924.

The Holy Spirit offers all the possibility of being associated with the paschal mystery, 4322.

The work of the Holy Spirit in the birth, life, death, and Resurrection of Christ and the work of the Exalted One through the Spirit: E 2; esp. E 2a (conception and birth of Jesus Christ).

Cf. B 3bd (the work of the Holy Spirit in salvation history); B 4cb (the properties of the operation of the Divine Persons in creation and in salvation history).

5. The Conceptual Formulation of the Mystery of Jesus Christ

E 5a

a. JESUS CHRIST IS OF ONE BEING WITH THE FATHER

The faith of the creeds in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, 2–5, 10–30, 36, 41//51, 60–64, 71, 76, 125, 150: further places in B 2a (faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of the Father).

Jesus Christ is true (verus) God, 29, 41//51, 72, 74, 105, 125, 142, 150, 189, 209, 252f., 256, 272, 293f., 301, 317f., 325, 402, 427, 431, 442, 547, 554, 619, 681, 852, 2529; Christ is not designated as God merely jointly. 259; condemned are the assertions that reject his divinity: [The Word has become like the heavenly orders], 406; [The Son of God did not exist before his birth from Mary], 157, 453; Christ is wrongly equated with Plato, Manichaeus, Epicurus, and Marcion, 435.

Jesus Christ is perfect (perfectus) God, 72, 76, 272, 301, 402, 442, 491, 496, 500, 534, 545, 554, 561, 564, 681, 852, 2529; complete (plenus) God, 564; whole (totus) God, 355, 413, 442; the incarnate love of God, 5102; condemned: [Christ had a smaller share in the divinity], 149.

Jesus Christ is named ^aWord, ^bPower, ^cWisdom, ^{abc}113, ^a178, ^a250.

Jesus Christ (as the Son of God) is of the same kind or nature as the Father, etc.: B 2c (conceptual formulation of the divinity of the Son); B 4bb (equality of the Persons with each other); rejected is the contrary assertion, 1880.

Jesus Christ was not capable of suffering (of being wounded) in his divinity (^aagainst the Theopaschites), 166, ^a196f., 293f., 297, ^a300, 318, ^a358f., ^a367, 442, 492, 504, 635f., 681, 801, 852, ^a2529; his self-emptying was not a lack of power, 293.

The divinity of Christ can be proven from the miracles, 3428; Christ did not perform miracles by a power that was not his own, 260.

As God, Jesus Christ was not predestined, 536.

Cf. B 2 (Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God); B 4b (the trinitarian concept).

b. JESUS CHRIST IS OF ONE BEING WITH MEN

E 5d

Sameness in all the characteristics of human nature. Jesus Christ is true man, 72, 74, 189, 293f., 301, 325, (401), 402, 414, 442, 454, 533, 5ba 547, 554, 619, 681, 852, 1337, 2529; he was named “Son of Man”, 189, 250, 317, 368, 420, 442, 491, 535, 619, 791; the reality of the body was taken on from the body of the mother, Mary, 292; born of the Virgin Mary, he has truly been made one of us, 4322; Jesus Christ is from the substance of the mother, 76; as man he was sent to men, 4204; he is taken from among men, 4125; he possesses a human nature in common with men, 4550.

The nature assumed was no heavenly substance, 300; condemned are the errors of the Docetists: [The Son of God took nothing from Mary, but passed through her with a heavenly body], 1341; [The Son assumed only an apparent body], 46, 48, 189, 357, 359, 401, 1340; against such errors it is stressed: Christ was truly born, he truly suffered, etc., 1338.

Jesus Christ is perfect man, 44, 46, 48, 72, 76, 144, 146, 272, 293, 301, 357, 402, 442, 485, 491, 500, 534, 554, 561, 564, 852, 2529, 3923, 4322, 4338, 4341, 4345; cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); a complete man, 564; a whole man, 148, 355, 413; an undiminished man, 505, 3923; he has assumed the complete Adam, 147f.; in him human nature was assumed, it was not annulled, 4322; condemned are the contrary assertions: [The Son of God has assumed only an incomplete human nature], 74, 146, 149; [The body of Christ has no (sensible) soul; it was replaced by the divinity], 148, 159, 195, 359, 534, 1342f.; [Christ, insofar as he is man, is not anything], 749f.

Christ as brother of men, 4158, 4177, 4322, 4332, 4550; cf. E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).

Jesus Christ is consubstantial with men (^athe Mother), 272, 301, 357, 430, 442, 504, 547, ^a619, 2529, (4220).

Jesus Christ has assumed a human soul (^a*anima*) (endowed with reason), intellect (^b*intellectus*), sensibility (^c*sensus*), body (^d*corpus*), flesh (^e*caro*), ^{abd}44, ^{abd}46, ^{abde}48, ^e60, ^{ace}72, ^{abc}148, ^a159, ^{ae}166, ^{ae}250, ^{ad}272, ^{ad}299, ^{ad}301, ^{ae}325, ^{ad}357, ^{ae}485, ^{ae}547, ^{ad}554, ^{ae}791, ^{ae}801, ^{ad}900, ^{ad}2529.

Jesus Christ has assumed human nature in no way changed, together with the senses and all natural impulses, 3923; his body was provided with a perfect capacity for feeling and perception, much more than the bodies of all other men, 3924.

As a man Christ was subject to human needs: He took to himself all the consequences of men’s sinful condition, 4494; he shared the human condition through his sufferings, difficulties, and death, 4632; he hungered, thirsted, wept, endured all the hardships of the body, 189, 791, 4322; he worked with human hands, thought with a human mind, acted by human choice, loved with a human heart, 4322; he can share human weaknesses, 4615; in particular he was capable of suffering (^aagainst contrary errors), 105, 166, 189, ^a197, ^a293, 297, 442, 492, 504; because of his humanity he has the wish not to die and yet the ability to die, 564; he participated in the community of men: E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).

That Christ is male cannot be disassociated from the economy of salvation, 4601.

As a man, Christ is limited, 606.

As a man, Christ was predestined, 536.

The birthday of Christ and Sundays are celebrated in the faith in the true humanity of Christ, 454.

Unlikeness with regard to sin. The Son of God assumed man without sin, 44, 46, 48, 74, 148, 159, 293, 301, 442, 487, 490, 496, 505, 533, 5bb 539, 547, 554, 561, 564, 619, 1347, 2529, 4322; he cannot sin, 261, 4120; sin cannot stain him, 291; the nature, not guilt, was assumed from the Mother of the Lord, 294.

In Christ there were no defects of human passions, 130, 148; no discord of desires, no conflict of wills, no temptations by enticements, 299; his passions are under the guidance of the Godhead and of the Spirit, 299.

The sentence, “Christ was made sin for us” is explained, 539.

c. THE UNION OF THE DIVINE AND HUMAN NATURES IN JESUS CHRIST

E 5c

Facticity of the union. Christ is at once God and man, 76, 253, 272, 292–295, 402, 534.

5ca

The notion of the one person of Jesus Christ begotten in his divinity of the Father before all ages and born in his humanity of the Virgin Mary in time, 4520; both the divinity of Christ and the reality and force of his human and historical dimension belong to the mystery of the Incarnation, 4611.

Christ is ^afrom two and ^bin two natures, ^b302, ^{ab}414, ^{ab}420, ^{ab}442, ^{ab}506, (^{ab}543), ^{ab}545, ^{ab}548, ^{ab}555, ^b681, ^{ab}852, ^b2529.

The unusual mode of expression of Julian of Toledo (^ais condemned): Christ is in the three substances of Word, of body, and soul, 535, 567, ^a613.

Jesus Christ is, although God and man, one, not two (persons), 76, 272, 302, 555; God’s Son possesses a human nature united with himself, 4112; the natures are brought together into a true unity, 250; this unity is comparable to the unity of soul and body in man, 76.

The question of whether the blood of Christ was separated from the divinity in the three days of the Passion is debated, 1385 (cf. 2663).

The two natures in the unity. This unity comes about while preserving the character of both natures, 293, 302, (317), 402, 413, 442, 509, 5cb 543, 548, 555, 561, (564), 1337, 2529; the difference of the natures is not abolished because of the unity, 250, 302, 507, 548, 555, 2529.

The Son of God is complete in his nature and complete in ours, 293, 413, 442.

- In Christ actions are in common: The flesh does not act without the Word, the Word does not act without the flesh, 317f.; the common action is called theandric, 515.
- The actions of Christ maintain their natural characteristic qualities: each nature does what is proper to each in communion with the other, 294, (317, 488), 548, 557, (558); therefore the theandric operation is a twofold one: divine and human, 515.
- Two natural wills and operations in Christ are stressed against the Monothelites, 498, 500, 510f., 512–516, 543–545, 548, 553, 556f., 558, 561, 564, 572, 681, 1346, 2531; the wills in Christ are not contrary to each other (^aonly as such has Pope Honorius I understood and condemned them), 487, ^a496–498, 544, 556, (564), 572, 2531.
- The natures in Christ are united without confusion (inconfuse) (against the Monophysites), 76, 272, (300), 302, 359, 368, 402, 413f., 425, 428, 430, 442, 488, 500, 506–508, 543, 548, 555–557, 561, 564, 619, 2529; Christ is one without being mixed together, 297, 317, 358f., 681.
- The Word is unchangeable (^a*immutabiliter*, ^b*inconvertibiliter*), which is to say, became man without change or transformation of the Word and the nature of the flesh, 302, ^{ab}357f., ^c402, ^b413, ^c442, ^b488, ^a543, ^b555–557, ^b564, 1345, ^a2529; the flesh was not transformed into the nature of the Word, (294), 428, 548; the Word was not transformed into flesh or soul (^aeven partially), 76, 250, ^a297, 357–359, 428, 534, 548; there was not, out of two natures, one nature or substance of the Godhead and of the flesh, 203, 300, (359), 429.
- The Son of God did not lose in his Incarnation what he was, 72; he experienced neither loss ^a*nor addition*, 72, ^a291, ^a297, 318; although he dwelt in the flesh, he was nevertheless never away from the Father, 165, 294, 369, 442, 485, 540, 619; his throne was never empty, 1097.
- The natures in Christ are inseparably (inseparabiliter) united; (they cannot be separated), 302, 317, 420, 534, 543, 555–557, 561, 564, 619, (1337), 2529; likewise the wills and operations, 544; Word and flesh both remain in one, and there is one in both, 297.
- The natures in Christ are indivisibly (indivise) united, 297, 302, 317, 413f., 420, (430), 442, 488, 506–508, 548, 555–557, 561–564, 681, 1337, 2529; according to the Cyrillians, the natures unite in the sense of a natural union or composition, or according to the substance, 254, 424–426, 430, 436, 508; hence, according to them there is in Christ “an incarnate nature of God the Word”, 505; the difference of the natures is known “only through the intelligence”, 428, 543, 548.
- Condemned are the assertions of the Nestorians on the unity of the natures, in particular: [^aThey are connected in a mere association of dignity, power, or authority; ^bChrist is a mere man, who on account of greater grace is called divine; ^cthe designations “man bearing God”, “man deified”], 251^{a–c}, 252–263, ^a254, ^c256, ^a262, ^a401, ^{ab}424, ^a425f., ^c613, ^b1339.
- Sec The unity of both natures in the one Person. The Incarnation took place ^a*only in the Son*, not in the ^b*Father or the Holy Spirit* or in the ^c*entire Trinity*, ^{ab}325, ^a491, ^a533, ^{ac}535, ^{ac}571, ^{ab}791.
- The Son of God took on the man in what is proper to the Son, not in what is common to the Trinity, 491, 535; the Word of God made the birth of his flesh his own, 251, (355).
- The Word became man insofar as he united to himself, according to the hypostasis, a body and a rational soul (or with flesh animated by a rational soul), (44), 250f., 253, 413, (442), 900; the humanity of Jesus exists as one assumed in the eternal Person, 4520; the unity in Christ is a unity of natures in the hypostasis, (76), 416f.; the divinity and the humanity constitute the one Christ in the Person of the Son, 2528; Christ has the same Person in the Godhead of the Word, 299.
- The assumed nature serves the divine Word as an organ of salvation inseparably united to him, 4118; the humanity of Christ, united with the person of the Word, was the instrument of our salvation, 4005.
- The character proper to each of the two natures of Christ come together in the one Person and hypostasis, 189, 302, 317f., 325, 359, 413, 485, 2529, 3905.
- The human nature was not created first and then assumed, but was created in the assumption itself, 251, 298f., 402, 405, 416f., 419, 442, 479; the soul of Christ did not exist before the Incarnation, 404; the Word brought no body down from heaven, 359; the flesh of Christ was not created out of nothing, 299.
- There are not two sons in Christ, the one before, the other after the Incarnation, but in him is one and the same Son, 148, 158, 272, 301f., 325, 359, 420, 485.
- Christ is not divided into two persons, 302, 402, 423/428, 500, 548, 555, 1344, 2529; with such a division the Trinity would become a quaternity of Persons, 402, (426), 491, 534.
- Christ is not pure (^adevoid of Godhead) man, on whom the Word descended in order to dwell in him, 251, 251c–e, 262, ^a420, 1344; he is not a human person who is united with God only by grace, 401, (424, 1339), 1344; condemned are the designations “man bearing God” and “man deified”, 256, 613.
- The Word of God is Son of man neither because of the assumption of a personality nor only by the will, 250; condemned is the expression “assumed man” (“homo assumptus”), as if a man, autonomous in himself, had been taken up and placed by the side of the Word, 3905; likewise the expression “God made human” (“deus humanatus”), 613.
- Condemned are certain assertions about the hypostatic union, 3227, 3427–3431.

Recent errors regarding faith in the Son of God made man: the concept of the one Person of Christ is voided, 4520; the assertion: [The humanity of Christ existed, not as being assumed into the eternal person of the Son of God, but, rather, of itself as a human person], 4520; these declarations are not sufficient: [The special presence of God in Jesus results in his being the supreme expression of divine revelation], 4520f.; [Jesus can be called God because God is supremely present in his human person], 4521.

Continuance of the unity. The unity of natures in Christ continues indissoluble, ^a355, 358, 414; even in the glorified Christ, who has ascended into heaven in the same flesh, sits at the right hand of the Father, and will come for the judgment, 46, 48, 167, 297, 502, 791. 5cd1

The mysterious constitution of the hypostatic union. The Incarnation is as a “miraculously unique generation” incomprehensible and ineffable, 250, ^a292. 5ce

d. IMPLICATIONS OF THE HYPOSTATIC UNION

E 5d

Natural Sonship. Faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of God: B 2a; E 1a; E 5a. 5da

Jesus Christ is not Son of the Father because of adoption or grace but according to nature and in the proper sense, 526, 595, 610–615, 619, 681, 852; condemned: [Christ was found worthy of adoption], 434.

Beatific vision. It came to Christ from the first moment of the Incarnation, 3812. 5db

Knowledge. The soul of Christ had knowledge at its disposal from the Incarnation on, 3812. Christ is all-knowing, 476; he knew even the day of the Last Judgment, (^abut only by virtue of his divinity), 419, ^a474–476; condemned are errors about the knowledge and the consciousness of Christ, 419, 3428, 3432–3435, 3645–3647. 5dc

Sinlessness and holiness. The incarnate Word differed from men only with respect to sin: E 5bb (unlikeness with regard to sin); the will of Christ is not opposed to God but, rather, completely divinized, 556; condemned: [Christ had to perfect himself and first became fully sinless after the Resurrection], 434; [The spirit of the fear of the Lord was not in Christ], 731; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is holy). 5dd

Adoration and worship. Christ is to be adored by angels and men ^ain two undivided natures, ^a420, 1823, 3676; he must be adored in one adoration together with his flesh, (^awhich is united with the divinity), not, however, in two (namely, in one for the Word and in another one for the man) ^bor through a co-adoration of the man assumed, ^b259, 431, ^a2661; condemned: [Christ is to be worshipped in the Person of the Word like an image of an emperor], 434. 5de

Prayers may be directed to the Person of Christ, (even if he is mediator), 3820.

Jesus is not changed into a “mythical” person and his teaching deformed in consequence of the worship paid Jesus as the Lord and the Son of God, 4405.

Condemnable is an adoration in which the humanity of Christ and his flesh, independent of the divinity, is adored for its own sake, 431, 2661, 2663; the problem of the adoration of the body of Christ in the three days of death is discussed, 2663; the adoration of the blood shed in the Passion depends on the still undecided question of whether the blood was separated from the divinity, 1385.

Adoration of the heart of Jesus is legitimate insofar as it is recognized by the Church, 2661; it refers, namely, to Christ himself, 3353; the heart of Jesus is adored because it is inseparably united with the Person of the Word, 2663, 3922f.; a symbol and image of the love of Christ is worshipped in the heart of Jesus, 3353, 3922–3925.

Cf. J 1ef (adoration and worship of Christ).

e. RULES FOR CHRISTOLOGICAL LANGUAGE

E 5e

Communication of idioms. One can say –: “The Word was begotten according to the flesh”, 251; –: “Christ is one of (or from) the Trinity” (or “one of the three Persons”), 401f., 432, 485, 561; –: “One of the Trinity suffered”, 401; –: “^aGod (^bthe Word of God) suffered in the flesh”, ^b263, ^a401; –: “The Son of God was subject to suffering, died”, 105; condemned: [God, the Word, is mortal], 359. 5ea

The titles “Mother of God” and “God-bearer” are grounded in the communication of idioms, 251, 401; cf. E 6ba (fact and nature of the motherhood of Mary).

Distribution of the sayings about Christ. Sometimes the one Person is intended by sayings about Christ; sometimes they are in reference to the individual natures, 273, 295; the designations are not to be ascribed to separated natures or to two Persons, 255, 418. 5eb

6. Mary, the Mother of Jesus Christ

a. MARY IN THE CHURCH’S PROFESSIONS OF FAITH

E 6a

The faith of the creeds, 10–30, 42//64, 72, 150.

E 6b

b. THE MOTHERHOOD OF MARY

6ba Fact and nature of the motherhood. From Mary, the Word of God assumed a body animated by a rational soul, with which he united himself according to the hypostasis, 251, 442; Mary begot, according to the flesh, the Word of God made flesh, 252; the Divine Nature of the Word did not receive the beginning of its existence from the holy Virgin, 251; the Word of God, from his very conception, made one with himself the temple taken from Mary, 272; the Virgin Mary received the Word of God in her heart and in her body and gave Life to the world, 4173; condemned are the assertions that deny the true motherhood of Mary: [^a*The Son of God has passed through Mary with a heavenly body without receiving anything from her*; ^b*Mary gave birth to a mere man*], ^b427, ^b437, ^a1341, 1880.

Mary is for this reason (because of the communication of idioms) ^a*truly* and ^b*in the proper sense* named God-bearer (Deipara, Dei genitrix, θεοτόκος), 251, 271f., 300, 416, 427, 442, 485, ^{ab}547, ^{ab}555, ^a2528f.; condemned is the denial of this title: [Mary is God-bearer only in the improper sense or according to the relationship; only the designations “man-bearer” or “Christ-bearer” can be addressed to her], (251 d), 427, 437.

6bb Virginity of the motherhood. General, 10–30, 42//64, 72, 144, 150, 251f., 271f., 291f., 299, 442, 533, 571, 748, 1880; without masculine seed, (^a“immaculate”), 44, 62f., 189, 368, ^a503, ^a533, ^a547, ^a619, ^a1337, ^a1400 (there ambiguous), 4177; Mary was ever a virgin, even ^a*in the birth* and ^b*after the birth*, or: only Christ was born from her, 44, 46, ^b291, ^{ab}299, ^a368, ^{ab}442, ^b485, 491, 502, ^b503, 547, ^{ab}571, 572, 619, 681, 801, 852, ^b1400, 1425, ^{ab}1880; condemned is the assertion of a conception from the seed of Joseph, 1880.

No ^a*concupiscence*, no ^b*labor pains* as consequences of original sin, ^a294, ^a299, ^b748.

Free assent of Mary to the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, 357, 3274, 4177.

Cf. D 2b (mankind under the inherited burden of sin).

6bc Dignity of the motherhood. Mary was firm in her resolve to remain a virgin and became a mother through the gift of God, 4836; as Mother of Christ, the God-man, Mary surpasses all other creatures, 3260, 3917, 4173; her honor is based on this dignity, 3900; redeemed in an exalted manner by reason of the merits of her Son, she is the Mother of the Son of God and thereby the beloved daughter of the Father and the temple of the Holy Spirit, 4173; Mary occupies a place in the Church that is the highest after Christ, 4174; cf. G 3bb (holiness of the Church).

Mary is the spiritual mother of believers: E 6de.

E 6c

c. THE ELECTION OF MARY

6ca Divine providence elected Mary and determined her beforehand, 1400, 2800, 3902, 4173, 4178; Mary has entered into salvation history, 4178. Cf. F 1d (God’s gracious election).

6cb Perfect redemption of Mary. Even Mary is to be counted among the descendants of Adam included in the universal redemption of Christ, (3903), 3909f.; Mary was –: redeemed in the most perfect manner, 3909; –: redeemed in an exalted manner by reason of the merits of her Son, 4173.

Cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); F 1 (God’s mercy and gracious election).

6cc Preservation from original sin. The exception from the general rule of original sin is not expressed by Leo I: From his mother Christ assumed nature, not guilt, (which alludes to original sin), 294; the ^a*defined dogma* developed from the free opinion: Mary was preserved inviolate from original sin from the first moment of her conception in view of the merits of Christ, 1400, 1425f., 1516, 1973, 2015–2017, 2324, ^a2800f., ^a2803f., ^a3554, ^a3908f., ^a3915, 4175; condemned is a false explanation of the dogma, 3234.

Cf. D 2b (mankind under the inherited burden of sin).

6cd Freedom from personal (or actual) sin. Mary was never subject to sin, 2800, 3908, 3915; Mary enjoyed the special privilege also to avoid all venial sin, 1573.

Cf. D 3b (grave sins and venial sins).

6ce Holiness of Mary. Mary surpasses all saints in sanctity, innocence, and fullness of the heavenly gifts of grace, 2800f., 3370, 3917; the Church has already reached perfection in Mary, 4178; cf. G 3bb (holiness of the Church).

E 6d

d. THE PARTICIPATION OF MEN, ESPECIALLY MARY, IN THE WORK OF JESUS CHRIST

6da The cooperation of men in the redemption. Unique mediation of the Redeemer does not exclude but rather gives rise to a manifold cooperation that is but a sharing in this one source, 4177.

God willed that man be left to his own decisions, so that he can seek his Creator spontaneously and come freely to perfection, 4317; cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom of man).

Men offer themselves and the whole world to God in sacrifice with Christ in the Eucharist and in their activity: G 4bd and 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly ministry of Christ); H 4 (bishops’ ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 5c (the Church offers the Lord’s Supper).

Salvation begins during the life of Christ, is definitively accomplished by his death and Resurrection, and must be carried on in the course of history until it is fully realized with the final coming of Christ, 4571; men must help make concrete the liberation that Christ won on the Cross, 4628; the kingdom and salvation are available to every man as grace and mercy, and yet at the same time each individual must gain them by force: through toil and suffering, through a life lived according to the gospel, through abnegation and the cross, through the spirit of the beatitudes, a total interior renewal, and the conversion of the whole man, 4572; the grace of baptism by itself alone is not sufficient for the attainment of salvation, but beyond it the help of grace and human cooperation are required, 241, 397; the kingdom proclaimed in the gospel will be carried over into the practical experience of life by men who are permeated by their own specific culture, 4577; F 1b (universal salvific will of God); C 4da; C 4fi and C 4jc (salvation of man); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Justification is both the “justice of God” as also “our justice”, 1529, 1547; conversion of sinners and their justification by the grace of God: F 2; human work and the grace of God: F 3d (the justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5a (the gratuity of grace); F 5c (the grace of God and the freedom of man).

Those who are in heaven intercede before the Father through Christ, with him, and in him, in that they show forth the merits they won on earth through Christ, as they fill up for the Church what was lacking in the sufferings of Christ, 4169; through the help of the saints believers obtain benefits from God through Christ, 4170; the saints establish the whole Church more firmly in holiness because they are more closely united with Christ and contribute to the edification of the Church, 4169; cf. M 1b (communion of saints).

Cf. C 1gc (cooperation of men in the work of God); C 4i (activity of man).

The cooperation of Joseph in the redemption. Jesus Christ is not from the seed of Joseph, 1880; cf. E 6bb (virginity of the motherhood of Mary).

The significance of Joseph lies in that he was the betrothed of Mary and the foster father of Jesus Christ, 3260; through his marriage to the God-bearer he came closer to the dignity of his bride than anyone else, 3260.

Joseph is the patron protector of the Church because he presided over the Holy Family, 3262f.; cf. G 3bb (holiness of the Church).

The cooperation of Mary in the redemption. Mary, ^aas an associate of the divine Redeemer, has a share in his work, ^bthough in a limited and analogous way, ^a3902, 3914f., ^{ab}3916, 3926, ^a4176; she (like the other saints) contributes to the treasure of the merits of Christ, 1027; in that Mary conceived, brought forth, and nourished Christ, presented him to the Father in the temple, and suffered with him, she in a singular way cooperated in the work of the Savior, 4176; every salvific influence of Mary is mediated by Christ, 4176; her influence fosters the immediate union of the faithful with Christ, 4176; the maternal duty of Mary toward men in no way diminishes the unique mediation of Christ but rather shows his power, 4176f.

This participation is grounded ^ain the consent of Mary to her election; ^bin her communion of will and suffering with the Redeemer, ^a3274f., ^b3370, ^b3926, ^{ab}4177; Mary is the new Eve, 3901, 3915, 4177.

Mediation of grace through Mary. Intercession of Mary for believers, 1400, 2187, 3274f., 3370, 3926, 4176f.; the Church seeks her intercession, 4170; Mary is invoked in the Church under the titles of Advocate, Auxiliatrix, Adjutrix, and Mediatrix, 4177; among the “mediators in a certain way”, Mary especially has a claim to such a title, 3320f.; she can be named “Mediatrix to the Mediator”, 3321; she is Mediatrix in a congruous manner (de congruo), 3370; ^aas Mediatrix of all grace, she distributes the treasure of Christ’s grace, ^a3274f., 3370, 3916.

Supplications of all Christian believers to the Mother of God and of men to intercede for the union of peoples into one people, 4179.

Mary’s protection and intercession will enable the Church to overcome the “sinful structures” in people’s personal and social life and will win for her the “authentic liberation” of Christ, 4619.

Mary can produce no grace, 3370.

Spiritual motherhood of Mary, (^ain which she bears Christians in the agony of the Redeemer), ^a3262, 3275, 4173f., 4177; Mary is the mother of the members of Christ because she has cooperated by charity that believers might be born in the Church, 4173, 4177; she cooperates in the education of believers, 4177; Mary acts as mother for believers in the order of grace, 4176f.

Cf. E 6b (motherhood of Mary); E 6f (Mary—paragon of the Church and of believers); G 2a (designations of the Church: motherhood of the Church); G 3bb (holiness of the Church).

e. THE GLORIFICATION OF MARY

E 6e

Assumption of Mary into heaven with body and soul, 3903, 3900–3904, 4175, 4179; she departed life without corruption, 748.

Regal dignity of Mary. Mary is —: the Lady of believers, 547; —: Queen, 1400, 3902, 3913–3917; —: Queen of the universe, 4175; —: in heaven exalted above all the angels and saints, 4179.

Veneration of Mary. Veneration of Mary by the Church ^aas true Mother of God and of the Redeemer, 4170, 4172, ^a4173, (4178); condemned: [Praise offered to Mary is vain], 2326.

Mary is entitled to veneration through images (^ccondemnation of undue restrictions), 1823, ^a2187, ^a2236, 2532, ^a2671; condemned are images which represent Mary in priestly vestments, 3632.

Veneration of Mary in the separated Churches, especially among the Orientals, 4139, 4179.

E 6f

f. MARY—PARAGON OF THE CHURCH AND OF BELIEVERS

- Mary as preeminent member of the Church, as her type and exemplar in faith and charity (^aand in reference to perfect unity with Christ), 4173, ^a4177, (4178); in the mystery of the Church Mary stands out as the prototype of virgin and mother, 4177; contemplating Mary in the light of the Word made man, the Church enters more intimately into the great mystery of the Incarnation and becomes more and more like her Spouse, 4178.
- The Church as handmaid of the Lord together with the Virgin Mary, 4618. Mary —: unites in herself the greatest teachings of the faith, 4178; —: when she is proclaimed and venerated, calls the faithful to her Son and his sacrifice and to the love of the Father, 4178; Mary as example of that maternal love which should animate the apostolic mission of the Church, 4178.
- Mary is image and beginning of the Church as she is to be perfected in the world to come, 4179; the Church has already reached perfection in her, whereby she is without spot or wrinkle, 4178, 4841; in the hierarchy of holiness it is precisely the woman Mary of Nazareth who is the figure of the Church, 4841; cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); G 3bb (holiness of the Church); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).
- Mary shines forth as a sign of a sure hope and solace to the pilgrim people of God, 4179; she precedes others on the path to holiness, 4841; the bodily glorification of the Virgin is an anticipation of the glorification that is the destiny of all the other elect, 4656; cf. M 3bc (transfiguration of the body).
- Mary's intercession will enable the Church to overcome the "sinful structures" in people's personal and social life and will win for her the "authentic liberation" of Christ, 4619.
- Cf. E 6dd (mediation of grace through the intercession of Mary); E 6de (spiritual motherhood of Mary); G 2a (designations of the Church); G 3b (holiness of the Church); M 1b and M 3bd (communion of saints).

F 1a

a. IN THE CREEDS

Jesus Christ, the Savior, 1, 3f.; ^afor our salvation, ^bto redeem, ^a40, ^a42, ^a44, ^a46, ^a48, ^a51, (55), ^b72, ^a76.

F 1b

b. THE UNIVERSAL SALVIFIC WILL OF GOD

- God wills that all men be saved without exception, 623, 4140; God (Christ) wishes no one to perish, 340, 780; all men are called to salvation through the grace of God, 4135, 4572, 5073; after original sin God made the promise of redemption, and from that time on he ceaselessly kept the human race in his care in order to give eternal life to all in search of salvation, 4203; God's plan of salvation is one and finds its fulfillment through the sending of Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, 5086.
- At all times and in every race God has given welcome to whosoever fears him and does what is right, 4122, 4892; in all men of good will grace works in an unseen way, 4322; the plan of salvation also includes those who acknowledge the Creator, particularly Muslims, 4140; nor is God far from those who search for the unknown God in shadows and images, 4140; those who through no fault of their own do not know the gospel of Christ or his Church yet sincerely seek God and strive to do his will can attain to eternal salvation, 4140; nor does divine providence deny the helps necessary for salvation to those who, without blame on their part, have not yet arrived at an explicit knowledge of God and with his grace strive to live a good life, 4140.
- Salvation is liberation from everything that oppresses man, from sin and the Evil One, in the joy of knowing God and being known by him, 4571; cf. C 4da (God in his grace wills the salvation of man); E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); concept of eternal life, 5112.
- Cf. A 1a (definitions of the revelation event: the intention of God); C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ); E 6d (participation of men, especially Mary, in the work of Jesus Christ).

F 1c

c. THE UNIVERSAL SALVIFIC WILL OF GOD IN JESUS CHRIST MEDIATED THROUGH THE CHURCH

Christ was sent so that all might become children of God, 1522; he suffered for all (^aas it pertained to his goodness), 332, ^a340, 624, 630, 1522f., 2005, 2304f.; God's plan constituted Christ as the source of salvation for the world, 4141; God the Father decided from the beginning to make man a sharer of his glory in Jesus Christ, 4814; the followers of Christ are called by God, not because of their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, and are justified in Jesus, 4166, 5073, 5081; the Holy Spirit offers to every man the possibility of being associated with the paschal mystery, 4322, 5073; after the Incarnation every man is a brother of Christ and is called to become Christian in order to receive salvation from him, 4550; Christ wisely and patiently follows out the plan of his grace on behalf of sinners, 4186.

The gift of grace should reach men through the Church so that sinners might be reconciled with God, 4573; the Church communicates to men a sharing in the grace of divine life, 4757; baptism, which is necessary for salvation, is the sign and the means of God's prevenient love, which frees from original sin and communicates a share in divine life, 4674; cf. K 3f (dignity and the necessity of baptism); in the Eucharist the mind is filled with grace and a pledge of future glory is given, 4047; the Eucharist as the font of grace, 4010; cf. J 1c (effect of the liturgy); K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful); necessity of the sacraments: K 2f.

From this it does not follow that all (°Christians) are saved, 623f., 630, ^a1362; he is not saved who, not persevering in charity, remains indeed in the bosom of the Church, but in a bodily manner and not in his heart, 4137; cf. M 3d (condemnation of man); Christ brought grace also to those who perished, 340; he who perishes, perishes, ^a*not through the will of God (of Christ)*, but ^b*through his own fault*, ^c*since he could have been saved*, ^a333, ^c339, ^a340, ^b623, ^b626f.

Grace is also granted outside the Church, 2305, 2429, 3014; cf. F 1b (universal salvific will of God); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation).

Grace is not lacking for the justified, since God does not abandon them, 1537, 1546.

Cf. A 1a (the intention of God); D 7b (God forgives sins through Jesus Christ and the ministry of the Church): E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); E 4 (mission of Jesus Christ); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); K 1b (Church as sacrament of salvation); K 2d (effect of the sacraments); K 2f (dignity and necessity of the sacraments).

d. GOD'S GRACIOUS ELECTION

F 1d

God in his foreknowledge chose those whom through grace he predestined to life, 621; the followers of Christ are called by God, not because of their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, 4166; from the beginning of salvation history God has chosen men, not just as individuals, but as members of a certain community, 4332; cf. G 1ba (foundation of the Church); G 2a (designations of the Church); from the Holy Spirit as from a living source derives every gift granted to creatures: the gift of existence and the gift of grace, 4781; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit): election of Mary: E 6c.

The gifts and the call of God are without repentance, 4140, 4198.

God predestined only the good, 685; he did not predestine the wickedness of the evil, 335, 397, 596, 621, 628, 1567; there is predestination, not to do evil, but to punishment, 621, 628f.

God only foreknows evil, but he does not predestine it, 628, 685; foreknowledge does not cause evil necessarily to follow, 333, 627.

No one on earth without a particular revelation can know that he is chosen, ^a1540, 1565, ^a1566.

Condemned are the assertions: [Some are predestined to death, others to life], 335; [The grace of justification is given only to the predestined], 1567.

The preparation for justification. A certain preparation or prerequisite is necessary, 1525, 1529.

2aa

These are numbered among the preparatory acts —: faith, 1526f., (1531), 3012; faith is the foundation and root of every justification, 1532; it is the prerequisite for the baptism of a person, 2836–2838; faith does not consist of the confidence that sins be forgiven, 1533f., 1562; Christ emphasized the necessity of faith, 4136; laxist affirmations regarding faith in justification are condemned, 2119–2123; cf. L 2c (virtue of faith);

—: hope in the mercy of God, 1526; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope);

—: an incipient love of God, 1526; cf. L 2e (virtue of love);

—: an attitude of repentance (that includes perfect contrition or attrition or hatred for sin, ^a*not only the intention of a new life*), ^a1457, 1526f., 1669, ^a1692, ^a1713, 2836–2838; cf. K 6cb (contrition);

—: fear of divine justice (which can be a good supernatural impulse), (1456), 1526f., 1558, 2314, 2460–2467, 2625;

—: the beginning of a new life and the observance of the commandments of God, 1526f., (1531, 1964).

The preparation for justification and the beginning of faith are gifts of grace. No one is good by himself, 240; no one uses his free will correctly without Christ, 242; every movement of good will is from God, 244; the freedom of man can fully realize his orientation toward God only with the assistance of God's grace, 4317; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good). 2ab

God is the author of the beginning of faith, 248, 375, 378, 396f., 3010, 3015; the beginning of faith is mediated through prevenient grace, 1525, 1553; in preparation for justification man gives his assent to grace, 1525f.; grace communicates justification and repentance, 374, 1553; cf. A 2ba (God as the foundation of faith); L 2c (virtue of faith).

F 2b

b. CONVERSION AND JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH

2ba The foundation of justification. Faith is the beginning of salvation, the foundation and root of justification, 1532, 3008, 5073, 5081; by virtue of the faith with which he believes, man can be justified even if he dies before receiving the sacrament, 121.

Diverse errors about faith as grace, 235*lf.*, 2426–2428, 2442, 2448, 2468*f.*

2bb The nature of justification. Justification is the transition to the state of grace and adoption as children, 1524; justification means that Christ himself is our righteousness, in which we share through the Holy Spirit in accord with the will of the Father, 5073.

Justification is both “the justice of God” and “our justice”, 1529, 1547; man cooperates in his redemption: E 6d.

For their authentic liberation, men need a profound conversion, 4481; the kingdom and salvation are available to every man as grace and mercy through total interior renewal, by means of a radical conversion of the entire man, a profound change of mind and heart, 4572; the hope of Christians is expressed by a continual conversion, 4161; conversion is a change of a person’s behavior or mentality or mode of existence, 4817; the personal and collective responsibility to conversion should accompany the necessary changes to the unjust social, political, and economic structures, 4633; the witness of a poor Church converts the wealthy who have their hearts attached to wealth, 4634; the uniqueness of the Christian message consists in insisting on the conversion of man, 4481; the Church cooperates in the conversion of sinners with charity, example, and prayer, 4128; evangelization aims at personal conversion and social transformation, 4620; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change); D 7 (forgiveness of sins); G 3cd (Church and evangelization).

The grace of justification or charity is not only an (external) act of favor on the part of God, but inheres in the justified person himself, 1530, 1547, 1561.

Condemned: [Men are justified without the justice of Christ or they are formally justified through the justice of Christ alone], 1560f.; [Justification consists in obedience to the commandments], 1942, 1969*f.*

Acceptance of the doctrine of Trent regarding justification is required (against the rebuke that it is derogatory to the glory of God and the merits of Christ), 1550, 1583, 1863.

There exists a consensus in the basic truths of justification; the differing explications in particular statements are compatible with it, 5073, 5081; the doctrine of justification is an indispensable criterion for the teaching and practice of the Church, 5073, 5081.

2bc The causes of justification. By grace alone, 5073; meritorious cause: Jesus Christ (“by his Passion”), 1529, 1546*f.*, (1582); cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Efficient cause: merciful God, 1529; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is good and merciful).

Instrumental cause: baptism (or the desire of it), 1524, 1529; the sacrament of penance for those who have fallen into sin, 1542; cf. K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism); K 6g (necessity of the sacrament of penance); condemned: [Justification comes about only through faith without the sacraments], (1559), 1579, 1604*f.*, 1608.

Formal cause: the justice of God, with the help of which each receives within himself justice according to the measure God wills to give and according to each one’s personal disposition and cooperation, 1529; regarding the necessity of conversion, cf. F 2bb (nature of justification); cf. B 1b (will of God: God is just).

Final cause: the glory of God and of Christ and also eternal life, 1529, (1583); cf. L 2b (obsequiousness to God); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward).

F 2c

c. INDWELLING AND GRACIOUS WORKING OF GOD IN THE JUSTIFIED

2ca Indwelling. The indwelling of God in the soul of the just as in a temple, 3330*f.*; it is distinguished from heavenly indwelling only in degree or state, 3331, 3815; in it the entire Trinity is present, 3331, 3814*f.*; it is particularly declared of the Holy Spirit, 44, 46, 48, 1913, 1963, 3329–3331, 3814*f.*; the Holy Spirit is the supreme Gift of the just, 1522, 1529*f.*, 1561, 1690, 3330; the Holy Spirit works in the saints, 60; he purifies and gives life, 62*f.*, 150.

2cb Sanctifying grace. The grace of justification –: eliminates all that has the character of sin, 225, 245, 1515, 1528; condemned: [Sin is only brushed over and not imputed], 1515, (1575), 3235; justification, however, does not consist solely in the remission of sins, 1528, 1561; –: brings about the sanctification of the interior man, 1528, 1942; into man are infused the virtues of faith, hope, and charity, (780, 904), 1530*f.*, 1561; cf. L 2c–e (virtues of faith, hope, and charity).

Sanctifying grace is the permanent principle of the supernatural life, 3714; justification comes only by means of grace, 1014.

Nothing hinders the justified man from entering heaven, 1453, 1515.

Cf. C 4bb (holiness and the justice of man as created goods of God); G 4ba (vocation of the faithful to holiness); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); M 3ba (premises of beatitude).

- Infused virtues. In justification, faith, hope, and charity are infused into man, (780, 904), 1530, 1561, 5111–5115. 2cc
 Growth in virtue can be obtained through good works, 1944.
 Grace and charity can be lost without losing faith or hope, 1544, 1578, 1963f, 2312, 3803.
 Faith and hope as theological virtues cease in the vision of the divine essence, 1001.
 Faith is a supernatural virtue, (375), 3008, 3032; its nature: faith is hope, 5111; concept of hope, 5111; action and suffering teach hope, 5114;
 A 2ba (God as the foundation of faith).
 Faith is a gift of grace (^aeven if it is not working through love), 443, 824, 3010, 3035; the grace of God and the interior help of the Holy Spirit must precede and assist an act of faith that consents freely to revelation, 4205; cf. A 2ba (God as the foundation of faith).
 The hope of eternal reward through good works is defended against errors [^a*he sins who acts in view of eternal reward*; ^b*the total gift of self requires that hope be removed*], ^a1539, ^a1576, ^a1581, ^b2207, ^b2212; condemned: [All fails a sinner when hope fails him; and there is no hope in God when there is no love of God], 2457.
 Love is prepared by the fear of God, 1526, 2625; errors regarding the theological virtue of charity, 1454, 2453–2456, 2458.
 Moral obligation to practice the theological virtues: L 2c–e (virtues of faith, hope, and charity). 2cd
The gifts of the Holy Spirit. By virtue of his gifts, the Holy Spirit is called the sevenfold Spirit, the Spirit of wisdom, etc. (^aenumeration of the individual gifts), ^a178, 183, 1726.
 He distributes his gifts to individuals as well as particular graces for the renewal of the Church, 4131; the faithful must use their strength accordingly as they have received it, as a gift from Christ, 4166; the authority of the apostles is a particular gift of the Holy Spirit, 4113; extraordinary gifts are not to be sought after rashly by the faithful, nor are the fruits of apostolic labor to be presumptuously expected from their use, 4131; judgment as to the genuineness and proper use of extraordinary gifts of the faithful belongs to those who are appointed leaders in the Church, 4131; cf. H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops).
 Cf. B 3b (the Holy Spirit in creation and salvation history); G 3ac (Church built through the abundance of charisms). 2ce
God anticipates every good thought, desire, and work of man, accompanying it and bringing it to completion. Perseverance to the end is a particular gift of God, 1541, 5081; cf. F 5c (the grace of God and the freedom of man).

3. Justified Man

a. JUSTIFIED MAN IS A FRIEND OF GOD

F 3a

The grace of justification –: makes ^a*an enemy into a friend of God*, ^a1528, 1535, 3957;
 –: brings about a rebirth and a renewal, 632, 1523, 1528f., (1565), 1942; man becomes an ^a*adopted son of God*, 1515, ^a1522, ^a1524, (1913),
^a*1942, 2623, 3012, 3771, 3957*; he becomes a member of the household of God, 1535; he becomes an heir of God (and of his glory), 1515, 1528, 3957; he is united to Christ, (394), 1530.

b. JUSTIFIED MAN REMAINS IN DANGER

F 3b

Man can sin even after justification, 241, 339, 1540, (1542), 1573; when the structure of affairs is flawed by the consequences of sin, man, already born with a bent toward evil, finds there new inducements to sin, which cannot be overcome without strenuous efforts and the assistance of grace, 4325; man simul iustus et peccator, 5081; cf. C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); D 4c (sinful structures of society); caught in the conflict against the powers of darkness, man is obliged to wrestle constantly with the help of God's grace for the good, 4337; conversion ever remains an unfinished process on both the personal and societal levels, 4614; if believers fail to respond to the grace of Christ in thought, word, and deed, not only shall they not be saved but they will be the more severely judged, 4137; cf. M 2bb (particular judgment); condemned: [He who sins after justification was never truly justified], 1573; [The grace of justification is lost only through the sin of unbelief], 1544, 1577.

In view of his personal weakness and his lack of disposition, man may fear about his own grace, 1534; man should never trust in his good works or in his good conscience, 1548f.; no one can be absolutely sure that he will persevere in the state of grace, 1541, 1566, 1572; no one who has fallen can promise himself an assured repentance, 1540, 5081.

The justified man is not free from venial sins (^aunless by a special privilege of grace), 1537, ^a1573.

A person who has fallen into sin can be justified again (^athrough the sacrament of penance), ^a1542, 1579, (1668, 1670).

No one can know with a certitude of faith that he has obtained grace, 1534; no one on earth ^a*without special revelation* can know that he is chosen, ^a1540, 1565, 1566.

The grace of justice can grow and be preserved by good works, 1535, 1545–1547, 1574, 5081; good works are not the only fruits or signs of justification, 1574; cf. the increase of grace through the sacraments: K 2d (effect of the sacraments); assistance through prayer and pious exercises: J 1e.

Guilt is remitted and the eternal punishment blotted out, but the debt of temporal punishment remains to be paid (either on earth or in purgatory), 1580; cf. M 2bc (purification of man); the stimulus toward sin and concupiscence remains, 1515.
Cf. C 4if (human activity tainted by sin); C 4kg (man's search for meaning); D (the sin of creatures, which God pardons); esp. D 2bd (experience of division).

F 3c c. JUSTIFIED MAN REMAINS OBLIGED TO OBSERVE THE COMMANDMENTS

Justified man is not dispensed from the observance of the commandments; this is emphasized in contrast to the following affirmations: [^a*The commandments of God do not concern Christians*; ^b*the gospel is merely the promise of eternal life without the condition that the commandments be observed*; ^c*the gospel demands only faith, everything else is indifferent*], 1535–1539, 1568, ^{ac}1569, ^{abc}1570, ^c1571, 1572, 2471; however, the observance of the commandments is not impossible for the justified man, (397), 1536, 1568, (1572), 1954, 2001, 2406, 2619, (3718); cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification: obedience); L 2c (virtue of faith); L 2f (union with God).

F 3d d. JUSTIFIED MAN IS BROUGHT TO PERFECTION AS GOD REWARDS HIS MERITS THROUGH GRACE

The good works of a justified man are gifts of God in such a way that they are also merits of the justified man himself, 243, 248, 1546, 1548, 1582, (3846, 5081); errors in relation to human merit are condemned, 1908//1918.
The merit of good works (that is, their reward) is ^a*the increase of grace*, ^b*eternal life*, ^c*entrance into eternal life*, ^d*an increase in glory*, ^{b72}, ^{b443}, ^{b485}, ^{b802}, ^{b1545}, ^{a1574}, ^{abcd}1582, ^{b4168}, 5081; cf. M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward).
The vision of God differs according to the diversity of merits, (1305).
Whoever is in mortal sin is no longer capable of supernatural merit, 3803.
Merits are regained by virtue of penance, 3670.

F 4 4. The Mission of Justified Man

Cf. C 4j (vocation of man); G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 4 (community of the faithful and their mission); G 6c (mission and task of the laity).

5. Concerning the Conceptual Formulation of the Grace of God

F 5a a. THE GRATUITY OF GRACE

The grace of Christ is a gift of God, 226, 245, 248, 376, 379, 382, 395, 397–400, 623, 626, 632f., 1541, 1566, 3014; the supernatural order is gratuitous, 3891.
From the Holy Spirit as from a living source derives every gift given to creatures: the gift of existence and the gift of grace, 4781; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); F 2cd (the gifts of the Holy Spirit).
Grace precedes all human merits, (246), 248, 373–379, 388, 396–400, 1525f., 1532, 1553; the followers of Christ are called by God, not because of their works, but according to his own purpose and grace and are justified in Jesus, 4166, 5073, 5081: cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); man cannot achieve grace by supplication (as a condition of his nature), 373, 376.
Sins are forgiven gratuitously, 1529, 1533; nothing that precedes justification merits it, 1525, 1532, 5073, 5081.
The goodness of God wants what are in reality his own gifts to be our merits, 248, 1548, 1582.

F 5b b. THE SUPERNATURALNESS OF GRACE

Grace is the foundation of the supernatural life, 3714; the same thing is indirectly expressed in the fact that grace, as the superior active principle, is opposed to the powerless, purely natural active principle, 373, 377, (383//395), 396–400.

F 5c c. THE GRACE OF GOD AND THE FREEDOM OF MAN

5ca The priority of grace in relation to the cooperation of free will. God works in us through grace, 244, 248; the priority of grace in relation to the collaboration of free will, 243; since man's freedom has been damaged by sin, only by the aid of God's grace can he bring his relationship with God into full flower, 4317, 5081.

Grace consists, not only in the knowledge of the commandments, but also in the power with which we love and are able to do what we know, 226, 245; grace grants an ability per se, not only an ability to do more easily, 227, 245, 1552; whoever strives to lead a just life is not without the grace of God, 4140; under the influence of grace the will of God can be fulfilled in deeds, 4140; the laity receive their energy through the gift of the Creator and the blessing of the Redeemer, 4159; the activity of the laity is elevated from within by the grace of Christ, 4162.

Grace ^ailluminates, ^binspires, ^cmoves the will, ^b243, ^b375–377, ^{abc}1525, ^b1553, ^{ab}3010.

Grace ^aprecedes salvific actions, ^baccompanies them, ^cfollows them (bringing them to fulfillment), ^a243, ^a245f., ^{ab}248, ^a373//400, ^{abc}399, ^{ab}685, ^a1525f., ^{abc}1546.

Grace requires free cooperation, ^acontrary to the affirmation: [Free will should behave in a purely passive way], 243–245, 248, ^a330, ^a339, 397, 1525f., 1529, 1541, ^a1554, 2201–2217, (2224//2253), 3846.

Grace does not override free will: ^aMan can resist grace (so that ^bgrace is purely sufficient), 248, 685, ^a1525, 2002, 2004, ^b2305f., ^a2401–2425, 2403f., ^a2621, ^a3010.

An disproportionate explanation of the cooperation between free will and grace is condemned: [God gives us his omnipotence], 2170f.

Cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); L 1f (moral act).

The necessity of grace. All human life of man, whether individual or collective, is dependant on the help of God's grace for the overcoming 5cb of evil, 4313, 4325, 4337, 5073, 5081; grace is necessary for man –: for the (supernatural) salvation of all, 376//395, 1691; –: to be lifted out of original sin, 239; –: to use free will well, 242, 246, 248, (622); –: for the orientation of our free will toward God, 4317; –: for all salvific actions, preceding them, accompanying them, and following them; F 5ca (priority of grace in relation to free will); –: in order to prepare for justification, 1525f., 1551, 1553; cf. F 2aa; –: for the desire of illuminating and inspiring grace, 1525, 1553, 2618, 2620; –: for faith (^aalso for the beginning of faith and the very desire for faith), ^a375, 378, 396f., 1526, 1553, 3010, 3035, 4205; cf. A 2ba (God as the foundation of faith); F 2ab (the beginning of faith as a gift of grace); –: for prayer, 373, 376; –: for purification, or repentance, 374, 1553; –: for hope, 1553; –: for charity, (1526), 1553; for the fulfillment of God's commandments (^aand not only for fulfilling them more easily), 226, ^a227, ^a245, 239//248, ^a1552; with the help of grace man can observe the commandments and ^aabstain from grave sin, (397), 1536, 1537, ^a1544, 1568, (1572); –: for the daily resistance against the snares of the devil and concupiscence, 240f., (248), 1515; –: to overcome ever anew the inclination toward evil, 4325; –: to obtain merit, 243, 246, 248, 1546; –: to persevere until the end of life, 241, 246, 380, 623, 626, 632f., 1541, 1566, 1572, 1911, 3014; –: to strengthen the Church until the end of time, 4124; –: to construct a new humanity, 4330; cf. C 5c (mankind and the goal of history).

Cf. C 4fg (the sinfulness of man and its consequences); C 4if (human activity tainted by sin); C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); C 4jk (man's sinfulness as an obstacle to the fulfillment of his vocation); C 4kb (immediate effects of man's sinfulness in the world and history); D (the sin of creatures, which God forgives).

G. GOD GATHERS HIS PEOPLE

1. The Church—The Work of God

a. THE CHURCH IN THE CREEDS

G 1a

Faith in the Church, 1, 5, 10–30, 36, 41//51, 60–63, 126, 150; faith in eternal life (salvation) –: through the Church, 21f.; –: in the Church, 2–4; cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church).

Faith in the “one and only” Church: G 3ab.

The Church as “holy”: G 3bb.

The Church as “catholic”: G 3cb.

The Church as “apostolic”: G 3da.

b. THE CHURCH—THE WORK OF THE FATHER, THE SON, AND THE HOLY SPIRIT

G 1b

The foundation of the Church. God's universal salvific will: F 1; cf. G 3c (catholicity of the Church). 1ba

Eternal plan of the Father: The Church is foreshadowed from the beginning of the world, 4102; the Father planned to assemble the Christian faithful in the Church, 4102, 4124, (4170); the Church comes forth from the love of the eternal Father, 4340.

God did not want to make men holy and save them as individuals but to make them a single people ^afrom the beginning of salvation history, 4122, ^a4332; he wishes to gather his scattered children together as one, 4132.

God instituted the Church through his Son, so that men might embrace the true faith and persistently persevere in it, 3012.

- 1bb The Church prefigured in the Old Testament. God chose Israel to be his people and established a covenant with it, 4122, (4140), 4198, 4221, 4332.
 The Church, the New Covenant in Christ, is prepared for in the history of the people of Israel in the Old Covenant, 4102, 4122, 4198.
 Israel, in its wandering in the desert, is already called the Church of God, 4124.
 The Church and the people of Israel: A 1c (stages of revelation); E 1b (the promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant); E 1c (deliverance of the Old Testament believers); G 2ba (the Church of Jews and Gentiles); G 3ce (the Church and religions); K 1a (sacramental signs of the Old Covenant).
- 1bc The Church, purchased by Jesus Christ. God instituted the Church through his Son, 3012.
 Christ founded the New Covenant, 4122, 4223, 4739; he established the Church (^a*in the present era*), ^a4102, 4120, 4172, 4185, 4303, 4340, 4530, 4611; he founded in the Church a new brotherly community, 4332; he called together a new people of God from the Jews and Gentiles, 4122; he gathered around himself men from various social and political strata as the foundation of his Church, 4613; by communicating his Spirit, Christ made his brothers, from all nations, his body, 4112; he instituted the Church as the sacrament of salvation, 4168.
 The mystery of the Church is manifest in her foundation, 4105; Christ purchased the Church with his blood, 540, 575, 4124, 4170; he delivered himself up for her in order to make her holy, 4165; the redemptive act of Christ the Bridegroom toward the Church the Bride, 4840.
 The Church originated from the free will of Christ, 3302f.
 The Church came forth from the side of the dying Christ (^athe second Adam) on the Cross, ^a3328, 4005; the inauguration and growth of the Church are symbolized by the blood and water from the side of the Crucified, 4103; the sacrament of the Church came forth from the Cross, 4005.
 Christ set the Church on her course by proclaiming the kingdom of God, 4105.
 Christ built the Church through the mission of the apostles, 4142; she was established by Christ on the apostles and built upon Peter. He himself is her cornerstone, 4143; cf. G 3da (Christ founds the Church on the apostles).
- 1bd Pentecost: the public manifestation of the Church. The Church appeared publicly on Pentecost, 3328, 4006; the Holy Spirit was sent in view of the sanctification of the Church, 4104.
 The Church was manifested by the outpouring of the Spirit, 4102.
- 1be The Church remains through the ages the work of the Holy Trinity. The names of the Church designate the Church as the work of the Holy Trinity: G 2a (designations of the Church).
 The work of God: ^a*strengthening* and ^b*growth* of the Church through the power of the (^agrace of) God ^a*until the end of time*, ^b4103, ^a4124; the Church is guided by God according to his hidden designs, 4190.
 The Church is -: a people made one with the unity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, 4104; -: the work of the Holy Trinity, 4340; the Church is the new people called by God, 4151.
 The three Divine Persons as the foundation of -: the continuity and growth of the Church: G 2bb; -: the unity of the Church: G 3aa; -: the holiness of the Church: G 3ba; -: the catholicity of the Church: G 3ca; -: the apostolicity of the Church: G 3d.
 The presence of God becomes manifest in the Church, 4321; God manifests his presence in the saints, 4170.
 The work of Christ: Christ is first and foremost the foundation of the Church, 774; he is head of the Church, ^a*to which the latter is subject*, ^a4114, 4117, 4123, 4132, 4133, 4170, 4616; the Church clings to him, 4152; all her service is subordinated to him, 4618; he is the Brother of the Church, 4332; he is her Bridegroom, 4178, 4704, 4840; cf. Church as Bride of Christ, in G 2a (designations of the Church).
 Christ lives in the Church, 3806; he is present in the Church ^a*and acts in her*, 4007, 4136, 4321, ^a4611, 4632; Christ is present in the communities of the altar, 4151; Christ is always present to his Church, especially in liturgical celebrations: in the sacrifice of the Mass, in the sacraments, in the reading of the Sacred Scriptures, in the prayer and song of the Church, 4007, (4035); continuing presence of Christ among his own, 4570; he is present in all his brothers and sisters, above all in the very least, 4852; the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist: K 5bd.

- The Church is the "Bride of Christ" ("spouse of Christ"), 901, 3805, 4047, 4111, 4117, 4124, 4165, (4178), 4211, 4230, 4343, 4704, 4840; the "fullness of Christ", 3813, 4117; the "flock of Christ", 4146, 4150, 4152, 4154.
- The Church is the "Mystical Body" of Christ, whose "Head" is Christ, 493, 575, 870, 3300f., 3800–3816, 4112–4118, 4141, 4147, 4154, 4158, 4165, 4169, 4172, 4190, 4332, 4616, 4840; by communicating his Spirit, Christ made his brothers from all nations into his Body, 4112; explanation of this concept (against errors), 3300f., 3800, 3809–3811, 3816; the Body and the members, 4113, 4332, 4506; the unanimous cooperation of the faithful, 4506; the cooperation of the members with the Head, 3805, 4112–4118; cf. G 3ab (unity of the Church as unity in diversity); faith alone does not yet make a living member of the Body of Christ, 1531; in the participation in the Eucharist, the faithful become what they receive, 4151. Mystery of the Eucharist—mystery of the Church, 5094.
- The Church is the "temple" of the Holy Spirit, 1822, 4104, 4141.
- The Church is called "Mother" of the faithful, 45, 47, 478, 807, 1507, 1863, 4111, 4138, 4139, 4343, 4177f.; she is called mother and virgin with Mary as the image that the Church imitates, 4177f.; the Church becomes Mother in that she contemplates Mary's sanctity, imitates her charity, and fulfills the Word of God. By her preaching and baptism she brings forth children who are conceived of the Holy Spirit and born of God, 4178; the Church as virgin with Christ as Bridegroom, 4178; together with the Virgin Mary, the Church as handmaid of the Lord, 4618.
- The Church is "the holy temple", 3051, 4110; "the new Jerusalem", 4110, 4111; the "new Israel", 4124; the "people of the New Covenant", 4198, 4739.
- The Church is communion with God and men, 4920; in faith, hope, and charity, 4118, 5103–5105.
- The Church as flock, 4146, 4152, 4154.

G 2b

b. FUNDAMENTAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE CHURCH

- 2ba Church of Jews and Gentiles. Christ called to himself the new people of God made up of Jews and Gentiles, 4122; he gathered the faithful from among all nations, 4112; through the Cross, Christ reconciled Jews and Gentiles, making both one in himself, 4198.
- Church and Israel: The Jews must be invited to the Christian faith, 480, 698, 772f.
- The people of the Old Covenant, its sacraments and laws, refer to the Church: A 1c (stages of revelation); E 1b (promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant); E 1c (deliverance of the Old Testament believers); G 1bb (Church prefigured in the Old Testament); G 3ce (relationship of the Church to religions); K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant).
- The Church and the Gentiles: G 3c (catholicity of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
- 2bb The sacramental character of the Church. Cf. K 1b (Church as sacrament of salvation). Christ has through his Spirit established the Church as the universal sacrament of salvation, 4168; the sacrament of the Church came forth from the Cross, 4005; cf. G 1bc (the Church, purchased by Jesus Christ); mystery of the Eucharist—mystery of the Church, 5094.
- The Church is in Christ the sacrament or sign and instrument of union with God and of the unity of the whole human race, 4026, 4101, 4124, (4321), 4342f., 4617f.; she is the all-encompassing sacrament of salvation, 4343, 4345, 4617f.; cf. K 1ba (Church as primordial and universal sacrament); God has instituted the Church through his Son so that men might embrace the true faith and persistently persevere in it, 3012; the Church is compared to the incarnate Word: her social structure serves the Spirit for the building up of her Body, 4118; the messianic people serve as an instrument for the salvation of all, 4123; the Church is the leaven and the soul for human society as it is to be transformed into God's family, ^a4340, 4344; she contributes toward making the family of man and its history more human, 4340; her unity fortifies and fulfills the unity of men, 4342; through her power, she renews mankind, 4574; she anticipates the renewal of the world, 4168; cf. G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); G 7ab (Church and society); G 7ad (Church and the poor); G 7ae (Church and culture); H 2f; H 5 (bishops/priests and world).

- The Church as means of salvation: The faith of the creeds in salvation –: in the Church, 2–4; –: through the Church, 21f.; through the Church, Christ communicates truth and grace to all, 4118; the baptized receive faith from God through the Church, 4127; (^athrough grace) she communicates to man a share of divine life ^a*and pursues man's true temporal good*, 4340, ^a4757; through the Church the gift of grace is to reach man, so that sinners might be reconciled with God, 4573; cf. F 1c (universal salvific will of God mediated through the Church).
- The Church has a mission of salvation with respect to the world, (4120), 4156, (4186), 4755, 4858; she desires the good of man in all his dimensions, as a member of the city of God and as a member of the earthly city, 4757; her intention is the salvation of the whole human race, and she offers to man what is good, 4345; she is the seed of hope and salvation, 4123; she must do her part that God's plan for the salvation of the world may be realized, 4141; she communicates those saving resources that she herself receives, 4303; the divine mystery of salvation and the Incarnation are revealed to us and continued in the Church, 4172; cf. G 3cc (mission of the Church to all nations and all people); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
- The goal of the Church is the salvation of souls, 3166, 3168.
- Holiness of the Church: G 3b.
- Universality of the Church: G 3c.
- The presence and work of the Holy Trinity in the Church: G 1be.
- The gospel is for all time the source of all life for the Church, 4144; cf. A 3b and A 3bb (Sacred Scripture).
- The Church is the sign and inauguration of the kingdom of God: The Church is the kingdom of God already present in mystery, 4103; she is the initial budding forth of the kingdom of God, 4106; the faithful are citizens of a kingdom that is of a heavenly rather than of an earthly nature, 4133; that the earthly and the heavenly city penetrate each other is a fact accessible to faith alone, 4340.
- The kingdom of God was begun by God himself on earth and must be extended until it is brought to perfection by him at the end of time with the appearance of Christ, 4123; while the Church ^a*grows* and helps the world, she strives after the kingdom of God ^{bas} for her goal, ^a4106, ^b4123, (4124), 4345; she proclaims and spreads it among all peoples, 4106; she guides men toward it, 4618; the Church teaches the way to enter into the kingdom of God, 4756; she will enter into the heavenly kingdom, 493; cf. C 5e (kingdom of God and Christ as the goal of history); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God); E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); M 1 (dawn of the kingdom of God in history); M 3be (consummation of the world); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).
- Continuity and growth of the Church: The Church is constant or perpetual, 2997, 3303f.; she is an eternal temple, 3051; she was founded in order to give continuity to the work of Christ, 3050; the restoration begun in Christ and in the mission of the Holy Spirit continues through the Spirit in the Church, 4168; the salvation of the peoples requires a Church that continues for all time, 3328; she must expand and reach the fullness of God, 4117; she must keep increasing until the Lord returns, 4340; through the centuries, she moves toward the fullness of divine truth, 4210; she must ripen, 4343; she is strengthened by the power of God's grace until the end of time, 4124; she contemplates God in Scripture and tradition until she sees him face to face, 4208; Christ continually sustains her, 4118; she grows in Christ, 4190; Christ wills his people to increase through the direction of pastors, the preaching of the gospel by bishops, and the administration of the sacraments by bishops, (4145), 4187; because of the work of the Holy Spirit, the Church advances, 4150, 4187; she does not cease to receive the bread of life from the table of God's Word and Christ's Body and to offer it to the faithful, 4228; she experiences growth and life through frequent participation in the Eucharist, 4151, 4235; the mission confided by Christ to the apostles will last to the end of the world, 4144; cf. G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles); through the ministry of the bishops, Christ incorporates new members into his body, 4145; the Church, in her teaching, life, and worship, hands on to all generations what she herself is and believes, 4209; cf. G 3db (apostolic tradition in Scripture and tradition); cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); G 3bb (holiness of the Church); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).
- The Church in the world: The Church exists in the world and lives and works with it. She experiences the same earthly destiny, 4340; in her sacraments and institutions, she has the appearance of the world, 4168; she is inserted into the human race, 4311, 4340; the Church as social reality of history, 4344; to accomplish her mission, she needs human means, (4120); despite her eschatological purpose of salvation, the Church is already present on earth, composed of men, 4340; she lives among creatures, 4168; cf. G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); the Church is not only immanent to history but, in her own truth, a gift of divine grace and a mystery of faith, 4737; cf. G 3bb (holiness of the Church).
- The visibility of the Church: The Church is external and visible, 3300, 4103; God has endowed the Church with manifest marks so that she may be recognized by all, 3012; Christ has constituted her as a visible structure ^a*and maintains her as such*, ^a4118, (4119), 4124, 4340, 4344; cf. G 3ae (Church as a juridically constituted society).
- The society structured with hierarchical organs and the Mystical Body of Christ, the visible assembly and the spiritual community, the earthly Church and the Church enriched with heavenly things are not two realities; rather they form one unique reality, 4118, 4340.
- Various reasons for the credibility of the Church, 2779, 3013f.; the four most important characteristics of the Church are catholicity, unity, holiness, and the apostolic succession, 42, 150, 684, 792, 2888, 2997, 4119; man can nevertheless suffer from invincible ignorance of the true Church, 2865°, 2866.

- Church and liturgy: The true nature of the Church is expressed in the liturgy, particularly in the eucharistic celebration ^a*of all the people together with the bishop*, 4002, ^a4041; the liturgy (^a*the eucharistic sacrifice*) is the source and summit of the Church's life, 4010, ^a4127, (^a3847); the liturgy is more effective than other actions of the Church, 4007; the life of the Church is strengthened through frequent celebration of the Eucharist, 4235; partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ makes the faithful become what they receive, 4151; Christ is present in the Church particularly in liturgical actions, 4007, (4035); in the liturgy the whole public worship is performed, 4007; cf. G 4bd and G 6bb (participation of the faithful/the laity in the priestly office of Christ); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); J (God comes face to face with his people in the liturgy: excluded because of the abundance of material); esp. J 1 (nature and meaning of the liturgy); K 5e (Eucharist as foundation and summit of the life of the Church).
- The celebrating Church offers (through the hands of the priest) the Lord's Supper, 1740f.; she takes the bread of life from the table of God's Word and Christ's Body and distributes it to the faithful, 4228; cf. K 5ca (the celebrating Church offers the Lord's Supper).
- Church and sacraments: All sacraments are actions glorifying God in Christ and in the Church, 4715; the intention of the one who administers them to do what the Church does is necessary for conferring the sacraments, 1262, 1312, 1315, 1611, 1617, 2328, (2536), 3126, 3318, 3874; cf. K (God sanctifies through the sacraments); esp. K 1b (Church as sacrament of salvation); K 1bc (sacraments of the New Covenant are rooted in the Church); K 2 (conceptual formulation of the individual sacraments of the New Covenant).
- The Church brings forth to immortal life the children who are born to her in baptism, conceived of the Holy Spirit, and born of God, 4178; baptism is the gate for entrance into the Church, 1671, 3685, 4136; belonging to the Church through baptism: G 4a (belonging to the Church); K 3e (effect of baptism).
- More perfect binding to the Church by the sacrament of confirmation, 4127; cf. G 4a (belonging to the Church); K 4d (effect of confirmation).
- The Eucharist is called the "soul of the Church", 3364; in the celebration of the Eucharist, the true nature of the Church is expressed, 4002, 4041; the eucharistic sacrifice is the source and summit of the Church's life, 3847, 4127; from the Eucharist, the Church has all her strength, all her glory, every good thing, 3364; through the Eucharist -: the redemptive act of Christ the Bridegroom toward the Church the Bride is expressed, 4840; -: the Church lives and grows, 4151, 4235; -: the unity of the people of God is manifested and realized, 4047, 4103, 4112, 4127, 4151, 4338; -: unity and love among the faithful are brought about, 783, 1635, (1638, 1649), 3362, (4112); partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ makes the faithful become what they receive, 4151; in the eucharistic sacrifice, the faithful are united to the worship of the Church in heaven, 4170; cf. G 3aa (divine foundation of ecclesial unity); K 5e (Eucharist as foundation and summit of the life of the Church).
- Reconciliation with the Church through penance, 1674, 4128; cf. D 7bb (Church as mediatrix of forgiveness); G 3b (holiness of the Church); K 6f (effect of the sacrament of penance).
- By the anointing of the sick and prayer of the priests, the Church commends the sick to the Lord for their salvation and exhorts them to associate themselves freely with the Passion and death of Christ, 4128; cf. K 7e (effect of the anointing of the sick).
- The goal of the sacrament of orders is -: the spiritual governance and increase of the Church, 1311; -: the pasturing of the Church through the Word and grace of God, 4126, 4128; ordained ministers are a grace for the life and mission of the Church, 4857; cf. K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 8e (effect of the sacrament of orders).
- Christian marriage is a sign of the mysterious union of Christ and the Church, 1327, 3712, 4128, 4704f.; because of the insertion of man and woman within the eternal, spousal covenant of Christ with the Church, the community of conjugal life and love is elevated, 4704; through the children from the conjugal union, continuation is bestowed on the people of God in the course of time, 1311, 3143, 3705, 4128; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); K 9ba (nature of matrimony, Christian matrimony); juridical norms of the Church concerning matrimony: K 9f.
- The efficacy of the sacraments derives from the action of the Church that is united with her Head, 3844; cf. K 10a (sacramentals in general); indulgences and their origin in the Church: K 10bb.
- 2bc The necessity of the Church for salvation, 575, 792, 802, 870, 1191, 1351, 2720, 2730f., 2785, 2865, 2867, 2917, 2997–2999, 3304, 3821f., 3866–3873, 4136, (4140, 4151); only through the Catholic Church, the all-embracing means of salvation, can the whole fullness of the means of salvation be obtained, 4190; in certain circumstances the (even implicit) desire to enter the Church suffices, 3821, 3869–3872; outside the Church, grace is also granted, 2305, 2429, 3014.
- The messianic people is the seed of hope and salvation for the whole human race, 4123; the Church and the temporal and eternal salvation of man, 4643; the Church's mission of salvation with respect to the world: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).
- Elements of sanctification and of truth are found outside of the Church that impel toward catholic unity, 4119, (4135), 4189; the Church of Christ "subsists" in the Catholic Church, 5108; the Spirit of Christ uses the separated Churches as means of salvation, 4189; the Holy Spirit also works through gifts and graces in the non-Catholic baptized, 4139, 4189; the separated Churches and communities are means of salvation whose power derives from the fullness of grace and truth entrusted to the Catholic Church, 4189; holy actions accomplished in them can engender a life of grace and give access to the community of salvation, 4189; cf. G 3ag (Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities); G 7ae (Church and culture).

Those also who through no fault of their own do not know the gospel of Christ or his Church yet sincerely seek God and strive to do his will can attain to salvation and receive the necessary aids to salvation, 4140; cf. F 1b (universal salvific will of God); G 3c (catholicity of the Church).

Indifferentism or latitudinarianism is condemned, 2720, 2730f., 2785, 2865–2867, 2915–2918, (2921, 2977–2979), as is relativism in relation to the Church, 5089.

Cf. F 5cb (necessity of grace); K 2f (necessity of the sacraments); K 3f (necessity of baptism).

The mission and task of the Church. The people of God must recognize God and serve him in holiness, 4122, 4332; the vocation of the Church to communion in praise of the Trinity, 4171; she must give witness to the mercy of God, she must invoke him and implore him in the face of the perils that threaten the human race, 4685; she must make present and visible God the Father and his incarnate Son, 4321; in fulfilling her mission, the Church teaches the way to enter the kingdom of God, 4756. 2bd

Christ is the chief way for the Church, 4643; she follows the example of Christ, 4755; she observes his commandments: love, humility, and self-renunciation, 4106, 4120; she was founded by him as a community of life, love, and truth, (4118), 4123; along with Mary, she proclaims herself the servant of the Lord, to whom she subordinates all her service, 4618; she is called to choose, like Christ, the way of poverty and persecution, 4120; she strives to relieve the needs of the poor and afflicted and to serve Christ in them, 4120; she wants to continue the work of Christ, 4303, 4445.

The Church must not seek earthly honors, 4123; she is not inspired by any earthly ambition, 4303; her mission does not relate to the political, economic, or social order, but to the religious one, 4342; she is concerned that her mission should not be absorbed by preoccupations concerning the temporal order or reduced to them, 4758; God has divided concern for the human race between the power of the Church and that of the State, 3168.

The Church is faithful to God as well as to man, 4321; the action of the Church in the world vivified by amazement about man, that is, the gospel, 4642.

The Church has a mission of salvation with respect to the world and to man as her first path: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 3cc (mission of the Church to all nations and all people); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 4bf; 6cb (mission and tasks of the faithful/laity in the world); G 7a (relationship of the Church to world, society, and culture).

The Church is faithful to her mission –: when she condemns errors, slavery, and oppression, 4759; –: when she exercises her judgment regarding political movements, 4759.

The service of evangelization determines the identity of the Church and the originality of her contribution, 4617; proclamation of the gospel as her mission, 4755; the task of evangelizing is the grace, vocation, and identity of the Church, 4573; evangelization and the global promotion of human good as the two tasks of the Church: their unity and their distinction, 4758; the Church guards the heritage of God's word, 4333; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); evangelization in Latin America, 4930; in Africa, 5020.

The Church exists in order to evangelize, so that she might preach and teach the Word of God, be the channel of the gift of grace to man, reconcile sinners with God, and perpetuate Christ's sacrifice in the Mass, 4573; she takes the bread of life from the table of God's Word and Christ's Body and distributes it to the faithful, 4228.

The promotion of unity is connected with the mission of the Church, 4342.

The infallibility of the Church. Infallibility is attributed to the Church (generally), 2922, 3020, 4130, 4531, 4852. 2be

Cf. G 4bc and 6ba (participation of the faithful/laity in the prophetic office of Christ); H 3d (charism of infallibility).

3. The Essential Characteristics of the Church

a. THE CHURCH IS ONE

G 3a

The divine foundation of the Church's unity. The Church as a people made one with the unity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, 4104; the unity of the Divine Persons and the unity of the children of God, 4324. 3aa

It is God's intention to gather his scattered children into one, 4132.

The unity of the Church has its foundation in Christ (^ain the Spirit of Christ), ^a4133, ^a4169, 4301, 4342, (4344), ^a4345; he founded her as one and one only, 4185, 5088; the Church is joined together by the power of Christ, 4151; Christ (^athe work of Christ) perfects ^aand consummates the communion of the people of God in unity, 4187, ^a4332; the Church is the Mystical Body of Christ, 3300–3304; the faithful form one body in Christ, 4103; cf. G 2a (designations of the Church); Christ pleaded in prayer for the unity of his disciples, 4332; he commanded his disciples to treat one another as brothers, 4332; Christ is present in every community of the altar, 4151.

The Holy Spirit unites the Church ^ain communion and service, (3808), ^a4104, 4113, 4133, 4340, 4342; he unites his members, 3808; he is the foundation of unity for the Church in the teaching of the apostles, in the breaking of bread, and in prayer, 4132f.; he preserves the Church in the unity of the faith, 4150; he supports the harmony of the Church, 4146, (4152).

Cf. G 1b (Church as work of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit).

Through the sacrament of the Eucharist, the unity of the people of God is expressed and brought about, 4103, 4112, 4127, 4151; it is the sacrament and sign of unity, the bond of charity, 4047; the faithful thereby represent in a concrete way the unity of the people of God, 4127; it is the sacrament of the Bridegroom and the Bride, 4840; the Eucharist as a meal of brotherly solidarity and a foretaste of the heavenly banquet, 4338; unity and love as effects of the Eucharist among the faithful, 783, 1635, (1638, 1649), 3362, (4112); in the eucharistic sacrifice, the faithful are united with the worship of the Church in heaven, 4170; cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and Eucharist); K 5e (Eucharist as foundation and summit of the life of the Church).

Holding fast to the heritage of the Word of God, the entire holy people united with their shepherds remain steadfast in the teaching and communion of the apostles, in the breaking of the bread, and in prayers, 4213; the Church is one because of the unity of the spouse, the faith, the sacraments, and charity, 871; unity in confessing the one faith, celebrating divine worship in common, and keeping the fraternal harmony of the family of God, 4187; in holding fast to the heritage of the faith, unison is achieved between those who preside and the faithful, 4213; the faithful must cling to their bishop, as the Church does to Christ, and Jesus Christ to the Father, so that all may be of one mind through unity, 4152; cf. G 3ag (Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities); G 3cg (dangers and conditions for catholicity); G 4a (belonging to the Church).

3ab Unity of the Church as unity in diversity. The faith in the one and ^aunique Church (condemnations of affirmations in favor of a ^aschism or of the ^abranch theory), 5, 41f., 44, 46, ^a47f., 51, 150, 350, ^b446, ^b468f., 802, ^a870f., 872, 1050, ^b1159, ^{ca}2885–2888, ^b2937f., 2997–2999, 3300–3304, 4119, (4151), 4193f.

Communion of saints and those who are still pilgrims on earth, 3363, 4469–4471; all, the earthly Church and the heavenly Church –: have communion in love of God and neighbor and sing the same praise of God, 4169; –: are united in the liturgy in the one praise of God, 4170; –: grow in Christ's spirit to form one Church and cleave together in him, 4169; communion of the saints united with Christ, 4170; cf. J 1a (nature of the liturgy); K 5ed (the Eucharist as the sacrament of communion with the living and the dead); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

Christ did not form the Church as several communities similar in nature but in themselves distinct, 3303; unity consists in the fact that, because of communion with the pope and the profession of faith, there is a single flock under a single shepherd, 3060; Peter, ^aand with him the Roman pontiff, as his successor, is the principle and ^avisible foundation of unity of faith and communion, 4142, 4147; Christ himself entrusted the ministry of unity in the Church to the bishop of Rome in the person of the apostle Peter, 4822; the principle (root, foundation) of unity is ^athe primacy and ^bthe Magisterium, ^a2888, ^a3113, ^b3305–3310, (^a4134); care of Christ's whole flock has been entrusted to the pope, 4356; the desire of the faithful to be united in one flock under one shepherd, 4139; no additional burdens are to be imposed on the Eastern Churches, 4194; cf. H 2ba (leadership authority and primacy of the pope).

The chair of Peter protects legitimate diversity in the Church and assures that such differences do not hinder unity but rather serve it, 4134.

The visible social structure as sign of the Church's unity, 4344, 5108; cf. G 3ae (Church as a juridically constituted society).

The people of God must remain one and unique, 4132, 4158; it takes its citizens from all nations, 4133; it is composed of various ranks, 4134; its unity prefigures universal peace and promotes it, 4135; the Church is the sacrament or sign and instrument of union with God and the unity of the whole human race, 4026, 4101, 4124, (4321), 4342, 4343; the unity of man is fortified and fulfilled by the unity of the Church, 4342; the whole human race must be led toward the unity of the family of God, 4154, 4343; unity with the Eastern Churches must be established, 4194.

By virtue of the catholicity of the Church the parts bring their gifts to the other parts and to the whole Church so as to collaborate in unity, 4133; the parts and members of the Church should share goods (that is, spiritual riches, apostolic workers, and temporal resources) in common, 4134; the one body and the many members, 4113, 4332, 4506; cf. G 2a (designations of the Church); unanimous cooperation of the faithful, 4321; collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry: G 6ce; H 2e (people of God and the pastoral ministry of bishops); H 3i (people of God and the bishops' ministry of preaching); growth of solidarity in the Church until her perfection, 4332.

Diversity and unity ^ain ministries, in conditions and states of life, ^bin the gifts of grace, ministries, and activities, ^a4134, ^b4158; diversity and complementarity of the gifts of grace and responsibilities, 4855; true equality in dignity and activity in the building up of the Body of Christ, 4158; real equality of the faithful with diverse tasks, which do not favor the superiority of some vis-à-vis the others, 4606; one salvation, one hope, undivided charity, 4158; in Christ and in the Church no inequality on the basis of race or nationality, social condition or sex, 4158; a single faith and vocation of all to holiness, 4158; the diversity of the Eastern Churches in discipline and theology is legitimate, 4194; cf. H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office).

Catholic Christians, others who believe in Christ, and all mankind, called to salvation, belong to Catholic unity in various ways, 4135, 4193f.; all those who in some way belong already to the people of God must be fully incorporated into the one Body of Christ, 4190; cf. G 3cg (dangers and conditions for catholicity); G 4a (belonging to the Church).

3ac The one Church built by the multiplicity of charisms. The Church has at her disposal the gifts of the Holy Spirit, or charisms (^awith an enumeration of the various gifts), ^a178, 575, 3328, 4104, 4113, 4131, (4159); she has been endowed with heavenly goods ^athat build up and give life to her, 4340, ^a4189; these gifts are the life of grace, faith, hope, and love and other gifts, 4189; the Holy Spirit equips the people of God with virtues, 4131; the Holy Spirit directs the Church with hierarchical and charismatic gifts and adorns her with his fruits, 4104; the Christian receives the first-fruits of the Holy Spirit, 4322; the particular gifts of the faithful in any state serve the renewal and building up of the Church, (4113), 4131; the Holy Spirit distributes the hierarchical and charismatic gifts among all the faithful, 4856; their diversity and complementarity, 4855; the authority of the apostles is a particular gift of the Holy Spirit, 4113; ministers receive their ministry as a gift of grace from the Holy Spirit, 4857; those in the episcopal ministry have received the sure charism of truth, 4532; the gifts of the Spirit are diverse: he calls some to give clear witness to the desire for heaven or to the earthly service of men, 4338; the Holy Spirit also works through gifts and graces in the non-Catholic baptized, 4139; cf. B 3be and B 3bf (the Holy Spirit in the life of the Church and the faithful); F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit).

The Church receives salvific powers (^agifts) from her Founder, ^a4106, ^a4117, (4166), 4303; Christ offers man light and strength through his Spirit, 4310.

The faithful of the earthly and heavenly Church are strengthened in their unity by communication of spiritual goods, 4169; cf. M 1b (communion of saints).

In the Church there are always members with charismatic gifts, 3801; they are subject to the authority of the apostles, 4113; the faithful are not to seek after extraordinary gifts rashly, 4131; judgment as to their genuineness and proper use belongs to those who are appointed pastors, 4113, 4131. 3ad

The Church from and in the Churches. The one and only Catholic Church exists in and from particular Churches, 4134, 4147; relationship between the universal Church and particular Churches, 4921, 4922; the Mystical Body of Christ is also the Body of the Church, 4147; particular Churches are fashioned after the model of the universal Church, 4147; they retain their own traditions, without prejudice to the primacy of the chair of Peter, 4134; preserving the unity of faith and the unique divine constitution of the universal Church, they enjoy their own discipline, their own liturgical usage, and their own theological and spiritual heritage, 4147, 4193f.; the bishop of Rome and the college of bishops have a constitutive importance for the particular Churches, 4924; devotions proper to individual Churches also have a special dignity, 4013; their liturgies are recognized, 4013; cf. J 1eb (liturgies of particular Churches); the particular Churches should share all goods in common, 4134; certain Churches, notably the ancient patriarchal Churches, have begotten other Churches with which they are connected by a bond of charity in sacramental life and by rights and duties, 4147; there is no plurality of Churches existing side by side, 5088.

The patriarchates (of ^aConstantinople, ^bAlexandria, ^cAntioch, ^dJerusalem) as well as ^e*all their rights and privileges* are confirmed, ^{bc}351, ^{abcd}661, ^{abcd}811, 861, ^{abcde}1308; cf. H 2c (pastoral ministry of bishops); the pope suppresses the title Patriarch of the West, 5106.

The variety of local Churches with one common aspiration is evidence of the catholicity of the undivided Church, 4147; the Church of Christ is present in all legitimate local congregations of the faithful; united with their pastors they are called churches in the New Testament: In their locality these are the new people called by God, 4151; unity is manifest in any community of the altar under the sacred ministry of the bishop, 4151.

The college of bishops expresses in its members the diversity and universality of the people of God, and, under its one head, it expresses its unity, 4146; the collegial unity of the bishops is shown in the mutual relations of the individual bishops to the particular Churches and to the universal Church, 4147, 4924; collegial spirit and groupings of bishops, 4147; all the bishops together and with the pope represent the entire Church, 4147; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion); H 2c (pastoral ministry of bishops); H 2d (collegial acts of pastoral ministry); H 3ca (bishops as organs of official doctrinal decisions); H 3cc (councils and synods); H 3cd (universal nonconciliar teaching); H 3dc (infallibility of bishops).

Union between the bishop of Rome and the bishops, 4146; the Roman pontiff, as the successor of Peter, is the perpetual and visible principle and foundation of unity of the diversity of the bishops, 4147; because of its primacy, the Roman See is called “mother” or “teacher” of all the (particular) Churches, 774, 1616, 1868, 2781; the meaning of the concept of “hierarchical communion”, 4355; the hierarchical communion of all the bishops with the supreme pontiff is certainly firmly rooted in tradition, 4358; cf. G 3ab (ecclesial unity as unity in diversity); H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion); H 2bc (pope and bishops).

The individual bishops are the visible principle and foundation of unity in their particular Churches, 4147; the Church is united and ordered under the bishops, 4026; they represent the Church, 4147; they must promote and safeguard the unity of faith and the discipline common to the whole Church, instruct the faithful to love the whole Mystical Body of Christ, and promote every activity that is of interest to the whole Church, 4147; by governing well their own Church, they contribute to the welfare of the whole Mystical Body, 4147; the powers of the bishops in their particular Churches: H 2c (pastoral ministry of bishops); H 3ca (bishops as organs of official doctrinal decisions).

Collaboration of individual bishops among themselves and with the successor of Peter, 4147; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion); H 2d (collegial acts of pastoral ministry); H 3cc (councils and synods); H 3cd (universal nonconciliar teaching); they must give help to the other Churches, 4147.

The local community over which the priest presides is also called the Church of God, 4154; in the local communities, the faithful are gathered together by the preaching of the gospel of Christ, and the mystery of the Lord’s Supper is celebrated, 4151; in any community of the altar, Christ is present, 4151; associated with the bishop and sharing his duties, the priests make the bishop present in the local community, 4042, 4154; they make the universal Church visible, 4042, 4154; cf. H 5 (ministerial office of priests).

It is up to the Christian communities themselves to analyze their situation, to shed on it the light of the gospel, and to create principles of thought, judgment, and action from the social teaching of the Church, 4500.

Condemned opinions: [Every Christian community, from the very fact that it is united in the name of Christ, is endowed with all the powers that the Lord wished to give to his Church], 4720; 4923; [In virtue of the apostolicity of the single local communities, each community, in the event of its being deprived for some time of such a constituent element as the Eucharist, could “reappropriate” its powers and designate its own president and animator; God himself would not refuse, in such circumstances, to grant such powers, even without sacramental ordination], 4722.

Priests gather together God’s family as a brotherhood, 4153; they must strive to lend their efforts to the pastoral work of the whole diocese and the whole Church, 4154; together with their bishop they constitute one priesthood, 4154; cf. H 5 (ministerial office of priests).

Concept of the Church of the people, 4739; misunderstanding of the Church of the poor as the Church of the class, 4738; certain theologies of liberation understand the Church of the people as a Church of the class, a Church of the oppressed people, 4740; the very structures of the Church are then criticized and the sacramental and hierarchical structure called into question, 4741.

The family is a kind of domestic church, 4128.

3ae The Church as a juridically constituted society. The Church is constituted and ordered in the world as a society, 4118f., 4124, 4340, 4344; she is structured with hierarchical organs, 4118; the visible social structure as sign of the Church’s unity, 4344.

The Church is, according to her nature and juridical constitution, a perfect society (“because she possesses all the means necessary to attain her end), 2919, ^a3167, 3171, 3685; this is why she is the highest society in her order, 3167f., 3171, 3685; she is not inferior to the civil power, 3167; she is one of the two highest powers by which the world is governed, 347, 362, (642), 767, 873.

Because of her social structure, the Church can also be enriched by human social life; not that there is any lack in the constitution given her by Christ, but so that she can better understand, express, and adjust it to our times, 4344.

In all essential points the constitution of the Church is based on divine directives, and therefore it is not subject to human arbitrariness, 3114; her constitution (“her sacramental and hierarchical structure) was given by Christ, (4344), ^a4741; the errors of modernism concerning the constitution of the Church are condemned, 3452–3456, 3492f.

On the use of the concepts of “college”, “stable group” (coetus stabilis), “order” (ordo), or “body” (corpus), 4353.

Certain theologies of liberation understand Church of the people to mean Church of the class, 4740; the very structures of the Church are thereby criticized and the sacramental and hierarchical structure called into question, 4741.

The Church possesses the right to education and religious instruction, 2892, 2945–2948, 3685–3689.

The Church claims for herself the exclusive right to institute the clergy, 604, 659, 712, 1063, 1769, 1777.

The Church claims for herself the right to temporal goods, 941, 1126f., 1137f., 1160, 1166, 1168, 1181/1189, 1194, 1274–1276, 1491, 2281, 2924–2927, 2975f.

The Church from and in particular Churches: G 3ad.

Unity and diversity in the Church: G 3ab.

Belonging to the Church and the community of the faithful: G 4.

Ministry in the Church: G 5; and H (God guides, instructs, and sanctifies the Church through her ministers).

The place of laity in the Church: G 6.

The relationship of the Church to the State and international institutions: G 7b.

The order of the Church: L 14.

3af Threats to unity in the Church and her renewal. ^a*Conflicts*, ^b*heresies* in the Church, ^c*disruption of the Church* and overcoming them, ^a1510, ^a1520, ^b1600, ^c1635, ^c1725, ^b1738; deviations, or risks of deviation, and their damage to the faith and Christian living, 4751; the Church must be purified of errors, 1510, 1520, 1763.

The Church was founded by Christ as one and one only; nevertheless there are many Christian communions, 4185; divisions from the beginnings of the Church; large Communities came to be separated from full communion with the Catholic Church (for which men on both sides were to blame), 4188; this contradicts the will of Christ, scandalizes the world, and damages the preaching of the gospel, 4185, (4530), 5000, 5001.

Differences of opinion among Christians and their clarification in dialogue, love, and with a view to communion, 4343, 5002, 5003.

The Church is strengthened by the power of the risen Lord to overcome her difficulties, 4121; the Holy Spirit (“the Spirit of Christ) brings about the renewal of the Church (^b*through the power of the gospel*; ^c*through special graces among the faithful of every rank*), ^b4104, ^a4116, (^c4113), 4124, ^c4131.

Catholics must strive for the reestablishment of unity among all Christians by making a common effort of purification and renewal, 4530; worship in common with the Eastern Churches is possible, 4193; dialogue of conversion, 5006.

Cf. G 3cg (dangers and conditions for catholicity).

3ag The Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities. Catholics belong to that Church which Christ founded and which is directed by the successors of Peter and the other apostles, who are the depositories of the original apostolic tradition, living and intact, which is the permanent heritage of doctrine and holiness of that same Church, 4530; the Church, constituted and organized as a society, subsists in the Catholic Church, 4119, 5001, 5108; all long for the one visible Church of God, 4186; the Catholic faithful, all who believe in Christ, and all men called to salvation belong in various ways to catholic unity, 4135; whoever believes in Christ and

- has been truly baptized is in communion with the Catholic Church even though this communion is imperfect, 4188, 5108; outside the Catholic Church are found significant elements and endowments (^athe written Word of God, interior gifts of the Holy Spirit, and visible elements that build up and give life to the Church), that tend toward Catholic unity, ^a*since they come from Christ and lead back to Christ*, 4119, ^a4189; agreement with the Eastern Churches, 4193f.; truly Christian endowments, derived from a common heritage, are found with the separated brethren, 4530; bond in the Holy Spirit with the baptized, though they do not profess the faith in its entirety or do not preserve unity with the successor of Peter, because of Sacred Scripture as a norm of belief and a pattern of life, baptism, the sacraments in their own Churches, religious zeal and faith, communion in prayer and in other spiritual goods, 4139; several also possess an episcopacy, celebrate the Eucharist, and venerate the Mother of God, 4139, (4179); they rightly call themselves “Christian” and are recognized as brothers in the Lord because they have been justified through baptism and incorporated into Christ, 4188; they call their communities “Churches of God”, 4186; the Catholic Church holds in high esteem the things that other Christian Churches and Ecclesial Communities have contributed or are contributing toward making the history of man more human, 4340.
- The Spirit of Christ uses the separated Churches as means of salvation, 4189; the Holy Spirit also acts through the gifts and graces in non-Catholic baptized, 4139, 4189; the separated Churches and communities are means of salvation whose power derives from the fullness of grace and truth entrusted to the Catholic Church, 4189; holy actions accomplished in them can engender a life of grace and give access to the community of salvation, 4189; cf. G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation).
- The Church of Christ is not a collection of Churches and Ecclesial Communities, 4530; it may not be affirmed that: [Christ’s Church nowhere really exists today, so that she is to be considered only as an end that all Churches and Ecclesial Communities must strive to reach], 4530, 5001.
- There are divergences in doctrine, discipline, and structure between the other Christian Churches and Ecclesial Communities and the Catholic Church that create obstacles to full ecclesiastical communion, 4188; the different relationship to the Eastern Churches, 4193f.; the separated brethren, whether considered as individuals or as Communities and Churches, are not blessed with that unity which Jesus Christ wished to bestow on the faithful and which the Sacred Scripture and the tradition of the Church proclaim, 4190; only through the Catholic Church, the all-embracing means of salvation, can they benefit fully from the means of salvation, 4190; cf. G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation).
- Those who are born into other Churches and Ecclesiastical Communities cannot be accused of the sin involved in the separation; they are to be embraced with respect and affection, 4188.
- Common participation in worship (communicatio in sacris) that harms the unity of the Church or involves error, aberration in the faith, scandal, and indifferentism is forbidden by divine law, 4181.
- Mother Church never ceases to hope and work for unity among all Christians, 4139, 4185; Catholics must strive for the reestablishment of unity among all Christians by making a common effort of purification and renewal, 4530; Catholics must acknowledge and esteem the truly Christian endowments derived from our common heritage that are to be found among our separated brethren, 4530; the so-called ecumenical movement for the restoration of unity among all Christians is fostered by the grace of the Holy Spirit and by Christ, 4186; the attainment of union is the concern of the whole Church, faithful and shepherds, 4191; the expression of the Catholic faith should never become an obstacle to dialogue, 4192; doctrine should be clearly presented in its entirety and must suffer no loss thereby, 4192; the Catholic faith must be explained more profoundly and precisely, in such terms as separated Christians can also understand, 4192; this is also true for the ministry of Peter and the exercise of the primacy, 5009–5012; Catholic theologians and ecumenical dialogue, 4192; when comparing doctrines with one another, one should remember that in Catholic doctrine there exists an order or hierarchy of truths, 4192; on the hierarchy of truths, cf. A 4bb (methods of theology); H 3bb (subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions); areas needing fuller study, 5004.
- The Catholic Church and the Eastern Churches separated from her: Promotion of unity with the separated Eastern Churches, 4181; agreement in faith, 4193f.; the Churches of the East and of the West have the right and duty to rule themselves, each in accordance with her own established disciplines, 4180.
- Reconciliation with the Church of Constantinople, 4430–4435; the mutual desire for reconciliation, pursuit of dialogue with the goal of full communion of faith, of brotherly concord, and of sacramental life, 4193f., 4434f.
- Christians of the separated Eastern Churches, if they ask and have the right dispositions, may be admitted to the sacraments of penance, the Eucharist, and the anointing of the sick, 4182; this corresponds to the practice of the Catholic Church with regard to the Eastern Churches because of the needs of salvation and spiritual good of souls, 4181, 4193f.
- Catholics may ask for the sacraments of penance, the Eucharist, and the anointing of the sick from a minister of the separated Eastern Churches, if the sacraments are valid, in the case of necessity or a genuine spiritual benefit and access to a Catholic priest is physically or morally impossible, 4182, 4193f.
- Common participation by Catholics with their Eastern separated brethren in sacred functions, things, and places is allowed for a just cause, 4183, 4193f.; cf. J 1ec (liturgical communion with the separated Eastern Churches).
- The Catholic Church and the Lutheran World Federation: There exists consensus in the basic statements of the doctrine of justification, 5073, 5081; differing explanations in particular statements are not incompatible with it, 5073, 5081.
- The schism of Archbishop Lefebvre and its roots: a false concept of tradition, 4820–4823.

G 3b

b. THE CHURCH IS HOLY

- 3ba The divine foundation of ecclesial holiness. The Church is supernatural ^a*because of her end and the means toward that end*, ^a3167, 3300f., 3685; she is spiritual, 3167, 3300f.
Holiness is acquired in the Church through the grace of God, 4168.
Christ gave himself up for the Church in order to sanctify her, 4165.
The Holy Spirit was sent for the sanctification of the Church, 4104; the holiness of the Church is manifested in the fruits of grace that the Spirit produces in the faithful, 4165; the Holy Spirit brings about the renewal of the Church, 4104, 4116, (4113), 4124, 4131; gifts and charisms of the Holy Spirit in the Church: F 2cd and G 3ac.
Cf. G 1b (Church as the work of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit).
- 3bb Holiness and sin in the pilgrim Church and her renewal. The Church is called “holy” in the creeds, 1–5, 11–30, 36, 41f., 47, 51, 60–63, 150, 4119, (4151), 4165; she is without spot or wrinkle, 493, 575, (4841); in her proper truth, she is a gift of divine grace and a mystery of faith, 4737.
Condemned is the idea: [The Church is only a reality interior to history, herself subject to those laws that are supposed to govern the development of history in its immanence], 4737.
The necessity of the Church for salvation: G 2bc; the Church’s mission of salvation: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
The holiness of the Church is expressed in many ways in individuals, 4165; through her holiness, the Church anticipates the renovation of the world, 4168; Church as the communion of saints, 4854; gifts and charisms of the Holy Spirit in the Church: G 3ac; vocation of all the faithful to holiness and the various ways of sanctification: G 4ba; G 4bb.
Because of her marvelous propagation, her holiness, fruitfulness, unity, and stability, the Church is a perpetual motive for the credibility of the faith, 3013; cf. A 2bc (credibility of the faith).
The fruits of holiness are manifested in history through the life of the saints, 4166; the saints are guideposts to perfect union with Christ and to holiness, 4170; because those in heaven are more closely united with Christ, they establish the whole Church more firmly in holiness and contribute to her edification, 4169; God manifests his presence in the saints, 4170; cf. M 1b and M 3bd (communion of saints).
Mary is a type of the Church in the order of faith, charity, and perfect union with Christ, 4177f.; in the hierarchy of holiness it is the “woman”, Mary of Nazareth, who is the figure of the Church, 4841; the Church becomes more like her Type by progressing in faith, hope, and charity and doing the will of God, 4178; Mary as the image of the motherhood of the Church, 4177; Christ was born of the Virgin that through the Church he may be born and may increase in the hearts of the faithful also, 4178; Mary as example of maternal love, which should animate the apostolic mission of the Church, 4178; in Mary, the Church enters more intimately into the mystery of the Incarnation and becomes more and more like her Spouse, 4178; Church as Mother of the faithful or the Bride of Christ: G 2a (designations of the Church).
In Mary, the Church has already reached perfection, 4178; in the Blessed Virgin, the Church has already reached perfection without spot or wrinkle, 4841; Mary is the image and beginning of the Church as she is to be perfected in the world to come and shines forth on earth for the pilgrim Church as a sign of hope and solace, 4179; she precedes on the path of holiness, 4841; Mary protects the Church, 4619; with Mary’s protection and intercession, the Church will overcome the “sinful structures” in personal and social life and will win the “authentic liberation” of Christ, 4619; cf. E 6 (Mary, the Mother of Jesus Christ); esp. E 6f (Mary—paragon of the Church and of believers).
Joseph is the patron protector of the Church because he presided over the Holy Family, 3262f., cf. E 6db (cooperation of Joseph in the redemption).
The pilgrim Church journeys in a foreign land and seeks those things that are above, 4111; she seeks a future and abiding city, 4124; the faithful journey as pilgrims toward the holy city Jerusalem, 4008; Christian communion among wayfarers brings us closer to Christ, 4170; in Christ’s Spirit, we journey as pilgrims toward the consummation of human history, 4345; the faithful are citizens of a kingdom that is of a heavenly rather than of an earthly nature, 4133; that the earthly and the heavenly city penetrate each other is a fact accessible to faith alone, 4340; cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and kingdom of God; continuity and growth of the Church); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).
The Church is in the world and bears its form: G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind).
On her pilgrim way, the Church experiences ^a*suffering*, ^b*temptations and tribulations*, ^c*the persecutions of the world*, and ^d*the consolations of God*, ^a4115, ^d4121, ^b4124, ^c4147, ^c4344; she knows that she is tiny and impotent, 4619; communities of the altar are frequently small and poor or living in the diaspora, 4151; there are martyrs in the Church, 1822, 2779, 4321; the Church is called to choose, as Christ did, the way of poverty and persecution, 4120.
The Church is at the same time holy and in need of purification; she follows the way of penance and renewal, 4120, 4321; her holiness is imperfect, 4168; she always has need of ripening, 4343; the whole Church must always be evangelized anew, 4625; the Church is strengthened by the power of God’s grace in view of fidelity and constant renewal, 4124; by the power of the risen Lord, the Church is given strength that she might overcome her sorrows and her challenges, 4121; the Holy Spirit (^athe Spirit of Christ) brings about the renewal of the Church (^b*through the power of the gospel*; ^c*through special graces among the faithful of every rank*), ^b4104, ^a4116, (^c4113), 4124, ^c4131; youth is a symbol of the Church, called to a constant renovation and renewal, that is, to a continual rejuvenation, 4492.

The Church consists not only of the predestined and saints, 1201, 1203, 1205f., 1221, 2408, 2463, 2472–2478, 3803.

The Church embraces sinners ^a*on their earthly pilgrimage*, 4120, ^a4190; there have been some among the clergy and laity in the history of the Church who have been unfaithful to the Spirit of God, 4343; the Church has been wounded by the sins of the faithful, 4128; she cooperates in the conversion of sinners through love, example, and prayer, 1674, 4128; through the Word of God and the sacraments, man is freed from the power of sin and the power of the Evil One and is brought into a communion of love with God, 4755; sinners who approach the sacrament of penance are reconciled with the Church, 4128; the power of the Church to forgive all sins, 349; the Church as mediator of the forgiveness of sins: D 4b (collective sins: Church and sinners); D 4c (sinful structures of society: Church and sin); D 7bb (Church as mediatrix of forgiveness); K 3 (sacrament of baptism); K 6 (sacrament of penance).

The distance between the message proclaimed and the human weakness of those to whom the gospel is entrusted, 4343; as a weak man, the bishop is able to have compassion on the ignorant and erring, 4152.

The Church must be purified of errors, 1510, 1520, 1763; she must combat the failures of her members, 4343; reestablishment of unity among all Christians in a common effort of purification and renewal, 4530; cf. G 3af (threats to unity in the Church and her renewal).

Completion of the Church ^a*at the end of time*, ^b*in heavenly glory*, ^c*in the world to come*, ^a4102, ^b4168, ^c4179, ^b4190, ^a4198, ^a4332, ^a4340; cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

C. THE CHURCH IS CATHOLIC

G 3c

The foundation of catholicity in God. The Church must expand and reach all the fullness of God, 4117; at the end of time, all the just from Adam on will be gathered together with the Father in the universal Church, 4102; the universality of the Church is a gift of the Lord, 4133; by communicating his Spirit, Christ called together the faithful from all nations and made them his Body, 4112.

3ca

The Holy Spirit offers all the possibility of being united to the paschal mystery, 4322.

Cf. F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

The universality of the Church. The faith of the creeds in the "Catholic" Church, 3–5, 12, 15, 19, 21, 23, 27–30, 36, 41//51, 60, 126, 150, 4119, (4133, 4151, 4186).

3cb

The catholicity of the Church, the communion and unity of her different parts, 4133, 4147.

The people of God are gathered from different nations, 4133f.

The option for the poor, from which no one is excluded, manifests the universality of the nature and mission of the Church, 4761.

The mission of the Church to all nations and all people. The Church is destined to embrace all mankind ^a*without limits of place or time*, 350, ^a3166, 3685, 4103, 4124, 4132f., 4135, 4141, 4154, ^a4159, 4301, 4332, 4343, 4890; she enters into the history of mankind and at the same time transcends time and the confines of race, 4124, 4135; in her universality, she is not bound to any particular form of human culture or to any political, economic, or social system, 4342; she was sent to proclaim the kingdom of Christ and of God and to establish it in all nations, 4106.

The messianic people is for all mankind the seed of unity, hope, and salvation, 4123; it serves as the instrument for the redemption of all, 4123; it was sent into the whole world, 4123, 4186.

Catholic Christians, others who believe in Christ, and all men called to salvation belong to the Catholicity, 4135. Cf. G 2bd (mission and task of the Church). Mission of the Church in Africa, 5029; mission of the Church in Latin America, 4930.

The Church and evangelization or mission. Faith depends upon proclamation: A 2bb.

3cd

The Church must, like Christ, transmit the gospel, 4573; the proclamation of Jesus: E 2bb; E 3bb; Christ himself teaches through the Church, 3806; he wants his people to grow through the proclamation of the gospel, 4187; the Church has the right and duty to explain the revealed doctrine of which she is the guardian and teacher, 807, 3012, 3020, 3540; by preaching and baptism the Church brings forth children who are conceived of the Holy Spirit and born of God to immortal life, 4178.

The Church has received the mandate of Christ to proclaim the saving truth from the apostles, 4141; to them Christ gave the mandate to proclaim the gospel everywhere (^ato all creation), ^a4006, 4147, 4207, 4332, ^a4185; on Pentecost he sent them the Holy Spirit so that, through his power, they might be his witnesses to the ends of the earth, 4145, 4148; they proclaimed the death and Resurrection of the Lord, 4405; they preached and made use of various modes of speaking: catecheses, stories, testimonies, hymns, doxologies, prayers, and other literary forms of that time, 4405; through their preaching, the Church was gathered together, 4143.

The task of evangelizing is the grace, vocation, and identity of the Church, 4573; she determines her identity and the originality of her contribution, 4617; the proclamation of the gospel as the proper mission of the Church, 4755; the Church exists in order to evangelize, 4573; she is concerned to preach the gospel in ever wider areas and to ever greater numbers of people, 4575.

- Evangelizing is the proclamation (^aand teaching) of salvation (^aof God's Word), ^a4573, 4755; it must be spread to all nations (^ato all men without distinction), ^a4617, 4620; for the Church, evangelizing means bringing the good news into all the strata of humanity in order to transform humanity from within and make it new, 4574; Jesus' special predilection for those who are suffering and those who are poorest must be reflected, 4617; the Church must proclaim Christ as the fullness of the religious life, 4197; she continues unceasingly to send heralds of the gospel until new churches are established and can themselves proclaim the gospel, 4141; in the proclamation of the gospel, the Church seeks to bring her hearers to profess the faith, she prepares them for baptism, snatches them from the slavery of error, and incorporates them in Christ, 4141; she supports the missions, 4140.
- Christians have received a message of salvation that must be proposed to all, 4159, 4301; love impels them to do so, 4328; every disciple of Christ has the obligation to spread the faith, 4141; within the Church, all are servants of the gospel according to their role and their charism, 4618; the young must carry the faith into the world, 4492, 4635; in the local communities, the faithful are gathered together by the proclamation of the gospel of Christ, 4151; the mystery of Christ must be proclaimed according to the particular culture, 5082; cf. A 2bb (faith and proclamation).
- As successors to the apostles, bishops receive from the Lord the mission to teach all nations and to proclaim the gospel to every creature, (4145), 4147f., 4152; pastors have the task of teaching the gospel to all people and to the entire human family, (4149), 4534; mission has the character of dialogue, 5083; pastors, by their prayer, preaching, and works of charity must also take care of those who are not yet of the one flock, 4152; they must exhort their faithful to apostolic and missionary efforts, 4152; they must supply to the missions both workers and spiritual and material aid, 4147; on the successor of Peter was imposed the duty of spreading the Christian name, 4147; cf. H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 3ca and H 3cb (bishops and pope as organs of official doctrinal decisions).
- Priests should be concerned about bringing the whole of mankind into the unity of the Church, 4154; see H 5 (ministerial office of priests).
- Evangelization by the laity receives its specific quality and force in that it is carried out in the ordinary surroundings of the world, 4161; the laity must work to extend the divine plan of salvation to all men of each epoch, 4159; even when preoccupied with temporal cares, the laity can and must evangelize the world and cooperate in the growth of the kingdom of Christ in the world, 4161; evangelization by the laity: G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).
- In the task of evangelization by the laity, the state of life of marriage and the family appear particularly invaluable, 4161; parents should be the first preachers of the faith to their children, 4128; cf. G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family).
- Help from the world, individuals, and the human community in the spread of the gospel, 4340, 5083.
- Ministry of evangelization made more difficult by sin, 4619; obstacles to the proclamation of the gospel to the entire world because of the disunity of Christians, 4185, 4530.
- The man who is to be evangelized is a person subject to social and economic problems, 4579; cf. C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); evangelization aims at –: the full liberation of man, 4626; –: the authentic realization of man, 4626; –: personal conversion and social transformation, 4620; it makes man the subject of his own individual and communitarian development, 4628; evangelization means –: not ignoring justice, liberation, development, and peace in the world, but promoting them, 4579; –: promotion of man, 4579; the unity and the distinction between evangelization and human promotion, 4758; the Church wishes to affect and upset, through the power of the gospel, criteria of judgment, values, lines of thought, sources of inspiration, and models of life that are in contrast with the God's Word and plan of salvation, 4575; the duty of the people of God and of every Christian to evangelize in the face of the misery and injustice of Latin America, 4619; the Church in Latin America must proclaim the gospel to the poor and be in solidarity with them, 4496; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change), D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures).
- The witness of a poor Church evangelizes the rich and converts them, 4634; the people's religious life is not just an object of evangelization, but an active way in which the people continually evangelize themselves, 4624; like the Church as a whole, the religion of the people must be constantly evangelized over again, 4625; cf. G 7ae (Church and culture: popular religion).
- Evangelization and culture: The gospel and evangelization do not belong to any culture, but they are not incompatible with them and can permeate them without becoming subject to any one of them, 4577; the gospel is lived by men who are profoundly linked to a culture, 4577; the rupture between gospel and culture is fatal, 4578; the culture or cultures must be evangelized and thus reborn, 4576, 4578, 4931, 4933–4936.
- Accommodated preaching as the law of all evangelization: The Church has expressed the message of Christ with the help of the ideas and terminology of various peoples, and she clarifies it with the help of philosophy in order to adapt the gospel to the grasp of all and to the needs of the learned, 4344; the right to introduce one's own culture in the liturgy, 4939; each nation can thus express the message of Christ in its own way, 4344; promotion of exchange between the Church and various cultures; the Church also needs specialists for this exchange—believers and unbelievers, 4344; the mission of the Church should correspond to the conditions of today's world, 4162; cf. G 7ae (Church and culture: popular religion).
- The principle of religious freedom favors the invitation of men to the Christian faith, 4245; freedom from constraint in the acceptance of faith: L 5g (human rights).

- The relationship of the Church to religions. There is found among non-Christian peoples the perception of a hidden power, at times a recognition of a Supreme Being or a Father, 4196; evangelization implies dialogue with religions, 4895, 5025, 5026; spiritual and moral goods that are found among the followers of other religions must be recognized, preserved, and promoted by Christians, 4196; elements of sanctification and of truth are found outside the Church that, as gifts of Christ, impel toward catholic unity, 4119; those who have not yet received the gospel are related in various ways to the people of God, 4140; cf. C 4dd (God and religions); F 1b (universal salvific will of God); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation).
- The Church is linked spiritually to the Jewish people (^a*because of God's covenant and his election, the promises, and the ancestry of Jesus Christ*; ^b*because of the common heritage*), ^a4140, ^b4198; the Church, the new Covenant in Christ, was prepared in the history of the people of Israel and in the Old Covenant, 4102, 4122; the beginnings of the faith and election of the Church are found in the patriarchs, Moses, and the prophets, 800, 4198, (4221); all the Christian faithful are included in the call of Abraham, 4198; the salvation of the Church is foreshadowed by the chosen people's exodus from the land of bondage, 4198; the Church has received the revelation of the Old Testament through Israel, 4198; cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); E 1b and E 1c (promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant and deliverance of Old Testament believers); G 1bb (Church prefigured in the Old Testament); G 2ba (Church of Jews and Gentiles); K 1a (sacramental signs in the Old Covenant).
- Although they did not accept the gospel, the Jews are loved by God for the sake of their Fathers; the Church awaits that day on which all peoples will address the Lord in a single voice, 4198; together with the prophets, the Church awaits the day of fulfillment, 4198.
- The Passion of Jesus cannot be charged against all the Jews, without distinction, then alive, or against the Jews of today, 4198; although the Church is the new people of God, the Jews should not be presented as rejected or accursed by God, 4198; the Church decries hatred, persecutions, displays of anti-Semitism, directed against Jews at any time and by anyone, 4198.
- God's plan of salvation includes those who acknowledge the Creator, particularly Muslims, 4140, (4197); the Church regards the latter with esteem: they hold fast to the faith of Abraham, to adoration of the one God; they venerate Jesus and Mary, await judgment, and value the moral life, prayer, almsgiving, and fasting, (4140), 4197; quarrels and hostilities between Christians and Muslims in the past, 4197; both should forget the past in order to work for mutual understanding and to preserve as well as to promote together social justice and moral welfare, as well as peace and freedom for all mankind, 4197; cf. A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths).
- The perception and recognition of a Supreme Being and a Father penetrate the lives of the followers of other religions with a religious sense, 4196; example of –: Hinduism: expression of the divine mystery in myths and philosophy, 4196; –: Buddhism: recognition of the insufficiency of the world and teaching a way to perfect liberation and supreme illumination, 4196; religions try to counter the restlessness of the human heart by proposing “ways”, comprising teachings, rules of life, and sacred rites, 4196; they often reflect a ray of that truth which enlightens all men, 4196; the Catholic Church rejects nothing that is true and holy in these religions, especially in Hinduism and Buddhism, 4196; dialogue and collaboration with the followers of other religions, whereby the good things, spiritual and moral, as well as the socio-cultural values found among these men are recognized, preserved, and promoted, 4196; cf. A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths).
- God is not far from those who in shadows and images seek the unknown God, 4140.
- The Church must ceaselessly proclaim Christ, who is the way, the truth, and the life; in him men find the fullness of religious life, 4196; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission).
- The relationship of the Church to nonbelievers and atheism. Elements of sanctification and of truth are found outside the Church that, as gifts of Christ, impel toward catholic unity, 4119.
- Those who have not yet received the gospel are related in various ways to the people of God, 4140; those who through no fault of their own do not know the gospel of Christ or his Church yet sincerely seek God and strive to do his will can attain eternal salvation and receive the helps necessary for salvation, 4140; whatever good or truth is found among them is looked upon by the Church as a preparation for the gospel, 4140; cf. A 2ab (the human capacity to recognize religious truths); F 1b (universal salvific will of God); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation).
- Forms and reasons of atheism: C 4kh.
- The Church and atheism: The Church rejects the doctrines and measures of atheism ^a*as contradicting reason and human experience*, 3021f., ^a4321; responsibility of the faithful for atheism (if they conceal the face of religion through incorrect faith education, teaching, or practice), 4319; the Church takes seriously the reasons for atheism and examines them, 4321; cooperation between believers and nonbelievers in the construction of the world, 4321; the Church invites atheists to consider the gospel of Christ, 4321.
- Adequate presentation of the doctrine and integral life of the Church and her members as remedies against atheism, (4319), 4321; when a divine instruction and the hope of life eternal are wanting, man's dignity is wounded, 4321.
- Eschatological hope does not hinder the accomplishment of earthly tasks but, rather, motivates them: C 4ic (order of human activity); C 4ij (Christians and human activity); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).
- Dangers and conditions for catholicity. Catholics belong to that Church which Christ founded and which is governed by the successors of Peter and the other apostles, who are the depositories of the original apostolic tradition, living and intact, which is the permanent heritage of truth and holiness of that same Church, 4530; desire of the faithful for union in one flock under one shepherd, 4139; cf. G 4a (belonging to the Church).

Aspects of catholicity that do not exist in all Churches: Recognition of the profession of faith, the sacraments, and ecclesiastical government and communion, (3802), 4137, 4139; there are divergences in doctrine, discipline, and structure between the other Christian Churches and Ecclesial Communities and the Catholic Church, 4188; dialogue with the Church of Constantinople with the goal of full communion in faith and sacraments, 4435; cf. G 3af (threats to unity in the Church and her renewal); G 3ag (Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities).

G 3d

d. THE CHURCH IS APOSTOLIC

3da Christ founds the Church on the apostles. Faith in the apostolic Church in the creeds, 42–49, 60, 150, 4119, (4151).

Founded on the apostles: Christ built the Church through the mission of the apostles, 4142; he founded her in the apostles and built her on Peter, 4143; he commissioned Peter and the other apostles to extend and direct the Church, 4119, 4141, 4143, (4144); in their proclamation of the gospel, the Church was gathered together, 4143; preaching of the gospel by the apostles: G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); the apostles and their successors established Churches, 4147; the mission of the apostles was confirmed on Pentecost, 4143; it will last to the end of the world, 4144.

Christ formed the apostles after the manner of a college or a stable group, over which he placed Peter, 4143; to this college Christ entrusted all the blessings of the New Covenant, 4190; according to the disposition of the Lord, the apostles form one apostolic college, 4146; they are sharers in Christ's power, 4143; the dignity of the apostles is equal, but there is a difference in power, 282, 2594.

The power of binding and loosing was granted to the college of apostles as well as to Peter, 4146; cf. K 6d (minister of the sacrament of penance).

Endowment of the apostles by Christ with the Holy Spirit for the fulfillment of their mission ^aon Pentecost, 4145, ^a4148; the authority of the apostles is a special gift of the Holy Spirit, 4113; those who have received charisms are subject to them, 4113.

Christ –: did not include women among the Twelve, 4592, 4980, 5040; –: did not confide the apostolic ministry to any woman, 4593, 4981, 5041; even Mary was not included in the college of the twelve apostles, 4594, 4981, 4982; Christ called only men as his apostles, 4840; the apostles (thus men) were with Christ at the Last Supper and received the Holy Spirit on the day of his Resurrection, 4840.

Founded on Peter: Christ built the Church on Peter, 4143; Peter was commissioned to shepherd the Church, 4119; meaning and functions of Peter's ministry, 5009–5011; Christ established Peter as prince of the apostles, 3055; he placed him as the rock and the bearer of the keys of the Church and made him shepherd of the whole flock, 4146; he stands at the head of the college of the apostles, 4143, 4190; thus the primacy of Peter, 350f., 446, 640, 774f., 3053f., 3055, 3308, (4144); various designations of Peter because of his primacy, 3308; the exercise of the primacy is to be defined more precisely in ecumenical dialogue, 5012.

Peter is the ^asecond and ^bvisible foundation of the Church, ^a774, (^a3051), ^b4611; he is the visible head of the whole Church, 942, (944), 1207, 3055; as the visible source and foundation of unity of faith and communion, Peter was placed above the other apostles, 3051, 4142; Peter received his power of jurisdiction directly from Christ and not through the mediation (^aof synodal decisions) of the Church, ^a350, ^a640, 3054, 3055; he was the vicar of Christ, 942, 1263.

Peter received the complete power of jurisdiction, 1052; not only a primacy of honor, 3055; the apostles did not receive their power without Peter or against Peter, 3309; their power of jurisdiction was subject to the power of Peter, 1052; even Paul was not equal to Peter (contrary to the error of twin heads of the Church), 1999, 3555; condemned: [Peter was never conscious of his primacy], 3455.

Peter received the office of binding and loosing, 4146.

3db The apostolic tradition in Scripture and tradition. Cf. A 3a (the nature of tradition); A 3c (tradition and Sacred Scripture); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications).

The Word of God was confided to the apostles by ^aChrist and by ^bthe Holy Spirit, ^a1501, ^a3006, ^a4207, ^{ba}4212, ^b4224; the Holy Spirit taught the apostles, 4405; the living tradition comes from the apostles, 4212f., 4534; the latter, by preaching, example, and observances, handed on what they had received from Christ or had learned through the prompting of the Holy Spirit, 4207; they passed on the Word of the Lord with fuller understanding and according to the needs of the listeners, 4405; cf. the preaching of the apostles: G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); the apostles have passed on the gospel as the foundation of the Church, 4144; what the apostles preached in fulfillment of the commission of Christ, afterward they themselves and apostolic men, under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, handed on to us in writing, 4225; cf. A 3b (Sacred Scripture); the apostolic tradition is preserved by the bishops instituted by the apostles and by their successors, 4144, 4208; cf. K 8 (sacrament of orders); faith confirms the memory of what Jesus did and taught, 4405; cf. A 2b (faith); L 2c (virtue of faith); the Church carries out the divine commission and ministry of guarding and interpreting the Word of God, 4219; cf. A 3be (interpretation of Sacred Scripture).

The apostolic tradition develops in the Church under the help of the Holy Spirit, 4210; through tradition, God uninterruptedly converses with the Church, 4211; in teaching, life, and worship, the Church hands on what she herself is and believes, 4209.

The apostolic tradition includes everything that contributes toward the holiness of life and increase in faith of the people of God, 4209; the practice of the Church in the liturgy, prayer, and the implementation of the faith as criteria for the tradition, 4209, 4213.

Tradition has a living character and is not opposed to the universal Magisterium of the Church or to the bishop of Rome, 4822; revelation is transmitted in its entirety, preserved, and faithfully expounded by the legitimate succession of bishops and the care of the Roman pontiff (Magisterium), 4214, 4150, 4534; cf. H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications).

Catholics belong to that Church which Christ founded and which is governed by the successors of Peter and the other apostles, who are the depositories of the original apostolic tradition, living and intact, which is the permanent heritage of truth and holiness of that same Church, 4530.

Ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles. The ministries receive the charism of the Holy Spirit from Christ, in uninterrupted 3dc succession from the apostles, through the sacrament of orders, 4857; the apostles passed on by the imposition of hands the spiritual gift that is transmitted in episcopal consecration, 4145; through the ordination of bishops, the apostolic succession is sacramentally perpetuated, 4821; cf. K 8c (episcopal ordination); 5097.

Condemned: [The Church is apostolic in the sense that all the baptized are considered successors of the apostles], 4720; [The sacrament of the Eucharist is not bound in a necessary way to sacramental ordination]. This concept wounds the apostolic structure of the Church, 4723.

The bishops: The apostles passed on their mission to their collaborators and arranged that thereafter other approved men would take up their ministry, 4144; the apostles appointed bishops and deacons, 101; in order to preserve the gospel, the apostles left bishops and handed over to them their authority to teach, 4208; the bishops are successors of the apostles by divine institution, 101, 1318, 1768, 3061, 3307, 3804, 4142, *4144, 4147f., 4153, 4187, 4208, 4533; through them the ministry of the apostles continues, which is to shepherd the flock, 4144; cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: continuity and growth of the Church); the special dignity of the episcopal ministry because the apostolic succession continues from the beginning, 4144; Christ has, through his apostles, made bishops partakers of his consecration and mission, 4153; those who are successors in the episcopal ministry have received the sure charism of truth, 4532; condemned: [The power to bind and to loose was given only to the apostles and not to their successors], 732, (1476).

The power of consecrating, offering, and administering his Body and Blood was given to the apostles and to their successors in the priesthood, (1740, 1752), 1764, 1771; the power to forgive sins was given to the apostles and to their successors in the priesthood, 308, 348, 1670, 1679, 1764, 1771; cf. K 6d (minister of the sacrament of penance); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

Through the Holy Spirit bishops are appointed through whose ministry priests are also commissioned for the direction of the Church, 3328.

Cf. G 3ad (Church from and in the Churches); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Jesus Christ and the apostles); H 2 (pastoral ministry of bishops); H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification).

The college of bishops: The state of the bishops succeeds to the college of apostles in the ministry of teaching and in pastoral direction, 4146, (4187), 5097; the body of the apostles perdures in it, 4146; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church: continuity and growth of the Church); the parallel between Peter and the rest of the apostles, on the one hand, and between the supreme pontiff and the bishops, on the other hand, does not imply the transmission of the apostles' extraordinary power to their successors or equality between the head of the college and its members, 4353; the hierarchical communion of all the bishops with the supreme pontiff is certainly firmly established in tradition, 4358; the pope belongs to the college of bishops, 5010.

College of bishops and the hierarchical communion of the ministry: G 3ad; H 1c; H 2d; H 3a; H 3ca; H 3cc; H 3cd; H 3dc.

The Petrine ministry of the bishop of Rome: the continuance of Peter's ministry in his successors, 4144; the functions of Peter's ministry, 5008–5011; cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: continuity and growth of the Church); the bishop of Rome is the successor of the apostle Peter, 111, 133, 136, 181, 233–235, 861, 1053, 1264, 1307, 1868, 2540, 2593, 3056f., 3058, 3059, 3067, (3555), 4146f., 4187; this is why the chair of Peter is called the "apostolic chair", "chair of the apostle Peter", "apostolic font", 136, 149, 217f., 238, and passim.

The Roman pontiff, as the successor of Peter, is the perpetual and visible principle and foundation of unity of both the bishops and of the faithful, 4147; the successor of Peter as principle and foundation of unity in the Church: G 3ab (ecclesial unity as unity in diversity); upon him was imposed in a special way the duty of spreading the Christian name, 4147.

The popes have succeeded Peter in the same plenitude of power, 1053.

The assistance of the Holy Spirit was promised to the pope in Peter, 4150.

The primacy of the Roman see is not due to synodal decisions, 350, 640, 874.

For the ministry of the successor of Peter in the Church, cf. G 3ab; G 3ad; H 1c; H 2b; H 2d; H 3a; H 3cb; H 3cc; H 3cd; H 3dd.

4. The Community of the Faithful and Their Mission

G 4a

a. BELONGING TO THE CHURCH

The messianic people is characterized by the dignity and the freedom of the children of God, 4123.

The faithful —: are incorporated into the Church through baptism, 1314, 1671, 2567–2570, 3685, 3802, 4127, 4136, 4157, 4720, 4852; —: receive through baptism a share in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly office of Christ, 4125, 4151, 4157, 4720, 4852, 4858; cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); K 3e (effect of baptism); more perfect binding to the Church through confirmation, 4127; cf. K 4d (effect of confirmation).

Baptism does not confer any personal title to public ministry in the Church, 4603.

The Church also includes catechumens, 4138; they are incorporated into the Church by their desire, 4138.

Catholics belong to that Church which Christ founded and which is governed by the successors of Peter and the other apostles, who are the depositories of the original apostolic tradition, living and intact, which is the permanent heritage of truth and holiness of that same Church, 4530.

They are fully incorporated in the society of the Church who acknowledge the bonds of the profession of faith, the sacraments, and ecclesiastical government and communion, 3802, 4137; he is not saved, however, who is incorporated into the Church but lacks charity, 4137.

Catholic Christians, others who believe in Christ, and all men called to salvation belong to the Catholic unity, 4135; whoever believes in Christ and has been truly baptized is in communion with the Catholic Church even though this communion is imperfect, 4188.

The true equality of believers with diverse tasks, 4506; cf. G 2a (Church as Body and its members); G 3ab (ecclesial unity in diversity).

Condemned are claims that limit the number of members —: to the spiritual Church, which lives according to the gospel and is distinct from the carnal Church of the pope, 911; —: to those alone who are predestined to beatitude, 1201–1206, 1220–1224, 2476, 3803; —: only to the just who live in grace: 2474–2478, 2615.

Condemned are claims that extend the number of members to those who have been excommunicated legitimately, 1128//1139, 1151//1163, 1180, 1217–1219, 1271–1273, 1473f., 2491–2493.

Cf. G 3ag (Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities); G 3cg (dangers and conditions for catholicity).

G 4b

b. VOCATION AND MISSION OF THE COMMUNITY OF THE FAITHFUL

4ba The vocation of the faithful to holiness. Cf. G 3b (holiness of the Church); L 2f (union with God); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

God grants sanctification to the faithful, 4166; Christ is the author and consumator of holiness of life, 4166; Christ preached holiness of life to all, 4166; he sent the Holy Spirit to all, 4166; cf. E 2dd (mission of the Holy Spirit); the Christian man receives the first-fruits of the Spirit by which he becomes capable of discharging the new law of love, 4322.

All members must be conformed to Christ until he is formed in them, 4115, 4166; the faithful receive through baptism a share in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly office of Christ, 4125, 4151, 4157, 4720, 4852, 4858; cf. E 3b (forms of mediation).

Vocation of the faithful (^a*of every condition and state*; ^b*whether they belong to the hierarchy or are cared for by it*; ^c*in all conditions of life*) to holiness, 4122, ^a4129, 4158, 4162, ^b4165, ^c4166.

Through baptism, the faithful have been made children of God and sharers in the Divine Nature and thereby holy, 4166; they must hold on to and complete in their lives this holiness they have received and possess the fruit of the Spirit in holiness, 4166; the holiness of the Church is expressed in many ways in individuals, 4165.

In each of the saints is indicated a path to perfect union with Christ or to holiness, 4170; cf. M 1b (communion of saints).

False concepts of the fruit of holiness of life: L 2f (union with God); justified man remains in danger: F 3b.

The faithful sin, constantly have need of God's mercy, and must pray for the forgiveness of their faults, 4166; sin and forgiveness: D (sin of creatures, which God pardons).

4bb Ways of sanctification. On the Christian rests the need and the duty to battle against evil and to suffer death, but, linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, he will hasten forward to resurrection full of hope, 4322; prayer as a school of faith, of hope, 5114; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope); M 3b (eternal beatitude).

Importance of good works: L 2f; good works and God's grace: F 3d; F 5a; F 5c; importance of the practice of virtue: L 2f; gift of self and renunciation of oneself: C 4jf; L 2e; L 2f; L 4a; alms: L 4e; works of penance and mortification: J 1ej; L 2f; importance of prayer: J 1ee; L 2f.

All the faithful are called to the fullness of Christian life and to perfection in charity, 4166; in order to reach perfection in charity, they must obey the will of the Father in all things and devote themselves with all their being to the glory of God and the service of their neighbor, 4166; they must love as Christ does, 4123, 4166, 4613f.; self-giving as the way to follow Christ in a love that includes all men, (4338), 4613; divine love must be sought especially in the ordinary circumstances of life, 4338; cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, love); C 4jf (vocation to gift of self); L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God); L 3a (self-love as fundamental obligation); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 5e (principle of solidarity).

The laity must attain holier lives in their daily occupations, 4162; the vocation of the laity to holiness is tied to their mission in the Church and world, 4854; cf. G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world).

Marriage and family as a form of holiness of life: G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 2f (union with God); L 6 (order of marriage and family).

Marriage and virginity, each in its own proper form, are an actuation of the most profound truth of man, 4700; the vocation to holiness extends also to spouses and parents, 4714; in their state of life, they have their own gift among the people of God, 4128; Christian marriage is an act of glorification of God in Christ and in the Church, 4715; husbands and wives receive from the sacrament the gift and responsibility of translating into daily living the sanctification bestowed on them, 4716; they are witnesses to the salvation in which the sacrament makes them sharers, 4706; they help each other to attain to holiness, 4128; the requirement of a conjugal and family spirituality, 4714.

The Church has the special mission of protecting the lofty dignity of marriage, 4707.

The evangelical counsels: L 2f (union with God).

The holiness of the Church appears in the practice of the counsels, 4165; those who follow them give clear witness to the desire for a heavenly home and keep that desire alive among the human family, 4338.

The evangelical counsels of chastity, poverty, and obedience are a divine gift, 4167; the incarnation of the evangelical counsels is Jesus Christ, 4836; their practice is undertaken under the impulsion of the Holy Spirit, 4165; they are distinct from the commandments, 4836; they are based upon the words and examples of the Lord and were recommended by the apostles and Fathers of the Church as well as by the doctors and pastors of souls, 4167; they represent a total gift to God, 4836.

The legitimacy of the evangelical counsels is stressed, 321, (381), 797, 3345; they are not impediments to perfection, 2203.

The practice of the counsels is carried out either privately or in a Church-approved condition or state of life, 4165.

Church authority interprets the evangelical counsels, regulates their practice, and builds stable forms of living, 4167.

Virginity and celibacy: Obligation for the clergy (^ain the higher orders), 117^a, 118f., 185, 711, 711², ^a1809, 2972.

Celibacy for the kingdom of heaven results from a free choice of man and a special grace, a special sign of the kingdom of God, 4836; Mary as an example of this, 4836; virginity and motherhood “according to the Spirit”, 4837; virginity as a path for women, 4836.

Virginity and celibacy surpass marriage, (802), (1353), 1810, 3911f.; the mutual assistance of spouses is not a more perfect means for holiness than virginity, 3912; marriage and virginity, each in its own proper form, are an actuation of the most profound truth of man, 4700; cf. L 2f (union with God).

Poverty: Spiritual poverty means openness and availability to God, appreciation for the goods of this world without attachment to them, and recognition of the higher value of the riches of the kingdom of God, 4494; poverty as a commitment through which, following Christ, one assumes the conditions of the needy in order to bear witness to the evil poverty represents and to spiritual liberty in the face of material goods, 4494; cf. L 2f (union with God).

Condemned are exaggerated claims about the poverty –: of Christ and the apostles, 930f., 1087//1097; –: because of the vows, 908, 1087–1097; cf. E 2ba (communion of Christ with men: poverty of Christ).

Christian obedience with respect to the commandments of God and of the Church: contemplatives are also bound by it, 893, 2189f.; the justified man remains obliged to observe the commandments: F 3c; cf. G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); L 2f (union with God).

Nature and goal of religious life: L 2f (union with God).

The religious state of life is not an intermediate state between the clerical and lay states, but, rather, the faithful are called by God from both groups, 4167; the religious state is distinct from the state of the laity and from the state of the clergy, 4157.

The religious state is justified, 844, 1169–1174, 1181, 1184f., 1194f., 1270; condemned are theses concerning a reform of religious orders, 2680–2692; the mendicant orders are defended as legitimate, 841–844, 1170, 1174, 1184, 1491.

The eremitical or communal forms of life offer means for the progress of their members and for the good of the whole Church, 4167; they offer their members a stable way of life and a proven doctrine and liberty strengthened by obedience for the fulfillment of religious profession and progress on the road of charity, 4167.

Religious tend toward holiness by a narrower path and thus give an example, 4134; they give testimony that the world cannot be transformed without the spirit of the beatitudes, 4157.

Religious vows cannot be broken without sin, 321f.; condemned: [Vows are impediments to perfection], 2203; cf. L 2b (respect for God).

Participation of the faithful in the prophetic office of Jesus Christ. The people of God participate in the prophetic office of Christ, 4bc 4130; Christ fulfills his prophetic office not only through the hierarchy but also through the laity, 4161; the Christian faithful share in their own manner in Christ’s prophetic office, 4532; they contribute toward increasing the understanding of faith in the Church, 4532.

The whole peoples' supernatural discernment in matters of faith, 4130; when the entire body of the faithful shows universal agreement in matters of faith and morals, it cannot err in matters of belief, 4130; cf. H 3db (infallibility of the Church).

Cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ); G 6ba (participation of the laity in the prophetic office of Jesus Christ); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).

4bd Participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Jesus Christ. Participation of the ministers and faithful in the priesthood of Christ, 4177, 5050; Christ gives the people of God a sharing in his priestly function: the glorification of God and the salvation of men, 4160; a share in the priesthood of Christ is given through baptism and confirmation, 4125, 4151, (^a4857); ordained ministries express a participation in the priesthood of Jesus Christ, 4857.

The common priesthood of the faithful: Concept and consequences: 3849–3853; the priesthood is brought into operation through the sacraments and a virtuous life, 4127f.; through baptism, the faithful are consecrated as a holy priesthood so that in all works they may offer spiritual sacrifices and proclaim the powerful deeds of Christ, 4125; the faithful are destined by the baptismal character for the Christian worship of God, 4127; the baptized must confess the faith before men; the confirmed faithful are more strictly obliged to spread and defend the faith, both by word and by deed, 4127; with the eucharistic sacrifice, the faithful offer the Divine Victim to God and offer themselves along with him, 4127; cf. J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 5c (offering the Lord's Supper); common priesthood and the sacraments of penance, anointing of the sick, priestly ordination, matrimony, 4128; any believer can baptize, 1315, 2536, 4141; cf. K 3c (minister of baptism); the disciples of Christ must persevere in prayer and praise of God, should present themselves as a living sacrifice, pleasing to God, bear witness to Christ, and give an account for their faith, 4125, (4127); the Christian is called to pray to the Father in secret and always to bear in his body the dying of Jesus, 4012; cf. J 1ee (prayer); L 2f (union with God).

Not all believers are endowed with the same spiritual power, 1767; the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial or hierarchical priesthood differ from one another in essence and not only in degree, 4126, 4857, 5050f.; each of them in its own special way is a participation in the one priesthood of Christ, 4126, 5050f.; they are interrelated, 4126, 4857, 5050f.; condemned: [The ministry of bishops and priests does not differ from the common priesthood of the faithful in the strict sense], 4721; non-ordained faithful can be entrusted with a collaboration with the ministry of the bishop and priest, 5051, 5053.

The participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ is accomplished in the liturgy: J (God comes face to face with his people in the liturgy).

Both by reason of the offering and through Holy Communion, all the faithful take part in the liturgical service, not indeed, all in the same way, but each in that way which is proper to himself, 4028, (4029), 4127; cf. J 1d (subjects of the liturgy).

Cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); G 6bb (participation of the laity in the priestly office of Jesus Christ); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons); K 5c (offering the Lord's Supper); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

4be Participation of the faithful in the kingly office of Jesus Christ. Participation of the faithful in the kingly office of Christ, 4157; Christ is the King for whom to serve is to reign, 4162.

Christ has communicated his royal power to his disciples that they might be constituted in royal freedom in view of self-abnegation and so as to conquer sin; they are to serve Christ in others and lead them to him, 4162.

Cf. E 3bd (kingship of Jesus Christ); G 6bc (participation of the laity in the kingly office of Jesus Christ); H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office); H 2 (pastoral ministry of bishops); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).

4bf Tasks of the faithful in the world. All members of the Church are sharers in the secular dimension but in different ways, 4853; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (priests and world).

Christians are joined with the rest of men in the search for truth and for the genuine solution to moral problems, 4316.

Participation of Christians in political life is an exercise of love of neighbor, 4484; cf. G 6a (general principles regarding the laity); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); G 7ab (Church and society); G 7ad (Church and the poor).

Christians must bring about that "civilization of love" which will include the entire ethical and social heritage of the gospel, 4776, (4815); culture of life, 4997–4998; cf. C 4gb (brotherhood, solidarity); C 4gp (Christians and the human community); L 13 (order of culture).

The Christian is an artisan of peace, 4487; through the Christian the world must fulfill its purpose in justice, charity, and peace, 4162; the Christian must choose the path of dialogue and joint action, 4773; he is peaceful, but not simply a pacifist, for he is capable of fighting. But he prefers peace to war, 4489; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace).

The Second Vatican Council exhorts Christians to discharge their earthly duties in the gospel spirit, 4343.

Christians must unite their humane, domestic, professional, social, and technical enterprises to religious values, 4343; in their daily occupations they must live holier lives even so that the world may fulfill its purpose more effectively in justice, charity, and peace, 4162.

According to their vocation, by faith Christians are more obliged than ever to fulfill their earthly obligations, 4343; Christians who neglect their temporal duties neglect their duties toward their neighbor and God and jeopardize their eternal salvation, 4343; the separation between faith and everyday life, between earthly affairs and religious life, is a grave error, 4343; the expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate the concern for cultivating this one, 4339.

Cf. C 4ic and C 4ij (Christians and human activity); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).

The faithful and the authority of the Church. The recognition of the Church's authority is required, 102, 161, 704, 1215, 2895; the faithful 4bg must listen to pastors when they teach in Christ's name, 4533; neither the ^a*justified* man nor the ^b*perfect* (or contemplative) man is exempt from the commandments of the Church, ^b893, ^a1570, ^b2189f.; whoever refuses to be subject to the pope and to associate with members of the Church is schismatic, 446, 468f., cf. L 14 (order of the Church).

Baptism does not free from the obligations imposed by the Law of God, the Church, and eventual vows, 1620–1622.

Acknowledgment of doctrinal decisions: H 3e; cf. H 3i (people of God and the bishops' ministry of preaching); acceptance of the truths of the faith: L 2c (virtue of faith).

Acknowledgment of the primacy of the pope: H 2ba (leadership authority and primacy of the pope).

Acknowledgment of the commandments of God and the Church: F 3c (the justified man remains obliged to observe the commandments); G 4bb (ways of sanctification: obedience); L 2f (union with God).

Right of the Church to punish disobedience: H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops).

5. Ministry in the Church

G 5

Because of the large amount of material, this section has been detached and appears under H (God guides, instructs, and sanctifies the Church through her ministers).

6. The Laity in the Church

a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES REGARDING THE LAITY

G 6a

The laity —: are all the Christian faithful with the exception of members in holy orders and the religious state, 4157; —: are by baptism made one body with Christ and are ^a*in their own way* made sharers in the priestly, prophetic, and kingly functions of Christ, ^a4157, ^a4852, 4858, 5050f.; —: carry out for their own part the mission of the whole Christian people in the Church and in the world, 4157; the obligations and tasks of the laity have a sacramental foundation in baptism, confirmation, and matrimony, 4858; the laity should take on their own distinctive tasks enlightened by Christian wisdom and the teaching authority of the Church, 4343.

The laity are gathered together in the people of God and make up the one body of Christ under one head, 4159; they are led by the spirit of the gospel, 4157.

What specifically characterizes the laity is their secular nature (^aas a particular manner of realization and function), 4156f., ^a4853; they live in the world, integrated into secular professions, occupations, and family and social life, 4157; it is the task of the laity and not pastors to participate in the political construction and organization of social life, 4775; secular duties and activities belong properly although not exclusively to laymen, 4343; the faithful should distinguish between their rights and duties toward the Church and those toward society and strive to reconcile the two, 4162.

The vocation of the laity to holiness is linked to their mission in the Church and in the world, 4854; cf. G 4ba (vocation of the faithful to holiness); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cb (mission of the laity in the world); G 6cd (mission of the laity in the Church).

The laity receive their energy through the gift of the Creator and the grace of the Redeemer, 4159; the activity of the laity is elevated from within by the grace of Christ, 4162.

b. THE PARTICIPATION OF THE LAITY IN THE PROPHETIC, PRIESTLY, AND KINGLY OFFICE OF JESUS CHRIST

G 6b

Participation of the laity in the prophetic office of Jesus Christ. The laity participate —: in the prophetic office of Christ, 4852; —: in the Church's supernatural sense of the faith, 4852; Christ fulfills his prophetic office not only through the hierarchy but also through the laity, 4161; cf. H 3db (infallibility of the Church).

Christ makes the laity witnesses and gives them understanding of the faith and attractiveness in speech, 4161, 4852; they proclaim the gospel in word and deed and identify evil in the world, 4852; they express their hope in the glory to come through constant conversion and in the struggle against the evil that is also in the structures of the world, 4161.

Cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ); G 4bc (participation of the faithful in the prophetic office of Christ); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).

6bb Participation of the laity in the priestly office of Jesus Christ. Christ, the eternal High Priest, wills to continue his witness and service also through the laity, 4160; the laity are dedicated to Christ, anointed by the Holy Spirit, and called and prepared for spiritual worship, 4160, 5050f.

The laity exercise the royal priesthood in receiving the sacraments, in prayer and thanksgiving, in the witness of a holy life, and by self-denial and active charity, 4126; as worshippers leading holy lives in every place, the laity consecrate the world itself to God, 4339, 4716; they participate in the priestly office of Christ by offering themselves as well as their activities, 4852; in virtue of the royal priesthood, they participate in the offering of the Eucharist, 4126; their activities, if carried out in the Spirit, are a spiritual offering that, together with Lord's body, are offered to the Father in the celebration of the Eucharist; thus, they consecrate the world to God, 4160; cf. J 1d and K 5cc (active participation of the laity in offering the Lord's Supper/in the liturgy).

The laity as minister of baptism, 120, 1315, 1349, 2536, 4141; cf. K 3c (minister of baptism).

The laity need a canonical mission (missio canonica) to preach, 760f., (700f.), 796, 809, 866, 1163f., 1217f., 1277, 1777; sin cannot be confessed to the laity, 866, 1260, 1463, 1684, 1700.

Realization of the priesthood of the laity in the liturgy: J (God comes face to face with his people in the liturgy).

Cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); G 4bd (participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 5cc (active participation of the laity in offering the Lord's Supper); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

6bc Participation of the laity in the kingly office of Jesus Christ. The laity participate in the kingly office of Christ, 4852; Christ spreads his kingdom through the laity, 4162; they live this "kingship" above all through spiritual combat in order to overcome in themselves the kingdom of sin and through offering themselves in service to Christ, 4852; continual conversion of the laity and the struggle against evil, 4161; vocation to serve and to spread the kingdom of God, 4852.

Cf. E 3bd (kingship of Christ); G 4be (participation of the faithful in the kingly office of Christ).

G 6c

c. THE MISSION AND TASK OF THE LAITY

6ca The apostolate of the laity. Cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 6ba (participation of the laity in the prophetic office of Christ).

The laity are commissioned to the apostolate by the Lord himself through baptism and confirmation, 4159, (4858); it concerns all the faithful of Christ, 4159; it is a participation in the salvific mission of the Church herself, 4159.

By the sacraments, especially Holy Eucharist, that charity which is the soul of the apostolate is communicated, 4159; the apostolate of the faithful is nourished by the sacraments, 4161.

Evangelization by the laity takes its specific quality and force in that it is carried out in the ordinary surroundings of the world, 4161; the laity must work to extend the divine plan of salvation to all men of each epoch and in every land, 4159; even when preoccupied with temporal cares, the laity can and must evangelize the world and cooperate in the growth of the kingdom of Christ in the world, 4161; they must better prepare the field of the world for the seed of the Word of God, 4162; they must sanctify the world from within (penetrate it with a Christian spirit) and be witnesses to Christ (in the midst of the world^b through their life), ^b4157, ^a4343; they are heralds of the faith when they join to their profession of faith a life springing from faith, 4161; they must witness to the Resurrection and life of the Lord Jesus and be a symbol of the living God, nourish the world with spiritual fruits, and diffuse the Spirit in the world, 4164; they are called to allow the newness and the power of the gospel to shine out every day in their family and social life, 4852; they must express hope in glory through the structures of life in the world, 4161, 4852.

Value of marriage and family for the apostolate of the laity: G 6cc.

6cb The mission and task of the laity in the world. By their vocation, their task is to seek the kingdom of God by engaging in temporal affairs and by ordering them according to the plan of God, 4157; they must order all temporal affairs in such a way that they may come into being according to Christ and to the praise of the Creator and the Redeemer, 4157; the Holy Spirit calls them to dedicate themselves to the earthly service of men and to make ready the material of the celestial realm, 4338; they should inscribe the divine law in the life of the earthly city, 4343.

The laity have a particular role in filling the world with the Spirit of Christ; they must —: in their daily occupations live holier lives so that the world may fulfill its purpose more effectively in justice, charity, and peace, 4162; —: contribute their effort, so that created goods may be perfected by human labor, technical skill, and civic culture and be more equitably distributed for the benefit of all men, 4162; —: remedy the customs and conditions of the world, if they are an inducement to sin, so that they all may be conformed to the norms of justice and may favor the practice of virtue rather than hinder it, 4162; —: contribute to the advance of human and Christian liberty, 4162; —: prepare the field of the world for the seed of the Word of God, 4162.

The action of the laity is demanded by the new ecclesiastical, social, economic, political, and cultural state of affairs; it is not permissible for anyone to remain idle, 4851; cf. C 4k (historical constitution of man).

It is expected of the laity, as individuals or as a group —: that they keep the proper law of the world, 4343; —: professional expertise, 4343; —: collaboration with other men, 4343; —: where necessary, the planning and development of something new, 4343.

Difficulties and dangers of the (postconciliar) path of the laity —: to retreat from their own responsibilities in the professional, social, cultural, and political world because of Church service, 4850; —: separation of faith from life and active endeavors, 4850; the Church is concerned that the mission of the laity should not be absorbed by preoccupations concerning the temporal order or reduced to such preoccupations, 4758. Cf. C 4i (activity of man); esp. C 4ij (Christians and human activity); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world).

The mission and task of the laity in marriage and family. The family is a kind of domestic church, 4128; Christian spouses help each other and their children toward holiness, 4128; by their word and example, they should be the first preachers of the faith to their children and should encourage their proper vocation, 4128. 6cc

In the task of evangelization by the laity, the state of marriage and family seems to be especially valuable, 4161; it represents in fact both the practice and an excellent school of the lay apostolate, 4161; vocation of the Christian family to the witness of the faith within itself and to the world, 4161, 4706; baptism of children demands education in the faith and to the Christian life, 4674; cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).

Through the children who are born of the marriage bond, permanence is assured to the people of God over the course of time, 1311, 3143, 3705, 4128.

Cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 2f (union with God); L 6 (order of marriage and family).

The mission and task of the laity in the Church. The laity should play an active role in the Church, 4343; participation of the laity in the holiness of the Church, 4854; the action of the faithful is demanded by the new state of affairs in the Church, 4851; they are the witness and instrument of the mission of the Church, 4159; they share a responsibility for the Church's mission, 4853; the Church's mission in the world is realized not only by the ministers but also by all the laity, 4858; according to their abilities and the needs of the times, they must zealously participate in the saving work of the Church, 4159; they make the Church present in circumstances where only through them can she become the salt of the earth, 4159. 6cd

The laity are called to contribute toward the growth of the Church and her sanctification, 4159; inspired by the Spirit are —: active participation in the liturgy, in the proclamation of the Word of God and catechesis, and the services and tasks of the lay faithful, 4850; —: the spiritual groups, associations, and movements of the laity, 4850; —: participation of women in the life of the Church, 4850; by reason of the knowledge, competence, or outstanding ability that they may enjoy, the laity are permitted and sometimes even obliged to express their opinion on those things that concern the good of the Church, 4163.

Tasks in the liturgical action, proclamation, and pastoral care not proper to the ordained ministers should be fulfilled by the lay faithful, 4858; services, duties, and tasks of the baptized in the Church: help in the apostolate, in evangelization, sanctification, and the Christian animation of temporal affairs as well as their generous willingness in situations of necessity, 4858; the laity have important tasks in the liturgical assembly and its preparation, 4858.

Active participation of the laity in the liturgy: J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); J 2a (goal of the renewal of the liturgy); K 5cc (active participation of the laity in offering the Lord's Supper).

Because of the diversity and complementarity of gifts of grace and responsibilities, every member of the lay faithful is seen in relation to the whole body of the Church, 4855.

The laity should pray to God for those placed over them in the Church, 4163.

Collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry: G 6ce; H 2e (people of God and the pastoral ministry of bishops).

Collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry. The sacred ministers and the people of God, 4158; the laity and the pastors are brothers, 4158; the collaboration of priests, religious, and laity is inspired by the Spirit, 4850. 6ce

The pastors must not take upon themselves alone the salvific mission of the Church toward the world, but all must cooperate in their way in the common undertaking, 4156; the pastors must acknowledge and foster the duties and tasks of the lay faithful, since they have their foundation in the sacraments, 4858; they can entrust certain functions to the laity, 4858; these tasks do not make the layman a pastor, 4858; the laity can be called in various ways to a more direct form of cooperation with the hierarchy, 4159; they have the capacity to assume from the hierarchy certain ecclesiastical functions, 4159; some of them have to fulfill religious tasks on their own, according to their abilities, when there are no sacred ministers or in times of persecution, 4161.

Danger of speaking of "ministry": The confusion and the equating of the common priesthood and the ministerial priesthood, the arbitrary interpretation of the concept of "subsidiarity", the "clericalization" of the laity; necessity of a more precise terminology, 4858.

The laity should —: make their common effort available to pastors and teachers, 4156; —: openly reveal to pastors their needs and desires, 4163; —: accept in obedience decisions of pastors as well as teachers in the Church, 4163, (4343).

The laity are permitted and sometimes even obliged to express their opinion, either individually or through designated institutions, on those things that concern the good of the Church, 4163.

In differences of opinion between Christians, neither side may claim the authority of the Church for itself alone, 4343; the laity have the right to expect spiritual light and nourishment from priests, but not a concrete solution to all problems, 4343.

Cf. H 2e (people of God and pastoral ministry of bishops).

Rights and duties of the laity. The laity have the right to receive from pastors the spiritual goods of the Church, especially the Word of God and the sacraments, 4163. 6cf

The laity are permitted and sometimes even obliged to express their opinion on those things that concern the good of the Church, 4163.
The faithful and the authority of the Church: G 4bg.

7. The Relationship of the Church to Mankind, Society, Culture, State, and International Institutions

G 7a

a. THE RELATIONSHIP OF THE CHURCH TO WORLD, SOCIETY, AND CULTURE

7aa Church, world, and mankind. Cf. C 4fh and C 4fi (Christ, the perfect man; Christ, the salvation of man); C 4k (historical constitution of man); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 3 (Jesus Christ, the Savior); F 1 (God's universal salvific will); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); G 3c (catholicity of the Church); L 9 (order of the human family).

The Church is in and works with the world and experiences the same destiny, 4340; in her sacraments and institutions, she has the appearance of this world, 4168; she is inserted into the human race, 4311, 4340; she consists of men, 4340; she shares the events, needs, and aspirations of men, 4311; she lives among creatures, 4168; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).

Intimate union -: of the Church with mankind and its history, 4301, 4303; -: of the disciples of Christ with the joys, hopes, griefs, and anxieties of the men of this age, especially the poor and afflicted, 4301; the way of Christ to man is the primary way of the Church (with the whole man as person and in his community and social life as goal), 4643–4645, (4758); the mission of the Church is a religious one and therefore supremely human, 4311; the Church is turned toward man, 4321; she is an “expert on mankind”, 4421; the Church/charity and State/justice difference, 5104.

The Church has a mission of salvation in the world, (4120), 4156, (4186), 4755, 4858; she strives for the salvation of the whole of mankind and offers man benefits, 4345; she wants the salvation of man in every respect, 4757; she must do her part so that God's plan for the salvation of the world may be realized, 4141; she communicates the saving resources that she herself receives, 4303; she communicates to man (“through grace”) the divine life and pursues people's true temporal good, 4340, ^a4757; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).

Through the Church the gospel resounds in the world, 4211; the Church must reveal Christ's mystery to the world until it is fully manifested, 4121; she was sent to proclaim the kingdom of Christ and of God and to found all nations, 4106; she brings a message for all mankind, 4420; the human race must become the family of God, 4332; the principle of religious freedom prefers the invitation of men to the Christian faith, 4245; the Church was sent to all men and should embrace all men: G 3cc (mission of the Church to all nations and all people); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications).

Contribution of the Church to a more human family of men and its history, 4340; the Church prefigures peace and promotes it, 4135, 4162, (4197); task of the Church to promote unity and love among men and nations, 4195; the union of the human family is fortified and fulfilled by the unity of the family of God's children, 4342; the Church as sign of unity for the world (“through the brotherly love of the faithful”), 4026, 4101, 4124, ^a4321, 4342, 4343; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); L 7 (order of society); the Church brings about the renewal of the world, 4168; she is the source of moral strength needed by the world, 4343, (4198); cf. C 4ii and 4ij (Church or Christians and human activity); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); G 7ab (Church and society).

Dialogue of the Church with men (^awith the whole world) ^b*about the problems of mankind*, ^b4303, 4340, ^a4420; cooperation in their solution, 4310; the Church is attentive to whatever serves man's true welfare and to what threatens it, 4643, (4757); her mission must correspond to the situation of the world today, 4162; she wants to add the light of revealed truth to mankind's experience in order to light the path of man, 4333; to understand the world, she must scrutinize the signs of the times and interpret them in the light of the gospel so that she can respond to questions about the meaning of life, 4304; she labors to decipher authentic signs of God's presence and purpose in the happenings, needs, and desires of men, 4311; she distinguishes and interprets the various voices of our age for a better understanding and communication of revealed doctrine, 4344; cf. A 2bb (faith and proclamation); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 7ae (Church and culture).

The Church promotes man and spreads life and liberty, 4321; she protects her personal dignity, ^a*the rights that result from it*, and ^b*her liberty*, ^a4198f., ^b4341; she denounces the conditions of life that diminish the dignity and liberty of man, 4767; she heals and elevates the dignity of the person, 4340; she proclaims the rights of man and safeguards the promotion of them, 4341; she removes the dignity of the human person from all fluctuations of opinion, 4311; she condemns the discrimination or abuse of man because of race, color, state, or religion as being contrary to the Spirit of Christ, 4199; she condemns any persecution against men, 4198; she deplores any form of anti-Semitism, 4198; task of the Church is to defend man against what could destroy or dishonor him, 4550; the laity must contribute to the progress of human and Christian freedom, 4162; cf. C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4fc (freedom of man); C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); L 5g (human rights).

The Church and the human vocation: Statements on this subject in 4311–4345; the Church confirms the vocation of man to a blissful purpose, 4318; she proclaims the dignity of the human vocation and restores hope to those who despair of their higher purpose, 4321; the Second Vatican Council recognizes the noble destiny of man, 4303; instructed by revelation, the Church can give a response to the question of man; she is conscious of the difficulties in responding to this question, 4321; she opens up to man the meaning of his existence and of his innermost truth, 4341; the existence of the Church recalls to man the problem of the meaning of his life, activity, and death, 4341; the message of the Church is in accord with the deepest longings of the human heart, 4321; cf. C 4jm (Church and the human vocation).

Men are called to form the family of God's children already during the history of the human race, 4332, 4340.

The Church has the right and duty to invoke the mercy of God in the face of situations of physical and moral evil and all the threats to mankind, 4685; cf. B 1b (will of God: God is merciful); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will).

The people of God and the human race serve each other mutually, 4311, 4345; the Church (^aas community and in her members) has received much from the world (^bfrom men of every rank and state) ^a*because of the history and development of the human race*, ^a4344, 4345; she can also draw great profit from the enmity of those who persecute her, 4344; she ripens through her relations with the world, 4343; assistance from the world, individuals, and the human community in spreading the gospel, 4340; interest of the world in the Church as the leaven of history, 4344.

Cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 5 (ministerial office of priests).

The Church and society. Cf. C 4g (social nature of man); C 4k (historical constitution of man); G 3ae (Church as a juridically constituted society); L 7 (order of society). 7ab

Through the activity of the faithful, Christ will illumine human society with his saving light, 4162; the Church—society difference; cf. C 4gn (Christ and the human society); E 2ba (communion of Christ with men).

Christian revelation promotes the communion between persons and leads to a deeper understanding of the laws of social life, 4323.

By the holiness of Christian life, a more human manner of living is promoted in society, 4166; the catholic unity of the people of God promotes universal peace and presages it, 4135, (4197); the Church proclaims peace in the world, 4162; she protects and promotes social justice, (4197); the task of the Church to promote unity and love among men and nations, 4195, 4342; the Church as a sign of unity for the world (^athrough the brotherly love of the faithful), 4101, 4124, ^a4321, 4342, 4343; she shows the world that authentic social union results from a union of minds and hearts, 4342; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); L 7 (order of society).

The mission of the Church does not relate to the political, economic, or social order; rather, her purpose belongs to the religious order. Out of this comes the task of structuring and consolidating the human community according to the divine law, 4342; the Church is bound to no particular form of human culture or to any political, economic, or social system. She can therefore be a very close bond between human communities and nations, 4342; she is faithful to her mission when she exercises her judgment regarding political movements whose theories and methods of action are contrary to the gospel, 4759; the force that the Church injects into society consists in faith and charity, not in any external dominion, 4342; she strengthens the cohesion of human society (^athrough the outpouring of the gospel), 4340, ^a4759; renewal of human society through the Church, 4303; collaboration of the Church to build the brotherly society of all, 4303; cf. C 4gb (fraternity and solidarity); cf. C 4go and C 4gp (Church/Christians and the human community); G 2bd (mission and task of the Church); G 4bf; G 6cb (task of the faithful/laity in the world); G 7aa (Church, world, and mankind); H 2f and H 5 (bishops/priests and the world); L 7 (order of society).

The Church makes man's aspirations for freedom her own, while exercising discernment in the light of the gospel, which is itself a message of freedom and liberation, 4751; her goal: the integral liberation from everything that hinders the development of individuals, 4757; the Church aims at personal conversion and social transformation, 4620; she makes men into subjects of their own individual and communitarian development, 4628; she uses evangelical means and does not resort to violence of any sort (or to the dialectics of class struggle), 4628; she condemns crime (^a*violence*; ^b*the violence of terrorists and guerillas*) as the way of liberation, ^b4630, ^a4772; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change).

Overcoming "sinful structures" in personal and social life, 4619; the Church upsets, through the power of the gospel, values, lines of thought, sources of inspiration, and models of life that are in contrast with the Word of God and the plan of salvation, 4575; she condemns errors, slavery, and oppression and opposes attempts to set up a form of social life from which God is absent, 4759; cf. C 4gm and D 4d (liberation from and overcoming of sinful structures).

Christians are to bring about that "civilization of love" which will include the entire ethical and social heritage of the gospel, 4776, 4815; steps in that direction, 4776; the educational activity of the Church for the purpose of bringing Christians to consider their participation in the political life of the nation as a matter of conscience and as the practice of love of neighbor, 4484; laity must remedy the customs and conditions of the world so that all may be conformed to justice and favorable to the practice of virtue, 4162; cf. L 13 (order of culture).

The Church and youth, 4490–4492; youth is a symbol of the Church, called to a constant renewal and a continual rejuvenation, 4492; option of the Church for the young—as potential for the present and future of her evangelization, 4635.

In relation to cultural and social life, the Church teaches the moral order: cf. H 3bb (subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions).

The Church promotes institutions that are compatible with her mission. She respects what is true, good, and just in them, 4342; the laity remedy the institutions and conditions of the world, if they are an inducement to sin, so that all may be conformed to justice and favor the practice of virtue, 4162; cf. C 4gi and L 5d (institutions of society).

The mission of the Church must correspond to the conditions of today's world, 4162; the Church recognizes the worthy elements found in today's social movements, especially an evolution toward unity, a process of wholesome socialization and of association, 4342; because of her social structure, she can be enriched by the development of human social life, 4344; whoever promotes the human community at the family level, culturally, in its economic, social, and political dimensions, both nationally and internationally, also contributes to the ecclesial community, 4344; the human community can help the Church in spreading the gospel, 4340; cf. C 4k (historical constitution of man).

7ac The social doctrine of the Church and its debate with Marxism, liberalism, capitalism, materialism, positivism, nationalism, and racism: C 4l; the Church and institutionalized caritas, 5104f.

7ad The Church and the poor. On the situation of the poor: C 4ke.

The intimate union of the disciples of Christ with the joys, hopes, griefs, and anxieties of the men of this age, especially those who are poor or in any way afflicted, 4301; the Church recognizes in the poor and afflicted the image of her poor and suffering Founder, 4120; she strives to relieve the needs of the poor and suffering and to serve Christ in them, ^a4120, 4342; on Christ's association with the poor: E 2bb (Christ's work among men).

The Church is called to choose, as Christ did, the path of poverty and persecution, 4120; in her pilgrimage, she experiences “suffering, temptations and trials, the persecutions of the world, and the consolations of God,”^a4115, ^dc4121, ^b4124, ^c4147, ^e4344; there are martyrs in the Church, 4321; cf. on the poverty of Christ: E 2ba (communion of Christ with men); cf. G 3bb (holiness of the Church); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

Option of the Church for the poor: Christian love gives a privileged place to the weak, the lowly, and the poor, 4613, 5083; the faithful should especially love poor, suffering, and persecuted members, 4147, 4932; the option for the poor manifests the universality of the Church's being and mission and excludes no one, 4761; the gospel demand of poverty —: as solidarity with the poor and as a rejection of the situation in which most people of Latin America live, 4634; —: frees the poor person from being individualistic in his life and from being seduced by the false ideals of a consumer society, 4634; the objective of the preferential option for the poor is —: to proclaim Christ the Savior, who enlightens the poor about their dignity, helps them to liberate themselves from all their wants, and leads them to communion with the Father and their fellowmen through evangelical poverty, 4632; —: a dignified, fraternal way of life together and a just and free society, 4633; by loving the poor, the Church gives witness to the dignity of man, 4760; the Church shows solidarity with those who do not count in society by integrating them into human fellowship and into the community of the children of God, 4760; the witness of a poor Church evangelizes the rich by converting them, 4634.

Those who must be helped are, for example, the abandoned, foreign laborers, refugees, children born of unlawful unions, the hungry, 4327; the Church turns especially to children who are aborted and the elderly who are abandoned, 4760, 5083.

The option for the poor is demanded by the reality of economic imbalances in Latin America, 4633; on the situation in Latin America: C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); the Church in Latin America adopts the following attitude: she denounces the unjust lack of this world's goods and the sin that begets it; she preaches and lives in spiritual poverty; she is herself bound to material poverty, 4495; the Church in Latin America must preach the gospel to the poor and be in solidarity with them, 4496; the Latin American bishops cannot remain indifferent in the face of the social injustices and poverty in Latin America, 4493; the pastors and the other members of the people of God have to correlate their life and words, their attitudes and actions to the demands of the gospel and the necessities of the men of Latin America, 4496.

Certain theologies of liberation mean by Church of the people a Church of the class, a Church of the oppressed people whom it is necessary to conscientize in the light of the organized struggle for freedom, 4740; the Church of the poor thus signifies the Church of the class, 4738; certain theologies of liberation confuse the poor of the Scripture and the proletariat of Karl Marx, thereby transforming the fight for the rights of the poor into a class fight within the ideological perspective of the class struggle, 4738; the rich thus become in principle a class enemy, 4736; cf. C 4lb (Marxism).

Cf. L 4e (obligations and rights with regard to material goods: alms); L 7 (order of society: means and power of the rich); L 11 (order of property).

7ae Church and culture. Cf. L 13 (order of culture).

Elements are found outside the Church that, as gifts of the Church, impel toward catholic unity, 4119; the Church is bound to no particular form of human culture, 4342; she is not opposed to culture, to the attainments and (material) goods of mankind, 2775, 2940, 3019, 3178, 3255; for if rightly pursued, they can lead to God, 3019.

In establishing the kingdom of Christ, the Church takes nothing away from the temporal welfare of any people, 4133; she takes what is found to be good in the heart and mind of men, in the abilities, customs, and cultures of the nations. She purifies, elevates, and perfects them, 4133, 4141, (4196); she cares for human culture, 4757; in the building up of the kingdom of God, elements of the culture or cultures are borrowed, 4577; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church).

Evangelization of the Church and human culture: G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission).

Religion of the people, popular religiosity, or popular piety as the whole complex of religious beliefs, the basic attitudes that flow from these beliefs, and the expressions that manifest them, as the cultural existence of religion in a people, 4621; mestizo, ethnic groups, and their own culture, 4941, 4942; the popular Catholicism of the Latin American people, 4621; the gospel unites the Latin American peoples according to a historical and cultural originality, 4622; representation of Mary of Guadalupe with a mestizo face, 4622; religion of the people —: is lived out particularly by the “poor and simple”, but it includes all social sectors, groups, and generations, 4622; —: is a storehouse of values that offers the answers of Christian wisdom to the great questions of life, 4623; Catholic wisdom of the common people and synthesis of life as Christian humanism, 4623; the people's religious life is not just an object of evangelization, but also an active way in which the people continually evangelize themselves, 4624; erosion and distortion of the religion of the people, syncretism, 4625; like the Church as a whole, the religion of the people must be continually evangelized over again, 4625.

In relation to cultural and social life, the Church teaches the moral order: cf. H 3bb (subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions).

The Church fills the everyday activities of man with deeper meaning and significance, 4340; the existence of the Church reminds man of the meaning of his activity, 4341; cf. C 4i (activity of man); esp. C 4ii (Church and human activity); L 10 (order of work).

The Church acknowledges that human progress can serve man's true happiness, 4337; the development of peoples is of deep concern to the Church, 4440; activities of the Church inspired by the Spirit and progress of society, 4850; the laity should contribute in their way to the general progress, 4162; cf. C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society: progress).

The laity should contribute their effort, so that goods perfected by labor, technology, and culture may be more equitably distributed for the benefit of all men, 4162; cf. L 11 (order of property); L 12 (order of the economy).

The Church recognizes the service of the human sciences, 4512; she regrets the lack of understanding for the legitimate autonomy of science and the concept that faith and science are opposed to each other, 4336; cf. C 4id (sciences).

Whoever promotes the human community culturally contributes to the Church community as well, 4344; the experience of past ages, the progress of the sciences, and the treasures of culture profit the Church, too, 4344.

Condemned are accusations concerning the relation of the Church to secular culture, 1179, 2980, 3457.

b. THE RELATION OF THE CHURCH TO THE STATE AND TO INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

G 7b

Church and State. Cf. C 4gh (authority in society); G 3ae (Church as a juridically constituted society); L 8 (order of the State).

7ba

God has divided charge over the human race between the ecclesial power and the secular power, 3168; for everything that concerns the salvation of the soul, the Church alone is competent, 345, 347, 362, 638, 642, 941–945, 1058, 1063, 2919, (2934), 3168, 3171.

Nations must recognize the freedom of the Church for the fulfillment of her mission, 4342.

The Church claims freedom in particular —: for the choice and ordination to ecclesiastical ministries, 604, 659, 712, 1063, 1769, 1777; —: for spiritual governing and the relations between the pope and the faithful, 663, 2944, 2949–2953, 3062; —: for the administration of ecclesiastical goods, 712; —: for holding a council, 600; nevertheless, the participation of secular princes at councils is sometimes permitted, 343, 639.

Condemned are statements that restrict the freedom of the Church to the benefit of the secular power, particularly: [It belongs to the power of the State to determine the rights of the Church. The validity of ecclesiastical laws depends on the approval of the State. In the case of a conflict between ecclesiastical laws and civil laws, civil laws have precedence], 2893–2896, 2919f., 2928//2948, 2954f., 3062.

Both powers must be limited to their domain, 642.

In matters of mixed jurisdiction, opposition between the ecclesiastical power and the civil power is not desirable, but harmony and “an orderly connection (as between body and soul), 2955, *3168, 3172.

The Church is indifferent to the forms of civil government, 2769, 3150, 3165, 3173f., 4342; cf. G 2bd (mission and task of the Church).

The Church wants to develop herself freely under any government that grants recognition to the basic rights of person and family, to the demands of the common good, 4342; cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good); L 5g (human rights).

The doctrine that attempts to build a society without religion and that attacks the religious liberty of its citizens is to be rejected, 4162.

The Church and international institutions. The Church sees in the United Nations organization the path that has to be taken for modern civilization and for world peace and ratifies it morally and solemnly, 4421; cf. C 4gj and L 9 (international institutions).

H. GOD GUIDES, INSTRUCTS, AND SANCTIFIES THE CHURCH THROUGH HER MINISTERS

(Because of the large amount of material, this section was detached from G 5)

1. The Origin and Character of the Ecclesiastical Ministry

H 1a a. THE FOUNDATION OF THE MINISTERIAL OFFICE IN THE MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST AND THE APOSTLES

Christ —: established different ministries for the good of the Church, 4142, 5050; —: distributes gifts of mutual service in the Church, 4115; —: established the Church in sending forth the apostles, 4142; —: through the apostles, made the bishops partakers in his consecration and mission, 4153; —: willed that bishops, as successors of the apostles, should be shepherds even to the consummation of the world, 4142; cf. G 1be (the Church remains through the ages the work of the Holy Trinity); G 3d (the apostolicity of the Church).

Ordained ministries in the Church come from the sacrament of orders, 4857, 5060; those of the faithful who are consecrated by holy orders are appointed to feed the Church in Christ's name with the word and the grace of God, 4128, 4145, 5051; they receive the authority and power to act in the person of Christ to serve and unite the Church in the Holy Spirit through the gospel and the sacraments, 4857, 5050f.; holy orders are a grace for the life and mission of the entire Church; they express a participation in the priesthood of Jesus Christ, 4857; cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Jesus Christ); G 4bd (participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ); (ordination and) mission is necessary for the service of the Word (and of the sacraments) in virtue of the ministerial authority of the Church, 760f., (769), 796, 809, 866, 1163f., 1217f., 1277f., 1777, 5051f.; cf. K 8a (the priesthood of the New Covenant).

Bishops —: are ministers of the Church, 4145; —: are instituted by Christ, 4145; —: assume Christ's tasks as teacher, shepherd, and priest, 4145, 4158; cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); —: succeed to the college of apostles in the ministry of teaching and pastoral leadership, 4146; —: act in the person of Jesus Christ, 4145, 4163, (4857); —: act with his authority, 4158, (4857); cf. H 2–4 (the bishops' pastoral, preaching, and sanctifying ministries).

The pastoral office is a true service (diakonia), 4148, (4152); pastors should minister to one another and to the faithful, 4158; pastoral ministry originates in the mercy of God, 5009.

The power of the ecclesial office is not forfeited by a sinful minister, 912, 1135, 1158, 1165, 1212f., (1220//1226), 1230.

Christ —: did not include any woman among the Twelve, 4592, 4981, 5040; —: did not entrust the apostolic charge to any woman, 4593, 4981, 5041.

Regarding the use of the concepts "functions" (munera) and "powers" (potestates), cf. 4354.

The power of ministry is not communicated to the ministers by the community of the faithful, 2602f., 5052; condemned: [Christ wished the Church to be governed in the manner of a republic], 2595; —: [By virtue of the apostolicity of single local communities, every community, in the event of its being deprived for some time of such a constituent element as the Eucharist, could "reappropriate" its original powers and designate its own presider and pastor; in such circumstances, God himself could not refuse to confer that power even without the sacrament of orders], 4722, 5052 f.

H 1b b. THE HIERARCHICAL ORDERING OF THE MINISTERIAL OFFICE

The Church —: is endowed with hierarchical organs, 4118; —: is ordered and governed in diversity by divine institution, 4158; —: has at her disposal, by the will of Christ, teachers, dispensers of the holy mysteries, and pastors, 4158; the Holy Spirit preserves without impairment the form of government established by Christ in the Church, 4152.

The members of holy orders are by reason of their particular vocation especially and professedly ordained to the sacred ministry, 4157.

Without hierarchical communion, the ontologico-sacramental function cannot be exercised, 4359.

There are different degrees of ordination in the Church, 282, 796, 1765, 1772, (1776).

The different orders in the Church: ^aHigh priest ("one bishop")—^bbishops—^cpriests (or priests of the "second order")—^dLevites—^edeacons—^fsubdeacons—^gacolytes—^hexorcists—ⁱlectors—^kporters—^llaity—^mwidows, ^{acd}101 and ^{be}101, ^{aceghikm}109, ^{bce}119, ^{bce}121, ^{bce}187, ^{bc}215f., ^{bcef}326–329, ^{cefghik}1765.

The hierarchy consists of bishops, priests, and ministers, ^bdeacons, 1776, ^b4153, 5060; the diaconate has been restored as a proper and permanent rank of the hierarchy, 4155, 5061; cf. H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).

There is a difference of power in the hierarchy; the opposing affirmation is condemned: [All priests have the same jurisdictional power according to the mandate of Christ], 282, 944, 1265, 1767, 1777.

A particular dignity belongs to the episcopal office by virtue of apostolic succession, 4144; the canonical mission of bishops can come about through customs, laws, or directly through the successor of Peter himself, 4148; bishops have legitimately handed on to different individuals various degrees of participation in this ministry, 4153.

- The members of holy orders can be engaged in secular activities and have secular professions, 4157; cf. G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); H 2f (bishops and the world); H 5 (ministerial office of priests).
- The common priesthood of the faithful and the hierarchical priesthood –: are interrelated, 4126, 4857, 5050f.; –: are, each in its own special way, a participation in the one priesthood of Christ, 4126, 4857, 5052f.; –: are different in essence and not only in degree, 4126, 4857; not all believers are endowed with the same spiritual power, 1767; cf. G 6ce (collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry); H 2e (people of God and the pastoral ministry of bishops).
- Condemned –: [The ministry of priests and bishops does not differ in the strict sense from the common priesthood of the faithful], 4721, 5050–5053; –: [The call to the ministry of priests does not amount to a new “priestly” capacity, strictly speaking, nor does it impart any character, but simply gives expression before the community that the original power conferred in the sacrament of baptism has become effective], 4721.
- Cf. G 3ab (the unity of the Church as a unity in diversity); G 4bd and G 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly office of Christ); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 8b (degrees of sacramental ministry).

c. THE COLLEGIAL CHARACTER OF MINISTERIAL OFFICE AND HIERARCHICAL COMMUNION

- The ministerial office has a collegial form, 5060, 5097.
- Just as, according to the disposition of Christ, Peter and the other apostles constitute one college, so the bishop of Rome and the bishops are joined together, 4146, 5010, 5097; the hierarchical communion of all bishops with the pope is certainly firmly established in tradition, 4358; insofar as the college of bishops is composed of many, it expresses the variety and universality of the people of God, but insofar as it is assembled under one head, it expresses the unity of the people of God, 4146; one is constituted a member of the episcopal body in virtue of sacramental consecration and hierarchical communion with the head and members of the college, 4146, 4354; cf. K 8c (episcopal ordination); the word “college” always includes its head, 4356; the parallel between Peter and the rest of the apostles, on the one hand, and between the supreme pontiff and the bishops, on the other hand, does not imply the transmission of the apostles’ extraordinary power to their successors or equality between the head of the college and its members, 4353; cf. G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles).
- The collegial unity of bishops –: is a very ancient practice, 4146; –: is confirmed by the ecumenical councils or by the convening of councils, 4146; –: is shown through the mutual relations of individual bishops with particular Churches and with the universal Church, 4147, 4924; –: is signified in the practice of summoning several bishops for an episcopal consecration, 4146.
- Episcopal bodies may make it possible to put the collegial feeling into practical application, 4147; on the nature and competence of regional and national bishops’ conferences, 5067f., 5097.
- Regarding the use of the concepts “college”, “stable group” (coetus stabilis), “order” (ordo), or “body” (corpus), cf. 4353; on the meaning of the concept “hierarchical communion”, cf. 4354f.
- Priests, as collaborators with the bishops, constitute with him one priesthood, 4154; by reason of orders and ministry, they fit into the body of bishops, 4154; by virtue of their ordination and their common mission, all priests are bound together in brotherhood, 4154; cf. H 5 (ministerial office of priests). Cf. G 3ab (the unity of the Church as a unity in diversity); G 3ad (the Church from and in the Churches); H 2d (collegial acts of pastoral ministry); H 3cc (councils and synods); H 3cd (universal nonconciliar teaching).

2. The Pastoral Ministry of Bishops

a. GENERAL SPECIFICATIONS REGARDING THE PASTORAL MINISTRY OF BISHOPS

H 2a

- The risen Christ –: guides the Church through the ministry of bishops on her pilgrimage toward eternal happiness, 4145; –: guides the Church through the pope and bishops, (4119), 4137; –: is represented in the Church by the pastors as “his vicars and ambassadors,” 4152, 4163; –: wants his people to increase through pastoral leadership, 4187.
- Bishops –: preside in the place of God as pastors and servants in governing their flock, 4144, 5097; –: succeed to the apostolic college in pastoral leadership, 4146, (4187); cf. G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles).
- The guidance of souls is subject to the judgment of the Church’s ministers, 2265–2268; superiors keep watch over the souls of the faithful, 4163; the genuineness and proper use of extraordinary gifts among the faithful are judged by the appointed leaders in the Church, 4131; pastors must examine the ministries and charisms of the faithful, 4156; bishops –: must ensure that the faithful approach the liturgy having been correctly prepared, 4011; –: exhort the people to carry out their part in the liturgy and Holy Mass, 4151; –: are to help the faithful by the example of their way of life so as to arrive, with them, at eternal life, 4151; the Church possesses the right to education and religious instruction, 2892, 2945–2948, 3685–3689; cf. H 3a (the bishops’ preaching ministry: general specifications).

Ministers of the Church have the right to discipline with spiritual or temporal punishments those who have failed (by excommunication, interdict, and other censures), 945, 1129–1135, 1161–1163, 1180, 1214//1219, 1271–1273, 1473f., 2604f., 2646–2650, 2924; the Church avoids cruel punishment and is content with the judgment of her priests, 283; but she nonetheless claims for herself the right to invoke the secular powers, 1215, 1272, 1483f.; pastors must acknowledge that just freedom which belongs to everyone in this earthly city, 4163.

The opinion is condemned that claims that moral dignity and divine predestination are necessary for the legitimate exercise of ministerial power (for the pope in particular), (1210), 1211–1213, ^a1220//1226, 1230; ecclesiastical authority does not judge about what is not public (motivations and intentions), 1814, 2266f., ^a3318.

The unbaptized are not bound by ecclesiastical law, 1671; heretics are subject to the authority of the Church, but they are deprived of the benefits of the Church, 2568–2570.

Cf. E 3bd (kingship of Christ); G 4be (participation of the faithful in the kingly office of Christ); H 1a (the foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Christ and the apostles); H 2b and H 2c (pastoral ministry of the pope/of bishops).

H 2b

b. THE PASTORAL MINISTRY OF THE POPE

2ba The power of government and the primacy of the pope. The Church requires unity of government by divine right, 3306; the Catholic Church is governed by the successor of Peter and by the bishops in communion with him, 4119; Christ governs the Church through the pope and the bishops, 4137; the unity of government is given in the primacy; the bishop of Rome, as the successor of Peter, is the perpetual and visible principle and foundation for the unity of the multiplicity of both the bishops and of the faithful, 4147; the solidity of the Church consists in the primacy, 3052; by virtue of his office as vicar of Christ and pastor of the whole Church, the Roman pontiff has full, supreme, and universal power over the Church, which he is always free to exercise, 4146; the functions of the Petrine ministry, 5009–5012. Cf. G 3ab (the unity of the Church as a unity in diversity); G 3ad (the Church from and in the Churches); G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles); H 2bc (pope and bishops).

The recognition of preeminence, and later of primacy –: is required, (102), 109, 132, 181f., 221, 232–235, 282, 347, 446, 468f., 638–641, 774f., 861, 875, 910, 1051–1064, 1191, 1307f., 2539, 2592f., 3059f., 3064; –: is made, 108, 133–136, 181f., 186^a, 216f., 264, 306, 661–664; –: is necessary for salvation, 233f., 875, 1051, 1060, (1191), 3867; the exercise of the primacy is to be defined more closely in ecumenical dialogue, 5012.

Objections against preeminence or primacy are condemned [among others: ^a*Papal dignity originated with the emperor*; ^b*it derives from the devil*; ^c*the Church has no need of a head on earth*], ^b1187, 1188, ^b1190, 1192, ^a1209, ^c1227–1229, 1475f., 2592–2597, 3555.

The pope –: is the visible head of the Church, 872, 1307, 2529f., 3059, 3113, 4147; –: is the vicar of Christ, 872, 1054, (1187), 1307, 1448, (1475), 1868, 2540, 2592f., 2603, 3059, 4146, 4356; –: has received immediately from Christ his whole jurisdictional power, 1054, (1187, 2592f.), 3060, 3064, 3113; –: is the supreme pastor of all the Christian faithful, (4134), 4150, (4356f.); –: is the head of the college of bishops, 4150, 4354–4356.

The pope is subject to divine laws and is bound by the directives given by Christ for his Church, so that he cannot change her constitution, 3114.

2bb The pope's competence in detail. The pope's power of jurisdiction –: is episcopal, ordinary, and immediate, 3060, 3064, 5010, 5011.

–: extends to the entire pilgrim Church, to all the faithful, 1053f., 1307, 3059, (3113).

–: is the supreme authority in questions of faith and morals, in questions of the discipline and government of the Church, 3060, 3064, (3307); the decisions of the pope do not need to be approved by the Church to be irrefragable, 2284, 2490, 3074.

–: is the supreme legislative, administrative, and penal power, 1057, 1059, 1061, 1271–1273; –: does not consist only in a few reserved rights, (3064), 3113; –: can dispense from things laid down by the universal Church, 1417; –: is the supreme judicial power in the Church, 1055, 1128–1135, 2592, 3063; appeal to the pope must be freely available to the faithful, 133–135, 639, 641, 861, 3063; it is not licit to deliberate again about his judgment, 133, 135, 182, 221, 232, 235, 641, 3063; the pope is not subject to anyone's judgment, 638, 873, 943, 1056, 1058, 1139; there is no appeal from the judgment of the pope to another court (^a*not even to a general council*), 641, 1056, ^a1375, (^a2935), ^a3063.

–: is the fullness of the power to grant indulgences, 819, 868, 1026, 1059, 1266, 1398, 1416; cf. K 10b (indulgences).

–: is independent of human authority, 2596, 2603; he can always exercise his power at will, 4357.

–: is independent of the pope's moral integrity and divine predestination, 912, 914, 1158, (1165).

The chair of Peter protects legitimate differences in the Church and assures that the differences contribute toward unity, 4134, 5009–5011; cf. G 3ab (unity of the Church as a unity in diversity).

2bc Pope and bishops. The Catholic Church is governed by the successor of Peter and the bishops in communion with him, 4119; Christ governs the Church through the pope and bishops, 4137; all bishops, together with the pope, represent the entire Church, 4147, 5097; subsidiarity and the principle of communion, 5097.

The college of bishops has no authority unless it is understood together with the Roman pontiff as its head, 4146, (4354–4356), 5067; the parallel between Peter and the rest of the apostles, on the one hand, and between the supreme pontiff and the bishops, on the other hand, does not imply the transmission of the apostles' extraordinary power to their successors or equality between the head of the college and its members, 4353.

Bishops receive their authority from the pope, 2592; he is superior to other bishops not only by his rank of honor but by the plenitude of his supreme power, 661, 811, 861, 1308, 2593, 3067; in the college of bishops, the pope preserves unhindered his function as Christ's vicar and as pastor of the universal Church, 4356; only the pope, as head of the episcopal college, is able to perform certain actions that are not within the competence of the bishops, e.g., convoking the college and directing it, approving norms of action, etc., 4356; taking account of the Church's welfare, he proceeds according to his own discretion in arranging, promoting, and approving the exercise of collegial activity, 4356.

The canonical mission of bishops can come about by legitimate customs, by laws made or recognized by the supreme authority of the Church, or directly through the successor of Peter, 4148; in the case where the pope refuses or denies apostolic communion, bishops cannot assume their office, 4148.

Certain affirmations regarding the relationship between the pope and the other bishops are condemned, 2595, 2597, 2935, 3064; primacy is defended against the claims of centralism and absolutism, 3112–3116.

The Roman See, because of her primacy, is called "mother" or "teacher" of all (particular) Churches, 774, 1616, 1868, 2781.

The Pope and councils. It is the prerogative of the bishop of Rome to convoke, to preside over, and to confirm councils, 4146; he has power over councils that he himself ^aconvokes, ^btransfers, ^cprolongs, ^ddissolves, ^econfirms, ^e398–400, 447, 861, ^{bcd}1309, ^{abd}1445, ^e1847–1850, 2282f., 2329, ^{ae}4146; a general council is not above a pope, 233, 1151^o, 1309, (2935f.).

Cf. H 3cc (councils and synods).

c. THE PASTORAL MINISTRY OF BISHOPS

H 2c

Christ governs the Church through —: the pope and the bishops, 4119, 4137; —: the ministry of bishops, 4145; the bishops are vicars and ambassadors of Christ, 4152.

The order of bishops —: is the highest in the hierarchy (^aas to the Church's internal constitution), 1768, ^a3307, 5097; —: together with its head, the bishop of Rome, holds supreme and full power in the Church, 4146; —: exists by virtue of the same divine constitution as the papacy, 3115; pastoral ministry is entrusted to the bishops, 4152; bishops who are not heads of particular Churches, 5097.

Individual bishops —: are the visible principle and foundation of unity in their particular Churches, 4147; —: represent their Churches, 4147; —: exercise pastoral government only in the particular Churches entrusted to them, 4147; —: govern the particular Churches by counsel, exhortations, example, with authority and sacred power, 4152; —: contribute to the good of the entire Church by governing their own Church well, 4147; —: govern particular Churches under the authority of the pope (^afrom whom they receive directly ordinary jurisdictional power), 1778, 3308f., ^a3804.

The jurisdictional power of bishops is ^adirect and ^bordinary (that is, ^cit is an independent power, not representing the power of the pope), (^deven if its exercise is regulated by the supreme authority of the Church and can be circumscribed), ^{ab}3061, ^{ac}3307, ^b3804, ^{cd}4146, ^{abcd}4152; the power of the pope neither stands in the way of the jurisdictional power of the bishops nor absorbs it, 3061, 3112, 3115, 3310; the power of bishops is affirmed by the supreme and universal power, 4152; the canonical mission of bishops can come about by legitimate customs, by laws made or recognized by the supreme authority of the Church, or directly through the successor of Peter, 4148; cf. H 2bc (pope and bishops).

Bishops have the right and duty to make laws for their subjects, to pass judgment on them, and to moderate everything pertaining to the ordering of worship and the apostolate, 4152; the Church's laws are further defined by the bishop's particular judgment for his diocese, 4151.

Affirmations that expand the rights of bishops beyond that which is due to them are condemned, 2594, 2606–2608.

The patriarchates (of ^aConstantinople, ^bAlexandria, ^cAntioch, ^dJerusalem) as well as ^eall their rights and privileges are affirmed, ^{bc}351, ^{abcd}661, ^{abcd}811, 861, ^{abcde}1308; the pope suppresses the title Patriarch of the West, 5106.

It pertains to the bishops —: to ordain ministers of the Church and to administer the sacrament of confirmation, 1768, 1777, (3328); —: to admit newly elected members into the episcopal body by means of the sacrament of orders, 4145; cf. K 8c (episcopal ordination).

Bishops are superior to priests, 1768, 1777.

Cf. H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops).

d. COLLEGIAL ACTS OF PASTORAL MINISTRY

H 2d

The ministerial office can be exercised only in hierarchical communion with the head and the members of the college, 4145, (4146, 4354f.), 4924, 5067; the college of bishops —: has authority only when it is understood together with the Roman pontiff as its head, 4146, 5067; —: acts as a college in the strict sense only from time to time and only with the consent of its head, 4357.

Individual bishops are obliged --: to enter into a community of work among themselves and with the successor of Peter, 4147; --: as members of the college and legitimate successors of the apostles to be solicitous for the whole Church, 4147; --: to promote the unity of the faith, the discipline of the Church, and the love of the faithful toward the entire Church, 4147; --: to extend fraternal aid to other Churches, 4147; --: to regard priests, their coworkers, as sons and friends, 4154.

In episcopal conferences of a regional or national type there are no collegial acts strictly speaking, 5067; cooperation results from a collegial sense of like-mindedness, 5067; individual regulations concerning the binding character of resolutions passed by bishops' conferences, 5068.

H 2e

e. THE PEOPLE OF GOD AND THE PASTORAL MINISTRY OF BISHOPS

Pastors and the other faithful are bound to each other, 4158; the distinction that the Lord made between sacred ministers and the rest of the people bears within it a certain union, 4158.

The laity --: also have for their brothers, with Christ, those in the sacred ministry, 4158; --: should openly reveal to pastors their needs and desires, 4163; --: are permitted and sometimes even obliged to express their opinion on those things that concern the good of the Church, 4163; --: should, like all the Christian faithful, accept with Christian obedience the decisions of the shepherds in the Church, 4163; --: should pray to God for those placed over them in the Church, 4163; --: have a right to the preaching of the Word and the administration of the sacraments, 4163; cf. G 6cf (rights and duties of the laity); --: should take on their own distinctive role, enlightened by Christian wisdom and giving close attention to the teaching of the Magisterium, 4343; cf. G 6cd (the laity in the Church); the faithful must obey pastors when they teach in the name of Christ, 4533; cf. G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions).

Pastors must --: help the laity by the example of their way of life so as to arrive, with them, at eternal life, 4151; --: take care of their subjects, for whose souls they will have to render an account to God, 4152; --: serve the other faithful, 4158; --: recognize and promote the dignity and the responsibility of the laity in the Church, 4163; --: acknowledge and foster the ministries and roles of the lay faithful that find their foundation in the sacraments of baptism and confirmation (and for many, in the sacrament of matrimony), 4858; --: willingly employ the prudent advice of the laity, 4163; --: assign duties to the laity in the Church, allow them freedom for action, and encourage them to undertake tasks on their own initiative, 4163; --: consider attentively in Christ the projects, suggestions, and desires proposed by the laity, (4152), 4163; --: acknowledge that just freedom which belongs to everyone in this earthly city, 4163; all bishops must promote and safeguard the unity of faith and the discipline of the Church, to instruct the faithful to love for the Mystical Body of Christ, particularly among its poor, suffering, and persecuted members, 4147; a bishop must --: have compassion on the ignorant and erring, 4152; --: exhort the people to carry out with faith and reverence their part in the liturgy and in Holy Mass, 4151.

Pastors must entrust certain functions to the laity, but only those that do not make pastors of the lay faithful, 4858, 5051; dangers: the indiscriminate use of the word "minister", the confusion and the equating of the common priesthood and the ministerial priesthood, arbitrary interpretation of the concept "subsidiarity", clericalization of the laity, 4858; it is necessary to express both the unity of the Church's mission in which all the baptized participate as well as the substantial diversity of the ministry of pastors, 4858, 5050–5053; cf. G 6ce (collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office).

It is not for the pastors of the Church to intervene directly in the political construction and organization of social life; this task forms part of the vocation of the laity, 4775; cf. G 6a (general principles regarding the laity). Cf. G 6ce (collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry).

H 2f

f. BISHOPS AND THE WORLD

Bishops --: must not take upon themselves alone the Church's mission toward the world but must allow all the faithful to cooperate in this common undertaking, 4156; --: must promote every activity that is of interest to the Church, especially that the faith may take increase and the light of full truth appear to all men, 4147; --: must supply workers for the missions and spiritual and material aid, 4147; --: receive from the Lord the mission to teach all nations, so that all men may attain to salvation by faith, baptism, and the fulfillment of the commandments, 4148; --: must be ready to preach the gospel to all, 4152, 4534; --: must be ready to urge the faithful to apostolic and missionary activity, 4152; --: must also take care of those who are not yet of the one flock, 4152.

Cf. G 3cd (Church and mission); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); G 6ce (collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications).

3. The Bishops' Ministry of Preaching

a. GENERAL SPECIFICATIONS

H 3a

- Christ has entrusted the Church with the deposit of faith by instituting an authentic Magisterium, 3305; he himself teaches through the Church, 3806; the power of the Church's living Magisterium is exercised in his name, 4149, 4161, (4163), 4214; the Church, as the guardian and teacher of revealed doctrine, has the right and the duty to present it, 807, 3012, 3020, 3540, 5065.
- The deposit of divine revelation must be religiously preserved and faithfully expounded, 4150, 5065; revelation is transmitted in its entirety and faithfully expounded through the legitimate succession of bishops and the care of the Roman pontiff, 4150 4534, 5071; the Roman pontiff and the bishops, by fitting means, strive to inquire into and give expression to revelation, 4150; the task of authentically interpreting the Word of God, whether written or handed on, has been entrusted exclusively to the living teaching office of the Church, 4214, 5071; the Church possesses the right to education and religious instruction, 2892, 2945–2948, 3685–3689; cf. 2a (pastoral ministry of bishops; general specifications).
- The Magisterium –: is not above the Word of God, but serves it, teaching only what has been transmitted, 4214; –: listens devoutly, guards scrupulously, and explains faithfully the Word of God, 4214, 5071; –: does not receive any new public revelation, 4151, 4534; for this reason, pastors are not dispensed from the concern to study the treasure of divine revelation in Scripture and in tradition, 4149f., 4534; tradition, Sacred Scripture, and the Magisterium of the Church are so linked to one another that one cannot stand without the others, 4214; cf. A 3 (tradition of revelation); G 3db (apostolic tradition in Scripture and tradition).
- The exalted Christ preaches the Word of God to all nations, especially through the ministry of bishops, 4154, 4874; Christ wills his people to increase through the preaching of the gospel by the bishops, 4187; bishops are preachers of the faith, who lead new disciples to Christ, and they are authentic teachers who preach and illustrate the faith to the people, 4149; to bishops –: bearing witness to the gospel has been assigned, 4145, 4152; –: Christ gave the task of proclaiming the gospel everywhere on earth, 4147; among the principal duties of bishops is the preaching of the gospel, 4149; through the ministry of the Word, bishops communicate to the faithful God's power to save, 4151; the preaching of bishops increases the understanding of the apostolic tradition, 4210; cf. G 3cd (the Church and evangelization or mission).
- The exercise of the preaching ministry through bishops' conferences, 5067f.
- The great duty of spreading the Christian name is entrusted to the successor of Peter in a special way, 4147; cf. G 3cd (the Church and evangelization or mission).
- The office of teaching, of its very nature, can be exercised only in hierarchical communion with the head and the members of the college, 4145; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion).
- Cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher); G 4bc (participation of the faithful in the prophetic office of Christ); H 1a (the foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Christ and the apostles).

b. OFFICIAL DOCTRINAL DECISIONS

H 3b

- In general. The Magisterium adds nothing new to the deposit of faith, but rather clarifies what might until then have seemed obscure or determines to be of faith what has previously been called into question, 3683, (4151, 4534); dogmas serve to confirm or clarify what is stated in Sacred Scripture or tradition, solve certain questions, or remove certain errors, 4539; cf. H 3bb (subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions).
- The pope and bishops do not receive any new public revelation, 4150f., 4534; the assistance of the Holy Spirit is not granted to the pope for disclosing new doctrines, 3070.
- The Church's Magisterium does not intervene on the basis of a particular competence in the area of the experimental sciences, but puts forward, by virtue of its evangelical mission and apostolic duty, the moral teaching corresponding to the dignity of the person and to his integral vocation, 4790.
- The subject matter and types of doctrinal decisions. The subject matter itself is revealed doctrine, the deposit of faith (^a*the judgment about its true meaning*), ^a1507, ^a1863, 3012, 3018, 3070, 4214; subjects of doctrinal decision that are not revealed, but are nonetheless historically or logically connected to revealed subjects by necessity, are likewise matters for belief, 5065f., 5071; certain matters of belief can be proposed definitively, 5066, 5071; a matter can be proposed definitively in different ways, 5066, 5072; the Church also authentically interprets the principles of the moral order that have their origin in human nature itself, 4581, (4790); the Church's doctrine extends to the whole moral order and particularly to justice, 4756, 4950; the different forms of teaching call for different forms of assent, 4877f., 5066; the authentic Magisterium, 5066, 5072.
- The Church also lays claim to the authority to teach –: in the area of philosophy, 2860f., 2865f., 2910, 3018; –: what, in the economic and social domain, concerns the moral framework, 3725, 3938, 3997.
- The Church judges sanctity in view of canonization, 675.

- The Magisterium determines and approves professions of faith (as the basic principle on which all who profess the faith necessarily agree), 398, 400, ^a1500, 5065f., 5071.
- The Magisterium subjects writings about questions of faith and morals to examination and approval and condemns books that are deleterious, 202, 213, 353f., 686, 807, 980, 1851–1861, 2065, 2668.
- The Magisterium condemns statements that are not in accord with the doctrine of faith and morals and occasionally imposes theological censures either in general or in particular, 721–739, 840–844, 891–899, ^a921–924, 941–946, ^a951–979, 1028–1049, ^a1087–1097, 1101–1103, 1110–1116, 1121–1139, 1151–1195, 1201–1230, 1361–1369, 1391–1396, 1411–1419, 1451–1492, 1901–1980, ^a2001–2006, 2021–2065, 2101–2166, 2170f., 2201–2268, 2281–2285, ^a2290–2292, 2301–2332, 2351–2374, 2400–2502, 2571–2575, ^a2601–2685, ^a2791–2793, 3201–3241, 3401–3465.
- The Church does not judge about the mind or intention (or what is hidden), since that concerns something internal, ^a1814, ^a2266f., 3318; she can only judge insofar as the mind is manifested externally, 3318; in this sense the Church judges the meaning of an author's words, 2010–2012, 2020, 2390.
- The judgment as to the genuineness and proper use of extraordinary gifts belongs to those who are appointed leaders in the Church, 4131; cf. F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit); G 3ac (the building-up of the Church through a diversity of charisms).
- The Magisterium proceeds in a more solemn, extraordinary manner when it wants to oppose errors with greater effect or present doctrinal points more clearly and in greater detail, 3683.
- Dogmas are and always have been the unalterable norm both for faith and for theological science, 4536; cf. A 4bb (theological methods); in matters of faith and morals, it is absolutely impermissible for the faithful to see in the Church or in the unhesitating assent of the people of God merely a fundamental permanence in truth, 4537; cf. H 3db (infallibility of the Church); it can sometimes happen —: that the truths taught by the Church are enunciated by the sacred Magisterium in terms that bear traces of changeable conceptions of a given epoch, 4539; —: that some dogmatic truth is first expressed incompletely (but not falsely), and at a later date, when considered in a broader context of faith or human knowledge, it receives a fuller and more perfect expression, 4539; the meaning of dogmatic formulas remains ever true and constant in the Church, even when it is expressed with greater clarity or more developed, 4540.
- These notions are incorrect —: [Dogmatic formulas cannot signify truth in a determinate way but can only offer changeable approximations to it], 4540; —: [Dogmatic formulas signify the truth only in an indeterminate way], 4540; this opinion denotes dogmatic relativism, 4540; because of the historiography of scientific and theoretical research, it is possible for the decisions of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith to be in need of revision, 5091.
- There are resolutions of the Apostolic See that can be changed for the better, 641; it can also happen that something eluded the Apostolic See, 641, 4950; because of the historiography of scientific and theoretical research, it is possible for the decisions of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith to be in need of revision, 5091.

3bc The most important censures (qualifications), presented using the examples of propositions to which they have in some definite way been assigned: the proposition is —: heretical, 951–965, 977f., 1087, 1089–1091, 1093, 1095f., 2001–2005, 2203, 2213–2215, 2241–2253, 2290, 2602–2604, 2615, 2659, 2693; —: approaching heresy (haeresi proxima), 2221, 2223, 2257, 2260f.; —: having the flavor of heresy (haeresim sapiens) or suspect of heresy (suspecta haeresis), 2202, 2204–2210, 2212, 2216–2219, 2231f., 2235f., 2255f., 2258, ^a2618, ^a2620, 2622, 2628; —: schismatic, 2606, (2607f.). 2693; —: false, 1087–1093, 1095–1097, 2004f., 2609–2613, 2616, 2619//2630, 2635–2637, 2640//2653, 2661//2668, 2673–2680, 2682f., 2793 —: temerarious, 2001, 2005, 2170f., 2211, 2214f., 2217–2220, 2223f., 2226f., 2230–2235, 2238f., 2241–2268, 2291, 2331f., 2358, 2360, 2365–2370, 2372, 2609–2614, 2617, 2625–2627, 2630//2648, 2651–2654, 2662//2673, 2676–2679, 2683, 2763; —: erroneous, 1087, 1089–1091, 1095–1097, 1114f., 2204–2206, 2208–2210, 2213–2219, 2221f., 2224, 2232, 2235, 2241–2253, 2258, 2291, 2351–2357, 2360f., 2363, 2367–2369, 2372f., 2606//2612, 2622, 2628, 2637, 2646f., 2664, 2677f., 2791; —: scandalous, 1092, 1309, 1391–1395, 2021–2065, 2101–2165, 2206f., 2209–2211, 2214–2220, 2224f., 2230–2252, 2254, 2258–2260, 2263f., 2266, 2291, 2357, 2360, 2362, 2369–2371, 2619, 2634, 2643, 2664, 2668, 2673f., 2678, 2681, 2791f.; —: blasphemous, 2001, 2005, 2210, 2214f., 2241–2253, 2260; —: impious (impia), 1309, 2001, 2005, 2619; —: offensive to pious ears (piarum aurium offensiva), 2206, 2230, 2258, 2291, 2358, 2368, 2633, 2642f., 2662, 2671, 2678; —: evil-sounding (male sonans), 2354–2356, 2373, 2644, 2665; —: pernicious (perniciosa), 2352, 2364, 2367, 2612, 2614, 2623, 2625, 2629f., 2637, 2639, 2644, 2646, 2649, 2662, 2664f., 2670, 2678, 2680, 2692.

H 3c

c. ORGANS OF OFFICIAL DOCTRINAL DECISIONS

3ca Bishops —: succeed the college of apostles in the office of teaching, 4146; —: preside in the place of God as teachers in the instruction of their flock, 4144; —: are authentic teachers, that is, they are endowed with the authority of Christ, preaching the faith to the people of God and illustrating it by the light of the Holy Spirit, 4149 (4533); —: vigilantly ward off any errors that threaten their flock, 4149; —: preserve apostolic doctrine, 4233; —: are, even individually, teachers of their subjects; to them belong judgments concerning the faith, 761; by divine institution, it is the exclusive task of these pastors alone to teach the faithful authentically, 4533, 5066, 5071; cf. H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications).

- The pope is the supreme teacher in the Church, 1307, 3059, 3068, 3074, 4149f., 4534, 5066, 5071; his doctrinal authority is most often stressed together with his primacy; cf. H 2b (pastoral ministry of the pope); in particular: 181f., 217, 221, 235, 343, 353, 365, 1064, 3065–3073, 3074f.; it is acknowledged by councils and synods, 218, 306, 398–400, 402, (444), 664 1848; for which reason the Roman Church (the Roman See) is called “teacher”, 774, 1850, 1868. 3cb
- The pope has the right to define questions of faith, 861, 3067, 3885, 5066; –: to interpret the decrees of councils, 447, 1849f., 3067.
- The pope can definitively propose matters that are not revealed but are nonetheless connected either historically or logically with revealed articles of faith, 5066, 5071.
- The pope carries out the authentic teaching office in the Church, 5066, 5071.
- Regarding the pope, it is necessary to distinguish between his role as “teacher of the universal Church” and his private scholarship, which might favor one opinion among the many that are permissible, 2565.
- The pope’s decisions may not be debated again, nor are they open to discussion (^awhen he takes an expressed position), nor can they be rejected, 182, 217f., 221, 232, 235, 343, 353, 2331, ^a3885; Augustine’s opinion is not to be held when it is in opposition to the teaching of the pope, 2330.
- The authority of the curial congregations is emphasized, 2880, 2912, 3408, 3503.
- Councils and synods. The Magisterium sometimes arrives at a decision through the assistance of councils and synods, 3069. 3cc
- General councils: The supreme power in the universal Church, which the college of bishops enjoys, is exercised in a solemn way in an ecumenical council, 4146; the authority of general councils –: is emphasized, 343, 352, (364), 517f., 521f., 550, 575, 587, 1869, 2526–2539; –: is recognized and appealed to, 402, 412, (433), 436–438, 444, 472, 548, 640, 652, 686, 1986f.
- A general or ecumenical council represents the entire Church, 1247f.; it is not, however, above the pope (^aso that appeal cannot be made to it away from the pope), 233, 1151^{oo}, ^a1375, (2935f.), 3063; there is never an ecumenical council unless it is confirmed or at least accepted as such by the successor of Peter, 4146; cf. H 2bd (pope and council); whatever is established by a general council in matters of faith and morals must be accepted by everyone, 1248–1251; affirmations of the possibility of there being other opinions are condemned, 587, 1479.
- On the interpretation of Vatican II, 5108.
- Diocesan and national synods: statements that exaggerate the authority of diocesan or national synods and their members are condemned, 2609–2611, 2693, 2936.
- A particular synod cannot pass judgment on a general council, 447; condemned: [Decisions of a national synod do not allow for further discussion], 2936.
- Universal nonconciliar teaching. A collegial power equivalent to an ecumenical council can be exercised by bishops together with the pope provided he calls them to collegiate action or at least approves of or freely accepts the united action of the scattered bishops, 4146, 5066, 5072. 3cd

d. THE CHARISM OF INFALLIBILITY

H 3d

- Assistance of the Spirit. Cf. B 3e (the Holy Spirit in the life of the Church); G 1be (the Church remains through the ages the work of the Holy Trinity). The pope and councils rely on the illumination of the Holy Spirit, 102, 265, 444, 631, 702, 707, 1151^{oo}, 1500f., 1600, 1635, 1667, 1726, 1738, 1820, 1848; in the fulfillment of their teaching office and in proposing a doctrine that is immune from error, the pastors of the Church enjoy the assistance of the Holy Spirit, 4534. 3da
- Infallibility of the Church. Infallibility is attributed to the Church (in general), 2922 3020, 4130, 4531, 4852; when the entire body of the faithful express their universal agreement in matters of faith and morals, they manifest the supernatural discernment of faith of the whole people, who cannot err in belief, 4130, 4531; the infallibility with which Christ has endowed the Church in the area of faith and morals extends as far as the deposit of divine revelation extends, 4150; secondary doctrinal matters, 5065f., 5071; the laity participate in the Church’s supernatural sense of faith, (4130), 4852; cf. G 4bc and G 6ba (participation of the faithful/laity in the prophetic office of Christ); propositions that implicitly affirm that the Church has strayed from the faith are condemned [namely, accusations of the unjust condemnation of articles, unjust excommunications, or the deliberate obscuring of truth], 1225, 1480, 2491–2501, 2601, 2612–2614. 3db
- The infallibility of bishops. The infallibility promised to the Church resides also in the body of bishops when it exercises the supreme Magisterium with the successor of Peter, 4149. 3dc
- Bishops proclaim the doctrine of Christ in an infallible way when, ^a*gathered together in an ecumenical council*, and ^b*in a collegial act*, they are teachers and judges of faith and morals for the universal Church, ^a4149, ^b4535; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion); H 3cc (councils and synods); the infallibility of the Church’s Magisterium extends not only to the deposit of faith, but also to those matters without which that deposit cannot be rightly preserved and expounded, 4536, (cf. 4149), 5065f., 5071f.
- Individual bishops proclaim Christ’s doctrine infallibly whenever, even though dispersed through the world, but still maintaining the bond of communion among themselves and with the successor of Peter, and authentically teaching matters of faith and morals, they are in agreement on one position as definitively to be held, 4149, 4535, 5065f., 5071f.; Christ wished to endow the pastors’ Magisterium with a fitting charism of infallibility in matters regarding faith and morals, 4534; the bishops have received the sure gift of truth, 4210, 4532; the charism of infallibility does not come from new revelations, 4534.

- 3dd Infallibility of the pope. The unsullied protection of the faith is claimed for the Apostolic See, 363, 775, 1064, 1807f., 2329, 2923, 3066. Infallibility belongs to the pope, (221, 353), 2329f., 2539, 2781, 3069f., 3074f., 4150, 4534; the assistance of the Holy Spirit was promised to the pope in Peter, 4150.
- The nature and conditions of infallibility: the gift of infallibility consists, not in any new revelation, but in the assistance of the Holy Spirit so that the revelation transmitted through the apostles can be faithfully explained, 3070, 3074, (3116).
- The pope is infallible only when, in the exercise of his authority as teacher of all the faithful, or “ex cathedra”, he defines a doctrine concerning faith or morals, 3074, 4150, 4535; the infallibility of the Church’s Magisterium extends not only to the deposit of faith, but also to those matters without which that deposit cannot be rightly preserved and expounded, 4536, (cf. 4149), 5065f., 5071f.
- Infallibility is tied to the doctrine of Sacred Scripture and to definitions that have already been made, 3070, 3074, ³3116; when either the Roman pontiff or the body of bishops together with him defines a judgment, they pronounce it in accordance with revelation itself, 4150; the charism of infallibility does not come from any new revelation, 4534; infallibility does not refer to the pope’s administrative actions, 3116.
- The solemn definitions of the pope are irreformable of themselves, not because of the consent of the Church, 3074, 4150; in this case the Roman pontiff is pronouncing judgment, not as a private person, but as the supreme teacher of the universal Church, in whom the charism of infallibility of the Church herself is individually present, 4149; cf. H 3db (infallibility of the Church).
- The gift of infallibility does not exempt the pope from the obligation to reflect and investigate as well as to obtain the counsel of others, 182, 810, 844, 899, 904, 924, 930f., 1848, 2011, 4149f., 4536.

H 3e

e. ACCEPTANCE OF DOCTRINAL DECISIONS

- 3ea Acknowledgment of doctrinal decisions is required –: in general, 2020, 2390, 2875–2880, 3020, 3625, 3884f., 4149; –: also for those forms of doctrine that are held by the common and constant consent of Catholics as theological truths and sure conclusions, 2880; –: for philosophical doctrines, 2860f., 2865f., 2910, 3018; believers must be faithful to the tradition and the ordinary and extraordinary Magisterium of the Church, 4823; different forms of assent, 4877, 4878, 5066.
- Examples of submission and retraction by authors, 807, 980, 990f., 2351°, 2751°, 2811°, 2828°.
- Affirmations that oppose the doctrinal authority of the Church are condemned, 1477–1480, 3401–3408.
- 3eb Acceptance of infallible resolutions. All those things are to be believed with divine and Catholic faith that, in solemn judgment or through the ordinary and universal teaching office, are proposed for belief as having been divinely revealed, 2879, 2922, 3011, (3885), 4536, 5066; dogmas are and always have been the unalterable norm both for faith and for theological science, 4536; the assent of the Church to the pope’s definitions in the area of faith or morals can never be wanting, on account of the activity of that same Holy Spirit, 4149; obediential silence is an insufficient assent to doctrinal decrees, 2390.
- Bishops, teaching in communion with the Roman pontiff, are to be respected by all as witnesses to divine and Catholic truth, 4149; determinations by an ecumenical council of bishops united as teachers and rulers of the faith must be adhered to in the obedience of faith, 1248–1251, 4149.
- Regarding the obligation to believe, cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); L 2c (the virtue of faith); L 2f (union with God).
- 3ec Decisions that are not presented as infallible. Cf. H 3ea (acknowledgment of doctrinal decisions); assent must also be given to doctrinal documents that are not presented as infallible, e.g., encyclicals and condemnations of errors (to the extent that they do not concern otherwise infallible matter), 2922, 3407, 3885; such an assent must be able to be revoked in favor of a subsequent decision or development; this becomes clear with historical examples; cf. H 3h (examples of divergent doctrinal decisions); religious submission of mind and will must be shown to the authentic Magisterium of the Roman pontiff, even when he is not speaking ex cathedra, 4149, 5066, 5072; the obligation of the faithful to accept the teaching of the Church’s supreme Magisterium in the area of faith and morals even when not defined as obligatory, 4351, 4878, 5066, 5072.

H 3f

f. NORMS OF INTERPRETATION

The mind and will of decisions of the papal Magisterium may be known from the character of the documents, from the frequent repetition of the same doctrine, or from the manner of speaking, 4149.

A doctrinal decree containing a doubtful meaning should always be taken in that sense which renders the statement true, 1407.

Books that have not been condemned by the Apostolic See or that have been dismissed from the process of inspection are not for that reason to be considered free from error, 2047, 3154f.

g. FREEDOM OF RESEARCH AND TEACHING

H 3g

Defense of freedom. The fundamental recognition of the autonomy of earthly affairs and the freedom of science: C 1ic; C 4ic (order of human activity); C 4id (human research and the sciences); scientific research must not be judged with a spirit of suspicion or blind opposition against everything that is new, but rather with the greatest charity, 3831; caution against a blind faith in science: C 4If (positivism, faith in science and progress); freedom of theological research, 4873.

Revealed doctrines as limits, 3042; the duty to respect the judgments of the Magisterium and freedom of discussion, 3625, 3667, (3885), 4879–4885.

Freedom of discussion –: in the issue of aids of grace, 1997, 1997a, 2008, 2509f., 2564f., (2679); –: in the issue of attrition, 2070; –: in the question of the separation of the blood of Christ from his divinity during the three days of the Passion, 1385; –: in the issue of moral systems, 2175–2177, (2679), 2726; –: regarding the ideas of the Thomistic school, 2167!, 2509, 3601°, 3667; –: regarding books that were dismissed from the process by the Congregation of the Index, 3154f.; –: in biblical research, 3831, 4407.

In questions open to discussion, it is not permitted –: to accuse those who merely do not agree of disloyalty to faith or to discipline, 3625; –: to impose a theological censure on an adversary, 1426, 2167, 2665, 2679.

h. EXCURSUS: EXAMPLES OF DIVERGENT DOCTRINAL DECISIONS

H 3h

Examples of divergent doctrinal decisions –: the acts of Pope Liberius regarding the question of the semi-Arians (138–143), especially the condemnation of Athanasius, can easily be understood as a rejection of the Nicene faith and as contrary to the veneration shown by all the faithful toward the champion of that faith; –: the words of Leo the Great, 294: “From the Mother of the Lord, nature, not guilt, was assumed”, if taken literally and in an absolute sense according to the conception common at that time, would exclude a development toward the definition of Mary’s Immaculate Conception, 2800–2804; –: judgments on the orthodoxy of Theodoret and Ibas differ: condemned at the Second Council of Constantinople (in addition to the Synod of Ephesus, pronounced the “Robber Council” by Leo the Great), by Gregory the Great, and in the Liber diurnus, they were recognized as orthodox by the Council of Chalcedon and by Pelagius I, 300°, 436f., 444, 472; –: regarding Pope Honorius I, whose orthodoxy was challenged in the East, there is a great difference in judgment about his relationship with the leaders of the Monothelists between John IV, who interpreted him benevolently and defended him, and Leo II, who agreed with the Third Council of Constantinople and condemned him harshly, while Martin I, with the Lateran Synod, does not mention Pope Honorius at all in the condemnation of the Monothelists, 487f., 496–498, 518, 550, 552, 561°, 563; –: in addition to the trinitarian baptismal formula, Nicholas I formally considered the formula “in the name of Christ” to be valid, which specifically contradicts later doctrine, 646!, (211), with 123, 176f., 214, 445!, 478, 580, 589, 592, 644, 757, 802, 903; –: in regard to the question of the validity of simoniacal ordinations, there are some decrees that contradict the current opinion, 691–694, 701!, 705, 710; –: Celestine III and Innocent III are not in agreement about the scope of the Pauline privilege, 768; –: Alexander III differs from some of his predecessors regarding the effect of matrimonial consent, 756; –: one of the clearest cases is John XXII’s idea regarding only an imperfect beatitude after death until the day of universal judgment; the cardinals and the king of France were not only not in agreement with this idea, but they opposed it openly, pressured the pope to revoke his position, and subsequently declared the opposite idea obligatory, 990f., 1000–1002.

i. THE PEOPLE OF GOD AND THE BISHOPS’ MINISTRY OF PREACHING

H 3i

Christ fulfills his prophetic office not only through the hierarchy, but also through the laity, 4161; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher); G 4bc and G 6ba (the participation of the faithful/laity in the prophetic office of Christ); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).

By following the Magisterium, the people of God receives the Word of God, 4130; the laity accept in Christian obedience decisions of their spiritual shepherds as teachers of the Church, 4163, (4343); cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions).

4. The Bishops’ Ministry of Sanctification

The bishop is to be considered as the high priest of his flock, from whom the life in Christ of his faithful is in some way derived and dependent, 4041; bishops preside in the place of God as priests in the sacred worship of their flock, 4144; in the bishops, Christ, Supreme High Priest, is present in the midst of those who believe, 4145; through the ministry of bishops, the exalted Christ administers the sacraments of faith to his faithful, and through their office, he incorporates new members into his body, 4145; Christ wills that his people increase through the administration of the sacraments by the bishops, 4187.

- A bishop is marked with the fullness of the sacrament of orders, is “the steward of the grace of the supreme priesthood”, especially in the Eucharist, which he offers or causes to be offered and by which the Church continually lives and grows, 4151; every legitimate celebration of the Eucharist is regulated by the bishop, 4151; cf. J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops).
- The bishops —: are stewards of the mysteries of God, 4145; —: sanctify the faithful through the sacraments, 4151; —: by praying and laboring for the people, make outpourings from the fullness of Christ’s holiness, 4151; —: regulate the distribution of the sacraments, 4151, (4187); —: regulate the administration of the baptism, 4151; —: are the original ministers of confirmation, dispensers of sacred orders, and the moderators of penitential discipline, 4151; the power of binding and loosing, which was given to Peter, was granted also to the college of apostles, joined with their head, 4146; it pertains to the bishops to admit newly elected members into the episcopal body by means of the sacrament of orders, 4145; cf. K 3c (minister of baptism); K 4c (minister of confirmation); K 5cb (the competence of ordained priests and bishops); K 6d (minister of the sacrament of penance); K 8d (minister of the sacrament of orders).
- The opinion [the power to confect the sacrament of the Eucharist is not necessarily connected with sacramental ordination] undermines the apostolic structure of the Church and distorts the sacramental economy of salvation, 4723.
- Cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); G 4bd (the participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ); H 1a (the foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Jesus Christ and the apostles); K (God sanctifies through his sacraments).

H 5

5. The Ministerial Office of Priests

- The priest —: presides over the assembly in the person of Christ and prays in the name of the entire people, (3755, 3757, 3850), 4033, (4153), 5050–5052; —: participates on his level of ministry in the function of the sole Mediator, Christ, 4153; —: exercising within the limits of his authority the function of Christ, he gathers together God’s family and leads it to God, 4153; by the power of the sacrament of orders, in the image of Christ the eternal High Priest, they are consecrated to preach the gospel and shepherd the faithful and to celebrate divine worship, 4153; cf. K 8c (essential moments of the sacrament of orders); the role of moderating the community is tied to the office of preaching the Word of God and that of presiding at the Holy Eucharist, 4721.
- The pastor of a parish takes the place of the bishop, 4042; priests —: although they do not have the episcopal dignity and the exercise of their power depends on bishops, are nonetheless united with them in their sacerdotal dignity, 4153; —: as cooperators with the bishop, form with him one priesthood, 4154; —: make the bishop present in individual communities, taking up themselves, as far as they are able, his duties and his care, 4154; —: sanctify and govern, under the bishop’s authority, the part of the Lord’s flock entrusted to them, make the universal Church visible in their own locality, and assist in the building up of the whole body of Christ, 4154; —: because of their sharing in the priesthood and mission, should sincerely look upon the bishop as their father and reverently obey him, 4154; all priests, both diocesan and religious, by reason of orders and ministry, fit into this body of bishops and priests and serve the good of the whole Church according to their vocation and the grace given to them, 4154; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion).
- The priest —: enjoys a sacred power, 4126; —: teaches and rules the priestly people, 4126; —: exercises his office, above all, in the eucharistic celebration, in which he acts in the person of Christ, unites the prayers of the faithful with the sacrifice offered by their Head, and makes present and offers the sacrifice of the New Covenant in the sacrifice of the Mass, (4126), 4153; it pertains to the priest to complete the building up of the Body in the eucharistic sacrifice, 4141; cf. K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops); priests —: labor in word and doctrine, 4153; —: give spiritual birth to the faithful through baptism and teaching, 4154; cf. K 3c (minister of baptism); —: announce the divine Word to all, 4153; —: exercise the ministry of alleviation and reconciliation for the sick and the sinners among the faithful and present the needs and the prayers of the faithful to God, 4153; cf. K 6d (minister of the sacrament of penance); K 7c (ministers of the anointing of the sick); —: as fathers in Christ, must take care of the faithful, 4154; —: must lead and serve the community in an exemplary way, 4154; —: must strive to lend their effort to the pastoral work of the whole diocese and the entire Church, 4154; the laity can look for spiritual strength from their priests, 4343; the collaboration between priests, religious, and lay faithful is a work of the Spirit, 4850; cf. G 6ce (collaboration of the laity with the hierarchical ministry); H 2e (people of God and the pastoral ministry of bishops).
- In virtue of their common sacred ordination and mission, all priests are bound together in brotherhood, 4154; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion).
- The idea [that the power to confect the sacrament of the Eucharist is not necessarily connected with sacramental ordination] undermines the entire apostolic structure of the Church and distorts the sacramental economy of salvation, 4723, 5052.
- Priests and the world. Because the human race today is joining more and more into a civic, economic, and social unity, it is that much the more necessary that priests, by combined effort and aid, under the leadership of the bishops and the supreme pontiff, wipe out every kind of separateness, so that the whole human race may be brought into the unity of the family of God, 4154; priests should, by their daily life and interests, show the face of a truly sacerdotal and pastoral ministry to the faithful and the infidel, to Catholics and non-Catholics, and bear witness to the truth and life and go after those also who though baptized in the Catholic Church have fallen away from the use of the sacraments or from the faith, 4154; cf. G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); H 2f (bishops and the world).

Cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); G 3ad (the Church from and in the Churches); H 1 (the origin and character of the ecclesiastical ministry); H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops); H 3a (bishops' ministry of preaching: general specifications); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 5cb (the competence of ordained bishops); K 8a (the priesthood of the New Covenant); K 8b (degrees of sacramental ministry).

6. The Ministerial Office of Deacons

Deacons —: are through ordination conformed to Christ the Lord and servant, 5062; —: are on a lower level of the hierarchy than priests; they receive the imposition of hands “not unto the priesthood, but unto a ministry of service”, 4155, 5061; —: serve in the diaconate of the liturgy, of the word, and of charity to the people of God, in communion with the bishop and his group of priests, 4155, 5062, 5064; —: dedicate themselves to duties of charity and to administration, 4155.

It is the duty of the deacon, according as it shall have been assigned to him by competent authority —: to administer baptism solemnly, to be custodian and dispenser of the Eucharist, to assist at and bless marriages in the name of the Church, to bring viaticum to the dying, to read the Sacred Scripture to the faithful, to instruct and exhort the people, to preside over the worship and prayer of the faithful, to administer sacramentals, to officiate at funeral and burial services, 4155; —: to preside over Bible services in the absence of a priest, 4035; cf. K 3c (minister of baptism); K 5cd (other ministries); K 10a (sacramentals).

The diaconate is restored as a proper and permanent rank of the hierarchy, 4155.

It pertains to the competent territorial bodies of bishops, of one kind or another, with the approval of the supreme pontiff, to decide whether and where it is opportune for permanent deacons to be established, 4155.

With the consent of the Roman pontiff, the diaconate may also be conferred upon married men of a more mature age as well as suitable younger unmarried men, for whom the law of celibacy remains intact, 4155.

Cf. H 1a (the foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Christ and the apostles); H 1b (the hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 8 (sacrament of orders).

1. The Nature and Meaning of the Liturgy

a. THE NATURE OF THE LITURGY

J 1a

The liturgy is at one and the same time divine and human, visible and endowed with the invisible, 4002; God speaks to his people, and the people reply with prayer and song, 4033; the Mass is offered to God alone (even when it is celebrated in honor of the saints), 1744, 1755; Christ offered himself on the Cross and continues to be offered in the celebration of the Eucharist for the glory of God and the salvation of humanity, 4852; cf. K 5ea (the Eucharist as worship of God).

Christ is present in liturgical celebrations ^a*in the community of the altar*; ^b*in the offering of the Mass, in the sacraments, in the reading of Sacred Scripture, in the Church's prayer and song*, 3855, ^b4007, (4035), ^a4151; the liturgy is the carrying out of Christ's priestly office, 4007; Christ proclaims the gospel in the liturgy, 4033; cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); E 3bb (the prophetic office of Jesus Christ and Christ as teacher); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); K 5bb (actualization and accomplishment of the sacrifice of Jesus in the Lord's Supper).

The power of the Holy Spirit acts in the liturgy through the sacramental signs, 4170.

The liturgy (^a*the eucharistic sacrifice*) is the summit and font of the Church's life, 4010, ^a4127, (^a3847); cf. G 2bb (the sacramentality of the Church: Church and liturgy); it is sacred action, public worship, 4007; it is worship of God, 4033; in the liturgy, most of all in the Eucharist, is expressed the mystery of Christ and the nature of the Church, 4002, 4041; cf. K 5e (the Eucharist as the foundation and summit of the Church's life); the liturgical life revolves around the sacrifice and the sacraments, 4006.

In local communities the faithful are gathered together by the preaching of the gospel of Christ and the mystery of the Lord's Supper is celebrated, 4151; the Eucharist as meal of brotherly solidarity and a foretaste of the heavenly banquet, 4338; the Eucharist as the paschal banquet in which Christ is eaten, the mind is filled with grace, and a pledge of future glory is given, 4047; the Lord's death is proclaimed at the Lord's Supper, 4006; the celebration of Mass is the memorial of Christ's death and his glorious Resurrection, 4573;

the Church, especially in the sacred liturgy, unceasingly receives and offers to the faithful the bread of life from the table both of God's Word and of Christ's Body, 4228; in every community of the altar there is exhibited a symbol of that charity and unity of the Mystical Body without which there can be no salvation, 4151; cf. K 5b (the ecclesial Lord's Supper).

The following opinions are condemned: [The Mass has no foundation in the Gospel], 1155; [The Mass is a simple commemoration of the sacrifice of the Cross], 1753, 3316, 3339, 3847; [The Mass is a sacrifice in the same way as any other work consecrated to God], 1945; [The celebration of the Eucharist is a simple action of the local community], 4722; in it we are concerned not just with a fraternal meal but with the sacramental renewal of Christ's sacrifice, 4722; cf. K 5bb (actualization and accomplishment of the sacrifice of Jesus in the Lord's Supper).

The visible signs used by the liturgy to signify invisible divine things have been chosen by Christ or the Church, 4033.

Rites and canon: The legitimacy of the ceremonies of the Mass are defended, 1746, 1757, 1759; the canon of the Mass is free of (dogmatic) error, 1745, 1756; the use of Latin, limitation of the vernacular, 1749, 1759, 4036; greater scope for the use of the vernacular in the liturgy, 4036; the necessary inculturation, 4939, 5022; cf. J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy); elements of the sacrifice of the Mass: K 5da–dd.

The earthly liturgy is a participation in the heavenly liturgy and a waiting for the return of Christ, 4008, 4171; especially when in the liturgy (in the celebration of the eucharistic sacrifice) we celebrate the praise of God, the earthly Church is joined with the heavenly Church and with its worship, 4170; cf. G 3ab (unity of the Church in multiplicity); K 5ed (the Eucharist as the sacrament of communion with the living and the dead); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church: communion of saints).

J 1b

b. THE LITURGY AS THE PUBLIC WORSHIP OF GOD

Liturgical services are not private functions but are celebrations of the Church, which is the "sacrament of unity", 4026.

In the liturgy the whole public worship is performed by the Mystical Body of Christ, 4007.

The liturgy represents the public worship that the Redeemer renders to his Father and that the community of the faithful renders through him to the Father, (3840), 3841; worship must be interior and exterior, 3842; hence, the right to the public profession of religion, 3961; extreme expressions about the nature of the liturgy are condemned, 3843.

Public worship consists in the sacrifice of the altar and the prayers of the divine worship, 3757; prayer as a school of faith, of hope, 5114; inappropriate assertions about the arrangement of the liturgy are condemned, 2631–2633, 2664f.

Liturgical prayers, officially presented to God in the name of the Church, are more powerful than private prayers, 3758, 3845.

A laxist understanding of the precept to attend Mass is condemned, 2153; a simulation of the celebration of Mass is a deception of the people, 789.

Assertions about the celebration of feasts are condemned, 2673f.; it is not fitting to celebrate separate feasts for individual Persons of the Trinity, 3325.

An inadequate and a proper conception of the liturgical year, 3855.

Assertions about the liturgical language are condemned, 2486, 2666.

J 1c

c. THE EFFECT OF THE LITURGY

The liturgy signifies and effects by means of perceptible signs the glorification of God and the sanctification of mankind, 4007, 4010.

The liturgy, especially the Eucharist, is a source of grace, 4010; it is more efficacious than other actions of the Church, 4007; the life of the Church is strengthened through frequent celebration of the Eucharist, 4235; partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ makes the faithful be transformed into what they consume, 4151; K 5eb and K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the Church/on the faithful).

The re-presentation of Christ's sacrifice in the celebration of the Mass by the Church, 4153, 4573; the eucharistic sacrifice is the unbloody re-presentation of the bloody sacrifice of the Cross and its remembrance, 1740f., 1743, 3339, 3847f., 4006; as often as the sacrifice of the Cross is celebrated on the altar the work of redemption is carried on, 4006, 4103; Christ offered himself on the Cross and continues to be offered in the celebration of the Eucharist, 4852; cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); K 5bb (actualization and accomplishment of the sacrifice of Jesus in the Lord's Supper).

The Mass is a sin offering for the living and the dead, 1743, 1753, 1866, 2535; cf. K 5ed (the Eucharist the sacrament of communion with the living and the dead) cf. L 2e (virtue of love).

J 1d

d. THE SUBJECTS OF THE LITURGY

Each liturgical celebration is the work of Christ and the Church, of the Head and the body, 4007; the celebrating Church offers the Lord's Supper, 1740f.; she offers to the faithful the bread of life from the table both of God's Word and of Christ's Body, 4228; the work of the Holy Spirit is evident in the active participation of the faithful in the liturgy, 4850; the presence and activity of Christ and the Holy Spirit in the liturgical rites: J 1a (the nature of the liturgy); cf. K 5ca (the celebrating Church offers the Lord's Supper).

Those who are in heaven lend nobility to the worship of God on earth, 4169; cf. M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church: communion of saints).

The nature of the liturgy demands the full, conscious, and active participation of all the faithful; by reason of baptism, they have the right and duty to it, 4014, (4014); through the character of baptism they are destined to Christian worship of God, 4127; the laity are authorized for the spiritual worship of God, 4160; the liturgical celebration is a sacred action, not simply of the clergy, but of the entire assembly, 4858; liturgical services are not private functions but are celebrations of the Church, 4026; communal celebration of the Mass and sacraments, with the active participation of the faithful, is to be preferred to a celebration that is quasi-private, 4027; it is not permissible to extol the so-called “community” Mass in such a way as to detract from Masses that are celebrated privately, 4411; assertions are condemned —: concerning the concelebration of the faithful, 3850; —: concerning private Masses without the participation of the people, 3853; cf. K 5c (the Church offers the Lord’s Supper).

All the faithful, both by reason of the offering and through Holy Communion, take part in the liturgical service, not indeed, all in the same way, but each in that way which is proper to himself, 4127; each person, minister, or layman who has an office to perform should do all of, but only, those parts that pertain to his office by the nature of the rite and the principles of liturgy, 4028; all disciples of Christ should present themselves as a living sacrifice, holy and pleasing to God, 4125; in the eucharistic sacrifice the faithful offer the Divine Victim to God and offer themselves along with it, 4012, 4127; on the participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ and on the priesthood of all the faithful and their functions: G 4bd (participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ); G 6bb (participation of the laity in the priestly office of Christ); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office); H 4 (bishops’ ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons); K 5cc (active participation of the laity in offering the Lord’s Supper); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

Pastors (^abishops) should see to it that the faithful are properly prepared (^a*with faith and reverence*) to celebrate the liturgy (^a*their part in the liturgy and especially in the sacrifice of the Mass*), 4011, ^a4151.

The bishop, marked with the fullness of the sacrament of orders, is “the steward of the grace of the supreme priesthood”, especially in the Eucharist, which he offers or causes to be offered, 4151; every legitimate celebration of the Eucharist is regulated by the bishop, to whom is committed the office of offering and administering worship to the Divine Majesty, 4151; on the priestly ministry of the bishop and his particular liturgical tasks: H 4; K 3c, K 4c, K 6d, K 7c, and K 8d (minister of baptism, confirmation, penance, anointing of the sick, orders); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops in offering the Lord’s Supper).

Priests exercise their sacred function especially in the celebration of the Mass, by which, acting in the person of Christ and proclaiming his Mystery, they unite the prayers of the faithful with the sacrifice of their Head and renew and apply in the sacrifice of the Mass until the coming of the Lord the only sacrifice of the New Testament, 4153; on the priestly ministry of the priest and his particular liturgical tasks: H 5; K 3c, K 6d, and K 7c (minister of baptism, penance, anointing of the sick); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops in offering the Lord’s Supper); assisting at marriage: K 9d; K 9f.

Deacons, in communion with the bishop and his group of priests, serve in the diaconate of the liturgy, of the word, and of charity to the people of God, 4155, 5061; on the ministry of the deacon and his particular liturgical tasks: H 6; K 3c (minister of baptism); K 5cd (other ministries in offering the Lord’s Supper); K 10a (sacramentals).

Condemnation of laxist assertions about the obligation of clerics to divine worship, 2041, 2053–2055, 2154.

The laity fulfill a great task in the liturgical assembly and in its preparation, 4858; the active participation of the laity in the liturgy is the work of the Holy Spirit, 4850; through a good understanding of the rites and prayers they should take part in the mystery of the Eucharist consciously, with devotion, and actively, 4048; they should be instructed by God’s Word and nourished at the table of the Lord’s body, 4048; the tasks that are not proper to the ordained ministers should be fulfilled by the laity as participants in the liturgical action, 4858; in virtue of their royal priesthood, they join in the offering of the Eucharist, 4126; by offering the Immaculate Victim with the priest, they should learn also to offer themselves and, through Christ, they should be drawn into ever more perfect union with God and with each other, 4048; their activities are a spiritual sacrifice that at the celebration of the Eucharist is offered to the Father along with the body of the Lord; thus they consecrate the world to God, 4160; on the participation of the laity in the priestly office of Christ and their priesthood: G 4bd; G 6bb; cf. K 5cc (active participation of the laity in offering the Lord’s Supper).

The ministers, lectors, commentators, and the church choir perform a true liturgical service, 4029.

e. LITURGIES AND FORMS OF PIETY

J 1e

The liturgical regulation of the administration of the sacraments and sacramentals.

1ea

All the sacraments are actions that glorify God in Christ and in the Church, 4715.

The Church does not have the right to alter what belongs to the substance (or to the ^aintegrity and necessity) of the sacraments, ^a1061, 1699, 1728, 3556, 3857; in the administration of the sacraments the Church has the right, provided their substance is preserved, to determine and modify what she deems useful in the circumstances, 1728; regulation and rite of administering the sacraments: K 2 (conceptual formulation of the individual sacraments).

The regulation and the rites of the individual sacraments and sacramentals: K 3–10.

Ways of thinking or speaking that would render meaningless or unintelligible the Church's prayers, funeral rites, and the religious acts offered for the dead should be excluded, 4654; the Church's prayers, funeral rites, and the religious acts offered for the dead represent loci theologici, 4654.

1eb The liturgies of particular Churches. The particular Churches have their own liturgical usage, 4147; their liturgies are recognized, 4013; their sacred practices have a special dignity, 4013; all lawfully acknowledged rites are of equal right and dignity, to be preserved and fostered, 4004; cf. G 3ad (the Church from and in the Churches: particular Churches).

1ed Pious exercises. The popular devotions of the people are recognized, 4013; the spiritual life is not limited to participation in the liturgy but also embraces private prayer and devotions, 4012, 4013, 4017; cf. L 2f (union with God).

1ee Prayer to God. The nature of Christian prayer, 4860; prayer as a conversation with God, 4232; veneration proves to be worship given to God the Father through Christ in the Spirit, 4171; the disciples of Christ should persevere in prayer and praise God, 4125; the faithful must pray daily to be forgiven their debts, 4166; the Christian is called to worship the Father in secret, 4012; false conception concerning prayer, 4861.

Adoration and worship of Christ: J 1ef.

The Holy Spirit is ^a*adored* and ^b*glorified* along with the Father and the Son, ^{ab}42, 147, ^{ab}150, ^a174, ^{ab}546; cf. B 4bb (equality of the Divine Persons); the Holy Spirit is the wellspring of unity in prayers, 4132.

The undifferentiated substance of the Trinity is to be adored in a different way, 367; it is not appropriate to worship each individual Person of the Trinity, but one should show a common worship to the Trinity, 3325; consequently, there are no individual feasts for the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, but feasts that are related to salvation history, 3325; cf. B 4bd (the three Persons are one God).

Worship of God: L 2a; the adorableness of God: B 1c (God, transcendent over all finite things); on prayer, cf. L 2f (union with God).

Necessity of grace for prayer, 373, 376; cf. F 5cb (necessity of grace).

The laity exercise their royal priesthood in prayer and thanksgiving, 4126; prayer as the spiritual sacrifices of the laity, 4160; as worshippers leading holy lives in every place, the laity consecrate the world itself to God, 4339, 4716; with their prayers they should commend their ecclesiastical superiors to God, 4163.

Liturgical prayers that are officially presented to God in the name of the Church have more power than private prayers, 3758, 3845; on that account, however, private prayers are not to be disparaged, 3819; the value of "subjective" piety is emphasized against attacks, 3845.

Connection between prayer and the reading of Sacred Scripture, 4232; cf. J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).

Ways of thinking and speaking that would render prayers meaningless are to be excluded, 4654; prayer as locus theologicus, 4654.

Recognition of the legitimacy and excellence of contemplative prayer, 2182, 2185, 2188, 4862; its object is not only the presence of God, 2185–2187; recognition of the legitimacy of meditative prayer and of its value for the life of perfection, 2181–2185; nonetheless, it is not necessary for salvation, 2192; the legitimacy of discursive prayer is defended from disparagement, 2218–2223, 2225, 2229, 2232, 2264, 2365–2368; even for someone who is perfect, intercessory prayer is important, 957–959, 2214; intercessory prayer for the dead, 4170; the souls in purgatory can be helped by prayers, 856, 1304, 1405.

Condemnation of assertions directed against every sensible devotion, (2218), 2227/2235, 2263; condemnation of assertions that disparage ^a*oral prayer* and intercessory prayer as not appropriate for contemplative or perfect persons, ^b957–959, ^a2181, ^a2214; prayer applied as satisfaction for sins, 1713; condemnation of assertions about the application of prayer: [Prayers applied to one person avail him no more than general prayers], 1169; [The prayer of someone whom God foreknows to be lost has no value for anyone], 1176.

Prayer as a work of satisfaction for sins that have been committed, 1323, 1543; cf. K 6cd (satisfaction).

Public prayer, popular missions, exercises: condemned assertions, 2664f.

1ef Adoration and worship of Christ. Christ, because of his work as Savior, is due infinite dignity, 3909; he is to be adored by angels and men ^a*in his two undivided natures*. ^a420, 1823, 3676; he must be adored with one act of adoration along with his flesh (^a*since it is united with the divinity*) and not by two acts of adoration (one for the Word and the other for the human being) ^b*or by means of a co-adoration of the assumed man*, ^b259, 431, ^a2661; condemned: [Christ in the person of the Word is to be worshipped like the image of an emperor], 434.

- One may direct prayers to the Person of Christ (even if he is Mediator), 3820.
- Jesus is not changed into a “mythical” person and his teaching deformed in consequence of the worship paid Jesus as the Lord and the Son of God, 4405.
- Adoration in which the humanity of Christ and his flesh are adored independently of the divinity, for their own sake, is condemned, 431, 2661, 2663; the problem of the adoration of the body of Christ during the three days of his death is debated, 2663; the adoration of the blood poured out in the Passion depends upon the as yet unanswered question of whether or not the blood was separated from the divinity, 1385.
- Worship of the Lord present in the Eucharist: The worship of adoration befits the sacrament of the Eucharist, 1643f., 1656.
- Worship of the Heart of Jesus is legitimate inasmuch as the Church recognizes it, 2662; it actually relates to Christ himself, 3353; the Heart of Jesus is adored because it is inseparably united with the Person of the Word, 2663, 3922f.; in the Heart of Jesus a symbol and image of Christ’s love is worshipped, 3353, 3922–3925.
- On the worship of Christ: E 5de.
- Veneration of the saints is defended as permitted and recommended as beneficial, 675, 1821–1825, 1867; in what sense Masses are permitted 1eg in honor of the saints, 1744, (1755), 3363.
- The memory of the saints is celebrated in the Eucharist and some part and fellowship with them is hoped for, 4008; the Church venerates the apostles and martyrs along with the Blessed Virgin Mary and the holy angels and implores their intercession, 4170; she venerates also anyone who more closely imitated the poverty and virginity of Christ and have recommended their emulation, 4170; worship paid to the saints and angels finally redounds to the honor of the Blessed Trinity, (675, 1824f.) 3325, 4171; love for the saints in heaven aims at Christ and through him at God, 4170; the authentic cult of the saints consists, not so much in the multiplying of external acts, but rather in the greater intensity of our love, 4171; communion with the saints should not weaken the laetitic worship that is given to God, 4171; on the saints and their veneration: M 1b and M 3bd (communion of saints).
- The veneration of Mary by the Church as true Mother of God and of the Savior, 4170, 4172, ^a4173, (4178); the bodily glorification of the Virgin is an anticipation of the glorification that is the destiny of all the other elect, 4656; condemned: [Praise offered to Mary is vain], 2326.
- Supplications of all who believe in Christ to the Mother of God and of mankind to intercede for the uniting of peoples into one people, 4179; cf. E 6dd (mediation of grace through Mary).
- Mary is entitled to veneration by means of images (^acondemnation of undue restrictions), 1823, ^a2187, ^a2236, 2532, ^a2671; images that present Mary in priestly vestments are forbidden, 3632.
- Veneration of Mary in the separated Churches, especially in the Eastern Churches, 4139, 4179.
- On Mary and her veneration: E 6ec.
- The veneration of relics is permitted, 675, (818), 1269, 1821–1825, 1822, 1867; the abuse of trafficking in relics is censured, 818, 1825.
- The veneration of images is permitted, 477, 581, 600//608, 653–656, 1269, 1821, 1823, 1824f., 1867; the cult of adoration is not permitted to images but should be accorded to God alone, 477, 601; images have no power within them because of which they are to be venerated; the honor given them goes to the person represented, 601, 1823; the adoration of images is forbidden (“adorare”; the expression, nevertheless, occurs frequently, 653–656, 675; cf. 612ⁿ), 447, 581.
- The veneration of images is also useful for contemplatives, 2187; assertions that unduly restrict the veneration of images are condemned, 2325, 2669–2672.
- Abuses in the veneration of saints, 818, 1825; abuses, excesses, defects, 4171; their correction and renewal are demanded, 4171.
- Sacrifices are necessary for every religion, 3339. 1eh
- The use of the sacraments and sacramentals must also be close to the hearts of contemplatives, 2191; they are not disdained or rejected without sin, 1259, 1699, 1718, 1775, 2523; cf. K (God sanctifies through the sacraments). 1ei
- Common penance that is performed at certain times of the year by means of fast and abstinence: the practice of the Roman Church is not to be condemned, 1080; the precept obliges even contemplatives, 2191; condemnation of laxist opinions, 2043, 2049–2052. 1ej
- Fasting is effective as satisfaction for sins committed, 1323, 1543, 1713; fasting should not be neglected even by those who are perfect, 892.
- Condemnation of opinions that disparage penance and mortification. They have their value for the perfect as well, 2238–2240, (3344); cf. L 2f (union with God); L3c (obligations and rights concerning the body and corporeal welfare).
- Conversion and penance: F 2bb (nature of justification).
- Superstition. Different types of superstition are condemned, 1859, 2824; one should not give any credence to astrology, 205, 283, 1ek 459f.
- Spiritualism that aims at interrogating souls or spirits with the assistance of a “medium” is rejected, 3642; the same is true of magnetism that aims at supernatural ends, 2823–2825.
- Magic, potions: acts and books in this domain are disapproved, 283, 1859.
- Cf. A 2aa (human capacity for truth).

2. The Renewal and Promotion of the Liturgy

J 2a

a. GOAL OF THE RENEWAL AND PROMOTION OF THE LITURGY

Promotion of liturgical renewal, 4021, 4858.

Goal of the liturgical reform: the conscious and active participation of all the faithful, 4014, (4041).

The establishment of an extraordinary form of the Roman Rite, 5109.

J 2b

b. MEANS TO ACHIEVE THIS GOAL

2ba Liturgical formation of pastors of souls and the liturgical instruction of the faithful, 4014–4020.

2bb Renewal of the liturgy. The liturgy is made up of immutable elements and of elements subject to change, 4021.

Texts and rites should clearly express the sacredness they signify, 4021, 4034.

General norms for the renewal of the liturgy, 4022–4025; the liturgy is regulated by ecclesiastical authority, 4022, 4152; Sacred Scripture is of the greatest importance in the celebration of the liturgy, (4006f.), 4024.

The Church encourages the study of the liturgy, 4230.

Norms for the liturgy as a hierarchical and communal action, 4026–4032; liturgical services are not private functions but celebrations of the Church, 4026; the communal celebration of the Mass and sacraments with the active participation of the faithful is preferable to a quasi-private celebration, 4027; each minister or layman should do all of, but only, those parts that pertain to his office by the nature of the rite and the principles of liturgy, 4028; servers, lectors, commentators, and members of the choir also exercise a genuine liturgical function, 4029.

Norms based upon the didactic and pastoral nature of the liturgy, 4033–4036: In the liturgy there is an intimate connection between rite and word, 4035; –: hence a richer and more suitable selection of Sacred Scripture in the liturgy, (4006f.), 4024, 4035; the clergy should share the wealth of the divine Word with the faithful in the liturgy, 4232; prayer should accompany the reading of Sacred Scripture so that it becomes a conversation between God and man, 4232; –: in Christian instruction the liturgical homily must hold the foremost place, 4231; the homily should draw above all from scriptural and liturgical sources, 4035; cf. A 3bd (reading of the Sacred Scripture); liturgical catechesis and Bible services, 4035; the deacon as the leader of Bible services without a priest, 4035; use of the Latin language in the liturgy, 4036; greater scope for the use of the mother tongue in the liturgy, 4036.

Norms for adapting the liturgy to the culture and traditions of peoples, 4037–4040; inculturation, 4939–4942, 5022.

Adaptations in the area of the administration of the sacraments, sacramentals, processions, liturgical language, church music, and sacred art, 4039, 4044–4046.

Experiments for the renewal of the liturgy, 4040, 4044.

Promoting liturgical life in the diocese and parish, 4041–4042.

Promoting the pastoral-liturgical movement, 4043–4046; institution of a liturgical commission in the diocese, 4044–4046.

K. GOD SANCTIFIES BY MEANS OF THE SACRAMENTS

1. God's Sacramental Economy of Salvation

K 1a

a. IN THE OLD COVENANT, GOD GIVES HIS GRACE THROUGH SACRAMENTAL SIGNS

Under the legal prescriptions of the Old Testament, there were also sacraments, (1310), 1348, 1602.

These sacraments are distinguished from the sacraments of the New Covenant by the fact that they did not cause grace but, rather, prefigured grace, 1310, 1602.

By means of circumcision, original sin was remitted as through a sacrament, 780.

After the coming of Christ, the sacraments of the Old Covenant ceased, and observing them after the promulgation of the gospel became a sin, 1348.

Cf. E 1c (deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers through hope in the Promised One).

K 1b

b. THE CHURCH AS SACRAMENT OF SALVATION

1ba The Church as primordial and universal sacrament: The Church is in Christ like a sacrament or sign and instrument of the union with God and of the unity of the whole human race, 4026, 4101, 4124, (4321), 4342, 4343; she is the universal sacrament of salvation, 4343, 4345; through his Spirit, Christ instituted the Church as universal sacrament of salvation, 4168; the sacrament of the Church came forth from the Cross, 4005; cf. G 1bc (the Church, purchased by Christ); G 1be (the Church remains through the ages the work of the Holy Trinity); G 2bb (the sacramental character of the Church); the necessity of the Church for salvation: G 2bc.

The sacraments of the New Covenant are founded in the Christ-event. Institution by Christ. The sacraments of the New Covenant are instituted by Christ for the salvation of the human race, 1864, 2536; institution of the individual sacraments by Christ: K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism); K 5aa (institution of the sacrament of the altar by Christ); K 6a (sacramentality of penance and its origin); K 7a (sacramental character and origin of the anointing of the sick); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 9a (sacramentality of matrimony and its origin); condemned –: affirmations of the modernists regarding the origins of the sacraments, 3439f; –: errors concerning their end, 1605, 3441, 3489.

Christ works in the sacraments and through them. Christ's work of salvation is accomplished in the sacrifice and in the sacraments, 4006, 4103; all the sacraments are acts of glorification of God in Christ and in the Church, 4715; Christ baptizes, sanctifies, etc., through the Church, 3806; Christ is present with his power in the sacraments, so that when a man baptizes, Christ himself baptizes, 4007; the action of Christ in the individual sacraments: K 3c (minister of baptism); K 3e (effect of baptism); K 4d (effect of confirmation); K 5bd (efficacious presence of the Lord in the Eucharist); K 6f (effect of the sacrament of penance); K 7e (effect of anointing of the sick); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 9ba (Christian matrimony); K 9e (effects of the sacrament of matrimony); Christ is present in his Church especially through liturgical actions: in the sacrifice of the Mass, in the sacraments, in the reading of the holy Scriptures, in the praying and singing of the Church, 4007, (4036); the exalted Christ administers the sacraments of faith especially through the ministry of the bishops, 4145; cf. H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); K 2b (minister of the sacraments).

Cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); J 1a (nature of the liturgy).

The sacraments of the New Covenant are rooted in the Church. All the sacraments are acts of the glorification of God in Christ and in the Church, 4715; faith in the forgiveness of sins, in the resurrection, in life everlasting through the Church, 21f.; cf. G 2bb (sacramental character of the Church); J 1ea (liturgical regulation of the administration of the sacraments); K 3e (effect of baptism); K 4d (effect of confirmation); K 5c (the Church offers the Lord's Supper); K 5e (Eucharist as foundation and summit of the life of the Church); K 6d (minister of the sacrament of penance); K 6f (effects of the sacrament of penance); K 7e (effect of the anointing of the sick); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant); K 9a (sacramentality of matrimony); K 9ba (nature of matrimony, Christian matrimony).

2. The Conceptual Formulation of the Individual Sacraments of the New Covenant

a. THE NATURE OF THE SACRAMENTS

K 2a

The sacraments are sensible signs that effect invisible grace, (1310, 1606), 3315, 3858, (4600); they are symbols of a sacred thing and the visible form of invisible grace, 1639; the sacraments of the New Covenant prefigure a new heaven and a new earth, 4161; they are instruments of salvation, 1864, 2536, 4129; the Holy Spirit sanctifies the people of God through the sacraments and ministries, 4131; cf. B 3b (the Holy Spirit in creation and salvation history); G 1be (the Church as work of the Holy Trinity); through the Word of God and the sacraments, man is freed from the power of sin and brought into a communion of love with God, 4755; condemned: [The sacraments are pure symbols or external signs of grace received through faith], 1602, 1606, 3489.

In the rite of the sacraments, one distinguishes between an essential part (matter and form) and a ceremonial part, 3315.

A sacrament is accomplished through three elements: (the thing as) matter, (the words as) form, (the person of the minister and his) intention to do what the Church does, 1262, 1312, 1998, 2536, 3126; the essence of the sacrament consists of matter and form, 1671.

The matter of the sacrament is the part not determined by itself but determined by the form, 3315; for this reason the imposition of hands does not designate anything definite and is used in the same manner in holy orders, in confirmation, and ^a*in reconciliation*, ^a110, ^a123, ^a127, ^a183, 211, 316, 320, 3315.

The form must designate the effect of the sacrament, 3315.

The power of the Church: the Church does not have the right to change what belongs to the substance (or to the ^a*integrity and necessity*) of the sacraments. ^a1061, 1699, 1728, 3556, 3857.

In the administration of the sacraments the Church has the right, provided their substance is preserved, to determine and modify what she deems useful in the circumstances, 1728.

b. THE MINISTER OF THE SACRAMENTS

K 2b

The minister of the sacraments is their instrumental cause, 1314.

The exalted Christ administers the sacraments of faith especially through the ministry of bishops, 4145; cf. E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification).

The power of the minister and the effect of the sacraments does not depend on the (moral) rectitude of the minister, 580, 644f., 793f., 912, 914, 1019, 1154, (1208), 1211–1213, 1219//1230, 1262, 1612, 1684; cf. the sections concerning the minister of baptism, penance, and orders: K 3c; K 6d; K 8d.

Condemnation of errors concerning the persons who can be ministers: [All Christians can administer the sacraments], 1610; [Any priest can administer any sacrament], 1136; [The power of simple priests to administer sacraments was restricted because of the bishops' desire for gain and honor], 1178.

The same minister must apply the matter and pronounce the form, 2524.

The intention of the minister to do what the Church does is necessary for the execution of the sacrament, 1262, 1312, 1315, 1611, 1617, (2536), 3126; the opposite affirmation is condemned, 2328; the one who uses the requisite form and matter is presumed to have the intention to do what the Church does, 3318, 3874; an error (even publicly professed) concerning the effect of the sacrament does not in itself exclude the intention to do what the Church does, (3100–3102), ^a3126; the doctrine of the validity of baptism by heretics is based on this principle: K 3c (minister of baptism); a change in the rite casts doubt upon the proper intention, 3318.

Catholics and brothers of the separated Eastern Churches can, in certain circumstances, administer the sacraments to each other, 4182; cf. G 3ag (Catholic Church and separated Eastern Churches); J 1ec (liturgical communion with the separated Eastern Churches); K 5de (the Lord's Supper: recipient and disposition); K 6e (recipient of the sacrament of penance); K 7d (recipient of anointing of the sick).

Condemnation of laxist affirmations concerning the application of probabilism in the celebration of the sacraments, 2101.

It is a sin to condemn, despise, or change at will the rites and ceremonies of the Church, 1255, 1613, 1811; the pope can tolerate diverse rites, while preserving what pertains to the necessity of the sacraments, 1061; the legitimacy of certain rites is defended against attacks, 1062, 1864, 2631–2633.

K 2c c. THE RECIPIENT OF THE SACRAMENTS

The recipient of the sacrament must in some way have the intention to receive the sacrament. The one who persistently opposes receiving it receives neither the reality nor the character of the sacrament, 781; persons sleeping or insane receive or do not receive the effect of the sacrament depending on whether they assented or opposed before being in that state, 781.

K 2d d. THE EFFECT OF THE SACRAMENTS

The sacraments confer (or increase) grace ^a*in those who place no obstacle* (or ^b*in those who worthily receive them*), ^b1310, ^a1451, ^a1606, 1602//1608, 1864, 2536, ^a3714, (^a3845); through the sacraments --: believers are united in a hidden and real way with Christ, 4112; --: that charity toward God and men which is the soul of all the apostolate is communicated, 4159.

The efficacy of the sacraments derives from the completed sacramental action (ex opere operato), that is, the efficacy of the sacraments, as actions of Christ, derives from the acts themselves, 3844–3846.

Certain sacraments, namely, baptism, confirmation, and orders, imprint a permanent character ^b*and cannot therefore be repeated*, 781, ^{ab}1313, ^a1609, ^a1767, ^a1864, 2536; the character is an indelible spiritual sign in the soul, 1313, 1609; but it is not the Word of God, 3228; the character is imprinted when a contrary will is not opposed to it, 781.

Fortified with the sacraments, all the Christian faithful are called to the perfection of holiness, 4129; by the sacraments the life and apostolate of the faithful are nourished, (4159), 4161; cf. G 4ba (vocation of the faithful to holiness); G 6c (mission and task of the laity); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).

K 2e e. ORDERING OF THE SACRAMENTS

There are seven sacraments, 860, 1310, 1601, 1603, 1864, 2536.

K 2f f. THE DIGNITY AND NECESSITY OF THE SACRAMENTS AND THE RIGHT OF THE FAITHFUL TO THEM

The sacraments are not superfluous, 1604, 1864; without the sacraments man is not justified; the affirmation is condemned: [Man is justified through faith alone without the sacraments], 1604, 1605f., 1608; in certain circumstances the effect necessary for salvation can also be obtained through the intention or (even implicit) desire alone for the sacrament ^b*or through faith in the sacrament*, ^b121, (1524, 1543), 3869, ^a3870–3872.

Not all the sacraments are necessary for every person, 1604, 1864, 2536.

It is a sin to disdain or hold the sacraments in contempt, 1259, 1699, 1718, 1775, 2523.

Among the sacraments of the New Covenant there is a diversity of worth, 1603; the Eucharist is preeminent over the other sacraments, 1639f., (3847); cf. K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism); K 5e (Eucharist as foundation and summit of the life of the Church).
 Right to the sacraments. All the Christian faithful have the right to receive in abundance from their pastors the spiritual goods of the Church, especially the assistance of the Word of God and of the sacraments, 4163; cf. G 6cf (rights and duties of the laity); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification).
 Cf. F 5cb (necessity of grace); G 2bc (necessity of the Church for salvation); K 2a (nature of the sacraments); K 3f (dignity and necessity of baptism).

3. The Sacrament of Baptism

a. BAPTISM IN THE CREEDS

K 3a

The profession of one baptism, 3f., 6, 41//48, 51, 60, 150.

b. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF BAPTISM

K 3b

Baptism is a sacrament, 761, 777, 860, 1310, 1314, 1601, 1864, 2536; it is the sign and the means of God's prevenient love that frees from original sin and communicates a share in divine life, 4674; it has succeeded circumcision, 780.
 The matter of baptism is ^anatural water, 802, 903, 1082, ^a1314, ^a1615; one may mix a disinfectant with it, 3356; invalid matter —: saliva, 787; —: beer, 829; the baptized is washed with water, 229, 589, 757.
 Condemned: [The triple matter of baptism is water, chrism, and the Eucharist], 1016.
 The form of baptism is the invocation of the divine Trinity, 111, 123, 176f., 214, 445, 580, 582, (588), 589, 592, (637), 644, 646, 757, 802, 903.
 Baptism "in the name of Christ" is ^aleft undecided, is ^bpermitted, ^ccondemned, ^a111, ^a211, ^c445, ^b646; a baptism in the name of the angels is not valid, 176.
 The words (which give expression to the action) "I baptize you" are necessary for the validity of baptism, 757; their active and passive form is valid, 1314; the incorrect pronunciation alone of the baptismal formula because of ignorance or a speech defect does not render baptism invalid, 588, 592; condemned affirmations concerning the form of baptism, 2327f., 2627.

c. THE MINISTER OF BAPTISM

K 3c

The bishops regulate the administration of baptism, 4151; cf. H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification).
 The minister of baptism must be different from the one who receives, 788.
 The (ordinary) minister of baptism is solely the priest, 1315; in case of necessity the minister of baptism can be —: the deacon, any baptized person who observes the form of the Church and intends to do what the Church does, 1315, 2536; —: also a layman, 120, 1315, 1349, (2536); —: a schismatic, 356; —: a heretic, 110f., 123, 127f., 183, 211, 214, 305, 315f., 320, 478, 1315, 1617, (2536), 2567–2570, 3126; —: a Jew, 646; —: a pagan, 646, 1315, (2536); it is the duty of the deacon, according as it shall have been assigned to him by competent authority, to administer baptism solemnly, 4155; all the faithful can baptize, 4141; Christ is present with his power in the sacraments so that when one baptizes, it is Christ himself who baptizes, 4007.
 The moral quality of the minister has no influence whatsoever on the validity, 580, 644.
 An error of the minister regarding the effect of baptism does not exclude the intention to do what the Church does, 3100–3102; where doubts exist concerning this intention, baptism must be repeated conditionally, 2838; in the case of baptism received in heresy, it is not always necessary to baptize conditionally; individual cases must be differentiated, 3128; in case of doubt, one must baptize, 319, 582; cases in which one must baptize conditionally, 2835–2839, 3128; the formula to use in baptism administered conditionally, 758.
 Tolerance and condemnation of baptismal rites, 830.

d. THE RECIPIENT OF BAPTISM

K 3d

The baptism of children is legitimated, 184, 219, 223, (224, 247), 718, 780, 794, 802, 903, 1349, 1514, 1625–1627, 4670–4674; under what conditions the baptism of children is permitted against the will of non-Catholic parents, 2552–2562, 3296.
 In adults, ^aintention is necessary for valid reception, ^bfaith and ^cpenance (as dispositions) are necessary for its licit reception, ^b2380f., ^{bc}2835–2839, ^{ab}3333–3335.

Men are prepared for baptism by proclamation of the Gospel, 4141; catechumens who seek with explicit intention to be incorporated into the Church are by that very intention joined with her, 4138; the baptized receive faith from God through the Church, 4127; cf. A 2bb (faith and proclamation); G 3cd (Church and evangelization or mission); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity); H 3 (bishops' ministry of preaching). The baptism of children requires education in the faith in order for the sacrament to fulfill its true meaning, 4674; without this assurance, baptism must be delayed or refused, 4674; cf. G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family).

K 3e

e. THE EFFECT OF BAPTISM

Through baptism one receives ^a*the grace of Christ, the virtues* (^b*the habit of faith*), 111, ^a780, ^a904, ^b2567; condemned: [The baptism of Christ has the same meaning as the baptism of John the Baptist], 1614.

Baptism produces —: a spiritual rebirth (^a*a new creation*), 219, (239), 1311, 1672, 4122, 4125, 4127; with baptism believers —: become sons of God, 4127f., 4166, 4178; —: become sharers of the Divine Nature, 4166, 4674; —: are made holy, 4166; by preaching and baptism, the Church brings forth to a new and immortal life sons who are conceived of the Holy Spirit and born of God, 4178; salvation is attained by faith, baptism, and the fulfillment of the commandments, 4148; cf. K 3f dignity and necessity of baptism).

—: membership —: in the Catholic Church, 1314, 1671, 2567–2570, 3685, 3802, 4127, 4136, 4157, 4720; —: in the Mystical Body of Christ, 1314, 1671, 4157, 4852; through baptism believers —: are plunged into the paschal mystery of Christ, 4006, 4112; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation: paschal mystery); —: are formed in the likeness of Christ, 4112; —: are made one body with Christ and are constituted among the people of God, 4157; —: placed within the eternal spousal covenant of Christ with the Church, 4704; he who believes in Christ and has received baptism in the required manner is in a certain, although imperfect, communion with the Catholic Church, 4188; cf. G 3ag (the Catholic Church, the other Churches, and Ecclesial Communities); G 4a (belonging to the Church).

—: participation in the triple office of Christ, 4125, 4151, 4157, 4720, 4858; —: consecration of believers to a holy priesthood, 4125; cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); G 4bc–e (participation of the faithful in the prophetic, priestly, and kingly office of Christ).

—: the remission of sins (^a*of original sin*, ^b*of actual sin*), (3f.), 41//48, (51), 60, 150, ^a223f., ^a231, ^a239, ^a247, 308, ^{ab}325, 575, ^a637, ^a685, ^a741, 777, ^a780, ^{ab}794, ^{ab}1076, ^{ab}1316, ^a1514f., 1672, ^a2559, (^a4674); this remission is complete, 1672; sins are not only not imputed, 1515; baptism cleanses everyone equally from original sin, 637; cf. D 7 (forgiveness of sins); condemned errors concerning the effect of baptism: [Only culpability is taken away], 1957; [The sins committed after baptism are either remitted or made venial by the mere remembrance of, and faith in, the baptism once received], 1623; condemned is the opinion that original sin is reestablished by a sin committed after baptism, 3341.

—: the remission of all punishment (^a*for which reason no satisfaction is to be enjoined on the baptized*), ^a1316, 1543.

—: the imprint of a permanent character (even in the ^a*baptism by heretics* and in a ^b*baptism received in bad faith*), ^b781, 1998, ^a2566, (4127); for this reason it is not permitted to repeat baptism, 183, 316, 319f., (478), 580, (582), 644, 758, 810, 855, 1081, 1624, 1671; for this reason faith in one baptism, 3f., 41//51, 150, 319, 684; an error concerning the character, 3228.

Consequences for life: through baptism the faithful are consecrated to offer spiritual sacrifices in all their works and to proclaim the power of Christ, 4125; the faithful are destined by the baptismal character for the worship of the Christian religion, 4127; in virtue of baptism the Christian people have the right and duty to participate fully, consciously, and actively in the liturgy, 4014; cf. J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); the baptized must confess the faith before men, 4127; all, through baptism and confirmation, are commissioned by the Lord to the apostolate of the laity, 4159; because of baptism, each member of the lay faithful shares responsibility for the Church's mission, 4853; the duties and tasks of the laity find their foundation in the sacraments of baptism and confirmation, 4858; cf. G 6a (general principles regarding the laity); G 6c (mission and task of the laity).

The grace of baptism is not sufficient of itself to attain salvation; the help of grace and the cooperation of man is also necessary, 241, 397; baptism does not free one from the obligations imposed by the law of God, of the Church, and of eventual vows, 1620–1622; baptism does not dissolve the marriage of unbelievers (but establishes only the right to contract a new marriage in virtue of the Pauline privilege), 777, 2582, 2585; baptism does not confer any personal title to public ministry in the Church, 4603.

K 3f

f. THE DIGNITY AND NECESSITY OF BAPTISM

Baptism is the first of all the sacraments, 1314; it is the gate ^a*for entering into the Church*, ^b*to the spiritual life*, ^b1314, ^a1671, ^a3685, ^a4136.

Baptism is a means of salvation prescribed by Christ, 219; it is necessary ^a*for salvation*, 4670, ^a4674; Christ emphasized the necessity of baptism, 4136; it is necessary that it be either accomplished or at least ^a*desired* (^b*baptismus flaminis*), (121), 184, 231, ^b741, ^a1524, 1672, 2536, ^a3869; not even children should be deprived of it, 4670; the Church knows no other way for ensuring children's entry into eternal happiness, 4671; their baptism is a serious duty, 4673; baptism of children: K 3d.

In case of necessity baptism could be administered even in the early Church at any moment, 184; in case of necessity, faith without the sacrament also justifies, 121.

The grace of baptism is not sufficient of itself to attain salvation; the help of grace and the cooperation of man is also necessary, 241, 397.
The baptism conferred by Mormons is invalid, 5090.

4. The Sacrament of Confirmation

a. THE SACRAMENTALITY OF CONFIRMATION AND ITS ORIGIN

K 4a

Confirmation is a sacrament, (785, 794), 860, 1310, 1317, 1601, 1628, 1864, 2536.
An affirmation of the modernists concerning the origin of confirmation is condemned, 3444.

b. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF CONFIRMATION

K 4b

The baptized must be made perfect through ^a*the blessing* or ^b*the imposition of hands* by the bishop, ^b120, ^a121, ^b123; ^a*the anointing of the forehead* (^b*the imposition of hands*) is confirmation, ^a785, ^{ab}794, ^a831, ^b860, ^a1990, ^a2522.
The matter of confirmation is chrism (^a*from balsam and olive oil*), ^b*that has been blessed by the bishop*, ^a831, ^a1317f., ^b1992.
The form of the words of confirmation, 1317.

c. THE MINISTER OF CONFIRMATION

K 4c

The ^a*ordinary* minister of confirmation is (only) the bishop, 120, 123, 183, 187, 215, 320, 785, 794, 831, 860, ^a1069, ^a1318, a1630, 1768, 1777, ^a2588, 4151; a simple priest (^a*but not a deacon*) ^b*to whom the faculty has been granted by the Apostolic See* can be an extraordinary minister, ^a187, 215, ^b1070f., ^b1318, ^b2522, ^b2588; if such a commission is lacking, confirmation by a simple priest is prohibited and invalid, 1990f., 2522.
Only the bishop can consecrate chrism; ^a*the extraordinary minister must use chrism that has been blessed by a (Catholic) bishop*, 187, 215f., 1068, (1071), 1317, a1318, (^a1992), ^a2588.
Affirmations concerning the minister are condemned, 866, 1178, 3556.
Tolerance of rites in the preparation of chrism and in confirmation, 831.

d. THE EFFECT OF CONFIRMATION

K 4d

The Holy Spirit is given through confirmation, 215, 785, 831, 1318f., 4125, 4127; it is administered for the increase of grace and the strengthening of faith, 785, 1311, 1319; through (baptism and) confirmation the baptized —: are consecrated to be a spiritual house and a holy priesthood, 4125; —: are commissioned for the apostolate of the laity, 4159, (4858); through the sacrament of confirmation the faithful are more perfectly bound to the Church, 4127; cf. K 3e (effect of baptism).
In confirmation a character is imprinted so that ^a*it cannot be repeated*, 1313, 1609, 1767; condemned: [No power is to be ascribed to chrism], 1629.
Confirmation is not necessary for salvation, 2523; it is nonetheless a sin to reject it, 1259; the confirmed faithful are more strictly obliged to spread and defend the faith, both by word and by deed, as true witnesses of Christ, 4127.
Cf. G 3cd (Church and evangelization); G 4bc and G 6ba (participation of the faithful/laity in the prophetic office of Christ); G 6ca (apostolate of the laity).

5. The Sacrament of the Eucharist

a. THE LAST SUPPER OF JESUS CHRIST

K 5a

Sacramentality and institution by Jesus Christ. The Eucharist is a sacrament, 718, 761, 846, 860, 1310, 1320, 1601, 1635–1637, 1727, 1864, 2536.
Christ instituted ^a*the sacrament* or ^b*the sacrifice* of the Eucharist ^c*at the Last Supper*, ^d*so as to perpetuate the sacrifice of the Cross until his return and continue the memorial of his death and Resurrection*, ^{ac}846, ^{ac}1637, ^{ac}1727, ^{bcd}1740–1742, ^b1752, ^{bcd}4047, 5094; an affirmation of the modernists condemned, 3445.
With it Christ brings to fulfillment the Old Testament sacrifices and priesthood, 1739, as promised by the prophets, 1742; cf. E 1b (promise of Jesus Christ in the Old Covenant); E 1c (deliverance of the Gentiles and Old Testament believers through hope in the Promised One); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ).

- 5ab Jesus Christ offers himself to the Father for men, 1740, (4153), 4852, 5094; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ).
- 5ac Jesus Christ gives to the disciples his body and blood under the species of bread and wine, 1637, 1642, 1740; cf. E 2bb (Christ's work among men).
- 5ad Jesus Christ thereby leaves to the Church a perpetual sacrifice, 1742, 4047, (4153, 4852), 5094.
Christ himself is the priest of the sacrifice and the offering, 802, 1740–1743, (4153), 5094; he is present in the sacrifice of the Mass in the person of the minister and under the eucharistic species, 4007; in the celebration of the Eucharist he offers himself continually, 4852; cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ).

K 5b

b. THE ECCLESIAL LORD'S SUPPER

- 5ba Memorial of the death and exaltation of the Lord. In the Eucharist the memorial of the Savior is celebrated, 846, 1322, (1637), 1638, 1740, 4047, 4840; in the Lord's Supper the death of the Lord is proclaimed, 4006, 5094; cf. E 2 (the mysteries of the life, death, and exaltation of Jesus Christ).
- 5bb Making present and carrying on the sacrifice of Jesus. The eucharistic sacrifice is the unbloody re-presentation of the bloody sacrifice of the Cross and its memorial, 1740f., 1743, 3339, 3847f., 4006, 5094; as often as the sacrifice of the Cross is celebrated on the altar, the work of our redemption is carried on, 4103; sacramental renewal and application of the sacrifice of Christ in the Eucharist, 1740, 3339, 4153, 4573, 4722; in the sacrifice of the Mass Christ is present in the person of the minister and under the eucharistic species, 4007; the sacrifice of the Mass does not detract from the sacrifice of the Cross in any way, 1743, 1754, 3339; cf. E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); J 1c (effect of the liturgy).
In the Mass there is offered a sacrifice that is ^atrue, ^bproper, ^cvisible, ^a1740–1742, ^a1751, ^c1764, ^{ab}1866, ^{ab}2535, ^b3847.
Condemned: [The Mass has no foundation whatsoever in the Gospel], 1155; [The Mass is the mere remembrance of the sacrifice of the Cross], 1753, 3316, 3339, 3847; [The Mass is a sacrifice in the same way as every other work consecrated to God is], 1945; condemned is the opinion that the sacrifice of the Eucharist [involves a fraternal meal in which the community comes together and expresses its identity, rather than a sacramental renewal of the sacrifice of Christ], 4722; cf. J 1a (nature of the liturgy).
- 5bc Meal in which the body and the blood of Christ are eaten. The eucharistic species symbolize the bloody separation of the body and the blood, 3848; thus Christ is signified in the state of victim, 3848, 3852.
- 5bd Efficacious presence of the Lord. The real presence under the species of bread and wine. By the consecration there takes place a change of ^athe whole substance of the bread into the body of Christ and of ^athe whole substance of the wine into the blood of Christ, 1321, 1352, ^a1642, ^a1652, ^a1866, ^a2535, ^a2629, ^a2718, 4338; this change is named transubstantiation (change of substance), 782, 802, 860, 1352, 1642, 1652, 1866, 2535, 2629; after the consecration the species of bread and of wine is seen, but the reality of the flesh and blood of Christ is believed, 782f., that is: in the sacrament of the altar are contained ^atruly, ^breally, ^csubstantially, ^dessentially the body and blood of Christ under the species of bread and of wine, 690, 700, 794, ^a802, (846), ^{abd}849, ^{abc}1636, 1640, ^{abc}1651, ^{abc}1866, ^{abc}2535, ^{abc}2629, 4412; the presence of Christ in the sacrament of the Eucharist is preferably called "real" because it is substantial, 4412; after the consecration –: Christ is present whole and entire in his physical reality under the species of bread and wine, 4413; –: the species of bread and wine take on a new signification, a new finality, because they contain, not just in the Church's belief, but in reality, a new ontological reality, 4413; in the sacrifice of the Mass Christ is present in the person of the minister and under the eucharistic species, 4007; he is present in any community of the altar, 4151; cf. H 5 (ministerial office of priests); K 5cb (competence of ordained priests and bishops); presence of Christ in the Church: E 2ea (work of the Exalted One in the Church); G 1be (Church as work of the Holy Trinity).
The whole Christ is contained ^aunder each of the two species (^bin virtue of their natural connection and concomitance) and ^cunder each part of either species when separated, ^a1199, ^a1257, ^{ac}1321, ^{ab}1640, ^{ac}1641, ^a1651, ^{ac}1653, (^a1729, ^a1733), ^a1866, ^{ac}2535; Christ is made present whole and entire, 4412.
The Christ present in the Eucharist is the same as the one who was born and was crucified, 1083, 1256; the body and the blood of Christ are contained in the Eucharist (^abecause of the hypostatic union) together with his soul and divinity, ^a1640, 1651, 1866, 2535.
Christ is eucharistically present under the species of bread and wine; in terms of place (^aaccording to his natural mode of existing) he is in heaven, 849, ^a1636.
Affirmations that deny transubstantiation are condemned, 849, 1018, 1151–1153, 1256, (1652), 1654, 3891; improper explanations condemned, 3121–3124, 3229–3231, 3891; "transignification" and "transfinalization" are not sufficient for understanding the Real Presence, 4411; the symbolism inherent in the Eucharist is not able to express exhaustively the presence of Christ in this sacrament, 4411; it would be wrong to try to explain the Real Presence by means of the "pneumatic" nature of the glorious body of Christ or by means of the "spiritual presence of Christ and of his intimate union with the faithful, the members of his Mystical Body", 4412.

Whether water mixed with wine in the Mass is transformed into blood is debated, 784, 798.

The worship of the Lord's presence. The eucharistic presence of Christ is not limited in time, 834; he remains as long as the species remain 1101–1103, 5094; the opinion is condemned according to which Christ is no longer present in the consecrated Hosts that remain after the celebration of the Mass has been completed, 4411; cf. E 5de and J 1ef (adoration and worship of Christ).

The cult of adoration is due to the sacrament of the Eucharist, 1643f., 1656; cf. J 1ef (adoration and worship of Christ).

Presence of Christ in the liturgical mysteries of the Church: J 1a (nature of the liturgy).

C. THE CHURCH OFFERS THE LORD'S SUPPER

K 5c

The celebrating Church offers the Lord's Supper, 1740f.; through the hands of the priests, 1741; the Church offers to the faithful the bread of life from the table both of God's Word and of Christ's Body, 4228; cf. J 1d (subjects of the liturgy). 5ca

Condemned is the assertion: [The celebration of the Eucharist is "simply an action of the local community"], 4722.

The competence of ordained bishops and priests. Required for the consecration of the bread and wine are the person (competent minister), the form (the words of the consecration), and the intention of the one who pronounces the words, 794. 5cb

The bishop is the "steward of the grace of the supreme priesthood" especially in the Eucharist that he himself offers or causes to be offered, 4151; every legitimate celebration of the Eucharist is regulated by the bishop, 4151.

For the offering of the Eucharist is required a priest ^aordained by a bishop (^bnot a deacon, ^cnot a layman) ^dwho has the requisite intention, 794, ^{ab}802, ^c1084, ^d1352; it is the task of the priest to complete the building up of the Body of Christ by means of the eucharistic sacrifice, 4141, 4541; only the priest may preside over the sacrificial banquet in the person of Christ, 4541; the redemptive act of Christ, the Bridegroom, for his Bride, the Church, in the Eucharist is expressed in a sacramental manner inasmuch as it is accomplished by a man (not by a woman), 4840; cf. K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

Priests exercise their sacred function especially in the eucharistic worship or the celebration of the Mass, by which, acting in the person of Christ and proclaiming his mystery, they unite the prayers of the faithful with the sacrifice of their Head and renew and apply the sacrifice of Christ, 4153; the ordained priest —: ^aspeaks, ^bacts in the person of Christ, ^a1321, ^b4153, ^b4599, ^b4840; —: is the image of Christ, 4599; conditions for the concelebration of several priests, (3928).

The Christian faithful without priestly ordination who claim to perform the Eucharist do so illicitly and invalidly, 4541; the opinion according to which [confecting the Eucharist is not necessarily connected with sacramental ordination] undermines the entire apostolic structure of the Church and distorts the sacramental economy of salvation itself, 4723; condemned: [By virtue of the apostolicity of each local community, if a community lacks the Eucharist as its constitutive element for a long time, it can "reappropriate" its power and establish its own presiders and pastors; in these circumstances, God himself cannot refuse to grant this power even without sacramental ordination], 4722; cf. G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles).

For a valid celebration of the Mass, the state of grace is required; if this be lacking, and the priest must of necessity celebrate the Mass, he must go to confession "as soon as possible", 1647, 2058f.

Masses in which the priest alone communicates are not illicit, 1747, 1758, 2628, 3854.

Cf. G 4bd (participation of the faithful in the priestly office of Christ); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

Active participation of the laity. In the eucharistic sacrifice the faithful offer the Divine Victim to God and themselves along with it, 4012, 4127; they join in the offering of the Eucharist, 4126; all the activities of the laity, offered to the Father in the celebration of the Eucharist together with the offering of the Lord's body, through Christ become spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God, 4012, 4048, 4125, 4160, 4852.

All the faithful take part in the liturgical action, each in the way that is proper to himself, both in the offering and in holy communion, 4127; the faithful offer the sacrifice (^abecause of their common priesthood) in a manner different from the priest, 3850–3853, ^a3851; each person, minister or layman, who has an office to perform should do all of, but only, those parts that pertain to his office by the nature of the rite and the principles of liturgy, 4028; bishops exhort their people to carry out with faith and reverence their part in the liturgy and especially in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, 4151; the communal celebration of the Mass is to be preferred to a celebration that is individual and quasi-private, 4027.

Condemned affirmations —: concerning the concelebration of the faithful, 3850; —: concerning private Masses without the participation of the people, 3853; it is not permissible to extol the so-called "community" Mass in such a way as to detract from Masses that are celebrated privately, 4411.

Cf. G 4bd and G 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly office of Christ); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy).

Other ministries. It is the duty of the deacon, according as it shall have been assigned to him by competent authority, to be custodian and dispenser of the Eucharist and to bring viaticum to the dying, 4155; cf. H 6 (ministerial office of deacons). 5cd

Servers, commentators, and choir exercise a genuine liturgical function, 4029.

- 5ce The efficaciousness of the sacrifice of the Mass —: derives from the sacramental act accomplished (ex opere operato), 3844; —: is the same as that of the sacrifice of the Cross, 3339; —: does not depend upon the probity of the priest, 794.
- 5cf The Eucharist as communion: The Eucharist is communion with pope and bishop; it requires the bond of the profession of faith, the sacraments, and ecclesiastical governance, 5095; concelebration with those who do not profess this threefold bond is therefore forbidden, 5095; the administration of communion is permitted under certain circumstances, 5095.

K 5d d. THE ELEMENTS OF THE CELEBRATION AND THE RECIPIENTS OF THE LORD'S SUPPER

- 5da Liturgy of the word and homily. Cf. J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).
- 5db Rites and canon. The legitimacy of the ceremonies of the Mass is defended, 1746, 1757, 1759; the canon of the Mass is free from (dogmatic) errors, 1745, 1756.
A little water must be mixed with the Mass wine, (784, 798), 822, 834, 1320, 1748, 1759.
The use of the Latin language, limitation of the vernacular, 1749, 1759, 4036; greater scope for the mother tongue in the liturgy, 4036; cf. J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).
- 5dc The eucharistic sacrifice. The matter of the offering: bread and wine. The matter is —: wheat bread, (783), 860, 1320, 1352; —: grape wine, (783), 1320; bread is unleavened among the Latins, leavened among the Greeks, 860, 1303; precautions against the corruption of Mass wine, 3198, 3264, 3312f.
In the Eucharist, the bread and wine are “sacrament and not reality” (sacramentum et non res), the flesh and blood of Christ “sacrament and reality” (sacramentum et res), the sacramental effect “reality and not sacrament” (res et non sacramentum), 783.
The form of the eucharistic sacrifice consists of the words of Christ at the Last Supper, 1321, 1352; the epiclesis does not have consecratory power, 1017, 2718, 3556; in a concelebration of several priests it is necessary to pronounce together the words of the consecration, 3928.
The words of Christ at the Last Supper do not have a figurative sense, but must be understood in their proper and obvious meaning, 1637.
- 5dd Communion. Manner of administration: ^a*the laity receive communion from priests*, ^b*priests administer communion to themselves*, ^{ab}1648, ^b1660.
Communion under the species of bread alone is also legitimate (not only under both species, ^a*as required by the Reformers* and ^b*deliberated at the Council of Trent*), 1198–1200, 1258, 1466, ^a1731f., 1726–1734, ^b1760; by this no one is deprived of any necessary grace, 1729, 1733; laity and clerics who do not offer the eucharistic sacrifice are not obliged to communicate under both species, 1726f., 1731f.
The reservation of the Eucharist is legitimated (but ^a*an abuse among the Greeks* is condemned), ^a834, 1645, 1657; an opinion condemned according to which Christ is no longer present in the hosts that remain after the conclusion of Mass, 4411; cf. K 5bd (efficacious presence of the Lord).
Spiritual communion. A distinction is made between sacramental, both spiritual and sacramental, and spiritual reception of communion, 1648, (1658); condemned: [In the Eucharist Christ is not eaten really, but only spiritually], 1658.
- 5de Recipient and disposition. The age for first communion of children, 3530, (3533), 3535; viaticum should also be given to children past the age of reason, 3536; an affirmation concerning eucharistic communion to the dead is condemned, 3232.
The disposition and preparation required for communion with the condemnation of ^a*rigorist* and ^b*laxist* assertions, ^b1661, 2090–2092, ^b2156, ^a2322f., ^a3376–3378, 3382; licit reception of communion presupposes in particular the state of grace (^a*to be acquired through confession and not only through contrition*) as also ^b*the resolve never to sin mortally again*, ^a1647, ^a1661, 3379, ^b3381; a right intention is also necessary, 3379f.
The religious understanding necessary in children and in those to be baptized: they must be able to distinguish the Body of Christ from common food, 2382, 3531f.
Christians of separated Eastern Churches can receive the sacrament of the Eucharist if they ask and have the right dispositions, 4182; in case of necessity, communion can be received from a minister of an Eastern Church, 4182.
Communion can, under certain conditions, be administered to Christians from evangelical ecclesial communions, 5095.
Frequency. Frequent communion is recommended (^a*also for children*), 1649, 1747, 2090, (2093f.), 3361, 3375f., 3379, 3383, ^a3534, 3854; condemned: [Daily eucharistic communion is of divine right], 2095, 3377.
Annual Easter communion is prescribed (^a*including for children who have attained the age of reason*), 812, 1659, ^a3533; this precept is not satisfied by a sacrilegious communion, 2155.
Small children are not obliged to receive communion, 1730, 1734.
In danger of death, communion as viaticum should be received (^a*also by children who are past the age of reason*), 121, 212, 1645, 1657, ^a3536.

e. THE EUCHARIST, FOUNDATION AND SUMMIT OF THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH

K 5e

The Eucharist—worship of God. The Mass is offered to God alone (even when it is celebrated in honor of the saints), 1744, 1755; Christ offered himself on the Cross and continues to be offered in the celebration of the Eucharist for the glory of God and the salvation of humanity, 4852; cf. J 1a (nature of the liturgy). Sea

The Eucharist—effect on the Church. The Eucharist is the culmination and center, as it were, of the Christian religion, 3847; it is, as it were, the very soul of the Church, 3364; the true nature of the Church is expressed in the liturgy and above all in the celebration of the Eucharist, 4002, 4041; the eucharistic sacrifice is the fount and apex of the life of the Church, 3847, 4127; the Church has all her goods, strength, and glory from the Eucharist, 3364; by the Eucharist —: the Church lives and grows, 4151, 4235; —: the unity of the people of God is expressed and brought about, 4103, 4112, 4127, 4151; —: the redemptive act of Christ the Bridegroom for his Bride, the Church, is expressed, 4840; it is the sacrament of love, a sign of unity, a bond of charity, 4047; the Eucharist as a meal of brotherly solidarity and a foretaste of the heavenly banquet, 4338. Seb

Cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church and Eucharist); G 3aa (the divine foundation of the unity of the Church); J 1a (nature of the liturgy).

The Eucharist—effect on the faithful. The purpose of the Eucharist is first of all the strengthening of the faithful, 3375–3378. Sec

The eucharistic Christ is —: the life of believers, 3360; —: food of the soul, 847, 1311, 1638, 3360, (4047); because of this, the Eucharist has for the spiritual life effects analogous to the effect of material food, 1322; the Eucharist as viaticum, 4338; in the breaking the eucharistic bread, Christians partake of the body of the Lord and are taken up into communion with him and with one another, (4047), 4112; the Eucharist brings it about that —: the faithful are transformed into what they consume, 4151; —: they participate in the glorious life of the exalted Lord, (4047), 4168; cf. M 1a (kingdom of God has dawned in Christ).

Particular effects —: forgiveness of sins, 1020; (more precisely:) freedom from light daily faults, 1638, 1740, 3375; —: remission of punishments, 1020; —: preservation from mortal sins, (846, 1322), 1638, 3375; —: restraint of concupiscence, 3375; —: increase of grace, 846, 1020, 1322, 4010, 4047; —: growth of the virtues, 846; —: communication of love for God and men which is the soul of the entire apostolate, 4159; — unity and charity, 783, 1635, (1638, 1649), 3362, (4112); union and conformation with Christ, 802, 847, 1320, 1322, (4112, 4852); —: sanctification in Christ, 4010; —: pledge of future glory, 1638, 4047, (4168, 4338).

Condemned —: the limitation of the effects to the forgiveness of sins alone, 1655; —: an affirmation concerning the application of a particular fruit of the Mass, 2630.

The Eucharist—sacrament of communion with the living and the dead. The Mass is a propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead, 1743, 1753, 1866, 2535; in the eucharistic sacrifice believers are united to the liturgy of the heavenly Church, 4170; the salvific efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ extends to all men, present and absent, living and dead, 4722; the application to the faithful who have had their bodies cremated, 3277. Seel1

Cf. G 3ab (unity of the Church as unity in multiplicity); J 1a (nature of the liturgy); concerning the communion of saints cf. M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

6. The Sacrament of Penance

a. THE SACRAMENTALITY OF PENANCE AND ITS ORIGIN

K 6a

Penance is a sacrament, 761, (794), 860, 1310, 1323, 1601, 1667, (–1693), 1701, 1864, 2536; condemned: [The power to forgive sins is solely the power to declare that sins are forgiven, that is, to preach the Word of God], 1670, 1685, 1709; [Penance, as regards the conferral of grace, is a sacrament of nature, but not an institution of the Old or New Testament], 1418.

Institution. Before Christ there was no sacrament of penance, 1670.

The sacrament of penance was instituted by Christ after his Resurrection, 308 348f., 1542, 1670, 1679, (1706); it is a proper sacrament, distinct from baptism, 1668, 1702.

It serves spiritual healing, 1311; the sacrament of penance is in a certain sense a laborious kind of baptism, 1672.

Modernist affirmations concerning the origin of the sacrament of penance are condemned, 3443, 3446f.

b. CONCERNING THE CHURCH'S EARLIER REGULATION OF PENANCE

K 6b

The Church's earlier regulation of penance, more severe than that of today (especially because of the refusal of absolution prior to the accomplishment of satisfaction), should not be reintroduced, 129, 212, 1415, 2316/2322, 2487–2489, 2634f.

K 6c

C. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF PENANCE

- 6ca The “matter” of penance are the acts of the penitent himself, that is, contrition, confession, satisfaction (the affirmation that this doctrine is not founded in the Bible is condemned), 1323, 1455, 1673, 1704; condemned: [Essential parts of penance are the terrors of a stricken conscience and faith], 1675, 1704.
- 6cb Contrition is sorrow for a sin committed together with the resolve not to sin any more in the future (^a*together with hatred for one's past life*), 1323, ^a1676; conversion ever remains an unfinished process on both the personal and societal levels, 4614; cf. F 2b (conversion and justification by faith).
 Contrition is necessary for remission of sins, 1676f., 3334; affirmations that are detrimental to contrition are condemned; among others: [Contrition makes one still more a sinner], 1455–1457, 1461f., 1464f., 1678, (1685), 1705.
 Perfect contrition reconciles man with God already before the reception of the sacrament of penance but must include the desire to receive it, (1260), 1677, 1971; lacking a priest, forgiveness of sins can be obtained by means of contrition, 1260; condemned: [Contrition renders exterior confession superfluous], 1157, 1412.
 One must distinguish between perfect contrition through charity and imperfect contrition, or attrition, 1677f.; attrition, if it excludes the will to sin and implies the hope of pardon, is a gift of God ^a*that prepares for the sacrament of penance*, 1678, ^a1705; the question whether attrition requires an act of loving God can be freely discussed, 2070; ^a*laxist* and ^b*rigorist* affirmations concerning attrition are condemned, ^a2157, ^b2314f., (^b2462–2467, ^b2625), ^b2636.
- 6cc Confession of sins. (^a*According to the command of Christ*) a complete confession of sins is necessary, 1323, ^a1679–1681, 1706; that is, of all mortal sins, ^a*of which the penitent is conscious*, 1085, ^a1680, 1682, 1707; one must also confess –: secret sins, 1680, 1707; –: mortal sins committed only in thought (^a*mere displeasure is not sufficient*), ^a1413, 1680, 1707.
 Sins must be confessed separately and in detail, explaining the respective circumstances (^a*that change their nature*), 813, 1085, 1411, 1679, ^a1681, 1707, 2158.
 Sins omitted through forgetfulness are considered as included in confession, 1682; but they must be confessed in the following confession, 2031, 3835.
 Reasons that exempt from completeness of confession are listed, 3834; affirmations directed against the completeness of confession are condemned, 1458f., 1682, 2192, 2247f., 2259f.
 The confession of venial sins is ^a*permitted*, ^b*useful*, but ^c*not necessary*, ^{ab}1458f., ^{bc}1680, 1707, ^b2639, ^b3818.
 The repeated confession of sins already forgiven is permitted and recommended but not necessary, 880.
 The manner of confession: Secret confession is legitimate; public confession is not prohibited but must not be mandatory, 323, 1414, 1683f., 1710.
 In virtue of the secret of confession, it is prohibited for the confessor to make use of his knowledge, 814, 1989, 2195; it is also prohibited to ask the name of an accomplice, 2543f.
 In case of necessity, signs of the penitent or testimony of those present suffice, 310; confession to a priest who is absent or absolution from afar is not permitted, 1994f.
- 6cd Satisfaction must be imposed and requested by the penitent ^a*himself*, 308, 1689–1692, 1714f., ^a2035; the reason for this, 1543, 1692.
 The satisfaction must correspond to the nature and number of sins (whereby the use of a “false”, that is, partial, penance is condemned), 717, 1692; recommended as works of satisfaction (according to the opinion of the priest) are prayers, fasting, almsgiving, and other works of piety, 1323, 1543, (1713); the practice of the early Church regarding satisfaction has been mitigated and should not be reintroduced, 129, 212, 2316//2322; in addition to sacramental satisfaction, the temporal afflictions imposed by God also have the value of satisfaction, 1693; it is an abuse to anoint the penitent instead of imposing satisfaction, 832; satisfaction loses its force through indiscriminate and excessive indulgences, 819, 1835; cf. K 10bd (utility of indulgences).
 Affirmations that call into question the efficaciousness of human satisfaction are condemned, 1959, 1977; condemned (as insufficient): [The best penance is a new life], 1457, 1692, 1713.
- 6ce The form of the sacrament of penance is the words of absolution, 1323, 1673; the absolution is a judicial act, 1671, 1679, 1685, 1709; the use of a simple formula of prayer is rejected, 1013; condemned: [The absolution is simply the declaration that sins are forgiven], 1685, 1703, 1709; affirmations concerning the efficaciousness of absolution based solely on the faith of the penitent are condemned, 1460–1465.
 Common absolution of several persons simultaneously is sometimes permitted, 3832–3837; the formula to use in such a case, 3837; condemnation of the practice of granting absolution, in the case of a large number of penitents, when only half the sins have been confessed, 2159.
 In danger of death, reconciliation must not be refused, 129, 136, 212, 309f., (325); cf. F 1 (God's mercy and universal salvific will); laxist and rigorist affirmations are condemned, 2160f., 2164, 2638.

K 6d

The power to forgive sins was given to the apostles and their successors in the priestly office, 308, 348, 1670, 1679, 1764, 1771; this power extends to all sins: D 7aa (forgiveness of sins); the office of binding and loosing given to Peter was granted also to the college of apostles joined with its head, 4146; the bishops are the moderators of penitential discipline, 4151; cf. G 3da (Christ founds the Church on the apostles); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification).

The bishop or priest alone is the minister, 1260, 1323, 1684, 1706, 1710; not the layman, 866, 1260, 1463, 1684, 1710; for the sick and the sinners among the faithful, priests exercise in the highest degree the ministry of alleviation and reconciliation, 4153; cf. K 7c (ministers of anointing of the sick); in the absence of a priest, the forgiveness of sins can be obtained through contrition, 1260; cf. K 6c (essential elements of the sacrament of penance).

The minister needs (in addition to the power deriving from ordination) jurisdictional authorization, 1323, 1686, 2637; the jurisdictional power has a different scope corresponding to the different degree in the hierarchy, 1261, 1265.

The power of the minister does not depend upon his moral probity, 912, 914, (1019, 1262), 1684, 1710.

Confession, ^a which formerly could be made only to one's own priest or to another priest only with the consent of the first, need no longer be made necessarily to him, ^a812, 921–923, 1085; affirmations that deny mendicant orders the right to hear confessions are condemned, 921–924; laxist affirmations concerning the jurisdiction of confessors are condemned, 2032f., 2036, (2056, 2064).

Bishops have the right to reserve certain cases to themselves, 1687, 1711; in danger of death there is no reservation of cases, 1688; affirmations contrary to the reservation of cases are condemned, 1136, 2023f., 2032, 2064, (2594), 2597, 2644f.

e. RECIPIENT

K 6e

The power of the Church to forgive sins extends only to the living, not to the dead, 348.

Children are already obliged to confess, 3533; the requisite age and religious knowledge, 3530f., 3533.

The absolution of dying schismatics is sometimes permitted, 3635f.

Christians of separated Eastern Churches can receive the sacrament of penance if they ask and have the right dispositions, 4182; the sacrament of penance in case of necessity can be asked of a minister of the Eastern Churches, 4182.

K 6f

The effect of penance is reconciliation with God and with the Church, 1674, 4128; the sacrament of penance is a means of salvation for sins committed after baptism, 308, 348f., 802, 855, 1323, 1542, 1579, 1668, 1680, 1701; pardon is not obtained by faith alone, 1685, 1709.

Along with the guilt, eternal punishment is also remitted, 1543; but temporal punishment is not always entirely remitted, 838, 1010, 1543, 1580, 1689, 1712, 1715; condemned: [Only the remaining debt is taken away], 1957f.

Cf. D 7 (forgiveness of sins).

g. NECESSITY

K 6g

The sacrament of penance is necessary ^a*by divine law* for those who have fallen after baptism, 1542f., 1668f., 1670, 1672, ^a1679, ^a1706; it is “the second plank of salvation after the shipwreck of lost grace”, 1542; in case of necessity the desire for the sacrament of penance is sufficient, (121), 1543, 3869.

The precept of annual confession, 812, 1683, 1708; this precept is not fulfilled with a sacrilegious or intentionally invalid confession, (2033), 2034.

7. The Anointing of the Sick

a. THE SACRAMENTALITY OF THE ANOINTING OF THE SICK AND ITS ORIGIN

K 7a

The anointing of the sick or extreme unction is a sacrament, 794, (833), 860, 1310, 1324, 1601, 1694, 1716, 1864, 2536; one should not disdain the anointing of the sick, 1259, 1718; affirmations directed against its sacramental character are condemned, 1699, 1716f., 3448.

The anointing of the sick was instituted by Christ, 1694, 1695, (1699), 1716.

K 7b b. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF THE ANOINTING OF THE SICK

The matter of the anointing of the sick is anointing with olive oil blessed by the bishop (not by a simple priest), 216, 1324, 1695, ^a2762f.
The form of the anointing of the sick is the words of the formula, 1324, 1695.
In case of necessity, a particular brief formula is licit, 3391.

K 7c c. MINISTER

The minister of the anointing of the sick is the priest, 216, 1325, 1695, 1697, 1719, 4153.
The anointing can be carried out by one or several ministers, provided that each one applies the matter and each one pronounces the form, 2524.

K 7d d. RECIPIENT

The recipient of the anointing of the sick is the sick person (^a*after having attained the use of reason*) in danger of death, 1324, 1698, ^a3536, 4128.
The anointing can be repeated as often as a person, after his recovery, falls again into danger of death, 1698.
The religious knowledge and intention required of the recipient, 2382; in itself, the anointing of the sick presupposes the state of grace: for this reason, in the early Church the anointing of the sick was refused to a person not yet reconciled, 620.
The sacrament of the anointing of the sick can be administered to Christians of the separated Eastern Churches if they request it and have the right dispositions, 4182; Catholics can request it in case of necessity from a minister of an Eastern Church, 4182.
Conditions under which one can administer the anointing of the sick to dying schismatics, 3635f.

K 7e e. EFFECT

The anointing of the sick provides —: spiritual and at times physical healing, 620, 1311, 1325, 1696, (4128); —: strengthening at the time of death, 1694; through the anointing of the sick and the prayer of the priests, the Church commends the sick to the Lord for their salvation and exhorts them to unite themselves to the Passion and death of Christ, 4128.
The anointing of the sick effects ^a*the forgiveness of sins*, ^b*the erasure of the remains of sin*, ^c*the strengthening of the soul of the sick person*, ^a620, ^{abc}1696, ^{ab}1717.

8. The Sacrament of Orders

K 8a a. THE PRIESTHOOD OF THE NEW COVENANT

In the New Testament there is —: a visible and external priesthood, 1764, 1771; —: a particular priesthood that must be distinct from the common priesthood of the faithful, 1767, 3850–3853, 4126, 4857, 5050–5053.
The priesthood of the New Covenant, or orders, is a sacrament, 718, 860, 1310, 1326, 1601, 1764, 1766, 1773, 1864, 2536, 3857, 4153; the Christian priesthood has a sacramental character, 4600; admission into the clergy does not occur because of a call or consent on the part of the people or a secular power, but because of sacred ordination, 3850; the ordained ministers in the Church —: come from the sacrament of orders, 4857; —: are a gift for the life and mission of the Church, 4857; —: express a participation in the priesthood of Jesus Christ, 4857.
Ordination is truly one of the seven sacraments (^a*and is one and the same sacrament for the universal Church*), 1766, ^a3857.
The end of the sacrament of orders is —: the spiritual governance and increase of the Church, 1311; —: to feed the Church with the word and the grace of God, 4126, 4128.
The priest is because of his office the public and official intercessor before God, 3757, (4033, 4153); priests exercise their sacred function especially in the eucharistic celebration, 4153; the priest is the servant of Christ who represents the person of Christ insofar as the latter is the Head of all the members, 3755, 3850, (4033, 4153, 4599, 4602).
Institution. The old priesthood was transformed into the new, 1764; Christ instituted the particular priesthood of the New Covenant, 1740, 1752, 1764, 1773, 3857; the power of consecrating, offering, and administering the Body and Blood of Christ was given to the apostles and to their successors in the priesthood, (1740, 1752), 1764, 1771.
Christ grants ^a*to the ministers and the faithful*, ^b*to the laity*, a sharing in his priestly function, ^b4160, ^a4177; the common priesthood of all the faithful and the ministerial priesthood each in its own special way is a participation in the one priesthood of Christ, 4126; they are interrelated, 4126, 4857; all the faithful are not all equally endowed with the same spiritual power, 1767; the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial or hierarchical priesthood are distinguished in essence and not simply in degree, 4126, 4857.

Priestly or episcopal ordination cannot be validly conferred on women, 4590, 4980, 5040; the Eastern Churches have preserved this same tradition, 4591; Christ —: did not call any woman to become part of the Twelve, 4592; —: did not entrust the apostolic charge to women, 4593; not even to Mary, 4594; counterarguments advanced, 4597, 4603; reasons for the fittingness of the fact that only men are called to receive priestly ordination, 4598–4602, 4981; the fact that the Incarnate Word is of the masculine sex cannot be dissociated from the economy of salvation, 4601; in calling only men as his apostles, Christ acted in a completely free and sovereign manner, 4840; cf. 5092; E 2bb (Christ's work among men: the call of the apostles).

Non-admission of homosexuals to ordination, 5100.

Affirmations of the modernists concerning the institution of the priesthood are condemned, 3449f.; priestly ordination does not form part of the rights of the individual, 4605; baptism does not confer any personal title to public ministry in the Church, 4603; condemned: —: [The so-called role of moderating the community would, therefore, be only a simple mandate conferred for the orderly functioning of the community itself, but it ought not to be “sacralized”], 4721; —: [The ministry of bishop and priest does not differ in a strict sense from the common priesthood of the faithful], 4721; dangers: too indiscriminate a use of the word “ministry”, confusion between common and ministerial priesthood, clericalization of the lay faithful, 4858.

Concerning the use of the concepts “offices” (munera) and “powers” (potestates), cf. 4354.

Cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); especially E 3bc (priesthood of Christ); G 4bd and G 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly office of Christ); H (God guides, rules, and sanctifies the Church through his ministers); especially H 1a (foundation of the ministerial office in the mission of Christ and the apostles); H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office); H 4 (bishops' ministry of sanctification); H 5 (ministerial office of priests); H 6 (ministerial office of deacons).

b. THE DEGREES OF SACRAMENTAL MINISTRY

K 8b

The various orders by which one advances toward the priesthood is legitimate, 1765, 1772; there is a hierarchy instituted by divine ordinance that consists of bishops, priests, and ministers, 1776; in the Roman Church there are seven sacred orders, 836; namely, priests, deacons, subdeacons (major orders), acolytes, exorcists, lectors, porters (minor orders), 1765.

Bishops —: are superior to priests in virtue of their order, 1768, 1777; —: have legitimately handed on to different individuals various degrees of participation in their ministry, 4153.

Priests are united to bishops in priestly dignity, 4153.

Deacons are at a lower level of the hierarchy than priests, 4155.

Cf. H 1b (hierarchical ordering of the ministerial office).

c. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF THE SACRAMENT

K 8c

The (unique) matter of ordination to the diaconate, priesthood, and episcopacy is (at least henceforth) the imposition of hands, 326–328, 826, 3325, 3858–3860, 5062; for validity, moral contact is sufficient, but physical contact is prescribed, 3861; the handing over of instruments was once necessary in the Roman Church only in virtue of an ecclesial prescription, while in the Greek Church ordinations were always valid without the handing over of instruments, 1326, 3858.

The form of the sacrament of orders is the words that designate the power (the sacramental grace) to be handed over (wherein Anglican orders are defective), 1326, 3316f., 3858–3860, 5062.

Episcopal ordination: The apostles passed on the spiritual gift to their helpers by the imposition of hands, and it has been transmitted down to us in episcopal consecration, 4145; through episcopal ordination —: apostolic succession is sacramentally perpetuated, 4821; —: the fullness of the sacrament of orders is conferred, 4145, 4151; —: the bishops in an eminent and visible way sustain the roles of Christ himself as Teacher, Shepherd, and High Priest and act in his person, 4145; cf. E 3b (forms of mediation); episcopal consecration, together with the office of sanctifying, also confers the office of teaching and of governing, which can be exercised only in hierarchical communion with the head and the members of the college, 4145; cf. G 3dc (ecclesiastical office in the succession of the apostles); H 1a (foundation of ministry in the mission of Christ and the apostles); H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion); H 2–4 (bishops' pastoral ministry and ministry of preaching and sanctifying).

It pertains to the bishops to admit newly elected members into the episcopal body by means of the sacrament of orders, 4145; examination before ordination, 325; one is constituted a member of the episcopal body in virtue of sacramental consecration and hierarchical communion with the head and members of the college, 4146, 4354; the practice of summoning several bishops for an episcopal consecration signifies the collegial nature of the episcopal state, 4146; cf. H 1c (collegial character of ministerial office and hierarchical communion).

Priestly ordination: By the power of the sacrament of orders, in the image of Christ the eternal High Priest, priests are consecrated to preach the gospel and shepherd the faithful and to celebrate divine worship, so that they are true priests of the New Testament, 4153; cf. H 5 (ministerial office of priests).

Diaconal ordination: On deacons, hands are imposed “not unto the priesthood, but unto a ministry of service”, 4155, 5063f.; cf. H 6 (ministerial office of deacons); K 5cd (other ministries).

K 8d

The ^aordinary minister of the sacrament of orders is the bishop, 128, ^a1326, 1768, 1777, 4151; privileges that entrust to a simple priest the power to confer ^athe subdiaconate, ^bthe diaconate, ^cthe presbyterate, ^dall the sacred orders, ^{abc}1145f., ^d1290, ^{ab}1435; condemned affirmations: [Any priest can confer any sacrament (thus also orders)], 1136; [The organization of clerics is reserved to the bishop through a desire for temporal gain and honor], 1178.

The validity of an ordination conferred by a ^aschismatic or ^bheretical minister –: is recognized, ^a356, ^b478, ^a705; –: is denied (and linked to a need for “reordination”) in the case of ^aPaulianists and ^bAnglicans, ^a128, ^b3315–3319; decision in both directions in the case of ordinations by simoniacs, 691–694, 701f., 705, 707, 710; one who is ignorant of his own ordination must be deposed, 592; schismatic episcopal ordination by Archbishop Lefebvre, 4820f.; ordination of women, a simulation of priestly ordination, 5092.

Affirmations concerning the administration of the sacrament of orders are condemned, 2651–2657.

K 8e

The sacrament of orders imparts the grace to be a suitable minister of Christ, 1326, 3857; ontological participation in the sacred functions is given in ordination, 4354, 5062, 5063.

A permanent character is imprinted in ordination, 825, 1767, 1774; therefore priests cannot become laymen again, 1767, (1771), 1774; condemned: [The call to the ministry of priests does not amount to a new “priestly” capacity, strictly speaking, nor does it impart any character, but simply gives expression before the community that the original power conferred in the sacrament of baptism has become effective], 4721.

9. The Sacrament of Matrimony

K 9a

a. THE SACRAMENTALITY OF MATRIMONY AND ITS ORIGIN

Matrimony between the faithful is a sacrament, 761, 794, 860, 916, 1310, 1327, 1601, 1800, 1801, 1864, 2536, 2598, 2965, 2973, 2990f., 3142, 3145f., 3700, 3710, 3713f., 3953, (4713–4716); affirmations against the sacramentality of matrimony are condemned, 3451, 3715.

The sacrament of matrimony was instituted by Christ, (1799), 1801, 2965, 2990, 3142, 3700, 3713; like all the sacraments, Christian matrimony is an act of glorification of God in Christ and in the Church, 4715.

K 9b

b. THE CONCEPT OF MATRIMONY

9ba Nature of matrimony, Christian matrimony. Matrimony is, according to its nature, the naturally indivisible union of man and woman, 3142; the institution of matrimony is an interior requirement of the covenant of conjugal love that is publicly affirmed as unique and exclusive, in order to live in complete fidelity to the plan of God, the Creator, 4703.

The reason and purpose of matrimony are, in the broad sense, the mutual love of the spouses in view of mutual help and perfection and, in the narrow sense, the conception and education of offspring, 3707; in virtue of the sacrament of matrimony, the spouses help each other in their conjugal life and in the rearing and education of offspring, 4128.

The dignity of marriage is emphasized against the allegation of its sinfulness, 206, 321, 461–463, 718, 761, 794, 802, (916), 1012.

Christian marriage signifies the mysterious union of Christ and the Church, 1327, 3712, 4128, 4704f.; the matrimonial communion of life and of love is elevated by the insertion of the man and woman into the eternal spousal covenant of Christ with the Church, 4704.

The preeminence of virginity ^ais not diminished because of the sacramental character of matrimony, 802, 1353, 1810, ^a3911f.; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification).

Every person has the right to enter into matrimony: this right cannot be taken away by any human authority, 3702, 3722, 3771, 3962, (4326, 4455); the right to marry and to procreate is (an inalienable) part of human dignity, 4455; cf. L 6a (right to marriage and family).

The conjugal rights of man and woman are equal, (778), 3144.

A valid matrimony between the unbaptized is called true but not ratified (ratum), 769; a valid matrimony between the baptized is called true and ratified, 769.

Cf. C 4fd (orientation of man to love); C 4fe (man as male or female); C 4ga (man destined to social life); C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); L 6b (conjugal love and human sexuality).

The goods of matrimony. Offspring, fidelity, indissolubility, 1327, 3703–3714, 4128.

9bb

Ends of matrimony: ^a*The propagation and the preservation of the human race* by means of ^b*the procreation and education of offspring*, ^c*the physical growth of the Church*, ^d*mutual aid*, ^e*mutual love*, ^f*the quieting of concupiscence*, ^c1311, ^{ac}3143, ^{abc}3705, ^{def}3718, ^b3838, ^{bde}4128; through the children that are born from the matrimonial union, the people of God are perpetuated through the centuries, 4128; there is a distinction between the primary end (that is, ^a*the generation and raising of children*) and secondary ends (^b*which are subordinate to the primary end*), 3718, ^{ab}3838.

9bc

Cf. C 4fd (orientation of man to love); L 6b (conjugal love and human sexuality); L 6c (transmission of human life in marriage).

Characteristics. Matrimony is a perpetual and exclusive bond between the spouses, (3142).

9bd

Unity permits a bond only between two, 778, (1797), 1798, 1802, 2536; it is not permitted ^f*for a man to have simultaneously more than one wife*, (^b*if that was not granted to him through a special revelation*), or ^g*for a woman to have more than one husband*, ^{abc}778f., ^{ac}860, (^a1497), ^a1802; the unity includes conjugal love, mutual interior formation, the submission of the wife to the husband, 3706–3709.

Indissolubility or inviolable stability is proper to Christian marriage, (117), 794, 1797, 1799, 2536, 2705f., 2967, 3142, 3710f., 3724, 3953, 3962, 4705; in the case of a presumed second marriage, the previous marriage must be reestablished after the return of the first spouse, 311–314.

Indissolubility does not belong to all marriages in the same measure, 3711; a valid and consummated marriage cannot be dissolved by any human power, 754f., 3712; concerning the cooperation of Catholic public officials in a civil divorce, 3190–3193; even a simply valid marriage cannot, in itself, be dissolved, 769, 3712; a marriage may nonetheless be dissolved by reason of the intention of one of the spouses to enter into a religious order or by reason of a vow, 754f., 786, 1806.

A (merely) natural and legitimate marriage is likewise indissoluble (^a*so that, as to the bond, it cannot be dissolved by the civil legislator*), but ^b*this indissolubility is open to exception by divine law*, 779, ^b3712, ^a3724; in virtue of the Pauline privilege, a marriage between unbelievers can be dissolved, 768f., 779, 1497, 1983, 1988, 2580–2585, 2817–2820; in the case of the conversion of one of the two spouses, the bond contracted in unbelief is not dissolved by this simple fact; rather there follows from this only the right to be able to contract a new marriage, (777), 2582, 2585; the Pauline privilege cannot be applied –: to a marriage contracted with a non-Christian after the Apostolic See has granted a dispensation on the grounds of disparity of cult, 2584, 2817, 2819; –: in the case of defection from the faith in a marriage between the faithful, 769; ^a*one can be dispensed under certain conditions* from the interrogation of the unbelieving spouse (provided for by canon law), ^a1988, ^a2583, 2818.

A marriage cannot be dissolved on account of ^a*heresy*, ^b*difficulties in cohabitation*, ^c*adultery* of one of the spouses, ^c756, ^{ab}1805, ^c1807, ^c2536; but for these reasons or others one can effect a separation of bed and board or of cohabitation, 1327, 1808, 2536.

Several successive marriages are permitted (second, third, etc.), ^a*but a life in chastity is to be preferred*, 794, 837, 860, 1015, ^a1353.

Cf. L 6b (conjugal love and human sexuality).

C. THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF THE SACRAMENT

K 9c

The form (or efficient cause) of matrimony is the consent of the spouses ^a*relating to the present*, 643, ^a755f., 766, ^a776, ^a1327, ^a1497, 3701.

Matrimonial consent is usually expressed in words; ^a*signs suffice in case of incapacity*, ^a766, 1327.

The marriage contract is inseparable from the sacrament, 2966, (2974), 3145f.; condemned: [The sacrament of matrimony consists merely in the nuptial blessing], 2966.

d. MINISTER AND RECIPIENTS

K 9d

The sacrament of matrimony comes about through the consent of the spouses, 1813, 3701; the pastor or priest functions as witness, 1816, 3385f., 3469–3474.

e. EFFECTS

K 9e

The effect of the sacrament of matrimony is the right to actual grace –: for the fulfillment of the matrimonial duty, 3911; –: for the strengthening of mutual love, 1799, 3142, 3713; –: for the strengthening of the indissoluble unity of marriage, 1327, 1799, 3142, 3713; –: for the sanctification of the spouses, 1799, 3142, 3713; the sacrament of matrimony was not, however, instituted to make the employment of marriage the means for the love of the spouses for God, 3911; the gift of Jesus Christ is not exhausted in the celebration of the sacrament of marriage but, rather, supports the spouses during their entire life, 4713.

The sacrament of matrimony –: is a source of holiness, 4713; –: makes the spouses sharers and witnesses of salvation, 4706; from the sacrament of matrimony there results for the spouses the gift and responsibility of translating into daily living the sanctification bestowed on them, 4716; duties and obligations of the laity have a sacramental foundation in baptism, confirmation, and matrimony, 4858; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family).

K 9f

In the area of marriage of the faithful, canon law extends to all issues, 1812, 2598, 2967–2974, 2990, 3144–3146.

The legislation of the Church concerning the form to be observed: (especially, ^a*clandestine marriages are prohibited*, ^bcivil marriage is prohibited, ^c*the prior announcement of the marriage is prescribed*), ^{ac}817, ^{ac}1813–1816, 2515–2520, ^b2990–2993, ^a3385, ^b3386, 3468–3473; an affirmation concerning engagements is condemned, 2658.

The Church has the right to establish impediments to matrimony, 817, 860, 1803f., 1812, 1814f., 2659f., 2968–2970, (2972, 2974); she has the right to dispense from them, 1803; marriages contracted in unbelief are not subject to any purely ecclesiastical impediment in the case of the conversion of the spouses, 777.

The presence of the pastor at the marriage ceremony is prescribed (^a*except in the case where he cannot be reached within a month*), 1814–1816, ^a3471; the procedure in a mixed marriage, 2590; cf. K 9d (ministers and recipients of the sacrament of matrimony).

Conditions contrary to the nature of the marriage render it null; disgraceful or impossible conditions are considered as not having been added, 827.

Vow of chastity and invalidity of matrimony, 1809.

Matrimonies contracted without the consent of the parents are not in themselves invalid, 1813; clandestine matrimonies are in themselves true and valid, 1813; these are, however, prohibited by ecclesiastical law, 817, 1813–1816, 3385.

Mixed marriages are valid, even if the Tridentine form was not observed, 2518f., 3387; but they are disapproved in the absence of a just cause, 2518, 3386; marriages between apostates are valid unless there is an agreement of dissolubility, 2340; concerning the validity of marriages between heretics, 2515, 2517; marriages of non-Catholics are valid, 3388; their validity does not depend on the form established by the Church, 3474.

10. Sacramentals

K 10a

a. SACRAMENTALS IN GENERAL

The effectiveness of sacramentals is due to the action of the Church united to her Head, 3844.

Neglect of sacramentals under the pretext of contemplation is condemned, 2191.

Deacons as ministers of sacramentals: H 6.

Cf. J 1ei (use of sacraments and sacramentals); J 2bb (renewal of the liturgy).

K 10b

b. INDULGENCES

10ba Nature. Indulgences are a remission of temporal punishment due for sins that, with respect to guilt, have already been erased, 1448; they are granted from the treasury of the merits of Christ and the saints, 1025–1027, 1398, 1406, 1448, 1467; cf. D 7bb (Church as mediatrix of forgiveness).

10bb Origin. The Church, ^a*the pope*, ^b*the bishops (for their respective subjects)* can grant indulgences, ^a819, (868), ^a1025–1027, ^a1059, (1192), ^a1266, ^b1268, ^a1398, ^a1416, ^a1447–1449, 1835, 1867, 2537.

10bc Efficaciousness. Indulgences are applied to living and deceased believers who are living members of Christ, 1266f., 1448; to the living, these are applied by means of absolution, 1448; presupposed are contrition and confession, 1266; to the deceased they are applied by means of suffrage, 1398, 1405–1407, 1448; concerning the efficaciousness of the indulgence of a privileged altar, 2750; affirmations condemned concerning the efficaciousness of indulgences, 1192, 1416, 1468f., 1960; cf. M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church: communion of saints).

10bd Utility. Indulgences are recommended as useful and salutary, 1835, 1867, 2537; indulgences granted indiscriminately and excessively, however, weaken the force of satisfaction through penance, 819, 1835; cf. K 6cd (satisfaction); affirmations concerning the use and utility of indulgences are condemned, 1470–1472, 2057, 2216, 2640–2643.

L. GOD CALLS MAN TO A MORAL LIFE IN COMMUNITY

1. Fundamental Attributes of the Moral Life

a. THE PERSON

For an anthropological foundation, cf. C 4fa (the human person); C 4fb (dignity of man); C4h (man and creation).

God willed man for his own sake; man is a person, 4830; the human person has an exalted dignity; he stands above all things, and his rights and duties are universal and inviolable, 4326; all things on the earth should be related to man as their center and crown, 4312, (4314); the constitutive elements and essential relations of every human person transcend historical contingency, 4580f.; the dignity of man can be promoted only if the essential order of his nature is respected, 4580.

Each individual man is truly a person; his is a nature, that is, endowed with intelligence and free will, (3709), 3957; as a person, man has rights and duties, 3957, (4326); he is the subject of human acts, 4954–4956; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good).

Being a person means striving toward self-realization through the gift of self, 4830.

The human person, of his nature, has need of a social life; he is to be the beginning, the subject, and the goal of all social institutions, 4325; rejection of a purely individualistic ethic, 4330; cf. C 4g and L 5a (man's social nature).

Human rights: L 5g.

b. CONTINGENT FREEDOM THAT IS OBLIGED TO THE GOOD

L 1b

Freedom is a sign of the divine image within man, 4317, 4765; freedom as the essential prerogative of the human person, 4765; man's call to full freedom, (4752), 4815; man's dignity demands that he act according to a knowing and free choice that is personal, 4317; the doctrine of freedom has its roots in divine revelation, 4244.

Freedom confers on man the dignity of having power over his own actions, 3245, 4752; in his heart man discerns his proper destiny beneath the eyes of God, 4314; he is obliged to fulfill the divine commands through free will, 227, 245; only in freedom can man direct himself toward goodness, 4317; freedom, even when it is limited by circumstances, is not completely destroyed, 4754; if there were a fated necessity, the responsibility for human actions as well as the reward and punishment would be nullified, 283; man possesses freedom even in the state of fallen nature: D 2bc (effect of original sin); in and of itself freedom is not sufficient for any good, 725; freedom does not mean the license to do anything, even evil, 4317; it is annihilated when to ensure personal rights it is disengaged from the norms of divine law, 4341; freedom is related to the truth, 4951.

Moral goodness is possible only through a share in the good God, 240; cf. B 1b (God, the one foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); no one may make good use of his free will except through Christ, 242; every stirring of good will is from God, 244; man's freedom can fully achieve its orientation to God only with the help of God's grace, 4317; cf. F 2ab (preparation for justification as a gift of grace); it is not sufficient to aim at a presumed ultimate end, 2290; condemnation of the hypothesis of a philosophical sin, 2291; a supernatural motive of faith, hope, or charity is not necessary for a morally good act, 1925, 1934–1938, 2307–2313, 2444–2459.

Tasks of human freedom: God willed that man remain under the control of his own decisions so that he could seek his Creator spontaneously and come freely to perfection, 4317; man should emancipate himself from all captivity to passions and pursue his goal in a spontaneous choice of what is good, 4317; authentic freedom is the service of justice, 4753.

Man was placed free in society by his Creator, 4321; everyone is entitled to freedom in the earthly city, 4163; equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501.

The gospel and human freedom: C 4fc.

The Church and human freedom: C 4fc.

Threats, abuse, fortifying of freedom: C 4fc.

Before the judgment seat of God, each man must render an account of his own life, whether he has done good or evil, 4317; cf. M 2bb (particular judgment).

Cf. C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4fc (freedom); C 4g (social nature of man); esp. C 4gm liberation and structural change; F 5c (grace of God and freedom of man); L 1f (moral act); L 5 (fundamental attributes of social moral life); esp. L 5g (human rights).

c. THE DICTATES OF REASON AS NATURAL LAW

The principles of the moral order have their origin in human nature itself, 4581; while these principles always remain the same, judgment must also be rendered on particular circumstances that change with the times, 4763.

The natural law is the eternal law that is engraved in the mind of man that orders the good to be done and forbids sin, 3247f., (3272), 3780f., 3956, (4316), (4580), 4953; its existence and knowability are learned (with reference to ^a*the right to ownership and property*, ^b*the need for authority in society*, ^c*the right to a just wage*), 2302, ^b3131, 3132, ^a3133, ^b3150f., 3152, ^b3165, 3170, 3248, ^a3265, ^c3270.

Through the gift of the Holy Spirit man comes by faith to knowledge of the divine plan, 4315; reason's ability to perceive spiritual reality: A 2a (the capacity of human reason for truth).

Men should discover, develop, and realize the values innate in their nature by the light of their intelligence, 4580, 5080; use of human intellectual power for the progress in practical sciences, technology, and liberal arts for the exploration and conquest of the material world, 4315.

The perfection of man's intellectual nature through wisdom, 4315; it attracts the mind of man to the truth and the good and leads it though the visible to the invisible, 4315; divine revelation and the wisdom of natural reason manifest immutable laws inscribed in human nature, 4581; application of man's wisdom to humanizing man's knowledge and solving the problems of mankind, 4315; the laity should take up their tasks enlightened by Christian wisdom, 4343.

The obscuring of the intelligence by sin, 4315; cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin); D 3be (consequences of sin).

Every fundamental right of man derives its validity from natural law, 3970, (4551); the right to life and the rights of the family and of the institution of marriage are fundamental moral values, 4807; the fundamental rights of man that ensue from the natural law: L 5g (human rights); L 6a (right to marriage and family and the rights of the family).

Cf. C 4ee (mind and reason of man); C 4ki (Christian humanism as true humanism).

L 1d

d. THE FOUNDATION OF THE NATURAL LAW IN GOD

God's eternal, objective, and universal law, according to which he orders human society, is the supreme norm of human life; man has been made by God to participate in this law, 4242, 4957; irrespective of historicity, 4960.

The eternal law is the eternal reason of the Creator, 3247, 3973; it is —: the basis for the laws of human reason in regard to good and evil, 3248, 3781, 3973, (4242), (4316); —: the principle of all law, 3249; the immutable principles based upon every human person's constitutive elements and essential relations are contained in the eternal divine law, 4580.

The gospel is the source of all truth and moral teaching, 4207; moral and religious principles are drawn from the heritage of God's Word, 4333; God has held up Christ, the Savior and Sanctifier, in his teaching and example, as the supreme and immutable Law of life, 4580; evangelical morality perfects and elevates a moral dimension that already belongs to human nature, 4759; transgression of certain precepts of the natural law that have absolute and immutable value contradicts the teaching and spirit of the gospel, 4581; cf. L 5h (foundation of social norms in God); the perceptibility of the eternal law: A 2a (the capacity of human reason for truth).

The notion of justice is obscured in naturalism; its place is supplied by material force, 2890; some assertions about an atheistic ethic are condemned: [Moral law needs no divine law as its foundation], 2956–2961, (2962–2964); [The state of the commonwealth is the origin and source of all rights], 2939; [The will of the people is the supreme law], 2890; the opinion is condemned: [The norms of the natural law or precepts of Sacred Scripture are to be regarded only as given expressions of a form of particular culture at a certain moment of history], 4581.

e. CONSCIENCE

- 1ea Nature. Conscience reveals to man the moral order and insists on its observance, 3956; through its call God's will can be known, 4140; it is the most secret core and sanctuary of a man where he is alone with God, 4316; conscience reveals that law which is fulfilled by love of God and neighbor. It is a law that he does not impose upon himself but that holds him to obedience, always summoning him to love good and avoid evil, 4316, (4580); cf. L 1c (dictates of reason as natural law).
The Gospel has a sacred reverence for the dignity of conscience and its freedom of choice, 4341.
Cf. C 4ff (conscience).
- 1eb Formation of the conscience. The faithful should in every temporal affair let themselves be guided by a Christian conscience, 4162; in fidelity to conscience, Christians are joined with the rest of men in the search for truth and for the genuine solution to the moral problems of individuals and society, 4316; the more a right conscience holds sway, the more persons and groups are guided by the objective norms of morality, 4316.
Men, above all the young, must be educated to a higher degree of culture so that they may discharge with greater exactness the obligations of their conscience, 4331; in regard to the mutual rights and duties of the person and of society, it belongs to moral teaching to enlighten consciences, 4551; the purpose of the Church's educational activity is to bring Christians to consider their participation in the political life of the nation as a matter of conscience and as the practice of charity, 4484; education for freedom, 4771; education for a civilization of work and for solidarity, 4776; cf. L 13 (order of culture).

- Judgment. The moral decision must apply the objective law to the particular case, 3918, 4961, 4962; a situation ethics that does not judge in accord with objective laws but in accord with personal intuition is condemned, 3918–3921, 4950. 1ec
- A conscience that errs out of ignorance does not lose its dignity. The same cannot be said for a man who cares little for truth and goodness or for a conscience habituated to sin, 4316.
- Doubt. Cf. C 4kg (man’s search for meaning); D 2bd (experience of division). 1ed
- Rules of prudence for practical procedure (moral systems); absolute tutiorism is condemned, 2303. 1ee
- One can choose freely between the system of probabilism and that of probabiorism, 2175–2177; it is recommended that one follow the authority of Alphonsus Liguori in questions of morality without condemning the views of other authorities, 2725–2727.
- Laxist probabilism is condemned, 2021–2065, 2102–2165.
- Conscience and authority. An authority has no power to bind men in conscience unless it participates in the authority of God, 3980; all human authority is limited by the eternal law, 3248f.; its decrees have no validity if they contravene the law of God or human rights, 3981, 3985; ecclesiastical authority and freedom of conscience, 4963. 1ef
- The legitimacy of authority is defended against these propositions: [The perfect human being is not subject to obedience], 893, 2265; [A nation that rejects a law does not sin], 2048; [The people can at their discretion correct delinquent lords], 1167; a materialistic conception of authority is condemned, 2960; public authority does not lose its right of command because of sin, 1121, 1165, 1230.
- The dignity of the human person must be kept in mind in the exercise of authority, 3980f.
- Cf. C 4gh (authority in society); G 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); H 2a (general specifications regarding the pastoral ministry of bishops); L 2c (virtue of faith); L 2f (union with God); L 8 (order of the State).

f. THE MORAL ACT

- Because of his free will, man is autonomous and can act freely, 3245, 4752; his dignity demands that he act according to a knowing and free choice that is personal, 4317; cf. L 1b (contingent freedom, obliged to the good); L 1ec (judgment of the conscience); weakening of human freedom as a consequence of poverty: C 4ke (the poor).
- One must make a distinction between moral fundamental options and particular decisions, 4964–4967; the nature of the moral act is determined by its relation to the object; conditions, intentions, and consequences have their influence, 4968–4969; there are acts that are evil in themselves, 4970–4971.
- An evil situation that in fact exists may not be dealt with in such a way that an even worse situation results, 4453.
- Ignorance can be invincible and, therefore, excuse from sin, (1485), 1968, 2865^o, 2866; not all ignorance excuses, 729f.
- Consent is required for an actual sin, 780; consequently, little children can commit no actual sins, 223, 780, 1514; condemned: [The act of the will does not belong to the essence of sin], 1946–1949, (1950–1953); [Man sins also in what he does of necessity], 1967.
- Force excuses from sin: applications, (762), 2715, 2758, 3634, 3718.
- Fear does not do away with the freedom of the will and accountability: applications, 1678, 1705, 2070, 2129, 2151, 2573, 3273.
- No action has a twofold goodness: it is good because of the object and the circumstances or because of unity with Christ, 1962.
- The confessor should inquire about the circumstances of sins, 813; the circumstances that change the sin’s nature should be explained in confession, 1681, 1707 (1962).
- The end does not justify the means (^a*in favor of faith*; ^b*for the preservation of the body*), ^b815, ^{ab}1254, ^a1998, ^b3684.
- Propositions against the moral worth and the accountability of external actions are condemned, 733, 739, 966–969, (2234), 2240.

g. MORAL BEHAVIOR

L 1g

- The existence of natural virtue is stressed (against the Jansenists), 1916, 1925, 1936–1938, 1962, 2307–2309, 2444/2467; on the other hand, the disdain of the supernatural virtues in favor of the natural virtues is condemned, 3343–3345; condemnation of statements that disparage the exercise of virtues as imperfection, 896, 2231, 2368.
- God is above all honored by acts of faith, hope, and love, (1923), 2188; the laity are called to make Christ known to others by the testimony of their life in faith, hope, and charity, 4157; cf. L 2 (personal relationship with God).
- The Holy Spirit enriches the people of God with virtues, 4131; individual men and associations must cultivate in themselves the moral and social virtues and promote them in society, so that, with the needed help of divine grace, men who are truly new and artisans of a new humanity can be forthcoming, 4330; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history), F 2cc (infused virtues); F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit); G 3ac (the Church, built by means of charisms).
- The correlative response to the interdependence among individuals and nations is solidarity, as a moral and social attitude, as “virtue”, 4817; cf. L 5e (principle of solidarity).

Man needs living conditions that are worthy of man to arrive at a sense of responsibility, 4331; see C 4ke (the poor: consequences of poverty). The statement that the virtuous character of the doer makes every action good is condemned, 1216.

2. Personal Relationship with God

L 2a

a. WORSHIP OF GOD

Cf. G 4bd and G 6bb (participation of the faithful/laity in the priestly office of Christ); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); J 1e (liturgies and forms of piety).

L 2b

b. REVERENCE FOR GOD

Creation is ordered to the praise and glory of God, 3025, 4162; the works and merits of individuals (of the saints) should be attributed to the glory of God, 243, (675, 1824f.), 3325, 3743; man should rule over and make use of the worldly creation for the glory of God, 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, 4812; he should relate himself and the totality of things to God, 4334; under the supreme direction of religious values all things are harmonized unto God's glory, 4343; condemned: [The glory of God is manifested equally in good or evil works, even in blasphemy], 954–956.

Tempting God. Condemnation of ordeals (with hot iron, boiling water, etc.), 670, 695, 799, 1114; dueling: L 4d (body and corporal welfare of the neighbor).

Simony occurs through payment or acceptance of money, 304, 473, 586, 692, 707, 751, 820; condemnation of simony ^a*in ordinations*, ^b*ecclesiastical promotions*, in the conferral of ^c*baptism*, ^d*confirmation*, ^e*burials*, ^f*sacramentals*, and in the ^g*admission of a monk into a cloister*, ^{ab}304, ^a473, ^a586, ^a691–694, ^a701f., ^a705, ^{ab}707, ^{cde}708, ^{ab}710, ^{bdf}715, ^e751, ^{ab}820; simoniacal ordinations: K 8d (minister of the sacrament of orders).

Simony is considered –: the selling of grace that is not for sale, 304; –: the selling of the gift of the Holy Spirit, 473, 586; condemnation of assertions that err –: through exaggeration, 1175, (1178); –: through understatement, 2145f.

Religious vows cannot be revoked without sin, 321f.; condemned: [A vow is an obstacle to perfection], 2203.

An oath is permitted (^oto give testimony before a judge), ^a648, 795, 1252, ^a1253; perjury, even in favor of faith, is always a mortal sin, 1254; condemnation of assertions that deny the permissibility of an oath or unreasonably limit it, 913, 1193, (1252), 2675; assertions that err through exaggeration: [No other testimony prevails against an oath of innocence], 1110; [It is permissible to violate an oath for love of country], 2964; laxist assertions, 2030, 2124–2126, 2128.

Cf. C 1gc (man's cooperation with God's work); C 1h (God is the goal of the world); C 4ib (the meaning and goal of human activity); C 4j (vocation of man); man's activity and God's grace: F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5c (grace of God and freedom of man).

L2c

c. THE VIRTUE OF FAITH

Faith is a supernatural virtue by which revelation is believed because of the authority of God himself who reveals them, 3008, 3542; faith is a free consent that follows grace ^a*and is not necessarily caused by proofs*, ^a3010, ^a3035, 4205; faith is not a blind assent, 3010, 3542; it demands development and growth, 4823; faith as eschatological interpretation of existence, 4492; cf. A 2b (faith as response to God's revelation); F 2ab (the preparation for justification and the beginning of faith as gifts of grace); F 2cc (infused virtues: faith).

Necessity of faith. Catholic faith is necessary for salvation, 75f., 485; if a judgment has been given about a truth of faith, man is obliged to it, (2780), 2915; man is obliged to give full obedience of intellect and will to revelation, 3008; obedience of faith is to be given to the God who reveals, 4205; Christ emphasized the necessity of faith, 4136; in the Church, men learn the meaning of their life through faith, 4168; the necessity of faith in an adult candidate for baptism, 2836; condemnation of: [Even a less probable opinion excuses an infidel from the obligation to believe], 2104; condemnation of indifferentism or a tolerance that denies the obligation to believe, 2720, 2730f., 2785, 2865–2867, 2915–2918.

A faithful member of the Catholic Church can never have a reason to change the faith or to call it into question, 3014, 3036; condemnation of positive doubt as a theological method, 2738.

Condemnation of laxist assertions: with regard to the obligation to make an act of faith, 2021, 2116, 2165; with regard to the strength of the assent of faith, 2119–2121.

The vision of the divine essence does away with acts of faith inasmuch as faith is a theological virtue, 1001.

Truths of the faith. All those things are to be believed with divine and Catholic faith that are contained in the word of God, written or handed down, and that by the Church, either in solemn judgment or through her ordinary and universal teaching office, are proposed for belief as having been divinely revealed, (1870), 3011, 4536; cf. G. 4bg (the faithful and the authority of the Church); H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions).

Components of the faith necessary for salvation —: God's existence, some of his attributes (God as rewarder and expiator), the person of Christ, 2381; —: the divine Trinity, 75, 177, 2164, 2380; —: the Incarnation of the Word, 76, 2164, 2380; condemnation of laxist assertions in this area, 2122*f.*, 2164.

Supernatural understanding of the faith of believers: H 3db (infallibility of the Church): it is not licit to make a distinction between articles that are fundamental and those that are not fundamental, so that the latter are left to the free assent of the faithful, 3683; condemnation (in a similar sense) of a choice of themes in ecclesiastical conferences, 2676–2678.

Profession of faith. It is a fundamental right to profess one's faith privately and publicly, 3961; concealment of faith can be a sin when it leads to an implicit denial of the faith or to a scandal for one's neighbor, 2118; the laity are proclaimers of the faith when they join to their profession of faith a life springing from faith, 4161; faith must prove its fruitfulness in the life of the believers; through their witness God's presence is revealed, 4321.

Preserving the faith. Purely negative infidelity is not a sin, 1968.

It is forbidden to belong —: to secret societies (Freemasons), 2511*f.*, 2783, 2894, 3156–3160, (3278*f.*); —: to Bible societies, 2771, 2784; —: to theosophical circles, 3648; —: to the Communist Party, 2786, 3865, 3930, (3939).

One must make a distinction between —: an error and the person who falls into error (because of the dignity of the person), 3996, (4316), 4328; initiatives in the social and cultural domain and the philosophical errors that occur in them, 3997.

d. THE VIRTUE OF HOPE

Hope is a theological virtue that disappears with the vision of God, 1001; its nature, forms of fulfillment, 5111–5115; cf. F 2cc (infused virtues).

Linked with the paschal mystery and patterned on the dying Christ, the Christian will hasten forward to resurrection full of hope, 4322, 5112; the laity should not hide their hope for future glory in their hearts but express it also in the program of their secular life, 4161; eschatological hope undergirds the fulfillment of earthly tasks with fresh incentives, 4321, 4334, 4339, (4343); without hope in eternal life, man's dignity is lacerated, the riddles of life and death, of guilt and of grief, go unsolved, 4321; Christian hope and modern culture, 5113; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity); C 4ij (Christians and human activity); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world); M 1b (eschatological character of the pilgrim Church).

Condemnation of a laxist assertion with regard to the obligation to make an act of hope, 2021.

In his intimate life, God is the essential love shared by the three Divine Persons, 4780, 5101; the kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of love and of peace, 4162, (4339, 4481); the Holy Spirit is, as the Spirit of the Father and of the Son, the personal love of God, (3326, 3331), 4780; cf. B 1b (God, the one foundation of life, of truth, of goodness); B 3c (conceptual formulation of the divinity of the Holy Spirit); E 3bd (kingship of Christ); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

Love of God and neighbor is —: the first and the greatest commandment, 4324; —: the soul of the entire apostolate, 4159, (4328); —: the fulfillment of the law that man discovers in his conscience, 4316; —: the foundation of true progress, 4815; the love of God cannot be separated from love of neighbor, (4199), 4324.

Christ's teaching extends the law of love to all enemies, 4328, (4773); Christ sent the Holy Spirit upon all men that he might move them to love God with their whole heart and that they might love each other, 4166; cf. B 3bf (the Holy Spirit in the life of the faithful); love as ^a*command of the New Law* and ^b*fullness of the law*, ^a4328, ^b4332; the evangelical order is an order of charity, 4579; mercy as the fundamental content of the messianic message of Christ and the power of his mission, 4680; mercy in its true aspect restores to value, promotes, and draws good from all the forms of evil existing in the world and in man, 4680.

All the faithful are called to the perfection of love, 4166, 5103; they should love as Christ loves, 4123, 4166, 4631*f.*; love is the basic law of human perfection and of the world's transformation, 4338; the vocation of the human person to love is realized in matrimony and virginity, 4700; divine love must be pursued chiefly in the ordinary circumstances of life, 4338.

Condemnation of errors concerning God's perfect love and the renunciation of self (^aalso applied to sins committed), ^a964*f.*, 975, 2351–2373.

Condemned: [God can command hatred of God], 1049.

Condemnation of laxist assertions concerning the obligation to make acts of love of God, 2021, 2105–2107.

Cf. C 4fd (orientation of man to love); C4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love); C 4jf (vocation of man to the gift of self); F 2cc (infused virtues); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); L 2f (union with God); L 3a and L 4a (the love of self and of neighbor as fundamental obligations); L 5e (principle of solidarity).

- All the faithful are --: called to holiness, 4122, 4129, 4158, 4162, 4165f.; called to the fullness of the Christian life and to the perfection of charity, 4166; to reach perfection the faithful should obey the will of the Father in all things and devote themselves with all their being to the glory of God and the service of their neighbor, 4166; they must hold on to and complete in their lives the holiness they received in baptism, 4166; they should love as Christ loves, 4123, 4166, 4613f.; Christ is the divine teacher and the model for all perfection, 4166; cf. E 3bb (the prophetic office of Christ and Christ as teacher); in the lives of the saints is shown a path to perfect union with Christ or to holiness, 4170; cf. C 4d (God wills the salvation of man and grants him communion); G 4ba (vocation of the faithful to holiness); M 1b (communion of saints).
- Cooperation with divine grace. Cf. C 1gc (man's cooperation with God's work); F 3d (justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); F 5c (grace of God and freedom of man); condemnation of assertions that call into question the value and necessity of human activity [for example: God wills to work in us without us; man must reduce his powers to nothingness; all progress in virtue is to be attributed only to divine action], 2201//2255, 3817, 3846; condemned: [Man can become so perfect that he can advance no farther in grace], 891.
- The effect or fruit of the life of perfection. Cf. F 2c (indwelling and gracious working of God in the justified); condemnation of the exaggerated assertions: [Man can attain complete freedom from passion and desires, the death of the senses, an imperturbable peace], 892, 2254–2256, 2262f.; [Man can even achieve freedom from all venial sin and even become ^asinless], ^a891, 2256–2261.
- Even contemplatives must resist temptations, 2192, 2217–2224, 2237, 2241–2253; cf. F 3b (justified man remains in danger); a carnal act is a sin for a perfect person also, 897, 2248, (2241–2253).
- In relation to the union with God that can be achieved on earth the exaggerated statements are condemned: [^aMan is completely transformed into God, ^bhe becomes like to God, ^che has the same boundless beatitude as God, ^dGod begets man], ^a960, ^c961f., ^c963, ^{bd}970–972.
- Christian obedience in regard to the commandments of God and the Church. Contemplatives are also subject to it, 893, 2189f.; they should not neglect the prescribed acts of reverence in regard to the Eucharist, 898; cf. F 3c (justified man remains obliged to observe the commandments); all are obliged to abide by and be in conformity with revelation, 4150; all the Christian faithful should promptly accept in Christian obedience decisions of their spiritual shepherds in the Church, 4149, 4152, 4163; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 4bg (recognition of the authority of the Church); H 2e (people of God and the pastoral ministry of the bishops); H 3e (acceptance of doctrinal decisions).
- Exercise of the virtues is important as well for those who are striving for perfection, 896, 2188, 2231, 2368; external acts also have their value for the life of perfection, 966–969.
- Prayer. Cf. J 1ee (prayer to God): the nature of and misconceptions about Christian prayer, 4860–4862; the spiritual life is not limited to participation in the liturgy but also includes private prayer and devotions, 4012f., 4017; the faithful must daily pray for forgiveness of their faults, 4166; prayer has the ability to make satisfaction for sins, 1713; cf. K 6cd (satisfaction); legitimacy and excellence of contemplative prayer, 2182, 2185, 2188; its object, however, is not only the presence of God, 2185–2187; the legitimacy of meditative prayer and its value for the life of perfection, 2181–2185; still, it is not necessary for salvation, 2192; the legitimacy of discursive prayer is defended against disparagement, 2218–2223, 2225, 2229, 2232, 2264, 2365–2368; the prayer of intercession is important even for one who is perfect, 957–959, 2214; condemnation of assertions that condemn all sensible devotion, (2218), 2227//2235, 2263.
- Gift of self. Man can find perfection only through the gift of himself to God ^aand other men, 4319, ^a4324, ^a4331; he cannot live fully according to truth unless he freely acknowledges the love of God that preserves him and devotes himself to his Creator, 4318; being a person means striving toward self-realization through a gift of self, 4830; self-giving as the path of following Jesus with a love that embraces all men, (4338), 4613; the Christian must always bear in his body the dying of Jesus, 4012; self-denial and a holy life as victory over the reign of sin and participation in the kingdom of Christ, 4162; acquisition of the kingdom and of salvation through a life lived according to the gospel, abnegation, the cross, the spirit of the beatitudes, total renewal, and radical conversion, 4572; cf. C 4jf (man's vocation to self-giving).
- Works of penance and mortification. They are of value even for the perfect, 2238–2240; cf. L 3c (obligations and rights with regard to the body and corporal welfare).
- The laity attain a holier life in their daily occupations, 4162; they must strive to acquire a more profound grasp of revealed truth and insistently beg of God the gift of wisdom, 4161; cf. G 4ba (vocation to holiness); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6b (participation of the laity in the prophetic, priestly, and kingly office of Christ).
- Marriage and family as model of sanctification of life: G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 6 (order of marriage and family); the human person's vocation to love is fulfilled in marriage and virginity, 4700.
- Evangelical counsels or religious vows. The holiness of the Church is manifested in their practice, 4165; they represent exclusive dedication to God, 4836; their perfect incarnation is Jesus Christ, 4836; their practice takes place at the impulse of the Holy Spirit, 4165; those who follow them bear witness to a desire for the kingdom of God and keep it alive among the human family, 4338; cf. G 4bb (ways of sanctification; the evangelical counsels).

Religious state: G 4bb (ways of sanctification: nature and goal of religious life).

Virginity and celibacy. Virginity and celibacy surpass matrimony, 1810, 3911f.; the mutual help of the spouses is not a more perfect means to holiness than virginity, 3912; matrimony and virginity are, each in its own proper form, an actuation of the most profound truth of man and the realization of his vocation to love, 4700; cf. G 4bb (ways of holiness: virginity and celibacy); K 9ba (nature of matrimony, Christian matrimony).

Cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); G 4b (vocation and mission of the community of the faithful).

3. Relation with Self

a. SELF-LOVE AS A FUNDAMENTAL OBLIGATION

L 3a

Cf. C 4j (vocation of man); L 2e (virtue of love); L 3c (relation with self: body and corporal welfare).

In his acknowledgment of God as his beginning and goal, man finds his whole relationship toward himself, 4313; as a person he is willed by God for his own sake, 4830.

Condemnation of exaggerated assertions above all concerning the necessity of renunciation of self-love, of spiritual goods, and of eternal salvation, 957–959, 2201–2217, 2224f., 2232//2253, 2351//2373, 2433.

b. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO THE MIND AND HEART OF MAN

Truth. The right and obligation exist to seek the truth, 3959, 3970; all men, as persons, are obliged to the search for the truth, above all religious truth, 4241; man has a right to appropriate information, 4326.

Personal freedom. The universal rights that arise from the dignity of the human person are inviolable and inalienable, 3957, 4326; psychic constraint, subhuman living conditions, arbitrary imprisonment, deportation, slavery, prostitution, the selling of women and children, and undignified work conditions violate the integrity of the human person, 4327; cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); L 5g (human rights).

Personal honor and reputation. Man has a right to a good reputation and respect, 4326; it is condemnable to defend one's personal honor —: by a duel, 2022; —: by killing a calumniator, 2037f.; by false accusation, 2143f.; —: by ambiguity, 2127; —: by abortion, 2134; cf. L 4d (body and corporal welfare of the neighbor).

Condemnation of assertions that consider the renunciation, by the soul, of spiritual goods (namely, interested love, virtues, personal perfection, personal beatitude) as necessary for perfection, (896), 957–959, 2207, 2212, 2351//2372.

Obligation to good works, 1538f., 1545f., 1548.

Obligation to avoid the near occasion of sin: condemned assertions, 2061, 2162f.

c. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO THE BODY AND CORPORAL WELFARE

L 3c

Man is obliged to regard his body as good and honorable since God has created it and will raise it up on the last day, 4314; his dignity postulates that man glorify God in his body and forbid it to serve evil inclinations, 4314.

God has endowed man with the right to life and bodily integrity (including ^a*the necessary means to a honorable conduct of life*, ^b*social help in times of need*), 3771, ^b3774, ^{ab}3958, ^a3970f.; the first right of the human person is the right to life, 4552, 4791; physical life is a fundamental good because upon it all the other values of the person are based and developed, 4791.

Self-preservation is a law of nature itself, 3268, 3270, 3970; it is forbidden by virtue of divine law to cast one's life away rashly, 3272; willful self-destruction is opposed to life, 4327; dueling: L 4d (body and corporal welfare of the neighbor).

Individuals have no other power over the members of their bodies than that which pertains to their natural ends, 3723; man is not free to destroy or mutilate his members except for the good of his whole body (application of the principle of totality), 128a, 3723, 3760, 3763; deliberate castration of self is forbidden, 128a, 762.

Sexual integrity: Masturbation (^aeven for medical ends) is condemned, 687f., ^a3684; the tradition of the Magisterium of the Church and the moral sense of the faithful have declared without hesitation that masturbation is an intrinsically and seriously disordered act, 4584; condemnation of assertions that call in question the sinfulness of certain carnal acts, 897, 1367, 2044f., 2149, 2241, 2247; obscene books are forbidden, 1857; on human sexuality, cf. L 6b.

Works of penitence and mortification: Assertions that belittle their value are condemned, 2238–2240, (3344); fasting has value as satisfaction for sins committed, 1713; the Latin Church's practice of fasting should not be condemned, 1080; even the perfect should not neglect fasting, 892.

Cf. C 4ec (the body of man); C 4fb (dignity of man); L 4d (relation to neighbor: body and corporal welfare); L 5g (human rights).

L 3d d. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO WORK AND MATERIAL GOODS

Duty to work for a livelihood, 3268–3271; work, not capital or land, is the most important source of prosperity, 4900; inactivity is culpable, 4851; man has a right to work, nourishment, clothing, and shelter, 4326; he should increase his talents for the service of God and the good of mankind, 4341; rights that concern the opportunity to work and for education, 3942, 3963; the work of mothers and children because of the father's insufficient pay is an abuse, 3735, 3960, 3963.

The use of things must be governed by a moral judgment, 4811.

Not all begging by religious orders is to be condemned, 1174, (1491).

Cf. C 4h (man and creation); C 4i (activity of man); L 4e (relation to neighbor: work and material goods); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world); L 10 (order of work).

4. Relation to Neighbor

L 4a a. THE LOVE OF NEIGHBOR AS A FUNDAMENTAL OBLIGATION

Emphasis is placed on the obligation to love the neighbor with an internal and formal act, 2110f.; the supreme commandment of love leads to the full recognition of the dignity of each individual, created in God's image, 4765; participation of Christians in political life is a practice of charity, 4484; respect and love ought to be extended also to those who think or act differently than we do in social, political, or religious matters, 4328; connection between the love of God and the love of neighbor: L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God).

Sins against charity: condemnation of laxist assertions about ^a*rejoicing at the harm suffered by another*, ^b*desiring a harm for another*, ^c*sorrow at the prosperity of another*, ^{abc}2113, ^b2114, ^a2115.

L 4b b. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO THE NEIGHBOR AS A PERSON CREATED BY GOD

Man discovers his proper relationship with others by acknowledging God as his beginning and end, 4313; condemnation of modern society's tendency to extinguish innocent life, 4990–4998; the supreme commandment of love leads to the full recognition of the dignity of each individual, created in God's image, 4765; everyone must consider his every neighbor as another self, taking into account his life and the means necessary to living it with dignity, 4327.

There is a serious obligation to help others to overcome their inferiority in knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and wealth, 3988; obligation to supply artificial nutrition, 5110.

A false and unsound way of preaching can be scandalous for the neighbor, 1405, 1820.

Aiding and abetting evil –: in contraception, 2715, 2758, 3634, 3917a; –: by Catholic magistrates in civil divorce, 3190–3193; –: in a duel, 3162; –: by assisting a master in a sin, 2151; –: in a cremation, 3278f.; –: by voting for Communists, 3865, 3930.

Cf. c 4fa and L 1a (person); C4fb (human dignity); C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); L 2f (union with God); L 4a (love of neighbor); L 4c (mind and heart of the neighbor); L 4d (body and corporal welfare of the neighbor); L 5g (human rights).

L 4c c. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO THE MIND AND HEART OF THE NEIGHBOR

Truth and truthfulness. Man is entitled to the fundamental right to his good name, to investigate the truth, to freedom of opinion, artistic freedom, and freedom of information, 3959, 4326.

Condemnation of laxist assertions that –: excuse lies and ambiguity, (2124), 2125–2128; –: compromise judicial reasoning, 1112, 2046, 2102; –: trivialize calumny and false accusation, 2143f.

Condemnation of the simulation of ^a*Mass*; ^b*sacraments*; ^c*baptism*, ^a789, ^b2129, ^c2560f.

Trustworthiness. Condemnation of a laxist assertion concerning the necessary trustworthiness of a promise, 2030.

Personal freedom: Cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); L 3b (mind and heart of man); L 5g (human rights); respect and love should be extended to those who think or act differently in social, political, or religious matters, 4328.

There is a serious obligation to help others overcome inferiority in knowledge, virtue, and intelligence, 3988.

Condemnation of assertions that detract from the reputation of another, 2143f.

Secret confession and the obligation for secret confession: K 6cc (confession of sins).

Exposition of the principles of religious education, 3685–3690; education for a higher degree of culture, 4331; cf. L 1eb (formation of conscience); L 13 (order of culture); an explanation of the sense in which sexual education deserves condemnation, 3697f.

Cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); L 3b (relation with self: mind and heart); L 5g (human rights).

d. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO THE BODY AND CORPORAL WELFARE OF THE NEIGHBOR

L 4d

Life. The first right of the human person is the right to life, 4552; it is –: a requirement of the inviolability of the person, 4791; –: a fundamental moral good, 4807; physical life is a fundamental good because upon it all the other values of the person are based and developed, 4791; from the moment of conception, or from the moment the zygote has formed, the life of every human being is to be respected in an absolute way, 4792f., (4807); no one can, in any circumstance, claim for himself the right to destroy directly an innocent human being, 4792; it does not belong to society or to public authority to recognize the right to life for some and not for others, 4552; murder, genocide, abortion, and euthanasia are opposed to life, 4327, 4990–4998; in virtue of divine and natural law, except for self-defense, it is forbidden to kill or wound anyone without a public process, 3272; capital punishment by the secular power is permissible as long as it is based, not on hatred, but on judicial judgment and proceeds with prudence, 795; military service can be blameless, 321; one may make war against infidels (Turks), 1484; the killing of the innocent by order of the public authority is condemned, 3790.

Human sexuality: L 6b.

Condemnation of assertions that see no guilt in the killing –: of a calumniator and unjust judge, 2037f., 3130; –: of a tyrant, 1235; –: of a thief who has stolen only one piece of gold, 2131; –: of someone who contests rightful ownership, 2132f.; –: of a woman caught in adultery, 2039.

The killing of a fetus (abortion) is condemned (^aas murder), ^a670, 2134f., 3258, 3298, 3337, 3358, 3719–3721, 4327, 4476; even for therapeutic reasons, 4476; likewise, the destruction of embryos, 4790–4807, 5116–5120; on the problem of procured abortion and legislation that permits it, cf. 4550, 4991–4992; the different ways of removing the fetus are distinguished: ^ahastening the birth, ^babortion, ^cCaesarean section, ^dlaparotomy, ^ecraniotomy, ^e3258, ^b3298, ^a3336, ^bc3337, ^d3338.

Euthanasia involves violation of the divine law, an offense against the dignity of the human person, a crime against life, and an attack on humanity, 4661, 4993–4996; opposing opinions, 4662; on the use of extraordinary means, cf. 4663; on their interruption, 4664; making do with normal means of healing, 4665; refusing forms of treatment that would only secure a precarious and burdensome prolongation of life, 4666.

Condemnation of dueling and the so-called ^a“Bestimmungs-Mensuren” [= duels of inauguration], 799, 1111, 1113f., 1830, 2022, 2571–2575, 3272f., ^a3672; dueling is ^aa temptation of God, ^ba rash casting aside of one’s own life, ^cas private vengeance, a perversion of justice, ^a799, ^bc3272f.; a physician or confessor is not permitted to assist at a duel, 3162.

Integrity of the body. Civil authority has no direct power over the members of their subjects, (3272), 3722, 3760–3765; mutilation and torture violate the integrity of the human person, 4327; the problem of the permissibility of –: castration and mutilation, 128a, 762; –: sterilization, 3722, 3760–3765, 3788; sterilization for reasons of health, 3760; direct sterilization of a man or of a woman is condemned, (3722f.), 4476, 4560; every sterilization is absolutely forbidden even if done for the common good, 4560; measures dictated by public authority in favor of contraception, sterilization, and abortion must be rejected, 4711; to make economic help conditional upon programs of contraception, sterilization, and abortion is immoral, 4711; obligation to supply artificial nutrition, 5110.

Alms: L 4e (obligations with regard to materials goods).

Care for the bodies of the dead. Cremation is forbidden (^awith justification), 3188, 3195f., 3276–3279, ^a3680; under certain circumstances it is permitted, 3680, 4400; the cremation of the body does not prevent the omnipotence of God from restoring the body, 4400; cf. M 3a (resurrection of the dead); the permissibility of cooperating with cremations, 3278f.; the bodies of embryos or fetuses should receive the same respect as the remains of other dead persons, 4796.

Profanation of cemeteries and exhumation of already buried bodies with the intent to steal are condemned, 773.

Cf. C 4ec (body of man); C 4fb (dignity of man); L 3c (relation to self: body and corporal welfare).

e. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO WORK AND MATERIAL GOODS

L 4e

Created goods may be perfected by human labor, technical skill, and civic culture for the benefit of all men according to the design of the Creator, 4162; man’s activity should harmonize with the good of the human race and allow men as individuals and as members of society to fulfill their vocation, 4335; created things and societies enjoy their own laws and values, which man must decipher, use, and regulate, 4336; the use of things must be guided by a moral understanding, 4811; the dangers of today’s pursuit of well-being, 4904; ecological responsibility, 4905–4906.

The right to work, to food, clothing, and shelter, 4326.

Christians should exercise all their activities so that they gather their domestic, professional, social, and technical enterprises into a synthesis with religious values, 4343; a Christian who neglects his temporal duties neglects his duties toward his neighbor and God, 4343.

There is a serious obligation to help others overcome their inferiority in relation to external goods, 3988.

Alms are recommended as a good work (^asatisfaction for sins committed, ^bintercession for the dead), ^b797, ^a1713, ^b856, ^b1304, ^b1405; cf. K 6cd (satisfaction); the way of life of the mendicant orders is justified, 844, 1170, 1174, 1184, 1491.

The obligation to give alms is a duty, not of justice (save in extreme cases), but of Christian charity, 3267; the rich are obliged to give alms from their resources, 2112, 3729.

Cf. C 4h (man and creation); C 4i (human activity); L 3d (relation to self: work and material goods); L 5c (common good); L 10 (order of work); L 11 (order of property).

L 4f f. OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS WITH REGARD TO RESPONSIBLE DEALINGS WITH THE WORLD

All things on earth should be related to man as the center and crown of creation, 4312, (4314); the order of things is to be subordinated to the order of persons, 4326, (4694).

God created (material) goods for the benefit of all. All are entitled to use them, 3267, 3942, 3951, (4448); they must benefit all, 4448; each man has the right to receive from the earth what is necessary for him, 4448.

Man should subdue and use earthly creatures for the glory of God ("and watch over them), 4312, 4334, (4337), 4448, ^a4812; new goods and resources are to be considered as a gift from God and a response to the human vocation, 4812; ecological responsibility, 4905, 4906; modern belief in progress compared with Christian hope, 5113.

The use of things must be guided by a moral understanding, 4811; possession and use of things are to be subordinated to man's divine likeness and his vocation, 4812; man discovers his proper relationship with others by acknowledging God as his beginning and end, 4313; in gratitude to the Creator and through the use of created things in poverty and freedom, man is led to a true possession of the world, 4337.

Redeemed by Christ and made a new creature in the Holy Spirit, man is able to love the things themselves created by God and ought to do so, 4337; respect for the things of visible nature, the cosmos, 4816.

Created things enjoy their own laws and values that man must decipher, put to use, and regulate, 4336; cf. C 4hb (autonomy of earthly things).

What men do to obtain greater justice, wider brotherhood, a more humane disposition of social relationships has greater worth than technical advances, 4335; cf. C 4ie (progress); L 7 (order of society).

The expectation of a new earth must not weaken but rather stimulate our concern for cultivating this one, 4339; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity); M 1b (eschatological faith and earthly realities).

Cf. C (God creates and blesses the world), esp. C 3 (visible world); C 4h (man and creation); C 4i (activity of man).

5. Fundamental Attributes of the Social Moral Life

L 5a a. MAN'S SOCIAL NATURE

According to his nature man lives in society ^a*in accordance with God's disposition*, ^b*not just of his own free will* or ^c*because of free consent among men*, ^{abc}3151, ^a3165, (3168), ^a3170–3173, 3743, 3971, ^a3973, ^a3979f., 4312, 4325.

Man fulfills his vocation through his dealings with others, through reciprocal duties, and through fraternal dialogue, 4312, 4325; unless he relates to others he can neither live nor develop his potential, 4312; God created man, not for life in isolation, but for the formation of social unity, 4332; the Creator —: made him an intelligent and free member of society, 4321; —: has written the laws of social life into man's moral and spiritual nature, 4323; the measure of humanity: the relationship to suffering and to the sufferer, 5114.

External goods and the gifts of the mind have been bestowed on man, on the one hand, for his own personal perfection and, on the other hand, for the advantage of others, 3267, 3952; there is a serious obligation to help others overcome inferiority in knowledge, virtue, intelligence, and external goods, 3988.

Persons are the active and responsible subjects of social life, 4765; social exigencies should be reckoned among the principal duties of the men of today, 4330.

Rejection of a purely individualistic ethic, 4330.

Cf. C 4g (man's social nature), especially C 4ga (man destined to social life).

L 5b b. SOCIETY AND ITS RESPONSIBILITY

The social order and its development must invariably work to the benefit of the human person, since the order of things must be subordinate to the order of persons, and not contrariwise, 4326, (4446f., 4457, 4580, 4812, 4815); justice and charity—difference between the State and ecclesiastical order, 5104; all progress must be kept within the limits imposed by the immutable principles based upon every human person's constitutive elements and essential relations, 4580; the means of social actions must be in conformity with human dignity, 4771; everything necessary for a truly human way of life must be made available to man, 3165, 4326; against a conception of relativistic pluralism in democracy, 5093.

The social order should constantly grow in truth, justice, and love; in freedom, it must constantly find a more humane balance, 4326; the measure of humanity: the relationship to suffering and to the sufferer, 5114.
 Above all, the so-called human rights are among those rights that precede human society; it must preserve and enforce these rights, 4551; cf. L 1c (dictates of reason as natural law); every type of social or cultural discrimination must be overcome, 4329.
 The Church offers by her social doctrine a set of principles for reflection, criteria for judgment, and directives for action, 4764; cf. C 4la (social doctrine of the Church).
 Cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good); C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love); C 4ge (goal of civil society); C 4gf (nature of civil society); C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); C 4ie (progress); C 4kc (contemporary changes); L 1a (person); L 5e and L 5f (principles of solidarity and subsidiarity); L 5g (human rights); L 7 (order of society); L 9 (order of the human family).

c. THE COMMON GOOD

The common good includes the sum of those conditions of social life that allow social groups and their individual members relatively thorough and ready access to their own fulfillment, 4326; it consists in safeguarding the rights of the human person, 3983, 3985; it is at the service of persons, 4771.
 Each person should contribute to the common good according to his own abilities and the needs of others, 4330.
 Because of increasing international interdependence, the common good more and more includes rights and duties that concern the whole human race, 4326, 4330; groups must take account of the needs and aspirations of other groups and the general welfare of the entire human family, 4326; the created goods must be for the benefit of all, 4448.
 Economic common good: the obligation to consider the common good follows from the social character of ownership, 3728; concern must be given to all the members of society, although in different ways, 3984; this concern must be extended ("beyond one's own people) to the entire world, 3732, 3940, 3956, *3983, *3989, 3992–3994, 4326, 4330; special cases when consideration of the common good is urgent, 3737, 3772, 3938, 3946, 3951, 3983, 3988, 3992.
 Cf. C 4ge (goal of civil society); C 4gd (common good); C 4gh (authority in society); C 4gi and L 5d (institutions); C 4gj (universal community of peoples and international institutions); L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 7–9 (order of society, state, and the human family); L 11 (order of property).

d. INSTITUTIONS AND THEIR ROOTEDNESS IN THE NATURE OF MAN

The beginning, subject, and end of all social institutions is and must be the human person ("in the fight against any kind of social or political slavery and in safeguarding the basic rights of man), 4325, 4326, 4329; institutions and laws that are in conformity with the natural law and ordered to the common good guarantee people's freedom and its promotion, 4769, 5093.
 Formation of institutions. Support by individuals of public and private institutions dedicated to bettering the conditions of human life, 4330; if citizens are to feel inclined to take part in the various groups of society, they must find values in these groups, 4331; these values should dispose them to serve others, 4331; it is only for cultural and religious groupings, without prejudice to the freedom of their members, to develop in the social body those ultimate convictions on the nature, origin, and end of man and society, 4503.
 Cf. C 4gi (institutions of society); G 7ab (Church and society); L 5a (man's social nature).

e. THE PRINCIPLE OF SOLIDARITY AS A BASIC LAW OF SOCIETY

The principle of solidarity is linked to man's dignity as a foundation, 4766; along with the principle of subsidiarity, it is itself the basis of criteria for making judgments on social situations, structures, and systems, 4767; its necessity for society and the State, 4913.
 The principal laws of social life are justice and love, 3941, 3973, (3978), (4326); solidarity is the firm and persevering determination to commit oneself to the common good, 4817; justice alone is not enough if love is not allowed to shape human life in its various dimensions, 4684.
 Human and supernatural brotherhood are manifested in the obligation to solidarity, social justice, and universal charity, 4459; peace is the fruit of love and the expression of true fraternity, 4488; solidarity is the path to peace and at the same time to development, 4818.
 The duty of justice and love is better fulfilled –: when each person contributes to the common good according to his own abilities and the needs of others, 4330, (4766), (4818); –: when the members of each society recognize one another as persons, 4818.
 Solidarity, as a moral and social attitude, as a virtue, is the correlative response to interdependence, 4817; interdependence is accepted as a determining system of relationships and as a moral category in the contemporary world (in the economy, culture, science, politics, religion), 4817; the obligation to solidarity is valid even among nations, 4461; the glorification of one's own country and of one's own race is opposed to the solidarity of all men, 4466.

The Church's doctrine is opposed to all forms of social or political individualism, 4766.

On social justice as an economic principle, cf. L 7 (order of society); L 11 (order of property).

Cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love among people); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4kf (man's pursuit of justice); C 4la (social doctrine of the Church); L 2e (virtue of love); L 5c (common good); L 5f (principle of subsidiarity); L 7 (order of society); L 9 (order of the human family).

f. THE PRINCIPLE OF SUBSIDIARITY AS BASIC LAW OF SOCIETY

The principle of subsidiarity is linked with the dignity of man as its foundation; 4766; along with the principle of solidarity, it is itself the basis of criteria for making judgments on social situations, structures, and systems; 4767.

Each social class (even the world community) must align itself with the principle of subsidiarity, 3738, 3943, 3951, 3966, ^a3995; private initiatives and associations on a lower level are promoted by the principle of solidarity, 3940, 3943, 3949f., 3966, (4454); for the accomplishment of goals established by public authority, private enterprise and associations should be involved, 4454.

By means of legal norms, authority ought to assure the rights of citizens and the free functioning of intermediary structures, 4483; neither the State nor any society must ever substitute itself for the initiative and responsibility of individuals and of intermediate communities at the level on which they can function, nor must they take away the room necessary for their freedom, 4766.

The social doctrine of the Church is directed against all forms of "collectivism", 3726, 4766.

Cf. C 4fc and L 1b (freedom); C 4la (social doctrine of the Church); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 8 (order of the State).

L 5g

g. HUMAN RIGHTS

The universal rights that flow from the dignity of the human person are inviolable and inalienable, 3957, 4326; civil power must safeguard the liberty that protects the dignity of the human person, 3250, 4342; it will allow for ^a*the right to private property* and ^b*the institution of intermediate corporations*, ^a3949f., ^b3966.

The first right of the human person is the right to life, 4552, 4791; cf. L 3c and L 4d (body and corporal welfare: life).

Among the fundamental human rights, personal freedom concerns especially the freedom —: ^a*to follow one's conscience*; —: ^b*to profess one's faith privately and publicly* according to one's conscience, ^a3250, ^b3961, ^a4240, ^a4326;

—: religious freedom, 4162, 4240, 4243, (4321), 4326, (4717); this is also true for actions in religious communities, 4243;

—: freedom from coercion in accepting the faith: No one should be forced to baptism against his will, 647, 698, 773, 781, (1998), 2552–2554, 2557, 3177; one should not baptize children against the will of their parents, 1998, 2552–2554, 2557; Christ did not constrain anyone by force, but he sought to convince them through humble exhortation, 698;

—: tolerance of the religious conviction of another ^aand protection of worship against those who wish to disrupt it, 480, 698, 772, ^a773, 3176, (3250), 3251f., 4328; condemned: [Burning heretics is against the will of the Holy Spirit], 1483; one has to distinguish between the error and the person who is in error, between initiatives in the social and cultural sphere and the errors that are found therein, 3996f., 4328; it is to this principle that collaboration with non-Catholics must be referred, 3996;

—: the right to express one's opinion, within the limits of the moral order and the common good, 3959, (4328); there is not unlimited freedom of thought, writing, and teaching, 2731, 2850–2859, 2875, 2979, 3252;

—: the right to choose freely one's state in life (marriage, priesthood, religious life), 3962, 4326, (4455);

—: the right to found a family and the right to education, 4326, (4455), 4712; the individual rights of the family: L 6a (right to marriage and family and rights of the family);

—: the right to work, 4326;

—: the right to undertake tasks on one's own responsibility, 3947f., 3964, 3966, 3972, 3974;

—: the right to adequate education and to scientific training, 3959f.; the right to accurate information, 3959, 4326;

—: the right to establish a residence and to change it (within due limits), 3967, 3990;

—: the right to food, clothing, and shelter, 4326, (4712);

—: the right to protection of private life, 4326, (4712);

—: the right to a good reputation and respect, 4326.

Every form of social or cultural discrimination (on the basis of sex, race, color, social position, language, or religion) must be overcome, (4198f.), (4321), 4329; exclusion from fundamental rights because of race or color represents contempt for human rights, 4467; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society).

A woman's liberty in marriage is stressed, 3709; women are entitled to political offices based on the dignity of the human person, 3975f.; the Church defends the dignity of woman in Africa, 5029f.

Freedom from slavery: The buying and selling of a person is an offense against the commandments of justice and of humanity, 668, 1495, 2745f., 4327.

Torture in juridical investigations is forbidden, 648; cf. also ordeals: L 2b (reverence for God).

Psychological pressure, subhuman life conditions, arbitrary imprisonment, deportation, mutilation, torture, slavery, prostitution, selling of women and children, and degrading work conditions do harm to the inviolability of the human person, 4327.

The ministerial priesthood is not to be considered a human right; baptism does not confer a title to public ministry in the Church, 4603; cf. K 8a (priesthood of the New Covenant).

(The assertion of a) true and proper right to a child is contrary to the child's dignity and nature, 4806.

Cf. C 4fb (dignity of man).

h. THE FOUNDATION OF SOCIAL NORMS IN GOD

L 5h

The communion in the Trinity as foundation and basis of the human community, 4324; man must recognize in the social order the reflection of divine perfection, 3772, (3978).

The highest norm of human life is God's eternal, objective, and universal law, whereby he orders the human community, 4242.

The Creator has written the laws of social life in the spiritual and moral nature of man, 4323; the basic rights come from God, Creator and Father, himself, 4628.

Christ is not only our Redeemer, but also our lawgiver, 1571; he gives men fraternity to reconcile them with the Father, 4488; human solidarity cannot truly take effect unless it is done in Christ, 4488.

The Holy Spirit assists in the development of the social order in truth, justice, love, and freedom, 4326.

The gospel is the source of all truth and moral teaching, 4207; the gospel of Christ announces and proclaims the freedom of the sons of God and repudiates all bondage, has a sacred reverence for the dignity of conscience and its freedom of choice, advises that all human talents be employed in God's service and men's, and commends all to the charity of all, 4341; evangelical morality perfects and elevates a moral dimension that already belongs to human nature, 4759.

Both ecclesiastical and civil authority comes directly from God, 3151, 3170.

The values that are most highly prized today have a divine origin. Insofar as they stem from endowments conferred by God on man, these values are exceedingly good, 4311; the spiritual principles for the edifice of modern civilization cannot rest on anything but faith in God, 4425; criteria of judgment, values, lines of thought, sources of inspiration, and models of life must conform to the Word of God and the plan of salvation, 4575.

Peace with God is the basic foundation of internal and social peace, 4488.

Cf. C 4ga (man's social nature); C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love among people); C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); C 4gn (Christ and the human community); L 1d (foundation of the natural law in God).

6. The Order of Marriage and Family

a. THE RIGHT TO MARRIAGE AND FAMILY AND THE RIGHTS OF THE FAMILY

L 6a

The right to marriage and the founding of a family, 3702, 3771, 3962, 4326, 4455; the right of the family to exist and progress, 4712; the rights of the family and of the matrimonial institution are fundamental moral values, 4807.

From the beginning God created the human being as male and female: their companionship produces the primary form of interpersonal communion, 4312; the domestic household is antecedent to the gathering of men into a community, 3728; condemned: [The family derives the whole principle of its existence from the civil law], 2891; the order of love and subordination within the family, 3707–3709; the conjugal rights of husband and wife are equal, (778), 3144; cf. K 9ba (nature of matrimony); in the founding of a family, husband and wife have equal rights, 3962.

Right and duty of the family to bring up and educate children, 3685, 3690, 3962, 4326, 4712; this right takes precedence over the State's right, 2891f., 3690, 3693; the right to protect minors with the help of adequate institutions, 4712; the principles of religious education are set forth, 3685–3690; education for a higher degree of culture, 4331.

Further rights of the family are the right to –: the intimacy of conjugal and family life, 4712; –: stability of the bond of marriage, 4712; –: freedom of belief, 4712; –: physical, social, political, and economic security, 4712; –: housing, 4712; –: emigrate in search of a better life, 4712; –: expression and representation before economic, social, and cultural public authorities, 4712; –: form associations with other families and institutions, 4712; –: reasonable leisure time, 4712; –: (for the elderly) a worthy life and a worthy death, 4712.

Condemnation of –: placing marriage and family on the same level as homosexual unions, 5096; –: the work of mothers and children because of the father’s insufficient pay, 3735, 3737; a just salary must also take into consideration the needs of the family, (3266), 3271, (3726), 3735, 3938.

Cf. K 9ba (nature of matrimony); L 5g (human rights).

b. CONJUGAL LOVE AND HUMAN SEXUALITY

Married love is concerned –: above all with an act of free will, 4470; –: with a completely human and total love, 4471, 4701f., 1709; the totality of married love corresponds with the demands of a responsible fertility that in being directed to the generation of a human being surpasses the purely biological order, 4702; married love should be –: true and exclusive, 4472, 4709; –: fruitful, 4473; every marital act must of necessity retain its intrinsic relationship to the procreation of human life, 3717, 4475, 4709; the marriage act –: is morally good and worthy, 4475; –: remains legitimate even when, for reasons independent of their will, it is foreseen to be infertile, 3718, 4475; the woman’s motherhood constitutes a special “part” in the shared parenthood of the spouses, and as a result the husband incurs a special obligation in regard to his wife, 4834; cf. K 9ba (nature of matrimony); K 9bb (goods of matrimony); K 9bc (ends of matrimony).

Sexuality is realized in a truly human way only if it is an integral part of the love by which a man and a woman commit themselves totally to one another until death, 4701; the total physical self-giving must be a sign and fruit of the total personal self-giving, 4701; its only “place” is in marriage, 4582, 4703; the institution of matrimony is an interior requirement of the covenant of conjugal love that is publicly affirmed as unique and exclusive, in order to live in fidelity to the plan of God, the Creator, 4703; because of the insertion of the man and woman into Christ’s spousal covenant with the Church, the intimate community of conjugal life and love is elevated, 4704; cf. K 9ba (nature of matrimony); K 9bd (characteristics of matrimony).

Condemnation of –: temporary marriage and experimental marriage, 3715; –: [There is a right to sexual union before marriage in those cases where there is a firm intention to marry and an affection that is already in some way conjugal], 4582; –: dissolution of marriage, 283; –: the clinging of supposed widows to second husbands after the return of the first husbands who had been considered dead, 314; –: laxist views concerning the sinfulness of certain carnal acts, 2060, 2109, 2148–2150; unchastity between the unmarried is a (mortal) sin, #835, 2148; condemnation of laxist assertions concerning the way to confess sins in the sexual sphere, 2044f., 2150.

Clerics and religious cannot contract a valid marriage, 1809; in the sexual sphere there is no lightness of matter in the case of seduction by the confessor, 2013; condemnation of laxist assertions in this sphere, 2026f.; homosexuality as obstacle to ordination, 5100.

Condemnation of the indulgent judgment and excusing of homosexual relations, 4583, 5100; they are intrinsically disordered and can in no case be approved of, 4583.

Masturbation: L 3c (obligations and rights with regard to body and corporal welfare).

Sex education. On the right manner of sex education, 3697; coeducation is condemned, 3698; unchaste books are condemned, 1857.

Cf. C 4fd (orientation of man to love); C 4fe (man as male or female); C 4g (man’s social nature); G 4ba (vocation of the faithful to holiness); G 4bb (ways of sanctification); G 6cc (mission and task of the laity in marriage and family); K 9 (sacrament of matrimony); L 2e (virtue of love); L 2f (union with God).

c. THE TRANSMISSION OF HUMAN LIFE IN MARRIAGE

Anthropological, theological, and ethical criteria for the transmission of human life, 4790–4792, 5116.

The good of children is explained, 3704f.; it is for parents to decide upon the number of their children, 4455; regulations from governments or other public authorities that attempt to limit this freedom are condemned, 4711; cf. L 8 (order of the State).

The transmission of human life has a special character of its own, which derives from the special nature of the human person, 4791; it requires responsible collaboration with the fruitful love of God, (4324), 4792, 5116.

From the moment of conception, or from the formation of the zygote, the life of every human being is to be respected in an absolute way, 4792f., (4807); no one has the right to kill an innocent human being, 4792, 4991f.

The transmission of human life must be actualized in marriage through the specific and exclusive act of the spouses, 4792; a responsible procreation must be the fruit of marriage, 4799, 4802; procreation is deprived of its proper perfection when it is not desired as the fruit of the conjugal act, 4802.

The child has the right to be conceived, carried in the womb, brought into the world, and brought up within marriage; only in this way can the child discover his own identity and achieve his own proper human development, 4799; the assertion of a true and proper right to a child would be contrary to the child’s dignity and nature, 4806.

Prenatal diagnosis is permissible if it respects the life and integrity of the embryo and the human fetus and is directed toward its safeguarding or healing as an individual, 4794; one must condemn all support for a link between prenatal diagnosis and abortion or inducing submission to a prenatal diagnosis for the purpose of eliminating fetuses that are affected by malformations or that are carriers of hereditary illness, 4794.

Medical interventions carried out on the human embryo are licit if they respect the life and integrity of the embryo and do not involve disproportionate risks, 4795; medical interventions, research, and experimentation on embryos that are not directly therapeutic are illicit, 4796.

Artificial procreation. Infertility and modern medical techniques, 5117; the fundamental values connected with the techniques of artificial human procreation are the life of the human being called into existence and the special nature of the transmission of human life in marriage, 4791; the possibility of procreation without sexual union does not automatically signify its moral admissibility, 4791; artificial insemination^a and embryonic selection^b are not permissible, 3323^a, 3953^a, 5117^b; in the transmission of human life, no one is permitted to make use of such methods that could be licit with plants or animals, 4791.

Embryos obtained in vitro are human beings and subjects with rights that must be respected; they should not be produced as biological material for research purposes, 4797, 5117; attempts or plans for fertilization between human and animal gametes and the gestation of human embryos in the uterus of animals are contrary to the human dignity proper to the embryo and to the right of every person to be conceived and to be born within marriage and from marriage, 4798, 5117; the procreation of embryos through twin fission, cloning, and parthenogenesis and the freezing of embryos (cryopreservation) are contrary to the moral law, 4798; attempts to influence chromosomal or genetic inheritance are contrary to the personal dignity of the human being and his integrity and identity, 4798.

Surrogate motherhood is not morally licit, 4801.

Homologous artificial fertilization objectively effects a separation between the goods and the meanings of marriage, 4802; even considered within the context of marriage, it cannot be permitted since technical means take the place of the conjugal act, 4803, 5117; homologous in vitro fertilization is in itself not permitted, 4803; it is neither in fact achieved nor positively willed as the expression and fruit of a specific act of the conjugal union. It objectively deprives the generation of the human person of its proper perfection, 4803; the homologous FIVET method is to be morally distinguished from extraconjugal procreation, 4803.

Condemnation of embryonic stem-cell research and therapeutic use of stem cells, gene therapy, human cloning, attempts at hybridization, use of embryos as “biological material”, 5118.

Medical intervention must be in line with assisting the conjugal act, 4805.

The civil legislation required by biomedical progress must be regulated according to the fundamental norms of the moral law, 4807; in doing so, one must strive for the widest possible social consensus, 4807; when civil laws permit illicit technical processes, one must be committed to reforming these laws or offering passive resistance, 4807.

Offspring can be prevented by continence when both the spouses agree, 3716; observing the times of infertility is permitted as a faculty given by nature, 3148, 3748, 4477f.; contraception in marriage (^a*with the help of an artificial instrument*) is condemned, 2715, 2758–2760, 2791–2793, ^a2795, 3185–3187, 3634, ^a3638–3640, 3716–3718, ^a3917a, ^a5117; means that directly prevent conception are always unlawful because they obstruct the natural development of the generative process, 4478; measures imposed by public authorities in favor of contraception, sterilization, and abortion are to be rejected, 4711; cf. L 8 (order of the State); moral behavior of the woman in situations of conflict, 2715, 2758, 3634, 3718.

The question of the permissibility of –: copula dimidiata (partial penetration), 3660–3662; –: amplexus reservatus, 3907; direct interruption of a generative process already begun is forbidden, 4476.

Sterilization and abortion are condemned : L 4d (body and corporal welfare).

Cf. K 9b (nature of marriage); L 3c and L 4d (body and corporal welfare).

7. The Order of Society

Civil society is a society perfect in its own nature and its own right, 3168, 3171, 3685; cf. C 4gf (nature of civil society).

The goal of civil society is –: to provide fully the necessary requirements of life that man cannot procure by himself, 3165, (4326); –: to promote the natural perfection (^a*the good*) of man, 3772, 3782, ^a4326; –: to provide for the common good (^a*inasmuch as it establishes a framework for the activity of individuals*), 3772, ^a3782, 3936, (4342), (4483, 4629); the social order and its development must work to the benefit of the human person, 4326, (4446f., 4457, 4580, 4812, 4815); cf. C 4ge (goal of civil society). All in society possess fundamental equality on the basis of their dignity (^a*on the basis of their being in the image of God, of the same nature and of the same origin*) and ^b*their divine vocation* (^c*despite racial differences*), ^b3130, ^c3977, 3980, 3988, ^{ab}4329; human dignity and the rights ^a*and obligations* that flow from it are due to all men, ^a3957, 4199, ^a4326; cf. C 4gg (equality and inequality in society).

In human society one man’s natural right gives rise to a corresponding duty in other men to recognize that right, 3970f., 3977.

Men are equal with regard to the rights and goods of secular culture (bearing in mind the dignity of the human person) particularly in relation to ^a*the political independence of a nation*, ^b*the rights of national minorities*, ^c*the rights and duties of women in the State*, ^d*the distribution of property*, ^a3255, ^d3946, 3974, ^c3975, ^a3976, 3988, ^b3989, ^b4936–4940, increasing the measure of prosperity, 3255, cf. L 5g (human rights).

- Human society must preserve and enforce human rights, 4551; the law by which society is governed must recognize freedom of conscience in religion, 4240; a human community is to be built where men can live truly human lives, free from discrimination on account of race, religion, or nationality, free from servitude, 4460; with respect to the fundamental rights of the person, every type of discrimination, whether social or cultural, whether based on sex, race, color, social condition, language, or religion, is to be overcome, 4199, 4329, 4460, 4467.
- The inequality of powers in society proceeds from God, 3131; the social order must make for an equilibrium in society that is increasingly more human in character, 3973.
- Equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501.
- The right to form associations was conferred by God, 3739f., 3771, (3937), 3966; man has the right to act on his own responsibility within associations, 3947f., 3964, 3966, 3972, 3974; this freedom is restricted by socialists, 3939.
- Formation of institutions: L 5d (institutions).
- The creation and activities of trade unions are encouraged, 4773.
- Social justice is the guiding principle of economics that demands from each individual what is necessary for the common good, 3732, 3737–3741, 3774, 3941, (4459, 4776, 4818); social justice demands that economic progress be accompanied by a corresponding social progress, 3944, (4441); social justice as a concept of life and as an impulse toward the integral development of (Latin American) peoples, 4482; cf. L 11 and L 12 (order of property/of the economy).
- Liberation and structural changes. The goal of the fight against injustice must be a new social and political order that is in conformity with the demands of justice, 4774; freedom demands conditions of an economic, social, political, and cultural kind that make possible its full exercise, 4750; the conditions for the exercise of an authentic human freedom are to be secured and guaranteed, 4754; change in Latin American structures has political reform as its prerequisite, 4483; a process of liberation that does not take personal freedom into account can have no success, 4754, 4771; cf. C 4gm (liberation and structural change).
- Liberation (in the spirit of the gospel) is incompatible with hatred of others, taken individually or collectively, 4773; the required change in unjust social, political, and economic structures must be accompanied by a change in personal and collective outlook, 4633; the uniqueness of the Christian message does not consist in structural change but in the insistence on the conversion of men that will bring about this change, 4481; cf. F 2b (conversion and justification); G 3cd (Church and evangelization).
- Progress. Social and economic progress must be joined to political freedom so that citizens can achieve personal growth and take their rightful place in the international community, 4441; what men do to obtain justice, brotherhood, and a more humane disposition of social relationships has greater worth than technical advances, 4335; the values of liberty, responsibility, and openness to the spiritual guarantee the integral development of man, 4505; lay people should in their own way contribute to universal progress, 4162; cf. C 4ie (progress); G 6cb (mission and task of the laity in the world).
- Progress and peace: The integral development of man (the path to more human conditions) is the new name for peace, 4485, ^a4486; true advancement of man consists of peace and justice, 4579; solidarity is the path to peace and development, 4818; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4ie (progress); L 5e (principle of solidarity).
- False conceptions of progress: excessive availability of material goods for certain social groups, 4811; consumer culture as the “throw away” and “waste” culture, 4811; the interplay of competition will not ensure satisfactory development, 4454; cf. C 4ie (progress).
- To the extent that progress can contribute to the better ordering of human society, it is of vital concern to the kingdom of God, 4339; there are profound links between evangelization and human advancement, between development and liberation, 4579; evangelization does not ignore but, rather, promotes justice, liberation, development, and peace, 4579; cf. C 4ie (progress); G 3cd (Church and evangelization).
- Peace is –: the work of justice, 4486; –: a permanent task, 4487; –: the fruit of love, the expression of a true brotherhood among men, 4488; –: not something found, but –: something built, 4487; –: something achieved by means of persistent work, 4468; –: built with the mind, with ideas, with the works of peace, 4422; peace is not simply the absence of warfare, 4468; an authentic peace implies struggle, creative abilities, and permanent conquest, 4487; the message of peace should enter the world through the Church, 4162; the Church recommends a reasoned struggle for social justice and solidarity, 4773; the Christian is not simply a pacifist, for he can fight, but he prefers peace to war, 4489; he prefers the path of dialogue and joint action, 4773; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); G 4bf (tasks of the faithful in the world).
- Where, because of social, political, economic, and cultural inequalities, social peace does not exist, there is a rejection of the peace of the Lord, a rejection of the Lord himself, 4488, 4937–4942; where unjust inequalities between men and nations prevail, there will be attempts against peace, 4486; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace).
- The wealth and power of the rich should not be increased, and the misery of the poor and the slavery of the oppressed should not become more harsh yet, 4454; poverty cripples human freedom, 4331.
- The Church’s option for the poor: C 4ke (the poor); G 7ad (the Church and the poor).
- Violence is neither Christian nor evangelical, 4489; it is not a path to liberation, 4772; whoever discredits the path of reform and favors the myth of revolution also encourages the setting up of totalitarian regimes, 4774; the oppression employed by power-groups is the inevitable seed of rebellions and wars, 4486; revolutionary uprisings engender new injustices, 4453, 4774; the use of force obtains only a static and apparent peace, 4487; condemnation of –: the Marxist theory of the class struggle, (3170), 3937, 4508, (4628), (4735f.), 4773; —: cruel and uncontrollable terrorist and guerilla violence; criminal acts can in no way be justified as the way to liberation, 4630; violence exercised by the powerful against the poor, arbitrary action by the police, and any form of violence established as a system of government are to be condemned, 4772; cf. C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gm (liberation and structural change).

Social doctrines and social systems. In the light of the fundamental principles of her social doctrine, the Church makes it possible to see to what extent existing systems conform or do not conform to the demands of human dignity, 4770; cf. C 41 (modern doctrines about society and the social doctrine of the Church).

Liberalism (and its individualism) is criticized, 3772, 3937, 3940f., (4330), 4451, (4454), 4463, 4509, 4766; idolatry of the market, 4907; unbridled pursuit of consumption, 4908f.; cf. C 4lc (liberalism).

Capitalism: C 4ld.

Collectivism: C 4lb.

Marxism: C 4lb.

Socialism: C 4lb.

Communism: C 4lb.

The doctrine that attempts to build a society without religion and that attacks the religious liberty of its citizens is to be rejected, 4162.

Cf. C 4fb (dignity of man); C 4gb (brotherhood, solidarity and love); C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gd and L 5c (common good); C 4ge and C 4gf (goal and nature of civil society); C 4gg (equality and inequality in society); C 4gl (disturbances in society due to human sin); C 4gm (liberation and structural change); C 4ie (progress); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ke (the poor); C 4l (modern doctrines about society and the social doctrines of the Church); D 4c (sinful structures of society); G 7ab (Church and society); L 5b (society and its responsibility); L 5d (institutions); L 5e and L 5f (principles of solidarity and subsidiarity); L 8–13 (order of the State, of the human family, of work, of property, of the economy, and of culture).

8. The Order of the State

Man is older than the State, therefore, society is for man and not vice versa (“whereas a too liberal interpretation of this principle is condemned”), 3265, 3728, ^a3772, 3949.

Human law does the same thing for society as the natural law does for individuals, 3248; in human law, enactments of the civil authority decide points that do not follow directly from the natural law, 3248; cf. L 1c (dictates of reason as natural law).

Necessity, legitimacy, and limits of the authority of the State: C 4gh (authority in society).

Principles for the intervention of the State in social life. The exercise of political authority has as its sole object the common good, 3940, 3983, (4342), 4483, (4629); cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good).

It is a task of the State to ensure for citizens the protection of their rights and duties, 3985; the largest possible number of citizens should participate in public affairs with genuine freedom, 4331; the creation of means of participation and legitimate representation of the people is to be promoted, 4484; equality and participation in managerial functions as forms of human dignity and freedom, 4501; the most important fundamental human rights must be incorporated into the State’s general constitutions, 3986; every form of government has to recognize the basic rights of the person and the family and the demands of the common good, 4342; the inalienable rights and liberties of the citizens are to be effectively and permanently assured by means of legal norms, 4483; the distinction that some State authorities make between believers and unbelievers prejudice the fundamental rights of the human person, 4321; the Church calls for active liberty of believers, 4321; under present conditions the State must appropriately control the free market, 4903; civil responsibility with regard to culture is to be observed, 4910; the dangers of the “welfare state” should be avoided, 4912; culpable passivity of public powers, 4772; rejection of an ethical pluralism on the basis of a cultural pluralism in democracies, 5095.

The civil society has a right to education, but it is not absolute and does not take precedence over the right of the family, 2891f., 3685, 3690–3696; it has no right to dissolve the marriage bond (“not even in marriages that are natural and legitimate only”), 2992, (3190–3193), ^a3724; the State has the right to own the means of production, 3951; it cannot take away the right to property and to inheritance, 3728.

Accelerated birth rate can cause civil powers to instruct citizens and adopt appropriate measures, but these must be in conformity with the dictates of the moral law and preserve the rightful freedom of married couples, 4455.

Citizens are entitled to —: choose and regulate the form of their government, 3173, 3253f.; —: elect their government leaders, 3982; —: participate actively in political affairs (“to which women are also entitled by virtue of the dignity of the human person”), 3174, 3968, ^a3957f.; —: join trade unions, 3740, 3937.

Principle of subsidiarity: L 5f; public authorities must avoid a total collectivization of goods and the dangers of a planned economy, 4454, 4913; by means of legal norms, the free functioning of intermediary structures should be effectively and permanently assured, 4483.

Condemnation of assertions that grant unlimited authority to the State, 2939, 3782f., 3785; public authority has no direct power over the bodies of its subjects, (3272), 3722, 3760–3765; it is not for the State or for political parties to try to impose an ideology by means that would lead to a dictatorship over minds, 4503; deserving condemnation are —: the killing of the innocent by the order of public authority, 3790; —: torture, kidnapping, persecution of political dissidents or suspect persons, and exclusion from public life because of ideas, 4629; -: arbitrary action by the police, 4772; -: compulsory measures in favor of contraception, sterilization, and abortion, 4711; it is not a function of society or public authority to recognize the right to life for some and not for others, 4552; a judgment of blood exercised by the secular power is permissible provided it proceeds, not out of hatred, but judiciously and with caution, 795; cf. L 4d (body and corporal welfare of the neighbor); L 5g (human rights).

Principles for resistance against the abuse of State authority (^a*insurrection is not advised*, ^b*tyrannicide is condemned*), ^b1235, ^a3132, ^a3170, 3252f., 3775f., 4453; use of force where there is manifest, longstanding tyranny that would do damage to fundamental personal rights and dangerous harm to the common good of the country, 4453.

State and Church: G 7ba; nations should acknowledge the true freedom of the Church in the fulfilling her mission, 4342;

Cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good); C 4gh (authority in society); L 1ef (conscience and authority); L 5g (human rights); L 5h (foundation of social norms in God); L 7 (order of society); L 11 (order of property).

L 9

9. The Order of the Human Family

Human dignity and the rights flowing from it belong in equal measure to all peoples, 4199; all peoples are a community and have one origin and one final goal, God, 4195; cf. C 1h (God as the goal of the world).

The growing awareness of interdependence among individuals and nations is a moral value to be established, 4817; interdependence, as a system determining relationships in the contemporary world (in the economy, culture, politics, and religion), is accepted as a moral category, 4817.

The goods of creation are meant for all, 4448, 4818; the equal dignity of persons demands that a more humane and just condition of life and a reduction of economic and social differences between peoples be attained, 4329.

As a result of worldwide interdependence, the common good today increasingly involves the rights and duties of the whole human race, 4326; social groups must take account of the general welfare of the entire human family, 4326; economic help should not be made conditional on programs of contraception, sterilization, and procured abortion, 4711.

Solidarity is a path to peace and development for nations, 4818; collaboration is the act proper to solidarity among individuals and nations, 4818; development of the individual necessarily entails a joint effort for the development of the human race as a whole (^a*so that all men come to more human living conditions*), ^a4447, 4458; consequently, a new humanism must be discovered, 4447, 4457; all men should overcome strife between nations and races and give internal strength to human associations that are just, 4342; Christians and Muslims should preserve and promote together for the benefit of all mankind social justice and moral welfare as well as peace and freedom, 4197; peace between countries through efforts toward disarmament, 3991, 4422.

Men's common interests make it imperative that at long last a worldwide community of nations be established, 3956, 3992f.; a community where men can live truly human lives, free from discrimination on account of race, religion, or nationality, must be built, 4460.

The universal good of the whole human family requires a world authority, 3992f., 3995; the United Nations Organization as the path that has to be taken for modern civilization and for world peace, 4421.

A people can demand political independence for itself, 3255, 3976.

Cf. C 4gb (fraternity, solidarity, and love); C 4gc (justice and peace); C 4gd and L 5c (common good); C 4gj (universal community of peoples and international institutions); C 4gk (international law); C 4ie (progress); C 4kd (threats and problems of mankind); C 4ki (Christian humanism as true humanism); L 5e (principle of solidarity).

10. The Order of Work

a. MAN AS THE SUBJECT OF WORK

The primary basis of the value of work is man himself as its subject, 4690; work is for man, not man for work, 4690f.; work is a good thing for man because through it man not only transforms nature but also becomes more a human being, 4335, 4338, 4692; its subjective meaning is preeminent over its objective one, 4690; all work is to be held in high esteem because of the dignity of the person who carries it out, 4690; it is an error of early capitalism to treat man as an instrument and not in accordance with the true dignity of his work, 4691.

Cf. C 4i (activity of man); L 3d and L 4e (work and material goods).

b. CAPITAL AT THE SERVICE OF WORK

Work has priority over capital, 4693, 4695, 4900; principle directly concerns the process of production: in this process labor is always a primary efficient cause, while capital remains a mere instrument or instrumental cause, 4693.

Capital cannot be separated from labor; in no way can labor be opposed to capital or capital to labor, 4695; the opposition between labor and capital must be overcome, 4695.

Property, and in a special way ownership of the means of production, is acquired through work in order that it may serve work. The means of production should not be considered as capital that stands in opposition to labor, 4697.

Cf. L 11 (order of property).

c. HIRED LABOR

L 10c

Working for wages is not unjust by nature, 3733, (3938); labor must not be regarded as a commodity, 3935; terms of employment must be regulated in accordance with dignity of the human person, 3935f.; a workingman must not be looked upon as a thing devoid of intelligence and freedom, 3974; it is recommended that the work contract be somewhat modified by a partnership contract as well as employee participation, 3733, 3938, 3947f.; it is the citizens' right to join unions, 3740, 3937; the creation and activity of trade unions are encouraged, 4773.

Principles for a just determination of wages (including ^a*sustenance of the family*, ^b*the financial state of the business concern*, ^c*the common good*), (a)3266, 3269f., (a)3271, (a)3726, 3733, (a)3735, 3736, (c)3737, 3773, 3935, (abc)3938, (c)3944f., (c)3946, (a)3964.

11. The Order of Property

Justice in acquisition and ownership. The right to ownership and to property is established in divine and natural law, 3133, 3265f., 3271, 3726, (3728), 3771, 3935, 3938, 3943, 3949–3951, 3965; the right to private property, 4696; it is at the service of the dignity of the human person, 3950, 3965; it is stressed as a fundamental right of man especially for oppressed peoples, 773, 1495, 2746; Christian tradition has never upheld this right as absolute and untouchable, 4696; condemnation of assertions that contest a sinner's right to possession and inheritance, 1121–1125, 1154¹, 1165, 1230; property is not an impediment to man's salvation, 797.

The right to ownership has an individual and a social character, (3267), 3726, 3728, 3773, 3935, 3938, 3942, 3952, 3965, 4696; priority of the social character, 3942, 4449f., 4696; every man has the right to glean what he needs from the earth; all other rights are to be subordinated to this principle, including the right to property, 4448; the right to private property is not absolute and unconditional, 4449; no one may appropriate surplus goods solely for his own private use when others lack the bare necessities of life, 4449; it is not permissible for citizens who have garnered sizeable income from the resources and activities of their own nation to deposit a large portion of their income in foreign countries for the sake of their own private gain alone, 4450; the rich should feel responsible for the weaker and be ready to share with them what they possess, 4818; the common good sometimes requires an expropriation of landed property, 4450; both ^a*individualism* and ^b*collectivism* must be avoided, (ab)3726, (a)3741, (a)4330, (ab)4766; Communism undermines the right to property, 2786.

One has to distinguish the use of goods from possession, 3267, 3727; goods that were created by God for all men should flow to all alike, 3267, 3942, 3951, (4448); the right to property is not lost through misuse of it or failure to use it, 1126f., 1137f., 1166, 1168, 3727; the State has the right to control the use of private property in the interests of the public good alone, but by no means to absorb it altogether, 3271, 3728, 3935f.

Ownership, especially the property for means of production, is acquired through work in order that it may serve work. Means of production should not be treated as capital in opposition to labor, 4697; the socialization of means of production is not to be excluded, 4697; the mere expropriation of these means of production (capital) is not enough to ensure their satisfactory socialization, 4698; converting the means of production into State property in the collectivist system is by no means equivalent to socializing that property, 4699; socialization presupposes that each person is fully entitled to consider himself a part owner of the great "workbench" at which he is working with everyone else, 4699.

Titles for acquiring property –: taking possession of a thing that belongs to no one, 3730; –: adaptation (so that the thing has a new appearance or increase in value), 3730; –: personal labor (^a*but this is not the only legitimate title*), 3265, 3268f., 3731, (a)3732, 3773, (3945); problem of just wages: L 10c (hired labor); –: right to inheritance (^a*which the State cannot remove*), 1122f., (a)3728; –: prescription, provided there is good faith, 816.

Offenses against ownership. Stealing and robbery are forbidden by God, 3133; plunderers of shipwrecks are to be excommunicated as murderers of their brethren, 706; condemnation of laxist assertions that –: promote theft, 1368, 2136–2138; –: that offend against justice in the performance of ecclesiastical obligations, 2028–2030, 2040–2042, 2053–2055, 2063, 2147, (2154); –: justify bribing a judge, 2046; –: deny the obligation to make reparation, 1115, 2040, 2053, 2138f.

Justice in business affairs. No profit should be realized through a loan, ^a*unless because of other titles*, 2546, (a)2548, 3105; justification of profit because of titles, 2743, 3106f.; principles for determining the amount of permissible profit, 3108f.

Usury is defined as when, from its use, a thing that produces nothing is applied to the acquiring of profit without any work, any expense, or any risk, 1442, (2546); condemnation of —: usury ^aand similar contracts, 280f., 716, 747, ^a753, ^a764, 906, 2062, ^a2140, 2141f., 2722–2724; —: monetary exchanges, 1981f.; permissible transactions (especially the ^aMontes pietatis), 828, 1355–1357, ^a1422–1444, 2548–2550.

Cf. C 4gd and L 5c (common good); C 4la (social doctrine of the Church); L 4e (obligations and rights with regard to work and material goods); L 4f (responsible dealings with the world); L 5e (principle of solidarity); L 10b (capital at the service of work); L 12 (order of the economy).

12. The Order of the Economy

Every man has the right to glean what he needs from the earth; all other rights, including the rights of property and free trade, are to be subordinated to this principle, 4448.

It is a duty of public powers to avoid total collectivization of goods and the dangers of a planned economy, 4454.

Of itself a law of justice is not inherent in free trade. Prices that are freely agreed upon can turn out to be unfair (liberalism), 4463; the principle of free trade is no longer adequate if, in regulating international agreements, it is applied independently of the degree of difference in their economic condition, 4463; on the other hand, it is useful when both parties are about equal economically, 4463; too great a social inequality between the peoples must be eliminated, 4329; when two parties are in very unequal positions, their mutual consent alone does not guarantee a fair contract, 4464; rule of free consent remains subservient to the demands of the natural law, 4464; there are moral constraints for the free market, 4902.

The position of rigid capitalism must undergo continual revision, in order to be reformed from the point of view of human rights, 4698; the interplay of competition will not ensure satisfactory development, 4454; competition must be kept within limits so that it operates justly and fairly and thus becomes a truly human endeavor, 4465; development cannot be restricted to economic growth alone, 4446; social justice demands that economic progress always be accompanied by a corresponding social progress, 3944, (4441); the mere accumulation of goods and services is not enough for the realization of human happiness, 4811; it is an error of early capitalism to treat man as an instrument and not in accordance with the true dignity of his work, 4691; it is not simply a model to be proposed to the Third World countries, 4909.

Condemnation of conceptions that present profit as the chief spur to economic progress, free competition as the guiding norm of economics, and private ownership of the means of production as an absolute right, having no limits or social obligations, 4451; condemnation of —: unbridled liberalism, 4451; —: “international imperialism of money”, 4451; —: rampant consumerism, 4908.

13. The Order of Culture

The spiritual principles for the building of modern civilization cannot rest on anything but faith in God, 4425; Jesus calls for a radical discipleship that embraces the whole man, all men, the whole earth, 4614; human culture or cultures must be evangelized and in this way regenerated, 4576, 4578, 4931–4942, 5022; true development must be based on the love of God and neighbor, 4815; Christians must work to bring about that civilization of love which will include the entire ethical and social heritage of the gospel, 4776, (4815); consumer culture as a culture of “throwing away” and “waste” rests on a false concept of progress, 4812; culture of life, 4997–4998.

Christian humanism as true humanism: C 4ki.

Youth has the task of continually reintroducing “the meaning of life”, of renewing cultures and spirits; they should be a perpetual reactualization of life, 4491.

Men, especially the young, are to be educated to be great-souled persons, 4331; the work of education, 4776.

Methodical investigation in all disciplines must be carried out in accord with moral norms, 4336.

14. The Order of the Church

The principles of organization and the obligations that flow from them were outlined in the chapters on the Church (G) and ecclesiastical ministry (H).

M. GOD PERFECTS THE WORLD AND MAN IN HIS KINGDOM

1. The Dawn of the Kingdom of God in History

a. THE KINGDOM OF GOD HAS DAWNED IN CHRIST

M 1a

The kingdom of God —: has been begun by God himself on earth and is to be further extended until it is brought to perfection by Christ, 4123; —: is already present in mystery, and, when the Lord returns, it will be brought into full flower, 4339; the world was freed by Christ from the bondage of sin so as to be fashioned anew according to God's design and reach its fulfillment, 4302; the restoration of all things has already begun in Christ, is carried forward in the mission of the Holy Spirit, and through the Spirit continues in the Church, 4168; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); G 1be (Church, work of the Holy Trinity); the Christian community of pilgrims on earth leads more closely to Christ, 4170; in Christ can be found the key, the focal point, and the goal of man as well as of all human history, 4310; the concept of eternal life, 5112.

Christ, having been lifted up, is continually active in the world that through the Church he might make men partakers of his glorious life by nourishing them with his own Body and Blood, 4168; cf. K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful).

The assertion of millenarism or chiliasm is condemned: [Christ will come visibly to rule over this world before the final judgment], 3839; condemned: [His coming at the end of time can be attributed to the Father], 737.

Cf. C 4fh (Christ, the perfect man); C 5d (the kingdom of God and Christ as the goal of history); D 7ba (the author of the forgiveness of sins); E 2bb (Christ's work among men); E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God); E 3a (Christ, the mediator of salvation); E 3bc and E 3bd (priesthood and kingship of Christ); G 2bb (Church and the kingdom of God).

b. THE ESCHATOLOGICAL CHARACTER OF THE PILGRIM CHURCH

M 1b

The Church is on the way to the heavenly Jerusalem and in the earthly liturgy takes part in a foretaste of the heavenly liturgy, 4008, 4171; in the liturgy, the Church awaits Christ's return, 4008; in the Eucharist, the pledge of eternal glory is given, 1638, 4047, (4168, 4338); cf. G 3ab (Church unity in diversity); G 3b (holiness of the Church); J 1a (essence of the liturgy); K 5ec (effect of the Eucharist on the faithful); the pilgrim Church —: grows in Christ and is guided by God, until she arrives at the fullness of eternal glory, 4190; —: will attain her full perfection only in the glory of heaven, 4168, (4179), 4190, (4332, 4340); cf. G 1bf (perfection of the Church); —: awaits the day of fulfillment with the prophets, 4198; —: until the perfection of the world, has the appearance of this world in her sacraments and institutions, 4168; —: herself dwells among creatures who await fulfillment, 4168; —: cf. G 2bb (sacramentality of the Church: Church in the world); G 3bb (holiness and sin in the pilgrim Church); until the Lord comes, some are pilgrims on earth, while the dead are purified or, glorified, see God, 4169; cf. M 2bc (purification of man); M 3bb (vision of God); the Christian hastens forward to the resurrection in the strength that comes from hope, 4322; cf. L 2d (virtue of hope).

The renovation of the world is anticipated by the sanctity of the Church, 4168; the fruits of the holiness of the people of God are shown by the lives of many saints, 4166; cf. G 3b (holiness of the Church).

Eschatological faith and earthly realities. Eschatological hope undergirds the fulfillment of earthly tasks with fresh incentives, 4321, 4334, 4339, (4343); without hope in eternal life, man's dignity is lacerated and the riddles of life and death, of guilt and grief, go unsolved, 4321; faith is the eschatological interpretation of existence, 4492; a Christian who neglects his temporal duties because of the life to come jeopardizes his eternal salvation and strays from the truth, 4343; task of the laity is to seek the kingdom of God by engaging in temporal affairs and by ordering them according to the plan of God, 4157; the kingdom of God comes to pass through historical realizations yet is not exhausted in them, 4614; cf. C 4ic (order of human activity); C 4ij (Christians and human activity); G 4bf and G 6cb (tasks of the faithful/laity in the world); L 2d (virtue of hope).

Earthly progress is of a vital concern for the kingdom of God, insofar as it can contribute to the better ordering of human society, 4339; cf. C 4ie (human progress).

The communion of saints is the mutual communication of help, expiation, prayers, blessings among the faithful, who, whether they have already attained to the heavenly country or are detained in the purgatorial fire or are yet exiles on earth, all enjoy a common franchise, 3363; the living can have communion in Christ with the dead, 4318; companionship with the saints joins us to Christ, 4170; the faithful in the earthly and heavenly Church —: in various ways and degrees are in communion in the same charity of God and neighbor and sing the same hymn of praise to God, 4169; —: grow together in the Spirit of Christ to form one Church and cleave together in him, 4169; —: are strengthened in their unity by communication of spiritual goods, 4169; the interpenetration of the earthly and heavenly citizenship is accessible to faith alone, 4340; cf. F 2cd (gifts of the Holy Spirit); G 2bb (Church and the kingdom of God); G 3ab (Church unity in diversity); G 3ac (the one Church, built through the variety of charisms); G 3b (holiness of the Church); J 1a (essence of the liturgy).

The faith of the creeds in the communion of the saints, 19, 26–30; the faith of our ancestors in the communion of the saints is confirmed, 4171; the Church has always cultivated with piety the memory of the dead and offered suffrages for them, 4170; the Eucharist as the sacrament of communion with the living and the dead: K 5ed.

The saints —: intercede for men, 1821, 1867, 2187, 4169f.; —: obtain benefits from God through Christ, 4169f.; cf. E 6d (participation of men in the work of Jesus Christ); —: show a path to perfect union with Christ or to holiness, 4170; the patronage of the saints, 3363; the saints in heaven strengthen the Church in her holiness by their union with Christ, ennoble the earthly liturgy, and contribute to the building up of the Church, 4169; the communion between the various Churches and Ecclesial Communities is founded in the full communion of saints, 5006–5008; cf. G 3b (holiness of the Church); G 4ba (vocation to holiness); J 1d (subjects of the liturgy); the apostles and the martyrs are by their witness closely joined with us in Christ, 4170; the glorified Mother of Jesus, image and beginning of the Church to be perfected, shines forth as a sign of sure hope and solace to the people of God during its sojourn on earth, 4179; cf. E 6f (Mary, paragon of the Church); G 3b (holiness of the Church); veneration of the saints: J 1eg; M 3bd.

The souls in purgatory have a participation in the communion of saints, 3363; they cannot be of benefit to themselves and rely on the intercession of others, 1398, 1405; opportunities for the faithful to help them: ^a*sacrifice of the Mass*, ^b*prayers*, ^c*almsgiving*, ^d*other benefits and works of piety*, (^a583), ^a741, ^{acd}797, ^{abcd}856, ^{abcd}1304, ^{bc}1405, ^a1743, ^a1753, ^a1820, ^a1866f., ^a2535, ^a3363; cf. J 1e (forms of piety), esp. J 1ee (prayer); K 5ed (the Eucharist as the sacrament of communion with the living and the dead); L 4e (almsgiving); M 2bc (purification of man).

Indulgences can be applied to the souls in purgatory by way of intercession, 1398, 1405, 1448; to what degree the applied indulgences have effect is discussed, 1448, 2750; those opinions are condemned which deny the usefulness of indulgences for the dead, 1010, 1416, 1472, 1490, 2642f.; condemned: [The souls freed from purgatory by the suffrages of the living are less happy than if they had made satisfaction by themselves], 1490; cf. K 10b (indulgences).

2. The Perfection of the Kingdom of God

M 2a a. THE UNIVERSAL ASPECT: THE RETURN OF CHRIST AND THE GENERAL JUDGMENT

2aa The faith (of the creeds) in his return. The ^a*glorious* return of Christ ^b*in his flesh*, ^a6, 10–30, ^a40–42, ^a44, ^{ab}46, ^{ab}48, 50f., 55, ^a60, 61–64, 76, 125, ^a150, ^b167, 325, 414, 443, 485, 492, 681, ^b791, 801, 852, 4123, ^{ab}4168, 4571; the mystery of Christ, in the end, will be manifested in full light, 4121; the Church awaits Christ's manifestation as distinct and deferred with respect to the situation of people immediately after death, 4655; exegetical problems, 3433, 3628–3630; cf. E 2fa (return of Christ).

2ab The faith (of the creeds) in judgment. The judgment of Christ, 10–30, 40//51, 55, 60–64, 76, 125, 150, 325, 414, 443, 485, 492, 540, 574, 681, 791, 801, 852, 859, 1549, 4168; men will have to give an account of their deeds, 76, 859, 1002, 4168; cf. E 2fb (judgment of Christ). The Day of Judgment as a setting for learning and practicing hope is unknown to angels and men, 5115, also ^a*to the apostle Paul*, 474f., ^a3629; Christ knows this day only because of his divinity, 474–476; cf. E 5dc (Christ's knowledge). Muslims (also) await the Last Judgment, 4197.

M 2b b. THE INDIVIDUAL ASPECT: DEATH AS THE DOOR TO LIFE AND THE PARTICULAR JUDGMENT

2ba The death of man. Man is subject to death as a penalty for sin, not due to the necessity of his nature, 146, 222, 372, 1512, 2617; a spiritual element survives and subsists after death, an element endowed with consciousness and will, so that the “human self” subsists in the interim, yet without the complement of its body, 4653; spiritual forms of death: the philosophies of selfishness, pleasure, despair, and nihilism, 4492; cf. C 4ef (suffering and death of man); D 2bc (effect of original sin).

The end of this life means for men the end also of the possibility to earn merits for themselves, 1488; a man who postpones repentance until the end of his life will scarcely find time for reconciliation, 310.

Christ has conquered the power of death ^a*through his Resurrection*, 72, ^a485, 3901, 4006, 4318, 4332; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

The particular judgment. A special judgment, with the determination for heaven, purgatory, or hell, follows immediately (mox) after death, (857f., 1002, 1304–1306); the same follows from the retracted affirmation of John XXII: [The damned enter into the eternal punishment of hell only after the general judgment], 990^o; before they reign with Christ, men must render to him an account of their bodily life, 4168; before the judgment seat of God, each man must render an account of his own life, 4317; man will receive his reward for what he did in his life, 443, 574, 1002, 4168; cf. M 3b (eternal beatitude); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward); M 3d (condemnation of man). 2bb

The purification of man. In purgatory men will be purified, 838, 856; when the Church speaks about purgatory, she means a purification 2bc before seeing God, a purification different from the punishment of the damned, 4657.

The existence of purgatory is affirmed, 1010, 1487, 1820, 1867, 3554.

Into purgatory go the souls of those dying in grace who have not yet made complete satisfaction for their sins and punishments for sin, 838, 856, 1066, 1304, 1398, 1580, (4169, 4171).

Purgatory is regarded as a ^a*transitory (temporal)* fire, ^a838, ^a1067, 1398, 3363.

Those affirmations are condemned about souls who sin in purgatory and are not sure of their salvation, 1488f.

On the participation of souls in purgatory in the communion of the saints, cf. M 1b.

3. Life of the World to Come

a. THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

M 3a

The faith (of the creeds) in the resurrection of the flesh (or of the dead), 2, 5, 10–30, 36, 41//51, 55, 60, 63, 76, 150, 190, 200, 540, 574, 684, 797, 854, (4338), 4651; all will rise again, 443, 493, 540, 801, 859, 1002, 4168, (4339).

The resurrection refers to the whole person, 4652; man will rise again –: in the same flesh that he bore, 23, 72, 76, 325, 485, 684, 797, 801, 854; –: not in some other flesh, 540, 574, 797; –: not in some ^a*thin air* or in some ^b*shadowy phantasm*, ^a540, ^{ab}574; those errors are condemned regarding the constitution of bodies after the resurrection, 407, 1046; cf. M 3bc (transfiguration of the body); connection between the denial of the resurrection and cremation of corpses, 4400.

The glorification of the Head of the Mystical Body of Christ also indicates the coming glory of the members, (358), 414, (485); Christ, (^awho restored the dead to life) awakens the dead, 72, ^a369, 485; but condemned: [The resurrection of the dead is to be ascribed only to the merits of Christ], 1910; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation).

Man will receive his recompense for that which he did in his life, 443, 574, 1002, 4168; cf. M 2bb (particular judgment); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward); M 3d (condemnation of man).

b. ETERNAL BEATITUDE

M 3b

Premises of beatitude. Access to the beatific vision was closed to all until the death of Christ, 780, 1000; access has been open ever since the Ascension of Christ, 1000; condemned: [The saints entered into paradise even before the redemption], 337.

Conditions on the part of man: Death in the state of grace or of charity, 839, 1546, 1582, (4168); the Church believes in the happiness of the just, 4657; access is open for –: those who have committed no sin whatsoever after baptism, 857, 925, 1305; –: those who (on earth or in purgatory) have been ^a*entirely* cleansed or have made satisfaction, 857, 925, ^a990f., 1000, 1067, ^a1074, 1305, (4169, 4171); –: children who have died after baptism ^a*yet before the use of free will*, (794), 839, ^a1000, 1316; the Church knows no other way apart from baptism for ensuring children's entry into eternal happiness, 4671; cf. K 3f (necessity of baptism).

Purified souls attain beatitude immediately (^a*mox*/^b*statim*) after death yet ^c*before they take up their bodies again and before the general judgment*, ^b857, ^a925, ^{ac}991, ^{ac}1000, ^{ac}1067, ^a1305, ^b1316; the contrary affirmation is condemned: [Souls separated from the body do not have the beatific vision before the resurrection of the body], 990^o, 1009.

Final beatitude cannot be attained already in this life, 894.

The vision of God—basis of beatitude. The blessed see –: the divine essence, 990f., 1000, 1316; –: the one and triune God and ^a*the divine processions*, 1305, ^a3815, 4169; –: in an ^a*immediate vision* and ^b*face to face*, ^b990f., ^{ab}1000, ^b1067; –: the divine essence manifested, clearly and openly, 1000, 1305; –: immediate, that is, without the mediation of any creature by way of object of vision, 1000; souls separated from their bodies also see the divine essence face to face, as far as their constitution allows, 991; cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God). 3bb

Characteristic of eternal beatitude. Beatitude consists –: ^a*in the enjoyment of the divine essence*; –: ^b*in the vision* and ^c*love of God*, ^a1000, ^{bc}1067, ^c1316; –: in the perfect communion with God and men, where God is all in all and weeping forever ceases, 4627; it is called heaven, heavenly paradise, eternal homeland, 839, 991, 1000, 4627.

The saints see God forever ^a*without interruption*, 1000, ^a1001; cf. M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

These statements are condemned: [Beatitude consists in the vision merely of the brightness of God, which emanates from his essence], 1009; [God can communicate his essence to finite beings only in a way accommodated to them, that is, insofar as he is the author of works ad extra], (3227), 3238–3240.

The vision of God does away with the acts of faith and hope, inasmuch as they are theological virtues, 1001; cf. L 2c; L 2d (virtues of faith and hope); it does not, however, exclude pious fear, 735; these affirmations are condemned: [In eternal life, we should not be under God as a servant under his master], 959; [We will be transformed entirely into God], 960.

The immediate knowledge of God is not inborn or essential to the human intellect, nor is it identical with the light of understanding, 2841, 2844f., 3237; condemned: [God cannot create intellectual beings without ordering them to the beatific vision], 3891.

Neither Sacred Scripture nor theology provides sufficient light for a proper picture of life after death, 4659; between the present life in Christ and the future life, there exists a fundamental continuity and a great difference, 4659.

3bc The transfiguration of the body. Men will appear with their bodies before the Judge, to give an account of the deeds done in the body, 574, 1002; Christ will conform our body to the body of his glory, 4168; cf. E 3a (Jesus Christ, the mediator of salvation); the Mother of Jesus is already glorified in heaven in body and soul, 4179; cf. E 6ea (Assumption of Mary into heaven).

3bd The communion of the angels and saints. The blessed will be joined with the angels, 443, 991, 1000, (4170).

Veneration of the saints: In the liturgy the memory of the saints is honored and fellowship with them is hoped for, 4008; the Church honors the apostles and martyrs together with the Blessed Virgin Mary and the holy angels and implores their intercession, 4170; in heaven, Mary is exalted above all the angels and saints, 4179; all liturgical veneration paid to angels and men leads to adoration of the Trinity, (675, 1824f.), 3325, 4171; the love of the saints in heaven tends toward and terminates in Christ and, through him, in God, 4170; God is wonderful in his saints and is magnified in them, 4170; in the lives of the saints, God manifests his presence and his face to men; in them he speaks and gives a sign of his kingdom, 4170; authentic cult of the saints consists in a greater intensity of love, 4171; cf. A 1c (stages of revelation); E 6 (Mary, the Mother of Jesus Christ); J 1eg (veneration of the saints); M 1b (communion of saints).

Veneration of the saints is defended as permissible and recommended as useful, 675, 1821–1825, 1867; in what sense Masses in honor of the saints are allowed, 1744, (1755), 3363; cf. J 1eg.

3be The consummation of the world. The growing body of a new family of humanity offers a foreshadowing of the new age, 4339; the kingdom of God comes to pass through historical realizations but is not exhausted in them or identified with them, 4614; restoration has begun in Christ and in the mission of the Holy Spirit and through the Spirit continues in the Church, 4168; cf. B 3b (the Spirit of God in creation and salvation history); G 1be (Church, work of the Holy Trinity); man and world will be perfectly reestablished at the end of time in Christ, 4168; Christ will be glorified in his saints and in all who have believed, 4168; God will prepare a new dwelling place and a new earth, where justice and peace abide, 4339; the children of God will be raised up to eternal life; enduring with charity and its fruits, all creation will be freed from vanity, 4339.

Men do not know the moment and manner of the consummation of the earth and of humanity, 4339; a materialistic explanation of the end of the world is condemned, 1361.

Cf. C 5 (goal and fulfillment of history).

3bf Eternal life and reigning with Christ. The faith of the creeds in an eternal life, 3f., 11°, 15, 19–30, 36, 41//51, 60, 72, 76, 150, 854; concept of eternal life, 5112.

Christ —: will hand over to the Father an eternal and universal kingdom, 4339; —: makes men partakers in his immortality, 413; —: grants believers a share in his kingdom, 540, 4162, (4339); the kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of truth, of life, of holiness, grace, justice, love and peace, in which creation will be delivered into the freedom of the children of God, 4162, (4339); on the day of fulfillment, saved by grace, men will offer flawless glory to God as a family beloved of God and of Christ their Brother, 4332; cf. E 2fc (perfection and handing over of the kingdom of God); E 3bd (kingship of Christ).

The Church will —: enter into the heavenly kingdom, 493; —: will be perfected ^a*at the end of time*, ^b*in heavenly glory*, ^c*in the world to come*, ^a4102, ^b4168, ^c4179, ^b4190, ^a4332, ^a4340; then all the just, from Adam on, will be gathered together with the Father in the universal Church, 4102; the Church has already reached perfection in Mary, 4178f., 4656; her bodily glorification anticipates that of all the other elect, 4656; cf. E 6f (Mary—paragon of the Church and of believers); G 1bf (perfection of the Church); faith in the creeds in a kingdom of heaven, 3f., 44, 46, 48, 60, 63; the Church, the saints, and the faithful will reign with Christ ^a*forever*, ^a540, ^a575, 1821, 2187, 3363; the reign of Christ will have no end, 41f., 44, 46, 48, 60, 150; the Word of God lasts forever, 4235.

The blessed see God forever ^a*without interruption*, 1000, ^a1001; cf. M 3bb (the vision of God—basis of beatitude).

Eternal life is a fruit of justification, grace, and reward for good works, 72, 443, 485, 540, (574), (801, 839), 1351, 1545–1547, (1552), 1576, 1582, (3957, 4168); cf. F 3d (the justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward).

M 3c

c. BEATITUDE—GRACE AND REWARD

As a child of God, man is called to commune with God and to share in his happiness, 4321; cf. C 4jb (vocation of man to communion with God); M 3b (eternal beatitude).

Beatitude is a gift of God's grace, 377, 443; for beatitude, every man needs the light of glory, which raises him, 895; condemned: [Man can in the present life attain final beatitude according to every degree of perfection], 894.

Everlasting happiness, eternal life are a reward for good works, 76, 377, 443, 485, 802, 1545f., 1638, 4168; if men have nurtured the values of human dignity, brotherhood, and freedom in the Spirit of the Lord, they will be transfigured in the kingdom of the Father, 4339; the good will rise again to everlasting glory, 801, (4168); they receive an endless kingdom of bliss, the eternal homeland, 574, 839; they are heirs to eternal glory, 3957; cf. M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ).

According to the diversity of merits, one enjoys a more perfect beatitude than the other, 1305, (1582); condemned, however: [Souls freed from purgatory by the suffrages of the living are less happy than if they had made satisfaction by themselves], 1490.

In beatitude man need not fear that he may fall again, 443; cf. the condemned affirmation: [Preexisting souls grew tired of the contemplation of God and therefore fell], 403.

Cf. F 3d (the justified man is brought to perfection as God rewards his merits through grace).

d. THE CONDEMNATION OF MAN

M 3d

Existence of hell. Souls of those who die in actual mortal sin go down into hell, (338, 342), 839, 858, 926, 1002, 1075, 1306; the Church believes that there will be eternal punishment for the sinner, who will be deprived of the sight of God, and calls this hell, 4657; by descending to the dead, Christ did not destroy hell, 1077; condemned: [He has entirely destroyed hell], 1011; cf. E 2cb (descent into hell).

Essence of hell. The punishment of hell is characterized by ^apain, ^btorment, and ^cfire (embers), ^c76, ^c338, ^c342, ^a443, ^a485, ^c575, ^b780, (^c2626); the punishment is eternal (^ainextinguishable fire), 72, 76, 212, 342, ^a443, 486, 574, 596, 630, 780, 801, 839, 4657; condemned are affirmations about a future crucifixion of Christ on behalf of the demons and the restoration of the demons and the damned, 409, 411.

Cause of damnation. Man will receive his reward for what he has done in the body, 443, 574, 1002, 4168; cf. M 2bb (particular judgment); M 3bf (eternal life and reigning with Christ); M 3c (beatitude as grace and reward); men will be damned because of their free choice, 443; —: for mortal sins, 342; —: because of death ^awithout confession in the state of ^bmortal sin (^cactual sin), ^c627, ^c780, ^{ab}839, ^c1002, ^b1075, ^{bc}1306; he will not be saved who —: knowing that the Catholic Church was made necessary by God, would refuse to enter or to remain in her, 4136; —: stays in the bosom of the Church in body but not in heart, 4137; —: does not respond to the grace of Christ in thought, word, and deed, 4137.

Theory of limbo. The punishment for original sin is to be deprived of the vision of God, (184, 219), 780; cf. D 2bc (effect of original sin); there is no middle place, in a Pelagian sense, between the kingdom of God and damnation, (184), 224, 2626; condemned: [Souls of children who are born from Christian parents and die without baptism go to a terrestrial paradise, but the souls of children who are born from non-Christian parents and die without baptism go to the place where the souls of their parents are], 1008.

The souls of those who die only with original sin go down to hell, but they are punished with a different punishment ^aand in a different place, 858, ^a926, 1306; they will be punished with the punishment of damnation without the punishment of fire, 2626; the place in which they find themselves is commonly called limbo, 2626; condemned: [A child who dies without baptism will hate God], 1949.
